REND FATHER IN GOD,
GEORGE BY THE DIVINE PROVI-DENCE, LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTER-BURY, PRIMATE AND METROPOLITANE OF all ENGLAND, one of his Majesties most Honorable Priuie Councill: and his very good Lord.

MOST REVEREND;
That duetie which emboldned me at my first looking, and leaping out of the Dungeon of obscuritie, to interrupt your more serious affaires, with the view of these my labors; Hath (by your Gracious acceptance of me and them) encreased together with the worke, and encouraged mee the second time (thus seconded by manifold helpes of Bookes and Relations of others, and by a second care and labour of mine owne) to obtrude this first Part of my intended Pilgrimage vpon your Grace. Both then, and now, no worth thereof, but your worthinesse hath caused this presumption. For to whom should I rather present my firff-fruites,

The Epistle Dedicatorie.

fruites, then vnto the High-Priest, That hee might shake them before the Lord, to make them acceptable? Neither is any meeter to Patronise a Historie of Religion, then he, to whose Person Religion giueth, and from the same mutually receiueth, Patronage. And therefore I, the meanest of Leui's sonnes, doe here againe offer vnto your Grace, ASIA, AFRICA, AMERICA, and that in their withered and fouler hue of passed out-worne rites, or present Irreligious Religions, not washed with the purer streames of sacred Baptisme. EUROPE challengeth a rcome in this kind by her selfe: nor would Christian Historie vouchsafe these Strangers her holy companie, and therefore hath enioyned me a second Pilgrimage, and Perambulation ouer the World, to trace her footsteps, and obserue euery where her Planters, Corrupters, and Reformers.

Great is this burthen of a twofold World, and requires both an Atlas and an Hercules too, to vndergoe it. The newnesse also makes it more difficult, being an enterprize neuer yet (to my knowledge) by any, in any language, attempted; conioyning thus Antiquitie and Moderne historie, in the obseruations of all the rarities of the World, and especially of that soule of the world, RELIGION. Yet haue I aduentured, and (I speake it not to boast, but to excuse my selfe, in so haughtie designes) this my first Voyage of Discoverie, besides mine owne poore stocke laide thereon, hath made mee indebted to aboue a thousand Authours, of one or other kinde, in I know not how many of their Treatises, Epistles, Relations and Histories, of diuers subiectes and Languages, borrowed by my selfe; besides what (for want of the Authors themselues)

I

The Epistle Dedicatorie.

I haue taken vpon trust, of other mens goods in their hands. Wherein had I enioyed that Academicke leifure,

Ἐν ἐνοχίοις ἀπόμοισιν Ἀκαδημικῶν Θεῶν,

Or the benefits of greater Libraries, or sufficient conference with men more skilfull: my Braine might haue yeelded a fairer issue, a more compleate and better-armed Minerua. But besides the want of these, the daily cares of my Family, the weekly duties (in Preaching and Catechising) of my Ministerie, the grossenes of the Aire where I liue, which (some say) makes a dulier wit, I am sure, a sicklier body, may pleade excuse for me. If not,

Clades Authore leuatur,

The World is the weight that presseth me, and my booke shall haue this praise in the greatest dispraise, Magnis tamen excidit aufis.

Howsoeuer; I shall thinke my selfe happie in your Graces Examination and Censure, if it bee not Impietie in mee to offer to intercept, and with interposition of these lines a while to Eclipse your Gracious aspect and influence vnto our Church and State. And though your Grace cannot, for more necessarie imployments, and needes not, as knowing them better alreadie, afforde your Precious time to these things of baser worth: Yet if your Recreations shall vouchsafe them as Remembrancers, out of my labours to refresh yours, I shall bee more then sufficiently recompenced. Others may hence learne by that most laborious, though not most learned Argument of Induction, two lessons fitting these times, the Vnnaturalnesse of F A C T I O N and A T H E I S M E: That law of Nature hauing written in the practise of all men (as wee here in the particulars doe shew)

The Epistle Dedicatorie.

the profession of some Religion, and in that Religion, wheresoeuer any societie of Priestes or Religious persons, are, or haue beene in the World, no admittance of Paritie; the Angels in Heauen, Diuels in hell, (as the Royallest of Fathers, the Father of our Countrie hath pronounced) and all Religious on Earth, as here we shew, being equally subiect to inequality, that is, to the equitie of subordinate Order. And if I liue to finish the rest, I hope to shew the Paganisme of Antichristian Poperie, and other Pseudo-Christian heresies, and the Truth of Christianitie as it is now professed and established in our Church, vnder the Great Defender of the Faith: for whose long Raigne, and your Graces prosperous seruice vnder so Religious a Soueraigne, I heartily pray vnto the King of Kings, and chiefe Shepheard of our Soules, I E S V S C H R I S T.

Your Graces most

vnworthy Chaplaine,

Samuel Purchas.

TO THE READER.

ND now, READER, The PILGRIME comes vnto thee, the second time, with whom he dares bee somewhat bolder. Being, I know not by what naturall inclination, addicted to the studie of Historie, my heart would sometimes object a selfe-loue, in following my priuate delights in that kinde. At last, I resolued to turne the pleasures of my studies into studious paines, that others might againe, by delightfull studie, turne my paines into their pleasure. I here bring Religion from Paradise to the Arke, and thence follow her round about the World, and (for her sake) obserue the World it selfe, with the seuerall Countries and Peoples therein; the chiefe Empires and States; their priuate and publique Customes; their manifold chances and changes; also the wonderfull and most remarkable effects of Nature; Euent of Diuine and Humane Prouidence, Rarities of Arte; and whatsoeuer I finde by Relations of Historians; as I passe, most worthie the writing. Religion is my more proper aime, and therefore I insist longer on the description of whatsoeuer I finde belonging thereto; declaring the Religion of the first Men; the corrupting of it before, and after the Floud; the Iewish obseruations; the Idols, Idolatries, Temples, Priests, Feasts, Fasts, Opinions, Sects, Orders, and sacred Customes of the Heathens; with the Alterations and Successions that haue therein happened, from the beginning of the World hitherto.

This Worke I diuide into foure parts. This first exhibiteth, Relations and Theologicall discoverie of ASIA, AFRICA, and AMERICA: The second, when God will, shall doe the same for EUROPE: The third and fourth, in a second visitation, shall obserue such things in the same places, as I hold most remarkable in the Christian and Ecclesiasticall Historie, and that according to the same method; which is squared in the Whole by order of Place, going still out of one Countrie into the next; in each particular part and seuerall Countrie, by the order of Time, deducing our Relations, so farre as wee haue others foot-prints to guide vs, (though not exactly naming the day and yeare, and determining questions in Chronologicall controuersies, yet in some conuenient sort) from the Ancient times, and by degrees descending to the present.

If thou demandest what profit may be hereof; I answer, That here students of all sorts may finde matter fitting their studies: The naturall Philosophers may obserue the different constitution and commixtion of the Elements, their diuers working in diuers places, the varietie of heauenly influence, of the yearelie seasons, of the Creatures in the Aire, Water, Earth: They which delight in state-affaires, may obserue the varietie of States and Kingdomes, with their differing Lawes, Politics, and Customes, their Beginnings, and Endings. The Diuine, besides the former, may here contemplate the workes of God, not in Creation alone, but in his Iustice and Prouidence, pursuing sinne euery where with such dreadfull plagues; both bodily, in rooting vp and pulling downe the mightiest Empires; and especially in spirituall Iudgements, giuing vp so great a part of the World vnto the efficacy of Errour in strong delusions, that hauing forsaken the Fountaine of liuing waters, they should digge vnto themselues these broken Pits that can hold no water; deuout in their superstitions, and superstitious in their deuotions; agreeing all in this, that there should be a Religion, disagreeing from each other, and the TRUTH, in the practise thereof.

Likewise our Ministers may be incited vnto all godly labours in their function of preaching the Gospell, seeing otherwise, for outward and bodily ceremonies, the Turkes and Iewes (in their manifold deuotions in their Oratories euery day) and other Heathen would conuince vs of idlenesse. And let me haue leaue to speake it for the glorie of God, and the good of our church; I cannot finde any Priests in all this my Pilgrimage; of whom we haue any exact Historie, but take more bodily paines in their deuotions, than is performed by not-preaching Ministers, especially in Countrey-viliages, where on the weeke daies they cannot haue occasion, or companie, for publique praier: and therefore if they only read the Seruice on holy daies, and neuer studie for more (which I would it were not the idle practise of some) euen the Heathen shall rise vp in judgement against them. I subscribe with hand and practise to our Liturgie, but not to such Lethargie: whose darknesse is so much the more intollerable, in this Sunne-shine of the Gospell, wherein wee haue a gracious King, so diligent a frequenter of Sermons; and Reuerend Bishops (notwithstanding other their weightie Ecclesiasticall employments) yet diligent Preachers.

The studious of Geographic may somewhat be helped in that kinde: not that we intend an exact Geographic, in mentioning euery Citie with the degrees of Longitude and Latitude, but yet limiting euery Countrey in his true situation and bounds; and performing happily more then some, which take vpon them the title of Geographers, as their chiefe profession: and more then any, which I know, hath done in our language.

He which admireth and almost adoreth the Capuchine, Iesuite, or other Romanists, for selfe-inflicted whippings, fastings, watchings, voves of obedience, pouertie, and single life, and their not sparing their limmes and liues for their will-worships, may see, in all these, the Romanists equalled by Heathens, thens, if not out-stripped euen by the reports of the Iesuites and other their Catholiques. Bodily exercise profiteth little, but Godlinesse is profitable vnto all, 1. Tim. 4. 8. and hath the promise of this life and that which is to come.

Here also the Reader may see most of their Popish Rites, deriued out of Chaldæan, Ægyptian, and other Fountaines of Paganisme; as in the later taske we shall haue more occasion to shew. Here euery English-man may see cause to praise God continually for the light of his truth, communicated to vs: whereas it is (in comparison) but a small part of the World, that soundeth the sacred name of IESVS; and of those that professe it, how infinite are the sects and superstitions? God hath shewed his Word vnto our IACOB (THE DEFENDER OF HIS FAITH) his Statutes and his iudgements vnto this ISRAEL of Great Britaine. He hath not dealt so with euery Nation, neither haue the Heathen, nor scarcely, if scarcely, any other Christian Nation, so much knowledge of his iudgements. And yet how seditious are some? how prophane are others? how vnthankfull the most? That beastly Sinne of Drunkenesse, that biting Sinne of Vsurie, that Deuillish Sinne of Swaggering, ruffling in deformitic of clothes, like monstrous Chimeras, and barking out a multiformitic of oathes, like hellish Cerberi, as if men could not bee Gallants, vnlesse they turned Devills. These are the payments wee returne vnto the Lord, in stead of prayers for, and loyaltie to his Majestic; peaceableness and charitie to each others; modestie and sobrietie in our selues.

For the forme, I haue sought in some places, with varietie of phrase, in all, with varietie of matter, to draw thee along with mee in this tedious Pilgrimage. Some names are written diuersly, according to the differing Copies which I followed, which thy discretion will easily conceiue. I doe not in euery question set downe my censure; sometimes, because it were more then needes; sometimes because of the difficultie. I mention Authors sometimes of meane qualitie, for the meanest haue sense to obserue that which themselves see, more certainly then the contemplations and Theorie of the more learned. I would also acknowledge the labour of the meanest. I haue laboured to reduce Relations to their first Authors, setting their names to their Allegations: the want wherof hath much troubled me, whilst the most leaue out their Authours, as if their owne assertion were sufficient authoritie in things borrowed. I haue (to my great paines) contracted and Epitomized whole Volumes (and some very large) into one Chapter; a thing vsuall through these Relations. Where I haue found plentifull discourse for Religion (my chiefe aime) I am shorter in other Relations; and where I haue had lesse helps for that discouerie, I insist more on the wonders of Nature, and discoueries by Sea and Land, with other remarkeable accidents. These Rarities of Nature I haue sometimes suted in a differing phrase and figure of speech; not that I affect a fantasticall singularitie; but that these diuine workes might appeare in Robes, if not fitting their Majestic, yet such as our Word-Robe did willingly without any great affectation or studie, affoord: not without example of the Scripture, which vseth to bring in the mute Creatures, speaking and performing, (as it were) other personall offices; nor without this effect, to make the Reader stay a while with obseruation and wonder; besides that, varietie of it selfe is delightfome.

If

If any mislike the fulnesse in some places, and the barrenesse of wordes in others; let them consider, we handle a World, where are Mountaines and Vallies, fertile habitations, and sandie desarts: and others steps, whom I follow, hold mee sometimes in a narrower way, which elsewhere take more libertie. I touch here and there a Controuersie; both for illustration of Historie; and in season, and out of season, to shew my affection to the truth.

Now if any man thinke, that it were better these rotten bones of the passed, and stinking bodies of the present Superstitions were buried, then thus raked out of their graues; besides that which hath beene said, I answer, That I haue sufficient example in the Scriptures, which were written for our learning to the ends of the World, and yet depaint vnto vs the vgly face of Idolatrie in so many Countries of the Heathens, with the Apostasies, Sects, and Heresies of the Iewes, as in our first and second booke is shewed: and the Ancient Fathers also, Iustin, Tertullian, Clemens, Irenaeus, Origen, and more fully, Eusebius, Epiphanius, and Augustine, haue gone before vs in their large Catalogues of Heresies and false Opinions. And what doth more set forth the glorie of Gods grace, then in pardoning; his power, then in reforming; his justice, then in giuing men vp to such delusions? Are not these the Trophies and glorious victories of THE CROSSE OF CHRIST, that hath subuerted the Temples, Oracles, Sacrifices, and Seruices of the Deuill? And maist not thou see herein, what Man is, and thou thy selfe maist bee, if GOD leaue thee to thy selfe? Reade therefore, with praises vnto GOD, the father of thy light; and praiers for these Heathens, that GOD may bring them out of the snare of the Deuill, and that Christ may bee his saluation to the ends of the World. And let me also obtaine thy praiers in this my Pilgrimage, to be therein directed, to the glorie of GOD, and good of my Countrie. Euen so
L O R D I E S V S.

NOW if any bee offended because his Booke (which not long since hee bought) wanteth much of that which this Edition offereth; I answer, that I then gaue what I had, and what my poore obscure state, with little helpe of Bookes or Intelligence from others, could afford: And finding better entertainment then I could deserue or desire, many Reuerend, Noble, Learned, approuing and almost applauding the Pilgrime, notwithstanding his ragges and rudenesse; I could not but acknowledge it a great, both recompence and preferment, laudari à laudatis viris, and was thereby encouraged to endeouour vnto somewhat more praise-worthie. Which when I had thought to haue assaied in my promise for Europe: the quick sale of the former threatening a second impression some yeares before I could (without better furtherance) be readie to joyne Europe therewith; thereby also being growne into acquaintance with many studious in this kinde, whose Bookes and Relations might much further mine: I was easily perswaded to this reuiew, and haue presented you your Pilgrime, with many, not fringes and laces alone for ornament, but large peeces of new cloth to supply his former defects and rents: and he which was then a new-borne Infant, is now with time grown greater. These things, in Nature and vse are necessarie and commendable, and here

could not be effected without my great cost and paines, which might rather merit Elogies then Apologies: yet I shall I hold my selfe recompenced beyend expectation, if some lick stomach disgorge not some curse on mee, for being so painfull to bring him better intelligence. But for them to whom this worke is principally intended, either their wealth will make it insensible; or their discretion, easily pardonable. And how much more doth it cost some in wrangling fees for a peece of an Acre or Tenement, then here for the greatest part of the World? Neither yet doth the Pilgrime turne Stationer to sollicite buyers, or to construe the Title of his worke * to the purchasing thereof: and happily that, which they haue already, may more then suffice many ignorant or idle owners, to whom that cannot be worse, because this is better. But I would gladly giue contentment to the studious, especially such, whose weaker state (the Pilgrimes owne case) cannot rise and grow better with the impression: For their sakes I would haue printed the Additions by themselves; but that being so many and so manifold for kinde and number, it would haue seemed a loose bundle of shreds and raggcs: which being thus sowed together in fit places, make the Pilgrimes weedcs more handsome, and lesse harsh. With them is left me this excuse, euen that which accuseth me, Want; which had it not before hindred me, I might iustly be censured for a Wanton, so so dainly to obtrude on the world such after-births. What is here added cannot be expressed in an Epistle: but the whole Booke is the Epistle thereof; euery part and limme whereof, hath new bloud infused, and additions annexed, as occasion of better Intelligence hath offered it selfe: wherein I haue made my selfe indebted to some hundreds of Authors, written or printed, which before I had not made vse of, as in the Catalogue of their names will appeare. Neither mean I hereafter to trouble the World with any such reuiew in this Argument of ASIA, AFRICA, and AMERICA; but leaue it (if any thing offer it selfe) to my second discouerie of Christianitie in those parts:

meane-while purposing by Gods helpe to fit my selfe for my Visitation (in this kinde) of EUROPE, for which I againe desire thy praiers, the best requitall of my paines.

Have here mustered in thy view, Courteous Reader, those Authors which from mine owne sight I haue mentioned in this worke. Some of them, I confesse, are of no great note, and some are noted for notorious counterfeits: but all are of some vse, and meete to be here placed, that they may haue their due: some of thankesfulnesse for their worthy and great industrie (wherein those deserue a place, though otherwise obscure, who by their Navigations and Discoveries haue made the world knowne to it selfe) others, that they may be knowne to be lies and meere Changelings. I was the rather induced to giue thee a Table of their names, because nothing in the Impression hath escaped more faultie, then the misse-naming of Authors, of which I thought good heere to giue notice. I acknowledge that Ramusius and M. Hakluit, in their Books of Voyages, haue bene two Libraries unto me of many Navigations and Discoveries heere mentioned: and now in this Edition I haue bene much beholden to M. Hakluit for many written Treatises in this kinde. In this, and all kinds, Sacred, Profane, Learned, Vnlearned, Ancient, Moderne, Good, and Bad; I haue toyled my selfe to benefite thee. Some of their names might haue bene added in the former Impression, but through hast were omitted: and many more might be added, which are cited in this worke. But because I haue borrowed them on others credit, and not seene them my selfe (and many for other causes) I haue not here mentioned them. The Letter F. signifies that we haue but a fragment of the said Author, and Pl. brands him for a counterfeit.

THE Poets were wont to lay the foundations and first beginnings of their poetickall Fabriques, with inuocation of their Gods and Muses, although those workes were futable to such work-men, who according to their names were Makers, of those both Poems and Gods: I, as far short of their learning, as beyond them in the scope of my desires, would so farre imitate their manner, in this matter which I intend; that although I enuie not to some their foolish claime of that Poeticall (not Prophetickall) inheritance, to make my Maker: and my matter, as in a Historie (not a Poem) must bee made to not but make a religion to begin this discourse of Religion at him; this being the way which all men take to come to him. First therefore I beseech him that is the

And hereto let all Christian Readers say with me Amen, to him which is * Amen, that witnesseth faithfull and true, that forsaking all the by-ways which this Labyrinth exhibiteth, we may receiue his witnesseth as faithfull and true Disciples, that follow the Lambe whithersoever he goeth, and will not heare the voice of strangers.

Ar. Metaphys.

In the next place, I hold it not vnfit briefly to expresse somewhat of him, which indeed and throughly can neuer be expressed. For the wisest of the Prophets hath said of him and to him, that the ^a Heauens and Heauens of Heauens, are not able to containe him: and the ^b chiefe, or at least he which was not inferiour to the chiefe of the Apostles, as rauished with such a height, and swallowed in such a depth, cried ^c O Altitudo, O the deepnesse of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how vnsearchable are his iudgements, and his wayes past finding out? As for my selfe, I may most fitly borrow the words of Agur, ^d Surely I am more foolish than any man, and haue not the vnderstanding of a man in mee: For I haue not learned wisdom nor attained to the knowledge of holy things. Yea indeed, who hath ascended vp to Heauen, and descended? Who hath gathered the Wiude in his fist? Who hath bound the Waters in a garment? Who hath establisht all the ends of the World? What is his name, and what is his Sonnes name if thou canst tell? Tell this mysterie we cannot. And yet so farre as hee hath told vs by his Word and Workes, we may. Of the one the next words testify: Euery word of God is pure: Of the other else-where ^e The Heauens declare the glorie of God: ^f and The inuisible things of him, that is his eternall power and God-head, are seene by the Creation of the World, being considered in his workes. ^g God hath not (therefore) left himselfe without witnesseth, who besides the testimonie of Nature, written in our hearts, hath added those of the Scripture and of the Creature, that this threefold Cord might not bee easily broken, and by the mouth of two or three witnesseth, we might learne plainly that he is, and in some measure what he is. That there is a God: Heauen and Earth, Angels and Deuils, Man and Beast, Reason and Sense, Greeke and Barbarian, science in the most, in the rest conscience, as a thousand witnesseth all that wee see, and which we see not, say and proclaime, that all may see, and in manner palpably feele his present Deitie; in ^h whom we liue, moue, and haue our being, ⁱ This is a common notion, and impression, sealed vp in the minde of euery man: a remnant of integritie after the fall of Adam; a substance or blessing in the dead Elme, sparkles of fire raked vp vnder the ashes, which cannot die whiles the soule liueth. What a one he is: is not so deeply ingrauen in Nature, whose owlish eyes are dazled with the brightnesse of this light: But when heere we might renew the question: What is his name, and what is his Sonnes name? he himselfe answereth in Scripture by attributing to himselfe such names, whereby we may know him as the Creator from all Creatures, as the true God from all false Gods: and so farre as is meet and necessary to our saluation. Hee then that dwelleth in light inaccessible, whom no man hath seene, nor can see ^k as he is, in this our infancie, hath manifested himselfe vnto vs ^l as through a glasse darkly, that we may with Moses haue some glauncing ^m view of his hinder parts.

These names and diuine attributes I meane not with large explications heere to expresse, as not so fitting my abilitie, or purpose, & being by others ⁿ learnedly done already: Yet to say a little, where the tongues of men and Angels cannot say enough: the Scripture attributeth, or hee in Scripture attributeth to himselfe, names, in regard both both of aouthour and obiect diuine; sometimes (as they terme it) in the ^b coneret; some times in the ^c abstract; the first signifying his perfect subsistence; the other his super- subsisting perfection; those more fitted to our capacitie; these to his diuinitie: who eternally and essentially is, whatsoeuer he is said to bee, or in himselfe to haue. And, as lines infinitely differing in their circumference are one in their centre, and the Sunne- beames disperfed through the World, are in the Sunne but one; and the same neither beames nor lines, but farre more excellent in that indiuisible and most perfect vnitie; so, and more then so, all perfections of the Creatures are in the Creator more defecated and perfect, yea, one perfection and superexcellent Excellencie; and this ^d one him- selfe, euery way infinite and incomprehensible, nothing being in him either by partici- pation, or as a qualitie, or as a natural faculty, or as a mutable passion, or in such sort simply, as we (whose vnderstandings are limited in their finite bounds, & for that cause receiuing in a finite measure, conceiuing in a finite maner) doe or can comprehend. Who can take vp the Ocean in a spoone? and yet these are both finite, and hold neerer proportion then the great Creator, and the greatest of creatures. Yet is this glimpse of this bright shining Sun comfortable throw this chinke and key-hole of our ho- dily prison, and euen the taste of these Delicacies, more than sweet and delectable.

Some of these names are attributed to him in regard of his being, ^e in it selfe con- sidered, as Iehouah, Iab, Ebeie; and some in regard of the persons which all haue that one being, & euery of which haue all that being, which ^f in it selfe is indiuidually one: and their seuerall maners of hauing it, is that which is called their personall proprietie and incommunicable. Such a name (say some) is Elohim applied to the Father, Sonne, and Holy-Ghost, in signification mightie, in forme plurall. Some of these names are such as are communicated to Creatures also, but with this difference, that those which in the Creature are borrowed, imperfect, accidentall, are in him Nature, Perfection, Sub- stance. Some are absolutely considered as hee is God blessed for euer; some re'atiuely with respect vnto his Creatures. Some againe ^h are Negatiuely spoken, others affir- matiuely: some properly, others by a figure. But this is indeed a thornie way, ⁱ of which we may say with Augustine, Nothing is missed more dangerously, nothing sought more laboriously; nothing found more profitably. Euen the Angelicall Seraphins had their ^k sixe wings, whereof two serued to execute their prompt obedience; two coue- red their feet, because of mans weaknesse not able to comprehend their glorie; and yet they themselues thus glorious, with two other wings covered their face, as not able to endure the brightnesse of a greater glorie. Let vs then be wise, but to ^l sobrietie. Let vs go to the Lambe to vnclasp this sealed booke. For in him all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid. Let vs so know as we may be knowne, and so ^m comprehend as we may rather be comprehended. Let vs feare, loue, belecue, and serue him: and then God will ⁿ teach the humble his way, and ^o They which will doe his will shall know of the doctrine. This is our way to eternall life, thus to know him, and whom he hath sent Iesus Christ: if namely we so learne Christ as the Truth is in Iesus, if we become fooles that we may be wise, and putting off the old man be reuened in the spirit of our mindes, and put on the new man which after God is shapen in righteoufnesse and true holinesse. Otherwise, we ^r know nothing as we ought to know, otherwise, we know nothing more, nor so much as the Diuels know. ^s The feare of the Lord is the beginning of this wisdom. And for this cause hath he called himselfe, and proclaimed those his names, ^t Iehouah, Iehoua, Strong, mer- cifull, and gracious, slow to anger and abundant in goodnesse and truth, &c. and the like in other places; not that we may know to know, (a foolish curiositie) but that hauing such light, wee may belecue and walke in the light, that wee may be children of the light. Iehoua (if wee may so name it) the most essentiall (and after the Iewish tradition, inu Of this name Iehoua, see Duisy Tetragram. At. Montan. ante Nature histor. p. 37. & P. Gal. l. 2. Drusus thinks that Galatinus was first Authour of this pronouciation Iehoua, Cassation writeth it Ioua: the most both Iewes and Christians, before forbore to name it: The Massorites ascribed to it no points of it owne, but of Adonai, and when Adonai goeth before or after it of Elohim. It is holden that only the High-Priest, and that in the Temple, & on the day of Expiation might pronounce it, which to a priuate man the Iewes esteemed the losse of eternal life. Stenius thinke that none can interpret it, and Paulus Burgensis, that none can Translate it; the Chaldeans, Arabians, Grecians, Latines, and the effable) u name of God, is not therefore onely reuealed vnto vs that we may know him in himself & of himself to be, * Yesterday, to day and the same for y euer, which is, which was, which is to come: but also as the Creator, of whom, in whom, and for whom are all things: and as the redeemer, which is knowne by his name Iehoua (as himselfe ^z interpreteth it) by giuing a reall being, and accomplishment to his promises. In which one name (as in others of like signification) is expressed the simplicity, Immutability, Infiniteness, Blessednes, Eternitie, Life, Perfection and other Attributes of God. When he calleth himselfe Strong, therein is declared his almighty power, whether wee vnderstand it actually in producing and preseruing all things in heauen and earth; or absolutely, whereby he is able to doe euen those things which in his wisdom he doth not; whereby he is able to do all things which either * in themselves (as implying contradiction) or with him (as imperfections) are not impossible, both those kinds not excluding, but concluding the power of God. which because he is Almighty, ^a cannot lie or denie himselfe.

What should I speake of his wisdom, whereby all things are open in his sight, both himselfe, and his Creatures, past, present, or to come, and that not as past or future, but with one, eternall, perfect, certaine, immediate, all of knowledge, which in regard of second causes are necessarie or contingent, or in effect but meerey possible, and neuer actually subsisting. Truth is in him as a root, from whence it is first in the being; next in the vnderstanding; thirdly in the writing or saying of the creature. True he is in himselfe, in his workes ordinary, and extraordinary, and in his word reuealed by the Prophets and Apostles. What should I adde of his goodnesse, grace, loue, mercie, Iustice, and other his attributes and names not yet mentioned? as Adonai which signifieth the Dominion of God due to him, by Creation, by purchase, by mutuall couenant: Saddai, which signifieth his all-sufficieny, and others. Yea in one Chapter ^b P E T R V S G A L A T I N V S rehearseth threescore and twelue names of God out of the Rabbines workes, multiplied and diuersified in teene sorts, which make in all seuen hundred and twentie names. To dilate of these at large would aske so many large Commentaries, and yet euen then should we still finde this God incomprehensible; of whom wee may, in respect of our capacite, rather say what he is not, than what he is, whose goodnesse is not to be distinguished by qualitie, or his greatnesse discerned by quantitie, or his eternitie measured by time, or his presence bounded by place: ^c of whom all things are to be conceiued, ^d beyond whatsoeuer we can conceiue.

The Persons, which communicate in this Diuine Nature, are three ^e: This is their owne witness of themselves; There are three which beare record in Heauen, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit and these three are one. This mysterie was manifested in the ^f baptisme of Christ, and in our baptisme in the name of the Father, Sonne, and Holy-Ghost. The Angels vnto this glorious Trinitie ^g sing their Holy, Holy, Holy: the Scripture it selfe applying that which there may be interpreted of the Father, both to the Sonne Io. 12. 41. and to the Spirit, Act. 28. 25. These with other places doe also signifie their personall distinction. The creation was not onely the Fathers worke, but also of the other persons, as appeareth by that nowne plurall ioined to a verbe singular in the first word of Moses, and other like plurall appellations, Es. 44. 24. and Es. 54. 5. 2. Sam. 7. 22. and many such places. The Apostles applie the couenant, worship, and workes of God mentioned in the Old Testament, to the Sonne and Holy Ghost in the New Testament it selfe vse in steade thereof The Lord. Montanus readeth it Iehueb; and affirmeth that it was knowne both to the common Israelites and to the neighboring nations, &c. but see themselves: I name it after the modern vse for distinction. Zanchie and ^h Gyraldus, obserue that the name of God in all nations is Tetragrammaton of foure letters. New, neither can the one be the Sonne, or the other the spirit of God, naturally and in proper maner of speech, but they must also subsist in the same Nature with the Father, which being infinite, spirituall, immutable, can be but one, which must wholly, or not at all, be communicated. In a word, the equalitie, the names, the proprieties, the works, the worship peculiar to God, are applied to the Sonne and Holy Ghost, equally with the Father. Which they that list may learne in such as especially treat of this subiect: where this mysterie of the Trinitie is auerred against all heretikes, Iewes, and Infidels: Yea by some^f also, out of their own authentick Authors, whether they receiue Scriptures, Rabbins, Philosophers or any other. I intend onely to annoint the doore posts of this house with this discourse, that I may make a fitter entrie thereinto, leauing the fuller handling of this mysterie to such as purposely frame their whole edifice with large common places hereof; which yet alway must bee more certainly receiued by faith, than conceiued by reason: according to that of IUSTIN MARTYR, Vnitatis in Trinitate intelligitur, & Trinitas in Vnitate noscitur: id vero quomodo fiat, nec alios scrutari velim, nec ipse mihi possum & scire facere. Thinke of^h one, a threefold light will dazzle thee; distinguish into three, and an infinite vnitie will swallow thee. Unus, & si dici debet, vnusumus, saith * Bernard.

Having thus with trembling hand written of that dreadfull mysterie of the Trinitie, of which we may say, cum dicitur, non dicitur; It is not told with telling, nor can be described by description; The next to be considered are the workes of God, which are either inward and immanent, or outward and transient. The inward are eternall and vnchangeable, indeede no other but himselfe, although accounted and called workes in regard of their effects in the World and of our concerning. For all the proprieties of God are infinite, as they are immanent in himselfe, yet in their transitive and forren effects are stinted and limited to the model and state of the creature wherein the same effects are wrought. Such an immanent worke we conceiue and name that^k decree of God touching the creation of the World, with his prouident disposing all and euery part thereof, according to the counsell of his owne will, and especially touching the reasonable creatures, Angels and Men, in respect of their eternall state in Saluation or Damnation. The outward workes of God are, in regard of Nature, Creation and Providence: in regard of Grace, Redemption and Saluation, in the fulnesse of time performed by our Emanuel, God manifested in the flesh, true God and perfect man, in the vnitie of one person, without^l confusion, conuersion, or separation. ^m This is very God and life eternall, Iesus Christ the Sonne of God our Lord, which was conceiued by the holy Ghost, borne of the Virgin Marie, suffered vnder Pontius Pilate, who was crucified, dead and buried; descended into Hell; rose againe the third day; he ascended into heauen; where he sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, from whence he shall come to iudge the quicke and dead. And to such as are sonnes, ⁿ God doth also send the spirit of his Sonne, to renew and sanctifie them as children of the Father, members of the Sonne, temples of the Spirit, that they, euen all the elect, may bee one holy Catholike Church, enjoying the vspeakeable priuiledges and heauenly prerogatiues of the Communion of Saints, the forgiuenesse of Sinnes, the Resurrection of the Body, and Euerlasting life. Euen so, come Lord Iesus.

Of the creation of the World.

Hey which would without danger behold the Eclipse of the Sunne, vse not to fixe their eyes directly vpon that bright eye of the World, (although by this case darkened) but in water behold the same with more ease and lesse perill. How much fitter is it likewise for our tender eyes in beholding the light of that Light, ^a the Father of lights ^b in whom is no darkenesse, to diuert our eyes from that brightnesse of glorie, and behold him (as wee can) in his workes? The first of which in execution was the creation of the World, plainly described by Moses in the booke of Gene- sis, both for the Authour, matter, maner, and other circumstances; Reason it selfe thus farte subscribing, as appeareth in her Schollers, (the most of the Heathens and Philosophers in all ages) That this World was made by a greater then the World. In proving this, or illustrating the other, a large field of discourse might be ministred: neither doe I know any thing wherein a man may more improv the revenues of his learning, or make greater shew with a little, decking and pruning himselfe, like Æsops Iay, or HORACE his Chough, with borrowed feathers, than in this matter of the Creation, written of (after their maner) by so many Jewes, Ethnicks, Heretikes, and Orthodoxe Christians. For my part it shall be sufficient to write a little, setting downe so much of the substance of this subiect, as may make more plaine way, and easier introduction, into our ensuing Historie: leaving such as are more studious of this knowledge to those which have purposedly handled this argument, with commentaries vpon Moses text: of which, besides many moderne writers (some of which have almost oppressed the Presse with their huge volumes) there are diuers of the Primitiue, middle, and decayed times of the Church: a cloud indeed of Authors, both for their number, and the varietie of their opinions, the most of them couering rather then discouering that truth (which can be but one) and more to be beleued in their confuting others, then proving their owne assertions. Their store through this disagreeing is become a fore and burthen, whiles we must consult with many, and dare promise to our selues no surer footing: yet cleaving as fast as we can to the letter, imploring the assistance of the Creators spirit, let vs draw as neare as we may to the sense of Moses words, the beginning whereof is, In the beginning God created the Heauen and the Earth. Wherein (to omit the endlesse and diuers interpretations of others, obtruding allegoricall, anogogicall, mysticall senses on the letter) is expressed the Author of this worke to be God, Elohim; which word, as is sayd, is of the plurall number, insinuating the holy Trinity, the Father as the fountaine of all goodnesse, the Sonne as the wisdom of the Father, the Holy Ghost as the power of the Father and the Sonne concurring in this worke. The action is creating, or making of nothing*, to which is required a power supernaturall and infinite. The time was the beginning of time, when as before there had neither bene time, nor any other creature.

The worke is called Heaven and Earth; which c some interpret all this bodily world here propounded in the summe, and after distinguished in parcels, according to the fixe dayes severall workes. Some vnderstand thereby the First matter; which others apply onely to the word Earth, expounding Heaven to be that which is called Empyreum, including also the spirituall and super-celestiall inhabitants. Againe, others, whom I willingly follow, h extend the word Heaven to a larger signification, therein comprehending those three Heavens, which the Scriptures mention: (one whereof is this lower, where the birds of the Heauen doe flie, reaching from the Earth to the Sphere of the Moone: the second, the visible Planets and fixed Starres, with the first Moueable: the third, called the Heaven of Heavens, the third Heaven and Paradise of God) together with all the hoast of them. By Earth they vnderstand this Globe, consisting of Sea and Land, with all the creatures therein. The first verse they hold to be a generall proposition of the Creation of all Creatures, i visible and inuisible, perfected in^k fixe dayes; as many places of Scripture testify: which, as concerning the visible, Moses handleth after particularly, largely, and plainly, contenting himselfe with briefe mention of those inuisible creatures, both ^l good and ^m bad, as occasion is offered in the following parts of his Historie. In the present, ⁿ he omitteth the particular description of their Creation, lest some (as Iewes and Heretikes haue done) should take occasion to attribute the Creation to Angels, as assistants: or should, by the excellencie of that Nature, depainted in due colours, be carryed to worshipping of Angels: a superstition which men haue embraced, towards the visible creatures, farre inferior both to Angels and themselves.

Moses proceedeth therefore to the description of the first matter, and the creatures thereof framed and formed. For touching those inuisible creatures, both the Angels and their heauenly habitation, howsoeuer they are circumscribed, and haue their proper and most perfect substance, yet according to the interpretation of Diuines, ^o their nature differeth from that of other creatures, celestiall or terrestriall, as not being made of that first matter, whereof these consist. Let vs therefore labor rather to be like the Angels in grace, that we may be like vnto them in glory, than pric too curiously into their ^r Nature (to our vnderstandings in manner supernaturall) and endeouour more, in heeding the way which leadeth to that Heauen of the Blessed, than busie our wits too busily in descrying or describing it. Onely thus much wee may obserue thereof, that it is beyond all reach of our obseruation: in regard of substance not subiect to corruption, alteration, passion, motion: in quantitie, ^p many dwelling places, most spacious and ample; in qualitie, a Paradise, faire, shining, delightfome, wherein no euill can be present or imminent; no good thing absent: a meere transcendent, which eye hath not seene, nor eare heard, nor the heart of man can conceiue. Where the ^q Tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them, and shall be with all in all vnto them; where the pure in heart shall see him, and euen our bodily eyes shall behold that most glorious of creatures, the Sunne of righteousness, and Sonne of God, Christ Iesus.

Embracing these things with Hope, let vs returne to Moses his description of the sensible World; who sheweth, that that Heauen and Earth, which now we see, were in the beginning or first degree of their being, an Earth without forme and void, a darkened depth and waters: a matter of no matter, and a forme without forme; a rude and indigested Chaos, or confusion of matters, rather to be beleueed than comprehended of vs. This is the second naturall beginning. For, after the expressing of the matter, followeth that which Philosophers call a second naturall Principle, ^r Prination, the want of that form, of which this matter was capable, which is accidentally a naturall principle, required in regard of generation, not of constitution, here described by that part next vs, Earth, which was without forme, as is said, and void. This was the internal constitution: the externall was, darkenesse upon the face of the deepe. ^s Which Deepe compriseth both the earth before mentioned, and the visible heauens also, called a Depth, as to our capacity infinite, and plyant to the Almighty hand of the Creator: called also Waters, ^t not because it was perfect waters, which was yet confused, but because of a certaine resemblance, not onely in the vniformity thereof, but also of that want of stabilitie, whereby it could not abide together, but as the Spirit of God moued vpon these Waters, to sustaine them; and ^u as the Henne sitteth on her egges to cherrish and quicken, as Hierome interpreteth the word, so to maintaine, and by his mightie power to bring the same into this naturall order. Here therefore is the third beginning or Principle in Nature, That forme, which the Spirit of God, the third person in Trinitie (not ayre or wind, as ^v some conceiue, being things which yet were not themselves formed) by that action framed it vnto, and after more particularly effected.

This interpretation of the Spirit mouing vpon the Waters, agreeth with that opinion which some attribute to the Stoikes, That all things are procreated and governed by one Spirit, Which Democritus called the soule of the world, Hermes and Zoroaster, ^w pretatur R. Moyses. Maim. l. c. 32. is of that minde: but l. 2. c. 31. he findeth the foure elements in these foure words here mentioned: Earth, Spirit, Deepe, and Darkenesse.

The first creature which receiued naturall forme was the light, of which God said, Let there be light; a lightsome and delightsome subiect of our Discourse, especially hauing lately passed such a confused and darke Chaos. But here (I know not how) that which then lightned the deformed matter of the vnformed world, hath hidden it selfe: some ^a interpreting this of the Sunne, which they will haue then created; some ^b of an immateriall qualitie, after receiued into the Sunne and Starres; some ^c of a cloud, formed of the waters, circularly moued, and successiue ly lightning eyther hemisphere, of which afterwards the Sunne was compact; from which they ^d differ not much which thinke it the matter of the Sunne, then more diffused and imperfect, as the waters also were earthie, and the earth fluible, till God by a second worke perfected and parted them. And (to let passe them which apply it to Angels or men) others ^e vnderstand it of the fiery Element, the essentiall properie of which is to enlighten. Yet are we not here passed all difficulties, whiles some ^f (perhaps not vniustly) would perswade the world, that Fire, as it is ordinarily in Schooles vnderstood of a sublunarie element, is with worse then Promethean theft stolne out of heauen where it is visible, and imprisoned in this their elementarie world: whereas Anaxagoras, Thales, Anaximenes, Empedocles, Heraclitus, Plato, Parmenides, Orpheus, Hermes, Zoroaster, Philo and others, the fathers of the Chaldean, Egyptian, Jewish and Grecian learning, account the ^g heauens and heauenly bodies to be æthereall fire, to which our sense also will easily subscribe. And Plinius affirmeth that Ocellus Lucanus, one of Pythagoras his scholars, was first author of that former opinion, from whom Aristotle borrowed it, if it be not stealth rather, whiles he concealeth his name. Diuers late Philosophers also seeme to haue conspired to burne vp that fierie element, or rather to aduance it about this sublunarie region into the Æthereall throne. Let the Philosophers determine this when they do other doubts: in meane while let vs, if you please, vnderstand this Light of the Fire, whether æthereall or elementarie, or both, or neyther, as in diuers respects it may be. For neyther was this Light then (as it seemeth) locally seperated from that confused masse, and by expansion (which was the second dayes worke) eleuated into her naturall place: and after that; it possessed the Sunne, Moone and Starres, faith our sense, which thence receiue th Light, and there in the æthereall region seeth new Starres and superlunarie Comets, compact of æthereall substance (as the most diligent ^h Observers haue recorded) both procreated and perishing: so that that which before was neither ethereall nor elementarie, whiles theré was neyther ether nor element perfected, after became ethereall-elementarie, as being happily the matter of the Sunne and Starres of old, and of these later * appearances; and also filling the æthereall world in the higher and lower regions thereof, both about and beneath the Moone, with the Light here mentioned, and that vigorous heate, which as an affect or an effect thereof, procreateth, recreateth and conserueth the creatures of this inferiour world. No maruell if the Philosophers are still dazzeled and darkened in this light, not yet agreeing whether it be a substance or quality, corporeall or incorporeall; when the Father of lights himselfe thus conuinceth vs of darkenesse; Where is the way? (saith he) where light dwelleth? And, by what way is the light parted? And if we cannot conceiue that which is so evidently seene, and without which nothing is seene and euident: how inaccessible is that light where in the Light of this light dwelleth? Euen this light is more then admirable; * life of the earth, ornament of the heauens, beautie and smile of the world, eye to our eyes, ioy of our hearts: most common, pure, and perfect of visible creatures; first borne of this world, and endowed with a double inheritance of earthly and heauenly inheritance, shining in both; which containeth, sustaineth, gathereth, seuereth, purgeeth, perfecteth, renueth, and preserueth all things; repelling dread, expelling sorrow, ^k shaking the wicked out of the earth, and lifting vp the hearts of the godly to looke for a greater and more glorious light; greatest instrument of Nature, resemblance of Grace, type of Glory, and bright glasse of the Creators brightnesse.

This Light God made by his Word, not vttered with sound of syllables, nor that which in the beginning (and therefore before the beginning) was with God and was God: but by his powerfull effecting (calling things that were not as though they were) and by his calling or willing causing them to be, thereby ^m signifying his will as plainly, and effecting it as easily as a word is to a man. That vncreated superessential light, the eternall Trinitie, commanded this light to be, and approued it as good, both in it selfe and to the future Creatures: and seperated the same from darkenesse: (which seemeth a ⁿ merpriuation and absence of light) disposing them to succede each other in the hemisphere; which by what motion or reuolution it was effected the three first dayes, who can determine? Fond it is to reason à facto ad fieri, from the present order of constitution to the principles of that institution of the creatures, whiles they were yet in making, as Simplicius and other Philosophers (may I tearm them, or Atheists?) haue absurdly done in this and other parts of the creation. And this was the first dayes worke.

THE SECOND DAYES WORKE.

IN the second God said, Let there be a firmament. The word Rakiah translated firmament, signifieth ^o expansum or expansionem, a stretching out; designing that vast and wide space, wherein are the waterie cloudes here mentioned, and those lights which follow in the fourteenth verse, by him placed in expanso: how focuer some vnderstand it onely of the ayre. The seperating the waters vnder this firmament from the waters aboue the firmament, some ^q interpret of waters about the heauens to refresh their exceeding heate, or of I know not what Chrystalline heauen: some of spirituall substances whom Basil confuteth; Origen (after his wont) allegorically. Most probable it seemeth that Moses intendeth the seperation of those waters here below, in their elementarie seat, from those about vs in the clouds; to which Dauid alluding, sayth: He hath stretched out the heauens like a curtain, and laid the beames of his chambers in the waters. This seperating of the waters is caused in the ayrie region, by the æthereall, in which those forces are placed which thus exhale and captiuate these waters. That matter before endued with lightning qualitie, was now in this second day (as it seemeth)

And wherein doe not these differ from each other touching the celestiaall nature; roundnesse, motion, number, measure, and other difficulties, most of which are by some^t denied? Diuersitie of motions caused the auncients to^u number eight Orbes; Ptolemie on that ground numbred nine; Alphonsus and Tebitius ten; Copernicus finding another motion, reuiued the opinion of Aristarchus Samius of the earths mouing, &c. Others which therein dissent from him, yet in respect of that fourth motion haue added an eleuenth Orbe, which the Diuines make vp euen twelue by their Emyreall immoueable heauen. And many denie this assertion of Orbes, supposing them to haue bene supposed rather for^x instructions sake then for any reall being. And Moses here saith expansum, as Dauid also calleth it a Curtaine, which in such diuersitie of Orbs should rather haue bene spoken in the plurall number. The Siderius Nuncius y of Galileus Galileus tells vs of foure new Planets, Iupiters attendants, obserued by the helpe of his Glasse, which would multiply the number of Orbes further. A better Glasse, or neerer sight and site might perhaps finde more Orbes, and thus should wee runne in Orbem in a circular endless maze of opinions. But I will not dispute this question, or take it away by auerring^z the Starres animated, or else moued by^{*} Intelligentie. A learned ignorance shall better content me, and for these varieties of motions, I will with^a Lactantius, ascribe them to God the Architect of Nature and co-worker therewith by wayes Natuall, but best knowne to himselfe. Neyther list I to dance after their pipe which ascribe a muscalle harmonie^{*} to the heauens.

THE THIRD DAYES WORKE.

AND thus were the æthereall and ayrie parts of the world formed: in the Third day followeth the perfecting of the two lowest elements, water and earth, which as yet were confused vntill that mightie word of God did thus both diuorce and marry them, compounding of them both this one Globe, which he called drie land and seas. I call it a Globe with the Scriptures^b, and the best Philosophers^c, for which respect Numa built the Temple of Vesta round. Neyther yet is it absolutely round and a perfect sphere, but σφαιροειδής rather, as Strabo affirmeth, hauing (saith Scaliger ^e) επιρροαίς ^υ επιρροαίς, depressed vallies, extended plaines, swelling hillockes, high-mounting mountaines, long courses of riuers, and other varieties of Nature and Art, which all in so huge a maze rather beautifie the roundnesse, then take it away. The Eclipse of the Moone later seene^f in the East then in the West, the round shadow of the earth which darkeneth it, the rising of the Sunne and Starres sooner in the^g East then West, the vnequall eleuation of the Pole, and the Northerne constellations appearing to vs, the Southerne continually depressed: all these obseruing due proportions, according to the difference of places and countreies; yea, the compassing of the earth by many Mariners, argue the round compass thereof, against Patritius^h his deformitie, or that deformitie which otherⁱ Philosophers haue ascribed thereto. The equalitie or inequality of dayes, according to the neerenesse or farnessse from the Equinoctiall, holding proportion as well by Sea as Land (as doth also the eleuation of the pole) and not being longer where^k a quarter of the world is Sea, then if it were all earth, doe confute the opinion of the plainenesse of the water, and those former absurdities. Euen all the pretended deformitie by hills, dales, waters, compared with the Diameter of this Globe, is not so much as the inequality in an apple, or a carued bowle, or quilted ball, which yet we call round. And this diuersitie serueth not onely for ornament, but for more largeness of habitation, variety of ayre and earth, and for pleasure and profite. Thus doth this Globe swell our to our vse, for which it enlargeth it selfe: and seemeth large to vs, being in respect of the vniuerse lesse then little. How much thereof is couered with waters? How much not at all discouered? How much desert and desolate? And how many millions are they which share the rest of this little among them? And yet how many thousands glorie of the greatnesse of their possessions? All this Globe is demonstrable to be but a point, and in comparison nothing to that wide wide Cœnopie of heauen, a mans possession but a point and as nothing to the earth, a man of possessions but a point and in a manner nothing to his possessions; (as Socrates said sometimes to Alcibiades) few can shew their landes in an vniuersall Mappe, where a whole Region occupieth a small roome: and yet how couetous, how proude is dust and ashes of dust and earth, notwithstanding the little we haue while we liue, and that lesse which shall haue and possesse vs in a prison of three cubits being dead? Well did one compare this our grosser and drossier world to an Ant-hill, and men the inhabitants to so many Pismires in the variety of their diuersified studies, toiling and turmoiling themselues therein. Scipio seemed ashamed of the Romane Empire, as seeming but a point of the earth, which it selfe was but a point. And yet how ready are many to sell heauen for earth? That largeness and continuance beyond all names of time and place, for this momentanie possession of almost nothing, although they haue hell and diuell and all in the bargain? Let this morall obseruation entertaine our Reader, perhaps tyred in these rigid disputes: and now let vs returne to the naturall disposition and constitution of this Globe, in which the earth was couered with variety of Plants and fruits, which had bene before couered with slimie waters.

God commanded, and the waters which yet oppressed, and by their effusion and confusion did tyrannize, rather than orderly subdue, and gouerne this inferiour myrie masse, were partly receiued into competent channels, and there also gathered on swelling heapes, where, though they menace a returne of the olde Chaos, both by their noyse and waues, yet hath God stablished his commandement upon it, and set barres and doores, and said, Hitherto shall thou come and no further, and here shall it stay thy proude waues. Otherwise, The Deepes which then covered it as a garment, would now stand above the Mountaines. At his rebuke they flee, who with fetters of sand (to shew his power in weakenesse, with a miracle in nature) chaineth vp this enraged Tyrant, that the creatures might haue a meete place of habitation. Thus did not onely the drie Land appeare, but by the same hand was enriched with Hearbs and Trees, enabled in their mortall condition, to remaine immortall in their kinde. And here beginneth Moses to declare the creation of compound bodies; hitherto busied in the Elements.

THE FOURTH DAYES WORKE.

Now when the Lord had made both Plants, Trees, and Light, without the influence, yea, before the being of Sunne, Moone or Starre, he now framed those fierie Balls, and glorious Lights, whereby the Heauens are beautified, the Ayre enlightned, the Seas ruled, and the Earth made fruitfull. Thus he did the fourth day, after those other things created, least some foolish Naturalist should binde his mighty hand in Natures bands, seeing these Lights now become the chiefe officets in Natures Court. That shining before dispersed, was vnitied in these bodies, whether by refraction of those former beames, by these solide Globes, or by gathering that fierie substance into them, or by both, or by other meanes, I leaue to others coniectures. Many are the dreames of Philosophers, some esteeming them fire; some earth, others cloudes, and others stones, fired: Heracledes and the Pythagoreans deemed each starre a world.

it was because the Sun thus honored his birth-day. Jsaac Leuit. 1. a Plut. de plac. Phil. 1. 2. Baribol. de stellis. pag 5. They

* A few at Rome asked a Philosopher the reason why the Sun shined euery Wednesday: the Philosopher obseruing it true, but not assigning a cause, the lew said,

They

They are commonly holden Round, simple, lucide bodies, the most compact and condensate parts of their Orbs, or of that æthereall region, of, and in which they are: bright flames not of this our fire which deuoureth and consumeth (for the whole Ocean would not serue the Sunne alone for a draught, nor the Earth with all her store for a breakfast) but quickning and nourishing. Let vs a little consider of their Greatnesse, Swiftnesse, Number, Influence.

For the first, Ptolomey measured the Sunnes greatnesse 166 $\frac{2}{3}$ times as much as the whole terrestriall Globe: Copernicus whom Scaliger calleth Alterum ani nostri Ptolomeum 162. Tycho Brahe 140. The Moone is holden by Ptolomeus 29. times lesse then the Earth, -by Cap. 43. by Tycho 42. Albatognius and Alfraganus haue added their opinions of the rest, therefore diuiding them into fixe rankes or formes of differing magnitudes: wherein as they some what differ from each other, so much more frō Tycho Brahe that learned Dane, whose costs & pains in this science are admirable. But Salomon (wiser then they all) had foretold^f that the heauens in height, & the earth in deepenesse, and the kings heart, none can search out: that is, exactly and absolutely, as appeareth in the differing opinions, both of the earths circuit and diameter, and of the altitude of the heauens, and consequently of the quantitie of the starres, which must presuppose the former. They agree not in the order of the Planets, nor how many semi-diameters of the earth the heauen is elciated, which after Ptolomeys Hypotheses are 20000. after Tychos reckoning 14000. Hence it is, that the quantitie and the swiftnesse^h is much more after the former, then after this later opinion, which doth better salue the incrediblenesse thereof, then faining a Giant-like labor (as Ramus calleth it) of the earths continuall rolling.

The number^k of the starres some haue reckoned 1600. others 1022. and Tycho Brahe more. Galileus his glasse hath made them innumerable, in descrying infinite numbers otherwise not visible to vs, and especially the Galaxia full of them. Yea God himselfe propounds it to Abraham^l (whom Iosephus calls a great Astronomer) as a thing ir possible to number them. It is his owne royall prerogatiue, ^m he counteth the number of the starres, and bringeth out their armies by number, and calleth them all by their names. The end why God placed them in the firmament Moses expresseth, to separate the day from the night, and to be for signes, and for seasons, and for dayes, and for yeares, and for lights in the firmament of the heauen to giue light upon the earth. Their influence & effects are in Scriptureⁿ mentioned: neither can any iustly deny the same in the elements and elementarie bodies: the Stoicall Fate, the Caldean, Iewish, and Arabian fancies are now disclaimed euen by those^o learned, which maintaine in our dayes Iudiciall Astrologie, or commend the same. Neither can it agree with Christian religion to subiect the will of man to any externall naturall force, nor with reason in matters contingent and casuall to make them naturall Arbiters: nor will I easly beleeue that particular euents can be foretold from generall causes, especially in the affaires and fortunes of men. Where the numbers, substances, faculties, actions of these starres are weakly or not at all knowne vnto vs (as hath bene shewed) it is like as ro say how many and what kinde of Chickens a Henne will hatch, when we see not all, nor scarce know any of the Egges vnder her. The swiftnesse of the heauens wheele, ^p which euen in the moment of obseruing is past obseruing; the vanitie of our Oracle Almanacks, which commonly speake doubtfully or falsely of the weather; the infinitnesse almost of causes concurring, which are diuersly qualified; the weakenesse of those^q foundations on which this Art is grounded; the force of hereditarie qualities descended from parents, of custome and education in forming mens inanners; the disagreements of the Astrologers among themselues, the new from the old, and all from the truth, as Experience in all ages hath shewed. And lastly, the prohibition of the same by Scripture, Fathers, Councils, Lawes; yea the learnedst of the Chaldeans and other Astronomers themselves (as Eusebius * reciteth of Bardanes, and Rab. Moses ben Maimon, hauing read all the Arabians workes hereof, answereth the Iewish Astrologers,) are strong arguments against the Starre-gazers predictions. But let Picus Mirandula his 12. bookes against Astrologie, and Ioseph Scaligers preface before Manilius be well weighed of such as dote on, or doubt of this Genethliacall ridiculous vanitie, if not a impious villany, as those authors and others ^r proue it, not by the errors of some Chiefes and Champions onely, but of the Art it selfe, and the whole Senate of Iewish Saracenicall and Christian Astrologers together hatching a lie. The signes and constellations which Astronomers obserue in and on each side the Zodiaks, would be too prolix in this discourse already tedious: as likewise those alterations which some haue obserued in some starres.

But those two great lights, the two Eyes of the beaueus, the greater light to rule the day, and the lesse to rule the night, (which is called great, ^f not so much for the quantitie wherein it is lesse then many starres, as for the operation and seeming to the sense) do command mine eyes to take more speciall view of their Beauties. How willing could I be (like Phaeton) to mount the chariot of the Sunne? which commeth forth as a Bridegroom out of his chamber and reioyceth like a mightie man to runne his race; King of starres, enthronized in the mids of the planets, heart of the world, eye of the heaucens, brightest gemme of this goodly ring, father of dayes, yeares, seasons, meteors; Lord of light, fountaine of heate, which seeth all things, and by whom all things see, which lendeth light to the starres and life to the world; high steward of Natures kingdome, and liuelest visible image of the liuing inuisible God.

And dazled with this greater light I would reflect mine eyes to that reflexion of this light in the sober, siluer countenance of the silent Moone; which (whether it haue any natiue shining, though weake, as Zanchius and Bartholinus hold; or whether it be an æthereall earth, ^u which mountains and vallies, and other not elementary elements, compact of the dregs of the æthereall parts; or whatsoeuer else, reason, fancie, or phrensie haue imagined thereof) is Queene of the Night, attended with the continuall dances of twinkling starres, Mother of moneths, Lady of seas and ^x moisture, constant image of the worlds inconstancie, which it neuer seeth twice with the same face; and truest modell of humane frailty, shining with a borrowed light, and eclipsed with euery interposition of the earth. But I am not Endymion, nor so much in Lunaes fauour, as to be lulled asleepe in her lap, there to learn these misteries of Nature, and the secrets of that happy marriage betweene these celestially twinned. And it is high time for me to descend from these measures of time; the lampes of the world, and to behold the neerer workes of God before our feet in the aire and waters which God on the fift day created. But the principall rarities to be obserued in these creatures, we shall disperse our scattered discourses through this worke, as occasion shall be offered; as likewise touching the beasts both wilde and tame, and the creeping things created the sixth day. Thus was the Aire, Water, and Earth, furnished with their proper inhabitants.

meane time we have this testimonie of Moses of the Creation of the World, whose sense, if I haue missed or mist in these many words, I craue pardon. And although this testimonie might suffice a Christian, which must liue by faith^m, and not by sight: yet to preuent cauillers, we haue other witnesses both of reason and authoritie, That this World had a beginning, and that the bulder and maker thereof, was God. For doth not Nature both within and without vs, in the admirable frame of this lesse or that greater World, in the Notions of the one, and the Motions of the other, in the wise and mightie order and ordering of both, leade men vnto a higher and more excellent Natureⁿ, which, of his goodnesse^o, wee call G o d? When wee behold the whole World, or any part of it, in the Elements such agreement, in such disagreement: in the heauenly motions such constancie, in such varietie: in these compound bodies, Being, Liuing, Sense, Reason; as diuers degrees, diuersly communicated to so many formes and rankes of Creatures: Wee can no more ascribe these things to chance, than a Printers Case of letters could by chance fall into the right composition of the Bible which he printeth, or of Homers Iliads; to vse P Tulhes similitude: neither can any ascribe the Creation to the Creature, with better reason, then if by some shipwreck, being cast on a desolate Iland, and finding houses, but seeing no people therein, he could esteeme the Birds, or Beasts, (all the Ilanders he seeth) to be the framers of these buildings: But thou maicst thinke it eternall; Thou maicst as well thinke it to be God, Infinite, Vnchangeable, in the whole and in all the parts. Doth not the Land by seasons, the Sea by ebbing and flowing, the Aire by succeeding changes, the Heauens by motions, all measured by Time, proclaime that they had a beginning of Time? Are not Motion and Time as neare Twinnes, as Time and Eternitie are implacable enemies? Nay, how canst thou force thy minde to conceiue an Eternitie in these things, which canst not conceiue Eternitie? which canst not but conceiue some beginning, and first terme or point, from whence the motion of this wheele began? And yet how should we know this first turning of the Worlds wheele, whose hearts within vs moue, be we vnwitting or vnwilling, the beginning whereof thou canst not know, and yet canst not but know that it had a beginning, and together with thy bodie shall haue an ending? How little a while is it, that the best 9 Stories in euery Nation, shew the cradle and child-hood thereof? Their later receiued Letters, Arts, Ciuilitie? But what then, say they, did God before he made the World? I answere, that thou shouldest rather thinke Diuinely of Man, then Humanely of God, and bring thy selfe to be fashioned after his Image, then frame him after thine. This foolish question some answere according to the foolishnesse thereof, saying; He made Hell for such curious Inquisitors. Aliud est videre, aliud ridere, saith Augustine. Libertinus responderim nescio quod nescio. Qua tempora fuissent, qua abs te condita non essent? Nec in tempora tempore praecedis, sed eelsitudine semper presentis aternitatis. &c.

Before all things were, G o d only was, and he vnto himselfe was in stead of the World, Place, Time, and all things, hauing all goodnesse in himselfe: the holy Trinitie delighting and reioycing together. To communicate therefore (not to encrease, or receiue) his goodnesse, he created the Wor'd, quem Graeci ^x κρίνον. (saith Plinie) nomine ornamenti appellant, nos à perfecta absolutaq; elegancia Mundum. But for this matter, it is also of the wisest and most learned in all ages confessed, as their testimonies, alleaged by Iustin Martyr, Lactantius, and other Ancients, and especially by Philip Morrey, doe plainly manifest. To him therefore, to Vives, and others, which haue vndertaken this taske, by reason, and by humane authoritie, to conuince the gainc-sayers of our faith, let such resort, as would be more fully resolved in these curious doubts. As for all such ^z strange and phantasticall or phreneticall opinions of Heretikes, or Philosophers, which haue otherwise related of this mysterie of the Creation, then Moses, they neede not confuting, and for relating these opinions we shall finde fitter place afterwards. I will here adde this saying of Vines to such vnnaturall Naturalists, as vpon slight and seeming naturall reasons, call these things into question.  Quam stultum est de mundi creatione ex legibus huius Natura statuerē, cūm crea-* tio illa naturam antecesserit? Tam enim natura est condita quando & mundus, nec aliud est natura quam quod Deus in se sit; alioqui minister esset Deus natura, non Dominus. Hehce was Aristotles Eternitie, Plinies Deitie ascribed to the world, Democritus, Leucippus, and Epicurus, their Atomi, the Stoikes Aeterna materia, Plato's Deus, exemplar & materia, as P Ambrose termeth them, or as 9 others, unum or bonum, Mens & Anima (a Trinitie without perfect Vnitie) the Manichees two beginnings, and an endlesse world of errors about the Worlds beginning, because they measured all by Naturall axiomes. r Orphens, as Theophilus the Chronographer, cited by Cedrenus, alleageth him, hath his Trinitie of Αἰὼς χαλκός & ἰὼς ἑσπερά, & ΜΗΤΙΣ, ΦΩΣ, ΖῆΟ. ΔΟΤΗΡ: to which he ascribeth the Worlds Creation: but the Poets dreames are infinite, which might make and marre their Poeticall Worlds at pleasure.

hitherto we have spoken of the framing of this mightie Fabrike, the Creation of the visible World, leauing that inuisible to the spirituall Inhabitants, which there ^a alway behold the face of the heauenly Father, as not daring to prie too far into such mysteries, aduancing our selues in those things which we neuer saw, ² Rashly puffed up with a fleshly minde.

This whereof wee treat they neede not, as finding all sufficiency in their All-sufficient Creator: The inferiour Creatures (which hitherto have beene described) know it not, but content ^b themselves with themselves, in enioyning their naturall being, mouing, sense. Only man, in regard of his bodie, needeth it, and by the reasonable power of his soule can discern and vse it. Man therefore was last created, as the end of the rest, ^c an Epitome and Mapped of the World, a compendious little other world, consisting of a visible and inuisible, heauenly and earthly, mortall and immortall Nature, the knot and bond of bodily and spirituall, superiour and inferiour substances, resemble both the ^d worke and the worke-man: the last in execution, but first in intention, to whom all these Creatures should serue, as meanes and prouocations of his seruice to his and their Creator.

Man may be considered, in regard of this life, or of that which is to come: of this life, in respect of Nature or Grace: and this Nature also sustaineth a two-fold consideration, of integritie and corruption: For ^e God made man righteous, but they sought to themselves many inuentions. His first puritie in his Creation, his fall from thence by sinne, his endeouir to recouer his former innocencie by future glorie, either in the by-waies of superstition, which Nature (a blinde guide) leadeth him into, through so many false Religions; or by the true new and liuing way, which God alone can set him, and doth conduct him in, is the subiect of our tedious taske; the first two more briefly propounded: the two last historically and largely related.

μυροειδής, quia omnes mundi virtutes continet; nam sunt in mundo dii, quatuor elementa, bruta, planities: habet homo rationē mouēdi, crescēdi vim, &c. Aristides ap. Phot. 249. vid. etiam Leon. Hebr. dial. 3. de Amore.

In that first state, his Author and Maker was Iehoua Elohim, God in the pluralitie of Persons and vnitie of Essence; the Father, by the Sonne, in the power of the Spirit: whereunto, he did not only vse his powerfull word as before, saying; let there be Man, but a consultation, let vs make Man: not that he needed counsaile, but ^f that he in this Creature did shew his counsaile and wisdom most apparantly. The Father, as first in order, speaketh vnto the Sonne and holy Ghost, and the Sonne and holy Ghost in an vnspokeable manner speake and decree with the Father; and ^g the whole Trinitie consult and agree together, to make Man; which ^h for Mans instruction, is by Moses vttered after the manner of Men. The manner of his working was also in this Creature, singular; both in regard of his bodie, which, as a Potter his clay, hee wrought and framed of the dust into this goodly shape; and of his soule, which he immediately breathed into his nostrils.

^f Quia rationalis creatura, quasi cum consilio facta videretur. Iunilius (vel, ut alij, Beda) in Genes. Philo attributeth it to the help: of others, in making a creature, not only pattaker of diuine vertues, but of vice also, which hee could not deriue from his Creator: not obseruing what Salomō saith (as is before) Ec. 7. vlt. ^g Socr. l. 2. c. 25. ^h Cyrl. Al. cōt. Iyn. l. 1.

Thus hath Man cause to glorie in his Creators care, in himselfe to be humbled, hauing a bodie framed not of solid earth, but of the dust (the basest and lightest part of the basest and grossest element, ^k So vaine a thing is man) his soule of nothing, lighter then vanitie, in the infusion created, and in the Creation infused, to bee the dweller ^l in this house of clay, and habitation of dust, yea not a house, but a ^m tabernacle, continually in dissolution. Such is the Maker and matter of man. The forme was his conformitie to God after whose Image he was made. Christ onely is in full resemblance, ⁿ the Image of the inuisible God, ^o the brightnesse of his glorie, and the ingraued forme of his Person. Man was not this Image, but made ad imaginem, according to this Image, resembling his Author, but with imperfection, in that perfection of humane Nature.

This Image of God appeared in the soule properly, secondly in the bodie (not as the ^p Anthropomorphite Heretikes, and ^q Popish Image-makers imagine, but) as the instrument of the soule, and lastly in the whole Person. The soule in regard of the spirituall and immortall substance, resembleth him which is a Spirit, and euerlasting, which seeth all things, remayning it selfe vnscene, and hauing a nature in manner incomprehensible comprehendeth the natures of other things: to which some adde the resemblance of the holy Trinitie, in this, that one soule hath those three essentiall faculties of Vnderstanding, Will, and Memorie, or (as others) of Vegetation, Sense, and Reason. In regard of gifts and naturall endowments, the soule in the vnder-standing part receiued a Diuine impression, and Character, in that knowledge, wher-by she measureth the heauens, ^f bringeth them to the earth, lifteth vp the earth to heauen, mounteth aboue the heauens to behold the Angels, pierceth the center of the earth in darkenesse to discerne the infernall regions and legions, beneath and aboue them all searcheth into the diuine Nature: whereby, ^r Adam was without studie the greatest Philosopher, (who at first sight knew the nature of the beasts, the originall of the Woman) and the greatest Diuine (except the second Adam) that euer the earth bare. The will also, in free choyce of the best things, in ^u righteous disposition towards man, and true holinesse towards God, was conformed to his will, for whose wils sake it is, and was created. The body cannot so liuely expresse the vertue of him that made it, but as it could, in that perfect constitution, (^x so fearfully and wonderfully made) and as the organ of the soule, whose weapon it was to righteousness, had some shadow thereof. The whole Man in his naturall Nobilitie beyond, and Princely dominion over the other Creatures (that we mention not the hope of future blessednesse) sheweth after what Image Man was created, and to what he should be renewed.
 The end whereunto God made Man, is God himselfe, who hath ^v made all things for himselfe: the subordinate end was Mans endlesse happinesse, the way whereunto is religious obedience.

Moses addeth, ^a He created them male and female, thereby to shew, that the Woman in Oeconomicall respect is ^b the Image and glorie of the Man, being created for the Man, and of the Man, but in relation to God, or the World, She as a Creature was also framed after the same Image. As for that monstrous conceit of the Rabbins, that the first man was an Hermaphrodite, it deserueth not confutation or mention. The order of the Womans creation is plainly related. God ^c finding not a meete helpe for Adam in his sleepe tooke one of his ribs, whereof he built the Woman. This is a my-steric signified that deadly sleepe of the heauenly Adam on the Crosse, whose stripes were our healing, whose dearch was our life, and out of whose bleeding side was by Diuine dispensation framed his Spouse the Church. This may be part of the sense, or an application thereof, as ^d some say to, this mysteric; or the signification rather of the ^e thing it selfe here declared, then of the words, which properly and plainly set downe the history of a thing done, after the literall sense to be expounded.

According to this sense Moses expresth the Creation, the making and marrying of the Woman. The Maker was God, the matter a ribbe of Adam, the forme a building, the end to be a meeete helpe. The Man was made of dust, the Woman of the Man, to be one flesh with the Man, and of a ribbe, to be a helpe and supporter of him in his calling, which requireth strength: neyther could any bone be more easily spared in the whole bodie, which hath not such variety of any other kinde: nor could any place more designe the Woman her due place; not of the head, that shee should not arrogate rule; not of the feet, that the husband should not reckon her as his slaue, but in a meane betweene both, and that neere the heart, in which they should (as in all Diuine and Huimane Lawes else) be fast ioyned. The building of this bodie of the Woman, was in regard of the Progeny, which was in that larger roome to haue the first dwelling. The soule of the Woman is to be conceiued^f as the soule of the Man before mentioned, immediately infused and created by God, herein equall to Man.

Being thus made, she is married by God himselfe vnto Adam, who brought her vnto him, to shew the sacred authority of marriage, and of parents in marriage: A mutuall consent and gratulation followeth betweene the parties, lest any should tyrannically abuse his fatherly power. And thus are two made one flesh in regard of one originall, equall, right, mutuall consent, and bodily coniunction. And thus were this goodly couple glorious in nakednesse, not so much in the ornaments of beauty, which made them to each other amiable, as of Maicstie, which made them to other creatures dreadfull: the Image of God clothing that nakednesse, which in vs appeareth filthie in the most costly clothing. God further blessed them both with the power of multiplication in their owne kind, and dominion ouer other kindes; and gaue them for food^h euery hearbe bearing seed which is vpon all the earth, and euery tree wherein is the fruite of a tree bearing seede. He doth (as it were) set them in possession of the creatures, which by a Charter of free gift he had conueyed to them, to holde of him as Lord Paramount.

But least any should thinke this but a niggardly and vnequall gift, whereas since the flood more hath been added, and that in a more vnworthinesse through mans sin: let him consider, that since the fallⁱ the earth is accursed, whereby many things are hurtfull to mans nature, and in those which are wholsome there is not such varietie of kindes, such plenty in each variety, such ease in getting our plentie, or such quality in what is gotten, in the degree of goodnesse and sweetnesse to the taste and nourishment: which had they remained in this sickely and elder age of the world, wee should not need to enuie Cleopatra's vanitie, or Heliogabalus his superfluity and curiosity. And had not man sinned,^k there should not haue needed the death of beasts to nourish his life, which without such stay should haue bene immortall: the vse whereof was after graunted rather to supply necessity when the Flood had weakened the Earth, then to minister a greater abundance then before it had; and least of all to satisfie the greedy and curious appetites of more then beastly men.

Liberal and bountifull was Gods allowance, which yet as man abused in eating the forbidden fruite; so whether any sinfull man did transgress by eating the flesh of beasts, as iniquity increased, it is vncertaine. And yet it is likely, that when the earth was^l filled with crueltie, as men escaped not beastly butcherie, so beasts escaped not butcherly inhumanitie; and men that stay not now for commission to eat mans flesh, would then much lesse aske leaue to feede on beasts. Then did the godly Patriarches liue many hundred yeares^m without such foode, whereas now we reach not to one with this helpe, that I speake not of those which by abuse heereof are as cruell to themselves, (in shortning their dayes by surfeits) as to the creatures, making their bellies to become Warrens, Fish pooles, Shamblers, and what not, saue what they should be? Had not man bene diuellish in sinning, hee had not bene beastly in feeding, nay the beasts had abhorred that which now they practise, both against their Lord and their fellow-seruants. ⁿ The Wolfe should haue dwelt with the Lambe, the Leopard should haue lien with the Kid, and the Calfe, and the Lion, and the fit beast together, and a little Childe might leade them. ^o And this in the time of the Flood appeared, when all of them kept the peace with each other, and dutifull allegiance to their

The place of Adams dwelling is expressed by Moses; And the Lord God planted a Garden Eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had made, Gen. 2. 8. Marvell it is to see the confusion which sinne bringeth, which appeareth not onely in the body, soule, diet, and other prerogatiues of our first parents; but in this place also, then a place of pleasure, a Paradise and Garden of delights: after, a place prohibited, and kept by the blade of a sword shaken: now the place cannot be found in earth, but is become a common place in mens braines, to macerate and vexe them in the curious search hereof. Some doe conuert this Historie into an allegorie, as did the Manichees and the Originists, confuted by Methodius, as Epiphanius witnesseth. q Hierome in Dan. 10. saith, that seeking for shadowes in the truth, they ouer-turne the truth it selfe. Umbras & imagines in veritate quarontes, ipsam conantur euertere veritatem, vt flumina & arbores et paradysum putent allegoria legibus se debere subruere. Such mysticall Mist-all and Misse-all Interpreters are our Familists in these times, by vnseasonable and vnreasonable allegories, raising mists ouer the Scripture-sense, whereby they misse and cannot finde. r Augustine relateth three opinions, that allegoricall, which hee confuteth; the literall, and that which followeth both the one and the other as himselfe doth. The Heremians and Selenicians are said to denie, that there was any such place: and the naked Adamites accounted their Church to be Paradise. Others are as prodigall, and ascribe hereunto all the Earth, which was a Paradise till sinne brought in a curse. Thus holdeth Wolfgangus Wissenburg, Goropius also and Vadianus are of like minde, That mans exile was but the alteration of their happy condition, that the fiery sword was the fiery Zone, &c. A great while it went for currant that it was a pleasant region, by a long tract of Sea and Land separated from our habitable world, and lifted vp to the circle of the Moone, whereby it was out of the reach of Noahs floud, as u truely perhaps as Patricius and others haue found another world in the Moone, with men and beasts therein of greater stature and longer life then here with vs. Thus hath z Petrus Comestor and Strabus and many traouellers in old times haue trauelled with this conceit of their fooles paradise, & brought forth a lie, as appeareth by their Legends. v That Saint Brandon sailed thither from Ireland, is as true as that he met Iudas in the way released from his paines, (as he was away from Saturday to Sunday Euen-song:) or that they made fire on a fith (supposing it to be an Iland) as that Legend telleth. It should seeme the man in the Moone called him, & shewed him the way to this Paradise, or that z Dimias, which (according to the relations of Antonius Diogenes) traouelling beyond Thule, went so farr North that he came to the Moone, which seemed a shining earth, where hee saw many strange sights as credible as the former: or else great Lucifer himselfe, who (as a later traoueller a reporteth) hath lately bequeathed a Lieutenancy to Ignatius and his Colony of Iesuites in the New Hell, in that New-found-world of the Moone; the care of the foundation whereof he committeth to that Iebusticall societie. But let vs descend from this Lunaticke Paradise.

Others place it Eastward, in the highest top of the earth, where the foure Riuers mentioned by Moses haue their originall, whence they runne, and are swallowed vp of the earth, and after rising in diuers places of the world, are known by the names of Nilus, Ganges, Tigris, Euphrates. a Hugo de S. Victore and Adrichomius are of this opinion; yea, the great Cardinal b Caietane and Bellarmino place Henoch and Elias in earthly Paradise, yet liuing there vntill the time of Antichrist, which wood he cannot see (being in the midst of it) for trees. But the discouery of the World by Trauellers, and description thereof by Geographers, will not suffer vs to follow them (to the want of which Art, I meane Geographie, such fantasies may be imputed) whereby also is confuted the opinion of them which place it vnder the Equinoctiall circle, as Durandus and Bonauentura.

c Others account so much to Paradise as those foure Riuers doe water, euen the chiefe part of Afrike and Asia: and some confine it in streighter limits of Syria, Arabia and Mesopotamia, as if Adam had bene so couetous as his posteritie, or so laborious borious as to husband so large Countties: The false interpretation of those Riwers to be Nilus, Ganges, &c. was the cause of this error; the ^d Septuagint translating in stead of Sichor (which is Nilus) Gibon the name of one of these streames.

e Iere. 2. 18.

Moses as it were of purpose by an exact Chorography and delineation of the situation, doth meete with those errors, and with other the like, which I doe not heere relate. Neyther is their opinion to be followed, which drowne all altogether in the deluge, seeing that after that time Moses wrote this. Franciscus Iunius in his readings on Genesis hath largely and learnedly handled this matter, and added a Map also of Heden in which it stood, and the course of the Riwers with the Countie adiacent. In him the Reader may finde satisfaction. He sheweth out of Curtius, Plinie, and Solinus, the miraculous fertilitie of that part of Babylonia, which Ptolomy calleth Auranitis or Andanitis, easily declined from Heden, the name giuen by Moses, mentioned after Moses time, 2. Reg. 19. 12. and Es. 37. 12.

^e See also Annot. V. 2. 2. in Ge. 2.

For the foure Riwers he sheweth them out of Ptolemeus, Strabo, Plinie, Dion, Marcellinus, &c. to be so many diuisions of Euphrates, whereof Baharsares or Nebarsares is Gibon, that which passeth through Babylon, is for the excellency peculiarly called Perath or Euphrates; Nebar-malca or Basilus, Pisbon; Tigris, & Chiddekel. For the fiery sword he obserueth out of Pliny, lib. 2. c. 106, a certaine miracle of Nature in Babylonia, where the ground is seen burning continually about the quantity of an acre. But this place will not serue to dispute this point. If those Riwers doe not now remaine, or haue altered eyther channell or names, it is no new thing in so olde a continuance of the world. It is more then probable, that here in these parts Paradise was, although now deformed by the Flood, and by Time consumed and become a Stage of Barbarisme.

^f Tigris is both the greater Riuer and a smaller, which runneth out of Euphrates into Tigris, which is here meant.

Neyther hath the place alone bene such a pitched fild of Opinions, but the fruit also which Moses expresth to be the instrument and occasion of Adams ruine, hath set some mens teeth on edge, who tell vs what it is, as if they had lately tasted of it, a certaine signe indeede and fruite of that once vnlawfull tasting. ^g Goropius a man addicted to opinions, which I knowe not whether hee did holde more strangely or strongly, though he enlargeth Paradise ouer the World, yet hee maketh Adams an Indian (maruaile hee placeth him not in Dutch-land, for that was his language, if Beecanus be to be beleued.) About the Riuer Acefines, betwixt Indus and Ganges (saith he) groweth that admirable Figge-tree, which hee at large describeth out of Plinie, Theophrastus and Strabo, whose branches spreading from the bodie, doe bend themselues downwards to the earth, where they take holde, and with new rooting multiply themselues, like a maze or wood: One tolde ^h Clusius that hee himselfe hath bene one of eight hundred or a thousand men, which had hidden themselves vnder one of these trees, adding, that some of them were able to couer three thousand men.

^g Goro. Beecan. Indofysthica.

Strange is this tree, and Beecanus is with conceit hereof rauished into the pleasures of Paradise. This tree ⁱ Linschoten describeth growing about Goa, and (to bring vs out of Goropius Paradise) sayth that it hath no fruite worth the eating: but a small kinde like Oliues, which is foode onely for birds. Hee telleth vs ^k of another Indian Figge-tree, growing rather like a Recde then a Tree, a mans height, a spanne thicke, the leaues a fathome long, and three spannes broad: The Arabians and Indians suppose this to be that dismall fruite. The cause of this opinion Paludanus in his Annotations vpon Linschoten ascribeth to the pleasantnesse of the smell and taste. Being cut in the middle, it hath certaine veynes like a Crosse, whereon the Christians in Syria make many speculations. Yea the same Author telleth of a hill in the Ile of Seilan, called Adams hill, where they shew his foot-print, to proue that hee liued there: of which reade our discourse of that Iland. ^l Bosquier in his Ara cali citeth out of Moses Barceph, That wheat was the Tree of knowledge of good and euill; and so doe the Saracens hold: so curious and vaine is blinde Reason without a guide. And the Cabalists (saith ^m Ricinus) say, that Eues sinne was nothing but the winging out of grapes to her husband; which yet he interpreteth allegorically.

But

But I thinke I haue wearied the Reader, with leading him thus vp and downe in Paradise; small fruit I confesse is in this fruite, and as litle pleasure in this Paradise, but that variety-happily may please some, though it be to others tedious. And for a conclusion, it is, I thinke worth the noting, that Mr. Cartwright an eye-witnesse, ⁿ by the counsell of the Nestorian Patriarke at Mosull or Niniuie visited the Ile of Eden, still so called, and by them holden a part of Paradise, ten miles in circuit, and sometime walled: which if it be not part of that garden-plot mentioned by Moses, yet it seemes is part of that countrey sometime called Eden, in the East part whereof Paradise was planted, and not far (according to Iunius Map) from that happy vnhappy place.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the word Religion, and of the Religion of our first Parents before the fall.

Having thus made way to our History of Religions, the first (and therefore best) Religion, is in the first place to be declared. Onely somewhat may be not vnfitly spoken before of the word. Religion in it selfe is naturall, written in the hearts of all men, which will (as here we shew) rather be of a false then no Religion: but the name whereby it is so called, is by birth a forreiner, by common vse made a free-denizen among vs, descended from the Romanes, which by their swords made way for their words, the authors both of the thing it selfe and of the appellation, to a great part of this Westerne world. But as the Latines haue accustomed themselues to multiplicitee and variety of Rites, so haue they varied not a little about the Parents (as I may say) of this childe (as the Grecians sometimes about Homers birth-place) some giuing one etymologic and deriuation of the word, and some another, that there needeth some Herald to shew the true pedigree, or some Grammarian Dictator to cease the strife.

^a Seruius Sulpitius (as Macrobius citeth him) calleth that Religion, which for some holinesse is remoued and separated from vs, quasi relictam à relinquendo dictam. Seruius deserueth to be relinquished, and his opinion remoued and separated euen with an Anathema, if he would remoue and separate Religion from vs, which is the life of our life, the way to our happinesse. The like is added of Ceremonia à carendo dicta, a iust name and reason of the most of the present Romish Ceremonies, whose want were their best company. Massurius Sabinus in ^b A. Gellius hath the like wordes.

^b Noc. At. lib. 4. ca. 9.

Religio, with Tully is Cultus deorum, the worship of the gods, hereby distinguished from Superstition, because they were, saith he, called Superstitious that spent whole daies in praier and sacrifices, that their children might be Superstites, suruiuors after them: (or rather as Lactantius, ^{*} Qui superstitem memoriam defunctorum colunt, aut qui parentibus suis superstites celebrant imagines eorum domi, tanquam Deos penates. But they which diligently vsed and perused the things pertaining to diuine worship, & tanquam relegerent, were called Religions, Religiosi ex religendo tanquam ex eligendo eligentes, intelligendo intelligentes.^{*} Saint Augustine better acquainted with religion than Cicero, commeth neerer to the name and nature thereof, deriuing it ^c a religendo of chusing a gain. Hunc eligentes, vel potius religentes, amiserimus enim negligentes, unde & religio dicta perhibetur. This word Religens is cited by Nigidius Figulus in Aulus Gellius; Religentem esse oportet, Religiosum nefas: Religiosus being taken in bad sense for Superstitiosus. The same Father elsewhere, in his Booke de Vera Religione,^d acknowledgeth another originall of the word, which Lactantius before him had obserued, à religando, of fasting, as being the bond betwene vs and God. Ad Deum tendentes, saith Augustine, & ei uni religantes animas nostras unde religio dicta creditur. Religet ergo nos Religio uni omnipotenti Deo. Lactantius his wordes are; Diximus nomen religionis à vinculo pietatis esse deductum, quòd hominem sibi Deus religauerit & pietate constringerit, quia seruire nos ei ut Domino & obsequi ut patri, necesse est. Melius ergo (quàm Cicero)

Cicero) id nomen Lucretius interpretatus est, quia ait se religionum nodos exolvere. And according to this etymologie is that which Master Camden saith, * Religion in olde English was called Ean-fastnes, as the one and onely Assurance and fast Anchor-hold of our soules health.

* Remaines of greater worke.

* This is the effect of sinne and irreligion, that the name and practise of Religion is thus diuersified, else had there beene as one God, so one religion, and one language, wherein to giue it with iust reason, a proper name. For till men did relinquere, relinquish their first innocencie, and the Author of whom, and in whom they held it, they needed not religere, to make a second choise, or seeke reconciliation, nor thus relegere with such paines and vexation of spirit to enquire and practise those things which might religare binde them surer and faster vnto God: and in these respects for seuerall causes Religion might seeme to be deriued from all those fountaines. Thus much of the word, whereby the nature of Religion is in part declared, but more fully by the description thereof.

* De vocabulo Religionis vide Cil. Gyrald. hist. d. synt. 1. Suarez de Relig. li. 1. & Siuicium de sacris & sacrificijs Gentium, qui Etymon dat etiam nominum, Cultus, Ceremonia, Pietas, &c. Græc. Latin. Hebr. hinc pertinentium.

Religio est saith ^h Augustine, qua superioris cuiusdam naturæ quam diuinam vocant, curam ceremoniamque affert. Religion is here described generally (whether falsely or truely) professing the inward obseruation, and ceremonially outward worship of that which is esteemed a higher and diuine nature. The true Religion is the true rule and right way of seruing God. Or to speake as the case now standeth with vs: ⁱ True Religion is the right way of reconciling and reuniting man to God, that hee may be saued. This true way he alone can shew vs, who is the Way and the Truth; neyther can wee see this Sunne, except he first see vs, and giue vs both eyes to see, and light also whereby to discern him.

But to come to Adam, the subiect of our present discourse: His religion before his fall, was not to reunite him to God, from whom hee had not beene separated, but to vnite him faster, and daily to knit him neerer in the experience of that which nature had ingrafted in him. For what else was his Religion, but a pure streame of * Originall Righteousnes, flowing from that Image of God, wherunto he was created? Wherby his minde was enlightned to know the onely very God, and his heart was engrauen, not with the letter, but the life and power of the Law, louing and proving that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. The whole man was conformable, and endeouored this holy practise, the bodie being pliant and flexible to the rule of the Soule, the Soule to the Spirit, the Spirit to the Father of Spirits, and God of all Flesh, which no lesse accepted of this obedience, and delighted (as the Father in his Childe) in this new modell of himselfe. How happy was that blessed familiarity with God, society of Angels, subiection of Creatures, enuied onely of the Diuels, because this was so good and they so wicked? Nature was his Schoole-master, or if you will rather, Gods Vsher, that taught him (without learning) all the rules of diuine Learning, of Politicall, Oeconomicall, and Morall wisdome.

The whole Law was perfectly written in the fleshie Tables of his heart, besides the especiall comand concerning the trees in the middest of the Garden, the one being an vnuerfall and euerlasting rule of righteousness, the other by speciall authority appointed, as the manifestation of Gods diuine prerogatiue in commanding, and a triall of mans integritie in obeying. For the first part hereof, since it was so blurred in our hearts, it was renued by the voyce and finger of God on Mount Sinai, giuen then immediately by God himselfe, as God ouer all; whereas the other partes of the Law, containing the Ceremoniall and Politicall ordinances were immediately giuen by the Ministerie of Moses, as to that particular Nation.

Neyther know I any that make doubt of this whole Law naturally and originally communicated: saue ouely that some make question of the Sabbath. Howbeit, I must confesse that I see nothing in that Commandement of the Decalogue prescribed, but is Naturall and Morall: for, both the Rest is so farre Morall, as the outward actes of Diuine worship cannot be performed without suspending for a while our bodily labours: although Rest, as a figure, be Iewish, and in it selfe is eyther a fruite of wearinesse or idlenesse.  u Gen. 2. 2, 3.

(I meane the obseruing of one day of seuen in every weeke) appeareth both by the first order established in Nature, when God blessed and sanctified the seuenth day; k the streame of Interpreters, especially the later, running and ioyning in this interpretation, (the Elder being somewhat more then enough busied in Allegories): by the reason in the Commandement, drawne from Gods example and Sanctification in the Creation: by the obseruation of a Sabbath, before this promulgation of the Law, Exod. 16. and by the diuision of the dayes into weekes, l both then and before by Noah, Gen. 8. 10. 12. by the necessitie of a Sabbath, as well before the Law in the daies of the Patriarkes, as in the times of Dauid or Salomon: by the perfection of the number of seuen in the Scriptures^m: by the generall consent of all, that it is Morall to set apart some time to the Lord of times, and an orderly set time to the God of order, which men might generally agree on for their publike deuotions: which the Patriarkes practised in their Sacrifices and Assemblies; the Heathens blindly, as other things, in their Feasts. Thus saith *Philo*ⁿ: This is a feast-day, not of one Citie or Region, but of the whole world, and may be properly called the generall birth-day of the world: And Clemens Alexandrinus sheweth out of Plato, Homer, Hesiod, Callimachus and Solon, that the seuenth day was not saered alone to the Hebrewes, but to the Greekes also: and how mysticall was the number of seuen, not onely among the Iewes, but also among the Heathens; both Philosophers and Poets? as Philo, o Macrobius and others haue related.

Hereunto agreeth the iudgement of Aquinas, p Præceptum de sanctificatione Sabbathi ponitur inter præcepta decalogi, in quantum est præceptum morale, non in quantum est ceremoniale. The Precept of sanctifying the Sabbath, is set amongst the Precepts of the Decalogue, as it is a morall, not as a ceremoniall Precept. It hath pleased him, q saith M. Hooker, as of the rest, so oft-times to exact some parts by way of perpetuall homage, neuer to be dispensed withall nor remitted. The Morall law requiring therefore a seuenth part throughout the age of the whole world to be that way employed, although with vs the day be changed, in regard of a new reuolution begun by our Saniour Christ, yet the same proportiō of time continueth which was before, because in reference to the benefit of Creation, and now much more of renouation thereunto added by him, which was Prince of the world to come, we are bound to account the sanctification of one day in seuen, a duetic which Gods immutable law doth exact for euer. Thus farre Hooker.

This indeed in the Sabbath was Iewish and Ceremoniall, to obserue only that last and seuenth day of the weeke, and that as a figure, and lastly with those appointed Ceremonies, and that manner of obseruation. Thus saith Aquinas, r Habere aliquod tempus deputatum ad uacandum diuinis, cadit sub præcepto morali. Sed in quantum, &c. To haue some set time for the seruice of God is morall: but so farre this Precept is ceremoniall, as in it is determined a speciall time, in signe of the Creation of the World. Likewise it is ceremoniall, according to the allegoricall signification; in as much as it was a signe of the Rest of Christ in the graue, which was the seuenth day. And likewise according to the merall signification, as it signifieth a ceasing from euery act of sin, and the Rest of the minde in God. Likewise according to the Anagogicall signification, as it prefigureth the Rest of the fruition of God, which shall be in our Countrie.

To these obseruations of Thomas, we may adde that strictnesse of the obseruation, That they might not kindle a fire on the Sabbath, and such like. And howsoeuer some testimonies of the Fathers be alledged against this truth, and to proue that the Sabbath was borne at Mount Sinai, as of Tertullian, Iustin Martyr, Eusebius, Cyprian, Augustine, which deny the Sabbatizing of the Patriarkes before that time, and account it typicall. Why may we not interpret them of that Sabbath of the Iewes, which we haue thus distinguished from the morall Sabbath, by those former notes of difference? Broughton in his Conceent alledgeth the Conceent of Rabbins, as of Ramban on Gen. 26. and Aben Ezra vpon Exod. 20. That the Fathers obserued the Sabbath before Moses. And Moses himselfe no sooner commeth to a seuenth day, but hee sheweth, that u God rested, blessed, sanctified the same.

rituall deuotions from the beginning of the world; and that a seventh dayes rest began, not with the Mosaicall Ceremonies in the Wilderneesse (as some men will haue it); but with Adam in Paradise. That which is morall (say some) is eternall, and must not giue place; I answer, That the Commandements are eternall, but yet subordinate. There is a first of all the Commandements, and there is a second like to this, like in qualitie, not in equalitie: and in euery Commandement, the Soule of obedience (which is the obedience of the soule) taketh place of that bodie of obedience which is performed by the bodie. Mercie is preferred before sacrifice, and charitie before outward worship; Paul stayeth his preaching to heale Eutychus: Christ patronizeth his Disciples, plucking the eares of Corne, and affirmeth, That the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Although therefore both rest and workes of the Sabbath giue place to such duties, which the present occasion presenteth, as more waightie and necessarie to that time, yet doth it not follow, that the Sabbath is not morall, no more than the Commandement of almes is not morall, because (as Bernard obserueth) the prohibitiue Commandement of stealing is of greater force, and more bindeth. And in a word, the Negatiue Precepts are of more force, and more vniuersally bind than the affirmatiue. A man must hate his father and mother for Christs sake, and breake the Sabbaths rest for his neighbour in cases of necessitie. And therefore such scrupulous fancies, as some obtrude vnder the name of the Sabbath, esteeming it a greater sinne to violate this hoily Rest, than to Commit murder; canno: be defended.

Pardon this long Discourse, whereunto the longer Discourses of others haue brought me. But now me thinkes I heare thee say, And what is all this to Adams integritie? Doubtlesse, Adam had his particular calling, to till the ground: his generall calling also, to serue God; which as he was spiritually to performe in all things, so being a bodie, hee was to haue time and place set apart for the bodily performance thereof. And what example could he better follow, than of his Lord and Creator (But some object, This is to slacken him running, rather then to incite and prouoke him; to binde; and not to loose him; cannot be a spurre, but a bridle to his deuotion: but they should consider, that we doe not tie Adam to the seventh day onely, but to the seventh especially, wherein to performe set, publique, and soleinne worship. Neither did Daniel, that prayed thrice a day, or Dauid, in his seven times; or Saint Paul, in his iniunction of praying continually, conceiue that the Sabbath would hinder men, and nor rather further them in these workes. Neither was Adams state so excellent, as that he needed no helpes; which wofull experience in his fall hath taught. God gaue him power to liue, yea with an cuerlasting life: and should not Adam therefore haue eaten, yea and haue had conuenient times for food and sleepe and other naturall necessities? How much more in this perfect, yet flexible and variable condition of his Soule, did he need meanes of establishment, although euen in his outward calling hee did not forget, nor was forgotten? Which outward workes, though they were not irkefome and tedious, as sinne hath made them to vs, yet did they detain his bodie, and somewhat distract his minde, from that full and entire seruice which the Sabbath might exact of him. Neither doe they shew any strong reason for their opinion, which hold the sanctification of the Sabbath, Genes. 2. to be set downe by way of anticipation, or as a preparatiue to the lewish Sabbath, ordained 2453. yeares after.

If any shall aske why the same seventh day is not still obserued of Christians; I answer, this was figuratiue, and is abolished; but a seventh day still remaineth. Lex naturalis est, continentiam habens ceremonialem designationem diei (saith Iunius.) The Law is naturall, hauing adioyned thereto the ceremoniall appointment of the day. But why is this day now called the Lords day? I answer, euen therefore, because it is the Lords day, not changed by the Churches Constitution Meere, as some seeme to hold; except by the Churches authoritie they meane Christ and his Apostles: nor descended to vs by Tradition, as the Papists maintaine, seeing the Scriptures, Act. 20. 7. *1. ctise of the Apostles: yea, Christ himselfe, as he rose on that day, so did he vsually appeare on that day to his Apostles before his Ascension. Christ therefore and his Apostles are our authors of this change. And the Church * euer since hath constantly obserued it. The Fathers teach, yea the Papists themselues acknowledge this truth. So Bellarmino de Cultu Sanct. l. 3. c. 11. saith, Ius diuinum requirebat ut vnus dies Hebdomada dicaretur cultui diuino: non autem conueniebat ut seruaretur Sabbathum: itaque ab Apostolis in diem Dominicum versum est. It was in the Primitiue Church called the Lords day, ^a the day of Bread and of Light, because of the Sacraments of the Supper and Baptisme, therein administred, called Bread and Light. And how it may be ascribed to Tradition, ^b Bellarmino, the great Patron of Traditions, sheweth out of Iustin Martyr, who saith, Christus hec illis (Apostolis & Discipulis) tradidit. Iustin in fine 2. Apolog. He there also reporteth, That they had their Ecclesiasticall Assemblies euery Lords day. The Rhemists, ^c which ascribe it to Tradition in Annot. Mat. 15. acknowledge the institution thereof, in Annot. 1. Cor. 16. 2. Ignatius ^d may be allowed Arbitrer in this question of the Sabbath, who thus writeth to the Magnesians: Non Sabbatitemus, Let vs not obserue the Sabbath after the Iewish manner, as delighting in ease; For he that worketh not, let him not eat: but let euery one of vs keepe the Sabbath spiritually, not eating meat dressed the day before, and walking set spaces, &c. But let euery Christian celebrate the Lords day, consecrated to the Lords resurrection, as the Queene and Princeesse of all dayes.

Now for the particular Commandement, which was giuen him as an especiall prooffe of his obedience, in a thing otherwise not vnlawfull, it was the forbidding him to eat of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge. For in the middest of the Garden God had planted two Trees, which some call Sacraments, and were, by Gods Ordinance, signes vnto him; one of life, if he obeyed; the other of death, by disobedience: Not as the Iewes thought, and Iulian scoffed, That the Tree had power to giue sharpnesse of wit. And although some thinke signes needlesse to so excellent a creature; yet being mutable, subiect to temptation, and each way flexible to vertue or vice, according as hee vsed his naturall power of free-will, I see not why they should deny God that libertie to impose, or man that necessitie to need such monitories, and (as it were) Sacramentall instructions. For what might these Trees haue furthered him in carefulnesse, if he had considered life and death, not so much in these Trees, as in his free-will. and obeying or disobeying his Creator?

These Trees, in regard of their signification, and euent, are called the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill; which was not euill or hurtfull in it selfe, but was a visible rule, wherby good and euil should be knowne, and that by reason of the Commandement annexed, which he might by this Precept see to be grounded in obeying or disobeying the authoritie of the Law-giuer. An easie rule, and yet too easily broken. For when as God did hereby challenge his owne Soueraignetic, by imposing so easie a fine, which might haue forbidden all but one (as contrariwise he allowed) and fore-signified the danger, that hee might continue his goodnesse to man, continuing in obedience, yet did Man herein shew his contempt, in reiecting so easie a yoake, and so light a burthen. I will not reason whether these two Trees may properly be called Sacraments; of which (say some) the one was but for the bodily life, and better neuer to haue touched the other; this we know, that in eating of this he lost both bodily and spirituall life, which the name and institution thereof forewarned, and should haue preuented.: otherwise, in eating of the other, immortalitie had beene sealed both in soule and bodie, to him and his for euer. Strange it seemeth, that he should need no monitorie signes to preuent that, which, euen with these helps added, he did not eschew.

CHAP. V.

Of the fall of Man: and of Originall Sinne.

Hereto wee haue beheld the Creation of the World, and of our first Parents, the liuely Images of the Creator and the Creature; whom wee haue somewhat leisurely viewed in a naked Maiestic, delighting themselves in the enamelled walkes of their delightfull garden. The Riuers whereof ranne to present their best offices to their new Lords, from which they were forced by the backer streames, greedie of the sight and place which they could not hold: The Trees stouped to behold them, offering their shadie mantle and varietie of fruits, as their naturall tribute: each creature in a silent gladnesse reioyced in them, and they enjoyed all mutuall comsforts in the Creator, the Creatures, and in themselves. A blessed Payre, who enjoyed all they desired, whiles their desire was worth the enjoying: Lords of all, and of more than all, Content; which might, in all they saw, see their Makers bountie: and beyond all they could see, might see themselves comprehended, where they could not comprehend: of that infinite Greatnesse and goodnesse, which they could not but loue, reuerence, admire, and adore. This was then their Religion, to acknowledge with thankfulness, to be thankfull in obedience, to obey with cheerefulness; the Author of all this good: to the performance whereof, they found no outward, no inward impediment; Sicknesse, Perturbation, and Death (the deformed issue of Sinne) not yet being entred into the World.

In this plight did Satan (that old Serpent) see, disdain, and enuie them. It was not enough for him, and the diuellish crue of his damned associates, for their late rebellion, to be banished Heauen, but the inferiour world must be filled with his venome, working that malice on the creatures heere, which he could not there so easily wrecke on their Creator. And because Man was heere Gods Deputie and Lieutenant, as a pettie God on the Earth, hee chuseth him as the fittest subiect, in whose ruine to despise his Maker. To this end hee vscth not a Lion-like force, which then had bene bootlesse, but a Serpentine sleight, vsing that subtil creature as the meekest instrument to his Labyrinthian projects. Whereas by inward temptation hee could not so easily preuaile, by insinuating himselfe into their mindes, hee windes himselfe into this winding Beast, disposing the Serpents tongue to speake to the woman (the weaker vessell) singled from her husband, and by questioning doth first vndermine her. * The woman (whether shee had not yet experience in the nature of the creatures, or did admire so strange an accident, and would satisfie her curious minde in the further triall) entertained discourse, and was presently snared. For though shee held her to the Commandement, yet the threatening annexed shee did somewhat mince and extenuate. What shee seemed to lessen, hee feared not to annihilate, and wholly disanull, propounding not onely impunitie, but aduantage, That they should be as Gods, in the enriching of their mindes with further knowledge. This he perswadeth by the equiuocating in the name of the Tree (the first equiuocation we reade of, a otherwhere plainly tearmed a lye) charging God with falshood and malignitie.

Thus he that abode not in the Truth himselfe, but was a Man-slayer from the beginning, and the father of Lying, which hee no where else borrowed, but had of his owne, perswadeth her by his great subtiltie, first to doubt of Gods Truth in his Word (the first particular sinne that euer mans heart entertained, for the other were but occasions and inducements; disobedience and vnthankfulness are more generall) after that shee vnlawfully lusted after this new knowledge, bewitched with the pleasantnesse of the fruit to the taste and sight, shee ooke and did eate, and gave to her husband likewise. The highest power of the soule is first intrapped, the lusting and sensible faculties follow after, iustly plagued by a correspondent inward rebellion,

* It is by all affirmed, that the fall was very soone after the Creation, as appeareth by circumstances of the narration, by Satans malice, the womans virginity: and many hold, it was the very day of their Creation.

The first sinne of our first Pa-

that the sense now ruleth the appetite; and this the reason, in our corrupt estate, which hence proceeded.

b Foolish and wicked is their conceit, that measure this sinne by the fruit (a Nut or Apple) that was eaten: as Pope Iulius, That said hee might bee as well angrie for his Peacocke, as God (whose Vicar he was) for an Apple. Eul. de vit Pont.
c Posse si uellent sed non uellent present.

b Thus vnbeliefe brought forth vnthankfulness; vnthankfulness, pride; from thence ambition, and all that rabble of contempt of Gods Truth, beleeuing the Devils lies, abuse of the creatures to wanton lust, Sacrilegious vsurping that which God had reserued, scandalous prouocation of her husband, with the murther bodily and ghostly, of him, her selfe, and their whole posteritie for euer; and whereas yet they had done so little seruice to God, they offered almost their first fruits to the Deuill, hauing c Free-will to haue resisted if they would. No maruell then if such a combination of so many finnes in one, wrung from the iustice of God such a multitude of iudgements on them and theirs, in the defacing that goodly and glorious Image of God; subiecting (in stead thereof) the body to Sicknesse, Cold, Heat, Nakednesse, Hunger, Thirst, Stripes, Wounds, Death; the Minde to Ignorance, Doubtings, Vanitie, Phancies, Phrenzies; the Will to Vnstaiednesse, Passions, Perturbations; the whole Man is made a slaue to Sinne within him, to the Deuill without; whence hee must expect wages sutable to his worke, Death; Spirituall, Naturall, and Eternall: and infinite punishment for offending an infinite Maiestie.

*Cognouerunt se nudos, quod exuit essen: rerum

templatione, &c.*
e Spiritus reprimens, non renouans.

Thus had they put out their light in obscure darkenesse: and if they were not presently cast into viter darknesse, it was Gods mercy (not their merit) which suspended the first and naturall death, to preuent that second & eternall. But spirituallly they were euen already dead in finnes, as appeared by the accusations of their conscience; whereof Moses saith, d The eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. Conscience, before Vertues keeper, was now become Hels harbenger, thence flashing lightnings in the face of their mindes, to shew that their nakednesse did now appeare filthy in Gods sight: Lightnings indeed, which could only lighten to terrifie, not enlighten with instruction & comfort: Which sparke remaineth after the fire of Gods Image extinct, by the mercifull prouidence of God, in some e to be a bridle of Nature, least they should runne into all excesse of villanie, and not leaue a face of the world in the world, and to be to others, by disposition and working of a higher & supernatural Light, a preparatiue to, and a preseratiue in that light of Life. So much the greater is their sinne, that seeke to flash out these flashings: and whereas they cannot reade the booke of Scripture, and will not reade the booke of the Creature, labour to extinguish also this Light of Nature, that with seared consciences they may more freely in darknesse commit the workes of darknesse. And euen this did Adam seeke, if God had not brought him out of his Owles nest. For what could a Fig-leave hide from God? and did they thinke the innocent Trees would conspire with them to conceale Traitors? Was there any darkenesse which was not Light to him? Or could Breeches and Trees couer their Soules, which receiued the first and worst Nakednesse; till which, Nakednesse to the body was a Clothing of Beautie, a Liuerie of Bountie, an Ensigne of Maiestie? Such f broken pits seeke they that forsake the Fountaine of living Waters.

Hieron.

And yet when God commeth into Iudgement, and g makes the windes to vsber him vnto his priuate Sessions in Paradise; to those shiftable shifts they added worse, impiously accusing God, vncharitably charging one another, to put from themselues that blame which thus claued faster to them. A medicine worse than the disease, or a disease in stead of a medicine is hypocrisie, that will not see her owne sicknesse, and seekes rather to couer, then to cure; to couer by charging others, then recouer by discharging and discouering it selfe; as if h equitie pretended were not iniquitie doubled. God proceedeth to sentence, a sentence worthe of God, shewing at once his infinite iustice in the punishment of sinne, and no lesse infinite mercie, to provide an infinite price to redeeme vs; by his infinite power bringing good out of euill, and by his manifold Wisdome taking that wise one in his craftinesse, who in the destruction of man had sought Gods dishonour. So good is it that euill should bee, when this soueraigne goodnesse purposeth to effect his good will by wicked instruments, out of their darknesse producing his owne maruellous light: as appeared in this worke of Sathan an aduersarie, intended to his despite; in, and by the promised Seede, disposed to his glorie

g Gen 3.14.

The ^h old Serpent and spirituall Enemie, hath a spirituall and eternall curse, the breaking of his head by that Seede of the Woman, that should once leade Captiuitie captiue. Our Parents are cursed, yet so, as their curse is turned into a blessing; all things working to the best: In sorrow shall be the Womans conceptions, but recompenced with the ioy which followeth (and is as it were the Mid-wife in their trauell) because of ⁱ fruit borne into the World; and more then recompenced, in that they are ^k saued by bearing of children, if they continue in the faith, and line in holinesse with modestie. Adam is set to labour, not as before, with delight, but with paine and difficultie; the Earth also being cursed for his sake: yet by this narrow way, by this crosse-way he is guided to Heauen; the hope wherof was giuen him, before Paradise was taken from him. So true is it, that in iudgement he rememberth mercie, if we can learne to line by faith, and not by sight.

k 1-Tim. 2.vit.

This, that Moses telleth of the fall of Man, Experience doth in manner proclaime through the World, in the manifold effects thereof, which we daily see. For whereas the World was made for Man, as before is shewed, who alone, in regard of his bodily and spirituall nature, can neede and vse it, no creature in the world is in his kinde so imperfect as Man. Hee that was before as an earthly God, is now become an incarnate Deuill, and for aspiring to be like his Lord, was made a seruant of his ^l seruants; the noblest part in him becoming a base Officer to degrade him, Reason it selfe dejected at the feet of Sense, to be a slaue, and a very Bawd to sensuall pleasures, a very Broker for dung-hill-profits. And what is this but to metamorphose man into a beast? vnlesse that some in a lower degree, liuing only to liue, suffocated ^m with eating, drinking, sleeping, are degenerated into plants? And if he descend not lower, to become torpide and lifelesse, yet doth he participate the imperfections of those things, and that without their perfectionis, as if with an imperfect retrograde he would returne into his first elements. What stone so hard as mans heart is relentlesse, remorselesse to his best good? What dust more subiect to the winde, or water more flexible, then he to temptation and sinne? But those things remaine in their nature, or naturall place: Man is a fuming smoke, a passing shadow. And yet if we could stay at our Elements, it were somewhat better, but we are seruants and drudges beneath all names of basenesse, vnbowelling the earth, and our selues in the earth, for a little hardned earth, that neuer had the dignitie to see, no not to be scene of the Sunne. We seeme to rule the Skie, Windes, and Seas; indeede we aduerture our liues to their mercie, and not three fingers thicke doth separate vs from death, that we may bring home an idle discourse, or somewhat, almost lesse then nothing, that we call a Jewell. Once, wee inuert Nature, subuert others, peruert our selues, for those things which sometimes kill the body, and alway (except a power, with whom all things are possible, preuent) the Soule: And yet ⁿ Thou soele, this night they may fetch away thy Soule; and whose then shall these things be? And whose then, and where then, shalt thou be? Thou gainest faire to lose thy selfe, to be taken with thy taking, to be thus bad to others, that thou maiest be worse to thy selfe: and when as (like an Ass) thou hast beene laden all the daies of thy life with those things, which euen in hauing thou wantedst, now to be more intolerably burthened, now to bee in Hell, which will neuer bee satisfied in thee, whose character was before engrauen in thy vn-satiablen heart. Tell me not then of the reasonable power of our Soules, whereby we resemble God, seeing that reason may tell thee and mee, that by abusing it ^o we are like, and are of our Father the Deuill. That crected countenance to be still grouelling in, and poring on the earth; that immortall soule to minde only such things as haue not the imperfect priuiledge to bee mortall; those high excellencies to bee abused to mischief, blaspheming, denying, forswearing God, and all for the basest of the basest creatures Well might this deluge of corruption moue that ^q Cynick, in a throng of men to make search for a Man, this man which is now left vs being but the ruines, the carkasse of himselfe. But what needes all this? Why are we fallen into so long and tedious discourse of our fall? Euen because ſome are fallen further, beyond all ſenſe and feeling of their fall, and beleue not that man was euer any other creature then now they ſee; that if their goodneſſe cannot, yet their wickednes might teach them, that ſo perfect a world ſhould not haue beene framed for ſo imperfect a wretch, now only perfect in imperfection. Our fall muſt teach vs to riſe, our ſtraying to returne, our degeneration a regeneration. And therefore was not that Image of God wholly done out, but ſome remainder continued to the poſteritie, to conuince them of miſeric in themſelues, that ſo denying themſelues, they might take up their Croſſe, and follow the ſecond Adam vnto a durable happineſſe.

But how (may ſome aſke, as the Pelagian did) came this miſeric to vs? Non peccat ille qui genuit, non peccat ille qui condidit, per quas igitur rimas inter tot preſidia innocentie ſingis peccatum ingreſſum? Doth it agree with diuine Juſtice, that if the Fathers haue eaten foure grapes, the childrens teeth ſhould be ſet on edge? I anſwere we are heires of our father, we neede not ſeeke ſome ſecret cranie, we ſee an open gate, & by one man ſinne entred into: the world, and death by ſinne. A little leaue let vs borrow to cleare this difficultie. Sinne is a tranſgreſſion of the Law, or a defect of conformance to the Law, (ἡ δὲ ἀμαρτία ἐστὶν ἡ ἀνομία) and cannot properly be ſaid to haue an efficient, but a deficient cauſe, being in it owne nature & ſubſiſtence, ὑπὸ τὸν ἑῶν. The School-men ſay, in ſinne are two things to be conſidered, the ſubſtance and the qualitie, eſ-ſence and priuation, the act and defect, whereof that they call the Materiall, this the Formall part of ſinne, being nothing elſe but a deformitie, irregularitie, and vnlaw-fulneſſe in our naturall condition and conditions, as eaſie to be diſtinguiſhed, though not to be diuided, from the action, as lameneſſe from the working hand, or iarring in an Inſtrument, both from the Inſtrument and ſound. The ſinner is termed nequam, as nequicquam, naught, as not ought. Not that ſinne is ſimply nothing, Non negatiue ſed priuatiue Nihil; nor is it a meere and pure priuation, but to be conſidered with that ſubiect, wherein and whereof it is ſuch a diſtortion and deſtruction: the want of this conſideration draue the Manichees to their hereticall opinion of two beings and beginnings Sinne was firſt ſcene in the Deuill, who voluntarily ſtraied from the right way, and as he abode not in the Truth himſelfe, ſo he beguiled our firſt Parents, from whom, by the Conduit of Nature, it is conueied to vs. I ſpeake of Originall ſinne, which is our inheritance; for actuall finnes are our owne purchaſe and improuement, and yet bought with that ſtock which our Parents left vs: Our firſt Parents are to be conſidered, not as ſingular perſons only, whereby they defiled themſelues, but as the roote of mankind, which had receiued originall righteousneſſe, to keepe or to looſe to them and theirs, as a perpetuall inheritance. As in the Bodie Politike, the Act of the Prince is reputed the Act of the whole; the conſent of a Burgeſſe in Parliament bindeth the whole Citie which hee repreſenteth: and * as in the naturall Bodie the whole Bodie is liable to the guilt of that fact which the head or hand hath committed:
 as a roote to his branches, a Fountaine to his ſtreames, doth conuey the goodneſſe or badneſſe which it ſelfe hath receiued: So ſtands it betwixt vs and Adam our naturall Prince, the Burgeſſe of the World, the Head of his humane Bodie and Generation, the Root and Fountaine of our Humanitie. When he ſinned, he loſt to himſelfe and vs that Image of God, or that part of the Image of God, which hee had receiued for himſelfe and vs; not the ſubſtance, nor the faculties of body or ſoule, but the conformitie in that ſubſtance and faculties to the will of God, in rightcouſneſſe and holi-neſſe of truth.

Not ſo much therefore are wee here to conſider the ordinarie courſe of Nature, wherein z the ſoule that ſinneth, it ſhall die: as the Ordinance of God, who appointed the firſt Adam, the Well-ſpring of Nature, which he receiued incorrupted; the ſecond of Grace; that as men, wee all by generation are of the firſt and with the firſt, * one old man, in whom wee all ſinned; of and with the ſecond Adam wee are a all one new man in the Lord, euen one Bodie, one Spirit, one Seede, one Chriſt, in whom, and with whom, wee, as members of that Head, obeyed the Precepts, and ſuffered the Curſe of the Law. b Other finnes of Adam are not our naturall, but his perſonall,

personall, because he could be no longer a publike person, then whi'e hee had somewhat to saue or loose for vs; all being already forfeited in this first sinne. The Author then of Originall Sinne is the propagator of our Nature: his actual sinne is originally ours; the Guilt being deriued by imputation, the Corruption by naturall generation. First, that Person corrupted Nature; after, Nature infected our Persons. The matter of this Originall corruption, in regard of the subiect, is All and euery man, and All and euery part of all and euery man, subiect to all sinne, that if all bee not as bad as any, and the best as the worst, it must bee ascribed to Gods restraining, or renewing, not vnto vnequall degrees in this originall staine. In regard of the object, the matter of it is the want of originall Righteousnesse, and a contrarie inclination to Euill; * The imaginations of our hearts being only euill continually. No Grapes can grow on these Thornes. The forme of this corruption is the deformitie of our corrupted Nature, not by infusion or imitation, but by default of that first instrument; by which this Nature descendeth. It is the roote of actual sinnes: and whereas they, as fruits, are transient, this still remaineth, vntill Christ by his death destroyeth this death in vs.

But here ariseth another difficultie; How this sinne can bee deriued by Generation, seeing it is truly beleued, that God is ^a Father of Spirits, the ^b Former of our Soules, which doth by infusion create, and by creation infuse them: corruptible Elements being vnable to procreate an incorruptible substance, or generation to produce incorruption. Neither standeth it with reason, that he which communicateth not the substance, should communicate the accidents; or with iustice, that an innocent Soule should necessarily be stained by involuntarie infusion into a polluted bodie.

I answer hereunto, That although the Soule be not traded (as they terme it) and by generation conferred; yet is it coupled to the bodie in that manner and order which God had appointed for the coniunction thereof; though man had not sinned: Neither was it the Soule alone in Adam, or the body alone but the Person, consisting of both, which sinned: Neither can we be partakers of Natures sinne, till we be partakers of humane Nature, which is not, till the Soule and Bodie be vnited. We are not so much therefore to looke to the concupiscence & lust of the Parents in generation, as ^c Lumbard teacheth vs, but to the Person; which, ^d Scotus saith, is filia Ada, & debitoria iustitie originalis. And although the Soule be not in the seede, yet it is communicated to the Bodie (saith Aquinas) by a dispositiue or preparatiue power of the seede, which disposeth and prepareth the Bodie to the receiving of the Soule, where it is received (after the ^e generall rule) according to the measure and nature of that which receiueth. The Father is then a perfect Father, not because hee begetteth the Soule, but because he begetteth the Person, or at least all whatsoeuer in the Person is begotten: and though he doth not beget the substance thereof; yet, as it is such a substance, he may be said to procreate it, because his generation worketh towards the Vnion of the Soule and Bodie; which Vnion is made by the Spirits Animall and Virall. And ^f these Spirits are procreated by the seede, and consist of a middle nature, as it were betwixt bodily and spirituall: so that the production of the Soule, and incorporating thereof, may bee counted in the middle way betweene Creation and Generation. And therefore this originall corruption did not reach to Christ Iesus, although he were true Man, because he was the seede of the woman, and did not descend of Adam by generation (per seminalem rationem, tanquam à principio ætliuo, saith Aquinas) but was miraculously framed in the wombe, and of the substance of the Virgin, by the power of the holy Ghost.

Thus haue I presumed to offer my crude and rude Meditations to the wiser World, about the deriuation of Originall sinne, which it selfe is the cause why we can no better see it, as darkenesse hideth it selfe. But the whole Citie of Mankinde being herewith set on fire, it behoueth euery one to be more carefull to quench it, then ouercuriously to enquire how it came: It is sufficient, that nothing descended hereby to vs by corruption, or was made ours by imputation, which is not fully cured by Christ:

CHAP. VI.

Of the Reliques of the diuine Image after the fall, whereby naturally men addict themselves vnto some Religion: and what was the Religion of the World before the Flood.

His Sinne of our first Parents, whereby they were almost no sooner made then marr'd (being as some suppose, formed and deformed in one day; so interpreting the Psalme, That he lodged not one night in honour, but became as the beasts that perish.) This sinne (I say) did not wholly depriue vs of the Image of God, whereunto we were created. A remainder and stumpe thereof continued, like to the stumpe of Dagon, whose head and hands were cut off by his fall; or like the stumpe of Nabuchodonosors Tree, whose rootes were left in the earth, bound with a band of yron and brasse among the grasse of the field. So was mans head and hands fallen off before the Arke, that his wisdom remaining was foolishnes vnto God; not sufficient to one good thought, not able either to will or to doe that which might please God. And though the stumpe remained (the substance and the faculties of Bodie and Soule) yet was this stumpe left in the earth, fast bound with yron and brasse, his earthly minde captiued and chained with worldly vanities and deuillish villanies. Or to vse Luinbards comparison, hee was like the man fallen among theeues, wounded and spoiled: wounded in his naturall parts, spoiled and robbed of the gifts of grace, which God by especiall grace added to his Nature, in that first beautifying of this his Image.

In the state of Creation Man was made able to commit no sinne; in the state of Corruption he cannot but sinne: vntill a third state of grace doe free him; not from the being, but from the raigning and imputation of sinne, whereby he is prepared to a fourth state of glorie, wherein shall be no possibilitie of sinning, or necessitie of struing against sinne. And howsoever in this corrupt state of Nature, in our spirituall actions, which meerey concerne the Kingdome of Heauen, wee cannot but sinne, yet hath not God left himselfe without witness, euen in this darkenesse to conuince vs of sinne. Such are those notions, sowne by Natures hand in euery of our hearts; according to which euidence, Conscience as a Witness, Parron, or Iudge within vs, accuseth, excuseth, condemneth, or absolveth; that hereby God may be justified, and all the world inexcusably sinnefull; and that hereby also a way might be left in Gods infinite mercie for mans recouerie. His intent was not to destroy vs utterly (as iustly he might, and as it befell the rebellious Angels) but by this punishment to recall vs to subiection; not to breake vs to peeces in his wrath, but by wrath to reclaim vs to mercie.

Thus Nature suggesteth; Reason conuinceth, and is conuincd, That there is a God: that that God hath created the World (as wee before haue shewed) and that for Man: that Man, to whom all things serue, isto serue God, who hath subiected them to him. Doth not Nature teach the Sonne to honour his Father, and the seruant his Lord? If he then be our Father, where is his honour? if our Lord, where is his feare? Nature inferreth, Reason vrgeth this, and from that ground of Reason doth Scripture reason, the nature whereof in our nature is written. Euen by Reasons Principles wee learne, That so perfect a hand, as made all these inferiour things in such perfection, would not haue beene so imperfect in the perfectest of them all, so to haue left him in the Creation, as wee now see him in Corruption. phers saw, Man was a little World, for whom the greater was made, who himselfe was made for more then the World: and that hee, for whom so durable and substantiall a thing was made, must needs bee made for another then this fraile and wretched life; that is, for the euerlasting life with him, that is the Euerlasting. And that is the foundation of all Religion. For what else is Religion, but the Schoole, wherein we learne mans dutie towards God, and the way to bee linked most straitly to him? And what are all the exercises of Religion, but acknowledgements of the Godhead, of the Creation of the World, of the prouident order therein, and ordering thereof, of the Soules immortalitie, of Mans fall and imperfection, of our soueraigne and supreme good to bee sought out of our selues? Of all which Nature and Reason are witnesses, not to the learned alone, whose testimonies in this kinde may easily be produced, but euen to the Vulgar, and rudest Idiots; yea, where as neither Art, nor Industrie, nor ciuill Societie hath bound men as men together, yet the grounds of these things haue bound them as men, by the meere bond of humane Nature, to God, in some or other Religion.

God, Man, and Religion, are necessarily linked, as a Father, a Sonne, and Obedience, as a Lender, a Debter, and a Bond. The wit no sooner conceiueth that there is a God, but the will inferreth that he ought to be worshipped. What Philosophers, or what Politicians euer taught the Easterne and Westerne Islands, discouered in this last Age of the World, this necessitie of Religion? And yet (as followeth in this Historie to bee shewed) they which neuer wore clothes on their bodies, neuer furnished their mindes with Arts, neuer knew any Law (besides Reason growne almost lawlesse) or Magistrate, but their Fathers: which, when they saw other men, could not tell whether they were ^k heavenly wights, or earthly Monsters, these yet wearied themselves in Superstitions; shewing it easier to put off our selues, then to put the Principles of Religion out of our selues. Yea, among all the Lessons which Nature hath taught, this is the deepest indented: not Arts, not Policie, nay not Raiment, not Foode, not Life it selfe esteemed so deare, and that naturally, to men, as their Religion. Hereof let this Historie ensuing be witness, which will shew the Reader, euery where, in manner, ouer the World, this naturall zeale of that which they esteeme Religion, beyond all things else esteemed most naturall.

Some, in the guiltie conscience of their owne irreligion (as Aesops Fox, that being by casualtie deprived of his taile, sought to perswade all Foxes to cut off theirs as vnprofitable burthens) would tell vs that which they ^l cannot tell to themselves, which they dare not tell, but (as they dare) whisper, That Religion is but a continued Custome, or a wiser Policie, to hold men in awe. But where had Custome this beginning? And what is Custome, but an vniforme manner, and continuance of outward Rites? Whereas Religion it selfe is in the heart, and produceth those outward ceremoniall effects thereof. In one Countrie men obserue one habite of attire, another in another: So likewise of diet: and yet is it naturall to bee clothed, more naturall to eate, but naturall most of all, as is said, to obserue some kinde of Religion.

The Grecians ^m burned their dead Parents, the Indians intombed them in their owne bowels: Darius could not by great summes procure the Grecians to the Indian, or these to the Grecian custome: yet was that which moued both, and began either custome, one and the same principle of pietie and religious dutie, howsoeuer diuersly expressed. Yea euen the most lasciuious, cruell, beastly, and deuillish obseruations, were grounded vpon this one principle, That God must be serued: which seruice they measured by their owne crooked rules, euery where disagreeing, and yet meeting in one center, the necessitie of Religion.

As for Policie, although it is before answered; yet this may be added, That whereas men with all threatnings, promises, punishments, rewards, can scarce establish their politicall Ordinances; Religion insinuateth and establisheth it selfe: yea taketh naturally such rooting, that all politicall Lawes and tortures cannot pluck it vp. many Martyrs a hath Religion, yea superstition yeelded? but who will lay downe his life to sealé some Politicians authoritie? And so farre is it that Religion should be grounded on Policie, that Policie borroweth helpe of Religion. Thus did Numa father his Romane lawes on Egeria, and other Law-giuers on other supposed Deities, which had been a foolish argument, b and vnreasonable manner of reasoning, to perswade one obscuritie by a greater, had not Nature before taught them religious awe to God, of which they made vse to this ciuill obedience of their lawes, supposed to spring from a Diuine fountaine. Yea the falshoods and varietie of religions are euidences of this Truth; seeing men will rather worship a c Beast, stocke, or the basest creature, then professe no religion at all. The d Philosophers also that are accused of Atheisme, for the most part, did not deny religion simply but that irreligious religion of the Greekes in idolatrous superstition, Socrates rather swearing by a dogge, or an oke, then acknowledging such Gods. It is manifest then, that the Image of God was by the Fall depraued, but not vtterly extinct; among other sparkes this also being raked vp in the ruines of our decayed Nature; some science of the God-head, some science of Religion: although the true Religion can be but one, and that which God himselfe teacheth, as the onely true way to himselfe; all other Religions being but strayings from him, whereby men wander in the darke, and in labyrinthes of error: like men drowning, that get hold on euery twig, or the foolish fish that leapeth out of the frying pan into the fire.

Thus God left a sparke of that light couered vnder the ashes of it selfe; which himselfe vouchsafed to kindle into a flame, neuer since, neuer after to be extinguished. And although that rule of Diuine Iustice had denounced e morte morieris, to die, and againe to die a first and second death; yet vnasked, yea by cauilling excuses further prouoked, he by the promised seed erected him to the hope of a first and second resurrection; a life of Grace first, and after of Glorie. The Sonne of God is promised to be made the seed of the woman: the substantiall f Image of the inuisible God, to be made after the Image and similitude of a Man, to reforme and transforme him againe into the former Image and similitude of God: that he, which in the g forme of God thought it not robbery (for it was nature) to be equall with God, should be made nothing to make vs something, should not spare himselfe that hee might spare vs, should become partaker of our Nature, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, that he might make vs h partakers of the Diuine Nature, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone. This was that seed of the Woman, that hath broken the Serpents head, which by death hath overcome death, and him that had the power of death, the Diuell, who submitted himselfe to a death in it selfe bitter, before men shamefull, and of God accursed, that he might bring vs to a life peaceable, glorious, and blessed, beyond what eye hath seene, or heart can conceiue.

This promise of this Seed, flame from the beginning of the world, was the seed of all true Religion, the soule of faith, the life of hope, the well-spring of charitie. True it is that all receiued not this promise alike: for a seed of the Serpent was fore signified also, which should bruise the heele of the Womans seed. And this in the first seed and generation of man soone appeared: Cain and Abel were hereof liuely examples. It appeareth that God had taught Adam how he would be worshipped, as it were ordering & ordaining him the first Priest of the world, which function hee fulfilled both in instructing his wife & children, in prayer with and for them, and in the rites of sacrificing. His children accordingly i in proesse of time brought and offered their sacrifices.

As concerning sacrifices, some hold opinion (according to their owne practise) that k Nature might teach Adam this way of seruing God: as if Nature were as well able to find the way, as to know that she is out of the way, and were as well seene in the particular manner, as in the generall necessitie of Religion. We cannot see the Sun without the Sun, nor come to God but by God, to whom l Obedience is better then sacrifice, and to harken, better then the fat of Rammes. Abel, saith the Scripture, m offered by faith, without which faith it is impossible to please God: but faith hath necessarie relation n to the word of God, who otherwise will be o wearie of our solemnities, and asketh, who hath required them at our hands. These sacrifices also, besides that they were acknowledgements of their thankfulness, and reall confessions of their sinne and death, due to them therefore, did leade them by the hand to Christ that Lambe of God, that should take away the sinnes of the world, figured by these slaine beasts, confirming their faith in the promise and hope of the accomplishment: of which Nature could not once haue dreamed, which hath rather a the impression of some confused notions, that we haue lost the way and ought to seeke it, then either light to discern it, or wisdom to guide vs in it.

Of sacrificing, there were from the beginning two kinds, the one called b Gifts or oblations of things without life: the other Victims (so our Rhemists c haue taught vs to English the word Victima) slaine sacrifices of birds and beasts: Againe, they were propitiatorie, consecratorie, Eucharisticall, and so forth, whose kinds and rites Moses hath in his bookes, especially in Leuiticus, so plainly declared, that I should but powre water into the sea, or light a candle to the Sun, to dilate much of them: these being the same in signification with the Leuiticall, and little (if little) differing in the manner of doing. Cain brought d his offering, being an husbandman, of the fruit of the ground. Abel a shepheard, of the fattest of his sheepe: God respected ABEL and his offering, (the tree first, and then the fruit, the worker, and then the worke) which hee signified either by voice, or by e fire from heauen, according to Theodotians translation, f as in the sacrifices of Aaron, Gideon, Manoah, Dauid, Salomon, Elias: or by some other meanes, both comfortable to Abel, and enuied of Cain, who therefore slew him; thus in this member bruising the heele of that blessed seed, as a type of that which the head himselfe should after sustaine.

Heere is the first Apostasie after that first Euahgelicall promise, and the first diuision of Religion, Cain being the first buider of the s Earthly Citie, not that which he called after the name of his son, h Henoch, but of that spirituall citie of the wicked, the seed of the Serpent, which he founded in his brothers blood: euen as that later Compendium thereof, which called her selfe Caput mundi, the head of the world (and indeed i the World is vsually in Scripture applied to that seed of the Serpent, as it is opposite to the seed of the Woman) was by Romulus her first founder by like example of fratricide in the murder of Remus, dedicated (as it were) to the future mysterie of iniquitie, the seat of the Beast, and of the Whore, (by whose authoritie, Christ himselfe was slaine) drunken after with the blood of his Saints: and still breathing blood and slaughter, to euenery Abel that will not communicate in her spirituall whoredomes: that will not with her offer the fruits of the ground (the sacrifice of Cain) which neither came from heauen, nor can guide to heauen, being earthly, sensuall, diuellsish.

Cain was for this his fact conuented by that All-seeing Iustice, who both by open sentence and inward terrors accused and accursed him, continuing his life, euen for the same cause that other murderers lose it, that he might liue an example (which then in that vnpeopled world by his death he could not haue beene) to the future generations, branded k also by the Lord with some sensible marke, to exempt him, and terrifie others, from that bloodie crueltie: this mercie being mixed with this iudgement, a longer time of repentance. God before l cursed the earth for Adam. he now m cursed Cain from the earth, to be a runnagate, and wanderer thereon. For how could he, that had so forsaken God, but be forsaken of the earth, and of himselfe? the n stable and mercifull earth, which before had opened her mouth to receiue his brothers blood, shrinking, and (as it were) grudging to support such wicked feet, and by denying him her strength, forcing him to his manifold shifts, and shiftiesse remouings. Wretched man alwayes bleeding his brothers blood; not daring to looke vp to heauen, fearing to looke downe to hell, the world without him threatening a miserable life, his bodie branded to contempt and shame till his death, his soule become a stage of Anguish, Feare, Hotroure, and other Furies, the harbingers of hell: not able to suffer (which yet he cannot but suffer) the guilt of pasted wickednesse gnawing him, the waight of present miserie pressing him, the dread of a death, and a death attending him: restlesse in himselfe, hated of the world, despairing of reliefe from God: a liuely mappe of the deadly

Cain, more vexed with the punishment, then at the fault of his sinne, departed from the presence of the Lord, which is meant either of his iudiciall conuenting him, or ^b in regard of the visibie societie of the Church, cradled yet in his fathers household, where God did especially shew his present prouidence, protection and grace, who otherwise filleth the heauen and earth, of whom and in whom they are: from hence, as Adam before out of Paradise, so Cain was, as it were, excommunicated, expelled, and out-lawed, and dwelt in the land of Nod, which ^c some take to be appellatiuely spoken, as if his miserie had giuen name of Mouing vnto the place where he dwelled, or roamed rather: ^d Iosephus saith, he built Naida, applying it to a proper place, which was either Eastward from Eden, or Eastward towards Eden from Canaan, where Adam is supposed to haue dwelt, and after with his wife to haue been buried at Hebron. Afterward, his posteritie being multiplied (his wife, Epiphan. out of Leptogenesis calleth Shane, ^e Comestor calleth her Chalmana, ^f Philo, Themech) he built a citie which he called by the name of his sonne & Henoch: to crosse that curse of his wandering to and fro on the earth, or to arme him against others, which his guiltie conscience caused him to feare, or to be a receptracle and store-house of those spoiles, which, Iosephus saith, he robbed from others by violence, when as the earth was barren to him. Philo (if we may so entitle that Author) which hath written of the antiquities of the Bible, ascribeth to him other cities, Mauji, Leed, Tehe, Iesca, Celat, Iebbat, adding that he liued 730. yeares. These things may be probable, although that Author be otherwise fabulous, considering that men did ordinarily liue many hundred yeares in those times, and were also exceeding fruitfull, especially after that Polygamy was embraced of that family. ^h And if that in Abrahams posteritie the seed of Iacob in lesse then 300. yeares was multiplied to so ⁱ great a people, it is like that the Cainites were no ^k lesse populous, liuing in more freedom. He first (saith Iosephus) found out weights and measures, and assigned proprieties in possessions of land, before common as the aire and light, and was author to lewd persons, of a lewd and vngodly life. Probable it is that the Citie was called Herock, because the curse suffered not the father to stay in a place, but to leaue a hasty inheritance to his son to finish and rule it. Iabal and Iubal and Tubalcain, were inuenters of Arts: the first to dwell in tents and keepe cattell; the second of muscicall instruments: the third of working in mettals, and making of Armour, which some thinke to be Vulcan, by the neerenes of name and occupation. His ^l sister Naamah is accounted by some Rabbines, the first inuenter of making Linnen and Woollen, and of vocall Musicke; yea they make her the wife of Noah also.

Thus let vs leaue this family multiplying in numbers, in sciences, in wickednesse, fauouring nothing diuine, or at least nothing but humane in their Diuinitie: (therefore called the sonnes of men ^m;) let vs looke backe to Adam, who in this wicked fruit of his bodie might reade continuall lectures of repentance for the sinne of his soule. Adam begate a child in his owne likenesse ⁿ, that is, not in that likenesse of God, wherein he was created, but like vnto himselfe, both in humane nature, and naturall corruption, his name he called Seth, of whose posterity the whole world was by Noah re-peopled. Vnto Seth was borne Enosh. Then began men, saith Moses, to call vpon the name of the Lord. This some ^o interpret of the beginning of idolatry, that men began to prophane the name of the Lord: some to call the name of the Lord, that is, after Rabbi Salomo, to apply the name of God to Images, Stars and men: But the more likely opinion is, that when Adam had obtained a more holy posterity, which was now multiplied in diuers families, ^p Religion which before had bin a priuat in-mate in Adams household, was now brought into publike exercise, whereof Prayer hath alwaies bin accounted a principall part, and God himselfe in both Testaments calleth his house a house of prayer; the calves of the lips, and the eiaculations of the heart being the body and soule of Diuine worship, whereof sacrifices were in a manner but the apparell, fashioned to that infancie of the Church. Of the names * of the posterity of Adam, and his hundred yeares mourning for Abel; of Seth, his remouing after Adam's death to a mountaine neere Paradise, and such other things, more fauouring of fabulous vanity in the false-named Methodius, Philo and others that follow them, I list not to write. And well might Genebrard haue spared his paines in searching for the antiquity of Popery in this first age of the world. Easily may we grant a Church then, truly Catholik, in the posteritie of Seth, instructed partly by reuelations, partly by Traditions, concerning the creation, the fall, the good and euill Angels, the promised seed, the vnity and Trinity, punishments and repentance for sinne, publike and priuate deuotions, and other like Articles gathered out of Moses: but for the rabble of Rabbinicall dreams which he addeth hereunto, we had neede of the implicite faith of some simple credulous Catholike to receiue them: as namely Purgatorie resembled in the fiery sword at the entrance of Paradise. Free will grounded on that which God speaketh to Caine, Thou shalt rule over him (the prerogatiue of the elder brother ouer the yonger falsely applied to the rule of the minde ouer sinfull lusts) the choise of meates in the first fathers abstinence from flesh, fish, and wine (as he saith) which had not beene permitted to them, as it is to vs: Traditions, when as yet they had no Scripture: superstitious obsequies to the dead: because the Iewes in their office for the dead call vpon the fathers which lie buried at Hebron (namely Adam, Eue, and the rest) to open the gates of Paradise: Deuotion to Saints, because the Cherubims were set betweene Paradise and sinners; (as if their Saints were honoured to keepe them out of heauen) and not the bloody sacrifices onely in Abels offering, but that vnbloudie sacrifice (so they stile their Masse) in the offering of Caine: (we eniue them not their founder) yea, he finds their sacraments of Orders in Gods executing the Priestly function, of matrimonie in Adam and Eue, of Baptisme in the breeches which they ware, of Penance because God said, Thou art dust, and to dust thou shalt returne, of Confirmation in those words, Shee shall breake thy head (the Truth will breake their heads for so reading it) of Vnction in that Seth went to the Cherub which kept Paradise, and receiued of him three graines of the tree of life, wherof we read in the Apocalyps, the leaues shall heale the Nations; with those graines was an oyle made, wherewith Adam was anoyed, and the stones put into his mouth, whence sprang the tree wherof the Crosse of our Lord was made, hidden by Salomon in the Temple, and after in the poole of Bethesda. Spectatum admisisi sum teneat is amici? Did not Genebrard deserue an Archbishopricke? or if the obseruation be his, did not Petrus Victor Palma deserue the Palme-victory for Peters pretended successors, which could finde such antiquity for prooffe of their Catholicisme? Much good may it doe their Catholique mawes with such dainties. Iust art thou O Lord, and iust are thy iudgements, which because they will not beleene thy truth, giueth them ouer to such strong delusions, to beleene so grosse and palpable lies.

* Some are of opinion that all those Fathers mentioned Gen. 5. were Ecclesiasticall Fathers also, & Priests for diuine worship: which function of Lordship and Priesthood vniued, continued to the first-borne many generations after the flood. Betram. pol. Ind. c. 2.

CHAP. VII.

Of the cause and coming of the Flood.

Thus we haue scene in part the fulfilling of the Prophecie of the seed of the Woman, and of that other of the Serpent, in the posteritie of Caine and Seth. The family of Caine is first reckoned, and their forwardnes in humane Arts, as the children of this world are wiser in their generation; in the things of this life, which they almost onely attend, then the children of light. As for the Iewish dreames, that Lamech was blinde, and by the direction of Tubalcaine his sonne guiding his hand slew Caine, supposing it had beene a wilde wilde beast, which when he knew, so enraged him, that he killed his son also, they that list may follow.

Moses reckoneth the Generations according to the first-born in the posterity of Seth, as enjoying the Principallitie and Priesthood, that so the promised seede of the Woman (after such a world of yeares comming into the world) might iustifie the stableness of Gods promises, his lineall descent from Adam with a due Chronologie, being declared. After Seth, Enosh, Kenan, Mehalaleel, Iared was Enoch the seventh from Adam, who walked with God, whom God tooke away that he should not see death. This before the Law, and Helias in the Law, are witnesses of the resurrection; being miraculously taken from the earth into heauen, not by death, but by supernaturall changing of their bodies. That he should be still in^b an earthly Paradise, and that he and Elias should come and preach against Antichrist, and of him be slaine, is a Popish dreame; the scripture saying, that Enoch was taken away that he should not see death; of Elias, that he is^d already come in the person of Iohn Baptist: the spirit and power, or spirituall power of walking with God, reforming Religion, and conuerting soules, being communicated to many of those Ministers which haue lien slaine in the streets of that great Cittie.

This his assumption is^e supposed to be visibly done. He was^a a Prophet, and Iude doth in his Epistle cite a testimony of his, which either by^f tradition went from hand to hand, as it seemeth the whole word of God was deliuered before the dayes of Moses; God by visions and dreames appearing vnto the Patriarkes; or else it was written and since is lost. Some holde it was penned by some Iew vnder the name of Enoch. ^g Augustine thinketh that the Booke entituled Enoch was forged in his name, as other writings vnder the names of Prophets and Apostles: and therefore calleth it Apocrypha (as^h Hierome doth also): Chrysostome and Theophylact account^b Moses the first Pen-man of holy Scripture. Although it seeme that letters were in vse before the flood, if^k Iosephus his testimonie be true, who affirmeth that Adam hauing prophesied two vniuersall destructions, one by fire another by water, his posterity erected two pillars, one of bricke another of stone, in both which they writ their inuentions of Astronomy; that of stone was reported to remaine in his time. Some^l ascribe this to Seth, as also the first naming of the seuen Planets. The science of Astronomy, they say, was much furthered by Enoch, who (saith Eupolemon) was by the Greekes called Atilas, to whom they attributed the inuention thereof. ^m Pliny was of opinion that letters were eternall.

Howsoeuer, it is more then apparant, that the booke bearing Enochs name, is very fabulous which, because the tales therein profess antiquitie (although they were later dreames) I thought it not vnfit to borrow out ofⁿ Scaliger somewhat of that which he hath inserted, in his notes vpon Eusebius, the Greeke copie being, as the phrase testifieth, translated out of Hebrew, which had bene the worke of some Iew: the antiquitie appeareth, in that^o Tertullian citeth it.

And p it came to passe when the sonnes of men were multiplied, there were borne to them faire daughters, and the Watch-men (so he calleth the Angels out of Dan. 4.) lusted and went astray after them; and they said one to another, ^q Let vs chuse vs wines of the daughters of men of the earth. And Semixas their Prince said vnto them, I feare me you will not doe this thing, and I alone shall be debtor of a great sinne. And they all answered him & said; We will all sweare with an oath, and will Anathematise or curse our selues not to alter this our minde till we haue fulfilled it, and they all sware together. These came downe in the dayes of Iared to the top of the hill Hermon. And they called the hill Hermon because they sware and Anathematized on it. These were the names of their Rulers, Semixas, Atarcoph, Arachiel, Chababiel, Orammame, Ramiel, Sapsich, Zakiel, Balkiel, Azalzel, Pharmaros, Samiel, &c.

These tooke them wiues, and three generations were borne vnto them: the first were great Giants; the Giants begate the Naphelim, to whom were borne Eliud; and they taught them and their wiues sorceries and inchantments. Ezael taught first to make swords and weapons for warre, and how to worke in mettals. make womens ornaments, and how to looke faire, and Jewelling. And they beguiled the Saints; and much sinne was committed on the earth. Other of them taught the vertues of Roots, Astrologie, Diuinations, &c. After these things the Giants began to eate the flesh of men, and men were diminished: and the remnant cried to heauen, because of their wickednesse, that they might come in remembrance before him. And the foure great Archangels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael and Vriell hearing it, looked downe on the earth from the holy places of heauen: and beholding much bloudshed on the earth, and all vngodlinesse and transgression committed therein, said one to another, That the Spirits and Soules of men complaine, saying, That ye should present our prayer to the Higheest, and our destruction. Then the Higheest said, The Holy one, The Great one spake and sent Vriell to the sonne of Lamech, saying, Goe to Noe, tell him of the end approaching and a floud shall destroy the earth, &c. To Raphael he said, Go Raphael and binde Ezael hand and foot, and cast him into darknesse, and open the wildernesse in the desert of Dodoel, and there cast him, and lay vpon him sharpe stones to the day of iudgement, &c. And to Gabriel he said, Go Gabriel to the Giants, and destroy the sons of the Watch-men from the sons of Men, set them one against another in warre and destruction. To Michael he said, Go Michael binde Semixa and the others with him that haue mixed themselues with the daughters of Men (vntill seuentie generations) to the hills of the earth; vntill the day of their iudgement, till the iudgement of the world be finished, and then they shall be brought into * the confusion of fire; and vnto tryall, and vnto the prison of the ending of the world, and whosoever shall be condemned and destroyed, from hence forth shall be cast together with them till the finishing of their generation, &c. And the Giants which were begotten of the Spirits and flesh, they shall call them euill spirits on the earth, because their dwelling is on the earth. The spirits that depart out of their bodies shall be euill spirits, because they were engendered of the Watch men and Men.

But it were tedious to recite further. The antiquity of it, and because it is not so common, and especially because some of the Ancients and of the Papists haue been misle-led by these dreames (refused iustly by Ierome and Augustine) interpreting the sonnes of God in Moses to be spoken of Angels (as their Translation did reade it) haue moued me to insert those tales. Notable is the diligence of the Purgatory Scauengers, who in Vines notes vpon Aug. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 15. cap. 23. haue in their Index purgatorius, set the seale of their Office vpon a testimonie alleaged out of Eusebius de Prep. Evang. lib. 5. cap. 4. as if they had bin Vines his owne words, to be left out in the impression. The words, because the fauor of the former error, haue I heere placed, Non ergo Deos, neque bonos de ceteris Gentiles, sed perniciosos solummodo venerantur. Quam rem magis Plutarchus confirmat, dicens fabulosas de dijs rationes res quasdam significare, à dæmonibus antiquissimis gestas temporibus, & ea quæ de gigantibus ac de Titanibus decantantur, demonum fuisse operationes. Vnde mihi suspicio (saith Eusebius, but Vines is ficed for it) nonnunquam incidit, ne ista illa sint, quæ ante diluuium à gigantibus facta diuina Scriptura tetigit, de quibus dicitur: Cum autem vidissent Angeli Dei filias hominum, quia essent speciosæ, elegerunt sibi ex illis uxores, ex quibus procreati sunt famosissimi gigantes à sæculo. Suspiciabitur enim fortasse quispiam, illos & illorum spiritus esse qui ab hominibus postea diu putati sunt, pugnasq; illorum, tumultus & bella esse, quæ fabulosè de dijs conscribebantur. Lactantius saith, that when the world was multiplied, God sent Angels to keep men from the frauds of the Diuell, to whom he forbad all earthly contagion. These were by the Diuell insnared with women, therefore depriued of heauen: and their progenie of a middle nature betwixt men and Angels, became vncleane spirits; so that hence grew two kindes of Demonies or diuellish spirits; the one heauenly, the other earthly, which would now seeme to be keepers, and are destroyers of men.

The Angels are sometimes called P the sonnes of God: but that name is communicated

I denie not that then there were Giants also in regard of bodily stature, ^u whom the Scripture calleth, because they were great and fearefull, Rephaim and Emim, of their pride Hanakim, of their strength Gibborim, of their tyrannie Nephilim, of their nauhtinesse Zamzummim. Such were Og and Goliath after the floud. Yea such haue beene in all ages: which (to omit other Ethnike Authors) ^{*} Augustine affirmeth, that at Utica he saw a mans tooth as great as an hundred of the ordinary size. Vntes on that place, saith he saw one as bigge as a mans fist. Nicephorus telleth of two men in the time of Theodosius, the one not so admirable for his height, which was five cubites and an hand, as the other for his smalenesse, like to a Patrich in bignesse, yet wⁱ ty and learned. Our Histories of ^y Arthur, little Iohn, Curcy Earle of Vlster, and one in our times, 1581. seene in London, doe shew some such here and there, now and then in the world, which Goropius in his Gigantomachia, affirmeth of his owne sight: and even whole families of these monltrous men are found at this day in America, both neere to Virginia, as ^z Captain Smith reporteth; and especially about the Straits of Magellan, ^{*} neere which he found Giants, and in the same Straits were such seene of the ^a Hollanders ten foote in height, where as yet other families were but of the ordinary g^e eatnesse. One Thomas Turner tolde me that neere the Riuer of Plate, he saw one twelue foote high, and others whose hinder part of their head was flat, not round. ^b Authors tell of Maximus the Romane Emperour, that hee was eight foote and a finger high, whose wiues bracelets might serue him for rings, that he often in one day drunk an Amphora, which is almost sixe gallons of Wine, and eate forty pounds of flesh: Cordus saith sixty; he could breake a horse legge, or strike out his teeth with a blow of his fist, &c. Which occursents in Nature no doubt haue giuen occasion to some of further fabling. Qui de magnis maiora loquuntur. ^c We reade in Pliny of one of forty sixe cubites, in Crete found by the force of an earth-quake, breaking the hill wherein he stood, supposed to be Orion or Otus: more credible is that he telleth of one Gabbara in Claudius time, nine foote and nine inches; and in Augustus time of another halfe a foote higher.

Howsoeuer the bodies of these men before the Floud were composed, certain their mindes were disposed to all monstrous inhumanity, which hastened their destruction. This made God to repent that he made man vpon the earth, not that there was any change or repentance in him, but because a change for want of repentance happened to them. In long sufferance hee gaue them an hundred and twenty yeares space, in which Noah might be a Preacher of Righteousnesse; yea, the Arke it selfe, which Noah that while was prouiding, might preach to them repentance, that their teares might haue quenched his wrath, and prevented temporall drowning and eternall burning. Adam liued till Henochs time, a witnesse and Preacher of the promise he himselfe had receiued. Henoch himselfe is made, not a verball but a reall Preacher, whiles his sonne Methushelah, and his Nephew Lamech the father of Noah liued: that God might haue witnesses to conuert some and conuince others. But whiles the world becometh worse and worse (^d Etas parentum pectoris tulit Hos nequiores, mox daturos Progeniem vitiosorem) a deluge of sinne first, and a deluge of iudgement after, drown-

For

For the circumstances, of the Flood Moses hath more plainly related them, then that I should here expresse them. Noah with his three sonnes and their wiues entered the Arke at Gods appointment, to which by diuine instinct resorted both birds and beasts; of the cleane seuen, and of the vncleane two in euery kinde. If any maruell at this distinction of cleane and vncleane in these times, supposing that God first in the wildernesse made this partition-wall: it is answered, that God before this had appointed sacrifices of beasts, which might make the difference; for which cause also there was a seuenth of euery such creature, reserued for sacrifice after Noah going out. Besides, God had now purposed to adde the flesh of beasts vnto mans dyet, for which those, called by the Israelites cleane were most fit, and most in vse: and in that respect more of such kindes were reserued, as more necessary for mans vse in food, cloathing, and some of them also for labour. Otherwise no creature is vncleane in it selfe, the Hoofe and Cudde being by Nature (Gods hand-maid) and not by their owne vice, such as made this distinction. And after the flood God made no Law of difference vntill the time of Moses, although each countrey hath obserued their owne peculiar custome in this food, some loathing that which others esteeme dainty, not for religion, but for naturall and ciuill causes. As at this day to the Tarrars, Horse-flesh is royall fare; to the Arabians, Camels; to some Americans, Serpents; and other flesh to others, which our appetite more then our faith, our stomacke more then, our soule abhorreth.

Concerning the Arke, diuers doubts haue been moued, through curiositie and vnbeleefe of some, who by diuine iustice were in a manner depriued of sense and reason, hauing before through diuellish wickednesse lost their conscience and Religion. Thus Apelles one of Marcions disciples, could not finde the Arke (after Moses dimension) to be capable of foure Elephants in so small a quantitie; Celsus contrary to him (yet agreeing in a foolish impiety and impious folly) thought so great a vessell was too great for mans handy-work. Thus, like Sampsons Foxes, their heads are diuers wayes, but they are tyed together by the tayles, agreeing in disagreeing both from Moses and themselves.

But might not reason teach Celsus, that the direction of God might teach a man in an hundred and twentie yeares space to frame so mightie a Fabrike? doth not sense and experience shew buildings not much lesse both on the Sea and on the Land? And what Arithmeticke or Geometry, nay, what wit or common sense had Apelles in his assertion? The Arke was too little (forsooth) for so many creatures and their prouision for a yeare. We neede not seeke for shifts from helpe of the Geometricall cubite knowne to Moses in his Egyptian learning, of three, sixe, or nine foote to the cubite: as Origen and Hugo doe; nor of the sacred cubite, imagined twice as much as the common: nor of the larger stature & cubites of men in those youthfull times and age of the world. The length whereof three hundred cubites, and the breadth fiftie, doe make of square measure by common rules of Art, fifteene thousand cubites. Three floores or roomes were therein of that quantitie, each contayning ten foot in height. As for the beasts; a floore of fifteene thousand cubites might yeelde fiftie cubites square to three hundred seuerall kindes, many more then are knowne by relation of the most Writers, Aristotle, Plinie, Gesner, &c. which scarce reckon halfe that number, and but fortie kinds or therabouts that would take vp any great roome. The height might yeelde commodious roomes for the fowles on perches; and all this might one roome or floore afford. Judge then whether two other roomes of equall bignesse, might not be sufficient for all other necessary employments? Besides, the rooffe is not to be thought vnproportionable, fitted for so long and tempestuous stormes, and therefore not vnfitted with roome for diuers necessaries. And if any accuse me for adding this of the rooffe to Moses description, I say that so it is translated by some, Et in cubiti longitudinem consummato eius tectum superne, vnderstanding those words not of the window (as many doe) but of the rooffe it selfe, which else is no where described, which should ouer-hang the Arke a cubite breadth, to defend it the safer from raines; as in our houses the eues and slope roofes are commodious both for roome within, and against the weather without. But if any would entertaine longer dispute about this, he may (among others that haue handled this question) resort vnto ^h Goropius Becanus his Gigantomachia, whom in this point I would rather follow, then in many other his Becceselanicall paradoxes.

Noah and his family with this their retinue being entered, the fountaines of the great deepes were opened, and the windowes of heauen: the two store-houses of waters which God had separated in the Creation, being in a manner confounded againe, the Seas breaking their sandie barres, and breaking vp by secret vnderminings the priuie pores and passages in the earth: the cloudes conspiring with the waters, and renewing their first league and naturall amity, to the confusion of Nature and the World. The heauenly lights hid their faces from beholding it, and cloathed themselues with blacke, as bewayling the worlds funerall; the ayre is turned into a sea, the sea possesseth the ayrie region, the earth is now no earth, but a myrie lumpe, and all that huger world is contracted into a brieft Epitome, and small abridgement in the Arke, euen there but a few inches distant from death. Thus doe all ⁱ Creatures detest Sin which hath made them subiect to Vanitie; thus would the Elements wash themselues cleane from it, and the committers thereof; but the Arke preuaileth ouer the preuailing waters, a figure of the Church, the remnant of the elder, and Seminarie of the new world.

This drowning of the world hath not bene quite drowned in the world, but besides Moses many other writers haue mentioned it: the time thereof being referred to that which in each Nation was accounted most auncient; as among the Thebans to Ogiges; in Theffalia, to Deucalion; among the Americans (although ^k Mercator thinke that the Flood drowned not those partes, because they were not yet peopled; and because the beasts there are most what differing kindes from these in our world) the people haue retained the tradition hereof: Mnaseus among the Phœnicians, Berosus a Chaldean, Hieronimus Egyptius, Nicolaus of Damascus, the Poets Greeke and Latine, adding fables to the truth (which without some ground of truth they could not haue added) all mention the Flood; howsoeuer confounding the lesse and later with this first and vniuersall.

I might adde the testimonies of Eupolemus, Molon, Abidenus, Alexander, Polybistor, out of Eusebius, Iosaphus, and others. Lucian in his Dea Syria, telleth the opinion of the Hierapolitans but a little corrupted from Moses Narration: that Countrey wherein Noah liued, most likely retayning firmer memorie of this miracle: so plainly doth he attribute to his Deucalion the Arke, the resort and safe-gard of the Lions, Bores, Serpents, and Beasts: the repairing of the World after the drowning thereof, which he ascribeth to perjurie, cruelty, and other abominations of the former people. That Berosus which we now haue, is not so much as the ghost, or carkasse, and scarce a few bones of the carcasse of that famous Chaldean Author, mentioned by the Ancients, but the dreams of Annius (no new thing in this last age) coined for the most part in his name. Some fragments of Berosus wee haue cited in other Authours that conuince this Bastard.

Among others, somewhat of the Flood hath escaped drowning: his testimonie whereof set downe in Polybistor and Abidenus, is in ^l Eusebius. He affirmeth that Saturne gaue warning to Sisuthrus of this deluge, and willed him to prepare a great vessel or ship, wherein to put conuenient food, and to saue himselfe and his kindred and acquaintance, which he builded of length fise furlongs, of breadth two. After the retying of the waters, he sent out a bird which returned: after a few dayes he sent her forth againe, which returned with her feet bernired; and being sent the third time, came no more: with other things to like purpose, which Polybistor there, and Abidenus cyteth out of Berosus. Plutarch hath also written of this Doue, sent by Deucalion out of the Arke, which returning was a signe of tempest and flying forth offaire weather.

OW ^a GOD remembred NOAH, saith Moses; not that God can forget, but that he declared his Diuine power, whereby Noah might know hee was not forgotten. Then did the ^b Heauens remember their wonted influence in the Elements: then did the Elements remember their naturall order: GOD made a winde to passe in Commission, and, as a common vnpire, to end their vnnaturall strife, forcing the Waters into their ancient precincts aboue and beneath the Firmament. (^c Ambrose interpreteth this winde of the HOLIE GHOST. Ruperus of the Sunne. The most, of a winde, which yet naturally could not be produced from that waterie masse, but by the extraordinarie hand of God ^d.) Then did the Earth remember her first inheritance, being freed from the tyrannicall inuasion and vsurpation of the Waters. And what could then forget or be forgotten, when GOD remembred NOAH and all that was with him in the Arke?

Hee imagined, that the place first inhabited after the Flood was Margiana, whence those Colonies passed that with Nimrod built Babylon. His reason is, because ^o they went from the East to the Plaine of Shinar, whereas Armenia beareth somewhat Westward from thence. As though that iourney had beene presently after the Flood, which was an hundred yeares after: in which space it is likely that they followed the mountainous countries Eastward a long time, and from Assyria Adiabena, turned back into that fertile Plaine, where pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse, set them on worke against GOD. I hold it not meet, that a few coniectures should counterpoise the generall consent of all ages. Iosephus saith, the place in Armenia was called Apobaterion, of this their going forth of the Arke: and allegeth Berosus testimonie, that a part of this Arke was then said to remaine in the Cordyxan (or Gordyxan) Hills, the pitch whereof some scraping away, wore the same for Amulets. After that Noah had obtained his deliuerance, and was now gone out of the Arke; his first care was ^o Religion: and therefore he built an Altar to the Lord, and tooke of euery cleane beast, and of euery cleane fowle, and offered burnt offerings vpon the Altar: And the Lord smelled a sauour of rest, and renewed the ancient blessings and promises to Noah and his posteritie. The liuing creatures were also permitted to their foode, and submitted to their rule, by whom they had in the Arke escaped drowning. Only the blood was prohibited to them, as a ceremonial obseruation to instruct them in lenitie and hatred of crueltie: the politicall Ordinance being annexed touching the blood of man, against man or beast that should shed the same. This difference being ^q alleaged of the life of Man and Beast, that the life of the Beast is his blood, the life of Man is in his blood. Not that the blood which we see shed is the life of the beast; for that is properly, Cruor, not Sanguis, that is, the matter, whose forme was the life or vitall spirit, which being separated from the bodie, is seuered also from the forme of life. And the life of beaits hath no other forme but that which is vnited with the blood, as the life of trees is the sappe of trees; their blood being (as it were) their soule. But ^r the life of man is in his blood, hauing his seat therein, liuing when it is by death separated from the blood; meane while the Spirits being the purest part of the blood, as conduits conueying life to the bodily members, and as firme bands of a middle nature, betweene the body and soule, vniting them together; which bands and carriages being broken by effusion of blood, the soule subsisteth a spirituall substance without the bodie, not subiect to substantiall corruption or mortalitie.

God did also make a couenant for man with the beasts of the field, infusing into the nature of all things, a dread and feare of man, whereby they feare the power, the snates, and sleights of man, and therefore flee or else submit themselues, not by that willing instinct, as to Adam in innocencie, but rather with a seruite feare. And although by hunger or prouocation, or feare of their owne danger, they sometimes rebell, yet other wise there remains some impressiõ of this naturall decree in them, as experience in all places hath shewed. Euen the Lyon, King of Forrests and sauage creatures, doth not easily giue on-set, but on such occasions: yea the Moores meeting with this beast, doe rate and braule at him; this magnanimous beast passing by with a leering countenance, expressing a mixt passion of dread and disdaine, fearing the voice of one, that feareth not the weapons of many, and which himselfe, by the terror of his voice, maketh the beasts to tremble. continued signe of the double destruction of the world, the first outward as alreadie past, the other inward as yet to come. Well, indeede, may this Bow be called the Child of Wonder, both for the naturall constitution and diuine ordinance: not that there was before ^r no such creature, but that then this vse of the creature was ordainned. The reflection or refraction of the Sunne-beames in a waterie cloud, the brightnesse from the Sunne, and the cloud meeting together, the varietie of colours proceeding from the varietie of matter; the sumish and dryer part of the cloude yeelding a purplish, the waterie a greenish Sea-colour, &c. borrowing the roundnesse from the Sunne halfe eclipsed by the shadow of the Earth, are accounted the naturall causes of this wonder of Nature; sometime also by reason of aboundance of matter, the same being doubled, one Bow within the other, their colours placed contrarie, for that the one is the Image (by reflection) of the other. Neither is it to bee thought, that there was no Raine-bow before the flood, any more then that there was no water, bread, or wine, before the institution of our Christian Sacraments, which name and dignitie, not Nature, but Vse, by the appointment of the G o d of Nature and Grace, doth giue vnto them. For not in the cloudes alone is this Bow to bee scene, but as further witnesse of the naturall causes and constitution thereof, the same effect may be shewed by concurrence of like causes in the Waters and Rocks where Riouers haue their falls; yea on the buildings of men: as I my selfe haue scene a perfect Raine-bow by the reflection of the Sunne-beames on a boarded wall of a Water-mill, the boordes thereof being very wet with the fall of the water, and opposite to the Sunne.

To shew directly which Nations descended of each of these three, were a hard taske: and now after this confusion of Nations by warres, leagues, and otherwise, impossible. But for the first beginnings of Nations, before that Colonies were by violence of Conquerors, or by themselves, in their exceeding multiplying, voluntarily translated from one place to another, they are by Moses faithfully related, although the confusion of Languages and of Peoples do make the matter hard and harsh to vs. Yet the names of Nations in the Greeke stories do in great part agree with the names of these first Patriarkes, as ^x M. Broughton hath shewed, by laying downe the names of Noahs house, which, vnvowelled, may admit sundrie pronouncings, setting against them such names as Heathen Authors haue mentioned. Of Iobab, Arias Montanus coniectureth Parias in the West Indies to haue come, but with little probabilitie which I can see. And of the most before named we haue probable coniectures, not certaine proofes, as appeareth by the difference of opinions of Authors concerning them. Neither may wee thinke that Moses intended so much a Geographicall history of all the Nations of the world, many of which were not, long after this time, planted or peopled; but of the first Fathers, who peopled the places by degrees, as they increased in multitude which were neereft that Armenian centre: and especially he relateth and dilateth of them, whom it most concerned the Israeletes to know, as the Canaanites, whose bounds and Nations are exactly described. I could adde much touching the seuerall Nations descending of these three brethren, and the bounds of their habitations, in which Africanus sometime tooke profitable paines, and Eusebius out of him, although both be in this part lost: somewhat hath bene barbarously translated into Latine by an vnknowne Author, for the solecismes, tedious; for the substance of Historie profitable to the Reader: and therefore by Scaliger in his edition of Eusebius communicated to the world. But the vncertaintie^a maketh me vnwilling to proceed in this argument further,

Of this vncertaintie no greater cause can be alledged, then the diuision and confusion of Tongues, the historie whereof Moses declareth. For whereas God had giuen to man two Priuiledges and principall prerogatiues, whereof other creatures are no way capable, his inward^b Reason, and abilitie to vtter the same by Speech: this benefit of God in Nature was turned into a conspiracie against God and Nature. They said one to another, ^c Come let vs make bricke for stone, and slime had they in stead of mortar. Also they said, let vs build vs a City and Tower, whose top may reach vnto the heauen, that we may get vs a name. lest we be scattered vpon the whole earth. This was their vaine arrogance and presumption, that when their guiltie consciences threatned a dissipation and scattering by diuine Iustice: they would thus harden and harden themselves against God and Man: in stead of thankfulnessse to God, and honouring his name, they would winne themselves a name and honour: in stead of preuenting punishment by repentance, they would in this Giant-like fighting against God preuent future iudgements. But euen that, by which they intended to keepe them from scattering, was the true and first cause of their scattering. So doth God scatter the counsell of his enemies, and taketh the wise in their craftinesse. Babel or confusion is alway the attendant of Pride. Sibylla, alledged by ^d Iosephus (for the Sibylls which we haue in Greeke verse, translated by Castalion into Latine, are but counterfeits, if ^e Scaliger iudge rightly, Pseudosibyllina oracula, qua Christiani gentibus obijcebant, quum tamen è Christianorum officina prodissent, &c. but that more ancient Sibyll) testifieth of this confusion of Tongues in these words. When all men before vsed onespeech, they erected a high Tower, as if they would ascend to Heauen, but the Gods by tempests ouerthrew their Tower, and gaue to each of them seuerall Languages, whereof the Citie was named Babylon: According to that of Moses, ^f Therefore the name of it was called Babel, because the Lord did there confound the Language of all the Earth. From thence then did the Lord scatter them vpon all the Earth. The Atheists and Naturalists dreame the world to be eternall, and conceiue that all men could not be of one; because of this diuersitie of Languages. If such had bene at Hierusalem, and heard the Apostles (not the expertest men in their owne vulgar) speake all Languages: they might then haue seen the like power in a contrarie effect to this of Babylon. Mans sinne caused this, Gods mercie that: the one came from Babylon, the other from Hierusalem, that old Hierusalem giuing a taste and earnest of that, which the new Ierusalem shall once fully accomplish, when all shall be made new, all shall become one, and God shall bee all in all. It appeareth that these Builders lost the vnderstanding of their owne speech, and were endued with other language, whereto their Vnderstandings and Tongues were framed, in stead of that former.

What this former Language was, hath beene doubted, either of ignorance, or of curiositie and selfe-loue. Theodore ^a esteemeth Syrian the first language, and that Hebrew began with Moses, taught him by God as a sacred language. ^b Ioseph Scaliger affirmeth that the Syrian Maronites attribute greater antiquitie to the ancient Syrian then to the Hebrew, which is all one, saith he, as if one should contend that the Italian Idiome were ancieuter then the Latine. Hee concludeth that the Bible was written in the most ancient language, which at first was pure in Assyria, but by merchandize and warres corrupted. For Assyria, saith he, was first inhabited both before and after the Floud: and from thence were Colonies sent into Syria and Phænicea, which held their language pure, by reason few strangers had recourse to them, after Moses, to the time of the first Temple, as appeareth by the coynes of the Tyrians and Sidonians, which are digged out and found daily. ^c Psammetichus King of Egypt, caused two children to be closely brought vp by a shepheard, who should at times put Goats to them to giue them sucke, without euer hearing humane voyce. After two yeares they vttered the word Bec Bec, which was the voice that they had heard of their nurfes the Goats, but not so interpreted by Psammetichus; for he enquiring in what language Bec was significant, and hearing that the Phrygians so called Bread, ascribed to them the prioritie of all Nations and languages, Melabdim Echebar, the great ^d Mogor (as the Iesuites Epistles declare) made the like triall of thirtie children, whom he caused, without hearing of man, to be brought vp, setting Guards to obserue the Nurfes that they should not speake to them: purposing to be of that Religion whereto they should addict themselues. But neither could they euer speake, ^e or would he euer addict himselfe to one certaine Religion. ^f Goropius by a few Dutch Etymologies grew into conceit, and would haue the world beleecue him, that Dutch was the first language; which if it were, we English should raigne with them as a Colonie of that Dutch Citie, a streame from that fountaine, by commerce and conquests since manifoldly mixed. But his euidence is too weake, his authoritie too new.

The ^g common and more receiued opinion is, that the Hebrew was the first, confirmed also by vniuersalitie, antiquitie, and consent of the Christian Fathers and learned men, grounding themselues vpon this reason, That all the names mentioned in Scripture before the Diuision, are in that Language onely significant: besides, it is not like, that Schem conspired with these Babylonians, and therefore not partaker of their punishment. Now it is very probable and almost manifest, that he was ^h the same which after is called Melchisedech, King of Salem; betwixt whom and Abraham, in that familiaritie, it is not likely, that there was much dissonance in Language. He is also called the father of all the sonnes of Heber, by a peculiar proprietie, although he had other sonnes, because the puritie of Religion and Language remained in Hebers posteritie. And why should Heber call his sonne Peleg (Diuision) but of this diuision which then happened? The Nation and Language of Israel borrow their name (Hebrew) of him. And if it had happened to himselfe, why should he more then others, haue so named his sonne?

CHAP. IX.

A Geographical Narration of the whole Earth in generall, and more particularly of ASIA.

WE haue all this time bene viewing one Nation, which alone was knowne in the Earth, vntill confusion of Language caused diuision of Lands; and haue taken notice of the Heads and Authors of those Peoples and Nations, that from that time were scattered ouer the World, and after settled in their proper Habitations. We haue not followed the opinion of some, both of the ^a Antients, and later Writers, in defining the number of Nations and Languages through the World, reckoned by them 72. For who seeth not, that Moses in that tenth of Genesis is most carefull to describe the Posteritie and bounds of Canaan, which God had giuen to Israel, which it were absurd to thinke in so small a territorie to be off so many (that is eleuen) seuerall Languages? And how many Nations were founded after that by Abrahams posteritie (not to mention so many other Fountaines of Peoples) by the sonnes of Hagar, and Ketura, and Esau the sonne of Isaac? Neither could the world so suddenly be peopled: and of that, which then was peopled, Moses writing a Historie of and for the Church, so fir mentioneth the Affaires and Nations of the world, as it was meet for the Church (and especially that Church of the Israelites) to know, according as it was likely they should haue then, or after, moie or lesse to doe with them. ^b Africanus hath reckoned the 72. by name. But how easie were it in these dayes to set downe 72. more, of differing Nations, both in Region and Language; and how little of the World was then knowne, shall presently be shewed. Besides, it may be a question, whether diuers of those, there mentioned, did not speake the same Language (as in Chaldæa, Syria, and Canaan) ^c with some diuersitie of Dialect, a little more then in our Northerne, Westerne, and Southerne English: Which may appeare, both by the pilgrimages of the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, in those parts (which had needed new interpreters, by that rule, in euery two or three dayes trauell, except themselues had bene almost miraculously skilfull in Languages) and by the Chaldæan and Syrian Monuments and Bookes, which some obserue to come nigh to the Hebrew. ^d D. Wyllet reprooueth Philoes opinion, That the Chalde and Hebrew was all one, because Daniel, an Hebrew, was set to learne the Chalde: or that the Syrian and Chalde, according to Mercerus opinion, was the same; yet grants, that in the first times the Syrian and Chalde little differed. ^e Scaliger a fit man to speake of Languages, who could speake so many) saith, as before is obserued, That in Assyria was the first, both man and Language, euen the same which thence passed with their Colonies into Syria and Canaan, where it remained pure, euen then when in Assyria it selfe it was corrupted by entercourse of strangers. Abraham spake this corrupted Syrian, which tooke place onely in the tracts of Euphrates, at the first: but after, both he and his posteritie vsed the Language of Canaan; so that Laban, whose kindred, countrie and language was the same with ^f Abrahams, yet spake another and differing language from that of Iacob, one calling that Galed, which the other calleth Iegarshadutha. Thus it appeareth by him, that the ancient Syrian, Assyrian and Chaldæan, were first which is now called Hebrew, because the Hebrewes obserued and retained it, and onely haue left bookes to vs written therein, (whom the Cananites called Hebrewes, as ^g Scaliger and Montanus affirme, because Abraham had passed ouer the Riuer Euphrates vnto them) but after degenerated first in the parts neere Euphrates, where it was first spoken: and when the Tyrians and Sidonians had the Empire of the Sea, by reason of their traffique, it proued impure there also, howsoeuer in the time of Elisa or Dido, the Phænicean or Punjike, which she carried into Africa, was pure Hebrew, as were also their letters. The later Carthaginian letters were read from the left hand to the right, as the Latine and Greek, but those from the right hand; yet not the same which Warres and traffique could not but further alter those Languages in continuance of time: which appeared most after the Captiuitie, when the Iewes spake not Hebrew, but Syrian, and that also in likelihood more and more by time altered.

b The olde French, and our old English are very like; both (in their original) Dutch.

Perhaps it was with these three Languages, as with the Frankes ^a Language, when they first seated themselues in Gallia, and that which is now called ^b French; or the Saxon and the present English: for there were no lesse mutations and transmutations, by times and warres, in those parts then in these. It seemeth therefore probable, that at the first diuision of Languages, they that most disagreed, did furthest separate themselues, and they that spake either the same, or neere in likeness to the same speech, obserued the same neighbourhood of Nation, as of speech; which, the names and words of the Phœnician, Syrian, Persian, Arabian, and Egyptian Languages testifie. The diuision of Tongues was about an hundred yeeres after the Flood, An. Mundi 1757. as Caluissus and Buntingus account.

c Of this see more Chap. 2.

Now that we haue spoken of the first Authors of the principall and first Nations, let vs suruey the Lands and Inheritance, which God gaue vnto them, which was the habitable Earth. This Earth, together with the Waters, make one Globe and huge Ball, resting on it selfe, supported by the Almighty hand of God, to the roundnesse whereof, the high mountaines in comparison of the whole, can bee small impediments, and are but ^c as a few motes or dust sticking to a ball. Posidonius, Eratosthenes, Hipparchus, Plinie, Ptolomey, and others, skilfull in Geographie, haue endeouored by Art to finde out the true quantitie hereof: and although there appeare difference in their summes, yet that is imputed rather to the diuersity of their furlongs, which some reckoned longer then others, then to their differing opinions. But neuer had they so certaine intelligence of the quantitie of the Earth, as in our time, by the Nauigations of ^d Spaniards, ^e English, and ^f Dutch, round about the same, is giuen vs; Art and Experience consulting, and conspiring together, to perfect the Science of Geographic. For whereas the Ancients diuided the world into three parts, ^g Asia, Africa, and Europe, and yet neuer knew the East and North parts of Asia, nor the South of Africa, nor the most Northerly parts of Europe: not onely these three are by Land and Sea farre more fully discouered, but also ^h three other parts, no lesse (if not much greater) then the former, are added to them; namely, America Mexicana, and America Peruiana, and Terra Australis, or the Land lying toward the South Pole. As for the seventh part, which some reckon vnder the North Pole, because we haue no relation but ⁱ from a Magician, a Frier of Oxford, called Nicholas de Linna, which might with as good conscience lie to vs, as by Art-Magicke take view of those Parts (otherwise it is not certainly knowne, whether it be ioyning to Asia, or whether it be Land or Sea) I therefore leaue it out in this diuision.

Europe is diuided ^k from Africke by the Mediterranean Sea; from Asia by the Egean and Euxine, Mæotis, Tanais, and a line from the fountains thereof Northwards: on the North and West parts washed with the Ocean; which running by the straits of Gibraltar, floweth along the Coasts of Africke, to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence passeth all alongst on the East-side thereof into the Arabian Gulfe, where, by a Necke of Land, it is encountered: This Necke, the Mediterranean, and Ocean, doe limit the bounds of Africa: The rest of the old World is Asia, America Mexicana, or North, and the South called Peruiana, are seuered by the narrow straits of Dariene, in other places compassed by the Sea: The South Continent is verie little knowne, and containeth the rest of the World, not bounded in the former limits. But in their particular places wee shall heare of each of them more fully.

It cannot be without some great worke of God, thus in the old and decrepit

Age of the World, to let it haue more perfect knowledge of it selfe; which wee hope, and pray, may be for the further enlargement of the Kingdome of CHRIST IESVS, and propagation of his Gospell. And, as in former times, in those then discouered parts, the Iewes were scattered, some violently, some willingly, through ASIA, AFRICA, and EVROPE, to vsheer the Gospell into those parts, and make way for that which the most of themselues reiecte: who knoweth, whether in the secret dispensation of Diuine Prouidence; which is a co-worker in euerie worke, able euen out of euill to bring good, the Donations of Popes, the Navigations of Papists, the preaching of Friers and Iesuits may be fore-runners of a further and truer manifestation of the Gospell, to the new-found Nations? for euen alreadie it is one good steppe of an Atheist and Infidell to become a Profelyte, although with some soyle: and againe, the Iesuites there cannot play the States-men, as in these parts, yea ^a (themselues in their Relations being witnesses) they rather take the Euangelicall courses of those, which heere they count Heretickes, and by laying open mens sinne through the fall, and diuine Iustice, onely by Christ satisfied, doe beate downe infidelitie with diligent Catechising: although vpon that golden foundation they build afterward their owne Hay and Stubble, with their racke of Confession, and rabble of Ceremonies, and (the most dangerous to new Conuerts) an exchanged Polytheisme in worshipping of Saints, Images, and the Host. But if God shall once shew mercie to Spaine, to make them truely Catholike, and, as a diuine Inquisitor condemne that diuellish Inquisition to perpetuall exile, how great a window may by that meanes be opened vnto this new World for their conuersion and reformation? And why may not the English Expedition & Piantation in Virginia, and the Navigations of other Protestants, helpe this way, if men respected not their owne Pride, Ambition and Couetousnesse, more then the truth and glorie of God? But he that by Fishers conuerted the old World, and turned the wisdom of the World into foolishnesse, subdued Scepters by preaching the Crosse, yea, by suffering it in himselfe and in his members: is able of those stones to raise vp children to Abraham, and that by the mouth of Babes and Sucklings, by weakest meanes, when it pleaseth him. Let vs therefore pray the Lord of the Haruest to send forth Labourers into these wide and spacious fields, ripe thereunto.

But to returne to our parts of the World, whence this meditation hath withdrawne me. The ancient ^b Geographers were ignorant of a great part of that threefold diuision: as appeareth by their owne Writings. The vse of the Loadstone, found out by John Gou of Melfi, an Italian (or as ^c Bellonius obserueth, by one Flavius, but Albertus Magnus was the first that writ of the nature of it) was a great and necessarie helpe to further Discoueries, especially after that Henrie Sonne of John the first, King of Portugall; ^d began to make voyages of discouerie vpon the Coast of Africa, and John the second seconded that Enterprise, and vsed the helpe of Mathematicians, Roderigo and Ioseph his Physicians, and Martin Bohemus, by whom the Astrolabe was applied to the Art of Nauigation, and benefit of the Mariner, before vsed onely in Astronomie. This John also sent men of purpose into Arabia, and Aethiopia, and other Countries of the East, to learne further knowledge thereof. From these beginnings, daily encreasing, hath Nauigation (first in Portugall, and by degrees in other European Nations) by the helpe of Astronomicall rules growne to her present perfection, and by it, Geographic. And if the longitude of places might as easily be found out as the latitude, which our Countreman Master Linton made ^e promise of, we should yet grow to better knowledge in those Sciences, and of the World by them. Moreover, as the Expedition of Alexander, and those flourishing Monarchies in Asia, brought some knowlege thereof to the Ancients: So the Histories of later times, but especially the great Trauels by Land of Marcus Paulus, Odoricus, Will. de Rubruquis, Ioannes de Plano Carpini, our Countreman Mandenile, and others, before this skill of Nauigation, haue giuen much light to the knowledge of the in-land Countries of Asia, which we are first to speake of.

Also the Geographical tearmes of Littus, Fretum, Insula, Sinus, Continens, Promontorium, Isthmus, that is, Shores, Straits, Islands, Bayes; Continent, Capes or Headlands, Neckes of Land, and such like: All these (I say) and other things of like nature, needfull to this kinde of knowledge, the studious shall finde in those Authors which teach the Principles of Astronomie and Geographie, with the vse of Globes or Mappes, as Mr. Blundenile, Mr. Hues and others ^b.

My intent is not to teach Geographie, but to bestow on the studious of Geographie, a Historie of the World, so to giue him flesh vnto his bones, and vse vnto his Theoric or Speculation, whereby both that skill may be confirmed, and a further and more excellent obtained. Geographie without Historie seemeth a carkaffe without life and motion: c Historie without Geographie moueth, but in mouing wandreth as a vagrant, without certaine habitation. And whereas Time and Place are twinnes and vnseparable companions, in the chiefe Historie^s to set downe the true time of chiefe Accidens, will adde much light to both; a great taske in one Countrey: but to take vp the whole World on my shoulders, which haue not the strength either of Atlas or Hercules to beare it; and in the whole to obserue the description of Places, order of Times, and the Historie of Actions and Accidents, especially Religions (ollisobar & a triplex, thrice happie he that could happily atchieue it) I confesse beyond my abilitie exactly to performe; but with the wisest, I hope that the haughtines of the Attempt, in a thing so full of varietie and hardnesse, shall rather purchase pardon to my slippes, then blame for my rashnesse. And how can I but often slip, that make a perambulation ouer the World, that see with others eyes, that tell of matters past so many Ages before I had a being. Yet such is the necessitie of such a Historie, either thus, or not at all. But as neere as I can, I purpose to follow the best euidence, and to propound the Truth: my fault (where it is worst) shall be rather mendacia dicere, then mentiri, and yet the Talef-man shall be set by the Tale, the Authors name annexed to his Historie, to shield me from that imputation.

And first we must begin with ASIA, to which the first place is due, as being the place of the first Men, first Religion, first Cities, Empires, Arts: where the most things mentioned in Scripture were done; the place where Paradise was seated; the Arke rested; the Law was giuen; and whence the Gospell proceeded: the place which did beare Him in his flesh, that by his Word beareth vp all things.

Asia (after ^d some) is so called of Asia, the daughter of Oceanus and Thetis; which was wife to Iapetus, mother of Prometheus: Others fetch this name from Asius the sonne of Manans; both with like certaintie and credit. It is greater then Europe and Africa: yea, the Islands thereof are larger, if they were put together, then all Europe. It is compassed with the Easterne, Indian, and Scythian, Oceans, on three parts : on the West it hath the Arabian Gulfe, that necke of Land which diuiddeth it from Africa, the Mediterranean, Aegean, Pontike Seas, the Lake Mæotis, Tanais, with an imagined line from thence to the Bay of S. Nicholas. Some make it yet larger, and make Nilus to diuide it from Africa, but with lesse reason. Taurus diuiddeth it in the midst: On the North side is that which is called Asia interior: on the South is Asia exterior. More vnequall is that diuision into Asia the greater and the lesse, this being lesse indeed, then that it should sustaine a member in that diuision. Io. Barrius diuiddeth it into nine parts, Ortelius into siue, Maginus into seuen, which are these: First, That part of Tartaria, betwixt Muscouia, the Northerne Ocean, the Riuer Ob, and the Lake Kytai, and a line thence drawne to the Caspian Sea, and that Isthmus which is betwixt that and the Ponrike Sea: secondly, the great Chams Country, from thence to the Easterne Sea, betwixt the frozen Sea and the Caspian: thirdly, That which is subiect to the Turke, all from Sarmatia and Tartaria Southwards, betweene Tigris and the Mediterranean Sea: fourthly, The Persian Kingdome, betweene the Turke, Tartar, India, and the Red Sea: fifthly, India, within and beyond Ganges, from Indus to Cantan: sixthly, The Kingdome of China: seuenthly, The Islands. These Diuisions are not so exact as may bee wished, because of that varietie and vncertainie in those Kingdomes. Many things doth Asia yeeld, not ellsewhere to be had; Myrrhe, Frankincense, Cinnamon, Cloues, Nutmegs, Mace, Pepper, Muske, and other like, besides the chiefest Jewels. It hath also mineralls of all sorts: It nourisheth Elephants, Camels, and many other Beasts, Serpents, Fowles, wilde and tame, as in the ensuing Discourse, in their due places, shall appeare; yet doth it not nourish such monstrous shapes of men, as fabulous Antiquitie fained. It brought forth that Monster of irreligion, Mahomet; whose Sect, in diuers Sects, it fostereth with long continuance of manifold Superstitions. It hath now those great Empires of the Turke, Persian, Mogore, Cathayan, Chinois: it had somerimes the Parthian, and before that, the Persian, Median, Assyrian, Scythian: and first (as it seemeth) before them all, the Babylonian Empire vnder Nimrod, which is therefore in the next place to be spoken of.

CHAP. X.

Of Babylonia, the originall of Idolatrie: and the Chaldeans Antiquities before the Flood, as Berosus hath reported them.

Confusion caused diuision of Nations, Regions, and Religions. Of this confusion (whereof is already spoken) the Citie, and thereof this Countrey tooke the name. ^a Plinie maketh it a part of Syria, which he extendeth from hence to Cilicia. ^b Strabo addeth, as farre as the Pontike Sea. But it is vsually reckoned an entire countrey of it selfe, which ^c Ptolemey doth thus bound. On the North it hath Mesopotamia. on the West Arabia Deserta; Sufiana on the East; on the South, part of Arabia, and the Persian Gulfe. Luke maketh Babylonia ^d a part of Mesopotamia: Ptolemey more strictly diuiddeth them: whereunto also agreeth the interpretation ^e of the Land of Shinar, that it was the lower part of Mesopotamia, containing Chaldaea and Babylon, lying vnder the Mount Sangara. In this Countrey was built the first Citie which we reade of after the Flood, by the vngatefull world, moued thereunto (as some thinke) by Nimrod, the son of Cush, nephew of Cham. For as Cains posteritie before the Flood, were called the sonnes of Men, as more sauouring the things, of men then of God: more industrious in humane inuentions, then religious deuotions: so by Noahs Curse it may appeare, and by the Nations that descended of him, that Cham was the first Author, after the Flood, of irreligion. Neither is it likely, that he which derided his old father, whom Age, Holinesse, Fatherhood, Benefits, and trice greatest Function of Monarchie, Priesthood, and Prophecie, should haue taught him to reuerence: That he (I say) which at once could breake all these bonds and chaines of Nature and Hu-manitie, would be held with any bonds of Religion; or could haue an eye of Faith to see him which is inuisible, hauing put out his eyes of Reason and Ciuilitie. Had he feared God, had hee reuerenced man, had hee made but profession of these things in some hypocriticall shew, he could not so easily haue sitten down at ease in that Chaire of Scorning, whence we reade not that euer he arose by repentance. From this Cham came Nimrod, the mightie hunter before the Lord; not of innocent beasts, but of men, compelling them to his subiection, although Noah and Sem were yet aliue, with many other Patriarchs.

As for Noah, the fabling Heathen, it is like, deified him. The Berosus of fabling Annius, calleth him Father of the Gods, Heauen, Chaos, the Soule of the World.
Iannus his double face might seeme to haue arisen hence, of Noahs experience of both Ages; before and after the flood. The fable of Saturnus cutting off his fathers priui-ties might take beginning of that act, for which Cham was cursed. Sem is supposed to be that Melchisedech King of Salem, the figure of the Lord, and the propagator of true Religion; although euen in his posteritie it failed, in which Abrahams father, as witnesseth Ioshua, serued other Gods. Iaphets pietie causeth vs to perswade our selues good things of him; Cham & his posteritie we see the authors of ruine. Philo and Methodius (so are the two bookes called, but falsely) tell, That in these dayes they began to diuine by Starres, and to sacrifice their children by Fire; which element Nimrod compelled men to worship; and that to leaue a name to posteritie, they engraued their names in the bricke wherewith Babel was builed. Abram refusing to communicate with them (and good cause, for k he was not yet borne) was cast into their Brick-kill, and came out (long after from his mothers wombe) without harme. Nabor, Lot, and other his fellowes, nine in number, saued themselues by flight. Others adde, that Aram, Abrams brotlier, was done to death for refusing to worship the Fire. Qui Banium non odit, amet tua carmina Meui.

To come to truer and more certaine reports, Moses saith, That the beginning of Nimrods Kingdome was Babel, and Erech,^m and Accad, and Calne, which three some interpret Edesa, Nisibis, Callinifum. And whereas commonly it is translated in the next words, Out of that land came Assur, and built Ninue, Tremellius and Iunius read it, Out of this land he (Nimrod) went into Assur or Assyria, and built Ninue and Re-hoboth, Calah, and Resen. But ⁿ most vsually this is vnderstood of Assur the sonne of Sem; who disclaiming Nimrods tyrannie, built Ninue, which after became the chiefe Citie of the Assyrian Empire, to which Babylon it selfe was subiected not long after. Xenophon de Equinoctis (if his authoritie be current) saith, That the eldest of the chief families were called Saturni, their fathers had to name Caelum, their wiues Rhea; and out of a pillar, erected by Semiramis to Ninus, alledgeth this inscription; My father was Iupiter Belus, my grandfather Saturnus Babylonicus, my great grandfather Sa-turnus Ethiops, who was sonne of Saturnus Aegyptius, to whom Caelus Phœnix Ogyges was father. Ogyges is interpreted Noah, therefore called Phœnix, because of his habitation (as is thought) in Phœnicia, not farre from whence, in Ierusalem, Sem raig-ned. Saturnus Aegyptius may be the name of Cham, of whose name Egypt is in Scripture tearmed the land of Cham. Saturnus Ethiops is Chush; Nimrod, Babylonicus, the father of Belus, who begat Ninus. But this cannot be altogether true. For Ninue hath greater antiquitie then Nimrods nephew (howsoeuer the Greeke Histories ascribe this to Ninus, and Babylon to his wife Semiramis) except we say, that by them these two Cities formerly built, were enlarged and erected to that magnificence, which with the growth of the Assyrian Empire they after obtained.

P. Eusebius in the first booke of his Chronicle attributeth the originall of Idolatrie to Serug, the Father of Nabor. r Beda saith, In the daies of Phaleg Temples were built, and the Princes of Nations adored for Gods. The same hath Isidore, Epiphanius re-ferreth it to Serug; and addeth. That they had not grauen Images of Wood or Met-tall, but pictures of men; and Thara the father of Abraham, was the first Author of Images. The like hath Suidas. Hugo de S. Victor saith Nimrod brought men to ido-latrie

latrie, and caused them to worship the fire, because of the fiery nature and operation of the Sunne, which error the Chaldeans afterwards followed: These times, till Abram they called Scythismus. The reason of their Idolatrie Eusebius alleadgeth, That they thus kept remembrance of their Warriours, Rulers, and such as had achieved noblest enterprises and worthiest exploits in their life time. Their posterity ignorant of that their scope (which was, to obserue their memorials which had bene Authors of good things, and because they were their fore-fathers) worshipped them as heauenly Deities, and sacrificed to them. Of their God-making or Canonization, this was the manner: In their sacred bookes or Kalendars they ordained, That their names should be written after their death, and a Feast should be solemnized according to the same time, saying, That their soules were gone to the Isles of the blessed, and that they were no longer condemned or burned with fire. These things lasted to the daies of Thera; who (saith Suidas) was an Image-maker, & propounded his Images (made of diuerse matter) as Gods to be worshipped: but Abram broke his fathers Images. From Saruch the Author, and this Practise, Idolatrie passed to other Nations: Suidas addeth specially into Greece; for they worshipped Hellen, a Gyant of the posterity of Iapheth, a partner in the building of the Tower.

Not vnlike to this, we reade the causes of Idolatrie in the booke of Wisdom (supposed to be written by Philo, but, because the substance is Salomons, professing and bearing his name) which of all the Apocrypha-Scripture sustaineth least exception, attaineth highest commendation; When a father mourned grieuously for his sonne that was taken away suddenly, he made an Image for him that was once dead, whom now he worshippeth as a God, and ordained to his seruants Ceremonies and Sacrifices. A second cause he alleadgeth, viz. the tyrannie of men, whose Images they made and honoured, that they might by all means flatter him that was absent, as though he had bin present. A third reason followeth; the ambitious skill of the workeman, that through the beauty of the worke the multitude being allured, took him for a God, which a little before was honored but as a man. The like affirmeth Polydore de inuentoribus, alledding Cyprian de Idolis for his author. Lactantius (as before is shewed) maketh that the Etymologie of the word Superstitio, Quia superstitem memoriam defunctorum colebant, aut quia parentibus suis superstites celebrabant imagines eorum domi, tanquam Deos penates; either because they honored with such worship the suruiuing memory of their dead ancestors; or because suruiuing & out-living their ancestors, they celebrated their Images in their houses, as household Gods. Such authors of new rites and deifiers of dead men they called Superstitious: but those which followed the publikly-receiued and ancient Deities, were called Religious, according to that verse of Virgil. Vana superstitio veterumq; ignare deorum. But by this rule (saith Lactant.) we shall find all superstitious which worship false Gods, and them only religious which worship the one and true God. The same Lactant saith, That Noah cast off his son Cham for his wickednes, and expelled him. He abode in that part of the earth which now is called Arabia, called (saith he) of his name Canaan, and his posterity Canaanites. This was the first people which was ignorant of God, because their founder and Prince receiued not of his father the worship of God. But first of all other the Egyptians began to behold and adore the heauenly bodies: and because they were not covered with houses for the temperature of the ayre, and that Region is not subiect to clouds, they obserued the motions and eclipses of the stars, and whiles they often viewed them more curiously, fell to worship them. After that, they inuented the monstrous shapes of beasts, which they worshipped. Other men scattered through the world admiring the Elements, the Heauen, Sun, Land, Sea, without any Images & Temples worshipped them, and sacrificed to them sub dio; till in proesse of time they erected Temples and Images, to their most puissant Kings, and ordained vnto them sacrifices & incense. so wandring from the knowledge of the true God, they became Gentiles. Thus farre Lactantius. And it is not vnlike that they performed this to their Kings, either in flatterie, or feare of their power, or because of the benefits which they receiued from them, this being (saith Pliny) the most ancient kinde of thankfulnessse, to reckon their benefactors among the Gods. The first that is named to haue set vp Images, and worship to the dead, was Ninus, who when his father Belus was dead, made an Image to him, and gaue priuiledge of sanctuary to all offenders that resorted to this Image: wherupon, moued with a gracelesse gratefulnesse, they performed thereunto diuine honours. And this example was practised after by others. And thus of Bel or Belus began this Imagerie, and for this cause (saith Lyra) they called their Idols Bel, Baal, Beel-zebub, according to the diuersitie of languages. Cyrillus calleth him Arbelus, and saith, That before the flood was no Idolatry amongst men, but it had beginning after in Baby'on, in which, Arbelus (next after whom raigned Ninus) was worshipped. Tertullian out of the booke of Enoch, before mentioned, is of opinion, That Idolatry was before the flood. Thus to continue the memorie of mortall men and in admiration of the immortall heauenly Lights, together with the tyrannie of Princes, and policies of the Priests, began this worshipping of the creature; with the contempt of the Creator: which how they increased by the mysteries of their Philosophers, the fabling of their Poets, the ambition of Potentates, the Superstition of the vulgar, the gainfull collusion of their Priests, the cunning of Artificers, and aboue all, the malice of the Diuels, worshipped in those Idols, there giuing answers and Oracles, and receiuing sacrifices; the Histories of all Nations are ample witnesses. And this Romane Babylon now Tyrant of the West, is the heire of elder Babylon (sometime Ladie of the East) in these deuotions, that then and still Babylon might be the mother of Whoredomes and all Abominations. To which aptly agree the Paralels of Baby'on and Rome in Orosius, the Empire of the one ceasing, when the other began first to haue a being; which he further prosecuteth in many particulars.

But before we prosecute these Babylonian affaires after the flood, it shall not be amisse to shew here the Chaldaean fables of Antiquities before the flood, out of Berosus a Chaldaean Priest, which liued in the time of Alexander. Polyhistor citeth out of Berosus his first booke this report of himselfe; and Tatianus saith he was the Priest of Belus, and wrote his Chaldaean storie to Anticchus, the third after Seleucus, in three bookes. His name by Scaligers interpretation signifieth the sonne of Osee.

Alorus raigned the space of tenne Sari (Sarus with them is three thousand six hundred yeares) Alasparus three Sari; Amelus thirteene Sari; Amenus twelue; Metalanus eighteene; Daorus tenne; Edorachus eighteene; Amphis tenne; Otiartes eight; Xixuthrus eighteene: in his time, as is said before, the flood happened. The whole space is an hundred and twentie Sari, which amounteth to foure hundred thirtie two thousand yeares. This I thought not vnfit (although incredible) to report from Berosus, both because my scope is to declare as well false as true Religions (it being not Theologicall but Historiall, or rather Historically Theologicall) and because the Ancients, Cicero, Lactantius, Augustine, haue mentioned this monstrous Computation of the Chaldaean Kalendar, which yet they rack higher, to foure hundred threescore and ten thousand yeares. Here you haue the particulars out of Apollodorus and Abidenus, which both borrowed them of Berosus. Polyhistor addeth, That there came one out of the red Sea, called Oannes and Annedotus a Monster (otherwhere like a fish, his head, feet and hands like a man, as saith Photius, but Al. Polyhistor ascribeth two heads, one of a fish, and the other of a man) the Image whereof was vnto his times reserued. This Monster liued without meat, and taught them the knowledge of Letters and all Arts, buildings of Citties, foundations of Temples, enacting of Lawes, Geometry and Husbandry, and all necessaries to mans life. Afterwards he returned to the Sea; and after him appeared other such monsters. Foure of them came out of the Sea, saith Abidenus, when Daos (whom Apollodorus calleth Daorus) raigned; their names were Euedocus, Eneugamus, Enaboulus, Anementus. Pentabilus (it seemeth) was then their chiefe Cittie. That Oannes the first did write of the first beginning: That all was darkenesse and water, in which liued monstrous creatures, hauing two formes; men with two wings, and some with foure; with one body two heads, one of a man, and another of a woman, with the priuities of both sexes: others with hornes and legges like Goats; some with Horse feete; some like Centaures, the former part Men the after part Horses; Bulls also headed like Men and Dogges, with foure bodies, &c. with many monstrous mixtures and confusions of creatures; whose Images were kept in the Temple of Belus. Ouer all these ruled a woman, named Omorca, which signifieth the Sea, and by like signification of Letters, the Moone. Then came Belus and cut her in twaine, and made the one halfe of her Land, the other Heauen, and the creatures therein appeared. This Belus made Men and Beasts, the Sunne, Moone, and Planets: these things reporteth Berosus in his first Booke; in the second he telleth of the Kings (before mentioned) which raigned till the flood: After the flood also the same Polyhistor out of him sheweth; That Sisuthrus hauing by Saturns warning before, built an Arke (as is before said) and laide vp all monuments of Antiquity in Sipparis. a Cittie dedicated to the Sunne, and now with all his world of creatures escaped the flood, going out of the Arke did sacrifice to the Gods, and was neuer seene more. But they heard a voyce out of the ayre, giuing them this precept, To be religious. Hi; wife, daughter, and ship-master were partakers with him of this honour. He said vnto them, the countrey where they now were was Armenia, and hee would come againe to Babylon, and that it was ordained, that from Sipparis they should receiue Letters, and communicate the same to men: which they accordingly did. For hauing sacrificed to the Gods, they went to Babylon and digged out the Letters, writings, or bookes, and building many Citties, and founding Temples, did againe repaire Babylon. Thus farre out of Alexander Polyhistor, a large fragment of the true Berosus.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Cittie and Countrey of Babylon: their sumptuous walls, Temples, and Images.

Leauing these Antiquities, rotten with age, let vs come to take better view of this stately Cittie. ^l Herodotus, ^m Philostratus, ⁿ Pliny, and ^o Solinus report concerning the compasse of Babylon, That the walls contained 480. furlongs, situate in a large plaine foure square, inuironed with a broad and deepe ditch full of water. ^p Diodor; saith, That there were but so many furlongs as are dayes in the year, so that euery day a furlong of the wall was built, and 300000. worke-men employed therein. ^q Strabo ascribeth to the compasse 380. furlongs: and ^r Curtius 358. (ninety furlongs thereof inhabited, the rest allotted to tyllth and husbandry.) Concerning the thicke- nesse of the walls, or the height, they also disagree. The first Authors assume the height two hundred cubites, the thicke- nesse ^s fiftie. They which say least, cut off halfe that summe. Well might ^t Aristotle esteeme it a Countrey rather than a Cittie, being of such greatnesse that some part of it was taken three dayes before the other heard of it. ^u Lycanus out of Hierome vpon Esay, affirmeth, that the foure squares thereof contained sixteene miles a peece, wherein euery man had his Vineyard and Garden according to his degree wherewith to maintaine his family in tiue of siege. The fortresse or Tower thereof he saith was that which had been built by the sonnes of Noah. And not without cause was it reckoned among the ^x Wonders of the world. It had a hundred brazen gates, and two hundred and fiftie Towers. It was indeede a mother of wonders: so many miracles of Art accompanied the same, the works partly of Semiramis, partly of Nabuchodonosor; which I would desire the Reader to stay his hastie pace, and take notice of Euery where I shal not, I can not, be so tedious in these kinds of relations. ^y Diodor. thus addeth of Semiramis; she built also a bridge of 5. furlongs. The wals were made of brick & asphaltū, a stony kind of pitch which that country yeildeth, deth. She built two Pallaces, which might serue both for ornament and defence; one in the west, which intironed sixtie furlongs, with high brick walls: within that a lesse, and within that also a lesse circuit, which containeth the Tower. These were wrought sumptuously with Images of beasts, and therein also was game and hunting of beasts: this had 3. gates. The other in the East, on the other side the Riuer, contained but 30. furlongs. In the lower country of Babylonia she made a great square lake, containing 200. furlongs; the walls whereof were of bricke, and that pitchy mortar; the depth 35. foote. In the midst of the Citty she erected a Temple to Iupiter Belus (saith Herodotus) with brazen gates (now in his time remaining) fouresquare: each square contayning 2. furlongs, in the midst whereof is a solid Tower, of the height and thickness of a furlong: vpon this another, and so one higher then another, eight in number. In the highest Tower is a Chappell, and therein a faire bed covered, and a table of golde, without any Image. Neyther, as the Chaldaean Priests affirme, doth any abide here in the night, but one woman, whom this God shall appoint. They say the God himselfe there lieth. In regard of this exceeding height, Diodorus affirmes, that the Chaldaens did thereon make their obseruations of the Starres. Hee also addeth, that Semiramis placed in the top three golden statues; one of Iupiter forty foot long, weighing a thousand Babylonian talents; till his time remayning; another of Ops, weighing as much, sitting in a golden throne, and at her feet two Lions, and iust by, huge serpents of siluer, each of thirty talents: the third Image was of Iuno standing, in weight 800. talents. Her right hand held the head of a serpent, her left a scepter of stone. To all these was common, 1 table of gold 40. foot long, in breadth 12. in weight 50. talents. There were also 2. standing cups of thirtie talents, and two vessels for perfume of like value: three other vessels of golde, whereof one dedicated to Iupiter, weighed 1200. Babylonian talents: (euery Babylonian talent is said to contain seuen thousand drachma Attica, sixtie three pounds, nine ounces, and an halfe, and halfe a quarter Troy weight.) All these the Persian Kings tooke away.

Without the Temple, by Herodotus testimonie, was a golden Altar, and another huge one besides, for their solemne sacrifices, the other being not to be polluted with bloud, except of sucking things. In that greater the Chaldaens burnt yearly in their sacrifices a hundred thousand talents of Libanotus. One statue of gold twelue cubits high, Darius, affecting spared; but Xerxes both tooke it, and slew the Priest that forbade him. I might here also tell of those Pensile gardens, borne vp on arches, foure square, each square contayning foure hundred foote: filled on the roose with earth, wherein grew great trees and other plants. The entrance was (as it were) a hill: the arches were builded one vpon another in conuenient height, still increasing as they ascended: the highest which bare the walls were fiftie cubites high, and twelue in breadth: There were within these arches, Innes. There was also a conueyance of water to the watering thereof. This Garden was made long after Semiramis time by a King, which herein seemed to lord it ouer the Elements, and countermand Nature, being himselfe the seruant of his wiues appetite, who in this lowly valley wherein Babylon stood, would faine haue some representation of her owne hilly and mountainous countrey of Media.

This King was Nabuchodonosor, as witnesseth Berosus in Iosephus, who hauing conquered Egypt, Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, enriched the Temple of Belus with the spoyles, and added a new Citty to the olde, without the same. And prouiding that the enemy might not after turne the course of the riuer, and approach to the Citty, he compassed the inner Citty with three walls, & the vetter Citty with as many, these of brick, those also with bitumen, or pitchie slime of that countrey, adding thereunto stately gates. And neere his fathers pallace he built another more sumptuous: and this hee did in fifteene dayes. Therein he rayfed stone-works like vnto mountains, and planted the same with all manner of trees. He made also a pensile Garden. Many more things (saith Iosephus) doth Berosus adde, and blameth the Greecke writers for ascribing the building of Babylon to Semiramis an Assyrian. This fragment of Berosus, cited by Iosephus, doth well serue vs to cleare both the holy and prophane Historie.

In the one, Daniel^a induceth Nabuchodonosor walking in his royall pallace in Babel, with words answerable to his pride, Is not this great Babel that I have builded for the house of the kingdome, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my maiestie? His words (euē in the speaking) were written in the Booke of God, and an enditement thereof framed in the highest Court; where hee was adiudged presently the losse of Reason, which he had thus abused, Till he knew that the most High bare rule ouer the kingdome of men, giuing the same to whomsoeuer he will. Well might he say he had built it; in regard of this new City and pallace, with other miracles thereof: with more truth the some Expositors, which accuse him herein of a lie, for arrogating that which Semiramis did. His wife also, for whose loue he did this, was (as ^b Scaliger thinketh) Nitocris, mentioned by Herodotus; who also coniectureth that she was the daughter of Aliattes, that Daniel intendeth her, Dan. 5: 10. that she administrated the kingdome in the time of her husbands madnesse, and in the times also of Euilmerodach and Balsasar: a woman no whit inferiour to Semiramis; that it may bee said, Semiramis began Babylon, and Nitocris finished and perfected it, finishing and perfecting those workes which Nabuchodonosor her husband before the time of his madnesse had begunne.

And for Semiramis, profane histories^c generallie make her the founder of this City, and among others^d Annius his Berosus, who (contrarie to this fragment of the true Berosus in Iosephus) saith, that Semiramis made Babylon of a towne, a great City, that she might be rather esteemed the builder thereof, then enlarger. Nimrod had before built the Tower, but not finished it, and did not^e found the citie, which hee had designed and set out, and Belus his sonne had^f erected those designed foundations rather of the towne then the city Babylon. Moses testifieth that at the first building, they were (by confusion of language) forced to cease their worke, leauing a name of their shame, in stead of that renoune & name, which they had promised to themselves. It may be that Semiramis did amplifie this: and happilie so did other Assirian & Babylonian kings, as Augustine & Abydenus affirme. Hanc quidam putant condidisse Babylona quam quidem potuit instaurare. Likewise Abidenus saith, that the wals being by inundation fallen, were built againe by Nabucodonosor, and agreeth in other things with Berosus. But the Græcians are children, in comparison of ancient Historie, and little of this matter can we affirme on their testimonie; their first Historian Herodotus liuing long after this age in the time of the Persian monarchie. Howsoeuer; Nabucodonosor is he which (by diuine and humane testimonie) there established that golden head of the Image, the seat of the Babylonian monarchie. raising it to that high top of worldlie excellence. Yea Daniel speaketh of one more sumptuous Image, then any mentioned by Herodotus & Diodorus set vp by this king three score & cubits high, and six broad, enioyning a Catholike and vniuersall idolatry thereunto, which the three Saints Shadrach, Mesbach, and Abednego refused and in a fire triall, were found both Martyrs and Confessors.^h Lyranus, Hugo Cardinalis, Pererius, Pintus, Pellicanus, thinke that Nabucodonosor set vp this Image for himselfe, requiring diuine honour to be giuen vnto it, as Caligula since amongst the Romans: but by his expostulation, Will ye not serue my God? and the like answer of those three men; We will not serue thy Gods, it seemeth to haue been consecrated to Bel or some other Babylonian deitie. Which because it was erected in the plaine of Dura (this is thought to be Dera in Susiana mentioned by Ptolomey)ⁱ Daniel might haue good occasion of absence from thence, whose office was to^{*} sit in the gate of the king, at Babylon.

^k Sirabo out of Megasthenes (whom Annius hath set out as truly as he hath done Berosus, saue that he stutted at the name, and called him^l Metasthenes) saith of this King whom he nameth Nabacodrosor, more esteemed of the Chaldeans then Hercules, that he came in his expeditions as farre as the Pillars of Hercules (the straights of Gibraltar) and as farre as Tearcon the Aethiopian, and that he conducted an armie out of Iberia into Thracia, and Pontus. This Tearcon is he whome the Scripture calleth Tirhaka, which warted against Senacherib.

¹ But to returne to our pensile Gardens, which Diodorus and Curtius attribute to a Syrian King (which was no other but this Conqueror of Syria, ^m Nabuchodonosor) and both they and Strabo doe at large describe and account among the worlds wonders, as were also the Bridge and the Walls of the Citie. And no lesse wonderfull was that Obeliske, or Needle: a square stone made spire-fashion, cut by Semiramis out of the mountaines of Armenia, one hundred and fiftie foot long, and four and twentie thick, on many Waines brought to the Riuer, thence to Babylon, and there erected. Plinie testifieth, that the Temple of Belus still remained in his daies: and that Belus was inventor of Astronomie.

This Temple was the same with the Sepulchre of Belus, which Strabo saith, was rased by Xerxes: yet not so, but that Alexander would haue repaired it; but in regard that it asked so much labour and time (for only the cleansing of the earth required ten thousand men two moneths worke) hee was not able to finish that which he had begunne. In the description he saith lesse then Hierodotus, that it was a Pyramis, or spire-worke, a furlong or sixe hundred foot in height, and each of the foure squares containing as much. Arrianus ⁿ affirmeth that Alexander had the same purpose of other Temples also. The Temples, saith he, which Xerxes had ouerthrowne, he commanded to be repaired, and among them the Temple of Belus, whom the Babylonians with singular Religion worship. ^o At his returne homewards, Belus in thankfulness (it seemeth) sent his Chaldæan Priests to meet him, and forbid him to enter the Citie, as he loued his life, whose Oracle Alexander contemning, there ended his dayes. The cause why he listened not to them, is thought a mistrust that hee conceiued of the Chaldæans. For whereas Xerxes, at his returne out of Greece, had rased this and all other sacred places of the Babylonians: Alexander minding the reparaire hereof, hauing already remoued the rubbish, thought with his whole Armie to atchieue this enterprize. But the reuenue which the Kings of Assyria had left for the maintenance of this Temple-sacrifices, after the ouerthrow thereof, was shared among the Chaldæans; which they by this attempt were like to loose, and therefore were willing to want his presence.

This Temple some suppose to be that Tower of Babel, mentioned by Moses, Gen. 11. and supposed still in part to remaine. For about seuen or eighr miles from Bagdat, as men passe from Felugia a Towne on Euphrates, whereon old Babylon stood, to this new Citie on Tigris (a worke of eighteen houres, and about fortie miles space) there is seene a ruinous shape of a shapelesse heape and building, in circuit lesse then a mile (some say, but a quarter of a mile) about the height of the stone-worke of Pauls steeple in London: the bricks being sixe inches thicke, eight broad, and a foot long (as master Allen measured) with Mats of Canes laied betwixt them, yet remaining as sound, as if they had bene laid within a yeares space. Thus master Eldred, and master Fitch, master Cartwright also, and my friend master Allen, by testimonie of their owne eyes, haue reported. But I can scarce thinke it to bee that Tower or Temple, because Authors place it in the middest of old Babylon, and neare Euphrates. Whereas this is nearer Tigris: Isidore affirmeth, that first after the flood Nimrod the Giant founded Babylon, which Semiramis the Assyrian Queene enlarged, and made the wall with Brick and Bitumen. The height of the Tower was five thousand one hundred seuentie foure paces. ^p Verstegan addeth, the passage to mount vp was very wide and great, winding about on the outside: the middle and inward part for the more strength being all massie: and by Cart, Camels, Dromedaries, Horses, and Asses, the carriages were borne and drawne vp: and by the way were many Lodgings and Hosteries both for man and beast: yea fields also for graine and pasture; if yee can beleue it. But it is now, as we see, come to confusion. Also there is yet beyond Tigris some ruines of a Temple, which is called the Temple of Bel, with high yron gates, as is reported.

Asie Com. 4.

Dominicus Nig ^q hath these words: Seleucia in processe of time hath changed her state and her site. For it was on the westerne banke of Tigris, which a Cut from Euphrates flowed into; in which place are now seene the ruines thereof, where the shepheards shepheards haue erected them cottages: and on the Easterne banke haue the Barbarians built the Citie and called it Bacthad, right ouer against the old. If this be true, vaine is the conceipt of credulous Trauellers, which suppose those ruines to bee the monuments of Babylons buriall, and confound againe this later world, with the reports of Babels Tower.

The Bitumen or slimie pitch which they vsed in stead of Morter in their building, is, as Dominicus Niger v out of Trogus reporteth, common in those parts. Herodotus telleth, that eight dayes journey from Babylon was another Citie, named Is, with a small rill of the same name, which runneth into Euphrates, carrying thither (as tribute) much of this slimie matter. Niger mentioneth one place, where out of a clift or opening of the earth, proceedeth such a stinke, that it killeth the Birds which flie ouer it. And at this day, two daies journey from Bagdat at a place called Ait, is a mouth continually throwing forth boiling pitch, therefore by the Moores called Hell-mouth, which runneth into a great field alwayes full thereof: and herewith they pitch their boats. The water, as my friend master Allen (who liued in Bagdat diuers Moneths) told me, is warme and accounted medicinable, for which cause he hath drunke largely thereof: the liquid pitch floateth on the top of the water, like clouted creame, to vse his owne phraie.

rK. Fitch. Hak. Voy. 10. 2.

The Countrie of Babylonia hath bene the most fruitfull in the world, yeelding ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred increase: the blades of the Wheat and Barly about foure fingers broad. Plinie, somewhat otherwise: They cut (saith he) or mow their corne twice, and feede it a third time in Babylonia, otherwise it would bee nothing but blade: and yet so their barren land yeeldeth fiftie, their best an hundred increase. Tigris and Euphrates ouer-flow it, but bring not fatnesse to the soile, as Nilus in Egypt, but rather cleanse that superfluous fatnesse which naturally it hath.

t Plin. Nat. hist. lib. 18. cap. 17.

The soile is of a rofennie clay, saith master Allen, and would still retaine in likelihood his ancient fertilitie, if it were watered with like diligent husbandrie: In digging it yeeldeth corrupt waters, sauouring of that pitchie slime. In the Citie anciently, it seemeth that in every Garden of any Citizen of fort, were rills made out of the Riuer. The ruines from the Tower asore said to Bagdat (which some call Babylon) and beyond on the other side of the Riuer, containe twentie two miles, yet to be seen: which happily are the ruines, not of old Babylon, so much, as of the Neighbor townes here built, Seleucia, Vologefocerta, and Ctesiphon: which I rather thinke, because they reach beyond Tigris aswell as on this side.

To returne to the religious places in Babylon: Calins Rhodiginus tells, that in the Temple of Apollo, was found a golden Chest of great antiquitie. which being broken by some accident, thence issued a pestilent vapour, that infected not those alone which were present. but the neighbouring Nations, as farre as Parthia. Ammianus Marcellinus hath the like Historic of the Image of Apollo Chameus at Seleucia, which was brought to Rome, and there placed by the Priests in the Temple of Apollo Palatinus: and when as a certaine hole which the Chaldean Wise-men had by Art stopped, through the couetousnesse of certaine Souldiers breaking in thither for spoile, was broken vp, the world was thence poisoned with a contagion from Persia, as farre as France. * Philostratus reporteth (but who will beleene his reports?) of Apollonius, that he saw at Babylon such stately Palaces, as scarce agree with the state of Babylon in the time of Apollonius, which was while Domician reigned: amongst other things he saw Galleries full of Greeke Images, as of Orpheus, Andromida, &c. He came also into a Gallerie, the rooffe whereof was made bowing like the heauens, and covered with Saphire, so to resemble Heauen, and the Images of their Gods, made of gold, were there set. From the rooffe there hanged four birds of gold, representing the Goddesse of Reuenge, which they called the tongues of the Gods, I know not by what arte or mysterie, admonishing the King not to exalt himselfe,

He Chaldeans (saith ^a Diodorus) were of reputation in Babylon, as the Priests in Egypt; Chaldaean, being a name sometime applied to the whole Nation; sometime appropriated to the Priests, who spent their whole time in religious Services, and in Astrologie. Many of them by Diuination foretold things to come, as we haue shewed before in the Historie of Alexander; and the booke of Daniel witnesseth this their profession. By their auguries, or diuination by birds, by sacrifices and enchantments, they were accounted to doe good or harme to mankinde. They were most expert in their sacred Rites, in the knowledge whereof they were brought vp from their child-hood; and continued in that course of learning all their liues, the child being instructed in his Fathers science. They professed the interpretation of dreames, and prodigious accidents in Nature. Their opinions were, That the world is eternall, without beginning and end: the order and furniture of all was done by diuine prouidence: all heauenly things were perfected, not by chance, or of their owne accord, but by the determinate and firme decree of the Gods. By long obseruation searching the course and nature of the starres, they foretold things to come. But the greatest Power they attributed to the five Planets, and especially to Saturne. They call them Mercuries, because when others are fixed, these haue their proper motion, and shew future things, as the Interpreters of the Gods, by their rising, setting, and colour. Vnder their course they giue the title of Gods ^b to thirtie other Starres, the one halfe; aboue; the other, vnder the earth, beholding all accidents. And in ten dayes one of the higher is sent to the lower, as an Angell, or Messenger of the Starres, and one from them to the higher: And this course they take eternally.

They hold twelue principall Gods, each of which hath his peculiar moneth, and his signe in the Zodiake; by which the Sunne, and Moone, and five Planets, haue their motion. These Planets they esteeme to conferre much good or euill in the generation of men, and by their nature and aspect, things to come may be foreknowne. Many things they foretold to Alexander, Nicanor, Antigonus, Seleucus, and to priuate men, beyond the reach of men. They number foure and twentie constellations without the Zodiake, twelue towards the North, and as many towards the South. These Northernly are seene, which they attribute to the liuing: those Southernly are hidden, and present (they thinke) to the dead, which they hold the Iudges of all. Concerning the site, morion, and eclipse of the Moone, they hold as the Greekes; but of the Sunnes Eclipse they haue diuers opinions, and dare not vtter their opinion thereof, nor foretell the time. The earth they conceiued to bee hollow like a boat.

R. Moses Ben Maimon out of a booke entituled de Agricultura Egyptiorum, attributeth like things vnto them: that they beleecued the Starres were Gods, and that the Sunne was the chiefe God, and next to him the Moone: that the Sunne ruleth the superiour and inferiour world. And concerning Abraham, that he was borne in a land which worshipped the fire, which when he reproued, and his Countrymen objected the operations of the Sunne, he answered that the Sun was as the Axe in the hand of the Carpenter. But at last the King cast Abraham into prison, and when as there hee still continued the same disputes and opinions, the King fearing hurt to his people, banished him into the vtmost bounds of Chanaan, hauing first spoiled him of all his goods. This contradicteth the Historie of Moses, and of the old and new Testament, which commend Abrahams faith in voluntarie forsaking of his Countrie at the command of God, and not by compulsion of man, although it reacheth not to the former * absurditie, which ascribeth this to the time of Nimrod. And whether Abraham was an Idolater before that his calling, is handled ^a elsewhere. But to returne to our Rabbine (highly* admired by a most admired Author) he saith, that hence Abraham grew renowned through the World, all Nations honoring his memorie, except some Heathens, as the Parthians on the left hand, and Indians on the right, which were mainders of the Chaldæans, and called Zabij. These Zabij, Scalyger also saith were Chaldæans, so called à vento Apeliote, as one might say Easterne-men: and addeeth, that the Booke so often cited by Rambam, concerning their Religion, Rites, and Customs, is yet extant in the hands of the Arabian Muhamedans. Out of this booke our Rabbi reciteth their opinions: that Adam was borne of man and woman as other men; and that hee was a Prophet of the Moone, and by preaching perswaded men to worship the Moone, and that he composed books of husbandrie: that Noe also was a husband-man, and beleecued not in Idols. For which the Zabij put him in prison, and because hee worshipped the Creator. Seth also contradicted Adam in his Lunarie worship. They tell also that Adam went out^b of the Land of promise, which is towards India & entred into Babylon, whither he caried with him a tree still growing with branches & leaues, and a tree of stones, and leaues of a tree which would not burne, vnder the shadow of which tree hee said 10000. men might bee couered, the height whereof was as the stature of a man. Adam also had affirmed in his booke of a tree in India, the boughes whereof being cast on the ground would stir like Serpents; and of another which had a root shaped like a man, endued with a kinde of sounding voice differing from speech; and of a certaine hearbe which being folded vp in a mans clothes would make him walke invisible, & the smoke of the same, being fired, would cause thunders: another tree they worshipped which abode in Niniue 12. yeares, and contended with the Mandrake for vsurping her roome, whereby it came to passe that the Priest or Prophet, which had vsed to propheticie with the spirit of that tree, ceased a long time from prophesying; and at last the tree spake to him and bad him write the fute betweene her and the Mandrake, whether of them were the more honourable. These fooleries, saith he, they attributed to Adam, that so they might proue the eternitie of the world, and Deitie of the Stars. These Zabij made them for this cause Images of gold to the Sunne, of siluer to the Moone, and built them Temples, saying, that the power of the Planets was infused into those Images, whence they spake vnto men and taught things profitable. The same they affirmed of those trees which they appropriated to each of them with peculiar worships, rites, and hallowings, wherby that tree receiued a power to speake with men in their sleeps. From hence sprang magickall diuinations, auguries, necromancie, and the like. They offered to their chiefe God a Beetle, and seuen Mice, and seuen Fowles.

 a So the Iewes call the said R. Mos of the first letters, R. M. B. M. Rab. Mos Ben Maimon. contracted Rambam.
 b These fables were som rubbish of Paradise, the trees and Serpent therein, &c. In his Epistle to the Marsheva Iewes, he writeth of Bookes which mention Iambasor, Tzareth, Raani, and say they were before Adam, and that Sombascher was Adams master: and of the Indians, which, say they, haue Cities 100000 yeares old. &c.

The greatest of their bookes is that of the Egyptian seruice, translated into Arabike by a Moore called Enennaxia, which containeth in it many ridiculous things; and yet these were the famous wise-men of Babylon in those daies. In the said booke is reported of a certaine Idolatrous Prophet named Tamut, who preaching to a certaine King this worship of the seuen Planets, and twelue Signes, was by him done to a grieuous death. And in the night of his death, all the Images from the ends of world came and assembled together at the great golden Image in the Temple at Babylon, which was sacred to the Sunne, and hanged betweene the heauen and the earth, which then prostrated it selfe in the midst of the Temple, with all the Images round about, shewing to them, all which had befallen Tamut. All the Images therefore wept all night, and in the morning fled away each to his owne Temple. And hence grew that custom yearly in the beginning of the moneth Tamut, to renew that mourning for Tamut. Other bookes of theirs are mentioned by him, one called Deiz. mesechameche, a booke of Images, a booke of Candles, of the degrees of Heauen, and others falsely ascribed to Aristotle, and one to Alformor, and one to Isaac, and one of their Feasts, Offerings, Prayers, and other things pertaining to their Law, and some written against their opinions, all done into Arabike. In these are set downe the rites of their Temples and Images of stone or metall, and applying of Spirits to them, and their Sacrifices, and kindes of meats. They name their holy places sumptuously built, the Temples of Intelligible formes; and set Images on high mountaines, and honour trees, and attribute the increase of men and fruits to the Starres. Their Priests preached that the earth could not be tilled, according to the will of the Gods, except they serued the Sunne and Starres, which being offended, would diminish their fruits, and make their countries desolate. They haue written also in the former bookes, that the Planet Iupiter is angrie with the Deserts and drie places, whence it commeth that they want water and trees, and that Devils haunt them. They honored husband-men, as fulfilling the will of the starres, in tilling the ground: they honoured Kine and Oxen for their labours therein, saying that they ought not to bee slaine. In their festiualls they vsed songs, and all muscicall instruments, affirming that their Idols were pleased with these things, promising to the doers long life, health, plentie of fruits, raines, trees, freedoime from losses, and the like. Hence it is saith R. Moses, that the Law of Moses forbiddeth these rites, and threatneth the contrarie plagues to such as shall obserue them. They had certaine hallowed beasts in their Temples wherein their Images were, before which they bowed themselues and burned incense. These opinions of the Zaby, were holden also by the Aramites, Chanaanites, and Egyptians.

They had their magicall obseruations in gathering certaine hearbs, or in the vse of certaine mettals, or liuing creatures, and that in a set certaine time, with their set rites, as of leaping, clapping the hands, hopping, crying, laughing, &c. in the most of which women were actors; as when they would haue raine, ten Virgins clothed in hallowed garments of red colour, danced a procession, turning about their faces and shoulders, and stretching their fingers towards the Sunne: and to prevent harme by haile, foure women lay on their backs naked, lifting vp their feet speaking certaine wordes. And all magicall practises they made to depend of the starres, saying, that such a starre was pleased with such an incense, such a plant, such a metall, such wordes or workes, and therby would be as it were hired to such or such effects, as to driue away Serpents and Scorpions, to slay wormes in nuts, to make the leaues fall, and the like. Their Priests vsed shauings of the head and beard, and linsiey wolsey garments, and made a signe in their hand with some kinde of mettals. The booke of Centir prescribeth a woman to stand armed before the starre of Mars, and a man clothed in womens attire painted, before the starre of Venus to prouoke lust. The worshippers of the fire made men beleue that they which would not cause their children to passe through the fire, should loose them, and easily perswaded them thereunto as a thing easie, saith the Rabbin, for they did not burne them (although herein both diuine and humane testimonies make mee beleue the contrarie.) From hence, saith hee, descended the customes, obserued by women, in holding and mouing their children ouer the fire or smoke.

They had their diuersities of Processions; and when they hallowed a tree to an Image, one part of the fruit thereof was offered, and the other eaten in the house of the Idoll: the like they did with the first fruits of euery tree; making men beleue that otherwise the tree would become vnprofitable. They had their magicall enchantments in the planting or grafting of trees, with obseruations of the starres, incenses, words: but this most Diabolicall, that in the houre when one kinde was to be engrafted into another, the science which was to be engrafted should be holden in the hand of some beautifull woman, and that some man should then carnally, but vnnaturally, haue knowledge of her, the woman in that instant putting the science into the tree. They vsed also to make circles when they planted or sowed, and went about the same, some five times, because of the five Planets, some seuen in regard of the Sunne and Moone added to that number. For this cause the Jew not vnprobably thinketh that mixtures in garments, seedes, and the like, were forbidden by the Law of Moses, with other rites any way resembling these.

They further worshipped Devils, beleeuing that they appeared to men in the formes of Goats, and therefore called their Devils kids, and held it vnlawfull to sheare or to eate their kids: but especially they abhorred the killing of Kine, but performed much worship to them, as they also doe in India to this day. They sacrificed Lyons, Beares, and wilde beasts, as is mentioned in the booke Zenizit. They held bloud in much abomination, accounting it a great pollution, & yet did eat it, because (they said) it was the food of Devils; and they which did eate it should haue communion with them: and that they would come to such and reueale vnto them things to come. Some whose nicer stomachs could not endure to eate it, receiued the same, when they killed a beast, * in a Vessell or in a ditch, and did eate the flesh of that Sacrifice, being placed about that bloud, thinking that the Devils did eate the bloud, and that thus by this as it were eating at the same table, was intertaind betwixt them and the Devils mutuall familiaritie and societie. They believed also that in their sleeps the Devils came and reuealed secrets vnto them. Concerning a menstruous woman their custome was, that shee should sit alone in a house, and that the places where she set her feet should be burned; whosoever talked with her was vnclane, yea if hee but stood in the winde of her, the winde from her did pollute him. Likewise these Zabians thought, whatsoever went from their bodies was vnclane, as nailes, haire, bloud, and therefore Barbers and Surgeons were holden polluted: and after cutting off their haire vsed much washing for expiation. But it needeth some expiation that I insift so long in these narrations, and haue neede of some Barber or Surgeon to ease me of superfluities, if that can be superfluous which fitteth so to our proiect, and in the judgement of the learnedst of the Iewish Rabbines in many ages, seemed the cause of so many prohibitions in Moses his Law, least they should conforme themselves in religious obseruances to these superstitious Zabians. But let vs now returne to Diodorus, who affirmeth that the Chaldæans numbred 43000. yeares, vntill the coming of Alexander, since first they had begunne their obseruations of the Starres. The yeares Xenophon de equiuocis interpreteth of months: for so (saith he) the Chaldæans reckoned their antiquities; in other things they kept their computation according to the Sunne. But of their fabulous antiquities wee haue heard before: where wee haue also touched, that one beginning of Idolatrie did arise of this curious and superstitious Starre-gazing, especially in the Countries of Egypt, where not at all vsually; and in Chaldæa, where diuers moneths ^a together they haue neither raines nor cloudes.

Strabo diuideth the Chaldæans into sects, Orcheni, Borsippeni, and others, diuersly opinionate of the same things. Borsippa was a Citie sacred to Diana and Apollo. Plinie ^b adderh the Hippareni. Daniel ^c reckoneth vp foure kinde of Wise-men among the Chaldæans: the first are called Chartummim, which were Enchanters; Askaphim, Astrologers; Mecaspim, Sorcerers or Iuglers, deluders of sense; and Chasdim, Chaldæans, which, howsoever it were a generall name of that Nation, yet was it appropriated vnto a certaine sect and profession of learning among them which seemed to excell the rest, and were their Priests, Philosophers, and Mathematicians, as you haue heard. In the seuen and twentieth verse of the same chapter are mentioned also Cachinim, Wisards, which by coniectures and casting of lots did ghesse of things to come: and Gazrin, of the word gazar, to cut; these opened, and diuined by, the entrails of sacrifices. The vauitie of their diuinations appeareth in that Prophet, howsoever they haue bene renowned therefore among the Heathens: as in the foretelling of Alexanders death, and before that, when Darius had changed his Scaberd into the Greeke fashion, the ruine of that Empire by the Greekes: When Faustina ^c the Empreffe, wife to M. Antoninus, had fallen in loue with a fencer or sword-plaier, and being sick confessed the same to her husband, the Chaldæans were sent for, who gaue counsell to kill the Fencer, and that shee should wash her selfe in his bloud, and then accompanie with her husband: which was done and Commodus begotten, who in qualities resembled that Fencer vpon this occasion (as the people reported) though others esteemed him a Bastard. Plutarch ^f sheweth how vainely the Romans depended on their predictions. Thus Iuuenal reproues them:

Many Edicts were after made against them. Otho Heurnius & laboureth to bring the Grecian Philosophie from the Chaldæans: yea Aristotle himselfe, as hee had receiued the Persian and Indian Philosophie by tradition of Pythagoras and Democritus, and the Egyptian and Iewish learning from Plato, so was hee instructed (saith hee) in the Babylonian sciences by Callisthenes. But Calins Rhodiginus ^h and Iosephus Scaliger ⁱ thinke them rather corrupters of learning, whereof they had no solide knowledge, and that the Greekes attained thereunto by their owne industrie, without borrowing of the Chaldæans. Pencer deemeth ^k them too Philosophicall, the perverters of Religion into Theoricall speculations of Nature, and confuteth their fiue kindes of prognosticating. But their estimation could not haue been such in Daniels time, if they had not bene very learned: and somewhat was added, as we may well coniecture, to their learning by him, who by Nabuchodonosor was ^l set ouer them. For besides the gifts where with he was enriched, and the ciuill authoritie wherewith he was dignified, hee was exalted also to this Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction ouer the Schooles of the Wise-men, (as after Iunius and Oslander, D. Willet hath obserued) as it were their Superintendent: which though Caluin thinketh hee refused, yet it appeareth by the title which the King after^m gaue him, that he accepted it. In which his Superintendentship, saith our Author ⁿ, such laudable sciences as might safely be learned, he promoted and furthered; such corruption and superstitions as were practised among them he corrected and reformed: but such abuses as could not bee taken away hee forbore, and kept himselfe free from them. And here haue we a testimonie of their Hierarchie, which Nature taught these and all people, contrarie to the Noveltye of Paritie. In the dayes of Hezekiah, when the Sunne went backwards, it appeareth how studious the Chaldæan Nation was; in that ^o their Princes sent their Embassadors into Iudæa to enquire thereof. Yea the Delphian Oracle, as Theodoret citeth it out of ^p Porphyrie, ascribeth the finding out of that learning which leadeth to the Gods, not to the Greekes, but to the Egyptians, Phœnicians, Chaldæans, and Hebrewes; in which the Chaldæans (as that Father out of Daniel obserueth) were furthered by the Hebrewes.

Some ^q doe call the Babylonian Priests, Magi; but because they were by this name best knowne, and most esteemed among the Persians, which in that vicinitie of Regions had as neare Neighbourhood in Religions, wee will speake of these Magi, in our Persian Relations. And it is thought that the Persian Magi came from these Chaldæans. Mornaus ^r reckoneth among the Chaldæan opinions, that of Oromases, Mitris, and Ariminis, that is to say, G o d, Minde, and Soule: which he applieth to the Christian doctrine of the holy Trinitie. The Oracle of Apollo, pronounced the Chaldæans and Hebrewes to be only wise.

The Chaldæan opinion concerning iudiciall Astrologie, was not receiued of all the Chaldæans, as Strabo reporteth. And Bardesanes Syrus, the best learned of the Chaldæans (it is Eusebius ^s testimonie) doth at large confute that opinion (which yet many Wisards, carkasses of Christians, still follow.) He affirmeth that in those things which a man hath common with a beast, eating, sleepe, nourishment, age, &c. a man is ordered by Nature, as the beasts are. But Man hauing also a reasonable soule, and freedom of will, is not subiect to that naturall seruitude; which at large he proueth by the diuers customes of men, both in diuers, & in the same countries, in diet, gouernment, and Religion: as the Reader, willing to reade so worthie a discourse, may find related at large in Euseb. Alexander Polyhist. out of Eupolemus, telleth that in the 10. generation after the flood, in Camyrine a citie of Babylonia, which other cal Vr, Abram was borne, which excelled all in knowledge, & was the inuentor of Astrologie among the Chaldæans. He by diuine precept went into Phœnicia, and taught the Phœnicians the course of the Sun & Moone: and when the Armenians, warring vpon the Phœnicians, had had taken his brothers sonne prisoner, he by a band of his seruants recovered him, and freely dismissed the captiues, which he had taken. He after liued with the Priests at Heliopolis in Egypt, and taught them Astrologie; confessing that he had receiued that Art by succession from Enoch. He added that Belus reigned the second in Babylon, and was called Saturne, the father of a second Belus, and Canaan; which Canaan was the father of the Phœnicians, and the *Ethiopi*ans, brother of Mizraim the Author of the Egyptians: with many other things not much differing from the Diuine Historie.

Astronomy in all likelihood was knowne to Abraham, to whom the heauenly stars might be Remembrancers of that promise, so shall thy seed be: his country also, where it was practised, might therein further him, and the excellency of the Science in it self. But this Star-gazing destiny, Iudiciall, Coniecturall Generall Astronomie, Reason and Experience, God and Man haue condemned. Ur signifieth light, which agreeth to the Fire, the Chaldean deitie, which the Persians and Chaldeans famed to haue receiued from heauen, and kept euer burning; as the Vestals in Rome. They held Water and Fire to be the beginning of all things. They made a challenge of this their fiery God, to contend with any other gods of the godlesse Heathen: an Egyptian encountered and ouercame them: thus: he caused his Canopus to be made full of holes, stopped with wax, and hollow in the middle, which he filled with water: and the Chaldeans putting their fire vnder, the wax melting, opened a quiver of watrie arrowes, that cooled the heat of their deuouring god, and deuoured him. They had yet a more foolish God, euen an Onyon which they worshipped. They obserued diuers wicked Sciences of diuining, by Fire, Aire, Water, Earth, consulting with the dead, and with wicked spirits, --- Chaldaea vocatis Imperat arte dijs, saith Claudian.

Euery day the King^d offered a Horse, furnished, vnto the Sunne; as did also the Persians. Philostrat. saith, that it was a white Horse of the Nisæan race, sumptuously trapped, lib. 1. cap. 20. They obserued a feast in Babylon (Athenæus ^c citeth it out of Berosus) on the sixteenth Calends of September, which continued five daies; in which the Masters were subiect to their seruants, and one of them, royally attired, was caried out of the house, whom they called Zoganes. Baruch cap. 6. in the Epistle of Jeremie (Apocrypha) rippeth vp their idolatrous Rites, Idols, Processions, bearing Idols on mens shoulders, the people before and behind worshipping: their Priests collusions to make gaires of the Idol-offerings, together with their Priests shauen heads and beards, their rent cloaths, their roaring before the Idol: their Temples wherein they stood with scepters, axes, or other weapons in their hands, hauing candles lighted before them, with other such rites; that, in the reading, one would thinke he were telling the discourse of the mysteries of mystical Babylon in the West; so euently they accord. The Chaldeans inuocate their Belus, to do miracles also, saith he, inuocating a dumbe Idoll to giue speech vnto another, which himselfe wanteth. But about all, one beastly rite was in vse among them. The women, saith he, ^e sit in the waies girded with 8 cords of rushes, and burne straw: and if one of them be drawne away, and lie with any such as come by, she casteth her neighbour in the teeth, because shee was not so worthily reputed, nor her cord broken. Thus was their glorie their shame. ^b Herodotus will yeeld vs a Commentary on this place. The Babylonians haue an abominable law (saith he) that all their women once in their life do sit at the Temple of Venus to haue familiaritie with strangers: the richer sort comming in chariots, richly furnished and attended to this vngodly purpose. Their manner of sitting is, crowned on their Temples with garlands, their retiring places distinguished with cords by which the stranger may haue access to which of them he liketh best. And thus do these Votaries of Venus sit, holding it religion to be irreligious, none of them euer returning home, till some guest haue cast money into her lap, whom it is not lawfull for her to refuse but to accept of him and his price, whatsoever he be, and follow him aside from the Temple, where he defileth her. At the giuing of the mony he vseth these words, Tanti tibi deam Mylitta imploro, that is, at this price, or for so much, I implore vnto thee the Goddesse Mylitta (so the Assyrians call Venus ⁱ) and this mony is consecrated to a sacred vse. After this, with the Goddesse good leaue, she may returne home, although for no great price againe (saith our Author) to be hired. By this meanes the fairest are quickly dispatched, the rest endure a restless & irksome penance, sometime a yeare, two, or three, before they can be discharged of their honesty and the law together, and hence might arise that former ambitious vpbraiding in Baruch.

Among their many Idols, ^a Bel bare the bell, not here alone, but in all the countries of Assyria, and adjoining thereto, as appeareth in the Historie of the Bible: where Bel or Baal so is often mentioned, as the Idoll of so many Nations & the sin of the apostaticall Synagogue. They ^b built unto him high places: or else in stead thereof vsed the rooves of their houses to his worship: they built him houses, they made him Images, erected Altars, planted Groves, bended to him the knee, and kissed him in token of subiection, vsed perfume and incense, obserued to him holy dayes, cut and lanced themselves in his seruice, with other extaticall furies, and religious frencies, with ornaments of gold and iewels, inuocations and immolations, yea of their owne children: he had also his peculiar prophets and Priests. These and such like doth the Scripture mention of this Babylonian Idoll, whose contagion infected the East with a Catholike Idolatrie that could plead Antiquitie, Uniuersalitie, and Consent, by euidence of Scripture-historie (which later Babylon cannot doe) and yet was but Catholike and generall errour. Bel was, saith Pline ^c, Inuentor sideralis scientie, the inuenter of Astrologie, which (Heurnius addeth) he defiled with impure Magicke, as did his daughter Semiramis, who warred vpon Zoroaster, in enuie of his greater learning: Bels magicke appeared in his sepulchre, which Xerxes opening, found a vessell of glasse, and therein a carkasse swimming in oyle, which reached not to the brim by a hand-breadth. In a little pillar iust by was engrauen, that he should dearely repent it, which opening the sepulchre did not fill vp the vessell: this Xerxes assayed to doo in vaine, and therefore departed verie heaue, finding in his Grecian Expedition the truth of Bels prophecie. The like is said to happen, when Darius in hope of treasure ^d opened the sepulchre of Semiramis, he found a chist, which being opened, a venomous pestilence issued, that consumed the third part of men.

Ribera affirmeth, ^e that diuers later Authors, and before them ^f Phedoret, doe esteeme the name Bel or Baal to be a generall name, agreeing to all the gods of the Gentiles, according to the signification of the word, to wit, a Lord. ^g It was a name generall to their Idols, when it was put alone, but particular with some addition, as Bel-zebub, Baal-zephon. There were so many Baals in Syria, saith ^h Drusus, as there were Regions, and almost as many as Cities. The Moabites had their Chamos, the Ammonites Moloch, the Sydonians Astarte, in Gaza Maruan, in Hamath Asima, &c. And Seruus ⁱ is Author, that Belus the father of Dido descended of that ancient Belus the first King of the Assyrians, which people worshipped Saturne & Iuno, which were after worshipped in Africa, whereupon the Punikes called God, Bal, (from whence came those names Hannibal, Adherbal, and such like) whom the Assyrians in some respect call Bel, and Saturne, and the Sunne. This opinion that in Bel they worshipped the Sunne, is followed by Tremellius and Iunius in their notes on Esaias, Chap. 46. 1. because the Assyrians, Perfians, and Babylonians, accounted the Sunne the greatest God, and worshipped the Fire as a partice thereof: To him the Iewes, with this borrowed forren Idolatrie, dedicated Horses and Chariots, which ^k Iosias abolished, together with the Altars on the roofe of Abas his house, and the high places, where their God might see their deuotions. Hierome, on that place of Esay, saith, that Bel was Saturne, which Suidas confirmeth. Augustine ^l relateth the vsuall opinion (on those words, Iud. 2. They serued Baal and Aitaroth) that Baal in those parts was the name of Iupiter, and Astarte of Iuno, and produceth the Punike language, in which Baalsamen signifieth the Lord of Heauen; and for Astarob (which he readeth Astartibus) he saith it is in the plurall number, in regard of the multitude of *Iuno*es Images, each bearing the name of Iuno. This also is exemplified in the blessed Virgin by Ribera, sometime called our Lady of Loreto, sometime our Ladie of Monreferato, &c. according to the diuersitie of places, wherein they worship, not Mary the Virgin, but their owne Idols; the daughters of their whoisish mother Babylon.

For the Tyrians, Sydonians, Philistims, and other Syrian, and Assyrian Nations, the Scripture brandeth them with this Bel or Baal-Idolatry: in hatred of which name; the Jewes called the Prince of Diuels, as the Aearonites did their principall Idols, by the name of Belzebub.

Thus the Greekes and Latines haue confounded the Assyrian and Tyrian Bel, which by Iosephus ^m Scaliger, (who not vaworthily is called ⁿ the Dictator of knowledge, and great Prince of learnings state) are distinguished and made two: the one (saith he) is written ^h and the later ^h and reproveth Hierome for making Belus, the father of Ninus, and the Virgilian Belus to be one. But in his notes on the fragments of Berosus, and other ancient Authours, he saith, the Tyrians and Sydomians called him ^h which the Greekes made Belus: and so Mr. Selden also is of opinion, that these names ^h and ^h differ onely according to the propriety of the language, and not indeed, for the Grammarians obserue that the Chaldee words often lose that middle letter: Elias in his Thesbi obserueth, that Baal signifieth the act of generation, which may well agree with those beastly Baal-rites before mentioned, Baal is read in the feminine gender. Tob. 1. 5. Rom. 11. 4. In Photius ^o is mentioned, that the Phœnicians and Syrians called Saturne ΗΛ, and Βιλ, E L, and Bel, and Bolathes. Lilius Giraldu ^p out of Sernius. affirmeth that ΗΛ, in the Assyrian language signifieth the Sunne, from whence the Greeke ^h is deriued: some attribute this to the Phœnician tongue, in which Hal signifieth God. The Assyrians named Saurne and the Sunne Hel. The Indians called that Hercules, which Tully de Nat. Deor. numbred the first, Belus. But we find no end of these Labyrinths. D. Willet in his Cóment, vpon ^q Daniel, hath these words: The Chaldeans had five Idols, three Gods and two Goddeses. Their first God was Bel, a name contracted of Behel, which cometh of Babal, which signifieth a Lord: to whom was built that Temple before mentioned. The second was the Sunne, which they called Rach, that is, a King; because hee is chiefe among the Planets: and the Persians call him Mithra, as Iustinus Martyr saith, Dialog. in Triphon. The Priests of this Idoll were called Raciophante, Observers of the Sunne. Their third God was Nego, the Fire; so called of the brightnesse; this was carried about among them: the Priests were called Ortophante. Their first Goddesse was Shacha, which was the Earth, worshipped also of the Romans vnder the name of Tellus and Opis: of the Syrians called Dorcetha. In the honour of this Goddesse, they vted to keepe a feast five dayes together in Babylon; during which time, the Masters were vnder the dominion of their seruants: one of which was vsually set ouer the rest, and royally cloathed, and was called Sogan, that is, great Prince (our Lords of Misrule seeme to deriue their pedigree from hence.) This festiuall time was called Shache, whereof Babylon was called Sheshach, of keeping this Feast, Ierem. 25. 27. and 51. 41. Their other Goddesse was Mulitta, which was Venus, whose Priests were called Natita, or Natophante. But the chiefeest of their Idols was Bel.

Hee also interpreteth ^r those words, Dan. 1. 4. Whom they might teach the learning and tongue of the Chaldeans, of Schooles wherein youth was brought vp in good letters, to bee after employed in the State. So among the Aegyptians they had the like vse, where Moses was taught the learning of the Aegyptians. Among the Israelites eight and fortie Cities were appointed for the Leuites, which were as the common Schooles and Vniuersities for the whole Kingdome. Samuel and Elizeus had their Schooles and Colledges of Prophets: yea the rude Indians had their Gymnosophistes; and the Romans had their Colledges of Augures.

In the seuenteenth chapter of the second booke of Kings is mentioned Sucoth Benoth an Idoll of the Babylonians. Beda interpreteth it the Tabernacles of Benoth, and so the word Sucoth vsed, Amos 5. 25. is by Saint Stephen, Act. 7. 43. interpreted. And so doth the ^s Glosse on that place of the Kings interpret; where Lyra, ^t according to the signification of the words (a Tabernacle of wings) relateth out of Rab. Sal. that this Idoll was made like to a Hen brooding her chickens: which Idols the Babylonians framed in worship of that Constellation, called by the vulgar, the Hen and chickens, and of the learned, Plaiades; as others did to the Sunne, others to the Moone. Some^a apply it to the mysterie of their Idoll, (which Christ the Truth, truly faith of himselfe) protecteing his worshippers, as a Hen her chickens. My learned friend Master Selden gathered by the signification of Succoth benoth (the Tabernacles of the daughters) that thereby is meant the Temple of Venus, where the daughters of the Babylonians sate, as before is said, to performe their filthie deuotions. It seemeth the idolatrous Priests carried the Tabernacle of their Idoll on their shoulder, in apish imitation of the true Priests and Leuites: for so Amos saith, ^b Yee carried Succoth, or Sicchuth your King, Chian your Images, which Drusius ^c interpreteth Moloch and Hercules.

In the fourteenth chapter of Daniel, as the Latines reade, is a large historie both of Bel, a dead statue, and of a liuing Dragon which the Babylonians worshipped. The Priests of Bel were seuentie, besides their wiues and children, whose fraud and couisenage Daniel detected, making it manifest by their foot-steps in the ashes, which he had strewed in the Temple, that they were the deuourers of that huge portion of fortie sheepe, twelue measures of meale, and six great pots of wine, daily consecrated for Bels break-fast. He after slew the Dragon also; for which the Babylonians forced the King to lodge him six daies among the Lions. But howsoeuer generally more authoritie is to be ascribed to the Apocryphall bookes, then to any humane Historie, or other Ecclesiasticall Authors, as Zanchius ^d religiously holdeth, yet for this fragment of Daniel, it is accounted ^e the worke of Theodotion a bad man, who foisted it into his translation. And not onely the Reformed Churches account it as it is, but Driedo a learned Papist, Erasmus a Semi-christian (so Bellarmino calleth him) Iulius Africanus of old, and the Iewes generally, reiect it out of the Canon, as the Cardinal himselfe ^f hath obserued: and he is faine to tell vs of another Daniel of the Tribe of Leui, to maintaine the credit hereof. But Hierome in the Preface of his Commentaries stileth them, Belis Draconisq; fabulas, quas ueru anteposito, eoq; ingulante, subiecit, ne uideretur apud imperitos magnam partem voluminum detruncasse: and alleageth Eusebius, Origen, Apollinarius, and other Ecclesiasticall Doctores, which were of his minde, and though they needed not to answer Porphyrie, who had hence raked some obiections against the Christians, for these things which had not authoritie of Scripture.

For the present Saracenicall Religion, now obserued in these parts, our third booke shall largely relate thereof. Concerning other Babylonian customes: Herodotus, l. 2. telleth of three families in Babylon which liued on fish. It may be the Carthusians of our Westerne Babylon are of their of-spring: for whose sparing, their fellowes may eat the more flesh, with which those of old, and these later, may not (forsooth) pollute themselues. ⁱ Curtius telleth generally, that, for fleshly vices, the Babylonians were most corrupt. They prostituted their wiues and daughters to their guests for rewards. They were addicted to excessiue banquetting, and drunkenesse. In the beginning of their feastes, their women were modestly attired; by degrees they stripped themselues of their cloathes, beginning with the vpper-most, till nothing was left to couer their shame, or forbid their shamelesse. And not their Curtizans alone, but their Marrons, (yea, in token of ciuilitie) did thus prostitute themselues to those flames of lusts which haue come from hell, and carrie thither. Heere was Alexanders manly and victorious armie made effeminate, vnfit after to haue encountred with a strong enemy. ^k Some ascribe the loose liues of the Babylonians, to a law of Xerxes, who to chastise them for a rebellion, enacted that they should no longer weare armes, but addict themselues to Musicke, riot, and such like.

The Chaldean, and Assyrian Chronicle, or Computation of Times, with their manifold alterations of Religions and Governement in those parts untill our time.

We have before shewed the prodigious Chronologic of the Chaldeans, reckoning the reignes of their Kings before the flood; 43 2000. years. They tell also after the flood of diuers Dynasties or governments in this country of Babylon.

First, the Chaldeans, Euechoos reigned 6. yeares, Chomusbo-

He being dispossessed by the Arabians, Mardocentes began the second Arabian Dynastie, and reigned 45. yeares, and after him Sismardichos 28. Abias 37. Parrannos 40. Nabonnabos 25. --- 41. The space of these two Dynasties is reckoned 440. yeares. Thus Scaliger relateth: but in my minde, as the former was beyond all possibilitie of truth (which they tell of before the flood) so this hath no great likelihood, at least for so long a space before Belus, with whom the most histories beginne their relations, and Scaliger his third Dynastie, of one and fortie Kings in this order.

e The Assyrian Dynastie. Moses, Gen. 14. 1 speaketh of Amraphel King of Shinar, that is, of these parts of Babylonia, as his companions reigned not farre hence.

The summe of this Dynastie, 1484. yeares.

The fourth Dynastie was of the Medes, begun by Arbaces, who deprived Sardanapalus; he reigned 28. yeares, his sonne Mandaces 50. Sosarmus 30. Artycus 50. (In the 19. yeare of this King Nabonassar, the Babylonian rebelled, and began a new Dynastie in Babylonia. And in the 43. yeare of his reigne Salmanassar captiued the ten Tribes) Arbianes or Cardiceas 22. Arsaos or Deioces 40. Artynes called also Phraortes 22. Astibaras or Cyaxares 40. Apandas alias Astyages 40. In all 322. yeares.

f The Median Dynastie.

The fifth Dynastie was of the Persians, begun by Cyrus, which ouerthrew Astyages, and reigned 30. yeares: His sonne Cambyses 8. the Magi 7. moneths, Darius sonne of Hystaspes 36. yeares, Xerxes 20. Artabanus 7. moneths, Artaxerxes Longimanus 40. Xerxes 2. moneths, Sogdianus 7. moneths, Darius Nothus 19. yeares, Artaxerxes Mnemon 40. yeares, Artaxerxes Ochus 26. Arses 4. Darius 6. in all 231. yeares.

In all 237. And from the beginning of the first Dynastie 2623. These I have here inserted out of Scaliger, rather to shew the continued succession of the Easterne Empire, then with any intent to perswade, that all these were Kings, and ruled the countrey of Babylonia. For after Arsaces rebelled, the Parthians dispossessed the Syrian Kings of these parts: and before, the Babylonians often rebelled; as in the time of the Persians, when Zopyrus by a strange stratagem, recited by Iustin and others, restored them to Darius: but especially in the times of the Medes, whose Dynastie was much disquieted: sometime the Scythians (saith Orosius) and sometimes the Chaldeans, and sometimes the Medes preuayling. Sometimes also (as the Scripture witnesseth) the Assyrians renewed their ancient power. Yea in the time of the Assyrian Dynastie, the Chaldeans are said to warre (in the reigne of Panyas) against the Phœnicians, which argueth that they were then free.

The Scripture and other Histories speake of Phul, Teglath-Phalasar, Iareb, Sargon, Salman-asar, Senacherib, Azar-baddon: which were great and mightie, not onely strong enough to defend themselves against the Medes, but to inuade forren Nations, yea did translate people from one Kingdome to another, and seated the captiues of Israel in the Citties of the Medes, and sent Babylonian Colonies to Samaria; which they could not doe, if they had not commanded both Assyria, and Media, with Babylonia.

e 2. Reg. 17. 24.

Nabonassar rebelled, as is said, against Artycas, and began the Chaldean Dynastie, from whom, for this restitution of libertie, the Chaldeans began their Astronomicall computations: he reigned 14. yeares, Nassyus 2. Chinzerus and Porus 5. Dilulauus 5. Mardokempadus 12. ^f He sent Ambassadours to Hezekia. Arkeanos 5. Interregnum 12. Belithus 3. Aporonadicus 6. Herigebatus 1. Nesnoemondacus 4. Interregnum 17. Iearaedus 13. Saosducinus 9. Kinladachus 14. Nabopollasarus 29. (In the seuenteenth yeare of his reigne, hee sent his sonne Nabuchodonosor into Syria with an Armie.) Nabuchodonosor 30. Euilmerodach 6. Neregasolarus 5. Nabonidus 17. This was a Mede by linage (not as some say, King of the Medes) sonne of Xerxes a Mede, but borne at Babylon, and by conspiracie raised to the Kingdome: not inuading Babylon with Cyrus, but reigning in Babylon, till Cyrus deprived him. Megasthenes calls him a Mede, and the Scripture Darius Medus. Cyrus came against him in the nineteenth yeare of his reigne, and eleuen yeares before the seuenty of the Captiuitie were ended; in which space Cyrus had enough to doe to besiege and conquer Babylon, and Borsippa where Darius was. From the beginning of Nabonassar to the end of Cyrus are 217. yeares. From thence to the Asiaticke Empire of the Macedonians 201. From thence to the rebellion of Arsaces the Parthian, of whom the Parthian Kings were called Arsacida, 79. And the Dynastie of the Parthians continued 479 yeares: the last of them Artabannus, being slaine. These Kings, and the times of their reignes are not easie to set downe, and Onuphrinus is therefore reprov'd of Scaliger, for vndertaking this taske, in which authority faileth him. Of them we shall speake in due place.

The Saracens succeeded, whose names and times you may see in our Saracenicall call relation. After the Saracens, reigned the Tartars; and since, sometime one family, sometime another, among the Persians, till Solyman dispossessed the Sophian of the Babylonian dominion, vnder which Turkish seruitude it groined, till our dayes, in which the present Persian hath recouered it, if we may credite some reports, by others^k denied.

I dare not take vpon me to be vmpire and decider of those many altercations among Chronologers: but haue simply followed Scaliger, whose very name is able to shield me from contempt, if not to yeeld me commendation. Let others, that haue more lust and leasure, trauesse these matters at their pleasure: my intent is, most of all, the History of Religions; and the successions and alterations of States I haue lightly touched: but precisely to determine in what yeare of the world euery King began his reigne and to dispute the same with all opponents, would be somewhat tedious to the Reader: to me (perhaps in these varieties of opinions, impossible. Leaving therefore the more studious to the Chronologers, let vs take a little reuiew of some principall occurrents in the former Catalogue.

Africannus beginnes the Assyrian Monarchie at Belus, and not, as the most, with Ninus: That Belus some thinke to be the same with Nimrod, whom Ninus, as wee said before, consecrated. Semiramis is reported to be the first that caused Eunuches to be made. Ninias which succeeded, left not like monuments of his great exploits, as his Predecessors before him. Buntingus thinks him to be that Amraphel King of Shinar mentioned Genes. 14. and that Arioch King of Elasser was his sonne. Howeuer, it breeds much difficulty, to reconcile the ancient Historie of the Babylonian and Assyrian great and long continued Empire, with the kingdomes and Kings in that Chapter by Moses mentioned. Eupolemus, as before is cited out of Eusebius, saith that those Kings were Armenians; Diodorus Tarsensis, as Pererius affirmeth, reckons them Persians, Iosephus Assyrians: Pererius himselfe thinks them vassals, and tributaries to the Assyrian: Genebrard suspects the History of the Assyrian greatnesse: and truly, not altogether vniustly, neyther do we reade of any in all the Historie of Moses and Ioshua concerning the Kings in those parts, for ought can be gathered, yeelding subiection to Babylon. And the Sodemite and his neighbours had beene the tributaries of Chedarlaomer King of Elam, and not of Amraphel King of Shinar; vnlesse we say that violent things are not permanent, and the yoake imposed before by the Assyrians, was now in Ninias dayes reiected: Semiramis being weakened with her Indian expedition, and Ninias by killing her, giuing occasion of discontent to her followers, the men of warre, which might heereupon (contemning this effeminate King, who had suffered his mother to possesse the Scepter so long) fall to sharing for themselues, and erectt petty Kingdomes. Arius (happily) restored the Empyre thus decayed, if it be true that Buntingus writeth, that he was a great warrior, therefore called Arius and Mars, and, as the God of warre, inuocated by the Assyrians. When Tentamos reigned, ^m Diodor. lib. 3. testifieth that Prianus, then besieged by Agamemnon, as vassall and tributarie to the Assyrians sent to him for ayde, who sent to his succour Memnon, with twenty thousand souldiers.

But to descend vnto times neerer both vs and the truth, and to view the ruine of that great estate: we reade in the same Author, and in ⁿ others, that Arbaces (whom Iustin calleth Arbactus; Orosius Arbastus) was by Sardanapalus made Captaine of the Armie which was yearely sent to Niua, or Niniue, where a conspiracie was contracted betweene him and Belus a Chaldaean Priest, Captaine of the Babylonians, who by his Chaldaean skill in diuination, had foretold Arbaces this destined Empire, and was promised for his share the Babylonian principality. Thus the Medes, Babylonians, and Arabians, enterprising rebellion, assembled to the number of foure hundred thousand, whom Sardanapalus ouerthrew in battell twice; but being still animated by ^o Belus predictions, which (said hee) the Gods by the Starres fore-signified: and by corrupting of the Bactrian Armie, sent to succour the King, and adioyning themselues to the enemy, they at the third battell ouerthrew the forces of Sardanapalus, ledde by Salamenus his wiues brother. into Niniue, trusting to a prophecie, That the Cittie should neuer be taken till the Riuer were enemy to it. After two yeares siege, by extreame raines, the Riuer swelling ouerflowed part of the City, and cast downe twentie furlongs of the walls. Whereupon despayring (as seeming to see God and man against him) he, which before had chambered himselfe with women, and accustomed himselfe to the Distaffe, in a womans both heart and habite; now in a manly resolution (if it may not more fitly be called a Feminine Dissolution, which thus runneth from that danger which it should encounter) gathered his treasures together, and erecting a frame in his Pallace, there burnt them, himselfe, his wiues and Eunuchs together. The Ashes, vnder pretence of a Vow thereof, made to Belus, Belesus obtained of Arbaces the new Conquerour and Monarch, to carry to Babylon. But the couenage being knowne, and Belesus condemned for the treasures, which with the ashes he had conueyed, Arbaces both gaue them, and forgaue them; adding the praefecture of the Babylonians, according to promise. ^a Some say that Belesus, whom they call Phul Beloch, shared the Empyre with him, Arbaces reigning ouer the Medes and Persians, the other ouer Niniue and Babylonia: following herein the forged Metasthenes, who (as Ammius maketh him to say) out of the Sufian Librarie penned his Historie, hauing before fabled a Catalogue out of Berosus of the ancient Kings, contrary to that which out of the fragments of the true Aerosus before is deliuered.

Sardanapalus is written (saith ^b Scaliger in his Notes vpon Eusebius) with a double ll. Sardanapallus, a name fitting to his effeminate life. $\pi\alpha\lambda\lambda\prime\&$ and $\rho\alpha\lambda\lambda\prime\&$ signifie the same, whence are those words of Cicero 3. De Repub. Sardanapallus ille vitij multo quam nomine ipso deformior. Sardanapalus built Tarsus and Anchiale (saith Eusebius) at the same time: the one famous for the most famous Diuine that euer the Sunne saw (except the Sunne of Righteousnesse himselfe) Paul the Apostle and Doctor of the Gentiles: The other for the Authors Monument and stony Image, ^c with this Assyrian Epigramme; Sardanapalus, the sonne of Anacyndaraxis, built Anchiale and Tarsus in one day; and thou O stranger, eate, drinke, play. And Verses were annexed, which I haue thus Englished:

*Mortall, thou knowest thy selfe: then please thine appetite
With present dainties: Death can yeeld thee no delight.
Loe, I am now but dust: whilome a Prince of might.
What I did eate I haue; and what my greedy minde

This his Legacie hee hath bequeathed to all Epicures, the liuing Sepulchres of themselves, breathing graues: (not of so many Creatures onely better than themselves, which they deuoure, but) of Reason, Nature, Religion, Soule, and (if it were possible) of God, which all lie buried in these swine, couered with the skins of Men.

^d Let vs eate and drinke, for to morrow we shall die. Who knoweth whether Paul did not allude to this speech of the Founder of his Cittie? This subuersion of the Assyrian Empire was Anno mundi 3145. after Buntingus account. Of the Medes see more in their proper place.

The Babylonian Empire renewed by Nabonassar, continued till Cyrus, of which times we haue little record but in the Scripture, as neyther of those Assyrian Kings, which before had captiued Israel, and inuaded Iuda. Senacherib is famous, euen in the Ethnike history, although they had not the full truth. For thus Herodotus ^e telleth, That Senacherib King of the Arabians and Assyrians warred on Egypt, where Sethon (before Vulcans Priest) then raigned: who being forsaken of his souldiers, betooke him to his deuotion, amidst the which hee fell asleepe. And the god appearing, promised ayde, which he performed, sending an Armie of Mice into the Armie of Senacherib, which did eate his Souldiers quiuers, and the leathers of their shields, and armour, insomuch, that the very next day they all fled. In witnesse whereof, the Image of the King, made of stone, standeth in the Temple of Vulcan, holding a Mouse in his hand, uttering these wordes; He that looketh on me, let him be religious. This Historie the Egyptians, in vanitie and ambition, had thus peruerted and arrogated to themselves.

Fancius and Osiander make Nabopolassar and Nabuchodonosor to be one and the same, and diuers Commenters vpon Daniel hold the same opinion, whom Scaliger and Calusius confute at large. Nabopolassar is supposed to begin his raigne Anno Mundi 3325, which hee continued nine and twentie yeares: in his ^x seuenteenth year Nebuchadnezzar (so the Masorites misse-call him, saith Scaliger) or Nabuchodonosor his sonne sent by him, to subdue the rebellious Egyptians, Iewes, and Palestinaians: at which time he caried away Daniel into captiuitie. He began his raigne Anno Mundi 3354. and in the yeare 3360. destroyed Ierusalem. In the yeare 3386. Eulmerodach his sonne succeeded him, whom Neriglefforus (as Scaliger ^z affirme:h) slew, thereby to aduance his owne soane the Nephew of Nabuchodonosor, called Laborosarchadus, to the Scepter; which himselfe swaied as Protector in the minoritie of his sonne. But he being dead, and his sonne more fit for a chamber then a Throne, Nabonidus conspired against him, and slew him. This Nabonidus, saith he, is Darius Medus, and Laborosarchadus is that Baltasar mentioned by Daniel, after Scaligers interpretation of the Prophet out of Berosus and Meqasthenes.

y Berosus apud Iosephum contrā App. lib. 1. Calusius. z Animaduers. in Eusebium, pag. 85. D. Willet holdeth otherwise, Com. in Dan. 6.

It is a world to see how the Catholikes (so they call themselves) sweat in finding out that Nabuchodonosor mentioned in Iudith 1. Pintus would make it a common name to the Babylonian Kings, as Pharao to the Egyptians: Pererius will haue two of the name; others will haue him to be Cyrus; others, Cambyses, Artaxerxes, Ochus. Once, Babel is a Mother of confusion to her children, and makes them babble, while they will Canonize Apocrypha-Scriptures.

Cyrus ended the Babylonian Monarchie, and hauing wonne Babylon, and taken Darius Medus at Borsippa, he gaue him his life, and the gouernement of Carmania. An. Mundi 3409. As Nabuchodonosor had by Edict proclaimed the God of Daniel, so Cyrus ended the captiuitie of his people; giuing libertie to such, as would, to returne. But many Iewes abode there still, and thence sent their yearely offerings to the Temple. In the time of Artabanus the Parthian (when Caligula tyrannized at Rome) ^{*} Asimans and Anileus, brethren of the Iewish Nation, grew mightie, and haughtie withall, forgetting God and themselves, which caused the Babylonians to conspire against them, and (after the death of the brethren, with thousands of their partakers) they slew in Seleucia fiftie thousand of the Iewish Nation. Neerda and Nisibis were then much peopled by the Iewes. And thus Religion partly held the ancient course, partly was mixed (according to the custome of Conquests) with the Persian, Macedonian, Parthian, besides the Iewish and Syrian, vntill the Apostles preached here the Christian veritie.

* Ioseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 12.

About the same time, Helena and her sonne Izates King of Adiabena (which is in these parts of Assyria) became Iewish Profelytes. ^a Seleucia built by Seleucus (as it were the marriage-Chamber of Euphrates and Tigris, which there meete and mixe their waters: Nature being by mans industrie forced to yeeld to the match) as Plinie saith, for that purpose, emptied Babylon of her Inhabitants, and inherited her name also, with her people. It was from Babylon ninetie miles, or, as some reade it, fortie, inhabited with sixe hundred thousand Citizens. To spoile the spoyler, the Parthians built Ctesiphon three miles from thence, and failing of their purpose, Vologesus built another Towne by, called Vologesocerta. Yet did Babylon it selfe remaine (but not it selfe) in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus, and after.

a Seleucia was built by Seleucus Nicator on a channel digged out of Euphrates into Tigris. Plin. l. 6. cap. 26.

Ortelius thinketh that Bagdat was called Babylon (as Seleucia before had beene) because it stood neare to the place where Babylon had stood. For that old Babylon in ^b Pausanias time, had nothing left standing but the Temple of Bel, and the walls; sometimes, saith he, the greatest Citie that euer the Sunne saw.

b Pausanias Arcad. lib. 8.

In Ieromes time, ^c within those walls were kept beasts for the Kings game. It was after inhabited with many thousands of Iewes, and was laid euen with the ground, as

Iof. Scaliger^c affirmeth in the year, after the Iewish account 4797. and after the Christian, 1037. Master Fox^d hath a little^d lengthned the date and fate thereof, shewing that Almaricus King of Jerusalem rased and ruined it, and that it was neuer after inhabited Ann. 1170. There now^e remaineth nothing but the small part of that great Tower, eyther of ornament, or of greatnesse, or of place inhabited.

Before that time was Bagded built by Bugiasar, as^e Barrinus calleth him, or after f Scaliger, Abugephar Elmantzur, who beganne to reigne in the one hundred thirtie and fixe, and died in the one hundred fiftie and eight yeare of their Hegeira. Scaliger and s Lydyate agree of this place (which in their Emendations of Time disagree so eagerly) that it was Seleucia, or built in the place, and of the ruines therof: an opinion not improbable, as theirs is altogether which thinke the present Bagded to be the olde Babylon. The storie of this Bagded or Baldach, and her Chalifs. ye may reade in^e our Saracenicall Historie. Authours agree, that Haxlon the Tartar sacked it, about the yeare one thousand two hundred and threescore. Mustratzen being then Chalipha, the foure and fiftieth, and last of those Saracenicall Popes. He found a miserable death, where others with miserablencsse seeke a blessed life, being shut vp and starued amidst those Treasures, whereof he had store, which niggardise forbade him to disburse in his owne defence.

There is yet a bone left of this Calipha's carkasse, or some ghost and shadow of that great and mightie body, I meane that ancient name and power of the Calipha's, which magnificent Solyman the Turkish Emperour, in his conquest 1534. would seeme to acknowledge, in accepting the royall ensignes of that new conquered state at the handes of their Calipha: a ceremonie which the Soldans in Egypt and Persia vsed, more for forme then necessitie; this Assyrian and that Egyptian Caliph hauing but gesture and vesture, the Soldans themselues enjoying both body and soule of this authoritie.

In the yeare one thousand one hundred fiftie nine, the Riuer Tygris ouerflowed Bagded, and desolated many Cities. *Barrinus*ⁱ affirmeth out of the Arabian and Persian Tarigh, which he saith he had seene, that Bagded was built by the counsell of an Astrologer, a Gentile named Nobach, and hath for ascendent Sagittarius, was finished in foure yeares, and cost eighteene millions of gold. These studies of Astrologie did there flourish. One Richardus^k a Frier Preacher saith, That here was an Vniuersitie, the Sudents whereof were maintained at publique charge, of which number himselfe was one. That Caliph that fonnded it, for the preventing of sects, banished Philosophie out of these Schooles, and accounted him a bad Saracen which was a good Philosopher. The reason whereof grew from some, which, reading Aristotle and Plato, relinquished Mahomet.

^l Marco Palo or Paulus the Venetian saith, that they studied here in his time, the Law of Mahomet, Necromancie, Geomancie, Physiognomy, Physicke, and Astronomie: And that it was then a great Staple of the Indian Commodities. This was within few yeares after the Tartar had won it. He addeth, that there were many Christians in these parts; and that in the yeare one thousand two hundred twenty and fise, in derision of the Gospel, the Calph commanding by a day that the Christians should remoue a mountaine in testimonie of their faith, according to the wordes of Christ, or else to abide the perill: this was effected by a Shoemaker, and the day in remembrance thereof yeerely solemnized with fasting the Euen.

The Iewes goe still to visite the Denne which is there shewed, as the place of Daniels' imprisonment, with his terrible Gaclers, or fellow-prisoners, as Master Allen tolde me.

A certain Merchant (the Discourse of whose voyage^m Ramusius hath published) speaketh ofⁿ Orpha, a towne in the way from Byr to Babylon, wherein the people foolishly suppose, that Abraham offered Isaac: at which time (say they) there sprang a fountaine which watereth their Countrey, and driueth their Mills. Here was a Christian Temple called Saint Abraham, after turned into a Mahometane Moschee, and now called Abrahams Well, into which if any enter so many times (they haue a set number)

Sixe miles from hence is a Well holden in like sacred account, which cureth Leprosies. Nisibis, Carræ, and Edessa, were chiefe Citties of Mesopotamia: at Edessa reigned Abogarnus, betwixt whom and our Sauour passed (if we may belecue it) those Epistles yet extant.

At Carrhæ there was a Temple of the Moone, in which, they which sacrificed to the goddess Luna were subiect to the government of their wiues: they which sacrificed to the god Lunus were accounted their wiues Masters. He saith, that the Babylonians allowed marriages of parents and children. Cuse is two dayes iourney from Bagdet, religious for the buriall of Hali and his sonnes, Hassan and Ossain: whereunto is resort of Pilgrims from Persia, whose Kings were wont hereto be crowned. But this City Curio calleth Cusa, assigneth it to Arabia, and saith that of this accident it was called Massadale, or the house of Ali, slaine here by Muam his competitor.

Mesopotamia is now called Diarbech. The chiefe Citties in it are Orfa, of seuen miles compasse, famous, say soine, for the death of Crassus. Caramit the mother-Cittie of the country, of twelue miles compasse. Mosul and Merdin, of which in the next Chapter. Betweene Orpha and Caramit, was the Paradise of Aladenles, where he had a fortresse destroyed by Selim. This his Paradise was like to that which you shall find in our Persian Historie. Men by a potion brought into a sleep, were brought into this supposed Paradise, where at their waking they were presented with all sensfull pleasures of musicke, damosels, dainties, &c. which (hauing had some taste of another sleepe drinke) after came againe to themselues. And then did Aladenles tell them, That he could bring whom he pleased to Paradise, the place where they had beene: and if they would commit such murders, or haughty attempts, it should be theirs. CHAP. XIII.

Of Ninie and other neighbouring Nations.

We haue hitherto spoken of Babylonia, but so, as in regard of the Empire, and some other occurrents, necessity now and then compelled vs to make excursions into som other parts of Assyria, Mesopotamia, &c. And I know not how, this Babylon causeth confusion in that Sea of affaires, and in regard of the diuision of the pens (as somtimes of tongues) of such as haue written thereof. Hard it is to distinguish betweene the Assyrian and Babylonian Empire, one while vniued, another while diuided, as each party could most preuaile: and no lesse hard to reconcile the Ethnike and Diuine History touching the same. Ptolemy straitneth Assyria on the North, with part of Armenia nere the riuer Niphates; on the West with Mesopotamia; on the South with Susiana; and Media on the East. But her large Empire hath enlarged the name of Syria. & of Assyria (which names the Greeks did not wel distinguish) to many countries in that part of Asia. The Scripture deriueth Syria from Aram, and Assyria from Asbur. Both were in their times flourishing, and mention is made from Abrabams time, both of the warres and Kingdomes in those parts: yea before, from Asbur and Nimrod, as already is shewed.

u Lib. 6. cap. 1.

Mesopotamia is so called, and in the Scripture Aram or Syria of the waters, because it is situate betweene Euphrates and Tygris: the countries Babylonia, and Armenia, confining the same on the North and South. Whereas therefore we haue in our former Babylonian relation discoursed of Assyria, extending the name after a larger reckoning: here we consider it more properly. Euphrates is a Riuer very swift; for they which goe to Bagdet buy their boats at Birra, which serue them but one voyage, and sell them at Felugia for seuen or eight which cost fifty, because they cannot returne. But Tygris is swifter: the Armenians bring victuals downe the same to Bagdet, on rafts made of Goats skins, blown full of wind, and boords laide ypon them, on which they

they lade their goods; which being discharged they open the skins and carry them backe on Camels. Dionysius and Strabo tell of this riuer, that it passeth through the Lake Thonitis without mixture of waters by reason of this swiftnesse, which also giueth it the name; for the Medes call an Arrow Tygris. Lucan saith it passeth a great way vnder ground, and weary of that burthensome iourney, riseth againe as out of a new fountaine.

The chiefe Citie in these parts was Ninive, called in Ionas,^a A great and excellent Citie of three dayes iourney. It had (I borrow the words of our reuerend Diocesan)^b an ancient testimony long before in the booke of c Genesis. For thus Moses writeth, That Ashur came from the land of Sbinar, and built Ninueh and Rebobot, and Calah, and Resin. At length he singlet out Ninueh from the rest, and setteth a speciall marke of prebeminence vpon it, This is a great Cittie: which honour, by the iudgement of the most learned (though standing in the last place) belongeth to the first of the foure Citties, namely to Ninueh. Others^d imagined (but their coniecture is without ground) that the foure Citties were closed vp within the same walls, and made but one, of an vnusuall bignesse.

Some ascribe the building of Ninueh to Ninus the sonne of Belus: of whom it tocke the name, to be called eyther Ninus, as we reade in Pliny; or after the maner of the Hebrewes, Ninueh. They conceine it thus, That when Nimrod had built Babylon, Ninus disdainyng his gouernement, went into the fields of Ashur, and there erected a Cittie after his owne name, betweene the riuers Lycus and Tygris. Others suppose that: be affinity betwixt these names, Ninus and Ninueh deceived profane writers touchyng the author therof, and that it tocke to name Ninueh, because it was beautifull or pleasant. Others holde opinion that Ashur and Ninus are but one and the same person. And lastly, to conclude, the iudgment of some learned, is, that neither Ashur nor Ninus; but Nimrod himselfe was the founder of it. But by the confession of all, both sacred and Gentile Histories, the Citie was very spacious, hauing foure hundred and fourescore furlongs in circuit, when Babylon had sewer almost (as some report) by an hundred; and as afterwards it grew in wealth and magnificence, so (they write) it was much more enlarged. Raphael Volaterranus affirmeth, That it was eight yeares in building, and not by sewer at once then ten thousand workmen. There was no Citie since, by the estimation of Diodorus Siculus, that had like compasse of ground or statelinesse of walls: the height whereof was not lesse then an hundred foot; the breadth sufficiently capable to haue receiued three Carts on a row: and they were furnished and adorned besides with fifteen hundred Turrets. Thus far our reuerend and learned Bishop.

Diodorus c telleth out of Ctesias, that Ninus, after he had subdued the Egyptians, Phenicians, Syrians, Cilicians, Phrygians, and others, as farre as Tanais, and the Hircanians, Parthians, Persians, and other their neighbours, he built this Cittie. After that, he led an Armie against the Bactrians of seuentene hundred thousand footmen, and two hundred thousand horse: in which expedition he tooke Semiramis from her husband Menon, who therefore (impatient of loue and grieffe) hanged himselfe. He had by her a sonne of his owne name, and then died, leauing the Empire to his wife. His Sepulchre was nine furlongs in height (each of which is sixe hundred feete) and ten in breadth. The credite of this History I leaue to the Author, scarce seeming to agree with Moses narration of the building of Ninueh, any more then Semiramis building of Babylon. Som write That Semiramis abusing her husbands loue, obtained of him the swaying of the Empire for the space of fiue dayes; in which she depriued him of his life, and succeeded in his estate.

But least the name of this Cittie call vs backe againe too much to those Assyrian Relations, before dilated as much as concerneth our purpose; let vs see what e in be said of their Religion here. Of this we finde little, but as before is shewed of the Babylonians.

Nisroch was the Idoll, in whose Temple Senacherib was slaine by his owne sonnes. But what this Nisroch was, I cannot finde. Certaine it is, that he which had vpbraided confidence in the true God, findes his Idoll, euen in the place and time of his worship, his Traitor; and hee which had blasphemed the God of heauen, findes Heauen and Earth, and his owne Bowels, against him.

Venus Vrania is reckoned among the Assyrian deuotions, and Adad was their chiefe God, which they interpret One, (and Macrobius the Sunne, which, as before is said they worshipped) and Atargatis, the Earth. Felus also was here worshipped, as witnesse Dion, Eusebius, and Cyrillus.

Lucian saith, That the Assyrians sacrificed to a Doue; the touching of which Fowle required much ceremonie for expiation: Whereto accordeth the fable, that Semiramis was turned into a Doue.

Concerning Adad and Atargatis, Macrobius saith, That the Assyrians ascribe all power to these two. The Image of Adad shined with raies or beames downwards, defoging the Sunnes force: That of Atargatis, with beames vpwards, as it were ascribing to the heauenly influence all her plentie: vnder the same Image were the shapes of Lyons, as also the Phrygians fained the Mother of the Gods, that is, the Earth, to be borne on Lyons. But of this Atargatis more in the next Chapter.

Jonas was sent to preach to the great Citie of Niniue, as some thinke in the dayes of Sardanapalus, his next Predecessor. Broughton (with some other) thinketh in the daies of Pul, or Phul-assur. Their repentance staid that iudgement. Nabum after denounced the like iudgement, which accordingly came to passe. Phraortes King of the Medes (mentioned in the former chapter) besieged it. His sonne Cyaxares succeeded in the Kingdome, and in this siege. After that, the Scythians inuaded Media, and held it eight and twentie yeares, according to the prophetic of Jeremie 49. 24. and in the same Expedition obtained Niniue. But Cyaxares after preuailed against the Scythians, and Astyages his Sonne ouer-turned and destroyed Niniue, that it should no more be a receptacle or encouragement to the Assyrians, to rebell against the Medes. Nabum threatneth opening of the gates of the Riuers, and destruction to the Temple, as Tremellius readeth it, noting thereon the casting downe of the Forts on Tigris, and amongst them the Temple of Belus there erected; out of whose notes on the first Chapter of Nabum, I inserted the former Relation. Herodotus in the Historie hereof saith, That Phraortes there perished in the siege, with most part of his Armie. Cyaxares, to reuenge his Fathers death, renewed the siege, but was not able to hold his owne against the Scythians, vntill, after eight and twentie yeares, that the Scythians had enioyed the Empire of Asia (vnder pretence of feasting being entertained in a banquet) the most of them, in their drunkenesse, were slaine by the Medes: and so the Scythians loosing what before they had gotten, Cyaxares recouered the Empire, and destroyed Niniue. Thus was that Citie destroyed, whose Riches, Beautie, Antiquitie, Largenesse, and Puissance, the Scripture so often mentioneth.

A man may compare Ecbatana of the Medes, Babylon on Euphrates, and Niniue on Tigris, to the Triumviri at Rome: So did they both emulate and share the Easterne Empire, as each could make her selfe strongest; now Babylon, another while Niniue, and sometime Ecbatana preuailed; which is the cause of no small difficultie in these Histories, Master Cartwright, an eye-witnesse, hath beheld (hee saith) the ruines of this Citie, and agreeth with Diodorus in the inequalitye of the sides: two of which contained an hundred and fiftie furlongs, the two other but fourescore and ten on a side.

Mosul is supposed to be Niniue, happily for the nearenesse, or for that (as a post-hume issue) it hath sprung from the former. The ashes yet haue not yeelden such a Phoenix as the former was, rather a witnesse of the others mightinesse, saith gr. Ant. Sherley, and Gods iudgement, then of any magnificence in it selfe. Mosul is in fame for Clorb of Gold, and Silke, for fertilitie, and for the Patriarchall Sea of the Nestorian Christians, whose authoritie stretched to Cathay and India. Merdin, a towne on the same Riuers, is also a Patriarchall Sea of the Chaldees (or Mahumetane Sect)

q Magin, Geogr. Assyria (saith q Maginus) is now called by Niger, Adrinfa; by Girara, Azemia; by Pinetus, Mosul; by Mercator, Sarh; and of Castaldus, Arzerum. It sometime contained the Prouinces Arapachite, Adiabena, and Sittacene, now called (after some) Botan, Sarca, and Rabia.

r I. Boem. l. 1. Boemus & telleth of a strange fashion, anciently vsed in Assyria; That the maides which were marriageable were yearly brought forth in publike, and set to sale to such as would marrie them. The monie which was giuen for the fairest, was giuen to the more deformed for their portion in marriage.

The Assyrians vsed to wash themselves daily, but chiefly after carnall companie.

As for the Saracenicall Religion, we shall more fitly handle the same by it selfe, then tediously repeat the same things. For this therefore, and other Countries subiect to Turkish or Persian seruitude, the Reader may reade of their superstitions in their due place, when we speake of the Saracens, Turkes, and Persians. The relation of their Christian Rites belong to another Tome.

But let vs come out of Assyria into Syria; the Histories of which are not a little, as is said, confounded together, and many Rites were common to them both, and to all these parts, from the Persian gulfe to Asia the lesse, as being so often subiect to one Empire, or rather still parts of that one Empire, which receiued often alterations vnder the Assyrians, Babylonians, Medes, Persians, Macedonians, Scythians, Parthians, &c.

Y R I A is called, in Scripture, Atam, of Aram the sonne of * Shem, as before is said. And Strabo calleth the Syrians Arammæi. Hence also his a Arimi are deriued, and Arami (lib. 13.) It is diuersly bounded by diuers Authors: some confounding the names of Syria and Assyria. Eustathius doth reckon these fiue parts thereof, viz. Commagena, Seleucide, Cœlesyria, Phœnicia, and Iudæa. b Mela extendeth it further, and c Plinie nameth, as part of Syria, Palæstina, Iudæa, Cœle, Phœnicie, Damascena, Babylonia, Mesopotamia, Sophene, Commagene, Adiabene, Antiochia. And in this large sense doth d Postellus and Brocardus stretch it beyond Tigris Eastward from the Mediterranean Sea, and from Armenia to Arabia. But Dom. Niger, and before him e Ptolemie (whom wee especially follow) make it a Butte on the North vpon Cilicia, and part of Cappadocia, by the mount Amanus; on the South, vpon Iudæa, and part of Arabia Petræa; on the East, vpon Arabia Deserta and Euphrates; on the West, vpon the Syrian Sea.

This Countrie is thought to haue bene the habitation of our first Parents, before the flood, and of Nesab and his sincerer Familie (as wee haue said) after. Yet how soone, and how much, they degenerated in the wicked off-spring of cursed Cham, whose posteritie peopled a great part hereof, till they were thence by the Israelites expelled, the Scripture is sufficient recerd. Yea, euen from Noahs time did they deriue their Idolatric, as appeareth by f Lucianus Narration of the Syrian Goddesse, which hee partly saw with his eyes, and partly receiued of the Priests report. This Goddesse was with godlesse Rites serued and obserued at Hierapolis; which, although Strabo placeth it beyond the Riuer in Mesopotamia, is by h Plinie accounted

The Citie he thinketh to haue received the name Hierapolis (Holy Citie) of these holy things here obserued; in which respect it giueth place to none other place in Syria; hauing a stately Temple, enriched with gifts statues, and (as they esteemed them) miracles. Arabia. Phœnicia Babylonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Assyria, brought her presents, and celebrated her solemne Feasts.

There was another Hierapolis in Phrygia, wherein was a famous Temple of Apollo, with a Cane or Vault vnder it deadly to all entres but the Priests yea to the birds also which flew euer it. Damas. in vita Iſidor. ep. Phil. 242.

This Temple was (in the Syrians opinion) first founded by Deucalion, whose Historie you would thinke Lucian had learned of the Hebrewes, not of the Syrians, or Greekes; solitely doth he expresse the Infidelitie and crueltie of the old world; the manner of the flood; the Arke wherein, with himselfe, his wife, and children, hee saued also all other creatures that liued on the earth, which came to him by couples, by dispensation of Iupiter. Hereunto these Hieropolitans adde, That in their Territorie was made a great Clift, which swallowed vp those waters: which Clift (but then very little) was shewed to our Author: to whom also they reported, That in memorie hereof, Deucalion instituted that Rite, which to his time continued; that twice euery yeare, nor the Priests only, but many out of all Syria, Arabia, and beyond Euphrates, went to the Sea, and from thence brought water, which they poured downe in the Temple that he had built ouer that Clift vnto Iuno; all which water was receiued into the same.

Some ascribe the building of this Temple to Semiramis, in honour of her mother Derceto: others to Attes, for the worship of Rhea: which Attes was a Lydian, and was Author of the superstitions of Rhea, to the Phrygiens, Lydians, and Samothracians: but the opinion most probable was, that Dionysus or Bacchus was founder of it; two substantiall witnesses, besides others, affirming the same, namely two Phalli; or Priapi (huge Images of the priue part of a man) erected at the entrie of the Temple, with an inscription, That Bacchus had consecrated them to Iuno. That ancient foundation being consumed by Time, this later Temple was erected by queene Stratonice, who being in a dreame enioyned this office of Iuno, and for neglecting the same, punished with sicknesse, vowed vpon her recouerie to performe it. The King ioyned in Commission with her, as Generall of his Armie, and ouer-seer of these holy workes, a beautifull yong man, named Combabus, who fearing what might happen, geided himselfe, and closing those his dismembred members (first for their preſeruatiō embalmed) in a boxe sealed, as some great treasure, he committed to the Kings fidelitie, to be safely reserued to his vse. Which his practise saued his life accordingly, being after produced to cleare him of adulterie with Stratonice, which had been laid to his charge by his enuious accusers, and by the jealous King greedily apprehended. In memorie whereof, a brazen statue of Combabus was set vp in this Temple, and both then (whether to solace Combabus, or by inspiration of Iuno) and yearly euer after, many in this Temple gelded themselves, and put off together the nature and habit of men, attying themselves like women. These Man-women Priests were called Galli.

The Temple was built in the middest of the Citie, compassed with a double wall; the Porch looking Northwards, almost an hundred fadome high; where stood those Priapi aforesaid, about the height of three hundred fadome: vp to one of these one ascendeth twice a yeare, and abideth in the top thereof seuen dayes. He carryeth with him a long chayne, which hee letteth downe, and thereby draweth vp to him such things things as he needeth. Many offer gold, and siluer, and brasse, and one appointed receiueth their names, which he sheweth to him aboue, and he maketh his praiers for e-uery of them, sounding, while he praieith, a little Bell. The Temple within shineth with gold, and the Roofe is wholly of this mettall; it yeeldeth so fragrant a smell, that the garments of those, which come thither, retaineth this sent long after.

There is also another inner Roome or Quire, whereinto the chiefe of the Priests only haue entrance; yet is it open without any doore. In this Sanctuarie are the Images of the Gods; Iupiter, supported with Bulls, but Iuno sitteth vpon Lyons, holding in one hand a Scepter, and in the other a Distaffe, in some thing or other resembling diuers other Goddeses, by the Egyptians, Indians, Armenians, Babylonians, Aethiopians, and Medes, adorned with many Jewels: and among the rest shee hath on her head a stone called the lampe, of the effect, yeelding light in the night season, as if all the Temple were hanged with Lamps. This statue goeth twice a yeare to the Sea, for the water before mentioned: neither of the Syrians is called by any name, but only the Image, not expressing of whom.

In the Temple is the Image of Apollo clothed, with a beard, (contrarie to the custome of the Greekes, and in a farre more glorious manner) giuing forth Oracles: for it moueth it selfe; which, the Priests espying, lift it vp aloft (otherwise it sweateth and moueth it selfe forward neuertheless) and being thus supported, it turneth it selfe and them about, and leapeth from one place to another. Then doth the chiefe of the Priests, make supplication and request for all things: which if it miil keth, it goeth backwards: if it approueth, it carrieth them forwards: and without these Oracles they enterprise nothing neither priuate nor sacred: and Lucian, saith he, saw it leauing the Priests (the supporters) and mouing it selfe about in the ayre. Here are also the statues of Atlas, Mercurie, and Lucina, and without, a great brasen Altar, and many brasen Images of Kings and Priests, and many others recorded in Poets and Histories. Among others standeth the Image of Semiramis, pointing to the Temple with her finger, which (they say) is the figue of her repentance, who hauing giuen commandment to the Syrians, to worship no other God but her selfe, was by plagues (sent from heauen) driuen to reuoke that former Edi&e, and thus seemeth to acknowledge and point out another Deitie. There were also places inclosed, wherein were kept and fed sacred Oxen, Horses, Eagles, Beares, Lyons.

The Priests were in number aboue three hundred, some for killing sacrifices; some for offerings; some ministring fire to others at the Altar; their garment all white; their head covered; and euery yeare was choten a new High Priest, which alone was clothed with purple, and a golden head-tire. A great multitude there was besides of Musicians, Galls, and Propheticall women: they sacrificed twice a day, whereat they all assembled. To Iupiter they vse neither song, nor instrument, in sacrifice; as they doe to Iuno.

Not farre hence was a Lake of two hundred fadome depth, wherein were preferred sacred Fishes, and in the middest thereof an Altar of stone, crowned alwaies with Garlands, and burning with odours. They haue a great feast which they call the going downe to the Lake, when all their Idols descend thither.

Their greatest and most so'emne feast was obserued in the Spring, which they called the fire: which they solemnized in this sort. They felled great trees, and laid them in the Church-yard (as we may terme it) and bringing thither Goats, Sheepe, and other beasts, they hanged them on these trees; and together with them, fowles, and garments, and workes of gold and siluer, which being set in due order; they carrie the Images of the Gods about the trees, and then set all on fire. They resort to this feast out of Syria, and the coasts adioyning, & bring hither their Idols with them: and great multitudes resorting to the sacrifices, the Galls, and those other sacred wights beat and wound each other. Others play on instruments, and others, rauished by diuine furie, prophecie: and then doe the Galls enter into their orders: for the furie rauisheth many of the beholders. Whatsoeuer yong man commeth prepared to this purpose, hurling off his garments, with a great voice he goeth into the middest, and drawing his sword sword geldeth himselfe; and runneth thorow the Citie, carrying in his hands, that which he would no longer carry on his bodie. And into whatsoeuer house he casteth the same, he receiuech from thence his womanish habite and attire. When any of them die, his fellowes carrying him into the Suburbs, couer him and his horse with stones, and may not enter into the Temple in tenen dayes after: nor after the sight of any other carkasse in one day, but none of that familie where one hath died, in thirty daies: and then also with a shauen head. Swine they hold for vncleane beasts. And the * Doue they esteeme so sacred, that if one touch one against his will, he is that day vncleane. This causeth Doues in those parts to multiply exceedingly: neither do they touch Fishes: This because of ^a Derceto, halfe a woman, halfe a fish: that, for Semiramis which was metamorphosed into a Doue. ^b Iulius Hyginus hath this fable, that an egge of maruellous greatnesse fell out of heaven into Euphrates, which the fishes rolled to land: on the same did Doues sit, and hatched there-out Venus, who was after called the Syrian Goddesse, at whose request Iupiter granted the Fishes their heavenly constellation: and the Syrians for that cause eate not their Fish nor Doues, but number them amongst their Gods.

Many are the ceremonies also to be performed of the religious Pilgrims, or Votaries that visite this holy Citie: for before he setteth forth, he cutteth off the haire of his head and browes, he sacrificeth a sheepe, and spreading the fleece on the ground, he kneeleth downe on it, and layeth vpon his head the head and feete of the beast, and prayeth to be accepted: the rest he spenderh in the banquet. Then doth he crowne himselfe, and his fellow pilgrims, and after sets forward on his pilgrimage, vsing for his drinke and washing cold water, and sleepeth alwayes on the ground till his returne home. In this Citie were appointed publike Hostes, for diuers Cities diuers, called DoElors, because they expounded these mysteries: They haue also one manner of sacrificing, to hurle downe the beasts destinied hereunto, from the top of the porch, which die of the fall. They haue a like rite to put their children in a Sacke, and carry them downe, branded first on the necke or palme of the hand: and hence it was that all the Assyrians were branded. The yong men also consecrated their hayre from their Natiuitie, which being cut in the Temple, was there preferued in some boxe of gold or siluer, with the inscription of the owners name thereon. And this did I (saith Lutian) in my youth: and my hayre and name remaine in the Temple still. Of Atergatis, see more in the Chapter of Phœnicea.

^c Suetonius tells of Nero, that he contemned all Religions but this of the Syrian Goddesse: of which also he grew wearie, and defiled her with Vrine. After which he obserued a little Needle, supposed to haue a power of fore-signifying danger: and because soone after he had it, he found out a conspiracie intended against him, he sacrificed thereto three times a day.

Plutarch ^d calleth the Syrians an effeminate Nation prone to teares: and saith, that some of them after the death of their friends haue hidden themselus in Caues, from the sight of the Sunne many daies.

Rimmon the Idoll of the Syrians, and his Temple is mentioned, 2. King. 5. 18. But I haue little certaintie to say of him.

Antiochia built by Seleucus, (to whom, in honor of his memorie, in mount Cassius they obserued sacred solemnities, as to a demi-god) sometimes the seate royall of the Syrian Kings, third Citie of the Roman Empire, third seate of the Christian Patriarkes, and first, where that melodious name of Christian was heard: is now the Sepulchre (saith Boterus) of it selfe, or, (as Niger) a greater wildernesse, wherein it selfe is the least part of it selfe, being left but a small Village (saith ^e another) in the midst of it's owne walles.

About five miles from Antiochia, was that faire and sacred Daphne, which Ortius in his Theater hath presented to the spectarors, with a peculiar description, and of which the elder Authours ^f haue plentifully writren. It was ten miles about: a place euery way enuironed with many stately Cypresses, besides other trees, which suffered not the Sunne to kisse their mother (Earth:) whose lappe was according

A spring there was, deriuing (as men supposed) her water from the Castalian Fountaines, to which ancient superstition (and therefore superstitious Antiquitie) attributed a diuining facultie with like name and force to that at Delphos. This also was furthered by the Legend of Daphne,^k recorded by the Poets, beleueed (and what will not Superstition beleuee, but the truth?) by the credulous multitude: who was said to haue fled from Apollo, and heere turned into a tree. But thus could not Apollo be turned from his loue, which hee continued both to the Tree and place. This was Lettice surable to the lips of vaine youth. ¹ Et quia consimilem luserat (saith amorous Cherea of Iupiter in the Comicke)

There needed no other lecture of sensualitye to them, then this Legend, especially in this schoole, where euery place might be a place of argument (vnder pretence of reason and religion) to shut true Religion, and reason out of the place, especially with schollers greedie of this conclusion.

Iul. Capit. vctus.

Here you might haue heard the whisking winds in a murmuring accent breathing this lustfull Oratorie: the Enamelled floore did offer her more then officious courtesie. (a soft sweet, and inlayed bed) to lie in; the ayre with Temperature, seemed to further Intemperance: The eie of the day, and watchmen of the night were prohibited by the Cypresse roose, with their vnwelcome light, to testifie those workes of darknes, which those guilty boughes couered from discouering: Once, the concurring objects of each sense, did in silence speake and perswade to sensuall pleasure, insomuch that by a generall Decree, Temperance and Temperate men were hence exiled, and scarce would the vulgar allow him the name of a man, which heere would not be transformed into a beast, or would presume, without a Curtesan, to tread on this holy ground. Needs must they go whom the diuell driueth: such God, such religion. Heere were erected sumptuous buildings: the temple of Apollo Daphneus, with a stately Image therein; the work (as was thought) of Seleucus: also Dianas chappel & sanctuary. Iulius Capitolinus writeth that Venus a voluptuous Emperour spent foure summers here, and wintered in Laodicea and Antioch. Seuerus (more truly answering his name) did to death certaine Tribunes, by whose negligence the souldiers here were suffered to rior. The Oracles added renowne to the place, which were deliuered out of these Daphnean waters by a certaine winde or breath. Hadrian the Emperour is reported to haue hence receiued the facultie of Diuining, by dipping a Cypresse leafe in the Fountaine. Iulian resorted hither often for that purpose. But his elder brother Gallus, whom Constantius had called to be Cesar, & after (saith Ammianus) for his outrages executed, had in the time of his abode at Antioch, remoued the bones of Babylas their Bishop, & other holy martyrs his companions in suffering, to this place, where also he built a church. Now when as Iulian in his Persian expedition had sent others to visit all the other Oracles in the Roman Empire, himselfe here consulted with Apollo, (an Apostata Emperour with an Apostata Angell) about the successe of those warres. But all his sacrifices obtained no other answer, then that he could not answer, by the countermand of a more diuine power there liuing in those dead bones. Hereupon Iulian commanded the Christians to remoue those ill neighbours: which they did (saith Theodoret), with a solemne procession, singing the Psalmes & dancing with the hart of David, making this the burthen, and foot of each verse, Confounded be all they that worship grauen Images: wherewith, Iulian enraged, persecuted the Christians. Euagrius affirmeth that he built a temple in honor of Babylas: how truly, I know not. But the True God confounded both the Idol & Idolater, shortly after, calling the one to giue accoūt of his ill employed stewardship; vncertaine whether by diuine or humane hand: and for the other, his temple was consumed with fire from aboue, together with the Image, one pillar wherof remained in Chrysostomes daies. The Pagans attributed this fire to the Christians: and no maruell: for what did not that fire of blind Idolatry (kindled with zeale) attribute to the innocent Christians? herein testifying that it came from hel, & must to hell againe, again, by that hellish Character and impression, of so great fire, and as great darknes. Such is Hell, and such is ignorant Zeale: a fire, but no light. Apollo's Priest by no torments could be forced to confesse any author thereof: and the Officers of the Temple affirmed it was fire frō heauen, which certain country-people cōfirmed by their own sight. Julian, to satisfie his rage, caused some Temples of the Christians to be burned. Nicephorus m telleth of the continuance of this Daphnean groue, honored with Buildings and spectacles, by Mammianus & Chosroes. Apollo's Image was made of wood, covered ouer with gold. Theodosius forbad the cutting of any of those Cypresses.

They had heere a tale of Typhon a huge Dragon, which diuided the earth, as he went seeking to hide himselfe, and perished by the stroke of a Thunder-bolt. Thus did he indent a passage for this Riuer. Not farre hence was a sacred Caue, called Nymphicæum: also Mount Casius, and Anticassius, and Heraclia; and nigh therto the Temple of Minerua. They had not any Temple or Statue to this God, an Altar onely and Reuerence was heere seene: Vespasian did in this place offer sacrifice, where Basilides the Priest viewing the entralls, foretold him of his good successe. Damascius in the life of Isidorus, mentioneth a Syrian Goddesse, named Babia, of whom infants newly borne, wereby the Syrians, especially at Damascus, called also Babia: perhaps they were esteemed vnder her tutelage; and our English word, Babes, may hence borrow the originall.

Of the Syrian Kings, and alteration in Government, and Religion, in those Countries.

SYRIA quickly grew into Peoples and Kingdomes, although Time hath long since deuoured both them and their memories. Of Menon the husband of Semiramis (mentioned by Diodorus) is spoken before. Adadzer was in Dauid's time, * King of Aram Zoba, which some take for Chobal in Syria, some for Sophene in Armenia, and some for the Nubei: whatsoeuer they were; Dauid made them tributarie Anno mundi 2903. Benhadad, Hazael, and others, the Scripture also mentioneth: but certaine succession we finde not recorded of these Syrian Kings, till the time of Alexander, which conquering all from Macedonia, to India, by his unexpected death, left his huge Empire to be shared among his chiefe followers. Seleucus, the sonne of Antiochus, a Macedonian, first, master of the Elephants; then Tribune; after that Deputie of the Babylonians, at last obtained the Kingdome of Asia, Anno Mundi 3638. of whom Appianus thus writeth: The first King of Syria after Alexander was Selencus. called Nicator, because he was of verie great stature; and as a wilde bull had in a sacrifice of Alexander broken loose, he held him with both his hands. He built sixteene Cities, called by the name Antiochia, of his father Antiochus: and sixe Laodicea's, in memorie of his mother Laodice: nine Seleucia's of his owne name: three Apamea's, and one Stratonicea, after the names of his two wiues. His sonne Antiochus Theos was (contrarie to his name) poysoned by his wife: whose sonnes Seleucus, Callinicus, and Antiochus succeeded: and after them Antiochus Magnus, the sonne of Callinicus, who much enlarged his Empire, adding thereto Babylonia, Egypt, and Iudea: but inuading Græcia, prouoked the Romans against him, with whom hee compounded on base and meane conditions: Hee did yet comfort himselfe for his losse among his friends, saying, that he was ^a beholding to the Romanes, that eased him of so waightrie a burthen, and lessened his cares of government: (for they had cooped him in a corner of his Kingdome beyond Taurus.) After this hee was slaine: exhibiting in himselfe a true example of the worlds false-hood, that playeth with Scepters, and vieth Diademes, vsing men like Counters or Figures in numbering and casting accounts, where the same, with a little difference of place, is a pound, shilling. or penie, one, ten, or an hundred. And yet as earthly happinesse herein comes short of heauen, that it is neuer meere and vnmixed, but hath some sowre sauce to relish it: so falleth it as farre short of hell, that not onely hope, but the most miserable hap, hath some glimpse of comfort.

But to come to our Historie. Antiochus his sonne, six-named Epiphānes, and after Epimanes for his furious insolence, (who beganne his raigne Anno mundi 3774.) was first sent to Rome in hostage, for securitie of his fathers faith: and after that Seleucus, his brother (which sent ^b Heliodorus to robbe the Temple at Hierusalem) had a while warmed the Throne, succeeded in the Syrian Kingdome. Of him and his tyrannie Daniel had long before prophesied in the interpretation of Nebuchodonosors Image, ^c whose legges are interpreted to be this Syrian, and the Egyptian Kingdomes, ^{*} both heauie and hard neighbours to the Church in Iudea, lying betwixt them: but more especially in his ^d Visions in the seuenth Chapter. Where, after other things, he fore-telleth of the ten hornes, ^e which are the eight Kings afore-named, and two Egyptian Ptolemies, Euergetes, and Philopater, in their times preuailling in Syria, and infesting Iudea. And the last shall subdue three Kings, which were Ptolemie of Egypt, driuen out of Syria, Seleucus his brother, and Demetrius, to whom, after Seleucus, the right of the Scepter belonged. His policie, and blasphemie, and tyrannie, are also by Daniel plainly fore-signified, and in their euent as fully in the Historie of the Maccabees related. There you may reade his wicked life, and wretched death: Hee tooke Ierusalem ^f Anno Mundi 3781, and slew fourescore thousand people, robb'd the Temple of eighteene hundred talents, and of the holy Vessels; polluted the Temple; forbade the Sacrifice; named it the Temple of Iupiter Olympius; forced men by tortures from their Religion; with other execrable outrages, which would require a iust volume to describe.

As hee was thus madde and raging against the true Religion: so ^g Athenaus sheweth his vanitie in his owne, whose pompous solemnitie at the Daphnean feast hee thus relateth. Antiochus, in emulation to Paulus Emilius, proclaimed this solemnne festiuitie in the Cities of Greece, and performed it at Daphne. First passed in order five thousand men, armed after the Roman manner: next followed five thousand Mysians, and three thousand Cilicians, with Crownes of gold: of Thracians, three thousand, of Galatians five thousand, of whom some had shields of siluer. Twentie thousand Macedonians, and five thousand with shields of brasse: after these, two hundred and fortie couples of champions which should fight in single combate. There followed 1000. Pisæan horse-men, and 3000. of the Citie, the most whereof had Crownes and Vials of gold, other trappings of siluer: Next came the band, called Socia, nothing inferiour in pompe or number: then 1000. extraordinarie, and

and another thousand in the band called Agema. Lastly, the barded horses 1500. all these in purple vestures, which many had embroidered, or embossed with gold: Chariots drawne with 6. horses, 100. and 40. drawne by foure; one drawne by Elephants attended with 36. other. The rest of the pompe is incredible and tedious: 800. youths with golden crownes: 1000. fat Oxen, and 300. persons to attend the sacrifices: 800. Elephants teeth. There were also the Images of all the Gods, and Heroes that can be reckoned, some gilded, some clothed with golden vestures, their fabulous historic being with great pompe annexed. After all these, the Images of Day, Night, Earth, Heaven, Morning, and Noone. Then came a 1000. Boyes, each having a peece of plate of a 1000. drams: 600. with vessels of gold: 80. women were carried in chaires footed with gold, and 500. in others footed with siluer, very sumptuously attired: 200. of them out of basons of gold strewed sweet odours. These spectacles lasted 30. daies. A thousand (and sometimes 1200.) Halls or dining roomes, were furnished for bankets, the King himselfe affecting too officious familiaritie therein, visiting the tables of the baser people, yea and that as a base Minstrell with musick; not of the best instruments, but such as the poorer sort vsed for want of better, as learned Casimbonus hath on that place of Athenaus obserued. So base is the pride of Ambition, tempering a confused distemper; according (in a strange harmonie,) the harshest discord of proude-aspiring, and dejected baseness; where a base and seruile minde begetteth pride, and pride produceth a seruile baseness, a changling, which the doting World fatherech on Humilitie.

Of the death of this Antiochus, the former and second books of the Machabees seeme to disagree: and, which is more strange, the second booke in the first chapter saith, * he and his companie were destroyed in the Temple of Naxa in Persia: and in the ninth chapter saith, that in Media, at Ecbatana, he was smitten with an vncouth disease, and a fall from his Chariot, whereof he died. Some that would haue this historie Canonically, apply it to two Antiochi, as Lyra and Ruperius, and after them Canus: but Bellarmino^b seeing that they will not agree with the times of any other, but Epiphanes, proueth himselfe Epimanes, and runneth mad with loue of that Trent-Minion: affirming that in the Temple of Naxa he fell, but escaped (as^c the King of Sodom is said to fall when Lot was captiued, and yet was not slaine) and after perished, as is in the after-part of the historie expressed; whereas it is there said, that they shut the doores on him, and cut him and his fellows in peeces, and made them shorter by the heads: who yet after this (forsooth) could goe into Media, and there haue a fall from his Chariot. They must haue no delicate stomacks, that will be Iesuits, any thing must downe, when they will vp, especially, if Trent or the Vatican command, though manifest reason and sense (that I say not, Religion) countermand. I enuie not the red hat with these labels. Well fare that modestie of the Authour^d that confesseth his weaknesse: but Anathema to their Anathema's, that enact^e contradictions to be Canonically.

I omit the successours of Antiochus, to wit, Antiochus, Demetrius, Alexander, (who tooke away the golden Image of Victoria out of the Temple at Antioch, in his necessitie: ielking that Iupiter had sent him Victorie, and when he would haue added Iupiter^f to his sacrilege, was chased away by the multitude, and after slaine by Grypus) The rest with the times of their raigne are before expressed. ^g Pompey set an end to these Seleucidan Kings: and the Romans enioyed the Countries of Syria, till the Saracens dispossessed them; whose historie you may reade^h in their due place. The Turkes displaced those Saracens; the Christians of the West, by warre, made those parts Christian; but were expelled againe by the Turkes, and they by the Tartars. The *Manaluke*ⁱ slaues, and their Egyptian Soldan after, held the Syrian Dominion, vntill Selm the great Turke subdued it to the Ottoman Empire, vnder which it still groneth. Of these things this our Historie will acquaint you in the proper reports of these Nations.

Aleppo, is now chiefe Citie of Syria; but Damascus both in elder and later times hath borne the greatest name, being the head of Aram, as^k Esey affirmeth; called of Iulian the Citie of Iupiter, and eye of the whole East, Holie and Great, called also the Trophee of Iupiter, because he there had conquered the Titans. It is interpreted drinking bloud, by ^b Hierom, who telleth (from the Hebrewes tradition) that in this field Kain slew his brother: ^c Chytrens expoundeth it saccus sanguinis, ^d Wolphius deriueth it of two words, signifying bloud and to spoile: which in the times of Hazael and Benhadad, and of Resn it performed: but neuer so much as when the Saracens made it the sinke of bloud and spoile, which they executed on the Christians: ^e and Noradine, Saladine, and the Turkes, fitting themselues and this Citie to the name, before the Aegyptian Sultans, and Ottoman Turkes were Lords of it. Stephanus ascribeth the name to one Ascus a gyant, which cast Dionysius there into the riuer: Or because Damascus, the sonne of Mercury, comming hither out of Arcadia, built it: or because Dionysius there fleyd off the skin of Damascus, which had cut vp his Vines.

The Turkes now call it, as Leunclavius, and Chytrens testifie, Scham. and so is the whole Region called in the Arabian Chronicle, whose extract you may find ^f in our Saracenicall historie.

The Armies of Danid, Ahab, Teglath phalasar preuailed much against it: The Babylonians subverted it: After that the Ptolemys repaired it: Pampe wanne it: Paul hallowed it: The Saracens (as is sayd) polluted it. The Christians in vaine besieged it, in the yeere one thousand one hundred fortie and seuen. ^g Haalon the Tartar, one thousand two hundred threescore and two, obtained it, and about one thousand foure hundred Tamerlane besieged it; and as he had done at Aleppo, filling the ditch with the bodies of captiues and slaine carkasses, cast wood and earth vpon them, and at last forced it and the Castle. He spared the Citie for the Temples sake, which had fortie Porches in the circuite, and (within) nine thousand Lampes of Gold and Siluer. But the Aegyptians by a wile possessing it, hee againe engirt it, and recouered it. He commanded Mahomet the Pope or Chalife, and his priests, which came to meet him, to repaire to the Temple, which they did with thirtcene thousand Citizens, where he burnt them all: and for trionument of his victorie, left three Towers erected of skulles of dead men. The Aegyptians regained and held it till Selim the Turke dispossessed them 1517.

Now in thus many alterations of State, who doubteth of diuersitie in Religions in Syria: First the true Religion in the times of Noah, and the first Patriarkes. Next, those superstitions of Rimmon, and the rest before related, in the Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian, and Roman governments: After which long night, the Sunne of Righteousnesse shone vnto the Syrians, and made a more absolute Conquest then all the former, not by Legions and Armies, but by a handfull of Fishermen, (manifesting his Power in their weakenesse) the Reason of Men, and Malice of Devils, not being able to withstand their Euangelicall weapons, which ^h were mightie through GOD to cast downe holds and bringing into captiuitie every thought to the obedience of CHRIST, insomuch, that hence the Christian world receiued first that name.

And, how sweet would thy name remaine, O Syrian Antiochia, euen now in thy latest fates, which first was christened with the name Christian, hadst thou not outliued thy Christianitie, or rather, (after the soule departed) remained the carkasse of thy selfe; which ceasing to be Christian, hast long since ceased to bee, had not the Diuine hand reserued a few bones of thy carkasse to testifie this his iustice to the world! And what harmonie could haue beene more gratefull to the Gentiles eares, then thy memorie (Damascus) where the Doctor of the Gentiles was first taught himselfe, and made a Teacher of others? But in thee was the Chaire of Pestilence, the Throne of Sathan, the sincke of Mahumetan impietie to the rest of the world, infecting with thy contagion, and subduing with thy force more Nations then euer Paul by preaching conuerted. Syria, first in the first and principall Priuiledges of Mankind, embracing in her rich armes (if some bee right Surueiours) the promised Possession (the Seale of a further and better Inheritance) was with the first subdued to Saracene seruitude: vnder their Caliph, vnder the Turkes, vnder the Christians from the West, vnder the Tartars from the East, vnder the Mamalukes from the South, and from the North the Ottoman, by new successions and vicissitudes of miseries and mischiefs, become a common Stage of blood and slaughter.

And in all these later changes of State, and chaunces of Warre, Religion was the life that quickened those deaths, and whetted those murdering swords: no cruelty or sacrilege against G O D, or man, so irreligious and inhumane, but Religion was pretended to be the cause, and bare the Standard to Destruction; a new Religion alway erected with a new Conquerour. The rest of which, as professing their own peculiar rites, haue their peculiar standing in this field of our Narrations, assigned them: this one (which followeth) as a confusion and gallymaufry of diuers, I thought fittest here to insert.

The Drusians are accounted reliques of the Latine Armies, which here warred against the Turkes for recouerie of the Holy Land: These are circumcised as the Turkes, they take the libertie of Christians, in drinking Wine, and the licentiousness of beasts, in incestuous copulations with their owne daughters. They serue their owne Lords, and are not subiect to the Turkes. Their habitation is not farre from Damasco. Knolles in his Turkish Historie saith, That the right Drusians are not circumcised, otherwise agreeing with the former report; and addeth: That they follow one Isman a Prophet of their owne. A friend of mine, one master Iohn Pountesse, who hath been acquainted with them, saith they are circumcised. Selim and Amurath laboured to depriue them of their freedome, which was in part by Turkish policy, and their owne discords, archieued by Ebrahim the Turkish Bassa Anno 1585. Onely Mon-ogli or Ebneman, a Drusian Lord, kept himselfe out of his hands, and deluded his subtile practises: And thus these Drusians, with some Arabians in the middest of the Ottoman Empire, retaine some freedome from the Turkish thraldome.

Maginus saith, That Tyrus still called Suri, or Sur, is an habitacle of those Drusian Robbers. Some place them betweene Ioppa and Damasco: I thought this the fittest place therefore for their mention, as being accounted to Syria, and neighbours to Damasco, and of this both-potch Religion. The Country hereabouts is repleat cuen naturally with all the blessings the earth can giue to man, for the most part vncultiuated (they are the words of our Honourable Countriman, an eye-witnesse) here and there, as it were sprinkled with miserable Inhabitators, which in their fashion shewed rather the necessitie they had to liue, rather then any pleasure in their liuing.

Of the Theologie, and Religion of the Phœnicians.

Phœnicia is the Sea coast^a of Syria, after Plinie, or that coast or tract bordering on the Sea from Orthosa (now Tortosa) to Pelusium. This Sea coast (saith Andreas Masius)^b was of the Greekes called Phœnicia, and of the Hebrewes peculiarie stiled Chanaan, and the Inhabitants Chananites. So the spies tell Moses, the Canaanites dwell by the Sea. The woman in the Gospell which Mathew calleth a Canaanite, is by Marke named a Syro-phœnician: and the Septuagint in this place, for the kings of Chanaan read the kings of Phœnicia. And in the Scripture it is appellatiuely vsed for^d Merchant, because the Phœnicians or Chananites were famous for Merchandise as appeareth both by diuine and prophane testimonie. Most properlie the Northerlie part is Chanaan or Phœnicia, the Southerne Palestina, although it is sometime extended as we haue said euen to Egypt. Dyonisius (which maketh the Phœnicians the first Marriners, Merchants, and Astronomers) placeth Gaza and Ioppe in Phœnicia. Sachoniatho a Phœnician, supposed to haue liued before the Troian warre, wrote in his own language, the History of his Nation, which Philo Biblius translated into Greeke. This Philo in the beginning of his Worke saith, That his Author, Sachoniatro, as hee was generally learned, so especiallie he searched out those things, which Taautus, called of the Aegyptians Thoyth, of the Greekes Mercurie, the first inuenter of Letters, had written : hee also blamed those, that by Allegories and Tropologies peruert and obscure the Historie of their Gods ; affirming plainly, That the auncient Phœnicians, Aegyptians, and others adored those men for Gods, that had bene the Authors of good things to men, applying to them also the names of those Natural Gods, the Sunne, Moone, &c. so making some Gods mortall, some immortall. According to this Taautus therefore, the first beginnings of all things were a darke disorderd Chaos, and the spirit of the darke aire. Hence proceeded Morb which wee may interpret Mire, from whence issued the feedes and generation of all creatures in the Earth and Heauen ; The plants first, and from them the reasonable Creatures called Thophasunin, that is, the beholders of Heauen, formed in the shape of an Esge. From Morb also came the Sunne, Moone, and Starres. The Sunne by his heate separating these new-formed Creatures, their conflict in the aire produced Thunder, which noyse awaked, and caused to leape out of their earth, this slimie generation ; after of the Winde Colpia, and Baan (which signifieth Night) were borne men, named ^a Age and First-borne ; Age, taught men to liue of the fruites of trees, : of these came Kind and Generation, who being troubled with heate lifted vp their hands to the Sunne, which they tooke for a God, calling him Beelsamen (which signifieth the Lord of Heauen) whom the Greekes call Iupiter. Kind begate Light, Flame, Fire. This last by rubbing of stickes together found out fire : From these descended in succeeding generations those Giants, that left their names to the hilles where they dwelt, Cassius and Libanus, that contended aganist their brother Vson, who first aduentured the sea in the bodies of trees burned, (in which manner the Indians, euen yet, make their canoas or boats) and hee erected two Statues to the Wind and the Fire, whom he adored with the bloud of beasts.

These first men after their death had Statues consecrated to them by posteritie, and yearelie solemnities. To these succeeded others, Hunter, and Fisher, which had two Sonnes, one of which was named Chusor a great Magician : From these descended Amynus and Magus, Authors of Sheepcotes and flockes or heards of Cattell. These were the *Tyean*s, inuenter of Artes, hunting, fishing, building, yron-workes, rents, and such like. To Misor, one of these, was borne Taautus, first Authour of Letters. At that time was borne Elius, and Beruth his wife, which dwelt in Biblos, the Parents of Calus and Terra, (his wife and sister) who deified with rites and ceremonies their father Elius, being torne of wild beasts. To these were borne Saturne, Batilus, Dagon and Atlas,

But Calus taking other wiues, there arose a great quarrell betwixt him and his former, aided herein by by her sonnes : of whome Saturne the eldest, created Mercurie his Scribe, by whose Magicall Artes, and by those Weapons (first by him, and Minerua the daughter of Saturne deuised) Calus was ouerthrowne : who, after two and thirtie yeares warre betwixt them, was taken by his sonne, and deprived of his genitories.

Saturne had issue (besides his daughters Minerua and Proserpina) Amor, Cupid, Saturne, Iupiter Belus and Apollo, of his Sisters, Ascarte, Rhaa, Dione. Then also were borne Typho, Nereus, Pontus, the Father of Neptune. Saturne suspecting his brother Atlas, buried him in the ground, and cast vp an high hill ouer him: where, not long after, was a Temple erected to him. Dagon was inuenter of Tillage, and therefore called ^b Iupiter of the Plough. But Saturne becomming a great Conquerour, bestowed Aegypt on Taautus or Mercurie, who first made a mysterie of their Theologie, as the Sonne of one Thaion the Phœnician priest, first did among the Phœnicians ; applying allegoricall interpretations thereof to Nature ; and instituting rites to Posteritie. This allegoricall Theologie of Taautus was interpreted by Sarmobolus and Tharro. It followeth in the Historie, That it was then a custome in great calamities, for the Prince to appease the angry Demon with his best beloved

 by a Nymph, named Anobreth, cloathed in royall apparell, offered on an Alter erected for that purpose. This was practised long after by the King of Moab, ^b who being besieged by three Kings of Israel, Iuda, and Idumæa, sacrificed his eldest sonne:
 which yet some interprete of the eldest sonne of the King of Idumæa.

Taanus ascribed Diuinity to the Serpent, as being of a most fierie and spirituall nature, moouing it selfe swiftly, and in many formes, without helpe of feet, and a creature which reneweth her age. The Phœnicians and Egyptians followed him herein, they calling it a happy Spirit or God, these, Eneth; and framed thereto the head of a Hawke: of which in his place we haue spoken. And thus farre haue wee bene indebted to ^d Eusebius. In the time of those warres betwixt Saturne and Calus was borne Hercules: to whome was a Temple of great Antiquitie at Tyrc. To Hercules were also celebrated games at Tyrus, euery fīue yeeres, to which Iason sent three hundred drammes for a sacrifice ^e Hiram in Solomons time pulled downe the old Temples of Hercules and Astarte, and built new. He first erected a stature to Her- cules, and in the Temple of Iupiter consecrated a golden ^f Pillar.

The Sydonians also worshipped Astarte in a stately and auncient Temple to her builded: whome ^g some interprete Luna, ^h some Venus, and one of her Priests, to ⁱ Lucian, Europa. Shee was worshipped of the Punickes (a Phœnician colony) by that name of Iuno. But Philo Bybliensis saith it was Venus, which may bee all one:
 for Herodotus saith Vrania (which was also Iuno) was Venus; and Luna also after Lician. And so it appeareth by her hornie head, wherewith Philo saith shee was painted: the Arabians called her Alilat, the Chaldeans Militta. Lucian saith, that he saw also at Biblos the Temple of Venus Biblia, wherin are celebrated the yerely rites of Adonis, (who they say, was slaine in their Countrey) with beatings and wofull lamentings; after which they performe Obsequies vnto him, and the next day they affirme him to bee aliue, and shaue their heads. And such women as will not bee shauen, must prostitute their bodies for one day vnto strangers, and the monee hence accrewing, is sacred to Venus. Some affirme that this ridiculous lamentation is made, not for Adonis, but Osiris; in witness whereof, a head made of Paper once a yere in seuen daies space commeth swimming from Egypt to Byblos, and that without any humane direction: Of which Lucian reporteth himselfe an eye-witnesse.
 This is called the mourning for Thamuz, which Iunius interpreteth Osiris, whence the fourth moneth (commonly their Haruest) is called Tamuz. For Isis which instituted these rites was their Ceres. Hierom interpreteth it Adonis: but it seemeth the difference is more in the name then the Idoll or rites. Women were the chiefe lamen-ters, if not the only, as Ezekiell testifieth, and the proneness of that sexe to teares, and to superstitious deuotion also. (which they seeme to acknowledge, whose praying stile is pro deuoto fæmineo sexu) likewise Ethnike Authors are witnesses. Plutarch saith, the women kept the Adonia; or feast of Adonis, euery where through the Cittie, setting forth images, obseruing exequies and lamentations. Ammianus reporteth of this feattiuall solemnized at Antiochia, at the same time when Iulian entred the Cittie then filled with howlings and lamentings; and elfewhere, compareth the women which lamented the death of their young Prince, to the women which obserued the rites of Venus in the feasts of Adonis. Iulius Firmicus affirmeth that in most Citties of the East Adonis is mourned for, as the Husband of Venus, and both the smiter and the wound is shewed to the standers by. For Mars changed into the shape of a Bore, wounded him for the loue of Venus. Hee addeth, that on a certaine night they laye an Image in a bed, and number a set bead-roll of lamentations; which being ended, light is brought in, and then the Priest annoynteth the chappes of the Mourners, whispering these words, Trust in God for wee haue saluation or deliue-rance, from our greefes. And so with ioy they take the Idoll out of the sepulchre. Was not this mourning, thinke wee, sport to the Deuill? especially when this Adonia was applied vnto the buriall and resurrection of Christ, the Pagaent whereof followed the Good-friday and Lenten fast of the Papiſts. Yet is this worſe then the former, not onely becauſe Corruptio optimi peſſima, the beſt things by abuſing are made worſt; but alſo becauſe the treason of Iudas and Peters deniall is propoſed in aſſion to the peoples laughter, & inter tot cachinnos & ineptias ſolus chriſtus eſt ſerius & ſeuerus, ſaith L. Viues, complaining of this great wickedneſſe of the Prieſts (magno ſcelere atque impietate ſacerd.) but here and elſewhere often, when he telleth tales out of Schoole, the good māns tongue is ſhortned, and their Index purgeth out that wherewith hee ſeeketh to purge their leauen. But let vs backe from Rome to Biblos: Hereby runneth the Riuer Adonis alſo, which once a yeare becommeth red and bloudie: which alteration of the colour of the water, is the warning to that their Mourning for Adonis, who at that time they ſay is wounded in Libanus: whereas that redneſſe ariſeth indeed of the winds, which, at that time blowing violently, doe with their force carry downe alongſt the ſtreame a great quantitie of that red Earth or Minium of Libanus whereby it paſſeth. This conſtancy of the wind might yet ſeeme as meruailous as the other, if diuers parts of the world did not yeeld vs inſtance of the like. In Libanus alſo was an ancient Temple dedicated to Venus by Cyniras.

Aſtarte or Aſtaroth was worſhipped in the formes of ſheepe, not of the Sydonians onelie, but of the Philiftims ^a alſo, in whoſe Temple they hanged the armour of Saul. And wiſe Salomon was brought by doting on women to a worſe dotage of Idolatrie ^b with this Sydonian Idoll among others. And not then firſt did the Iſraelites commit that fault, but from their firſt neighbour-hood with them, preſently after the dayes of Ioſhua. ^c This Sidon, the auncient Metropolis of the Phœnicians (now called Saito) in likelihood was built by Sidon, eldeſt Sonne of Canaan, ^d and fell to the lot of Aſher, whence it is called Great Sidon. It was famous ^e for the firſt Glaſſe-ſhops, and deſtroyed by Ochus the Perſian. This faire Mother yeelded the world a Daughter faire fairer; namely, Tyrus, now called Sur, (whoſe glorie is ſufficiently blazed by the Prophets Eſay, and Ezechiel) being ſituate in an Iland ſeuē hundred paces from the ſhore, to which Alexander in his ſiege vnitid it; whome it held out eight moneths (as it had done Nabuchodonosor thirteene yeeres, which long ſiege is mentioned in Ezec. 26. 7.) in nothing more famous, then for helping Salomon vnder Hiram their King, ^f to build the Temple, a hundred ſiftie five yeeres before the building of Carthage. This Hiram (& Iofephus reports it out of Dius a Phœnician Hiſtoriographer) enlarged the Citie, and compaſſed within the ſame the Temple of Iupiter Olimpius, and (as hee addeth out of Menander Ephēſius) therein placed a golden Pillar: he pulled downe the old temples and built new, and dedicated the temples of Hercules and Aſtarte. Irbobalus, Aſtartes prieſt ſlew Phelles the King, and viſtured the Crowne. He was great Grandfather to Pygmalion the brother of Dido, Founder of Carthage.

The Phœnicians, famous for Marchandiſe and Marrinership, ſailed from the red Sea round about Aſrike, and returning by Hercules pillars, arriued againe in Egypt the third yeere after, reporting (that which Herodotus ^h doubted of, and to vs makes the Storie more credible) that they ſailed to the South-ward of the Sunne: They were ſent by Pharaoh Neco. Cadmus a Phœnician was the firſt Author of Letters alſo to the Greekes. At Tyrus was the fiſhing for purple: not farre off was Arad, a populous Towne, ſeated on a rocke in the ſea, like Venice.

Alongſt the ſhore is Ptolemais, neere which runneth the Riuer Belus, and nigh to it the Sepulchre of Memnon hauing hard by it, the ſpace of a hundred cubites, ⁱ yeelding a glaſſie ſand: & how great a quantity ſoeuer is by ſhips carried thence, is ſupplied by the Winds, which miniſter new ſands to be by the nature of the place chaunged into glaſſe. That would ſeeme ſtrange, if this were not yet ſtranger, that this new glaſſe if it be caſt vpon the brinks of this place, receaueth the former nature of ſand againe.

Belus and Hercules Tyrinus and the Sunne, called of them Heliogabalus, were Phœnician Deities. ^k Drufus is of opinion that diuers of theſe Phœnician idols were deriued from names vſed in the Scriptures, ſo interpreting the words in 1. Mac. 3.

48. Tautes of the Phœnicians, and the Egyptian Thoth from Thobu, and Baan from Bohu, Bel from Baal, as Beelsamen; also Astarte, Asthoreth, from the store of sacrifices offered to her. ^a Eusebius relateth other Phœnician abominations, both bloudie and beasty: the one in yeerely sacrifice of the deereft pledges of Nature to Saturne: the other in that temple of Venus, built in the most secret retreat of Libanus, where Sodome (burned with fire from aboue, and drowned in a dead sea) seemed to reuiue: such was their practise of impure lusts, intemperately vsing the Naturall sexe, and vnnaturally abusing their owne: worse in this then the Sodomites, that these intended sensuality; they pretended Religion. Constantine raised these suburbs of Hell, and destroyed both the customes, statues, and temple it selfe. ^b Augustine saith, That the Phœnicians prostituted their daughters to Venus, before they married them. Of Melcanthor, Vfor, and other their gods (sometimes men) I forbear to speak. Alexander ^c ab Alexandro, affirmeth, That the preit of the sun in Phœnicia, was attired with along sleeued garment, hanging down to the feet, and a golden Crowne.

Wee may adde to these Phœnician superstitions, their mytticall interpretation by ^d Macrobius. Hee expoundeth Venus and Adonis, to signifie the Earth and the Sun. The wild Boate which wounded Adonis, is the Winter, which for the absence of her Louer maketh the Earth to put on her mourning weedes (at whose approach she after putteth on her new apparrell, saith ^e our English Arcadian Oracle;) This was shadowed in a certaine Image in mount Libanus, pourtrayed in mourning habite. And to this fence he appiyeth the Egyptian rites of Osiris and Isis, and of Orus, which is Apollo or the Sunne, and likewise the Phrygian mysteries of Atinis, and the mother of the Gods. He saith that they abstained from Swines flesh.

The Philistims and all that Sea-coast, by ^f Strabo and Plinie, and Dionysius (as is said) are reckoned to the Phœnician. Their originall is attributed to Misraim, whose posteritie the ^g Cashim and Caphtorim chased the Avims, which formerly had inhabited Palestina, and by dint of sword purchased their Countrey. They had five principall Cities, Ascalon, Accaron, Azotus, Gath, Gaza. Of their sheepish Astarte yee heard euen now, and of their Legend of Dagon. Their superstitions the scripture often ^h mentioneth. What this Dagon was (saith ⁱ Martyr) is not well knowne. But by the deriuation of his name (which signifieth a fish) it seemeth hee was a Sea-god. For such Sea-deities had the Greekes and Latines, as Neptune, Leucothea, Triton: aboue his bellie hee was of humane shape, beneath like a fish. Such is Idolatriy, diuine it will not be, it cannot content it selfe with humane, but proueth monstrous in the vglie and deformed Image, exhibiting the character of the true Authour of this falshood. When Cicero ^k saith, the Syrians worshipped a fish; it may be construed ^l of this Dagon. Happily (saith ^m Martyr) they intended Neptune, or I know not what Deuill. ⁿ Tremellius thinketh Triton. This may we see and say, when men are giuen over to themselues, then they become beasts, monsters, deuills: yea, worse then such, for while they worship such, they professe themselues (as Clients and Votaries) to be worse and baser then their Deities. Drusus deriucth not this Dagon of Dag a fish; but of Dagon, which signifieth Wheat, whereof Eusebius saith, Dagon inuento frumento & arato vocatus est ζῷον ἀγόρειον; & Philo Byblius, Dagon ἰσὲς οἶτος: that is, is called Wheat or Breadcorne. But Scaliger ^o blameth Philo for that interpretation, and agreeth to that fish-deity: for Dagon (saith he) is one, and Dagan another. He addeth that they worshipped gods in the likenesse of stones, which they called Batul or Baitul, whence came the fable of the stone giuen to Saturne in stead of his children, to be deuoured. This seemeth borrowed from Iacobs annoynting the stone at Bethel. Saturne had many names, Il, Israel, Melkom. The Tyrians worshipped his star, Amos 5. 26. not the planet Saturne, but Lucifer. They had their purifications in the midst of their gardens to Adad, of which is spoken before.

When the Philistims had placed the captiued Arke in *Dagon*s Temple, hee fell on his face before the Arke: But they placing him againe in his roome, with a second fall, his head and hands were cut off vpon the threshold: The stump (or as Tremellius and Varablus read it) Dagon, or that part of him which resembled a fish, remained.

And, therefore the Priests of DAGON, and all that come into DAGONS house, tread not on the threshold of DAGON. Thus true Religion, the more opposed, the more it flourished: the prison-house of her captiuitie is the throne of her Empire: blind superstition, the more it is detected, the more enraged, addeth new deuotion, to encrease (not caring to amend) the former:

Of Astaroth, wee haue before shewed, why it is vsed in the plurall number, as ^a Ribera affirmeth for her many Idols, as wee say our Ladie of Walsingham, our Ladie of Loretto, &c. The word Aster signifieth a flocke of sheepe: and it is likely, thistheir Iuno was in the forme of a Sheepe worshipped, as Iupiter Ammon in likenesse of a Ramme. Their Dagon, it seemeth (seeming wee haue, no true being or being of truth, in Idols) was the same which Poets ^b call Derceto or Dercetis, the mother of Semiramis, whose Image Lucian ^c saith hee sawe in Phœnicia, not vnlike to that which is reported of the Mermayd, the vpper halfe like a woman, the other like a fish: (therefore of Plinie called ^d Prodigiola;) in reuerence of whom the Phœnicians were said to abstaine from fish. Authors doe also call this Idoll Atergatis: and ^e Athenaus reporteth, That the Countrey-law of the Syrians depriued them of fish: and that Gatis (a Syrian Queene) prohibited the eating of fish Ater Gatis, that is, without Gatis, without her licence, and therefore was called Atergatis, as a fore-staller of the fish to her owne delicate tooth. Mopsus, a Lydian, after drowned her in the lake of Ascalon, where this fish-deuourer was of fishes deuoured. They yet esteemed her a Godesse, and offered vnto her fishes of gold and siluer: and the Priests all day long set before her true Fishes roasted and sodden, which after themselves did eate; and it is not to bee doubted but the mettall-mawes of those Ostriges could also digest the other.

^f Diodorus Siculus ^g telleth, That hard by a lake full of fish, neere vnto Ascalon was a Temple dedicated to this Fish-woman: her Storie followeth, That shee yeelding to the lust of a young man, had by that copulation Semiramis, whome (now too late repenting of her follie, shee exposed on the rockes, where shee was nourished by Birds: of which Birds (called in their language Semiramis) shee receiued that name. The Shepheards after espying this hospitalitie of the Birds, found the childe, and presented her to Simma the Kings Shepheard, who brought her vp as his owne daughter. The mother (not able to swallow her shame and grieffe) cast her selfe into the lake to bee swallowed of the water, but there by a new Metamorphosis, was turned into a Fish, and hallowed for a Goddesse; and (for company) the fishes of that lake, and the Birds of that Rocke were canonized also in this deifying deuotion.

In Ascalon was a Temple of Apollo: and Herod Father of Antipater, ^h Grandfather to Herod the Great, hence called Ascalonita, was seruant to Apollo's Priett. At Accaron was worshipped Baalzebub, that is, the Lord of Flies, ⁱ either of contempt of his idolatrie, so called; or rather of the multitude of Flies, which attended the multitude of his sacrifices; or for that hee was their Larder-god (as the Roman Hercules) to driue away flies: or for that ^j forme of a Flie, in which he was worshipped, as Nazianzene against Iulian reporteth. Hee was called Smmthius, and as some saye Myiodes and Myiagnus, howsoeuer one of these names commeth from Mice, and the other from Flies: such mouse-eaten, flie-blowne diuinity did they professe. Nec Muscam querent deum Accaron, saith Nazianzen, of this Baal or Beelzebub. The Arcadians ^k sacrificed and prayed to Myiagnus, and by that meanes were freed from danger by Flies. Plinie ^l reporteth, that at Olympian games, they sacrificed a Bull to Myiodes, which done, clouds of Flies departed out of that territorie. And in another place ^m hee sheweth that the Cyrenians sacrificed to the God Achor (haply the God Accaron here mentioned) when the multitude of Flies caused a pestilence, all which Flies therevpon presently dyed. The Iewes ⁿ in detestation of this Idoll tearmed him Beelzebub, that is, dung-hill, or dung-Iupiter. Yea Scaliger saith ^o the name Beelzebub was in disgrace also, and that the Tyrians and Sydonians did not so call him, Baal or Belus, being a common surname to their Gods, which they they distinguished with some addition, as Iupiter was named Beelsamen a Lord of Heauen: but the Hebrewes (and not the Phœnicians) in contempt called him Beelzebub or fly-Lord. This was Iupiter Olympius. So Iuno was entituled spavia or Heauenly. Shee was painted at Carthage sitting on a Lion with a Thunderbolt in her right hand, in her left a Scepter. But for Beelzebub hee was their Æsculapius or Physicke-god, as appeareth by Abaziab ⁱ who sent to consult with him in his sickness. And perhappes for this cause the blaspheming Pharises, rather applyed the name of this then any other Idoll to our blessed Sauour, ^k whome they saw indeede to performe miraculous cures, which superstitions had conceiued of Baalzebub, and if any thing were done by that idoll, it could by no other cause bee effected but by the Diuell, as tending (like the popish miracles) to the confirmation of Idolatric.

What the deuill had at Beelzebubs Shrine to this end performed, blinded with rage and malice, they imputed to the miracles of Christ, which, in regard of the Efficient, were more excellent then could be Satans impostures, as countermaunding him and all his projects: for the matter, were merely supernaturall; in the Forme were acted by his will, signified by his naked word: and for the end (which is ^l the onely touch-stone for vs to trie all miracles) were to seale no other truth then was contained (for substance) in the Law and the Prophets, which hee came not to destroy, but to fulfill. If an Angell from heauen, yea with heauenlic miracles, (if it were possible) should preach vnto vs otherwise, Paul biddeth vs to hold him accursed; and cursed be that deuill of Hell, that vnder colour of miracles (one of the Antichrists ensignes) ^{*} hath taught the World to worship the ^m Lipsian ⁿ Lauretan, and I know not what other Ladies: not that Virgin, on Earth holie, in Heauen glorious; but their idol-conceits, and idol-blockes of her. Our Lord hath taught vs plainlie in Mathew, to serue God onely, without sophisticall distinctions.

As for the Heathenish and Popish, and all those other packets of miracles, which we recieue by the Iesuites annuall relations from the East and West Indies; I esteeme them with Doctor Hall (a hall of Elegance, all-Elegance.) That they are either falsely reported, or falsely done, or falsely miraculous, or falsely ascribed to Heauen. But I know not how (pardon it Reader) I am transported to Hale, Zichem, and Loretto, from our Phœnician ports. The name of Beelzebub hath bene occasion of this parenthesis. But the power of Beelzebub (I feare) hath induced Bellarmino, to fall downe, and thus to worship him, for his purple aduancement. For amongst the Notes of the Church, he hath reckoned for one, this of miracles: Maius ipse miraculum, a greater miracle he, that now will not belieue without miracles that gospel, which at first was thereby sufficiently proued. We reade that the ^o Iewes seeke for signes, and are therefore called, an euill and adulterous generation; and not onely false Christs and false Prophets, and Antichrist himselfe, but the heathens had their Legends of miracles: as the whole course of our History will shew, Goe now and reckon a Catalogue of miracles through all Ages, euen to the time of blessed Ignatius and his Society: and aske of vs miracles for prooffe of our doctrine. Our doctrine hath already by the Apostles and Prophets (Pen-men of holy Scriptures) bene proued that way; and wee leaue to you the stile of Mirabiliary Miracle-mongers, which Augustine for like bragges of things miraculously wrought by them, giueth the Donatists. With vs, Miracles must be proued by the Truth and the Church, and not they by miracles. But let vs come backe to Phœnicia.

The Phœnicians are accounted first author of Arithmeticke and Astronomie; as also of the Art of Nauigation (Primaratem ventis credere docta Tyrus saith Tibullus) and obserued the North-starre to that Sea-skill. The Sidonians are reputed first authors of Weights and Measures. ^p Herodotus affirmeth, That the Phœnicians, which came with Cadmus into Greece, taught the Græcians both other Sciences, and also Letters ^{*} which before that time they knew not. These letters asfer enaunged their sound and forme, being by the Ioniks principally learned, who called them Phœnician, and called their Skines or Parchments biblos (haply of Byblos in Phœnicia.) saw the Cadmean letters engrauen in a Temple at Thebes, much like the Ionike letters. a Scaliger hath giuen vs a view of the one and the other, the auncient Ionike, then the onely Greeke letters, out of certaine old inscriptions, much resembling the present Latine letters; and the auncieter Phœnician (I may say with him, the aunciest) vsed by the Canaanites and Hebrewes of old, and by the Samaritanes at this day: For those which the Iewes now vse, he affirmeth to be new, corrupted from the Syrian, and these from the Samaritan. His learned discourse thereof were worthie the reading, but here would be too prolix.

Heurnius (I know not by what authoritie) saith that the Phœnicians before the Israelites departed out of Egypt, vsed Hieroglyphicall letters, which hee thinketh they learned of Abraham, the same which Seth and Enoch had vsed before. Moses (if ye belieue it) recieued the first Alphabetarie letters in the table of the decalogue: and from the Hebrewes the Phœnicians. Out of an old booke he citeth these verses which I thought not vnworthie the transcribing, concerning the first Authours and inventers of letters.

Mente Phœnices sagaci condiderunt Atticas:
Quas Latini scriptitamus edidit Nicostrata:
Abraham Syras & idem reperit Chaldaicas
Isis arte non minore protulit Aegyptias
Gulfila prompsit Getarum quas uidemus ultimas.*

He addeth also that the ancient learning which the Phœnicians had recieued from the Hebrewes and Caldees, passed into Europe by Cadmus who founded Thebes, and into Affrica by Elissa (after her selfe-inflicted death called Dido, i. Virago, a woman of resolution and courage) who fleeing Pigmalion first seased on the Iland Cothone, and 9. yeres after tooke Tharus, which the posteritie of Gomer had there built, which she called Karthada, that is halfe citie, because the one halfe therof were Phœnicians: to which agreeth the testimony of Saluianus, that Carthage had in it Schooles of liberall Arts and Pholosophie. He citeth Aristotles testimonie of Hog a Phœnician Philosopher, whome he thinketh to be that king of Basshan which Moses conquered. Dicty. Cretensis (if his testimony bee authentickall) testifieth that the Grecian Gallants which besieged Troy, chose Agamemnon for their Generall, writing his name in Punike letters. And this storie was also written in Punike letters, as the Interpreter affirmeth.

But how the posteritie of Letter-inueners were by letters circumuented; it will not be an vnwelcome stratageme to our reader. When the Christian forces in the time of Ludowicus Crassus besieged Tyrus by sea and land, a Doue was seene to come flying, and deemed by expert men which had seene experience of the like, to carrie letters to the besieged: wherenpon a terrible shout was raised through the armie, which rent the aire with such violence, or else so amazed the seelie Doue, that downe shee fell; They tooke her letter from her, wherein was contained that the Tyrians should be of good courage, and shortlie reliefe should bee sent. This they tooke away and fastned another of contrary tenure to this swift Carrier, which presently conveyed the same to her home at Tyrus, and with her counterfait newes caused the Tyrians to yeeld. Dionys. Alexandrinus called Tyrus Ωρυς for the antiquitie.

Of the Phœnician kings here might be inserted a large Historie; but I feare tediousnesse. Their Catalogue is thus in Scaligers b Canons; first Abibalus, two yeares; Hierom, the sonne of Abibalus, 28. yeares; Bleazaros, 7; Abdestartus, 9; the Nices sonne, 2; Astartus Daleastri F. 12; Aserymus, 9; Theles, 8 moneths; Itobaal, the Priest of Astarte, 22 yeares; Badezor, 6; Margenus 9; Pygmalion, 47. written, and after him Maginus; who doereckon vnto Palæstina, Gahlæa, Samaria, Iudæa, and Idumæa, leauing out Phœnicia, bounded as aforesaid, to make a part of Syria by it selfe. Of this Region I purpose to make larger discourse in the next Chapter; heere intending to rake out of their dust the auncient Nations which inhabited this Land, before the Israelites were Lords thereof. The Sodomites sometimes inhabited a pleasant and fertile valley, watered by Iordan, which Moses compareth ^b to the garden of the Lord, and the Land of Aegypt, for pleasure and plenty. To the Sodomites I reckon also those other Citties partakers of the same fertilitie and vengeance, Gomorrha, Adma, Zeboim, and little Zoar, saued at the request of Lot. Their Kings and their Warres are mentioned, Gen. 14. Their wickednesse in many places of Scripture; which Ezechiel ^c reduceth to these foure heads, Pride, Gluttonie, Idlenesse, and Crueltie, or hard-heartednesse. Their iudgement both Moses and others, and the place it selfe doe record. Their Religion was an irreligion, and prophane contempt of God and Man. Europe (I would I could not say England) can now yeeld the like: sauing that in our subtile, and more warie age, Politie, hauing eaten vp Religion, hath with the blood thereof dyed her cheekes, and would seeme more shamefast then those former Sodomites. Thus did ^d Esay speake to the Princes of Sodome (in his time) and the people of Gomorrha, in respect of that their wickednesse, which suruiued them, and hath fructified vnto vs, among whom yet the Lord of Hosts (as with them) hath reserued a small remnant from this worse plague then Sodoms brimstone, a Reprobate sence. The difference betwixt ours and them is, that they were more open, ours more close, both in like height, but not in like weight of wickednesse; our darknesse excelling theirs both in the sinne, and in the punishment, in as much as a greater light hath shined, which we withhold in vnrigheteousnes. And if you will haue the maine character of difference betwixt these and those; the one are beastly Men, the other are Devils in the flesh.

First, from a sparke of Hell Concupiscence, (guided by Sensuall Lust, attended by ^e Ease and Prosperitie, and further inflamed and blowne by the Deuill) an vnnaturall fire, (which still beareth the name of Sodomie) was kindled, which gaue coales to a supernaturall flame, rained by the LORD in Brimstone and Fire from the LORD out of Heauen, and burning euen to Hell againe (the a and w of wickednesse) where they suffer (sayth Iude) the vengeance of eternall fire. This ^f is written for our learning on whome the ends of the world are come, their ashes being made an example vnto them that shold after liue vngodly. quire the Historian, seeing that Historie builds not Castles in the ayre, but preacheth both ciuill and diuine knowledge by examples of the passed, vnto the present Ages. And why should not I preach this, which, not my calling alone, but the verie place it selfe exadeth?

They being dead, yet speake, and the place of their buriall, is a place to our memorie, being turned into a Sea (but a Dead Sea ^a) which couereth their sinnes, that it may discouer ours; which, as astonished at their vnnaturalnesse, hath forgotten her owne nature: It drowneth the Earth, which it should haue made (as whilome it did) fertile: it stayes it selfe with wonder and indignation, and falling in a dead swowne, sincketh downe with horreur, not weakened, not mooued with the windes blustering; refusing the light of the Sunne, the lappe of the Ocean, the commerce of Strangers, or familiaritie of her owne, and (as it happeneth in deepe passions) the colour goeth and commeth, changing three times euerie day: it gaspeth forth from her dying entrailes a stincking and noysome ayre, to the neere dwellers pestiferous, sometimes voyding (as it were excrements) both lighter ashes, and grosse Asphaltum: The neighbour fruites participate of this death, promising to the eye toothsome and wholesome foode, performing onely smoake and ashes. And thus hath our GOD shewed himselfe a consuming fire, the Lord of anger, to whom vengeance belongeth; all Creatures mustering themselues in his sight, and saying at his first call to execution, Lo wee are heere. That vvhich I haue said of these miracles, still liuing in this Dead-Sea, is confirmed by testimonie of many ^b Au' hours. Brocard telleth of those Trees, with ashes growing vnder Engaddi, by this Sea; and a vapour, rising out of the Sea, which blasteth the neighbour-fruites; and the ^c slime-pittes on the brinckes of the Sea, which hee saw. Neither strangers nor her owne haue access there, where Fishes (the naturall inhabitants of the Waters) and Water-fowles (the most vsuall guesstes) haue no entertainment, and men, or other heauie bodies cannot sincke. Vespasian proued this experiment, by casting in some bound, vnskillfull of swimming, whom the waters (surfetted with swallowing her owne) spewed vp againe. This is mentioned by Aristotle ^d also, who saith that the saltnesse thereof is the cause why neither man nor beast (though bound) can sincke in it, nor any fish liue therein; which yet in the salt-sea wee see otherwise. The Philosopher could see no further then reason, not all that neither: but Moses guideth vs beyond Philosophie to diuine vengeance, which thus subuerted Nature, when men became vnnaturall. The Lake, Iosephus saith, is five hundred and fourescore furlongs in length, (Plinie hath an hundred myles) the breadth, betweene fixe, and five and twentie, myles. Strabo telleth of thirteene Cities still, (whereof Sodome was chiefe) of threescore furlongs compasse; whereof some were consumed by fire, or swallowed by Earth-quakes and sulphurous Waters, the rest forsaken: some Remainers (as bones of those carcasses) then in his time continuing. ^e Vertomannus saith, That there are the ruines of three Cities on the toppes of three Hilles: and that the Earth is without water, and barren, and (a greater miracle) hath a kinde of bloodie mixture, somewhat like red waxe, the depth of three or foure cubites. The ruines of the Cities are there scene still.

Idumæa lyeth Southward from Iudæa: it had name of Edom, the fir-name of Esau, sonne of Isaak. The Historie of this people, and the Horites, whom the children of Esau expelled, succeeding in their inheritance, is related by ^f Moses. It was subdued by Dauid, according to the Prophecie, The elder shall serue the younger. They rebelled vnder Ioram, the sonne of Iehosaphat; as Isaak had also prophecied. From that time they continued bitter enemies to the people of God, ^g till Hircanus, the sonne of Simon, compelled them to accept both the Iewish Dominion and Religion: after which they were reckoned amongst the Iewes. Of the Idumæans were the Amalekites, ^h destroyed by Saul. They were South from Iuda. ⁱ Eliphaz the Themanite, it seemeth, was of Esau his generation, and of the right Religion. The Idumæans, Moabites, and Ammonites, are by some placed in Arabia, of which I will not contend: I here mention them, as both borderers and subiects to the Israelites; of which wee reade much in the Scripture; little else-where that maketh to our purpose. South from Amalek was Kedar, a Countrey abounding with flockes of Sheepe and Goates. But I may not now dwell in the Tents of Kedar, till I come to the Israelites.

o On the East-side of the Lake of Sodome, is that Region which the Moabites (so often in Scripture mentioned) sometimes inhabited: and before them the Emims, which were Gyants, tall as the Anakims, Deut. 2. 10. The Moabites were the posteritie of Lot, by incest with his daughter. p Moab had on the East the Mountaines of Horeb; on the West the salt Sea, and part of Iordan; Arnon on the South, and the North border stretched from Iabbok to the Mountaines of Pisga. That part of their Countrey, betweene Iabbok and Arnon, Sihon King of the Amorites had taken from them, and lost againe to the Israelites. Balac their King fearing to lose the rest, sent for Balaam the Wizard to curse the Israelites; who yet; by Diuine power, was forced to blesse them. Yet the lustre of Balacs promises so dazeled his eyes, that q hee taught Balac to put a stumbling-blocke before the Israelites, and by sending amongst them their women, to draw them to carnall and spirituall whoredome; so to prouoke the wrath of GODS ieaousie against them. But the zeale of Phineas stayed it; and Balaam, in his returne homeward to his Countrey of Mesopotamia, was slaine by the Israelites among the Madianites, pertakers with the Moabites in Balaams idolatrous proiect. These Madianites descended of Abraham, r by Keturah, and dwelt in a part of Arabia, neere to the Moabites, on the East. Some of them dwelt neere to Mount Sinai, Exodus 2. 15. and in the Desert, on the East-side of the Red Sea. Their mightie Armie was miraculously destroyed by t the Sword of the LORD, and Gedcon. The Moabites were subiected to Israel by Dauid, and so continued to the Kings of Samaria, till, that State being rent, they freed themselues. It seemeth they worshipped the Sunne: as the names Kirchereseth, Beth-Baalmoon, and Balacs high places doe shew, and wee haue obserued before in the worshipp of Bel and Baal. Chemosh was another Idoll of theirs, to which Salomon built an high place: Pebor also, and Baal-pebor, and the rest, whose Rites are now rotten, and the memorie worne out.

In their Rebellion Against Iehoram King of Israel, hee and Ichohsaphat, King of Iuda, with the King or Vice-roy of Idumæa, went to recouer them by force. The Moabite, in despair, offered a bloudie Sacrifice of his eldest sonne and heire; or, as Tremellius readeth it, r The King of Edoms sonne: which caused the Israelites to returne. The Ammonites and Moabites might not enter into the Congregation of God, vnto the tenth Generation, because u they met not the Israelites with bread and water in their way, when they came out of Agypt, and for hiring Balaam against them. Arias Montanus saith, That the Moabites were circumcised in imitation of the Israelites, but worshipped not their God, but their owne Idols.

* The Ammonites (their brethren in the euill both of Lot their father, and their owne) inhabited Northward from Moab; on the East were the Hills Acrabim; on the West the Amorite; the hills Luith, Basan, &c. made it a valley. Their chiefe Citie was Rabbath, after called Philadelphia. These Ammonites had bene troublesome to the Israelites, in the times of y Iephth and of z Saul. And after, Dauid in iust reuenge, for violating the Law of Nations, destroyed them. Moloch, or Melchom, was their Idoll, which is supposed a to be Saturne, whose bloudie butcherly sacrifices are before spoken of. It was a hollow image (saith b Lyra) of Copper, in forme of a man. In the hollow concauitie was made a fire, with which the Idoll being heated, they put a child into his armes, and the Priests made such a noyse with their Timbrels, that the cries of the childe might not moue the parents to compassion, but they should rather thinke the childes soule receiued of the God into rest and peace: others c adde, That this Moloch had seuen Roomes, Chambers, or Ambries therein; one for r Abrahams children by Keturah were authors of the Nations called Filyorientis; the children of the East, which inhabited the parts of Arabia betweene the Moabites, Ammonites, & the Persians and Chaldeans, from Mesopotamia to the Persian gulfe.

There was a valley neere Hierusalem (sometime possessed by the sonne of ^d Hinnom) where the Hebrewes built a notorious high place to Moloch: it was on the East and South part of the Citie. It was also called Topheth, or Tymbrell, of that Tymbrell-Rite, which those Corribantes and bloudie Priestes did vse; or else for the spaciousnesse of it. ^e Jeremie prophecieth, That it should bee called the Valley of slaughter, because of the iudgements for the idolatrous high places in it. Vpon the pollution hereof, by slaughter and burials, it grew so execrable, that Hell inherited the same name, called Gehenna, of this place: first, of the lownesse, being a Valley: secondly, for the Fire, which heere the children, there the wicked, sustaine: thirdly, because all the filth was cast out of the Citie hither, it seemed they held somere semblance. The Ammonites also were (as Montanus affirmeth) * circumcised.

Canaan was the sonne of Cham, Father of many Nations, as ^f Moses declareth, Sidon and Heth, Iebusie, Emori, Girgashai, Hivi, Arki, Sini, Arvadi, Zemari, Hamathi; the most of which were expelled their Countrey, slaine or made Tributarie by the Israelites. Their border was from Sidon to Gaza West, and on the East side from Sodome to Lasha or Callyrrhoe. ^g Arias Montanus is of opinion, that according to the number of the twelue Tribes of Israel, so were the people of Canaan: and therefore to those eleuen before rehearsed, he addeth their Father Canaan, who left his name to them all; and where hee liued, retained a part to himselfe, betweene the Philistims and Amorites. Of those his sonnes, Sidon, the eldest, inhabited the Sea-coast: and Eastward from him Hath, vnto the hill Gilboa: of him came the Hittites. Iebus went further, on the right-hand: Emor inhabited the mid-land Countrey Westward from the Iebusites. The Girgashite dwelt about the Hittite, next to Jordan, and the Lake Chinereth (so called, because it resembleth the forme of a Harpe) after called Gennezareth. The Hevite or Hivite inhabited betweene the Amorite and the Philistim. The Arkite possessed the rootes of Libanus. The Sinite dwelt beyond the Hittite, Eastward, neerer to Jordan. Arvadi enioyed the Countrey next to the Wildernesse of Cades. Zemari obtained the Hills, called of him Semaraim. The Hamathite possessed the Countrey nigh to the Fountaines of Jordan. As for the most notable Mountaines and Cities, which each of these Families enioyed, they which will, may reade further in the same Author.

Of these and their ancient Religions and Politics we finde little or nothing but in the Scripture, where the Lord testifieth, that for their sinnes the Land spued them out. Some of them (as some thinke) fled into Africa: where Augustine ^h saith, that the Countrey people, inhabiting neere Hippon, called themselues in their Punicke Language Chanani.

Procopius, in the fourth booke of the Vandale Warre, affirmeth, That all the Sea-coast, in those times, from Sidon to Egypt, was called Phœnicia: and that when Ioshua invaded them, they left their Countrey, and fled into Egypt, and there multiplied, pierced further into Africa; where they possessed all that Tract, vnto the Pillars of Hercules, speaking halfe Phœnician. They built the Citie Tinge or Tanger in Numidia, where were two pillars of white stone, placed neere to a great Fountaine, in which, in the Phœnician Tongue, was ingrauen: We are Canaanites, whom I O S H V A the Theefe chased away. Which if it were so, the name of Hercules might therefore be ascribed to those Pillars, as accounted the chiefe Phœnician Idoll.

Philo ⁱ (or the Author of those fabulous Antiquities) saith, That the Israelites ^{i Pseudo Phile. de Ant. Bib.} found, among the Amorites, seven golden Images, called Nymphes, which, as Oracles, directed them in their affaires, and wrought wonders: the worke of Canaan, Phut, Selath, Nebroth, Elatb, Desvat, of admirable workmanship, yeelding light in the night, by vertue of certaine stones, which could not by mettall be broken, or pierced, or be consumed by fire, but must needs haue an Angell to burie them in the depth of the Sea, and there let them lie.

This people was not vtterly at once destroyed, but sometime, as in the dayes of ^{k Iud. 4. 2.} Iabin and Sisera, conquered their Conquerours, and retained some power and name of a people, till the times of Dauid, who destroyed the Iebusites, and dwelt in the Fort of Sion, calling it after his owne name, ¹ The Citie of Dauid. And in the dayes of Salomon, Pharao, King of Egypt, tooke and burnt Gezer, and slew the Canaanites that dwelt in the Citie, and gaue it for a present to his daughter, ^{1 2. Sam. 5. 7.} Salomons wife. And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Iebusites, whom the children of Israel were not able to destroy, those did Salomon make tributaries vnto this day. ^{1. King. 9. 16. 20. 21.} The posteritie of these seruants of Salomon are mentioned ^m among the Israelites, which returned from the Babylonian Captiuitie, and accrewed into one People with them. ^{m Nehc. 7. 60.}

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

The Preface of this Booke: and a Description of the Region of Palestina, since called Iudæa, and now Terra Sancta.

In the former booke we haue traced the foot-steps of Religion, following her in her wanderings from the truth, and her selfe through diuers Nations, till we came into this Land, sometime flowing with milke and honey. whose first inhabitants we last tooke view of. The Hebrewes were, by the Soueraigne Lord of all, made heires of their labours, and possessed both their place and wealth: Houses and Cities which they bulded not, Vineyards which they planted not, and which is more, these were a type vnto them of the true and heavenly Countrey, which not by their merits, but by the incree mercie of the Promiser, they should enjoy. These did God chuse out of all the kindreds of the earth, to make vnto himselfe ^a a Kingdome of Priests, a holy Nation, and his chiefe treasure above all people, though all the earth be his: He made them the keepers ^b of his Oracles, bestowing on them ^c the Adoption, and the Glorie, and the Covenants, and the giuing of the Law, and the Seruice of God, and the promises: of whom were the Fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh Christ came, who is God ouer all, blessed for euer, Amen. These things were not onely communicated, but appropriated to them: ^d He shewed his word vnto Iacob, his statutes and his iudgements vnto Israel: He dealt not so with any Nation, neyther had the heathen knowledge of his lawes: he was their prerogative, and they his peculiar: In ^e Iewry was God knowne, his name was great in Israel: In Salem was his Tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion. And Christ himselfe ratified it, acknowledging himselfe ^f sent to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, ^g a Minister of the Circumcision, and said to the Cananite woman which besought him for her daughter, It is not good to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to Dogges. Such in spirituall reputation before God were all people, excluded (as vnclane Dogges) out of his heavenly Ierusalem, till this ^h partition wall was taken downe, and they which had bene farre off, were made neere by the blood of Christ, who ⁱ abrogated through his flesh that hatred, and made of twaine (Iewes and Gentiles) one new man in himselfe. So that the Gentiles (the name of all the world, excepting this people) which had been without Christ, and aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, had no hope, and were without God in the world; were now no more strangers and forreiners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God; built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Iesus Christ himselfe being the chiefe corner stone. Let it not be tedious to heare of this which the Angels reioyced to learne, ^h a Myserie which from the beginning of the world had bene hid in God: and vnto principalities and powers in heauenly places, was made knowne by the Church. But the Word (whereby we haue fellowship in this myserie) came out of Sion, and the preaching began at Ierusalem. This (and not Rome) by the confession of Estensaus, a learned Papist*, was Empirium fidei Christiana, & Ecclesia mater: The mart of Christian faith, and mother of the Church. Yea, it was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken vnto them, which they by incredulity put from themselves, and gaue place to the Gentiles. ^k The fall of them became the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, as a Glasse wherein we may behold the bountifulnesse and seruerie of God, and in both the deepenesse of the riches of the wisdom and knowledge of God, whose iudgements are vnsearchable, and his wayes past finding out. I may fitly compare them to Gideons Fleece, ^l which receiued the dew, when all the earth besides was drie, and after, it was drie vpon the Fleece onely, when the dew covered all the ground. Sometimes they alone receiued those dewes, showers, riuers seas of Sauiug bountie, and all the world besides was a parched Wildernesse. Now ^m he turneth the fruitfull land into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of the inhabitants; but that Wildernesse he turneth into pooles of water, and the drie land into water-springs. He hath ⁿ called them his people which were not his people, and her beloued which was not beloued; and where it was said, Ye are not my people, there they are now called the children of the liuing God. Thus hath he ^o shut vp all vnder vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercie vpon al, that his free election might appear (not of workes, lest any should boast themselves, but) of grace. Behold therefore, all Atheists, and wonder! The Iewes branded with iudgement, wander ouer the world, the contempt of Nations, the skumme of people, the hissing, derision, and indignation of men, for refusing him whom they expect, denying him whom they challenge, hating him whose name is in life and death vnto them, the sweetest tune, and most melodious harmony; still wayting for, and glorying in that Messias, whom (vnrknowne) they crucified and slew: and still pursue with the deadliest hatred in all his followers: God they please not, and are contrary to all men. Yet such is Gods manifold wisdom in his deepest iudgements, that his enemies shall fight for him, euen against themselves; the Midianites shall sheath their swords, which they haue drawne out against God, in their owne bowels, and Christian truth shall preuaile, and let our enemies themselves be iudges. Out of their premisses which they maintaine, as earnestly as thou (O Atheist) securely deridest, which they will seale with that which thou makest thy heauen, thy God; we will and doe conclude, against thee and them, that, in which, with which, for which we will liue and die. Let the olde Testament yeelde the Proposition in prophetic, and the new Testament will Assume in Historie, and euen be thou the iudge, if that Reason, which thou hast as a man, and peruertest as a Diuell, will not by force of their Scriptures, which they preferre before their lues, necessarily in the Conclusion demonstrate the Christian Truth. Neyther (I appeale vnto our common Reason) canst thou more wonder at vs for Beleeuing, things in thy seeming incredible, absurd, and impossible, then at them (vpon such grounds which with vs they holde) not beleeuing.

For what beleue we, but, for the maine and chiefe points of our faith, are as plainly in their Euangelicall Prophets, as in our Propheticall Euangelists? All the Historie of Christ, in a more Diuine way, seemeth rather told then foretold, a Historie, not a Prophetic; as is easie by conference of both to shew, and thou, if thou beest not idle, or wilfully malicious, mayest finde. That then which thou seeest come vpon them, a spirit of slumber eyes that they should not see, and eares that they should not heare; which yet haue the light of the first Scriptures (had they not a veile ouer their hearts) the same see in thy selfe, that when greater light doth offer it selfe, willingly shuttest thine eyes, as though there could be no light, because thou liuest in, and louest thy darkenesse.

It is the same hand that giueth vp both thee and them, ^c because ye will not beleene the Truth to be saued, so strong delusions that ye might beleene lies, and be damned. To me, and all Christians, let the Iewes be both reall and verball teachers of the Truth, which they let fall, and we take vp; the one in their Oracles of sacred writ, the other in their exemplarie iudgement. And to them, Let (O thou Lord of all heare and grant it) let all Christians be that which Moses prophesied, ^e a prouocation to emulation, not of enuie and hatred, which hitherto hath bene in these, amongst all the Christian enemies, the most implacable and despitefull, but of imitation, that ^u as ^u their casting away hath bene the reconciling of the world, their receiuing may be life from the dead, which Paul seemeth plainly to fore-signifie.

THus much being premised as a preparation to our Iewish Historie, which as of more importance then any other deserueth more ample view; let vs in the next place suruey that country which their progenitors had with those priuiledges, and their posteritie (together with those priuiledges) haue lost.

This country was first ^x called the Land of Canaan, after that the posteritie of Canaan, the sonne of Cham, had possessed it. ^{*} Moses and Ioshua conquered it to the posteritie of Jacob, of whom it was called the Land of Israel; after the diuision of the tenne Tribes from the house of Dauid by Ieroboam, in the time of Rehoboam the sonne of Salomon, the name of Israel was more particularly appropriated to those ten rebellious Tribes, and the other two were knowne by the name of the Kingdome of Iuda. Yet Israel remained in a generall sense the name of them all, especially in the new Testament. Paul of the Tribe of Beniamine calleth himselfe an Israelite, and all Israel, saith he in that Chapter shall be saued. After the Babylonian ^z captiuitie they were called Iewes, of the chiefe and royall Tribe, and their countrey Iudæa: It was also called Palestina, of the Philistims, which inhabited the Sea-coast. And after in the times of the Christians it was generally called the Holy-Land Phænicia also being vnder that name comprehended. It is situated betweene the Mediteranean Sea, and the Arabian Mountaines, Ptolemeus ² calleth it Palestina Syria, and Iudæa, abutting it on the North with Syria, on the East and South with Arabia Petraea, on the West with part of Egypt, and the Sea. Adrichomius, who hath bestowed a large volume on this subiect, which he calleth the Theater of the Holy-Land, on the East confineth it with Syria and Arabia; on the South the desert Pharan, and Egypt; on the North Mount Libanus; on the West, the Sea. Magnum placeth a part of Phænicia on the North; on the North-east Libanus; on the South, and part of the East, Arabia; on the West, part of the Mediteranean Sea. It is extended from the South to the North, from the one and thirtieth degree, to the three and thirtieth, and somewhat more. Others set it downe in other words; but these and they agree for the most part in substance. It is commonly holden ^{*} to be an hundred and sixtie Italian Miles in length from Dan to Bersabee, and sixtie in breadth. An exact diuision thereof into twelue shires or shares, Ioshua setteth downe at large, with their bounds and Citties, from the thirteenth Chapter of that booke, to the one and twentieth as they were by lot and diuine dispensation allotted to the twelue Tribes, the posteritie of *Jacob*s twelue sonnes; onely Ephraim and Manasses, the sonnes of Ioseph, constituted two Tribes, and therefore had the double portion, descending of *Jacob*s eldest soune, by Rachel his first intended wife; and Leui had no portion, but was scattered in Israel, to keepe Israel from scattering, and to vnite them in one Religion to one God, who disposed that curse into a blessing.

And first let me dip my penne in Iordan. This, saith Pliny,^a is a pleasant riuer, and as farre as the situation of places will permit, ambitious; prodigally imparting it selfe to the inhabitants, and (as it were vnwilling) passeth to that cursed Lake Asphaltites, of which at last it is drunke vp, losing his laudable waters, mixed with those pestilent. As soone therefore as the valleyes giue opportunity, it spreadeth it selfe into a Lake called Genesara, sixteene miles long and sixe broad, enuironed with pleasant Townes; Iulias and Hippo on the East; on the South, Tarichea; and Tiberias on the West, made wholesome with his hote waters: The fountaines of this Riuer are two, called e Ior, and Dan, which compounding their streames, do also compound their names, as Tame and Isis with vs bring forth (happy parents) our Tames or Thamisis. f Here was the Cittie Dan, so called of the Damites, before Laish Iud. 18. 29. and Leshem, Ios. 19. 47. But before this time both the Riuer had the same name, Iordan, and the place it selfe at the foot of Libanus, whence the fountain springeth was called Dan, Gen. 14. 14. When Moses wrote; except we beleue Masius, that the Pentateuch and other Scriptures were by Ezra after the captiuitie digested into that forme with those names which we now haue. Here was after built Cæsarea Paneadis, called afterward of Philip the Tetrach Cæsarea Philippi, and after that by Agrippa, Neronia. This ioyning of Ior and Dan is the beginning of the apparant streame: but the true s and first conception of it is in Phiale, one hundred and twenty furlongs from Cæsarea, a fontaine of vnsearchable depth, whi h yet (like some miserable Churle) alwayes containeth the waters in it selfe, till sinking, and as it were buried in the earth, those treasures being by Natures stealth conueyed vnder ground vnto Dan or Paneas, who is liberall of that vsurers wealth (for into that Phiale poure as much as you will, it neuer increaseth or decreaseth) and thence it becommeth a Riuer. Philip the Tetrach of Trachonitis, by casting chaffe therein, which was paide him againe at Dan, first found out this vnder-earth passage. The Saracens call that Phiale, in this respect^b Medan, that is, the waters of Dan. Before it maketh the Lake of Genezareth, it maketh another called Samachonitis. This is especially filled, when the snowes on Libanus are melted, which causeth i Iordan then to swell, and ouer-flow his bankes, in the first moneth, yearely (and made the miracle in Iosias k passage thorow it the more miraculous) but in Summer it is almost drien vp: and by reason of that matter which therein groweth is a harbour for wilde beasts. It is called the waters of Meron, halfe-way betweene Cæsarea Philippi, where the marriage betweene Ior and Dan is solemnized, and the Lake of Genezareth. Elias, and after his assumption, his cloake, diuided these streames: Naamans leprosie was here cleansed; and a greater Leprosie then Naamans is daily cleansed in the Church by the lauer of Regeneration, first sanctified to that vse in this streame, where the holy Trinity l did first yeelde it selfe in sensible apparition to the world, thereby to consecrate that Baptisme, wherby we are consecrated to this blessed Trinity, the Father Soune and Holy Ghost. In which respect^m Pilgrimes in memory therof, do still wash themselues in this Riuer, sporting themselues further (I feare) by this washing with some myre of superstition.

The ^a grapes of Eschol, which could lade two men with one cluster, were not so famous as the Balmie of Gilead ^b, which the ^c first Marchants were reade of, from that Mart, vented to other parts of the world. These Balme-trees grew in the Vale of Iericho, which being cut, yeelded this precious liquor; whereof, besides the admirable effects in cures, other wonders are told by ancient and later Writers, too long here to relate. Bellonius ^d will doe it for me, if any list to reade his Observations. But I should bee too tedious if I should insist on this argument: That instance of such a world of people, in such a patch of the world, doth sufficiently declare the fertilitie, when as Dauid ^f numbered them, 1 100000. Israelites, and of Iuda, 470000. or as in *2. But this multitude by ciuill warres and inuasions of enemies decreased, till first the reliques of Israel, and after, the remnant of Iuda, were by the Assyrians, and Babylonians led captiue, and the Land enjoyed her Sabbaths.

This their rebellion and Apostasie God plagued with ciuill dissension and forren hostilitie, vntil at last the Assyrians ^k remoued them altogether, and reseeded those parts with new Colonies. Such is the end of Religion, which hath not God for the beginning, but is grounded on humane policie, a sandie foundation. Iuda could not take warning, but prouoking God by Idolatrous courses, at last was carried to Babel, and thence, after seuentie yeares, returned. The Historie of these things, so fully related in Scripture, I should but marre in the telling.

After this their returne the Land was not, as before, named after the portions of the severall Tribes: but was called by a generall name, ^l Iudæa, and the people Iewes, because the Tribe of Iuda had before inhabited those parts, or at least the principall of them, dilating themselues further, as they increased in number and power. But more especially Iudæa was the name of one ^m third part of the Countrie, by that name distinguished from the other two, Samaria, and Galilea, which two last are sometimes referred to Phœnicia.

Galilæa was the most Northerly, confining on Libanus and Antilibanus toward the North, Phœnicia Westerly, Cœlesyria on the East; and Samaria, with Arabia; inclosing her Southerly borders, Jordan parteth it in the middest. It was diuided into the higher and lower Galilee: the higher called also Galilee of the Gentiles, conrayneth the springs of Jordan, and those Cities which Salomon gaue to Hiram. The lower was also called Galilee of Tiberias, that Citie giuing name both to the Lake and Region: in which Nazareth was famous, and the hill Thabor.

 Iudæa

Samaria is seated betwixt Galilee and Iudæa, much lesse then either of them. Iudæa is the most Southerly; betweene the Mediterranean and Dead Seas, Samaria, and Idumea. Plinie ⁿ maketh Galilæa a part of it, and Peræa another part, separated from the rest by Jordan. The rest he diuideth into ten Toparchies; Ierico, Emaus, Lidda, Joppe, Acrabatena, Gophnitica, Thamnitica, Betholene, Tephene, Orme, in which was Ierusalem farre the fairest of the Cities of the East, not of Iudæa alone: Herodium, with a famous famous Towne of the same name. He addeth vnto these the Region of Decapolis, so called of the number of the Townes, and the Tetrarchies; Trachonitis, Paneas, Abila, Arca, Ampeloessa, Gabe. Those ten Townes of Decapolis were Cæsarea, Philippi, Asor, Cedes, Neptalim, Sephet, Corozain, Capharnaum, Bethsaida, Iotapata, Tiberias, and Bethsan, otherwise called Scythopolis, and before Nyfa, where Bacchus buried his Nurse. But these are parts of those former parts about mentioned; and so may we say of the rest, sustayning, in diuers respects, diuers diuisions, best fitting to the present polities, and little to our purpose.

Those things which of old were famous in those places, are mentioned in the Scripture: Those things which since haue beene more remarkeable; I purpose in the next part of this Worke, of Christian Religions, to handle, and especially the rarities of Ierusalem, sometimes the holy Citie, and Citie of the great King, now a Den of Theeues; a habitation of Mahumetans, or rather now not at all: for this which is now, is a new Citie, called by the Founder * Ælia Capitolina, built by Ælius Adrianus, who caused the plough to passe through, and salt to be sowne in the old, as testifying her eternall desolation, and fulfilling Christs prophëcie to the vtmost, not leauing a stone vpon a stone, if Titus had not fully accomplished the same before. Arias Montanus in his Nehemias affirmeth, that Ierusalem was founded on three ^a Hills; to wit, Sion; on which the Iebusites built their Tower; and which in Dauids time was further builded on, and called the Citie of Dauid. The second Hill was Mount Moriah, which Dauid bought of Arauna, to erect thereon the Temple. The third was the higher A-cra, called the Suburbe. These were compassed with one wall without; and within diuided with three walls, by which the Citie of Dauid, and Moriah, and the higher A-cra were seuered. In the circuit of the walls were nine gates. Hee that desireth further to reade, or rather to see the old Ierusalem, with her holy Fabriques, let him resort to Arias Montanus his Antiquitates Iudæica, where he both relateth, and in figures presenteth these things. It is supposed that Melchisedech built it about the yeate of the World 2023. and called it Salem. Hierome in his 129. Epistle hath these wordes: Ipsa Metropolis tua prius Iebus, postea salem, tertio Hierosolyma, et nunc Ælia; As if it were called Iebus before it had the name of Salem, which is not so probable. The Kings thereof were anciently called Melchizedek or Adonizedek, that is, Kings or Lords of iustice; or of Zedek, which some will haue the first name thereof, and Salem the second; this signifieth Peace, Righteousnesse ^b indeede and peace did here kisse each other, when the ^c Lord our righteousnesse here preached peace and was made our peace, and righteousnesse the true Melchizedek whose Kingdome ^d is righteousnesse, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost. It was after called Ierusalem by addition of the word Iereh, as some thinke, to the former name Salem. For so it is said of Abraham ^e when God tried his obedience in here offering his sonne, he called the place Iehoua iereh, the Lord will prouide, from which and Salem by composition ariseth this name, so fitting both the Citie and myserie. Iosephus ^f saith it was first called Solyma, and by Melchisedech named Hierosolyma of a Temple by him there built, as if iepb had beene the language of Ierusalem: elsewhere ^g he attributeth it to Dauid, from an Hebrew deriuation, which and other like Etymologies haue caused Masius ^h to pronounce him ignorant of the Hebrew, and educated only in the Greeke, as Scaliger somewhere affirmeth of Philo his companion in Nation, learning, and in that Grecian eloquence wherein they neuer had Companions, neither of their owne, nor scarce of any other Nation. The Iebusites after possessed (and of them some deriue the name Ierusalem, quasi Iebussalem) till Dauid expelled them: who had before reigned in Hebron (called Cariatharbe, the Citie of foure men, say some, because of Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, both dwelling and buriall there; yet Adam, others say, was buried in mount Caluarie, with other speculations curious and vncertaine.) Hee translated the highest seat both of spirituall and temporall Regiment to Ierusalem, where he reigned after, three and thirtie yeeres, to whom succeeded Salomon, and the rest in order. It then contayned in circuit fiftie furlongs, compassed with a great ditch threescore foot deepe, and two hundred and fiftie broad. Nabuchodonosor destroyeth it, Nehemias reedified it, three and thirtie furlongs in circuit: The Machabees, Herod, and others, added to her excellence, till Titus besieged ged and tooke it; in which siege are said to haue perished 1100000. people; and being now a sepulchre of dead carkasses, was made a spectacle of diuine vengeance, for murthering the Lord of Life. But those struggling spirits, and small remnants of life which remayned in this forlorne carkasse of the sometime Ierusalem, breathed a new rebellion, in the time of Adrian, and thereby breathed her last, as before is said. Bernard de Breidenbach saith, hee neuer saw any place which had a fairer prospect then Ierusalem, presenting to the eye Arabia, the Plaine of Iericho, and the Dead Sea. The Saracens haue therein the Temple of Salomon, or as they call it, the holy Rock; for in the midst thereof is a little Rock, grated about with yron, whereto they come from farre in Pilgrimage, yet dare not touch it for the holinesse. For on this did Melchisedech offer; Jacob slept when he dreamed of the Ladder; Dauid saw the Angell with the sword; Ieremie inclosed in it the Arke, which still (as some thinke) continueth therein. And a world of wonders they tell you thereof. Our Author had like to haue beene slaine with his Associates for offering to enter this Temple. There were alway kept burning therein 700. lamps: it was round and covered with lead. Another Temple he saw there, which sometime had beene called Salomons Porch, after that, the Church of St. Marie wherein the Saracens kept burning 800. lamps, vnder which was a vault, which had roome sufficient for 600. horse. Ludolphus Suthenensis telleth, that in his time about the yeare 1336. some Greekes which had entred that Church of the holy Rock, were put to their choice either to turne Saracen or to die: but they remaying constant were cut a-sunder in the midst. But what doe wee now in Elia or the now Ierusalem: whose rarities the iournals of many * testifie. Concerning the former, The Historie of this Citie the Scripture hath recorded; and where Diuine Historie endeth, Iosephus and Hegeffippus (that I speake not of late Writers) haue largely supplied, especially concerning her latest fates, and as I may terme it, in her funerall Sermon. ^b Strabo, Iustine, and others, haue written of this people, but not sincerely. Of the Hebrew Patriarkes, and their Religion before the Law: also of their Law and Politic.

HHe name of Hebrewes some deriue from Abraham, as if they were called Hebrai quasi Abrahami. Arias Montanus c telleth vs, that this name of Hebrewes was not appropriate to any familie, but common to all such, as hauing passed ouer the Riuer Euphrates fixed their Tents, and abode betweene that Riuer and the great Sea. He gathereth this from the Hebrew word ^d, which signifieth to passe ouer. Such an one first of all was Heber, seeking a life answerable to his name: whose example (saith he) Thare imitated: and after, Abram for his twofold transmigration from Chaldea, and from Haran, deserued that name, and left it to his posteritie. But ^e Iosephus, ^f Augustine, and others, more fitly (in my minde) of Heber the fourth from Shem, the sonne of Noah, with whose familie, as we haue said, continued the ancient language of the world, called of his name, Hebrew: his sonne Peleg, or Phaleg, bearing the name of that diuision, which at the time of his birth the rest of the world in their languages sustayned. This Peleg was grand-father to Serug, whom some affirme to haue beene the first maker of Idols, which were afterwards worshipped by Nabor his sonne, and Thare his Nephew, the father of Abram, who preached openly that there was but ε one God, Creator and Governour of all things; and by this doctrine prouoking the Chaldeans against him, warned by Oracle, departed towards Canaan.

uing better authoritie. For Iofhua^a obieſteth to the Iſraelites their fore-fathers Idolatrie, and nameth Abraham amongſt them. And Genebrard^a doth ſo interpret it; and Mafius^b in his Commentaries on that place, both zealous and learned Papiſts: yea Lindanus^c ſpecificth the Idolatrie, and calleth him a worſhipper of Veſta. ^d Suidas ſaith, that Abraham by the obſervation of the Creatures in his ſtudie of Aſtronomie, liſted vp his minde aboute the ſtarres, and by the glorie, and order of them, learned the knowledge of God, neuer ceaſing that Diuine ſearch, till God appeared to him. Which opiunion may reconcile both the former: that firſt hee was, and after ceaſed to be, an Idolater, before God appeared in viſion to him. He alledgeth Philo for his Author, that as ſourteene yeares Abraham reprobud Thara for ſeducing men vnto Idolatrie (moued by his priuate lucre) with Images: and ſeeing the Heauen ſometime cleare, ſometime clowdie, he gathered, that that could not be God. The like he concluded of the Sunne, and Moone, by their Eclipſes (for his father had taught him Aſtronomie.) At laſt God appeared, and bad him leaue his countrie. Whereupon hee tooke his Fathers Images, who (as before is ſaid) was an Image-maker, and partly broke, partly burnt them, and then departed. Suidas further thinketh him the firſt inuenter of Letters, of the Hebrew tongue, and of the interpretation of dreames; which I leaue to the Authors credit. But for the fault of Abraham before his calling, & other blemiſhes after, in him and the reſt of the Patriarkes; what^e doe they elſe, but in the abounding of mans ſinne, ſet out the ſuperabounding grace of God? and are profitable, as learned Morton^f in his anſwere of this cauill, hath out of one of their owne^s obſerued againſt them, what he had obſerued out of Auguſtine, to theſe ſoure purpoſes: Faith, Inſtruction, Feare, and Hope: the Faith of the Hiſtorie which flattereth, or concealeth the faults of none: Inſtruction to vertue, by ſeeing others faults taxed: Feare. for what ſhall ſhrubs doe, if Cedars fall? and Hope, that we imitate their repentance, by ſeeing their pardon.

But to returne to our Hiſtorie. Many of the Ethnike hiſtories mention him: Beroſus commendeth him for his iuſtice, and ſkill in Aſtronomie. Nic. Damascenus ſaith, that he raigned at Damascus, and that in his time, his houſe continued in Damascus, and was ſtill called by his name: Hecatæus wrote a booke of him: and Alexander Polyhiſtor telleth that hee was borne in the tenth generation after the flood in Camarine (or Vrien) a Citie of Babylon. Iofephus^h addeth, that when famine draue him into *Egypt*ⁱ, he diſputed with the Priests, and moſt learned Egyptians, in queſtions of Diuinitie; and in their diuided ſects, hauing confuted one by another, he commu- cated to them the truth, both in this, and in Arithmetike and Aſtronomie, whereof before the Egyptians were ignorant. Abram (ſaith Maſter Broughton in his Con- cent) was borne ſixtie yeeres later then the common account; as appeareth^k by computa- tion of Terahs Age, who died at two hundred and ſiue yeeres, and after his death^l Abram went from Charan into Canaan, the threescore and fifteenth yeere of his owne life; and therefore was borne in the hundred and thirtieth, and not in the ſeuentieth yeere of his Father, in the 352. yeere after the flood; whereas the commen opiunion reckoneth the 292. To Abram God had giuen commandement, ſaying: Go from thy Countrie, and from thy Kindred, and from thy fathers houſe into the Land which I ſhall ſhew thee, and I will make of thee a great Nation, &c.

His Hiſtorie is fully related by Mofes, and his progenie alſo; whereof Iſmael his Sonne by Agar, and other his ſonnes which he had by Ketura his ſecond wife, he ſent to inhabite the Eaſt Countrie (Arabia) in his life-time: but Iſaac was made his Heire, both Temporall and Spirituall: to whom Iacob ſucceeded in the promiſed bleſſing: who with his ſonnes and familie went downe into Egypt, where his poſteritic multiplied exceedingly, and were called ſometime Ebrenes of their ancient pedigree; ſometime Iſraelites, of the name Iſrael, giuen to Iacob by the Angell, Gen. 32. 28. Their whole Hiſtorie ſo largely and plainly in holy Writ recorded, I feare to make^m Mine, by euill reciting: Thoſe Fountaines are more open to all, then that any ſhould neede ours, or others Brookes. mixed with ſome myric earth (at leaſt) in the paſſage: (and my intent is to bee largeſt in relation of thoſe things which are not in the Scriptures; only touching thoſe things briefly for order ſake.) best amongst the best, though stayned in some, as Rachel, which stole her Father Labans Idols; and Jacob was forced after to reforme his Familie in this respect; and after in Egypt they were corrupted with the Egyptian superstition, as Ezechiel * protests against them. The manner of Diuine worship was not so straitly limited, as afterwards to persons and places. By Reuelation and Tradition they receiued the religious worship, wherein they instructed their posteritie: vntill that in their extreamest thraldome God sent Moses and Aaron to deliuer them: vnder whose conduct they passed through the Sea and Wildernesse to the brinks of Iordan, receiuing in the way that Law, which as a Tutor, or Schoole-master, was in that their nonage to traine them vp, vntill that full and ripe age; when ^b G O D sent his Sonne made of a Woman, made vnder the Law, that he might redieme them that were vnder the Law; that we might receiue the adoption of Sonnes. Of this Law, although Moses hath giuen vs an absolute relation in the Scripture, whereof hee was the first Pen-man (of that at least which remaineth vnto vs) yet if wee shall out of him, bring them into their order, and ranke them vnder their seuerall heads, as Sigonius ^c and others haue done; it shall not bee, I thinke, ouer-tedious to the Reader.

The Law is diuided vsually, into the ^d Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall, as parts of the same: the first deliuered on the Mount Sinai, by the dreadfull voice of the Almighty God, and by the finger of God, written after in Tables of stone, called ten words, summarily abridged into two Commandements, by the Law giuer himselte; ^e The first and great Commandement enioyning the loue of G O D; the second, of our NEIGHBOURS; that God, who himselte is Charitie, imposing nothing but the louely yoke of Loue and Charitie vnto his seruants. This Law is Eternall, written first in the hearts of our first Parents, which being defaced, it was written againe in the stonie Tables of the Law, where it was but a killing letter, till Grace and Truth by I E S V S C H R I S T indited and indented it in the fleshie Tables of the Gospell, as ^f Christs new Commandement written in renewed hearts, and shall for euer bee then grauen in those spirituall Tables, when wee that heere are ^g Naturall men; shall rise againe Spirituall men; and shall bee the Law of that holy Citie, the new Ierusalem; this being then perfected, when ^h Faith, and Hope, and this World shall bee finished. The other parts Ceremoniall and Iudiciall, were (for the particulars) proper vnto that Nation, the one respecting the manner of Diuine seruice, the other of ciuill Governement: not giuen (as the other) immediately to the Israelites by God himselte, but communicated in the Mount to Moses, that hee might acquaint the people withall.

This Nation was diuided, as is said already, into Tribes according to the number of Jacobs sons, amongst whom Leui had no portion (but the Lord was their portion, they seruing at the Altar, and liuing of the Altar) but 48. Cities with their suburbs assigned for their habitation, amongst other Tribes, that being so dispersed, they might disperse also, and preach the Law to the rest: and were reckoned ⁱ to that Tribe with which they dwelled; and whereas others might not marrie ^k, for feare of alienation of their inheritances, into another Tribe, this of Leui either had, or tooke liberty herein, as Iudg. 19. and 2. Chro. 22. Ioiada married the Kings suster; and thus Elizabeth, wife of Zacharie the Priest, might be Cosen to Marie the Mother of our Lord. The number of twelue remayned yet entire, in reckoning of these Tribes, because Ioseph had a double portion, and his sonnes, Ephraim and Manasses, made two Tribes. Neither were they alone reckoned Israelites, that naturally descended from some one of these twelue sons of Israel, but such also of other Nations as embraced their Ceremonies and Religion, being for distinction sake called Profelytes. The Hebrew word which is interpreted a Profelyte, signifieth extracted, or drawne forth, because they esteemed such, drawn forth of heil: whom yet they made the children of heil, more then themselves, in burthening their consciences, not only with those Ceremonies whereunto the Law and their Tradition tyed them, but with diuers others also. The name Profelyte, as Druisius affirmeth, ^m is either taken largely for any stranger, or strictly for a conuert to their Religion. A Profelyte was made with obseruation of three things, Circumcision, Baptisme or Washing, and Oblation. The first was a signe of the Couenant, in which they were recei-ued: the second, as a badge of their cleanness; (for all the Gentiles were vnclane) the third, for the attonement with God. This was while the Temple stood, and now is not in force: but whether Baptisme be still vsed, I know not. He ought to be circumcised in the presence of three. And if by nature * or accident he were before circumcised, and wanted that fore skin, yet did they cut him there and made him bleede notwithstanding: and when his wound was whole, then before three witnesses was he baptised, in which ceremonie they couered the whole body with water. This manner of baptising they vsed also in reconciling and receiuing penitents, which had giuen scandall by notorious offences, in token of repentance, and newnesse of life, hauing first before this washing testified their humiliation by fasting and prayer. Of this washing they were so scrupulous, that ^a Clemens Alexandrinus testifieth, they were often washed in their beds. A woman Proselite was admitted by Baptisme only, and the offering of two Turtles, or two Pigeons. Serarius saith, Baptisme and Circumcision are still required: the like is written by P. Riccius and ^b Munster, who adde, that when any desireth to become a Proselite, they propound to him the hardest things of the law: with the promises of future happinesse, as of the Sabbath, not eating fat, &c. with some penances, that he should not after say, had I wist; and they would seeme to be willing by these meanes, to driue them from their Religion, as being corrupted by such new comers: but Christ affirmeth otherwise.

Exod. 18. d Num. 11. 16.

The gouernement of this people was, as ^c Betramus thinketh, (before Iethro's aduise had brought in those Governours of thousands, hundreths, fifties, and tens) vnder seuentie Elders, according to the number of persons, which descended with ^d Iacob into Egypt: and that the seuentie assigned after to Moses for Assistants in the gouernement, were continued in their former office with further ratification and increase of gifts, and not newly instituted. Yea this number, he saith, gouerned in Egypt, howfoeuer Pharaohs tyrannie did afterward much Eclipse their authoritie, and were by Moses and Aaron assembled together Exod. 4. 29. So that the thirteene Tribes, consisted of seuerall Families, according to the number of the chiefe heads thereof mentioned by ^e Moses, to which the thirteene Princes of the thirteene Tribes being annexed made vp the number. His reasons let such as will, learne of himselfe.

^e Num. 3. & 26

The gouernement in that time of Moses was mixt, the Monarchie being in Moses, but qualified with an Aristocratie in these seuentie, and the other Officers before mentioned; a Democratic also appeared in the assemblies so often mentioned. In lighter matters the Chiliarchs, Centurions, Quinquagenarij, and Decurions iudged: in more weightie the seuentie. Thus it continued in Ioshua's time till they had conquered and inhabited Cities. And then each Citie had their Senate or Councell of the Chiliarchs, and other Officers before named, proportionable to the greatnesse thereof. ^f Iosephus numbred seuen Elders, and two Leuites in euery Citie, which seemeth more to agree with his time then this former. Euen in Bethlehem the least of the thousands of Juda, Boaz assembled ten Elders about the matter of Ruth. It seemeth that they had Leuites assisting in the iudgements, and Tribunals as men learned in the Law: and so we reade of the times of Dauid and Iehoshaphat. But I had rather send my Reader for these things to the Scriptures, and to the labours of Betramus and Sigonius: from all which it is also apparant that the state was after Moses & Ioshua, managed by Iudges of diuers Tribes, not by election nor inheritance succeeding in that office, but by appointment of God, till they desired a King, whereas before God was their King, and by his Law partly, partly by Oracle ruled the State, being, as some thinke, an Aristocratie. There were also in the times of these Iudges, Princes of each Tribe, and the heads of Families: there was also a gouernement in each Citie by the Elders or Senate, exercised in the Gates thereof, as before is obserued. They had accordingly their Councels or Assemblies, either of the whole Nation, or of a whole Tribe, or of some one Citie.

^g Ruth. 4. 2. 1 Chron. 23. 4. & 26. 29. 2 Chron. 19. 8.

The Kingdome of Israel, after it was diuided from the house of Dauid, continued the like forme of gouernement, as is most probable. After the captiuitie, it appeareth by the Histories of Hezra and Nehemiah, that the chiefe sway was vnder the Lieutenant or Deputie of the Persian King, according to commission from him. Other Offices happily receiued some alteration in regard of their numbers and estate, weaker and and lesse then in those former times of prosperitie, so that what Iosephus hath written of seuen Elders in each Citie, and those things which in the Talmud are written of their Politie, had now first (as some think) their beginning. Concerning this, because it is not so common, let me haue leaue for a larger discourse out of the Talmudical Sanhedrin, which thus recordeth. ^a Matters which concerne goods are determined by three; Criminall cases by a Councell of three and twentie. But such things as belong to a whole Tribe, a false Prophet, or the high Priest, by the great Councell at Ierusalem of seuentie and one. The high Priest iudgeth and is iudged: he sitteth at Funerals on a little Seat, all the multitude sitting on the ground. The King iudgeth not and is not iudged, giueth testimonie against none, nor none against him. Hee maketh Warres, but not without consent of the Sanhedrin: he may not haue aboue eighteene wiues: he ought to haue the Booke of the Law written, and hanging about his necke. In ciuill causes, each of the Litigants chooseth a Iudge or Arbitrator ^b, and both these thus chosen choose a third. Of this office are vncapable, Dicers, Vsurers, and such as practise dishonest courses for gaine: They also which are of neare Kindred to the parties may neither be Iudges nor Witnesses. Their Companions or Aduersaries may giue testimonie, but not iudgement. Women and Seruants might not be witnesses, Ios. Antiq. 4.7. Nor a Theefe, Robber, Vsurer, Publican, Child, or Keeper of Doues. Ph. Ferdinand. This last Ricinus doth not mention, but addeth a Gentile, Foole, Deafe, Blinde. The antientest witness is first examined: and that from his owne sight, or the debtors mouth, or else it is nothing. Thirtie dayes after sentence giuen the Defendant may alledge what he can for himselfe. The odde number is the casting voice. In criminall causes decided by three and twentie, one odde voice absoluerh, but there must be aboue twelue of the three and twentie to condemne; and when sentence is giuen nothing may be alledged further for accusation, which for absolution is lawfull. And he which hath spoken for the accused may not after speake against him. Ciuill causes are examined in the day and sentenced in the night, but criminall ^c only by day: and sentence of condemnation may not bee pronounced the same day, and therefore on holy-dayes Euens examinations are forbidden. Profelytes and Bastards may determine ciuill causes, Priests and Leuites with other Israelites, are required in criminall. These Iudges sate in a semicircle hauing one ^d Scribe or Register on the right hand, and another on the left: In the Session-house were present besides three orders of Students which sate on the ground according to their degree, out of which the number of the Senators were supplied when neede was, so that one of the first order being made Senator, another was chosen out of the second order into his place, and out of the third in the roome of the second, and out of the people into that third order. The witnesses must testifie only from their owne sight, and that exactly what ^e seuenth yeare of the Iubilee, what yeare of that seuenth, what moneth, what day of the moneth, and weeke, and in what houre, and place, he saw it. For to saue or loose an Israelite is as much as to preserue or destroy the frame of the world; if one witness be ignorant of any of those circumstances, or contradicteth another, his testimonie is vaine. None of the Students which sit by may be suffered to accuse, if they can say any thing in defence of the partie they may. If they cannot find sufficient to absolue him that day, the Senators or Iudges scanne that matter seriously, two or three together all night, vsing a spare dyet. If twelue condemne, and the rest cleare him, they adde to the number of Iudges till they make vp seuentie and one to make further search. When sentence is pronounced, the condemned person is carried away and brought againe foure or siue times to see whether he or any other can say any thing for his purgation. And if nothing bee alledged sufficient to reuerse the sentence, he is led to execution, ^f the Cryer going before him and proclaiming the crime and sentence and accusers, that if any can then say any thing in his behalfe, he may speake. When he cometh within ten cubits of the place of execution, he is admonished to confesse his fault, and so he shall haue part in the life to come: and if he know not the forme of confession, it is enough for him, to say, Let death be vnto me the remission of all my sinnes. Being within foure cubits he is stripped naked all but his priuities, if it bee a woman shee is led forth in her clothes. The stoning place was built twice the height of a man, from whence by one of the wit-

* He which was stoned for blasphemie was hanged til funne set, and then his gibbet and he buried together. The stone which they vsed in his death was also buried, likewise the sword which they vsed in beheading, & the linnen cloth vsed in strangling were buried. Druspret. l. 4. pag. 139.

d 3. Courts of Iudges in Ierusalem.

nesses he was cast downe head-long, the ground beneath being set with flints; and if hee dyed not with the fall, another of the witnesses smote him neere the heart with a flint, which if it did not finish his death, the whole multitude cast stones at him. They might not condemne about one in one day, to death. Hee which was stoned, if hee were a man was presently hanged on a Gibbet, and after taken downe and buried with other persons which had before suffered in like manner. When the flesh was there consumed his bare bones might bee laid in his owne or his fathers Sepulchre. After this, his friends and kinsmen went to the Iudges and witnesses, and saluting them, acknowledged the iustice of their fact. Besides this punishment of stoning, * they punished with the fire, sword, or strangling. The manner of burning was, to put the condemned person in dung vp to the arme holes, and one executioner on one side, and another on the other, graned him with a linnen cloth about his neck, pulling the same till they forced him to gape, and then a bar or rod of burning metall was thrust downe into his bodie. The sword was vsed in beheading. Strangling was done with a course peece of linnen, pulled close about his neck, till he were dead. It would be too long to shew what faults were appropriated to each of these kindes of execution. If a man had deserued two of them, hee was to bee punished with the most seuer. In some cases of homicide the guiltie person was put in a little-ease prison, where he was forced alway to stand, and was fed only with Barly till his belly rotted, and his bowels fell out. Any one might presently slay him which had stolen any of the holy Vessels, or blasphemed the name Iehoua. The Priest which exercised his function while he was polluted, was not brought to iudgement, but other Priests chosen to that purpose led him out of the holy place and knocked out his braines. From the Sanhedrin was no appeale: They were also called Mehokekim, that is, Scribes or Law-giuers, because, whatsoeuer they deliuered or writ was receiued for a Law.

Their College, saith Galatinus ^b, (who from their sayling proueth that the Messias is come) represented that Scepter, by the holy Ghost in Iacob promised to Iuda: and therefore not only vnder the Kings and Iudges did exercise iudgements, but also when there was no King, or Iudge in Israel. Of their qualitie it is thus written. They ^c appointed none (said R. Iohanan) but men of wisdom, stature, and of goodly presence, and of old age, and cunning in exorcismes, and vnderstanding the seuentie tongues, that they might not neede interpreters. Their stature and comlineffe, Rabbi Selomoh saith, was required, to acquire them reuerence; and skill in enchantment, to conuince such Wisards. There were required the whole number of seuentie and one, in determining the going to Warre, in adding to a Citie, or the reuenues of the Temple, or in conuenting the ordinarie Iudges of the Tribes; To constitute one of this number, they vsed imposition of hands; R. Iudas saith of five. A Wolfe, Lyon, Beare, Leopard, and Serpent, were to be slaine by the three and twentie.

The great College called Sanhedre ghedola, consisted of seuentie and one, the lesse of three and twentie. That odde number about seuentie, was to supply the roome of Moses, which was ouer those first seuentie. Hereby Galatinus gathereth, that in the Councell that condemned Christ, there was the whole number of seuentie and one, which is true, if Herod had not before disannulled that societie. The greater Sanhedrin ordayned the lesse; for those seuentie ordayned all the Sessions of Iudges, which in other Cities and Places ruled the people: and to this Court of the seuentie in Ierusalem they were all subiect. The place where they sate was called Gazith, that is, Carued, whereof this Court had the name (as the Star-chamber with vs.) Other Courts or Houses of Iudgement, they had diuers, of the three and twentie. One ^d of them sate in the Gate of the Mountaine of the Temple: another in the Gate of the Court: others in euery Citie. And when there was a controuersie, it was first brought to that Citie or Towne, and so to the rest, if occasion required (in order) to that in the Gate of the Mount, after to that in the Court-gate, and last to the Gazith Consistorie, in which they sate from morning till night. On Sabbaths and solemne dayes they sate on the Wall.

But when Herod obtayned the Scepter, he slew Hircanus and his sonne Antigonus, which had beene King and Priest, and also all of the seed Royall, and burnt the Genea-logies of their Kings: and further to stablish his Throne in bloud, he killed the Scribes and Doctors of the Law, and caused all the Sanhedrin to be done to death. Because the Rabbanan (they are the words of the Talmud) had said according to Deut. 17. From among thy brethren thou shalt set a King over thee: he slew the Rabbanan or Masters, reseruing only Baba, the sonne of Boia, whose eyes he after put out. And therefore the Sanhedrin perished: for, as is said, siue, or at least after R. Ismael, three were necessarie to the ordination by the imposition of hands. But there were by Herods permission other Iudges instituted to be vnder the King, like the former Colledge, but had no authoritie of sentence in waightie and criminall causes: and therefore they said to Pilate, It is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death,^a as some thinke. But others maintaine the contrarie. Betramus taketh a middle course, that the Iewes might examine and condemne, but then were to present the condemned partie to the Roman Magistrate for execution: except in the cause of stoning, wherein they tooke more libertie, as in the Acts of the Apostles, by Stephen and Pauls example appeareth. After their false sentence pronounced against Christ, they were expelled from the Consistorie Gazith, fortie yeares before the destruction of the Temple: and afterwards, by the commandement of the Romans, were all slaine. They being expelled Gazith, held their Consistorie at Hamith, another place in Ierusalem; but, saith R. Abdimi, with the place they lost their power in criminall iudgements, which might not be giuen but in Gazith. So doe the Rabbines interpret the words, Deut. 17.10. According to the words which they of that place shew thee, thou shalt doe. They had inferiour punishments with the whip for smaller offences: in which the Law had stipted them at fortie stripes, and they abated one of that number for feare of exceeding: as, ^b Paul saith, He had siue times receined fortie stripes saue one. The ^c whip was of calues leather, as Drusus asfirmeth. Betramus saith that they had in each Citie seuen Iudges in money matters, whereof three were principall, two Leuites, and one of the rest, from whence the number is said to be but three. They had also ten Aediles, Taskers or Iudges of the Market, one of which was of the Priestly stocke. They had in Ierusalem an vnder Prouost, or ^d Captaine of the Temple. In other Cities of their dispersion, they had Synagogues and Magistrates, as at Alexandria, Antiochia, Sardis and other Cities, where they had obtained priuiledges and immunities. The manifold mutations of their State by the Babylonians, Perhans, Macedonians, Egyptians, Syrians, Romans, and ciuill warres amongst themselues, did both then change the face of Government, and haue made it now to vs obscure and vncertaine.

Now concerning the Iewish Excommunications, Drusus ^e hath obserued, that the Iewes had three kindes and degrees of Excommunications, Niddai, Herem, Samatha: the first signifieth a Remouing; the second, Anathema; ^f the third, the same which the Apostle calleth Maran-atha. by the first they are made ἀποκωμωγῆ (of which is an example, Gen. 4.4) excommunicated from the Ecclesiasticall Assemblies. He which was thus Excommunicated was called Menudde, and the denouncers Menaddim. There were foure and twentie causes for the which it was inflicted. If any died therein without repentance, they iudged him worthy of stoning, and therefore stoned his coffin: whereof they ^g giue example of one Eleazar the sonne of Henoch. They might enter the Temple when they were excommunicated; but that they might enter the Synagogue is vnlikely. Thus they write, ^h Salomon made two doores, in the Temple, one for mourners and excommunicates, the other for the newly married: at this, if any entred, the Israelites which came on the Sabbaths, and sate betwixt those doores, said, He whose name dwelleth in this house, glad thee with children: If any entred at the other doore with his vpper lip couered, they knew that he was a mourner, and said, He which dwelleth in this house reioyce and comfort thee: if his lip were not couered, they knew that he was Menudde, excommunicate, and said, He which dwelleth in this house put into thy heart to heare the words of thy fellowes &c. When the Temple was destroyed, they decreed that the Bridegromes and Mourners should enter the Synagogue, and the men which saw them reioyced with the one, and sate on the ground with the other. If they did not amend, they were excommunicated with a greater curse, or Anathema: and if they persisted obstinate, they did Samatize them. The word Anathema

CHAP. III.

Of the Religious Places of the Israelites.

^k Hospinian. de Templis cap. 1.

N the discouerie of their ancient Religion, it seemeth fittest to discourse first of Places, secondly of Times, thirdly of Rites, fourthly of Persons consecrated to Religion. And first, of the first. Neither were the first men, ^k nor first Hebrewes, very religious in this point of dedicating Places to Religion; as appeareth in Histories both holy and prophane; and if for some vision, made vnto them in some places, they did for a time hallow the same with Altars, and Sacrifices: yet neither were they alway, or only thus esteemed. But He, whose is the Earth, and all that therein is, did by his Law appoint, as it were, a place of his residence amongst these, whom he had chosen for his owne people: and commanded them to erect a Tabernacle in the wildernesse, fitting that their peregrination. Afterward Salomon built him an house in Ierusalem: which therefore is called the holy Citie, and the Citie of the great King.

The Tabernacle (a moueable Temple that might bee taken asunder, and ioyned together againe) was, by Gods commandement, erected in the wildernesse, in the same manner, and of the same matter, which God had both commanded and shewed to Moses in the Mount; the matter and forme whereof, with all that thereunto appertained; the Arke, the Candlestick, the Altar, &c. in the booke of Exodus are liuely declared. It was after (as we reade in the booke of ^l Ioshua) with great solemnitie carried miraculously thorow Jordan, by the Leuites deputed to that seruice: and, after their conquest of the Countrey, ^m placed in Shilo, a Citie of Ephraim. There did Ioshua diuide the Land to her new Conquerours: there were their solemne Assemblies for State and Religion. In the time of Heli they remoued the Arke from the Tabernacle into the armie, which they had gathered against the Philistims; of whom the Arke was taken. The Tabernacle in the time of Saul, was carried to Nob, and, in the time of Dauid, to Gibeon; where Salomon offered a thousand burnt offerings. The Philistims forced by Diuine iudgements, sent backe the Arke, receiued by the Bethsamites, curious to their cost; it was after placed in Kiriath Iarim, in the house of Aminadab, next of Obed-Edam, and then by Dauid in the place, which he had fitted for the same in Ierusalem; whence it was remoued into the Temple, which Salomon had built: where it was till the time of the deportation: in which time ⁿ it was (saith the Author of the second booke of Maccabees) hidden by Jeremie the Prophet. But that Author is beholden to the Councell of Trent for his credit: the Iewes themselves in that point, not beleeuing him; ^o who affirme that the second Temple came short of the former, by the want of the fire from heauen, of the Arke, of the Urin and Thummin, of the succession of Prophets, and the glorie of God betweene the Cherubims.

^r 1. Cro. 22. 14

The Temple was built on Mount Moriah by Salomon, according to the ^p patterne, which he had receiued of Dauid: to which worke he had gathered a greater inasse of wealth, then easily we shall reade of in the Persian, Greeke, Roman, or any other Christian, Turkish, or Heathen Empire; ^q namely, 100000. talents of gold; 1000000. talents of siluer, and afterward 3000. talents of gold, and 7000. talents of siluer: to which was added, by the offerings of the Princes, 10000. talents of siluer, and more then then 5000. talents of gold, besides iewels, and brasse, and iron, without weight, with Cedars and stones without number. The gold alone amounteth after the common computation of the common talent; at 6000. crownes, to sixe hundred fortie eight millions of crownes, and vward; the siluer to about the same summe.

This beautifull frame I should describe with my description, if (after a double narration of all the parts; forme; and contents thereof in the Historie of the Bible) I should recite the particulars. This Temple, fleeced by some, repaired by others, continued in varietie of state, till the sacking and ruine of it, together with the Citie by Nabuchodonosor. And after their returne, by the edict of Cyrus, and other the Persian Kings, it was rebuilded (but farre inferiour in glorie) in the space, as the Jewes say, vnto Christ, of six and fortie yeares: after others it was longer in hand; by reason of impediments from their cailling, and malicious neighbours. But this error (if we vnderstand them of the building of Zorobabel) proceeded from the Iewish ignorance of the Persian Chronologie, which knew no other Persian Darius but one, attributing to Cyrus one and thirtie yeares, to Cambyses nine, to the Magi seuen monthes; and in the sixt yeare of Darius which followed (as they accounted) was the Temple finished: all which amount to six and fortie. They confound Darius Nothus, (to whose times the most and best of our moderne Chronographers; Scaliger, Iunius, Caluissius, Linely and others, referre this rebuilding of the Temple) with that former Darius the sonne of Histaspes, and from that second yeare of Darius Nothus, wherein the Edict was made for the Temple, doth Scaliger beginne the reckening of Daniels seuentie weekes and a halfe (as he interpreteth) the accounting from thence to the destruction of this Temple foure hundred fourescore and thirteene yeares and a halfe. This second Temple hauing receiued access of magnificence in succession of times, was spoiled and polluted vnder Antiochus, who dedicated the same to Iupiter Olympius; but being freed and dedicated anew by Maccabaus, it recovered great part of the former beautie; till, as Iosephus saith, and his abbreviator Iosippus, it was pulled downe by Herod, and built anew. Herein both that allegation of the Jewes of sixe and fortie yeares, is against this assertion of Iosephus, and the Historie also of Hegeffippus, who reported that he only compassed the circuit about the Temple with a wall, and beautified the same with costly buildings, erected from the foundation the porches about the Sanctuarie, and fortified it with the Castle Antonia: but some account this Hegeffippus a counterfeit.

Chrysofome y more probably vnderstands those words of the Jewes, Fortie and six yeares was this Temple a building, of the Herodian Temple: and herein Scaliger, Hospinian, and the great Cardinall Baronius follow him: accounting exclusiuelly from the eighteenth yeare of Herods raigne, which Fnuccius reckoneth An. M. 3947. to the yeare 3992. in which Iohn Baptised, and Christ vttered these words: in all which they coniecture that somewhat was still a doing about the new building thereof, although the principall part thereof was performed and finished by Herod in eight yeares. This they gather by Iosephus his owne Testimonie, that the building continued till the time of Nero, and in another place, where he affirmeth that the East porch, which Luke calls Salomons porch, was still remaining of the ancient building, in the dayes of Nero. For thus hee saith in the last booke of his Antiquities, speaking of the times of Albinus, fourescore and three yeares after Herod began this worke, as Scaliger reckoneth. Now the building of the Temple was finished. The people therefore seeing eighreene hundred work-men, which had before been wont to liue by that building, idle and vnwilling that the money should be laid vp, lest it might become a prey to the Romans; carefull also to provide for the work-men: perswaded the King to reedifie the East porch, which closed vp the outside of the Temple, hanging ouer a deepe and narrow valley, borne vp by a wall of foure hundred cubits height, and the length of euery stone was twenty cubits, the thicknes sixe; the worke of King Salomon which first built the Temple. But the King, to whom Claudius Caesar had committed the building of the Temple, seeing that it required much time, great expence, &c. refused. Thus it is apparant that all the Temple was not demolished till the finall destruction thereof vnder Titus. Neither doe the Jewes in the Talmud speake of any third Temple: nor can the Prophecie of Haggans be fulfilled, That the glorie of the second Temple should exceede

the glorie of the former; if Christ (of whose coming it is interpreted) had not by his presence, preaching, and miracles, not onely supplied the defects (before mentioned) but made it surmount the other in effects of Maiesie and glorie. And the zeale vnto this testimonie, not the meanest which the Christian Veritie ^a vrgeth against the Jewish Incredulitie and Apostasie, (which is necessarily demonstrated and euinced, whiles yet they continue their vaine hopes of a Messias, so many Ages after the desolation of that Temple whereof Aggee prophesied) hath caused mee to vse so many words in this matter. But to satisfie the fancies of great men, their great workes are commonly made greater: For howsoeuer it was verie great in it selfe, that Herod should haue, eight yeares together, many worke-men at worke (which Iosephus numbereth for some part of the time ten thousand and a thousand Priests) yet sustaining, no doubt, some intermission after his time, either wholly, or in part, it could not bee so great as to haue accomplished it wholly from the foundation, wherein Salomon spent seuen yeares: and besides, what any of the naturall Israelites performed in this worke, hee employed an hundred three and fiftie thousand and sixe hundred worke-men of the Strangers or Forrainers found in the Countrey. And whereas the second Temple was but halfe the height of the former, perhaps it is true, that (according to Iosephus) hee perfected it to that height of an hundred and twentie cubites, whereof twentie cubites sanke downe in the setting of the foundations. If any yet will rather thinke this Temple the worke of Herod, then Zorobabel, as a thing which Iosephus by his owne eyes might obserue. Scaliger doth neuertheless salue that prophesie of Aggee, by distinction of the Building and of the ^b Continuall Sacrifice: saying, that if it had bene ten times reedified, yet the continuall Sacrifice continuing causeth that there is no interruption, and that it should still bee called but one Temple. It was builded by Herod of white stones five and twentie cubites long, eight thicke, and twelue broad. Hee that would further read the particulars, let him haue recourse to Iosephus in his fiftenth booke of Antiquities. This Temple was burned by Titus, in the sacke of the Citie, the same day that before it had bene fired by the Chaldæans. Adrian the Emperour ^c did after destroy the Reliques thereof, that a stone was not left vpon a stone; and there, in the same place, dedicated another Temple to Iupiter, that former being ouerwhelmed with earth. Iulian gaue leaue to the Iewes to reedifie the Temple, in despight of Christian Religion, and contributed franckely thereto: but Ammianus Marcellinus ^d, a Heathen Writer, witnesseth, That fire issued out of the Earth, ^e and burned both worke and worke-men: when as an Earth-quake (which had before, saith ^f Zozomen, killed a great many, in the very attempting of this Worke) could not deterre them from proceeding in their purpose: and Crosses, miraculously fallen on the garments of many, did both teach them to forsake their Iudaisme, and to become Christians.

Chrysofome ^g mentioneth this, and saith, That vnder Adrian the Iewes sought to recouer their libertie, and lost their Countrey. Vnder Constantine they attempted the like, who therefore cut off their eares, and branded their bodies for Rebels, as the elder of you (saith hee to his Auditors) doe know. And in our dayes, about twentie yeares since, Iulian the Emperour was at great expences, appointed Officers, sent for worke-men from all places, thinking to frustrate Christs Prophecie concerning the Temple, and to bring the Iewes to Idolatrie. But so soone as they had attempted this businesse, and bared the foundation, had drawne forth the earth, and were now ready to beginne their building; a fire burst forth from the foundations, and burned many, which caused them to cease. And if you now goe to Ierusalem you may see the foundations naked: hereof we all are witnesses. Neither did this happen vnder Christian Emperours, lest any should impute it to the Christians, but vnder an Ethnicke, when Christianitie was persecuted. Thus much in effect, Chrysofome. Gregorie Nazianzen ^h also testifieth the same, affirming that the Earth (as it were taking a Vomit from the Diuine hand) spued out the stones, which yet till this day had continued therein, and dispersed them to the great damage of the neighbour-buildings.

Other holy places they had, which the Scripture mentioneth as high places, which were were high hills, or other open and loftie places, shaded for the most part with Trees: the Prophets inuey against them, and^l they were commanded to be destroyed, together with the Groues: some yet were permitted, eyther by extraordinary command for a time, as to Gedeon^m and to *Manoab*ⁿ; or because of the Tabernacle at Gibeon, or of the Arke at Ierusalem. The not reforming this toleration of high places is reckoned as an eclipse of Iehoshaphats and Asas glorie; which Ezekiab and Iosiah quite remoued and polluted. These high and open places it seemeth were consecrated, as fitting to the celestiaall bodies; to which, and to Baal (who is interpreted the Sunne) they vsed for the most part on them to sacrifice. They had also their Houses and Temples for Baal, in Israel and Iuda; and Dan & Bethel were by Ieroboam dedicated to his Egyptian Idolatrie: and Gilgal was a place of request in this kind. Salomon also built temples or houses for his Idolatrous wiues. And to reckon euery particular in this kind were a work endles, in the 2. Reg. 17. & 23. & other places enough is of them recorded.

Two other Temples were erected of some reputation: one by Sanballat at Samaria, on Mount Garizin, by licence obtained of Alexander the Great, whose part he followed, rebelling against Darius his true Lord. The occasion was, because Manasses brother of Iaddi the High Priest had married, contrary to Gods law, Nicasa^o daughter of Sanballat, and was forced eyther to leaue his Priestly Function or Heathenish bed. Whereupon Sanballat hauing obtained licence to build that Temple aforesaid, constituted him the High Priest therof, many other Priests for the like fault, resorting thither to him. But of these Samaritans we shall haue fitter occasion to say more when we come to handle their Sects.

Ptolemaus Philometor Paboue said, granted licence to Onias (the sonne of the High Priest Onias, whom Antiochus had slaine (who for the same cause had heere shrowded himselfe) to build a Temple, induced hereunto by a false interpretation of the prophetic of Esay at Leontopolis, in the shire, as I may terme it, or Nomus of Heliopolis: hauing Priests and Leuites ministring therein, and other things answering in some sort to that of Ierusalem. When the Temple of Ierusalem was burnt by Titus; this Temple was shut vp also of Lupus the Deputie, three hundred and thirtie yeares after it had beene builded: and after by his successor Paulinus vtterly despoyled both of the wealth and the Religion. The City was called of Onias, Onion.^q It had a Tower and an Altar like that of Ierusalem, but in steade of a Candlesticke, a Lampe of golde hanging on a chaine of golde, enriched by the King with large reuenues.

Synagogues^r the Iewes had many, both in Ierusalem where are said to haue beene foure hundred and fourescore, and in all Cities of Iudea, and among the Gentiles where the Iewes were disperfed. When they first began to be builded, is vncertaine. Cornelius Betramus^s thinketh, That the eight and fortie Cities of the Leuites, had their fit places for Assemblies, whence Synagogues had beginning. In these Synagogues the Archisynagogi were in place of Leuites and Prophets, sometimes diuers in the same Synagogue, as Sosthenes & Crispus in that of Corinth, which on festiuall dayes did performe the publique prayers, and read the Law and the Prophets, expounding the same themselues, or authorising others hereunto; so that they which first were called Prophets, were afterward Scribes and Lawyers, and in the Synagogues Archisynagogi. They had authority also, as it seemeth, of Iurisdiction in punishing offenders. The Cities of the Leuites were as Nurseries of learning, and Vniuersities for the studies of Diuinitie. And in the reformation of Religion by Elias and Elisha: the Schooles of the Prophets were as Colledges, and the sons of the Prophets students of Diuinity, which had a Rector ouer them, as may seem by 2. King. 6. and other places: where also their gesture in hearing their Lectures appeareth to be sitting; and therefore their Schooles or Academies were called Sessions. In their Synagogues also they kept both their Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall Courts. The Synagogues of Forreiners^t at Ierusalem were also Colledges of Students. ^v Sigonius coniectureth, That their Babylonian exile ministred occasion to them to helpe themselues with these Houses of Prayer and Instruction. The worde Synagogue^u is taken both for the Assemblies, whether in this place, or out of it, and for the Place it selfe; hauing a Ciuill as well as a Religious vse. And these Synagogues they haue in the places of their dispersion vnto this day.

Besides these Temples and Houses consecrated to God, Ambition, the Ape of Deuotion founded some of other nature. Herod the Great, erected a sumptuous Temple and Cittie in the honour of Cesar, which sometime had bene called Stratonis surris, and after Cæsarea. The Temple of Cesar was conspicuous to them which sayled farre off in the Sea, and therein were two Statues, one of Rome, the other of Cesar. The sumptuousnesse of Herods ambition in this Cittie, Temple, Theater, and Amphitheater, &c. Iosephus amply describeth. ^b He built another Temple at Panium, the fountaine of Jordan, in honour of Cesar; and least this should stirre vp the peoples hearts against him to see him thus deuotely prophane and prophanely deuoute, he remitted to them the third part of the tributes. He consecrated Games, after the like Heathenish solemnitie, in honour of Cesar, to be celebrated euery fift yeare at Cæsarea. He built also the Pythian Temple at Rhodes of his owne cost. He gaue yearely reueneue to the Olympian Games, for maintenance of the Sacrifices and solemnitie thereof: Quis in rapacitate auarior? Quis in largitione effusior? Hee robbed his owne to enrich (or rather vainely to lauish out on) others. He spared not the Sepulchres of the dead. For the Sepulchre of Dauid had lent before to Hircanus three thousand talents of siluer; which filled him with hope of the like spoyle; and entring it with his choysse friends, he found no money but precious clothes; and whiles he in a couetous curiosity searched further, he lost two of his companie, by flame (as fame went) breaking out vpon them. Hereupon he left the place, and, in recompence, in the entrie of the Sepulchre, built a monument of white Marble.

He built also ^c Sebaste in the Region of Samaria, wherein hee erected a Temple, and dedicated a Court of three furlongs and a halfe of ground before it, to Cesar. Thus Cesar was made a God by him, who would not allow Christ a place among men, but, that he might kill him, spared not the infants of Bethleem, no not his owne sonne amongst the rest, as this his God iested of him, ^d saying, That hee had rather be Herods Swine then his Sonne. Of the Jewish computation of Time, and of their festiuall dayes.

The day amongst the Iewes was (as amongst vs) Naturall and Artificiall; this from Sunne-rising to Sunne-setting, to which is opposed Night, the time of the Sunnes absence from our Hemisphere: that comprehended both these, called of the Greekes Νυκθημερον, containyng one whole reuolution of the Sunnes motion to the same point of the Horizon or Metidian, in 24. houres. This Naturall ^e day the Babylonians began at the rising of the Sunne, the Athenians at the setting, the Vmbrians (as the Astrologians) at Noone, the Egyptians and Romane Priests at Midnight. The Iewes agreed in their reckoning with the Athenians, as did the Galli in ^f Cæsars time, reporting Pluto to be the author of their Nation: & some reliques hereof is in our naming of time by a seuen-night, and a fort-night; although otherwise we reckon the day between two midnights. The most natural cõputation of this natural day, is, to follow that order of nature, wherein darknes had the priority of time, ^g and the evening & the morning were made made one day, or the first day : which (saith ^d Hospinian) the Italian and Bohemian Clockes doe yet obserue. The day was not diuided of the first Hebrewes (before the Babylonian captiuitie) into houres, but was distinguished by Vigilia, or Watches, of which they had foure ; the first began at euening, the second at midnight, the third in the morning, the fourth at noon. Neither is there any hebrew word signifying an houre, although some interpret the degrees of the Dial of Abaz to be houres; some (as Tremell.) halfe houres. Afterwards it was diuided into houres 1 2. in the night, and as many in the day; not equall as ours, but longer or shorter, according to so many equall portions of the day or night : so that with them the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. houre was answerable with our houres of 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. if we consider them in the Equinoctiall, otherwise they differed from our equall houres more or lesse, according to the vnequall lengthning or shortning of the dayes, but so, that an easie capacity may conceiue the proportion. These houres sometimes they reduced into foure, the first contayning the 1, 2, 3. or with vs the 7, 8, 9. houres : the second the 4, 5, 6. or after our reckoning 10, 11, 12. of the clock, and so forwards. This was the Ecclesiasticall Computation, according to the times of Prayers and Sacrifices, imitated still in the Church of Rome in their Canonick houres. Thus is Marke reconciled to the other Euangelists, ^f in relating the time of Christs Passion, the first calling it the third houre when they crucified him, or led him to be crucified, whereas Iohn saith, That it was ^g about the sixt houre when Pilate deliuered him. Thus may the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard be vnderstood, Matth. 20. and other places of Scripture. The night also was diuided into foure Watches, each contayning three houres, accordingly. They had three houres of Prayer, the third, the sixth, the ninth, as both the Jewish and ^h Euangelicall Writers mention : the first of which they say Abraham instituted, the second Isaac (it began when it was halfe an houre past the sixt houre, and continued till halfe an houre after the ninth : at this houre the Disciples of the Wisemen tooke their meat, which before this prayer tasted nothing) the third began when the former left, and continued till the euening. And this was obserued both for their publique and priuate prayers, although it be not likely that the whole time was that way spent, especially in priuate deuotions; for then their particular callings had bene frustrate and cancelled by this exercise of the generall.

Seuen dayes were a ⁱ weeke, whereof the seuenth was called the Sabbath; others had no particular name. but were called the first day of the weeke, or the first day of (or after) the Sabbath, and so of the rest. The Christians called them ^k Feria, as the first, second or third Feria, for Sunday, Munday, Tuesday : the reason whereof was, the keeping of Easter weeke holy. For that being made in their Calendar the first weeke of the year, and by law being wholly feriata, freed from working, and sanctified to holy vses; therefore the dayes also of other weekes receiued that name from this first weeke. Touching which there is a law of Constantine the great, to keepe both it and the weeke before it also ^l ἀνεργητος, without working, which for the later was by custome obtained, and by a Canon enjoyed, to spend it wholly in the Church with Psalmes and Hymnes and spirituell Songs.

Their moneths, as with vs and the Grecians, tooke their name of the Moon, and with them also their measure, reckoning the order of their dayes according to the age of the Moone, and by courses they contained, one thirty dayes, the next twenty nine, and therefore were constrained euery second or third yere to intercale, or adde, as in a Leap-year one moneth of two and twenty dayes, and in euery fourth year of three and twenty dayes. This they called ^m Veadar, because it followed the twelfth moneth Adar, for the supply of ten dayes one and twentic houres, and two hundred and foure scruples which the twelue moneths of the Moone came short of the yeare of the Sun. And this they were forced to doe for the obseruation of the Pasche and their other Feasts. ⁿ Before their Babylonian thraldom, foure only of these moneths were known by proper names; the first called Ethanim, the second Bul, the seuenth, which after was made the first, Abib; the eight Zif: but afterwards the rest receiued names, which had bene before distinguished ouely by order, and the former names also were altered; that being reckoned the first moneth of the yeare, in which befell the fiftenth day of the Moone after the Equinoctiall Vernall, and their names follow, Nisan, Iar, Sivan, Tammuz, Ab, Elul, Thischri, Marcheschuan, Cisleu, Tebeth, Schebath, Adar. Thus Hospi- nian; but Scaliger and Ar. Montanus in his Daniel, or ninth booke of Jewish Antiquities, say, That the ancient yeare had twelue moneths, as appeareth by the history of Noah: but those moneths had no proper names, but of their order, the first, second, third moneth, &c. Those names, which after they were knowne by, were Chaldean; and so Elias in Thesbi. They were all Chaldean or Persian names, not mentioned in any of the Prophets before the captiuitie, and they also name but seauen. But in Thargumi Hierosol. they are all expressed in their order. The Japonites, Chinois, and Indians, haue no names yet for their moneths, but name them by their order and number. The Romanes also named some of their moneths by their order; others after their Emperors, as Iulius and Augustus, to which Domitian added, Germanicus for September, his own name for October. Commodus made an Edict, for the naming of August Commodus, September Herculeus, October Inuictus, Nouember Exuperatorius, December A- mazonius.

Hospi- nian, Ar. Montanus in his Daniel, and others, begin the world in Autume; but our English yeare doth (as also Scaliger did, who in the last Edition of his Em. T. he hath now altered his opinion, and agreeth with the former) suppose the world was created in the Equinoctiall ver-

Their Ecclesiasticall or festiuall yeare began at the Spring, as we haue said afore, by the commandement of God, at and in remembrance of their departure out of Egypt at the same time, Exod. 12. as with vs we haue an Ecclesiasticall yeare moueable, according to the fall of Easter, differing from the Ciuill beginning at our Lady, as with others at Christ- masse or New-yeares day.

And of this opinion is Ricobosua, Basil, Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, Beda, Isidorus, Damascen, and other later Diuines & Astronomers, whole reasons Hospi- man laboureth to confute, & ad- ducit sibi iudice loci.

Scaliger thus obserueth concerning the Jewish yeare. The Jewes (saith he) vse a double reckoning of their yeare; one after the course of the Moone, the other after the Tekypha's or course of the Sunne. Tekypha * anciently was that moment in which the passed year ended, and the following began. But the later Jewes diuided the year of the Sun into foure equal parts, each whereof consisted of 91. dayes, 7. houres and a halfe. And they diuide the said yeare into 12. equal parts, each contayning dayes, 30. houres, 10. 30. They begin at the fifteenth of Aprill, moued by the authority of R. Samuel, an ancient Criticke, who ascribed the first Tekypha to that moneth which before they began in Autumne: the reason was, because at that time Moses led the Israelites out of Egypt. The moderne Jewes are so superstitious in the obseruation of their Tekypha's, that they esteeme it danger of life to alter their reckoning of them. They also attribute to each of them his proper element, as to the Tekypha Tamuz (the Summer Solstice) the Fire; and he which should drink or eate in the moment of that Tekypha, they think should be taken with a burning seauer. Tekypha Nisan is on the fifteenth of Aprill, Tekypha Tamuz on the fifteenth of Iuly, Tekypha Tisri on the fourteenth of October, Tekypha Tebeth on the fourteenth of Ianuarie. In times past they obserued superstitiously the beginnings of euery moneth, thinking, that then the Sunne entred into that Signe, which was attributed to that moneth. Now they onely obserue the foure Tropi- call Signes. Such is their folly, as though now the entrance of Aries were not more then fife and thirtie daies before the Tekypha of Moses. But their leaden braines know not what Tekypha is, nor why, nor when it was instituted. So much Scaliger.

If the new Moone happened after noone, then the moneth and their New-Moone- Feast began the next day, and the yeare likewise, which began at the New-Moone. They were so scrupulous concerning the Moone, that Clemens Alexand. out of another Author obieets the worship thereof vnto them: they thinke (saith * he) that they alone know God, not knowing that they worship Angels & Archangels, and the moneth and the Moone; and if the Moone appeare not, they keep not that Sabbath, which they call The first, nor the New-moone, nor the unleavened, nor the feast, nor the great day. This fabulous^m author cited by Clemens vnderstood not himselfe, saith Scaliger; for they still obserue the appearance or first sight of the Moone, not to ordaine the solemnitie thereby thereby (which was done by a certaine rule) but to sanctifie it: and therefore as soone as they saw the New-moone, they say, Good lucke, or a good signe, be it to vs and to all Israel. The same also doe the Muhammedans obserue. By the first Sabbath he meaneth the New-yeares day, called a Sabbath because it was holy-day: by the feast, Pentecosts; by the great-day, that of Tabernacles. Although, in regard of vse, some daies were more holy then other, yet had euery day appointed ¹ sacrifices morning and euening.

Their Feasts were eyther weekly, of which was the Sabbath; or monethly, euery New Moone; or yearly, of which were the Easter or Passouer, Pentecost or Whitsontide, the Feast of Tabernacles. These were chiefe, to which were added the Feast of Trumpets, of Expiation, and of the Great Congregation. To these we may reckon the seuenth yeares Sabbath, and the yeare of Iubilee. These Feasts God had prescribed to them, commanding that in those three principall Feasts euery male (as the Iewes interpreted it, that were cleane and sound, and from twentie yeares of their age to fiftie) should appeare there where the Tabernacle or Temple was, with their offerings, as one great Parish, Deut. 16. hereby to retaine an vnitie in diuine worship; and a greater solemnitie; with increase of ioy and charitie; being better confirmed in that Truth, which they here saw to be the same which at home they had learned, and also better strengthened against the errors of the Heathen, and idolatrous feasts of Diuels: To these were after added vpon occasions, by the Church of the Iewes, their foure Fastes, in memorie of their calamities receiued from the Chaldeans, their Feast of Lots, of Dedication, and others, as shall follow in their order.

They began to celebrate their Feasts at Euen: so Moses is commanded, ^m From Euen to Euen shall ye celebrate your Sabbath; imitated in the Christian Euen songs on holy Euens, yet the Christian Sabbath is by some supposed to begin in the morning, because Christ did rise at that time.

CHAP. V.

Of the Festiual dayes instituted by God in the Law.

So they were enioyned to offer a Lambe in the morning, and another in the euening euery day, with other Prayers, Prayles, and Rites: so had the Sabbath a double honour in that kinde, and was wholly sequestred and sanctified to religious dueties. Which howsoever it was ceremoniall, in regard of that seuenth day designed, of the Rites therein prescribed, of that rigid and strait obseruation exacted, of the particular workes prohibited: and of the deadly penaltie annexed, yet are we to thinke, that the eternall Lord, who hath all times in his hand; had, before this, selected some Time proper to his Seruice, which in the abrogation of ceremonies ⁿ Legall, is in Morall and Christian ducie to be obserued to the end of the World: euen as from the beginning of the World he had sanctified the seuenth day to himselfe, and in the Morall Law (giuen not by Moses to the Iewes, but by God himselfe, as to all creatures) is the remembrance of that sanctification vrged. Priuolous are their reasons who would renew the Iewish Sabbath amongst Christ ans, tying and tyring vs in a more then Iewish feruitude, to obserue both the last and first dayes of the weeke, as some haue preached, and of the Ethiopian Churches is practised. Neyther can I subscribe to those, who are so farte from paying two, that they acknowledge not the debt of one vpon diuine right, but onely in Ecclesiasticall courtesie, and in regard of the Churches meere constitution; and haue thereupon obruded on many other dayes as religious respects or more, then on this (which yet the Apostles: entitled in name and practise, The Lords Day) with the same spirit whereby they haue equalled traditions to the holy Scriptures.

mentioned: and faith, a man is tyed to sanctifie the Sabbath, but not to sanctifie it well: (a new kind of distinction) the one is in hearing Masse, and ceasing from seruiile works; the well-doing it, in spirituall contemplations, &c. Another ^b Cardinall is as fast as hee is loose, affirming, That other holy dayes also binde the conscience, euen in cases voyd of contempt and scandale, as being truely more holy then other dayes, and a part of diuine worship, and not onely in respect of order and politic.

But to returne to our Iewish Sabbath. Plutarch thought, that the Sabbath was deriued of Σαβάζειν, which signifieth, to keepe Reuell-rout, as was vsed in their Bacchanals of Σαβάσι, which is interpreted Bacchus, or the sonne of Bacchus, as Calins Rhodiginus ^c sheweth out of Amphitheus and Mnaseas; who is therfore of opinion, That Plutarch thought the Jewes on their Sabbaths worshipped Bacchus, because they did vse on that day to drink somewhat more largely (a Sabbatizing too much, by too many Christians imitated, which celebrate the same rather as a day of Bacchus, then the Lords day.) Bacchus his Priests were called Sabbi, ^c of this their reuelling and misse-rule. Such wide coniectures we finde in others, wheras the Hebrewes call it Sabbath, of שבת, which signifieth To rest, because of their vacation to diuine Offices, and not for idlenesse or worse employments. And for this cause all the festiuall Solemnities in the Scripture ^f are styled with this generall title and appellation, as times of rest from their wonted bodily seruices. Likewise their seuenth yeare was Sabbathicall ^g, because of the rest from the labours of Tyllage. In those feasts also, which consisted of many daies solemnitie, the first and last were Sabbaths ^h, in regard of the strictnesse of those dayes rest.

Luc ⁱ hath an obscure place, which hath much troubled Interpreters with the difficultie thereof, Εν Σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, our English reads it, The second Sabbath after the first. ^{*} Isiaore faith it was so called of the Pascha and Azuma comming together. Chrysostome thinkes (as Sigonius cytes him) it was when the ^k New-Moone fell on the Sabbath, and made a double Festiuall. Sigonius, when they kept their Passouer in the second moneth. ^{*} Stella takes it for Manipulus Frugum, alledging Iosephus his Authour. ^l Ambrose, for the Sabbath next after the first day of the Easter Solemnitie. ^m Hospinian, for the Octaues or last day of the same: ^{*} Maldonatus, for the Feast day of Pentecost, which was the second of the chiefe Feasts: But Ioseph Scaliger ⁿ faith, That the second day of the Feast was called ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ ΤΟΥ ΠΑΣΧΑ, (being the sixteenth day of the moneth, called Manipulus Frugum) and the Sabbaths which fell betwixt that and Pentecost received their denomination in order from the same; Secundo-primum, secundo-secundum, &c. And hence doth Luc call that first Sabbath which fell after that δευτέρα, or second day of the Feast δευτεροπρωτον. Of this we shall haue occasion to say more when we come to the Samaritans. ^o The name Sabbath is also taken for the P whole weeke. But I list not to stand on the diuers significations of the word.

^q Iosephus and Plinie tell of a Riuer in Syria, in the Kingdome of Agrippa, called Sabbaticus, which on other dayes ran full and swift, on the Sabbath rested from his course. Petrus Galatinus ^r alledgeth the ceasing of this Sabbathicall streame for an argument of the abrogation of the Iewish Sabbath.

The Iewes were superstitiously strict in the obseruation of their Sabbath: Ptolemy without resistance captiuating their Cittie and themselues by this advantage, as did Pompey afterwards. And in the dayes of Matathias, father of Iudas Maccabeus, a thousand were murdered without resistance, till that by him they were better aduised: which appeared by the Pharisees, that cauilled at the plucking and rubbing of a few eares of Corne, by the hungry Disciples, and at their Master for healing on that day, though by his word: which their superstition, the Iew that fell into a Priuie at Maidenburge, one thousand two hundred and seuentie on his Sabbath, and another at Tewskburie, one thousand two hundred and twentie (and were, the one by the Bishop of the Place, the other by the Earle of Glocester constrained to abide the Christian Sabbath, whence on their owne they would not be freed) testified to the world by a stinking penance, and the later leauing also his stinking superstitious soule behinde to seale his deuotion. They added of their owne, fasting that day till noone, their Sabbath dayes dayes journey, which was (saith S. Ierome)¹ by the institution of Bārachibas, Simcon and Hellis, (Rebbines) nor about 2000 paces^a or two miles. Thus did this holy ordinance which God had instituted for the refreshing of their bodies, the instruction of their soules, and as a type of æternal happines, vanish into a smoky superstition amongst them. The sacrifices and accustomed rites of the Sabbath are mentioned, Numb. 28. & Lev. 23. & 24. Where we may reade, that the daily burnt-offering, and meat-offering; and drinke-offering; were doubled on the Sabbath, and the shew-bread renewed, &c.

The sanctification of dayes and times being a² token of that thankfulness, and a part of that publique honour which we owe vnto God, he did not onely enioyne, by way of perpetuall homage, the sanctification of one day in seuen, which Gods immutable Lawe doth exact for euer, but did require also some other part of time with as strict exaction, but for lesse continuance; besides, accepting that which being left arbitrarie to the Church, was by it consecrated voluntarily vnto like religious vses. Of the first of these (the Sabbath) wee haue spoken: of the Mosaicall feastes the New-moons are next to be considered. The institution hereof we reade, Numb. 28. and the solemn sacrifice therein appointed; so to glorifie God, the author of time and light, which the darkened conceits of the Heathens ascribed to the Planets and bodies cœlestiall, calling the months by their names. Besides their sacrifices, they banqueted on this day, as appeareth by David and Saul, Where the day after was festiuall also, eyther so to spend the surplusage of the former dayes sumptuous sacrifice, or for a farther pretext of religion and zeale, as Martyr^x hath noted. Sigonius^y maketh these New-moone daies to be profestos, that is, such wherein they might labour, the sacrificing times excepted; but those couetous penny-fathers seeme of another minde. When (say they) will the New-moone be gone that we may sell corne, and the Sabbath that we may sell wheate? and Es. I. the Sabbaths and New-moons are reckoned together.

Their Passeouer, called of them Pasach, so called of the Angels passing ouer the Israelites in the common destruction of the Egyptian first-borne. For Pasach, the Grecians (as some note) vse Pascha, of πάσχα to suffer, fitly in regard of the body of that shadow Christ himselfe who² was our Paschall Lamb, in his suffering sacrificed for vs.

The institution of this feast is set down, Exo. i. 2. as Hospinian hath noted in the yeare after the creation of the world 2447.^b after the flood 791. after the promise made to Abram 430. it was celebrated from the fiftenth to the one and twentie day of the moneth Abib or Nison, those two dayes being more specially sanctified with a holy Conuocation and abstinence from worke, except the dressing of their meate: the other being obserued with vnleauened bread: and the fourteenth day being the Parascue, or preparation: in the euening of which fourteenth day, as some men hold opinion, after Sun-set in the twilight; others in the fourth houre, or fourth part of the day, as contrayning three houres space, before the going down of the^c Sun, the Paschall Lamb was flaine: about which time (the ninth houre) Christ the true Pascha, yeilded vp the ghost, ^d hauing eaten the Passeouer on the night before, which was the true time, and was then first altered by the Iewes: which corruption continued to the destruction of their Temple. Christ suffered (saith Scaliger) on the third of April, the fourth yeare complete after his Baptisme. From which ninth houre the Iewes began their Vespera or Euening: and therefore it was iniointed them inter iduas Vesperas^e, to kill the Passeouer. In these Vespers, as also on the Euen of euery Feast and Sabbath, after the euening sacrifice, they which doe any worke, saith the Iewish Canon, shall neuer see good signe of a blessing: which was the cause that they hastened so much the death of the Theeues which were crucified with Christ.

This Lambe or Kidde was chosen a male of a yeare olde, the tenth day of the Moone, which they kept till the fourteenth day tyed (after their traditions) to the foot of some bench or fourme, so to minister occasion to their children, of questioning about it, to themselues of Preparation and Meditation, and to espie in this meane while, if any default were in the Lambe. It was first a priuate Sacrifice, to be performed in euery house, after in that place onely where the Tabernacle or Temple was: they there dispersed by companies, according to Iosephus, nor fewer then ten, sometime twenty in a company; with Christ there were thirteen, and of these sacrifices and companies in time of Cestum, were numbred 256500. so that reckoning the least number there were tentimes so many, besides those that by diseases or other manifold lets were not partakers thereof: and in regard of this Feast being assembled thither through Gods iust iudgement, their whole huge multitudes were coup'd or caged together in the walls of this Citie to destruction, vnder Titus.

The blood of the Lambe they were to receiue in a vessell, and to sprinkle the same with a bunch of Hysope on the doore postes, and to eat it in the night, which was the beginning of the fiftenth day, roast with fire, with sowre hearbes and vnleauened bread, both the head, feete, and purtenance; girded, shod, with stau'es in their hands, in haft, standing, burning whatsoeuer was left of the same. After the eating the Sacramentall Lambe, standing, they had other prouision which they ate sitting, or after their manner of lying at Table, in remembrance of their libertie, as appeareth by Iohns leaning on his breast, and Indas his soppe at Christ's supper. In the Lawe it was commanded that they should eat the Passeeouer standing; which they onely practised in the first celebration in Egypt. For so the Iewes set forth the difference of the Paschall night from other nights, in their twice washing, which on other nights they doe but once: in their vnleauened: in their Endiue or sowre hearbes: and whereas on other nights they sit or lie, now they lie onely, in token of their securitie. The washing was therefore necessarie lest they should defile the beddes whereon they lay with their dustie feete. In which respect the ^d Gentiles also vsed to wash their feete: the Iewes their whole bodie. And the Pharisee maruelled at Christ, ὅτι ἠρώτων ἐβαπτίσθη, that he was not thus baptised or washed before he sate downe. Some contented themselues only with washing the feete; the want of which office Christ objected to another of his Pharisaicall hostes. But in the Paschall rite a double washing was requisite, because of their double supper; which in the flourishing state of the Iewes was also vsed in other their chiefe solemnities of the Pentecost and Tabernacles. In the former they ate their sacrifices, in the later certaine Prayses were sung, and it was called the supper dimissorie. But this second Paschall Supper differed from that in other solemnities, wherein they vsed iunkets, which in this were forbidden; and in stead thereof they had Endiue and wilde Lettice, mingled with Vinegar, and other things, which now they make as thicke as Mustard. The Housholder first dipped his vnleauened soppe therein and ate it, and then tooke from vnder the Carpet or cloth another, which hee brake into as many pieces as he had Communicants in his companie, euery piece being as bigge as an Oliue, which was given to each of them in order. When he ate that soppe, first he said, Blessed be thou Lord our God King of the world, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandements, and hast giuen vs the precept of vnleauened bread.

And when he had eaten, he said (as he distributed to the rest) This is the bread of affliction, which our forefathers ate in the land of Egypt. Euery one which is hungrie, come and eat: euery one which hath neede, come and obserue the Passeeouer. After the destruction of Ierusalem, they added these wordes; Now wee are heere seruants, but hereafter we shall be in the land of Israel: now we are here seruants, hereafter in the land of Israel, free. After this, he tasted of the Cuppe and deliuered to the next, and he to the third, and so on through the companie. This was called the Cup of Thanksgiuing, or of singing the hymme, which he deliuered with these wordes, Blessed art thou O L O R D our G O D, King of the world, creator of the fruite of the Vine. Then did they sing a hymme and depart; for the Canon forbade them to eat or drinke any thing after the hymme. These were the Paschall rites in the time of C H R I S T, who also vsed that reiterated both washing (saith Scaliger) and supper, and also the hymme. They were in the Euen of the fourteenth day to purge their houses of leauen, and that throughout the lande, where the Lambe might not be eaten. All the Israelites were imoyned this duetic: and they which by occasion of iournying or vncleanness could not now celebrate the Passeeouer, were to obserue it the next moneth, Numb. 9.

The day after, or second day of this Paschall Feast, they were to bring to the Priest a Gomer of the first-fruits of their Corne, and a Lambe, with other duties for a burnt

This Eleazarus ordayned, that the Feast of Lots should not be celebrated on the second, fourth, or seuenth: Or Pentecost on the third, fift, or seuenth: Or that of the Tabernacles on the first, fourth, and sixt: Or the Fast of Expiation, on the first, third, or sixt: Or their New-yeares day, on the first, fourth, and sixt, which decree is extant in the booke of Gamaliel, Paulus Master, which they did superstitiously, to auoide two Sabbaths, (in so strict a rest) together, and carrying boughes on the Sabbath, if that feast fell thereon, and on other such reasonlesse reasons.

After this sixteenth day of the moneth, or second dáy of the vneleuened bread, in which first of all, sickle was thrust into the Haruest, to offer the first fruits thereof vnto God, were numbred seuen intire weekes, and the next day which was the fiftieth, (accounting inclusiuely) was celebrated the Feast of Pentecost, receiuing his name of that reckoning of fiftie: and Scheshuoth, that is, of Weekes, because of this reckoning of seuen weekes, it is called also the Feast of the Haruest of the first fruits: ⁱ the rites thereof are prescribed. Leuit. 23. The institution was in respect of the Law then giuen on Mount Sinai, and a type of that Euangelicall Law, which CHRIST, hauing ascended vp on high, did write not in Tables of stone, but in fleshie Tables of the heart, when (at the same time) hee gaue the holy Gh. st to his Disciples, as a remembrance also of the Author of their Haruest-fruits; and euery good gift.

As the seuenth day in the weeke, so the seuenth moneth in the yeare, was in a great part festiuall: fittest for that purpose, as the fruits of the Earth being now inned.

The first day of this moneth was, besides the ordinarie Kalends or Festiuall New-Moone ^k, the Feast of Trumpets, in respect of that rite then obserued of sounding Trumpets, being their New-yeares day, after the ciuill account: the institution is read Leuit. 22. and Num. 29. Whether, as some of the Rabbines will haue it, for Isaaks deliuerance, that in remembrance of that Ramine, these Rams-horne Trumpets should be sounded, or in regard of their warres, or in respect of that spirituall warfare which continueth our whole life, or that this was so festiuall a moneth, or the beginning of their yeare for ciuill accounts, and for the Sabbaticall and Iubileé-yeares, or for some other cause, let the wiser Reader iudge.

On the tenth day of this moneth was the Feast or Fast of Reconciliation or Expiation, a day of publike penance, fasting and afflicting themselves, described in Leuit. 16. throughout the Chapter, and chap. 22. wherein is liuely in that type shewed the office of Iesus Christ, the eternal high Priest, who hath alone wrought our atonement, entered into the Holy place of heauen, and laid our sinnes on the scape-Goate, bearing them, and satisfying for them in his owne person on the Crosse, and by the sprinkling of his blood sanctified vs for euer to God his Father. Paul, Heb. 9. doth vnfold the mysterie of this dayes rites, wherein only, the high Priest alone might enter into the holy place, and himselfe alone performe the other offices of Expiation. The Iewes thought, that this fasting and afflicting themselves was in respect of their Idolatrie with the golden Calf, and therefore it seemed, that in Theodoris time they did not afflict themselves, but sported rather in obscure and profane manner. The sacrifices are set downe. Num. 29. 8. 9. 10. 11.

The next Feast was that of Tabernacles; in remembrance that howsoeuer they now dwell in strong Cities, goodly houses, &c. yet their fathers liued in Tents in the wilderness, where God by a cloud in the day time, and fire in the night, protected that people. It is expressed Leu. 23. Num. 29. Deut. 16. It was obserued from the fifteenth to the one and twentieth, the first and last of them being (as at the Passe-over) more solemnly feastiuall, with abstinence from labour, and a generall Conuocation. They were the first day to take boughes & branches of trees, and to make therewith booths, and to dwell in booths seuen dayes. This was neglected from the time of Iosuah, till the dayes of Nehemiah,¹ when hee and Ezra solemnized this feast seuen dayes with booths on their house-tops, and in their Courts and streets, with Lectures euery day out of the Law, and solemn assembly on the eight day. The Hebrewes report that they made them bundles of that matter, which they carryed, euery day of the seuen, vp and downe in the morning before they might eate, whereupon it was called the Feast of Palmes or Willowes. The seuenth day, saith Paulus Fagius,^m they compassed the Altar with these boughes seuen times, in remembrance of the fall of Iericho, Andrew Osiander,ⁿ affirmeth that they vsed this carrying about boughes euery day, especially the seuenth, in which they obserued a kinde of Procession or Litanie singing, e Ante Ieboua Hosanna ana Ieboua batz elicha-na: first reckoning vp a great number of the names of God, then of his attributes: thirdly, of the things which they wish to bee faued, then of themselves and other things, interlacing euery particular of these with singing Hosanna, like their Ora pro nobis in the Popish Letanie. Then they alter it in another forme, Pray redeeme the Vine of thy planting, Hosanna, &c. then in another, As thou sauedst the strong in Egypt, when thou went'st out for their deliuerance, so Hosanna, &c. Then in a longer forme of prayers, with this foot of the song Hosanna: and lastly all rings Hosanna, Hosanna: and hereupon the later Iewes called this feast Hosanna, as also those bundles of boughes: and although that the later Iewes haue now added much, the Iewes of Italie differing from them of Germanie, yet in Christ's time the acclamations of Hosanna, when he came riding on an Ass into Ierusalem, testifie some such obseruation then amongst them.

The sacrifices of euery day are designed Num. 29. The first day, thirteene bullocks, the second, twelue, and euery day one lesse to the seuenth: in all 70. (as the Rabbines interpret it) according to the number of the 70. languages of the Nations, which shall be subdued to the Messias; and 98. Lambs, in respect of so many curses in the Law, against the transgressing Israelites.

The eight day was the Feast which they called Haaziph, and Azereth, that is Collection, called also the great day of the Feast, in the two and twentieth day of this moneth Tisri. In this they were to contribute to the continuall Sacrifices, and publike thanksgiving was made for the fruits of the Earth, and the first fruits of the later fruits were offered. Ieroboam ^p in an irreligious policie remoued the Feast of Tabernacles from the seuenth moneth to the eight, from Tisri to Marchesuan.

The seuenth yeare was appointed a Sabbaticall yeare wherein they were neither to sow nor to reape, but to leaue that which should voluntarily grow in their fields and yards to the poore, and secondly should not exact debt of their brethren of the same Nation, but remit it, Deut. 15. Exod. 23. Leu. 25. and the obseruation hereof is expressed in the time of Nehemiah.

After seuen times seuen yeares which make fortie nine, they were to reckon Iobel or yeare of Iubilee, Leu. 25. beginning on the day of Reconciliation: Wherein seruants were freed, debts remitted, possessions, that had bene alienared, returned, the law allowing no further sales, proclaymed with sound of a Trumpet of a Rammes-horne, and therefore called Iobel, which signifieth a Ramme, or Rammes-horne.

Touching this yeare of Iubilee is much controuersie. The ancient Authors account it the fiftieth yeare. Scaliger ^q refuseth their authoritie herein. Many moderne writers hold the same opinion, as ^r Hospinian,¹ Melancthon, Fabritius ^s Paduanus, &c.^u Calvisius hath at large disputed this question against Crentzhermus and Bucholcerus, by diuers arguments prouing that the Iubilee was but fortie nine yeares complete, and that the fiftieth yeare was the first onwards of another Iubilee or Sabbath of yeares: Yet is this space reckoned by fiftie, as Onid calls the Olympiad, quinquennis Olympias: Aristophanes,^x and Ansonius ^y affirming the like: and yet the Olympiad is but foure yeares complete, and reckoned from the fifth to the fift exclusively. Otherwise they should haue

haue had two Sabbaticall yeares together, namely the fortie ninth being the seuenth yeare, and the next which was the fiftieth yeare. As for the later Writers, they might be deceiued by following the streame, and beguiled by the Popish Iubilee, which Boniface the eight, before called Benedictus, (and yet neither was good sayer nor doer) instituted, Anno 1300. to bee obserued euery hundreth yeare: and Clement the sixt abridged to the fiftieth: as Auentinus, Trithemius, Crantzius, and other haue written. Whether they were Heathenish in imitating the Ludi seculares, or Iewish, in following the legall Iubilee: Certaine it is, Rome thereby becomes a rich Mart, where the ^a Marchants of the Earth resort from all places of the Earth to buy heauen: and Baby- ^a lon ^b the great Citie is cloathed in fine linnen and purple and scarlet, and gilded with gold ^b and precious stone and pearles, with the gaines of her Warres, giuing in exchange ^c the ^c soules of men, washed from their finnes; A thing more precious to Christ then his most precious blood. But his pretended Vicars haue learned to effect it (the filling of their purse) with greater ease; deuout Pilgrims from all parts, visiting Saint Peters staires, whence they goe truely Saint Peters heires, ^d Siluer and gold haue I none, and yet finde ^d their Pardons too cheape to be good. But to returne to our Pilgrimage, and to obserue the obseruation of the Iewish Iubilee; This feast was partly ciuill in regard of the poore, of the inheritances, of the Israelitish Families, specially that of the Messias, and of the computation of times, as amongst the Greekes by Olympiads, and amongst the Romans by Lustra and Indictions: partly also it was mysticall in regard of the Goipell of Christ, preaching libertie and peace to the Conscience, the acceptable yeare of the Lord.

And thus much of those feasts which God himselfe instituted to this Nation; which how the Iewes of later times haue corrupted, and doe now superstitiously obserue, instituting others also of their owne deuising, shall bee handled in due place. Wee are next to speake of those feasts, which vpon occasions they imposed vpon themselues before the comming of Christ: to which we will adde a brieue Kalendar of all their Fasts and Feasts.

CHAP. V I.

Of the Feasts and Fasts, which the Iewes instituted to themselues: with a Kalendar of their feasts and fasts through the yeare as they are now obserued.

He Prophet Zacharie, in his seuenth and eight Chapters mentioneth certaine fasting dayes which the Iewes by Ecclesiasticall Iniunction obserued. One in the tenth day of the tenth moneth, because that on that day Ierusalem began to bee besieged. 2. Reg. 24. A second fast was obserued on the ninth day of the fourth moneth, in remembrance that then the Chaldeans entred the Citie.

A third fast they held on the ninth day of the fift moneth in respect of the Citie and Temple burned on that day. First, by Nabuchodonosor; Secondly, by Titus, on the same day: which the Iewes doe yet obserue with strict penance, going bare-foot and sitting on the ground, reading some sad Historie of the Bible, and the Lamentations of Ieremie, three times ouer.

Their fourth fast they celebrated on the third day of the seuenth moneth, in remembrance of Godoliah slaine by Isnael, Iere. 41. 42. 2. Reg. vlt. To these are reckoned the fast of Ester, in the thirteenth day of Adar, their twelfth moneth; and on the seuenteenth day of the fourth moneth, in the remembrance of the Tables of the Law broken by Moses: the institution whereof seemeth to bee late, seeing the Scripture doth not mention it. In this moneth the Egyptians kept the Feast or Fast of their Osiris, lamenting for him, which seemeth to bee the same that is mentioned, Ezech. 8. Where women are sayd to mourne for Tamuz, whom Plutarch calleth Amuz, and from

^{Caluif. 3477.}
On the ^a fourteenth and fifteenth dayes of Adar, they kept the feast of Phurim, or lots instituted in remembrance of that deliuerance from Haman; by the authoritie of Ioachim the high Priest, as Functius relateth out of Philo, Anno M. 3462. Antonius Margarita a christned Iew, reporteth that on these dayes the Iewes reade the historie of Ester, and so often as Haman is mentioned, they smite on their seates with their fistls, and hammers, otherwise spending the time of this feast in Bacchanall riots and excesse.

They had the feast also of wood-carrying called Ξυλοφορῆα, mentioned by ^b Iosephus, in which the custome was for euery one to cartie wood to the Temple to maintaine the fire of the Altar.

The Feast of Dedication, etherwise called the Feast of Lights, and the institution thereof is largely described, Maccab. 4. in remembrance of the institution of diuine worship and sacrifice in the Temple, which had beene by Antiochus polluted, and sacred to Iupiter Olympus, all the seruices appointed by the Law being abolished. By Indas Maccabeus, the Temple and Altar, and other holy instruments, were dedicated the same day three yeares after their first pollution, called therefore the feast of Lights, as I thinke. saith ^c Iosephus, because so vnexpected a light shone forth vnto them. But Françiscus Iunius, in his Annotations vpon the Syrian translation of the tenth of Iohn, where this Feast is mentioned, allegeth out of the Talmud, an other cause as followeth. When on the siue and twentieth day of Cislev they entred into the Temple, they found not pure oyle, except in one little Vessell, which contained sufficient for the lamps but one day, of which oyle they lighted the lamps in order, which lasted eight dayes, till they pressed out of the Oliues cleane Oyle. And therefore the Wise-men of that time decreed, that yearly those eight dayes beginning at the siue and twentieth of Cislev should be dayes of ioy, and that euery one in the doores of their houses euery euening, during those eight dayes, should light lamps, for declaration of that miracle, wherein they must not fast nor lament.

De fest. Iud. vid. Phil. Ferdinand.

Sigonius reckoneth also the feast of Iephtā, in the end of the yeare, which yet is not like to haue continued in succeeding ages: and of the fire that wee haue mentioned in 2. Mac. 1. and the feast of Iudith, for killing Holofernes: and on the fourteenth day of Adar, for the victorie against Nicanor, Ios. l. 12. Their later feasts I shall mention and declare their severall ceremonies, when we come to speake of their later times, and of the present Iewish superstition. In the meane time I thinke it not amisse to set downe here out of Scaliger, a view or Kalendar of their moneths, with the feasts and fasts, as they are obserued therein at this day.

*Of the ancient Oblations. Giftes, and Sacrifices of the Iewes: of their

Although Moses doth handle this matter of their Rites and Sacrifices, and is herein seconded and interpreted by the succeeding Prophets so fully, that it may seeme a powring of water into the Sea, to speake needlessly, or by our Discourse, to obscure, rather than illustrate, that which is so largely and plainly there expressed; yet because of that subiect which we haue in hand, I cannot altogether be silent (at least of the kindes and heads) referring the desirous Reader, for his more perfect satisfaction in particulars, to those clearer propheticall fountaines. Their Rites for time and place we haue already described:
The next intended part of this Iewish relation shall be of their Oblations, which were either Gifts or Sacrifices. Their Sacrifices were such oblations, wherein the thing offered was in whole or part consumed in diuine worship, for the most part by fire or shedding of blood. These were of eight ^a sorts. Burnt-offerings, Meat-offerings, Peace- offerings, Sinne-offerings, Trespasse-offerings, the offerings of the Consecration, Cleansing and Expiation. ^b Philo reduceth them to three: Burnt, Peace, and Sinne-offerings, according to the three causes of sacrificing; The worship of God, the obtaining of good things, and freedome from euill.

The Burnt-offerings were by fire consumed, the Rites and manners hereof is expressed, Leuiticus 1, the fire was to be perpetuall on the Altar, being that which God miraculously sent from heauen to consume Aarons sacrifice; for neglecting which, and vsing other, his two sonnes Nadab and Abihu were stricken by a reuenging fire from God. The Meate-offering was made of fine flower, without hony or leuen, and with oyle and incense on the alter, or frying-pan, or ouen, or caldron, according to the rites prescribed, Leuit. 2. partly sacred to the Lord by fire, the rest to bee the Priests. The Peace-offerings are with their proper ceremonies enioyned, Leuit. 3. and 7; the fat and kidneyes were to be burned on the Altar (the fat and bloud being vniuersally forbidden them for food) the breast and right shoulder was the Priests: the rest to the Sacrificer, to be eaten the first, or at furthest on the second day: or else on the third to bee burned with fire. The offering for sinnes of ignorance, for the Priest, Prince, People, or priuate man, is set downe, Leuit. 4. and 6. The Sinne-offering; in case of contempt, where the sinne is committed against God and man willingly, with the due manner thereof is expressed, Leuit. 6. To these were adioyned Prayers and praises, with musically voyces, and instruments, Cymbals, Violes, Harpes, and Trum-pets resounding, For he is good, for his mercie endureth for euer. The sixt kinde of Sacri-fices was proper to the Priests at their consecration, recorded Leuit. 6. 20 The seuenth mentioned sacrifice is of purification or cleansing, as of a woman after child birth, Leu. 12. or of a Leper, 13. 14. or for vnclane issues of men and women, chap. 15. The eight is the sacrifice of Expiation or Reconciliation, on that festiuall or fasting-day before spoken of, Leuit. 16. Hereunto may we adde the lights and the daily offerings of in-cense, morning and eucning, Exod. 30. on a golden Altar, whereunto the Priests onely had access, with such perfume onely as is there prescribed.

The Gifts which we haue reckoned a second sort of Oblations that were not as the former in whole, or in part consumed in their offering, but preserued whole and sound, were giuen either according to the Law, or by Vow, or of free will. The Law prescribed First fruits and Tithes, and the personall halfe-shekel. The first fruits of Man, of beasts, and of the fruits of the earth, the Law exacteth, Exod. 22. 23. and are assigned to the Priests, Num. 5. and 18. which, of men and vnclane beasts, were to be redeemed, of others to be sacrificed. Of Tithes, when we consider the assignement of them to the Tribe of Leui, we must so farre acknowledge them Leuiticall and Ceremoniall. But some, considering the paying of them to a Priest, so soone as we reade of a Priest, in Scripture, and that by the father of the faithfull (which the Apostle vrgeth against Leuiticall Ceremo-nies, in that Leui himselfe in Abraham payed them) and his nephew Iacob vowed the payment thereof, so soone as God should giue him whereof to pay Tithes; and that (the first times of the Christian Church excepted, wherein there was no such settled order for things of this and like nature) Tithes were payed to the Church, vntill the Arch-enemie of God and his Church, in his Antichristian supremacie robbed the Ministers of that due, which in Gods right they before held, improprating the liuing of the Altar to them that liued not at the Altar, but yet ordinarily leaving them to the Church (as they then accounted the Church) cannot so easily subscribe to that opinion, perhappes more common then true, which disanull diuine right of the non-paying Tithes, as being then a Iewish and Leuiticall ceremonie. But I leaue the Reader to discusse this matter further, with Master Carleton ^a in his Treatise of that argument (not to mention the Canonists) whose reasons, if they want weight in any mans iudgement, yet let the same consider another supplic, not at all fauour-ing of Iudaisme: namely, that ^b Tithes are due to Christian Ministers by Vow: Christian Common-weales, and Counsells hauing consecrated them to God and his Church: neither is it now time after the Vowes to enquire, and ^c without Diuine dispensation to alter it, without satisfaction sufficient. But leaving this sore too ten-der to be touched, and yet little touching and mouing some consciences pretended tender; let vs view the Tithes, as they then were, Iewish. In Leuit. 27. 30. is a de-claration of the Lords right, All Tithes are the Lords; and an assignation of the same, Numb. 18. 21. Behold, I haue given the children of LEVI all the tenth, &c. Saint ^d Hie-rome reckons foure sorts of Tithes: first, that which the people paid to the Leuites: secondly, that which the Leuites hence paid to the Priests ^e; thirdly, that which they reserued for expence in their solemne feasts when they went to the Tabernacle or Temple ^f. The fourth was a third yeares Tenth, which was then laid vp for the Leuite, and the poore amongst them ^g. The practise hereof Nehemiah restored in the reformation of Religion, Nehem. 10. when the First-fruits and Tenths were brought to the treasurie or chambers of the house of God. ^a Ioseph Scaliger hath written a Treatise of Tithes, the summe whereof is this. Every thing which was food for man, and was laid vp for preservation, if it receiued encrease from the Earth, was subiect to offerings, and consequently to first fruits and Tithes. Garden-herbes were not exempted: they tithed Mints and Annise. (But ^b Drusius saith this was of tradition, and not of the Law: for the Law required onely the tenths, prouentus tui, of the encrease, vnder which name (saith he) those came not.) Out of these they first paid the first fruites: secondly, ^c Theruma: thirdly, a two-fold tithc, and these all in their due order. The husbandman might not touch any of his encrease before these deductions. First fruits of corne, grapes and oliues were offered in the basket: but the Theruma and Tithc onely of the kindes already dressed and prepared, as wheate fanned, oyle and wine. Come in the care, and so the rest was called Tabal: after they were made readie, the Theruma was taken ^d from the heape and given to the Priests: this was called the great Theruma, and was not defined by Moses, but the ancient Lawyers determined that it might not be lesse then the fourth or fifth, or at least the sixth part: the first they called the Theruma of a good eye, the second indifferent, the last of an euill eye, and niggardly. When this was taken away for the Priests, the rest of the heape was tithed for the Leuite: ^e this was called the first tithc ^f; and the tenth part thereof the Leuites ^g gaue to the Priests, which was called the tithc of the tithc, or the Theruma of the tithc. For the former Theruma they named the great Theruma, because it was more then this. After this deducted, the Leuites might freely vse the other nine parts of the tithc (which before they might not) whether in, or out of Ierusalem. The Husband-man or Lay-man, was yet to pay another called the second tithc, namely, the tenth part of that which remained to him after the first tithc: and this also was holy, nor might be spent, but before God in the Court of the Temple. And therefore it was to be carried to Ierusalem, or if the way were long or tedious, they might be sold, and a fift ^h part was then to bee added: with this money they were to buy wine, oile, sacrifices and other necessaries at Ierusalem where with the Husbandman & the Leuite were to feast in the Temple. After this second tithc paid, they might (and not before) vse the rest as lay chattels (to borrow the word of my learned friend Mr. Selden of the Inner Temple, whose bookes and notes haue furnished this booke with no few notes in this and other arguments) Scaliger giues them a Latine name, Pollucula, that is, exposed, viz. to common or profane vse. For better view hereof: if the husbandman had six thousand measures of wheate, wine or oile, he must pay a fourth or fifth, or at least a sixth part, that is, an hundred in the name of his ⁱ Theruma. Of the five thousand and nine hundred remaining, the first tithc will diduct five hundred fourscore and ten, of which the Leuites must pay to the Priests fiftie nine: as tithc of the tithc. Now out of the five thousand three hundred and ten yet remaining, the husbandman is to pay the second tithc, which come to five hundred thirtie and one, and then there remaine to his owne vse, exposed or lay chattels foure thousand seuen hundred seuentie & nine. So that the first and second tithc were in proportion as nineteene of the hundred, besides the greater Theruma; all these out of the corne readie fanned: before which also they paid the first fruits in the care. Further, ^k the husbandman was bound to carrie them to Ierusalem, and there to deliuer them to the Treasurers, which were Leuites ^l deputed in diuers offices, to the custodie of these things as fully appeareth, ² Chron. 3. 1. And if he did not carry them himselfe, he must send them by his Delegates: touching whom, the Law exacted that they should not bee of the Gentiles. As for the second tithc, they might redeeme it, with adding a fifth part ouer and aboue the price. Tobit is a perfect pattern of this: ^m The first tithc of all encrease (they are his owne words) I gaue to the sonnes of Aaron, who ministred at Ierusalem: the second tithc I sold, and went and spent it euery yeare at Ierusalem: And the third I gaue vnto them to whom it was meet. The vulgar Latine reads this last, so that he ministred euery third yeare all his tithing to the Proselytes and strangers. And it ought, saith Scaliger, rather to be called the tithc of the third yeare, then the ⁿ third tithc: for this was no other but the first tithc, so that what was paid in the first and second yeare, and in the fourth and fifth of that weeke, of yeares or seuen yeares space, (the seuenth whereof was alway Sabbaticall, and freed from tillage, first fruits, Theruma and tithing in the name of the first tithes; the same in third and sixth yeares were not carried to Ierusalem, but laid vp in the barnes and store-houses of the husband-man, who to vse the words of Moses, ^a was to lay them up within his gates: And the Levite, because he had no part nor inheritance with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherlesse, and the widow, which are within thy gates shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied. The Jewes still in all places of their habitations obserue the seventh yeare Sabbaticall, and therefore pay not then any first fruits or Theruma; as for Tithes, they were not to be paid but at the Temple, which is now destroyed: neither have they any certaine stocke of Priests or Levites (howfocuer many are so named) and therefore being asked of vs, saith Scaliger, if they might repaire the Sanctuarie in Mount Moriah, whether they would offer any sacrifices; they answered, no, because there is now no Priest-hood in Israel. So desperate is their desolation. Now lest any deceit might be vsed in tithing, there were officers appointed, which were called ^b Faithfull: these searched the houses suspected of non-payment: that encrease whereof the tithing was vncertaine, was called Eamai. From the Dedication of Maccabæus, to the time of Iohn Hyrcanus, all payed their first fruits and Theruma, but few their Tithes, because those Faithfull were vnfaithfull, and corrupted with gifts: but then the great Councell decreed that none should be chosen of that office, but such as were, as they were called. From thence ^c to the destruction of the Temple they were truely payed. The First-fruits, Therumoth and Tithes were not payed all at one time, but each kinde at their owne time, as wheat in Siran after Pentecost, wine in Tisri, oyle in Tebeth: and so of the rest.

Besides First-fruits and Tithes, they payed to the Treasurie personall offerings, as Exod. 30. 12. every man payed halfe a shekel, ^d which the Hebrewes interpreted to be perpetuall for the maintenance of the Sacrifices; others temporarie, then onely put in practise. As for that collection, 2. King. 12. made by Ioas for the repairing of the Temple, and that after by Nehemiah, Chap. 10. the circumstances shew much difference. This Treasurie, in regard of this Poll-money, grew very rich, as appeared in ^e Crassus robbing the same of ten thousand talents at one time, besides a great beame of gold, which Eleazarus the Treasurer, vpon Crassus his oath, (afterwards violated neuerthelesse) to redeeme the rest deliuered to him, weighing three hundred Mina, enery Mina being two pounds two ounces, and a quarter Troy. Tully ^f and other Authors mention these Oblations of the Jewes to their Treasurie yearely.

These Gifts and Offerings the Law exacted: they performed many other also, either of their Free-will or of Vow, otherwise little differing from the former, Leuiticus ultimo. Many other Cereminies of their meates, garments, fastings, trumpets, and in other cases, I hope I shall haue leaue to omitte in this place, and remitte him that would further know of them to the Scripture it selfe, having pointed out the principall.

But by this is apparant, which Doctor Downam ^g hath obserued, that all these being deliuered them in the Lords Treasurie; without their labour or cost, together with their eight and fortie Cities assigned them, amounting to a farre greater proportion for the maintenance of that small Tribe: then all the Bishopricks, Benefices, Colledge-lands, or whatsoeuer other Ecclesiasticall endowments and profits in this Land, although the prophane Ammonites or hypocriticall Cloysterers had neuer conspired to shaue off our ^h beards, and our garments by the buttocks, not leauing to ⁱ coner our nakednes, or their shame: And yet how sick is Abab for Naboths vineyard? And would God we had no Iezabels to play the (too cunning) Physitians in this disease. Let me haue a little leaue to say no more then others: (for the substance) in Bookes and Sermons haue said already: although those Bellies to whom we speake, haue no eares. The first stroke that wounded vs, and causeth vs still to halt, was from Rome, the mother of abominations and whoredomes. Heere, as in the suburbs of Hell, were founded the Churches ruines: our Bulles of Bashair, (Abbey-lubbers, and Cloysterers) with the leaden hornes of those Roman Bulles haue pushed downe our Churches, (our Chauncells at least) and made them to fall into those ^k Cages of vncleane Birds, the Popish Monasteries. Of nine thousand two hundred eightie and foure Parishes in England, after^a Mr. Camdens account, three thousand eight hundred fortie five were (it is properly termed) impropriated. And who knoweth whether those Appropriations did not supplant these Supplanters, and disappropriate them of that which in a iuster propriety was giuen them in their first foundations, for that three folde maintenance of themselves, of learning, and of the poore: yea, happily yet (if we obserue the course of Diuine Iustice) we may see many, whose former inheritances haue by the additions of these, as of a contagious garment, beene infected, and haue eyther died, or beene sicke at the least, of this plague. The Arke when it was in Dagons Temple (because imprisoned in an Idoll-Temple) brake Dagons necke: and when it was thence translated to their Cities, they also were filled with diseases. Our Arke hath thus dealt with the Temples, and cannot well brooke the Cities and lay-hands which imprison, or (if they will) appropriate it. O that they would once send it home where it should be! How fitly and fully doe those words of Habacuk^b agree to the houses founded for Religion, by this and like irreligion peruerred, and at last subuerted? They coveted an euill countenance to their houses, they consulted shame to their owne houses, by destroying many people, and sinned against their owne soules. The stone hath cryed out of the wall, and the beam out of the tyber hath answered it, Woe vnto him that buildeth a Towne with blond, and erecteth a Cittie by iniquitie. Thus we see, the stones haue cryed out of their walls indeed, and by their demolished heapes may receiue Labans name, legar sehadutha, the c heape of witnessse, their ruines remayning testimonies of Gods iudgements. A violent streame (saith M. ^d Camden) breaking through all obstacles, hath rushed out vpon the Ecclesiastlicke state of this Land, and ouerwhelmed, to the Worlds wonder, and Englands grieffe, the greatest part of the English Clergie, with their most beautifull buildings; and those riches which the Christian pietie of the English had from the time of their first Christianitie consecrated to God, were (as it were) in a moment disperfed, and (if I may so say) profaned.

Let none traduce me as a troubler of Israel, and a traducer of our Law and State, which haue thus both changed and settled these things. I enueigh against Absoloms conspiracie. and Achitophels deuises, which were the troublers of Israell, and so disturbed the iust heart of righteous Dauid, that on the sudden he a little forgate the exact rule: and commanded, Thou^c and Liba diuide the Lands. So (if loosers may haue leaue to speake) our Parliament (perhaps with some extasie of ioy, for removing the snaks and stinkes of superstition) had in those busie times but negligent consideration of Mephobsheths right; and our Vicar-Mephobsheths, the Clergie then, did not much vrge it, yea we would still say of these our halting Zibacs, Let them take all^e, rather then we should want our Lord and his Gospell, to come home to vs in peace. And in peace, let them rest which were Authors of this peace to vs; and let vs pray that a worse generation of Uipers doe not arise, and that the Canker-worme eate not what the Grasshopper hath left, and the Caterpillar the residue of the Canker-worme. I meane those Latron-patrons, and Patron-latrons, whereof these extend to the vtmost whatsoeuer might, and whatsoeuer colour of right, in Exemptions, Customes,^h Priuiledges and prauileges, whereby euery Iohn-a-Style shall intercept the Churches due, or by a weightier fee, force a composition. or wrangle out some broken Title, or breake the necke of the Case with a Prohibition: the other hauing a trust committed, maketh himselfe a Bawde, and sellet his Church (which cost no meaner price then the blood of Christ) for money. Oh Christ, ouerthrowe the Tables of these Money-changers, and with some whip driue them, scourge them out of thy Temple, which supplant thy plantations, and hinder the gayning of Soules for gaïne. Withstand these Balaams, which for Balacks blessing, care not what curse they bring vpon Israel, which present for presents, and scrape to maintaine their carnall liuing, out of our spirituall Liuing; to bestow on their Hawks, their Hounds, their! But whether hath this passion or zeale (Truth I am sure) transported me? Truly, the fixed starres in our Westminster firmament (and may not I so call it, where is such a Starre-Chamber, shining with the bright beames, of Iustice?) I admire, and almost adore in silence; only those wandering planets which selfe-guiltinesse accuseth, doe I here accuse.

^f And all they challenge as theirs, driving the poore Vicar to shew composition or prescription: They know who cast at all, Lak. 4. 7. and said, Mibi tradita sunt, (ye may English it here) they are betrayed to me.
^g Let me haue the like liberty to inueigh against vices here, as Espensens was allowed among the Papists, who speaking of the Romish proceedings saith, Sedis Apostolicae summum iura, hoc est iurme iniurie, priuilegia hoc est abusus, consuetudines, hoc est corruptela: I speake only against abusers, of law & right.

And for these, and all the Churches enemies, Let God arise, and his enemies (or their enmitie) be scattered, that there be no more such ^h Ababs, as I mentioned, which hauing more then enough, seeme to haue nothing, as long as Naboth hath something which they can long for: and that there be no ⁱ Eliashibs, which shall provide Tobias the Ammonite a Chamber in the house of the Lord: that neyther any abuse the profession of Law, directly; nor the possession of Patronage, indirectly; (for abuses onely I taxe) so to discover our Churches nakednesse, that every Cham (the prophane Atheist, and superstitious Papist) may espie and deride the same, wherein themselves are the most guiltie amongst vs; although none are more ready to ^k tell it in Gath, or publish it in the streets of Ashkelon, that the daughters of Babylon may triumph.

After that we haue spoken of the Times, Places and Rites sacred to God, order requireth next to speake of those persons, whose office and function it was to procure and manage those Diuine and Religious affaires. And first, amongst the first Hebrewes, we finde no Priest named before Abrahams time, in which Melchizedech was interpreted by the most, to be Shem the sonne of Noah, Father both of this and other Nations; and Master Broughton hath written a whole booke in confirmation hereof. The heads of Families then exercised the Priestly office of teaching, praying, and sacrificing in their owne households, as we reade of ^l Abraham, ^m Isaac, and ⁿ Jacob: After that, the first borne of all the Tribes of Israel were consecrated to this businesse, when as God had destroyed the first-borne of Egypt, ^o and these offered sacrifices, ^p vntill that the Leuites were chosen in their roome; ^q God turning the Propheticall curse of Jacob, of scattering them in Israel, into a blessing, for the instructing of the Israelites. The cause of this their consecration was, because they, ^r in a zeale of Gods glorie had sanctified their handes to this ministerie in the blood of the nereest of their idolatrous kindred, that had sinned in adoring the golden Calfe.

Now in the third of Numbers, where the first-borne of the Israelites, and the Leuites are numbred, appeareth a difficultie, which most of the Interpreters which I haue read of that place, haue neglected: namely, that of the Israelitish first-borne there were found, from a moneth-olde vpward, two and twentie thousand, two hundred, seuentie and three, and of the Leuites, but two and twentie thousand; so that therefore there must bee five sheckles a peece payed for the redemption of euery of those two hundred seuentie and three in surplufage more then the Leuites; whereas yet in the parcells of the Leuiticall account, are found more of the Leuites then of the Israelites, as appeareth; the family of the Gershonite, contayning seven thousand and five hundred, the Kohathites, eight thousand sixe hundred, and the family of Merari, sixe thousand and two hundred, which beeing added together, amount to two and twentie thousand and three hundred; and therefore are seuen and twentie more then the Israelites. To this ^t Lyra, ^v Dionysius, ^w Carthusianus, and ^x Iunius (for the most are wholly silent) answer, that those three hundred ouer and aboue the two and twentie thousand were first borne themselves, and therefore in right of the former challenge of the first-borne, were the Lords already. And if it seeme as much wonder, (which Authots obserue not) that of two and twentie thousand were but three hundred first-borne; ^u That their exploit of executing their kindred for Idolatrie (before mentioned) in which sinne, the first-borne, as Priests, were likeliest to haue followed Aaron, a chiefe man of their Tribe, might answer for me. And that cruell Edi&t^x of Pharao, and their miraculous fruitfulnessse, may make it lesse strange, that both in these Leuites there were so few first-borne and in the other Israelites also, with whom amongst 603550. men from twenty yeares olde vpwards, there were (though reckoning but from a moneth olde, as is said) but two and twentie thousand two hundred seuentie three, which is little more then one of seuen and twenty, besides that inequality of the persons numbred. Likewise as Phil. Ferdinand hath obserued out of Abraham ben Dattid, if a woman first brought forth a female, neyther that nor the sonne, if she had any after, were of these sanctified first-borne. This excursion vpon this occasion, wherein I haue found diuers Interpreters mute, will (I hope) find pardon with the Reader, who happily himselfe may finde some better resolution.

To returne to our Historie ; God had before appointed Aaron to bee high Priest, and his Sonnes to bee Priests, to whom the Levites were assigned after (as wee have said) as assistants in inferiour offices of the Tabernacle. Aaron, from whom is reckoned the succession of the high Priests, in the same office, had appointed to him eight holy garments, a Breast-plate, an Ephod, a Robe, a broidered coate, a Miter, a Girdle, a plate of golde, and linnen breeches. Also his sonnes had appointed to them coates, and Bonets and Girdles, and Breeches : which their attire is described at large, Exod. 28. Iosephus writeth of the stones there mentioned, That that on the Priests right shoulder shined forth very bright, when God was pleased with their Sacrifices, as did also those twelve in the breast-plate, when in the time of warre God would assist them, which ceased miraculously to shine two hundred yeares before his time; or as the Talmudists say, from the building of the second Temple.

The consecration of the Priests, and rites thereof are mentioned, Exod. 29. The conditions required in the high Priest, as that he should not have the bodily defects of blindnesse, lameness, maymednesse, &c. nor should vncouer his head, and many other such like, are expressed, Leuit. 21. His office was daily to light the Lights at the evening, and to burne incense at morning and evening, and once euey Sabbath to set the Shew-bread before the Lord to sacrifice, and once a yeare to make reconciliation in the holy place, &c. This office they executed till the captiuitie, after which they ruled also in the Common-wealth, and the familie of the Maccabees obtayned temporall and spirituall iurisdiction, being both Priests and Kings. But the state being vsurped by others, they also appointed high Priests at their pleasures : and thus were Annas and Caiphas high Priests, although Caiphas alone administred the office, which was abrogated to Annas, the name only remaying : and thus Iosephus saith, that Anna was most happy, who had himselfe beene high Priest, and scene all his sonnes in that office, whereas in the institution, and before the Captiuitie, this office continued ordinarily with their liues : which after they enjoyed longer or shorter, at pleasure of the Conquerour.

Next vnto the high Priest, were the Priests lineally descended from Eleazar and Ithamar the sonnes of Aaron, as in number many, so in their Priestly rayments, consecration, condition, and office, much differing from the former, as appeareth; for their garments, Leuit. 28. their consecration 29. their conditions required in them, Leuit. 10. and 21. and their office in some things, as preaching, praying, sacrificing, not much vnlike to the former, but in degree, sometime assisting him in these things, sometime alone, and in some things, nothing participating, as in Moses plainly may be seen. These priestly families, being of the house of Eleazar sixteene, and of Ithamar eight, which Dauid by lot distributed into foure and twentie orders, according to the number of the heads of families, those foure and twentie men, chiefe of those orders, being to the high Priest, as Aarons sonnes were vnto him in their ministerie, 1. Chron. 24. and tooke turnes by course^h, in performing of the same as Luke shewethⁱ in the example of Zacharie. Iosephus^k testifieth the same, and affirmeth, That in each of these rankes were more then fivē thousand men in his time : and in the historie of his life, saith, that himselfe was of the first of these orders, betwixt which was no small difference, and the heads of these were called also Chiefe Priests^l in the old and new Testament. * It was by their law forbidden on paine of death to any Priest or Leuite, ^m to intermeddle in anothers function. But at the three solemne feasts any of the Priests which would were permitted to minister, and to participate with those whose course it then was : only they might not offer the vowes, or free-will, or ordinarie offerings.

The Levites had the next place in the Legall ministerie: all that descended of Leui, except the familie of Aaron, being thus called: and Num. 3. according to the descent of the three sonnes of Leui had their offices assigned them, which so continued till the dayes of Dauid. Hee distributed them according to their families vnto their severall functions, twentie foure thousand to the seruice of the Temple: fixe thousand to bee Iudges and Rulers, foure thousand Porters, and foure thousand which praised the

The Gibeonites, called after Nethanims, were at hand vnto the Leuites in the meanest offices about the Tabernacle and Temple, Ios. 9. 21. and 1. Chro. 9. assigned herevnto first by Ioshua, after by Dauid and the Princes, for the seruice of the Leuites to cut wood, and drawe water, for the house of God, Ezra 8. Besides these Ecclesiasticall persons in the ordinary ministerie of the temple were other, which may no lesse bee counted holie: either in regard of Vow, as the ^b Nazarites for a time: Sampson is an especiall example hereof, and Iames the Iust, brother of our Lord: or else they were Prophets by extraordinarie calling, as Samuel, Esay, Jeremie, and others: to whome God manifested his will by dreames, visions, and reuelations; whose ordinarie habite seemes to be a rugged hairie garment, by the example of ^c Elyah, and the false ^d Prophets, and of ^e Iohn Baptist afterward. And thus much of those persons, which according to the Law were sacred to God: it followeth that we should obserue their superstitious deuoting of themselues, according to their own deuises and traditions, vnto a supposed seruice of God. In a more strict manner then ordinary, or some-what in opinion and practise differing both from the law, and the rest of the Iewish people. Of this kind were many Sects, whereof we are next to speake.

N this matter of Alterations, and altercations amongst them about Questions and practise of Religion, wee are in the first place to obserue their often Apostacies ^a from the truth of the Lawe to the idolatrous superstitions of the neighbouring Nations: as the Reliques of the Egyptian idolatry in the golden Calf, Exod. 32. their often murmurings in the desert, the presumption of Nadab and Abihu, and after of Aaron and Miriam, the conspiracie of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Balaams stumbling-blocke, to couple them in idolatrous seruice to Baal-Peor, the idoll of the Moabites: And after their possession of the Land, when Ioshua and the Elders were dead, they serued ^b the Gods of the people that were round about them, as Baal and Ashtaroth: of the idols and their rites is before spoken. And although Gideon cut downe the groue, and destroyed the altar of Baal, ^c yet he made an Ephod of the eare-rings of the prey, & put it in Ophrah his Citie, and all Israell went a whoring there after it: ^d and after his death, made Baal-berith their God. They serued also the Gods of Aram, Zidon, Moab, Ammon, ^e and the Philistims: Micah ^f an Ephramite made an house of gods, an Ephod, and Teraphim, and consecrated one of his sonnes to be his Priest; and after set a Leuite, Ionathan, in his roome, the occasion of apostacie to a great part of the Tribe of Dan, all the while the house of God was in Shiloh: besides the corruption of state and religion by the ^g Beniamites and by ^h Hophni and Phinehas the sonnes of Eli.

ⁱ Elias Leuita describeth the forme of sacrificing or hallowing their Teraphim in this sort. They killed a man which was a sitt-borne, wreathing his head from his body body, and embalming the same with salt and spices: & then wrote vpon a plate of gold the name of an vncleane spirit, and putting the same vnder the head, set it vpon a wall, & burned Candles before it and worshipped the same. R. Abraham ^a saith, they were Images of men made to receiue power from aboue, as the idolaters conceiued of them. a Ap. Pagnin.

But after the reformation of Religion by Samuel, David, and Salomon, (who yet became after an idolatour) befell their greatest Apostasie, to wit, of the ten Tribes; from God, their King, and Religion, by the ouer-wise policie of Ieroboam, which corrupted and subuerted both it and himselfe. Hee (least those reuolted Israelites should, by frequenting Gods appointed worship at Ierusalem, re-acknowledge their former and truer Lord) consecrated two Aegyptian Calues at Bethel and ^b Dan, and made an House of High Places, and Priests of the lowest of the people. b 1. King 12.

Iudah also imitated them, in the same times, High Places, Images, and Groues, on euery high Hill, and vnder euery Greene Tree. Yet had the Kingdome of Iudah their entercourses of corruption and reformation, according as they had good or bad kings; but in Israel, the Common-wealth and Church receiued, by that sinne of Ieroboam, an incurable wound and irrecoverable losse, vntill that, in Gods iust punishment, they were carried away by the Assyrian Kings into Assyria, and into Hala, Habor, and the Citties of the Medes, as 2. Kin. 17. appeareth, where is recorded a summarie collection of these and other their idolatries. Of these exiled Israelites (if wee beleieue the reports and coniectures of diuers Authors) are descended those Tartarians, which since ouer-ran, with their Conquests, a greater part of Asia and Europe, then euer any other Nation, before or since: of which, their Originall and Exploits, we shall in fitter place further discouise. The other Kingdome of Iudah, although it receaued sometime some breathing and refreshing vnder her more vertuous and religious kings, yet for the most part, groaning vnder Tyranny and idolatry, was at last a prey to the Babylonians: from which seruitude being freed by the Persian Monarches, vnder varieties of aduerse and prosperous fortunes, it was afterwards rent and torne by the Macedonians, being made a common Stage for the Armes and Armies of the successors of Ptolemy in Egypt, and Seleucus in Asia, remaining meede vnto the Conquerour, and receiuing no small impressions and wounds in Soule as well as Bodie, in Religion as in politic. But being after deliuered from Macedonian thraldome by the Familie of the Machabees, the Government, Ecclesiasticall and Temporall, became theirs, but the minds of this Iewish people was in those times diuided in diuersitie of Sects and Opinions, of which the Euangelicall and other Histories make mention.

One diuision ^c was of the whole nation not so much for opinion as for the differing habitation which brought also some circumstances of other differences. The Iewes therefore were generally thus distinguished, the Hebrewes which dwelt in Palestina, and the Scattered Strangers, ^d as Peter calls them; to wit, the Græcians, (these two sorts are mentioned by Luke, Acts 6. 1.) and the διασπορά βαβυλωνίου, or the remainders of the deportation on Babylon, the metropolis whereof was Babylon while it remained, and after Bagded. The metropolis or head of the ^e διασπορά Ελληνων or Ελληνισται was Alexandria, where also in Beniamin Tudelensis his time there was a synagogue of the Babylonian dispersion. The Asian Iewes were most of this Babylonian sort; to these Saint Peter wrote from Babylon, which therefore he nameth not in the inscription. The Hellenists were so called of hellenizing or vsing the Greeke tongue in their Synagogues (in which they had the scriptures translated) in Egypt, Greece, and Italie. By reason of this translation ^f the Hebrewes and Hellenists often disagreed (for the Hebrewes called it a backward reading, because it is read from the left hand to the right) which sometime brake forth into open violence. R. Eleazer ^g assaulted the synagogue of the Alexandrians at Ierusalem, and committed therein much outrage: and Christian charitie could scarce combine them, as Luke mentioneth, Acts 6. 1. This Greeke translation was vsed by them throughout Europe: they had it in Hebrew letters, as Tertullian testifieth in the Serapium at Alexandria. Thus Philo and other of these learned Hellenists, were ignorant of the Hebrew. Likewise of those Hebrewes, there was small reckoning had of the Galilæans by their supercilious and superstitious brethren of Iudæa, as the Gospell hath taught vs.

The Iewes haue a tale of Alexander opening certaine mountaines by magicke, and therein inclosing a multitude of Iewes beyond Babylon in the hill Cappis, which haue a King ouer them, and are called red Iewes. &c. vid. viii. Carben, lib. 1. 23.

The opinions of the Iewes may bee reduced into these two generall Heads : the one were such as contented themselves with the Law of God, and were called Karraim, or Koraim, of which sort there are diuers at this day in Constantinople, and other-where : The other Rabbinists, Supererogatorie (as Master Hall calls them) and Popish Iewes, called Hasidim, professing a more strict Holinesse then the Law required. Yet at first these both pleased themselves, and did not, by opposition of Science, displease each other, and disagreeing in opinion, they yet in affection agreed. But when these voluntarie Seruices beganne to bee drawn in Canons, and of arbitrarie became necessarye, they were rent into sundry Sects. Of these and their originall let vs heare Scaliger speake.

There were ^b (saith hee) before the times of Hasmonai, two kinds of Dogmatists, men holding differing opinions, among the Iewes : the one onely accepting the written Law ; the other Tradition, or the addition to the Law. Of the former kind arose the Karraim, of whome came the Sadducees ; of the latter, the Pharisees. These Pharisees were the issue of the Hasidæes.

The Halidces were a Corporation, Guild, or Fraternitie, which voluntarily addicted themselves to the Offices of the Law, 1. Macchabees, Chap. 2. verse 42. ^c Their originall was from the times of Ezrah, or Esdras, Haggai and Zacharie, the Prophets, being authors of this Ordtr. These, in regard of their institution, were called Holy, Hasidim ; and in regard of their Combination, Hasidæi. And besides that which the Law enioyned (which is iust debt) they supererogated, and of their owne free accord disbursed vpon the Temple and Sacrifices. They professed not onely to liue according to the Prescript of the Law, but if any thing could by interpretations and consequences bee drawne thence, they held themselves bound to satisfie it, and when they had done all, to seeme to haue done nothing, but accounted themselves unprofitable seruants notwithstanding.

Euery one payd a tribute to the reparations of the Temple, from the times of Esdras and Nehemias. ^d The Hasidæens added further (of their owne free-will) to the Sanctuary, Walles, and Porches, neuer (almost) going from the Temple, which they seemed to hold peculiar to themselves, and by which they vsed to sweare, By this Habitable, or By this House : Which the Pharisees, their posterity, also did ^e, as likewise they learned of them to build the Sepulchres of the Propbets. They were therefore called Hasidim, either because their Colledge was instituted of the Prophets ; or of their holie and religious workes, and the sacred buildings by them either repaired or reared from the foundations. And therefore, when wicked Alcimus had killed threescore men of this Corporation or Guild, the people thought their death was prophecied in the ^f Psalme, such reputation was there of their holinesse.

These Hasidæi were not in proper sense a Sect, but a Fraternitie, which euery day assembled in the Temple, and offered in daily Sacrifice a Lambe, which was called the Sinne-offering of the Hasidim. One day was excepted, the eleuenth of Tisri, in which that Sacrifice was omitted. They offered not themselves (for they were not Priests) but the Priests in their name. Abraham Zacuth s saith, That Baba, the sonne of Buta, daily of his owne accord offered a Ramme for a Sinne-offering, except one day, which was the day after the Expiation : And this was called the Sacrifice of the Saints for Sinne : And he sware, By this Habitable, that is, the Temple. Of this kind, or much like thereto, Scaliger ^h thinketh the Rechabites were, which Ieremia ⁱ mentioneth, whose immediate father he accounteth Ionadab, (not him which ^k liued in the dayes of Iohn, but another of that name) and that their austere order began but a little before it ended (namely, in the same Prophets time) quickly ending, because of the Captiuitie. After the Captiuitie, these sonnes of Ionadab, renewing their former obseruations, were called Hasidæi, which went not from the Temple, and obserued the orders aboue-mentioned : so Scaliger interpreted Ieremies Prophecie, that Ionadab should not want one to stand before the Lord, that is, to minister and attend holy duties in the Temple, like to Anna the Prophetesse ^l. This (saith he) is the true beginning of the Hasidæi, which abstained from wine, as did also the Priests, as long as they ministred in the Temple. Thus much Scaliger.

Drusius ^a proueth, That diuers of the Pharisees and Essées also were of these Hasidai, whereby it appeareth, that it was rather a Brotherhood, as Scaliger calleth it, then a Sect. Hee sheweth their Rites and Discipline, out of Iuchasin. ^b They spent nine houres of the day in prayer. They believed that a man might sinne in thought, and therefore they had care thereof; their will was not without the will of Heauen, that is, of God. Tenne things were peculiar to them: Not to lift vp their eyes aboute tenne cubits: secondly, Not to goe bareheaded: thirdly, To stablish three refections: fourthly, To dispose their hearts to prayer: fifthly, Not to looke on either side: sixthly, To goe about, that they might not be troublesome to any companie: seventhly, Not to eate at the Tables of great men: eighthly, If they had angered any man, quickly to appease him: ninthly, To haue a pleasant voice, and to descend to the interpretation of the Lawe: tenthly, To accustomethemselus to their Threads and Phylacteries.

Rab (one of this Fraternitie) did not lift vp his eyes aboute foure cubits. Tenne or twentie daies before their death they were diseased with the Collicke, and so all cleare and cleane they departed into the other life.

To returne vnto Scaliger touching the originall of Sects, and to leaue those Hasidæan obseruants. As long (saith hee) as Supererogation onely was vsed, there was no Sect in the people of God: but when the Precepts thereof were brought into Canons, and committed to writing, then arose many doubts, disputations, altercations, growing and succeeding daily, from whence sprang two Sects, differing in opinion; the one admitting only the Law, the other embracing the interpretations and expositions of their Rabbines. The former, in proesse of time, was diuided into two. For at first the Karraim were only such as obserued the Law and the Prophets, till the times of Sadok and Boethi or Baitbi, who first doubted of the punishment of sinnes, and rewards of good workes, from whom sprang the heresie of the Sadducees. The Karraim were not, before this, diuided in Sect from the Hasidim, but only in those voluntarie Functions and Supererogations, wherein the Law, by Inlunction, ruled the former, and these, as is said, supererogated. But when Canons and Inlunctions began to bee written, then of these Hasidim arose Dogmatists, which called themselues Perushim, Holy, and Separated both from the other Hasidim, and from the Vulgar; making a necessitie of that obseruation, which before was voluntarie. This sort was againe diuided into those which retayned the name Perushim, or Pharisees; and the Essens; both receiuing from their Authors the Rules and Precepts of their Sect. After this, the Pharisees were diuided into many kindes: The Jewes reckon seuen. The Essens also were diuided first into Cloysterers, or Collegians, which liued in a common Societie; and Eremites, or Solitarie persons; and those former into such as married; and others which remaind continent.

OF THE PHARISEES.

NOW let vs consider of these more particularly; and first of the Pharisees. Drusius ^a deriueth the name from the Syrian, as most of the names of the New Testament are, and not from the Hebrew; for then it should not be Pharisees, but Pharusees: as after the Hebrew, it should rather be Masias, then Messias. The Etymologie some fetch from Phares, which signifieth Diuision as Ephiphanius, and Origen, with others ^b against which Drusius excepteth, because in Phares the last letter is Tsaddi, here it is Schin. Others ^c deriue it from Parash, signifying to explaine, because they did all thinges openly, to bee seene of men: it is not likelie: for Hypocrisie loues her workes should bee seene, but not her humour (then should it not bee hypocrisie;) she would not bee seene in her affection to be seene: and this name, in this sence, would haue beene to their infamie, and not to their reputation, which they most aymed at. A third deriuation of this name is from another signification of the same Verbe, ^d to expound. But expound the Law, was more proper to the Scribes; and some of the Pharisees were not Expositors. Howbeit, the most probable opinion is, that they were so called of Separation; because they were, or would seeme to bee, separated from others: first, in cleanness of life; secondly, in dignitie; thirdly, in regard regard of the exquisitenesse of those Obseruations, wherof they were separated; fourthly, in their habite, wherein they were (as our Mönkes) distinguished from the people; yea, they did abhorre the garments of the people.

Their opinions are gathered by ^a Iosephus, and others, out of whome Drusius. They attributed (saith Iosephus) all things to Fate. Abraham Zanch interpreteth their opinion thus, They beleue that God knoweth and disposeth all things, and the Starres helpe; yet so, as free-will is left in the hand of man. And if a man by his free-will chuseth the good, God will helpe him in his good way. They say, That there is no Hearbe in Earth which hath not his proper Planet in Heauen.

c Burgens. Ad d. 1. in epi. l. 2. 10.

They ascribed immortalitie to the Soule, holding that iudgement passed on it vnder the Earth; and that if it had done euill, it was adiudged to perpetuall prisons: if well, it had easie returne vnto life by a ^b transmigration, or going into another body. So Zanch: The good Soules take delight of their good workes; the bad descend, and ascend not. They beleued that there were both Denils and good Angels. They conceived, that he which kept the most of the Commandements, although hee transgressed in some, is iust before God: against which opinion ^c Burgens thinketh, that Iames alledged that saying in his Epistle, He that faileth in one, is guiltie of all. He citeth Rab. Moses for this Pharisaicall opinion, That God iudgeth according to the pluralitie or paucitie (to vse his owne words) of merits or demerits. Like stuffe haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the ballance wherein mens deedes are weighed, and the Deuill lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice, which one had giuen to the Saint; which beauiet metall caused the Scale wherein his good deedes were put (before too light) to weigh heauiest. They (the ancienter Pharisees) confesse the Resurrection of the flesh.

Hereof are three opinions ^d: one, That all, good and bad, shall rise againe; another, That the iust only shall rise; a third, That the iust, and part of the wicked, shall rise.

They call their Traditions the Law giuen by Word, and the vnwritten Law, which they equall to the written, deriuing both from Moses, as more fully elsew here shall be said. These Traditions they called Δευτερονομίαι, as both Epiphanius & Hieronimus witness: the Teachers thereof Σοφοί, or Wise-men; and when they Lectured, they were wont to say, Οἱ Σοφοί Δευτερονομίαι, i. The Wise-men teach Traditions. Of these Traditions were, concerning the Sabbath, That they might iourney from their place two thousand cubites; (Hierome ^e accounteth feet, Origen ^f Elnes) That none might carrie any burthen that day; but they interpreted, if one carried on one shoulder, it was a burthen; if on both, it was none; if his shooes had naile, they were a burthen, otherwise not. Concerning Fasting, the Pharisee boasteth, Luke 18. 12. I fast twice in the weeke: which they obserued (saith Theophilact ^g) on the second and fifth day, Mundaies and Thursdayes. Happily our Wednesdayes and Fridaies succeeded in this Penance, that we might not seeme to be behind them in dutie, howsoeuer we disagree with them in their time. And yet Mercerus saith, The Iewes fasted the fourth day, Wednesday, because they held that vnluckie, in which children are taken with the Squinancie. Further, the Pharisees eat not vnwashed, εαυω συνυμνιψουσαι, Mark 7. 3. Except they wash with the fist, as Beza translateth. Scaliger ^h expoundeth it, not by washing one fist in the other, but composing the fingers into such a frame, that all their ends meet on the top of the thumbe, which for want of another name is called συγυμνι, a Fist, although it bee not properly so. In this forme they hold vp their handes in washing, that the water may slide downe to the elbow, and thence fall to the ground, as the Iewes vse to this day. They washed ⁱ when they came from Market, because sinners and vncleane persons were there, whose touch might pollute them. They washed also Cups, and Brasen Vessels and Beds, not chamber-beds to lye on (Drusius ^k expoundeth) but dining-beds, which they vsed in stead of Tables.

They would not ^l eat with Publicans or Sinners, yea they accounted themselues polluted with their touch.

Their Hypocrisie in prayer Christ mentioneth, that it was long, and open in the streets, &c. It was thrice in the day, at the third, sixth, and ninth houre: Their words submisse and softly, as of Hannah, 1. Sam. 1. and toward the Temple.

They tythed all, Luke 18. Matth. 23. euen the smallest matters. For Tythes (saith Aquiba)

Aquila) are the Hedge of thy Riches. And another Prouerbe (learne it) Tybe, that is bou mayest be rich. Epiphanius m addeeth, they payed first fruits, thirtieths, and fiftieths, Sacrifices, and Vowes.

Their Phylacteries or Seruatories, Defensiués (so the word signifieth) in Hebrew Totaphoth, they vsed as Preseruatiues, or Remembrancers of the Law, and ware them then larger then other men. Hierome calls them Pittaciola, resembling to them here in some simple superstitious women, wearing little Gospels, and the wood of the Crosse, and such like, of zeale not according to knowledge, straying a Gnat, and swallowing a Cammell. This superstition, then complayned of by Hierome, yet remayneth (saith Scaliger) among Christians and Mahumetans, which weare about them the Gospel of S. Iohn. Christ condemneth not the Rite but their ambition, for dilating, nor for wearing them, to which all the Iewes were bound, and all the Iewes and Samaritans obserued. They vsed the like ambition in their Fringes or twisted Tassels, which the Iewes call Zizis, and vse them still, as after shall appeare. Their oathes were, By Ierusalem, the Temple, the Heauen, Earth, their Head, by the Law. q Fagius obserueth, That the Iewes in swearing lay their hand on the booke of the Law, at this day. Other oathes are little esteemed. Hence it seemeth came our corporall Oathes on a Booke. The Iewes (saith Capito) think it no oath, if one forswear by Heauen, or Earth, vnlesse he say by him which dwelleth there, &c. And none is subiect to that Curse, in which the Name of God is not added.

That of Corban pertayneth to this place, mentioned Math. 15. 5. & Mark. 7. 11; which some Interpret, as if a Iew should say to his Parents, That he had already dedicated all that to God (to whom vowes are to be performed) wherewith hee might haue helped them. Doctor Ramolds saith, That the Iewes, as they were prone to vngodly vowes, so this was an vsuall vow amongst them, and they would binde it with an oath, That such or such a man should haue no profite by them. The oath which they herein vsed as most solemne, was By the Gift: for so they were instructed That if any sware by the Altar, it was not bmg, but if By the Gift, he was a debtor. The Pharisees therefore taught, if any had said to his father, By the Gift thou shalt haue no profite by mee, then he might in no case doe them any good, against the Commaniement, Honour thy Father, &c. The Iewes vsed to binde their vowes with a curse, as they which vowed  Pauls death*, vsing yet to suppress the curse it selfe, as, if they shall enter into my rest: So theise, By the gift, if they haue any profit by me, meant they should haue none. Thus the Talmud (saith he) the Booke of their Canon Law, and Schoole-Diuintie, saith, That a man is bound to honour his Father, vnlesse he vow the contrarie. Masius explaineth it thus, That they did consecrate (by saying Corban) all, wherewith they should haue benefited their Parents: as if they had said, Let it be Anathema, or deuoted; whatsoeuer it be, with which I may profit thee. And therefore those Rabbines, vnder pretext of Religion, allowed not to spend on his parents that which he had thus vowed to God. Scaliger thus interpreteth the place, as if a sonne being by his parents admonished of his dutie, should put them off with this exception, vnlesse that which I haue offered for thee, free me of this burthen. But let the more curious reade it in himselfe.

The Pharisees were esteemed pittifull; the Sadducees more * cruell. They were much addicted to Astrologic, and the Mathematickes: whose names of the Planets Epiphanius b rehearseth, as also of the twelue Signs.

There were c seuen sorts of the Pharisees, which the Talmud reckoneth: first, Schemita, which measure pietie by honour and profit, as the Schemites, which for the marriage of Dina endured circumcision: secondly, Naephi, which lifted not his feet from the ground: the third Kisai, Draw-bloud, which smiteth his head to the wall, to cause the bloud to come; and also shutteth his eyes, that he behold not a woman: the fourth, that standeth on his perfection, called Mahkobathi: What is my sinne? as if there wanted nothing to his righteousness: the fift, Meduchia, which goe lowly and stouping: the sixt, the Pharisee of Love, which obeyeth the Law for loue of vertue or reward: the seuenth, the Pharisee of Fear, which is holden in obedience by feare of punishment. This they call Iobs Pharisee, the former Abrahams.

d Epiph. bar. 16 Epiphanius describeth their strict obseruations. Some (saith he) prescribed to themselves ten yeares, or eight or foure yeares continence. Some lay on plankes, which were only nine inches broad, that when they slept, they might fall to the pavement, so to be awakened againe to prayer, and keepe themselves waking. Others put stoncs vnder them for the same end, by pricking to awake them: others lay on thornes for that purpose. Scaliger reprooueth Epiphanius for affirming, that the Pharisees ware womans attyre, as not agreeing to their austertie, which despised all beds, beat themselves against walls, and put thornes in the fringes of their garments, to prick them: he thinketh him deceiued by some Iewes report; and addeth, that the moderne Iewes haue little or no knowledge of those ancient Pharisees, but as they learne it of the Christians, or of Pseudo-Gorionides (so hee calleth the Hebrew Booke, ascribed to Ioseph Ben Gorion, whom Drusus esteemeth, and Scaliger proueth to be a counterfeit.)

f Scal. Elench. c. 10. & Eli. Tbs. rad. Chaber. Wee may here also insert the manner of the Iewish Schoole or Academie, with their promotion therein to the degree of a Doctor: which, whosoever affected, was first a Disciple, and being prostrate at the feet of the Doctor, heard him teaching: for the Disciple did reade, being laid on the Floore or Pavement, and the Doctor interpreted what he read. All the time which hee learned on this manner, was called his Minoritie, and the Scholer was called Katan, à Minor. Thus Paul, saith hee was brought up at the feet of G A M A L I E L. All this while he was called by the name of his Father, his owne name not added; which, after laying on of hands, was annexed to his title: as Ben Bethira before laying on of hands; after, Rabbi Iosua Ben Bethira, &c. For by laying on of hands he was promoted to his Mastership; which was done with a set forme of words, whereof R. Iuda, the sonne of Baba, was Author.

h Abenis sometimes added to their names, as R. Abraham Aben Ezra: thus (saith Elias Thesbi. rad. Aben) the wilemen of Spaine did entitle themselves not to their father (for R. Abr. his father was named Meir) but of the familie; for Ezra was name of that familie; so was Thabon, Gabivol, &c. which they borrowed from the Arabians. Some of the Rab. called themselves also Gaon as R. Scadiah Gaon: which doctorall title was giuen them, for their perfection in the Talmud in which are threescore Tractates; for Gaon in Geometrie signifieth sixtie. Idem rad. Gaon. in rad. Samech. hee makes Samech to be the same with Chaber, saying, they were so called of the imposition of hands, which was vsed in conferring the degree.

But although he had now receiued the Degree, hee was not presently intituled Master, but Chaber, as γωρίμ with the Greekes, Spensifus γωρίμ Platonis, that is, such a Scholer as is able to teach. This word Chaber therefore is not put alone, but hath alway his Relatiue adioyned, as R. Ismael Chaber of R. Eleazar. And whiles he was so called, hee neuer sate whiles his Master sate, but prostrate on the pavement: And when they were both Masters, the younger stood, while the elder sate and taught: as in the Primitiue Church the yonger Bishop called the elder Papa. Such was the reuerence to their Rabbines.

Drus. pract. in All. 18. ex Incha. su.

Christ at twelue yeares was otherwise honoured amongst them: but this was extraordinary. And as Paul and Aquila sometimes, so also many of these Iewish Masters exercised some handie craft, to sustayne themselves without trouble of other: this R. Iose was a dresser of leather; Nabum a Scriuener, and likewise Meir, Iochanan a Shoe-maker; R. Iuda a Baker.

i Ar. Mont. in Euan. 2. Mat. 23.

The Pharisees in a selfe-conceit and singularitie, called, all but themselves, in a disgracefull scorne, Other men: so said he, Luke 18. I am not as other men: whereas they accounted themselves Masters of others, on whom also they bound heauie burthens, in their Rules and Cafes, the breach whereof they iudged Sinne in the people, but yet held not themselves bound thereto. For example, Euery Israelite ought euery day, by their Rule, to say ouer the ten Commandements, and that in the first Watch, which might not be deferred, for danger of sinne; and yet amongst themselves they esteemed it lawfull at any houre of the night. But vpon the Profelytes they imposed more then on the other Israelites, all which they were bound to (in their censure) vnder paine of Hell-fire; and therefore Christ said, They made them two-fold more the children of Hell then themselves; for they freed themselves from many of those impositions they laid on the consciences of others, And these Profelytes they lesse trusted, and therefore burthened them with more obseruations,

OF THE SADDUCEES.

After we haue spoken of the Pharisees, which loued the first roomes (which they haue heere obtained) it followeth to speake next of the Sadducees, ^a who in the New Testament are often mentioned. ^b Beda giueth an vniust interpretation of their name, saying the Sadducees are interpreted Iust. Epiphanius ^c also fetcheth their name from Sedec, which signifieth Iustice. Lyra ^d alleageth a reason, because they were seuer and rigorous in iudgement, they gaue this name of Iust (not iustly) to themselves. Burgenfis ^e otherwise; as of Arrius were the Arrians, so of one Sadoc (saith he) are the Sadducees called, who was the first inuenter of their Heresie. The Pharisees were esteemed more iust then they, as appeareth, Luk. 18. 9. They counted themselves iust, and despised others; Summum ius, summa iniuria.. Their rigorous justice was vniust rigour. This ^f Sadoc, or rather Saduc, liued vnder Antigonius Souchaus, who succeeded to Simeon the Iust: His fellow-scholler was Baithos, of whom came the Baithosæans. So saith Abraham ben Dauid in his Historicall Cabball: Antigonius said, Be ye not as seruants, which minister to their Prince on condition to receiue reward. Sadoc and Baithos asked him of this thing, and he answered that they should not put considerce in the reward of this life, but in the world to come. But they deried his words; and said, we neuer heard any thing of the world to come; for they had becne his disciples: and they dissented from him, and went to the Sanctuarie of Mount Garizin, where the Princes were. They vpbraided the Pharisees with their Traditions, saying; The Tradition is in the hand of the Pharisees, to vexen themselves in this world, whereas in the world to come they haue no reward. Antigonius his words are in the Treatise Aboth. Be ye not seruants which minister to a Prince, to receiue of him reward: but be ye as seruants which minister to their Prince, with this condition, that they receiue no reward, and let the feare of God bee vpon you. & Elius Lenita thus reporteth it: Antigonius Souchaus had two disciples, Zadok and Baithos, which leauing their Master to follow wicked men, first began to deny the Law which was giuen by word of mouth, and beleued nothing but that which was written in the Law. Wherefore they were called Karaim, that is, Bible-men, or Textualls, and in the Roman tongue they call them Saducees.

Baithos had a certaine family fro Sadoc, otherwise held the same opinions, as Hellel and Sammai among the Pharisees: so these were two chiefe Masters of the Sadducæan Schooles. The Baithosæans ministered to Baithos in vessels of siluer and gold. These Sadducees were called Minim, or Mmei, that is, Heretikes. They are called Karraim, because they would seeme Textuall, and Scripture-men, disallowing Traditions, ^h of Kara, which signifieth the Scripture: which was called Kara or Cara, of Cara to reade, saith Drusius, ⁱ because of the diligence, which ought to be vsed in reading the Scriptures, whereunto men should designe (after the Iewish precepts) the third part of their life. Abraham Zachuth calles them Epicures. The Scriptures they interpreted after their owne sense, nor regarded they the words of the Wise-men; that is, the Pharisees. They were of the ancient Caraans, or Karraim, but not of those which now are so termed; which as Zachuth confesseth, confesse the Resurrection, and Reward. Scaliger ^k affirmeth, by the testimonie of Philip Frederike a Christian Iew, who had great familiarity with these Karraim at Constantinople, and had bin often present at their Synagogue, that they differ nothing from the other Iewes, but in reiecting Traditions, and are far more honest and faithfull then the Rabbanim, of whom they are no lesse hated for their integritie, then for reiecting Tradition. But in comparison of the ^l Rabbanim, there are but few of the Karraim: and these are of the reliques of the old Sadducees. These two Sects haue nothing common betweene them, but the Text of Scripture: they haue a differing account of their New-moones: the other Iewes reckoning from the Coniunction, these Karraim from the time of apparition, as doe the Arabians.

Concerning the Karraim now remaining, it is reported that the other Iewes, and they will not speake one to another: so inexpiable hatred doe the other Iewes conceiue against them. And Postellus saith, ^m There are three principall Sects of the Iewes in the Easterne parts; Thalmudists; Caraim, which reiect those Glosses. First, their difference from the Pharisees was about the future reward, which being denied, they by consequence of that error fell into the rest, to deny the Re'urrection: the subsistence spirituall, &c. They cooped vp God in Heauen, without all beholding of euill. They denied Fate, which the Pharisees held. They denied Spirit altogether, saith Lira,^u for they held God to be corporeall: the soule to die with the bodie: Angels and Diuels they denied: Good and Euill they ascribed to a mans free-will^x. They were inhospitall and cruell; and as cruelly hated of the people. They are charged (the Diuell may be slandered) to deny all Scripture but Moses y: But first in Scripture, this opinion of theirs is not mentioned: and Iosephus affirmeth, that they receiued the Scriptures, and reiected Tradition. Neither would the zealous people of the Iewes, haue endured them in the Temple, if they had denied their Prophets, for feare of whom they durst not professe otherwise of Iohn Baptist, although he had left no monument of miracle, or Scripture. Drusus z would reconcile this opinion of the Fathers, which say they denied all but Moses; and the other, saying, that some of the Sadduces liued in Iudæa, others in Samaria. These later happily, with the Samaritans, denied all saue Moses. Amongst these were the Apostata's, which liued in Sichern, mentioned by Iosephus Antiq. lib. 11. cap. 8. and Eccles. 50. 27. Iunius thinketh that they fell from the Iewish Religion with Manasses, in the time of Nehemias.

The Sect of the Sadduces was diminished, if not worne out, after the destruction of the Temple, till in the yeare 4523. or after Scaliger, 4515, and Anno Dom. 755. one Anan and Saul his sonne renewed that Doctrin, because he had not receiued his expected promotion to the degree of Gaon a. He wrote bookes against the other Iewes. The like did one Caracasuai. But of these Sadduces too much.

OF the ^b Esses or Hessees, followeth in the next place. Their name Scaliger c denieth of a ^d word which signifieth Rest, or quietnesse and silence: both which well agreed to their institution. He disproueth that opinion of Eusebius, and others, that therein followed him, which thought these Iewish Heretikes were Christian Monkes and Catholikes. Such Catholikes, let Baronius e and Bellarmino f boast of, as the authors of their Monkes, for so they would haue them; which you may beleue as well as before the Floud, Enosh; and after, Elias, Iohn Baptist, the Nazarites and Rechabites, were Monkish Votaries, as the Cardinall would haue you. As for these Esses, he makes no small adoe against the Centuries, g for vnderstanding Philo of Iewish, and not of Christian Monkes. But the loue to Monikery hath dazeled the eyes of men too much: and euen their Historie (which followeth) will conuince that opinion of falsehood. Besides, Christianitie should haue small credit of such associates. Indeede the latter Monkes are much like them in superstition and Idolatrie, though farre behind in other things. But hee that will see this Argument disputed, let him reade Scaliger his Confutation of Serarius the Iesuite. He sheweth also that the Ossens, Sampsaxans, Mesfalians, and diuers heresies amongst the Christians, sprang from these Esses: that the Egyptian Esses, of which Philo speaketh, out of whom Eusebius first collected that conceit, and that Philo himselfe had no skill in the Hebrew, but knew only the Greeke tongue: that Paulus the Eremite in Thebais, was the first Author of Monasticall liuing. But now to come to our Historie of these men.

h Pün. l. 5. c. 17. These Esses, Hessees, or Essens, are placed by Plinie on the West of the Dead-sea h, a people people solitary, and in the whole world most admirable, without women, without money, and nation eternall in which none is borne, the wearinesse of others fortunes being the cause of their fruitfull multiplyings. Philo in that Booke which he intituled, that all good men are free, saith that there were of them about foure thousand, called Essai, quasi ἕσται, that is, Holy, not sacrificing other creatures, but their mindes vnto God. Some of them are Husband-men, some Artificers, for necessitie, not for abundance: They make no weapons of warre, nor meddle with Merchandize. They haue no seruants, but are all both free, and mutually seruants to each other. They liue perpetually chaste, sweare not at all, nor lie: esteeming God the Giuer of all good, and Author of no euill: Their societie is such, that one garment, one house, one food, one treasure, one getting, one spending, one life, is in common to them all; carefully providing for their lickc, and holding the elder men in place of parents.

Iosephus, who himselfe liued among them, doth more largely describe them. ^a He reporteth that they were by Nation Iewes, anoiding pleasures and riches as Sinnes; accounting continence and contentednes great vertues. They marrie not; but instruct the children of others, respecting them as their kindred, in their manners: not denying the lawfulness of marriage, but the honestie of women. Hee which becommeth one of their fraternitie, must make his goods common. Oyle and neatnesse they shunnē, yet weare alwayes a white garment. They haue Officers for their common prouision. They haue no one certaine Citie, but in each, many of them haue their houses: to strangers of their owne Sect, they communicate their goods, and acquaintance; and therefore carrie nothing with them in their iorneyes, but weapons for feare of theeues: and in euery Citie haue of the same Colledge an especiall Officer which prouideth for strangers. The children vnder tuition of Masters are alike prouided for; nor do they change their rayment till the old be worne: They neither buy nor sell, but mutually communicate. Deuout they are in the seruice of God. For before the Sunne riseth, they speake of no prophane or worldly matter, but celebrate certaine Prayers, as ^b praying him to rise. Then by their Officers are each appointed to their workes, till the fifth houre, at which time they assemble together, and, being girded with linnen garments, wash themselves with cold water. Then do they go into their dining-rooms as into a Temple, where no man of another Sect may be admitted; and there staying with silence, the Pantler sets them bread in order, and the Cooke one vessell of broth. The Priest giueth thanks, as after dinner also. Then laying aside those their holy garments, they plie their worke till the euening; and then suppe in like manner. There is neuer crying or tumult, they speake in order, and obserue euen without the house a venerable silence. In other things they are subiect to their Ouerseer, but at their owne choice may helpe and shew mercie to others. To their kindred they cannot giue without licence. What they say, is certaine; but an oath they hate no lesse then periuery. They studie the writings of the Ancient, thence collecting such things as may benefit the manners of the minde, or health of the bodie. They which are studious of their Sect, must a years space endure triall, & then after that probation of their continencie, must be probationers yet two yeares longer, and then vpon allowance of their manners are assumed into their fellowship; making first deepe protestation of Religion towards God, and iustice towards men, to keep faith to all, but especially to Princes, and if they shall come to rule ouer others, not to abuse their power, not to exceed others in habit, not to steale, not to keep any thing secret from them of their owne Sect, or communicate it to another, although vpon perill of life: not to deuise new doctrines: to keepe the bookes of their owne opinions, and the names of the Angels. Offenders they put from their fellowship: and he which is thus excommunicate, may not receiue food offered of any other, but, eating grasse and herbes, is consumed with famine, except they in compassion receiue him againe, in extremitie. They giue no sentence of iudgement, being fewer then an hundred. If ten sit together, one speakes not without consent of the rest. They may not spit in the midst, or on the right-hand. They will not so much as purge Nature on the Sabbath ^c, and on other daies do it very closely, for offending the Diuine light, and couer it with an instrument in the earth, and that in the most secret places; and are washed after.

^b The Esses were worshipers of the Sunne, hence came the ἡλιολατρῶν, and Sampsai.

^c They goe not to stoole on the Sabbath, because of that instrument which they could not vse to digge and couer their excrement, without Sabbath breaking. Scaliger.

They are of foure rankes, according to the time of their profession; & the yonger sort of these are so far inferiour to the rest, that if one of these do touch thē, he washeth himselfe, as if he had touched a stranger. They liue long: feare not death: nor by any tortures of the Romans, could be compelled to transgresse their laws; but derided their tormentors rather: beleeuing to receiue their soules againe presently, holding the bodies to be corruptible, & the prisons of the immortall soules: which if they haue bin good, haue a pleasant place assigned them beyond the Ocean, but the euill to be in tempestuous stormie places of punishments. Some of these Essens also foretell things to come. And another sort is of them which allow of marriage, but make a three-yeares triall first of the woman, & if by a constant purgation they appeare fit for child-bearing, they wed thē, not for pleasure but procreation: and therefore after conception do not accompany with them. These women when they wash, haue their sacred linnen garmētts also, as the men. Thus far Iosephus: who in his ^a Antiq. addeth to these, their opinions of Gods providence ruling all things: and that they thinke their Ceremonies more holy then those of the Temple, and therefore send thither their gifts, but doe not there sacrifice, but by thēselues following the same course of life, which the Plusti^b do amongst the Dacians.

c In vita Ioseph.

Some of these Esses liued so solitarie, like to Hermites, as is said before. Happily that Banus was of this sort, to whom Iosephus^c resorted for imitation. Hee liued in the wilderness, cloathing and feeding himselfe with such things as the trees and plants of their owne accord yielded him, and with often cold washings in the night and day, cooling the heat of lust, with him Iosephus abode three yeares.

OF THEIR OTHER SECTS.

e Ioseph. de Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 2. de Bello Iud. lib. 2. cap. 7.

THE Gaulonites or Galileans,^d had their^e beginning of Indas (elsewhere he calleth him Simon) a Galilæan, whose doctrine was, That, Only God was to be accounted their Lord and Prince: in other things they agreed with the Pharisees: but for their libertie they would rather endure any the most exquisite tortures, together with their kindred and friends, then call any mortal man their Lord, Theudas happily mentioned, Act. 5. and that Egyptian, Act. 21. were of this rebellious and trayterous Sect, and those Sicarij which wore short weapons vnder their garments, therewith murdering men in assemblies. That Egyptian^f Iosephus calls a false Prophet, who vnder pretence of Religion, and name of a Prophet, assembled almost thirtie thousand men to Mount Oliuet: he was defeated by Felix the Gouernour. Such were their Zelote in the siege of Ierusalem, vnder the mantle of Religion, all of thē harbouring & cloking Treason & villany.

g Scribes.

The Scribes^g are not a Sect, but a function: of which were two sorts, γραμματεῖς, τῶ νόμου, and, γραμματεῖς τῶ νόμου, the one expounders of the Law, the other publike Notaries or Actuaries, Recorders, Secretaries. Epiphanius maketh difference betwixt the Scribes that were νομοδιδασκαλοι, Teachers of the Law, and the νόμοι, or Lawyers, which prescribed formes of Law, Law-cases, and taught Ciuill actions. But these are often taken one for the other. Ezra is called a Scribe, whose Pulpit is mentioned, Nehem. 8. and ^h Moses Chaire was the seat of the Scribes; that is, they taught the Law of Moses, which they vsed to do sitting: as Christ also did, Matth. 5. 2. Their expositions, *Epiphanius*ⁱ saith were of foure sorts, one in the name of Moses; the second in the name of their Rabbinie Akiba (hee is said to haue liued an hundred and twentie yeares. and to be Standard bearer to Barchozba) the third in Andan or Annan; the fourth after the Assamonai. But little is to be said of these Scribes, more then what is before said of the Pharisees, this being not a differing Sect, but an Office or Ministrie, whereof the Pharisees also were capable, and are for false teaching blamed by our Sauour, together with the Scribes.

l Ar. Mont. in Euang. M. II. 15.

The Scribes are said in their expositions^k to haue beene more textuall, the Pharisees more in their Glosses and Traditions: the Scribes had chiefe reputation for learning, the Pharisees for holines, taking more paines (saith our English Iosephus) to go to hell. The Scribes professed both disputation and obseruation of many things, saith Arius Montanus,^l but not so exact as the Pharisees. For the Pharisees, though not so learned as the other, thought themselves more holy then them, because they obserued not onely those things, which in the common opinion were thought meet, but those things which

which were least, which the people obserued not, which others had added. This they were ambitious of, as of some great perfection, for there was a threefold state of men. The Doctors Pharisees, and People of the Land. The prouerb was, The people of the Land are the foot-stoole of the Pharisees. Of them they had a prouerb, The people of the Land is not holy: and they discern not the Law nor wisdom; yea, saith the booke Masar, he shall not take the daughter of the people of the Land; because they are abomination, and their wiues are abomination; and of their daughters it is said, Cursed be he that lieth with a beast. Thus did these proud Doctors and Pharisees tread the way to the Popish Clergie, in contemning the Laytie as vnworthy of the Law and Scripture, which in an vnknowne tongue was sealed from them, and feasted them at high Feasts with an halfe Sacrament, and in their ordinarie priuate Masse with none at all. Were not these faire reasons. c The Laytie might (if they had a whole Communion) touch the Cup, and some of them haue beards, and some haue the palse, and their dignitie is inferior to the Priestly, &c. The booke Aboth sheweth how the people of the Land requited this supercilious generation, talking of them, and scoffing at them for their obseruations. When I was of the people of the Land, R. Aquiba there saith, I said, who will giue me a disciple of the wise? I would bite him as an Asse; for that insolence, and because they would not suffer themselves to be touch'd of them. The people were tied to obserue the precepts mentioned, or by necessity of consequence drawne out of the Bible. The Pharisees (as is said) added their Traditions. The Scribes manner d of teaching was cold and weak, consisting in certaine arguments, which rather afflicted then affected the mindes of the hearers; in certaine niceties, and scrupulous questions, sometimes inextricable. And therefore the people heard Christ, as speaking with authority and not as the Scribes. But to let passe these Schoole-men, and those Canonists, let vs come to their other Sects and sorts of professions.

The Hemerobaptists e are numbred by Epiphanius f among the Iewish heresies, which, saith he, in other things differ not from the Scribes and Pharisees; but in their doctrine of the resurrection and in infidelitie, are like to the Sadducees: And euery day in all times of the ye: they are baptised or washed, whence they haue their name, But this custome of daily washing, saith Scaliger, g was common to all the ancient Iewes, which would seeme better then their fellowes; and not onely obserued of the Pharisees, Essces, and Hemerobaptists (if such a sect may be added). At this time in Palestina many do it, not once, but often in the day. The Mahumetans obserue it. The Iewes (as a h Iew hath written) were so zealous herein, that they would not eat with him that did eat with vnwashed hands: and one of their holy men being inuited by such an host, rose vp and went his way, alleaging to him, when he would haue recalled him, that he must not eat the bread of him which had an euill eye: and besides, his meat was vncleane. The Priests when they kept their courses in the Temple, abstained from wine; and eate not of the Tithes before they had washed their whole bodie. The Pharisees and Essces composed themselves to this saneticitie: the greater part of the Pharisees, and all the Essces abstained from wine, and both vsed daily washings, especially before they ate. And as many Heretikes professing themselves Christians, retained many things of Iudaisme; so these Hemerobaptists learned them this daily washing. It seemeth by him that these were Christian rather then Iewish Heretikes.

And so were the Nazaræans i also, which some reckon among the Iewish sects, who embraced the Gospell of Christ, but would not relinquish their Iudaisme; vlesse we say with Hierome, that whiles they would be both Iewes and Christians, they were neither Iewes nor Christians. These Nazaræans, or Nazoræans, Scaliger affirmeth; were meeke Karram, Scripture Iewes, but because of their obstinacie in the Law, the first Councell of the Apostles determined againt them. As for the Nazarites of the old Testament, Moses describeth them and their obseruations: not to cut their haire, not to drinke wine and strong drinke, &c. Such was Sampson. But these could be no Sect, holding in euery thing the same doctrine with the Iewes, and only, for a time, were bound by vow to these rites. But for those Nazaræans, Epiphanius k maketh them a Iewish Sect, not without cause, if such were their opinions, as he describeth them. Their dwelling was beyond Iordan in Gilead and Bashan, as the same goeth (with he) by Nation

Iewes: and by obseruing many things like to the Iewes. Herein they differed: They did not eat any thing which had life they offered not sacrifice: for they counted it vnlawfull to sacrifice, or to eat flesh. They disallowed the fīue bookes of Moses: they indeed confessed Moses, and the Fathers by him mentioned, and that he had receiued the Law, not this yet, which is written, but another. ^a Philastrius saith they accepted the Law and Prophets, but placed all righteousnesse in carnall obseruation: and nourishing the haire of their heads, placed therein all their vertue, professing to imitate Sampson, who was called a Nazarite: from whom the Pagans afterwards named their valiant men Hercules.

Next to these doth ^b Epiphanius place the Offens ^c, dwelling in Ituræa, Moab, and beyond the Salt or Dead sea: to these one Elxai in the time of Traian ioyned himselfe: he had a brother named Iexai, Scaliger (here and euery where acute) saith, ^d that the Essens and Offens are the same name, as being written with the selfe-same Hebrew letters, differing only in pronounciation, as the Abyssines pronounce Osræel, Chroſtos, for Israel Christus. And the Arabian Elxai, and his brother Iexai, were not proper names, but the appellation of the Sect it selfe; as he proueth. But they agreed not so well in profession, as in name, with the Essens, for they were but an issue of those ancient Essens, holding some things of theirs, others of their owne: as concerning the worship of Angels, reproued by the Apostles, Coloss. 2. 21. in which the Essens and Offens agreed, and other things there mentioned, Touch not, taste not, handle not: and in worshipping of the Sunne, whereof they were called Sampſæans, or Sunner, Sunmen, as Epiphanius interpreteth that name. Those things wherein they differed, were brought in by that Innouator, who (of this his Sect) was called Elxai.

He was, saith Epiphanius, a Iew, he ordained Salt, and Water, and Earth, and Bread, and Heauen, and the Skie, and the Winde, to bee sworne by in Diuine worship. And sometimes he prescribed other seuen witnesses; Heauen, and Water, and Spirits, and the holy Angels of prayer, and Oile, and Salt, and Earth. Hee hated continencie, and enioyned marriage of necessitie. Many imaginations he hath, as receiued by reuelation. He teacheth hypocrisie as in time of persecution to worship Idols; so as they keepe their conscience free: and if they confesse any thing with their mouth, but not in their heart. Thus ancient is that Changeling, Equiuocation. He briugeth his author, one Phineas of the stocke of the ancienter Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, who had worshipped Diana in Babylon, to saue his life. His followers esteeme him a secret vertue or power. Vntill the time of Constantine, Marthus and Marthana (two women of his stocke) remained in succession of his honor, and were worshipped in that countrey for gods, because they were of his seed. Marthus died a while since, but Marthana still liueth: Their spittle, and other excrements of their body, those Heretikes esteemed, and reserued for reliques, to the cure of diseases, which yet preuailed nothing. He mentioneth Christ, but it is vncertaine whether hee meaneth the Lord Iesus. Hee forbids praying to the East-ward, and bids turne towards Ierusalem from all parts. He detesteth sacrifices, as neuer offered by the Fathers: hee denieth the eating of flesh among the Iewes, and the Altar, and Fire, as contrary to God, but water is fitting. Hee describeth Christ after his measure, foure and twentie Schæni in length, that is, fourescore and sixteene miles; and the fourth part thereof in breadth, to wit, six Schæni, or foure and twentie miles; besides the thicknes, and other fables. He acknowledgeth a holy Ghost, but of the female sexe, like to Christ, standing like a statue about the clouds, and in the midst of two mountaines. He bids none should seeke the interpretation, but only say these things in prayer: (words which he had taken out of the Hebrew tongue, as in part we haue found). His prayer is this, ^e Abar, anid moib nochiel daasim ani daasim nechile moib anid abar selam. Thus Epiphanius relateth it, and thus constructh, I cannot say expoundeth (although they, like our deuout Catholikes, needed no exposition) Let the humility passe from my fathers, of their condemnation, and conculcation, and labour; the conculcation in condemnation by my fathers, from the humilitie passed in the Apostleship of perfection. Thus was Elxai with his followers opinionate: otherwise Iewish. Epiphanius speaketh of his Sect else where often, as when he mentioneth the Ebionites ^f, and the Sampſæans: This booke both the Offees and Nazoræans, and Ebionites vsed.

The Sampseans * had another booke (they said) of his brothers. They acknowledge one God, and worship him, vsing certaine washings. Some of them abstaine from liuing creatures, and they will die for Elxai his posterity; which they had in such honor, that if they went abroad, the people would gather vp the dust of their feete for cures, and their spittle, and vsed them for amulets and preferuatiues. They admit neyther the Apostles nor Prophets: they worship water, esteeming it as a god, beleeuing that life is from thence.

Scaliger also affirmeth, that the * Massalians (which word Epiphanius interpreteth εν ζυμωτοι, Such as pray, according to the opinion and practise of those Heretikes) were a first a Iewish sect, and a slip of the Esses, and after by marriage with som false Christi- ans, made such a galli-maufrey, as after when we come to speake of the Pseudochristian sects shall (God willing) be related: for of Iewish they became Christian Heretickes.

The^b Herodians c otherwise agreeing with the rest, thought Herod to be the Messias, moued by Iacobs propheticie falsely interpreted, That the Scepter should not depart from Iuda till Sbilo came. When as therefore they saw Herod a stranger to possesse the Kingdome, they interpreted as aforesaid. Som make question whether this was the name of a sect, or of Herods souldiers. Drusius d obserueth out of a Commenter vppon Persius, Sat. 5. Herodis uenere dies, &c. these words; Herod raigned among the Jewes in the parts of Syria, in the dayes of Augustus. The Herodians therefore obserue the birthday of Herod, as also the Sabbaths: in the which day they set Lampes burning, and crowned with Violets in the windowes. Elsewhere he citeth out of a Lexicon of the Hebrew law, that they were called Herodians of Herods name, and Dorsians of the place whence they were brought; for by Nation they were Greekes: so saith the Author of Baal A- ruch, Herod the King brought Greekes out of the desert, and brought them vp in the habitable land. Scaliger saith that they were a corporation or guilde, instar carum soci- etatum, que vulgo confratria uocantur, and besides their hereticall opinion that he was the Messias, entred into society for costs and charges in common, to be bestowed on sacrifices and other solemnities, wherewith they honored Herod aliue and dead. Arias
Montanus e thinketh that the Herodians were polititions, that little respected religion.
 They thought the Common-wealth should be established, and that could not stand without Princes, nor could Princes nourish themselues or theirs without money, and therefore propounded that question to our Sauiour touching Casars tribute. Others think they made hotchpotch of Iudaisme and Gentilisme, as Herod had done: in which it is like his successors succeeded him. This coniecture is mentioned by f Beza, who yet rather thinketh that the Herodians were Herods courtiers, moued thereto by the Syri- an translation, which hath debeth Hirandis, Herods domesticals. Thus thinketh g Iunius of them also, who saith that when the Pharisees could not intrap him in the Law, they sent their disciples to question him of Tribute, hauing before agreed (which vsually they did not) with the Herodians to stand by (vnknowne) as witnesses, if he had answered any thing wherat Cesar might haue bene offended. And this seemeth most likely: for after Herods death, how could they hold him for Messias?

Another sect amongst these of the Circumcision, h Eusebius out of Hegesippus nameth the i Masbothai or Masbotheani; for Thebutis (saith Hegesippus) was of their number, which arose out of seuen sects in the Iewish people; which sects had their beginning Symon, of whom the Symonians; and Cleobins, of whom the Cleobians; Dositheus, of whom the Dositheans; and Gortheus, of whom the Gortheans; and Masbotheus, of whom the Masbotheans. And from the same fountaines issued the Menandrians, Mar- cionists, Carpocratians, Valentinians, Basilidians, and Saturnilians. And a little after,
There were diuers sects amongst the Israelites; Esses, Galileans, Hemerobaptists, Mas-botheans, Samaritans, Sadducees, Pharisees.

The word Masbothai, k Scaliger saith, signifieth Sabbatists or Sabbatarians, because they professed to haue learned the obseruation of the Sabbath from Christ, and therein differed from the other Jewes.

He there nameth (and little else haue we but their names, euen the name also of the wicked shall rot) diuers other sects if they may beare that name: as the Genites l or Ge- nists, which stood vpon their stocke and kindred: the reason Breidenbargius alledgeth, because

because in the Babylonish captiuitie or after, they married not strange wiues and therefore boast themselves of the puritie of Abrahams seed. The ^m Merissians or Merists, which were (as the name importeth) sprinklers of their holy-water. Bresidenbach saith, they made a dimision of the Scriptures, and receiued onely some part of them: the Morbonei (he addeth) sabbatise in euery thing. The ⁿ Hellenians, of Hellenius: the ^o Cleobians and ^p Theobulians we can but mention. Of the ^q Tubiens as little, saue that they are said to be a Colledge or fellowship: and lesse of ^r Ganai, and such like, if there be any other names that remaine as the rotten bones of the consumed carcasses of heresies and hereticke; and cyther are vnknowne, or degenerated into some or other sect of Pseudo-christians, which require another taske.

The ^f Cælicole were Iewes, ^t but corruptly embracing Christianity, for they were Massalians, which had their houses or places of praier abroad in the open ayre, of whom Iuuenal is vnderstood, Nil prater nubes & cæli lumen adorant. So Scaliger readeth, not numen: and Petronius, Iudaus licet & porcinum nomen adoret, & cæli summas aduocet auriculas. These also were an off-spring of the Essæes: and from these proceeded the Massalians: they being baptised, reuolted to their former Iudaisme, and bearing the name of Christians, retained the rites of those Cælicole or Heauen-worshippers.

The ^u Cannæi were a deuout society and order, giuen to holinesse of life, and obseruation of the Lawe; of whom was Simon Kanneus, Mat. 10. called Zelotes, the interpretation of the former, as ^x Beza and ^y Scaliger shew. Suidas calleth them obseruants of the Lawe, whom Ananus shut in the Temple. Their Opwosci, or ^z Mourners were such as lamented with continuall fasting, praying, and weeping, the destruction of their Cittie, * Temple and Nation; as elsewhere is said. I might adde out of that ancient father Philastrius (whom S. Augustine saith he had seene at Millan with S. Ambrose) diuers other heresies amongst the people of the Iewes before the incarnation of Christ, no fewer then eight and twenty; of which we haue already mentioned the most and principall. He addeth the Ophitæ or Serpentines, which worship a Serpent, saying, that he first procured vs the knowledge of good and euill; for which God enuied him, and cast him from the first heauen into the second, whence they expect his comming, esteeming him some vertue of God, and to be worshipped. Another sort are the Caiani, which commend Cain for fratricide, saying, that Cain was made of the power of the Diuell, Abel of another power, but the greatest power preuailed in Cain to slay Abel. A third sort reckoned by Philastrius are the Sethiani, worshippers of Seth the sonne of Adam, who affirme, that two men being created in the beginning, and the Angels dissenting, the saminine power preuailed in ^a heauen (for with them are males and females gods and goddes) Eue perceiuing that, brought forth Seth, and placed in him a spirit of great power, that the aduersarie powers might be destroyed. Of Seth they say that Christ should come of his stocke, yea, some of them conceiue him to be the very Christ. The Heliognosti, called also Deuictaci, worshipped the Sunne, which (said they) knew all the things of God, and yeilded all necessaries to men. Others there were which worshipped Frogges, therby thinking to appease Diuine wrath, which in Pharaos time brought Frogges vpon the land of Egypt. He reckoneth the Accaronites which worshipped a Flic; of which elsewhere is spoken: as also of Thamuz, which he reckoneth another sect. Which Thamuz he saith was the sonne of a Heathen King, whose image the Iewish women worshipped with tearès and continuall sacrifices; and that Pharao which ruled Egypt in Moses time was of that name. Astar also and Astarot, he saith, were Kings of Syria and Egypt, worshipped after their deaths. But (perhaps more truely) we haue expressed these things in our former Booke. Beniamin Tudelenfis speaketh of a sect in his time, which he calleth Cyprians and Epicures, who profaned the euening before the Sabbath, and obserued the euening of the first day. I might adde to their Sects the diuers Christis or Messases, which in diuers ages they had; but that I haue referred to the tenth Chapter.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Samaritans.

It remaineth to speake of the Samaritan Sects.

Samaria was the Citie royal of the ten Tribes, after that Omri (who, as other his predecessors, had reigned before at Tirzah) had bought the mountain Shomron of one Shemer, for two talents of silver, and built thereon this Citie which he called after the name of Shemer, Lord of the Mountaine. In vaine therefore is it to seeke the name of the Samaritans from the signification of the word (which is keeping) seeing they are so called of the place, and the place of this their ancient Lord. It remaineth the chiefe seat of the Kingdome as long as the same indured, and namely, till the dayes of Hoshea their last King, in whose time Salsmanasar the Assyrian carried the Israelites thence. Esharhaddon the sonne of Senachersh, otherwise called Osnappar (thus saith Hezra: and therefore Epiphanius was deceived in ascribing this act to Nabuchodonosor in the time of the captiuitie fortie yeares before the returne) sent to inhabite that Region, Colonies from Babel, and from Cutha, and from Aua, and from Hannah, and from Sepharuaim. Babel is knowne: Cutha and Aua are esteemed parts of the desert of Arabia, the other of Syria and Mesopotamia. It seemeth that most of them were of Cutha, because all of them after passed into that name, and were of the Jewes called Cuthari, as witnesseth Iosephus. Elias Levita giueth the same reason; and addeth, that a Jew might not say Amen to a Samaritans or Cuthans blessing. The Cuthi, saith he, were the fustest beggers of all men in the world and from them, as he thinketh, came those calling roguing Gypsies or Egyptians, which so many ages haue troubled so many countries of Europe.

These Heathens serued not the Lord, and therefore the Lord sent Lyons among them, which slew them; wherefore they sent to the King of Assyria, who sent thither one of the captiued Priests of Israel to teach them how to worship God (Epiphanius calleth his name Sesdras.) He dwelt at Bethel; and as some conceiue, taught rather that idolatrous worship, whereof Bethel had bin before the Beth-aen, where Ieroboam had placed his golden Calfe, then the true worship of the True Iehouah. Howsoeuer, euery Nation (saith the Text) made them Gods, and put them in the houses of the high places, which the Samaritans had made. The men of Babel made Succoth Benoth; and the men of Cutha made Nergal, and the men of Hamath, Asima; and the Animi, Nibhaz and Tartak; and the Sepharuzims burnt their children in the fire to Adrammelech, and Adrammelech their gods. Thus they feared the Lord, and serued their gods after the manner of the Nations and so continued: a mungrell Religion, begotten of a bastard or hereticall Iudaisme, and wilde Paganisme. What those gods were it is vncertaine, and interpreters agree not. Of Succoth Benoth is already spoken. Welphus interpreteth Nergal a wilde Hen, Asima a Goate, Nibhaz a Dogge, Tartak an Ass, Adramelech a Mule, Anamelcch a Horse: thus (saith he) the Hebrewes expound them; and he supposeth these creatures were among them canonized and sacred: as the Persians are said to worship a Cocke, the Proembari of Africa a Dogge; other people other creatures. Thus their Religion continued till after the returne of the Jewes from captiuitie, to whom they would haue bin officious helpers in building of the Temple: which being refused they became their enemies, and hindred the building a long time. But the Temple being built, and Religion established among the Jewes, and their state flourishing, Sanballat gaue his daughter Nicaso to Manasses, the brother of Iaddus the high Priest, in the time of Darius the last Persian Monarch. This Nehemia mentioneth, but deigneth not to name him, affirming that he chased him from him, of which some dissent whether it by exile or excommunication, or some other punishment. R. Salorro interpreteth it of exile, Pelican of excommunication.

Drusius hath a discourse out of a Jewish Author, which relateth the forme of that first Anathema and iudiciall curse (not vnto meet heere to be mentioned) denounced against the Samaritans for hindering the worke of the Temple. Zorobabel and Ioshua (saith hee) gathered all the Congregation into the Temple of the Lord, and brought three three hundred Priests, and three hundred Trumpets, and three hundred Bookes of the Lawe, and as many children, and founded. And the Leuites singing and playing on Instruments, cursed with all kinds of Anathema's the Chutheans, in the secret of the name Tetragrammaton, and in writing written vpon Tables; and with the Anathema of the house of the higher iudgement, and the Anathema of the house of the lower iudgement, that none of Israel should eat the bread of the Chuthean (whereupon it is said, He whiche eateth a Samaritans bread, be as he that eateth Swines flesh) and that a Chuthean should not be a Profelyte in Israel, nor should haue part in the Resurrection of the dead. Thus they writ, and sealed, and sent vnto all Israel which were in Babylonia, which heaped vpon them Anathema vpon Anathema. That, concerning their becoming profelytes, Drusus doubteth whether it may not be translated; that a stranger Chuthean should not abide in Israel: which is more likely. The other had bene more impious: their zeale to make profelytes of all Nations is knowne.

To returne to Manasses, Iosephus saith that the high Priests and the Elders put him from the Altar, who therefore went to Sanballat his father in law, and tolde him that he loued his daughter well, but would not for her loose his Priest-hood. Sanballat replied, that if he would retaine his daughter, he would not onely maintaine him in his Priest-hood, but procure him a high Priests place, and make him Prince of all his Pro- uince; and would build a Temple like to that of Ierusalem in mount Garizin, which looketh ouer Samaria, higher then the other hills, and that with the consent of K. Darius. Hereupon Manasses abode with him, and many Priests and Israelites being intangled with like mariages reuolted to him, and were maintained by Sanballat. But now Alexander preuailing against Darius, Sanballat (whose Religion was Policie) rebelled, and tooke part with Alexander, and in reward thereof obtained leaue to build his Temple, whereof Manasses enioyed to him and his successors the pontificall dignity. Then was the Circumcision diuided, some (as said the Samaritan woman) worshipping in this mountaine, others at Ierusalem. The zeale which the Samaritans had to their Temple, appeared in the time of Ptolomæus Philometor; when at Alexandria Sabbæus and Theodosius, with their Samaritans, contended with Andronicus and the Iewes, these challenging to Ierusalem, those to Garizin, the lawfull honour of a Temple, both parties swearing by God and the King, to bring prooffe of their assertion out of the lawe; and beseeching the King to doe him to death that should not make his part good; and thereupon the Samaritans failing in prooffe, were adiudged to punishment.

The Samaritans in the prosperitie of the Iewes professed themselues their kinsmen and allies: in aduersitie disclaimed them, and their God also, as appeareth in their Epistle to Antiochus that figure of Antichrist, and persecuter of the Iewish Religion, in which they call themselues Sidonians dwelling in Sichein, and say, that moued by ancient superstition they had embraced the Feast of the Sabbath, and building a Temple of a namelesse Deity had offered therein solemne sacrifices: whereas therefore their originall was Sidonian and not Iewish; pleased him to enact that their Temple might beare name of Iupiter Græcanicus, and they might liue after the Greekish Rites. These things Antiochus easily granted. This Sichein is called Sichar, Jo. 4. 5. It was after that called Neapolis, and lastly (of the Colonie which Vespasian or Domitian placed there) Flauia Casarea. Of that Colonie was (it is Scaligers testimonie, Animad. Euseb pa. 201.) Iustin Martyr, omnium Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum qui hodie extant, vetustissimus; which occasioned Epiphanius his errour, that of a Samaritane he became a Christian; whereas he was neuer a Samaritan in Religion, but onely of this Samaritan Colonie. In this were in the age of Beniamin one hundred Samaritans: the wordes of Beniamin are worthy the inserting. I came, saith he, to Samaria, in which the Pallace of Ahab is yet to be knowne, a place very delectable, with Springs, Riuers, Gardens, &c. and hath not one Iew inhabiting. Two leagues from hence is Nables, sometime called Sichein, in mount Ephraim, where are no Iewes. The Citie is situate betweene the hills Garizin and Heball; there are about a hundred Cuthæans, which obserue onely the Lawe of Moses. They are called Samaritans: they haue Priests of the posteritie of Aaron which resteth in peace, who marrie not with any other but the men or women of their owne stocke, and are there commonly called Aaronites; they sacrifice and burne their offerings offerings in a Synagogue which they haue on Mount Garizim, citing out of the Law, Thou shalt giue a blessing vpon the Mount Garizim: this (say they) is the house of the Sanctuarie, and on the Paschall and other solemnities they sacrifice on an Altar in Mount Garizim, made of stones, taken by the Israelites out of Iordan. They boast themselves to be of the Tribe of Ephraim. With them is the Sepulchre of Ioseph. Hee addeth (which Scaliger saith, is a slander) that they want three letters, He, Cheth, Ain; whereas they read the Pentateuch in so many and the same letters, in which Moses wrote them, as Posse and Scaliger affirms, whereas the Iewes vse later counterfeits; the example whereof Scaliger hath giuen vs in their Computation, in the last Edition of his Emendation: yea they are now also further from Idolatrie then the Iewes themselves, howsoeuer in their Talmud and elsewhere, they brand them with false and odious imputations. Beniamin also testifieth, that they abstaine from pollution by the dead, or bones, the flaine and the Sepulchres. And euery day when they goe into the Synagogue, they put off their vsuall clothes, and hauing washed their bodies with water put on other clothes, sacred only to this purpose. Beniamin found of these Cuthæans two hundred in Cæsarea: at Benibera or new Aicalon three hundred, and at Damascus foure hundred.

Hircanus by force tooke both Sichem and Garizim. Two hundred yeares after the foundation of this Temple, as testifieth Iosephus,^a hapned this desolation thereof. The zeale yet continued as appeareth by many testimonies of Scripture. The Iewes meddled not with the Samaritanes, which made^b the woman wonder that Christ asked drinke of a Samaritane. Another time the Samaritans would not receiue him because his^c behaviour was as though he would goe to Ierusalem, for which fact of theirs the sons of thunder would haue brought lightning from heauen vpon them. And the Iewish despite could not obiect worle in their most venomous slander, then,^d Thou art a Samaritane. This Ierusalem-iourney through the Samaritanes countrey caused bloudie warres and slaughter betwixt the Galileans^e and them. in the time of Cumanus, to the destruction of many. And before that in the daies of Pilate, a couising Prophet abused their zeale, bidding them to assemble in mount Garizim^f with promise there to shew them the sacred vessels, which, said he, Moses had there hidden. Whereupon they seditiously assembling, and besieging Tirabatha, Pilate came vpon them with his forces, and cut them in peeces.

Their opinions (besides those aforesaid) were, g that onely the five bookes of Moses were Canonically Scripture, the rest they receiued not. They acknowledge not the Resurrection, nor the Trinitie: and in zeale of one God, abandon all idolatries, which it seemeth was receiued of them after the building of the Temple, and mixture with the Apostata Iewes; the Scripture testifying otherwise of their former deuotions. They wash themselves with Vrine, when they come from any straunger, being (forthsooth) polluted. And if they haue touched one of another Nation, they diue themselves, garments and all, in water. Such a profanation is the touch of one of another faith. They haue a dead corps in abomination presently.

The Samaritan^h if he meeteth a Iew, Christian, or Mahumetan, he saith vnto them, Touch me not. Scaliger out of the Arabian Geographer,ⁱ telleth of an Island still inhabited with these Samaritans, in the red Sea, which appeareth by their custome, when any comes on shore, forbidding to touch them. This arrogant superstition remaineth with them.

The Samaritan Chronicle is cited by Eusebius (Chron. grec. l. 7.)^k Scaliger, saith hee, had a copie of their great Chronicle, translated out of Hebrew into Arabian, but in Samaritan letters: it differeth somewhat from the Hebrew account. The Iewes confound^l the Samaritans and Sadducees, as if they were but one Sect. The difference hath appeared, for the Sadducees accept all the Bible; the Samaritans, Moses only. The Sadducees denyed the soules immortalitie and reward. The Samaritans in their Chronicle acknowledge both a place of reward, and punishment after this life. But whether they beleue the Resurrection or no, he doubteth. The Sadducees denie Spirits, Angels, Diuels; the Samaritans confesse them. The Samaritans also vse still those ancient letters called Phœnician, which the Hebrewes vsed before the captiuitie, which who so listeth to view, let him see their Characters, and *Scaliger*s large notes thereon in his Annotations vpon Eusebius Chronicle: and a briefe of their Chronicle and Kalendar therein written in his Emendation, as before is said: which they beginne very religiously after their manner. In the name of Iah the God of Israel. There is none like to Iah our God. One Iehoua, God of Gods, Lord of Lords, a great God, strong and terrible. There is none like to the God Ieschurun, the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and our Lord Moses, Eleazar, and Phineas. Hee confirme vnto you the blessing of our Lord Moses. Iehoua God of our Fathers adde vnto you, as many as yee are, a thousand times and blesse you. This inscription the great Synagogue of Garizim alwaies vse, when they write to other Samaritan-Synagogues, the Kalendar of the yeare following. They are very ignorant of antiquities, and know none other but that they came thither with Moses out of Egypt: neither can they tell any thing of the old Kings, or defection of the ten Tribes vnder Ieroboam. They lightly touch the names of Sampson, Sammel, David, and others, in their Chronicle, which they call the booke of Iosue. Ptolemeus Lagi conueyed Colonies of them into the Cities of Egypt, the reliques whereof are those Samaritans which haue a Synagogue in the great Citie Cairo: and those also in the Iland before mentioned. In respect of the Mount Garizim the seat and Sanctuarie of their holies, the Samaritans call themselues men which belong to the blessed Hill: and still, every yeare they in Egypt receive from the great Synode of Garizim, the type of the yeare following, two of which Scaliger had scene, and hath expressed one of them.

The Samaritans were diuided also into diuers sects, as Epiphanius * rehearseth: one whereof were called ^a Dositheans: if it be lawfull to reckon them Samaritans, which acknowledged (as Epiphanius acknowledgeth of them) the Resurrection of the dead. They abstaine from such things as haue life: some of them from marriage after they haue beene before married, and some continue in Virginitie. They obserue circumcision and the Sabbath: and they touch no man, but hold euery man in abomination. Report goeth also of their fasting and exercises.

They had name of Dositheus: who being a Jew, and hauing well profited in their law, but not receiuing promotion sutable to his ambition, reuolted to the Samaritans, and hatched this sect amongst them. And when afterwards in a singularitie he had gone aside into a Caue, and there mewed vp himselfe, and persisted in hypocrisie and fasting, he there dyed (as the same goeth) through his wilfull want of bread and water. After a few dayes, some resorting to him found his dead body crawling with wormes, and compassed with flies. § Of this name Dositheus there were diuers. ^b Two of them liued after the coming of Christ. One a Jew, sonne of R. Iannai, the other a Samaritan which endeouored to perswade his Countrymen that he was the Christ which Moses had prophesied of, as ^c Origen reporteth; and saith: of him are the Dositheans named. Another is mentioned in ^d Iobasin, who liued in the time of Christ, the Disciple of Sammai. And before these was another Dosthai, the sonne also of Iannai, of whom it is said in ^e Ilmedenn, that Senacherib sent R. Dosthai, to Samaria, to teach the Samaritans the law. This seemeth to be he, whom before out of Epiphanius we haue called Esdras, the first founder of the Samaritan heresie. And to Tertullian ^f saith of him; Dositheus the Samaritan, was the first that reiected the Prophets, as not hauing spoken by the holy Ghost. The like testimonie Hierome giueth of him. His colleague and companion is said to be one Sebua, the supposed Author of the Sebueans. In Ilmedenn ^g he is called Sebua, or Sebua. ^h Dositheus also taught, that how and in what position of body hee was in the Sabbath morning, in the same hee ought to continue all that day, without change of gesture or place: that if he did sit, he should sit in the same place all day long, and so of lying or other habit of body. The Author of this Dosithean Sect, (properly so called) liued, as Scaliger ⁱ thinketh, about or at the destruction of the Temple, and could not be that first Dosthai or Dosthai.

The Sebueans ^k you haue heard, in Drusius opinion, haue their name of Sebua, the companion of Dosthai, sent by Senacherib, or rather by Ezarbaddon; which if it be so, it seemeth this sect is ancient; haply nothing differing from the other Samaritans. Epiphanius maketh a difference, ^l but the cause he alledgeth, was the Jewes refusal of their

their helpe at Ierusalem, which was common to all the Samaritans. The difference he alleageth is the transposing of their solemnities (for that quarrell betwixt them and the Jewes) from the Iewish times, so that they kept their Passe-ouer in August (which they made the beginning of their yeare) Pentecost in Autumne, and that of Tabernacles, when the Jewes kept their Passe-ouer: neither might they sacrifice in Garizin, obseruing such differing solemnities. Scaliger * (whom I shame not thus often to name, in relation of these things too intricate for mine owne, or for common wits to finde) both in his Treatise against Serarius cap. 1. and 21. and in his Canons Isagog. l. 3. dissenteth from Epiphanius: saying, that they dissented not from the other Samaritans, but that the name was a common name, which the Jewes ascribed to the Samaritans: It signifieth ἑβδομάδι, Weekers: which name they gaue them because that euery weeke betwene the Passe-ouer and Pentecost, they obserued that day of the weeke, in which the computation of the fiftie dayes beganne, with as great solemnitie as the feast of Pentecost it selfe. This day, from which the reckoning beganne, was called δευτέρα, the second, because it was the next day after the Azyma or Feast day. But the Samaritans reckoned the second after the Sabbath, and so in all that space of fiftie dayes, kept the first day of the weeke, that is, Sunday, holy. Thus they kept seuen Pentecosts in a yeare. And perhaps (he but coniectureth) as they had these imaginarie Pentecosts, so they might at other times of the yeare haue such imaginarie solemnities of other Feasts. From that word δευτέρα, the second day, and next to the Feast of vnleauened bread, the Sabbaths, saith Scaliger in the same place, were called in order, the first δευτέρωρον σάββατον, the second Sabbath after that day, δευτερόδωρον, and so the rest: and thus he expoundeth those wordes of Luke c. 6. v. 1. secundo primum Sabbatum, that is, the first Sabbath after that δευτέρα, or first day of the fiftie, which beganne to bee reckoned the next day after Easter till Pentecost. A place hitherto very obscure. Epiphanius doth number for Samaritane sects; The Essens,^a of which is before shewed that they were Jewes, and otherwise hereticall and idolatrous in respect of their morning-deuotions to the Sunne, for which it seemeth they might not, (certaine they did not) communicate with other Jewes in the Temple and sacrifices. These pertaine not to this place; as not Samaritans. A fourth Samaritane sect he accounteth the Gortheni,^b which differed from the rest, at least from the Sebuians, in keeping their solemnities, Paschall, Pentecost, and of Tabernacles at the Iewish times, and obserued but one day holy: as likewise the fasting day. The Jewes still obserue the Sabbaticall yeare, and so doe the Samaritans also, but not at the same time; for that which is the fourth of the seuen with the Jewes, is the Sabbaticall of the Samaritans.

The miserable destruction and dispersion of the Jewes, from the time of the desolation of their Citie and Temple to this day.

more then recompenced, when their Messiah, so long before prophesied and expected, came among his owne, but his owne receiued him not: yea, they crucified the Lord of glorie. But enen then also did not the long-suffering God reiect them, Christ praied for them, the Apostles preached to them remission of this and all their sinnes, till that (as Paul chargeth them) they putting these things from, and iudging themselves unworthie of eternall life, God remoued this golden candlestick from amongst them to the Gentiles, and let out his Vineyard to other husbandmen. Famine, sword, and pestilence at once assailed them. (And what shall not assaile, what will not preuaile against the enemies of God?) Ierusalem, sometimes the glorie of Earth, the type of Heauen, the Citie of the great King, and Mother-citie of the Iewish Kingdome, from this incomparable height, receiued as irrecoverable a fall, besieged and sacked by Titus, and yet more violently tortured with inward convulsions, and euill gripes, then by outward disease, or forraine hostilitie. Iosephus and Iosippus^f haue handled the same at large, both which can acquaint the English Reader with the particulars. Besides many thousands by Vespasian and the Romans slaine in other places of Iudea, Ierusalem the holy Citie was made a prison, slaughter-house, and graue of her owne people. First had diuine mercie^g by Oracle remoued the Christians to Pella out of the danger, that without any impediment the flood-gates of vengeance might bee set wide open for Desolations black-guard to enter. Here might you see the strong walls shaking and falling, with the pushes of the yron ramme; there the Romans bathing their swords in Iewish entrails; here the seditious Captaines disagreeing in mutuall quarrels, written in blood; there agreeing in robbing and burning the Citie, and in slaughter of the Citizens: here hunger painted with pale colours in the ghastly countenances of the starued inhabitants; there, dyed in red with the blood of their dearest children, which the tyrannie of famine forceth to re-enter into the tenderest-hearted mothers wombe, sometime the place of Conception, now of buriall: Euery where the eye is entertayned with differing spectacles of diuersified Deaths, the Eare with cries of the insulting Souldier, of the famished children, of men and women euē now feeling the tormenting or murdering hand of the seditious: the sent receiue infectious plague and contagion from those humane bodies, with inhumanitie butchered, whom no humanitie buried: the taste is left a meere and idle facultie, saue that it alway tasteth the more distastefull poison of not-tasting and emptinesse: what then did they feele, or what did they not feele? where all senses seemed to be reserued that they might haue sense of punishment? where all outward, inward, publike, priuate, bodily, ghostly plagues were so readie executioners of the Diuine sentence. The continuall sacrifice first ceased for want of Priests of the last course, to whom in order it had descended; after, for want of a Temple before polluted with Ethnick sacrifices, and murders of the Priests and Souldiers, and lastly ruined, the sacred Vessels thereof being carried to Rome for ornaments of the Temple of Peace, which Vespasian had there^h erected.

Eleuen hundred thousands are numbred of them which perished in this destruction: The remnant that escaped the Roman sword, for the most part, perished after in wars, or killed themselves, or were reserued either for solemnitie or triumph, or (if they were vnder seuentene yeares of age) sold vnto perpetuall slauerie, ⁱ 97000. of these Iewish slaues were numbred: Galatinus^k accounteth 200000. And that the hand of God might be the more manifest, they which at their Passe-ouer-feast had crucified the son of God, are at the same time gathered together in Ierusalem, as to a common prison-house of that whole Nation: and they, which had bought Christ of the Traitour Iudas for thirtie peeces of siluer, were sold thirtie of them for one peece. Galatinus tells of two false Prophets, whom, coming in their owne name, they receiued for their Messias, hauing before refused IESVS that came in his Fathers name: both these were called Ben or Barchofsz, that is, the sonne of lying. The one, not long after the Passion of Christ, (if the Iewes be not the sonnes of lying which write it) the other in the time of Adrian Rabbi Akiba, (famous for his wisdom, for his 24000. Disciples, and for his long life) receiued both in their succeeding ages: and interpreted to the first, that place of^m Haggai, I will shake the heauens, &c. But afterward they slew him as the Talmud witnesseth, which also affirmethⁿ that Titus enjoyned the Iewes, which hee suffered suffred to remaine, that from thence they should no more obserue Sabbaths, nor abstaine from menstruous women.

Fortie eight yeares after the destruction of Ierusalem the Iewes made the Citie Bitter * to be their chiefe Citie, and rebelled by the perswasion of Bencochab (so hee called himselfe) that is, the sonne of the Starre. Of him Hierome testifieth, that hee had a juggling trick to kindle straw in his mouth and breathe it forth as if he had spit fire. Of him did R. Akiba (which had bene Armour-bearer to the former) interpret ^a that prophetic of Balaam, Num. 23. There shall arise a starre of Iacob. Adrian then Emperour besteged them in Bitter (where if you belecue the Iewish ^b fables) were 80000. which sounded Trumpets, euery one of them Capitaines of many Bands, which helped Barkosba, (so they called him after) that is, the sonne of lying, who had 200000. Souldiers, which to testifie their loue and valour had cut off euery man a finger from his hand. After three yeares and fixe moneths, the Citie was taken, and ^c this their Messias slaine, together with such multitudes that the bloud reached to the horses mouthes, and carryed downe great streames with the streame thereof, running to the Sea foure miles from Bitter. And Adrian had a Vineyard eighteen miles square, which hee hedged with those slaine carkasses, as high as a man can reach (a reacher I thinke.) There were two Riuers ^d in the Region of Ierico, and the third part of them by estimation of the Wise-men was the bloud of the slaine: and seuen yeares together did the people of the Gentiles fatten and hearten their Vines, only with the bloud of the Iewes. Adrian slue also at Alexandria in Egypt, seuen hundred thousand Iewes.

Dion Niccus ^e (a more credible Author) affirmeth that Adrian sent Seuerus against the Iewes, who in regard of their multitudes would not trie it with their ioynt forces in set battell, but taking his occasions and best oportunitie, proceeded more slowly and more surely: tooke fiftie of their fortified Castles, rased nine hundred and fourscore of their best Townes, slue at sundrie times 580000. of their men, besides innumerable multitudes, which perished of famine, sicknesse, and fire, these gleanings being greater then the other haruest. Salomons Sepulchre by falling downe had fore-figuified this their downe-fall: and Hyana's and Wolues prodigiously entering their Cities, seemed to howle their Funerall obsequies. All Iudæa was left almost desolate. ^f Eusebius out of Ariston Pellens addeth, that Adrian prohibited the Iewes by an Edict to come near to Ierusalem, or once from any high place to looke towards the same, or the region adjoining. Neuer did Nabuchodonosor ^g or Titus so afflict the Iewes as Adrian did. Sal. manticensis saith, there was a decree made at Rome that no Iew should euer enter Cyprus, where the rebellion began, and that Adrian destroyed twice as many Iewes, as had come out of Egypt with Moses. We haue already shewed how he destroyed this Citie, and built a new (the present Ierusalem) called of his owne name Elia. Hee made Swine ouer the Gates of this new Citie, which Images were most faithfull Posters to prohibite the Iewes (faithfully superstitious in their faithlesse superstitions) to enter. And as he had erected a Temple to Iupiter, in, or neare the place where the Temple had stood, so (to afflict the Christians also) hee built another Temple of Iupiter in Golgotha, and of Venus at Bethleem, which continued till the time of Constantine. The Christian Iewes gained by this losse: for when as they might not come to Ierusalem, they afterwards relinquished their wonted Iewish ceremonies. This was the end of Barkosba. And such is the end of all which fight against God and their Soueraigne, their arrowes which they shoote against the clouds fall down vpon themselves: he proues a falling starre, which being but a groser elementarie exhalation, is eleuated by his owne aspiring course (not to the firmament) but to some higher Region of the aire, where it shineth with the fire which burnes it, and moueth with some short glaunce, till with selfe-ruine it returneth (whence it had beginning) to the Earth.

Thus haue wee seene the Iewes banished their Countrie (about the yeare 135.) agreeing to which their miserable estate was that order of Men, mentioned by ^h Scaliger called ἄγλωδοί, Mourners, Heraclitus his Heires, which spent their time in weeping, and intended nothing but Lamentation for the Desolation of their Sanctuarie.

These haue beene among the Iewes (saith hee) euer since this destruction, and were once a yeare, on the ninth day of the moneth Ab, allowed entrance into Ierusalem by Adrians Edict. But then also, saith S^t. Hierome, they are forced to pay for it, that they which sometime bought the blood of Christ, now must buy their owne teares. There may you see (saith he) on that day whereon Ierusalem was taken by the Romans, decrepit women, and old ragged men (annis pannisq^{ue} obfitos) and many wretched people (but pittied of none) with blubbered cheekes, black armes, disheuelled haire, howling, and lamenting, for the ruines of their Sanctuarie, in their bodies and habite bearing and wearing the markes of diuine vengeance: of whom the Souldier exacteth his fee also, for libertie of further weeping. It is written in an ancient Journall of Burdeaux, * that not farre from the Images there is a stone boared through, to which the Iewes come yearely, and annoint it, lamenting grieuoufly, and renting their garments, and then depart. Beniamin ^a (an Hebrew Author) relateth, that one and twentie daies journey from Kupha through the wildernesse, hee trauelled to the Region of Seba where dwelled Iewes, called the children of Rechab or men of Theima, which gaue tithes to the Disciples of the wise, who continually applied themselues to learning and to Sermons, alway sitting in the Schoole, and to the humbled Israelites, and deuour persons, which lament Sion, and bewaile Ierusalem. These dwell in Caues, or in ruined houses, fasting all the dayes of their life, except on the Sabbaths and Festiualls, beseeching mercie continually at the hands of God, touching the banishment and deportation of Israel: they neuer eate flesh nor drinke wine. The same also doe all the Iewes of the Countrie Theima and of Talmaas pray: all which goe with rent clothes, and fast fortie dayes for the Iewish captiuitie. And so let them mourne which refuse ^c the glad tidings of great ioy to all people, that vnto vs is borne I E S V S a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

But yet what rockie heart can but mourne with them, and for them, thus made spectacles to the World of bodily and spirituall miserie, which both in these times mentioned, and (before) in the time of Traian, and in all ages since, hath pursued them in all places of their habitation, if that name may bee giuen to this World-wandering and Vagabond-people? In the time of Traian, ^d Adrians predecesour, the Iewes had rebelled in Egypt, and Cyrene, where they committed much outrage and mischiefe, vnder one Luke their Captaine, against whom the Emperour sent Martius Turbo, who destroyed many thousands of them; and fearing that the Iewes in Mesopotamia would doe the like, commanded Lucius Quietus to destroy them vtterly; in recompence of which seruice, executed to his minde, he made him President of Iudæa. Dion ^e saith, That the Captayne of the Iewes was named Andrew, and that they slue many Greekes and Romans; did eate their flesh, girt themselues with their guts, were imbrewed with their blood, and clothed with their skinnes; many they sawed asunder, from the crowne downwards, many they cast to the Beasts, and many were found to kill one an other with mutuall combats, so that two hundred and twentie thousand persons perished by this vspeakeable crueltie. In Egypt and Cyprus, vnder their Captaine Artemion they destroyed two hundred and fortie thousand. They were subdued by Traians Captaynes, specially by Lucius: and it was made a capitall crime for a Jew (although forced by tempest) to set foote in Cyprus. Africa was repeopled (where they had destroyed) with new Colonies. No maruell if the Romans (thus prouoked) both in the time of Traian and Hadrian destroyed so many thousands of them. Julian afterwards gaue them leaue to returne into their Countrie, and rebuild their Temple, more for hatred of the Christians, then for loue to their Nation: whose wickednesse and answerable successe herein is plainly detected and detested by Gregorie Nazanzene, ^f and other Fathers, as ^g wee before haue related.

To adde further of their bodily confusions, and the illusions of their bewitched mindes: Nicephorus mentioneth a Pseudo-Moses of the Iewes in the parts of Arabia destroyed by the forces of the Empire, together with his Complices in a like rebellion.

That they which will not beleene the Truth, are giuen over to strong delusions to beleene lies.) In the Ile of Crete was * a false Prophet, that affirmed himselfe to bee Moses, which led the Israelites through the red Sea, and to be sent from heaven to those Iewes to conduct them through the Red Sea, into the continent of the Holy Land. This hee perswaded them for the space of a whole yeare, going from Citie to Citie: and at last induced them to leaue their riches to them that would take them, and to follow him: at a day appointed he went afore them vnto a Promontorie of the Sea, and there bids them leape in; which many obeying, perished in the waues, and many more had perished, had not some Christian Merchants and Fishers been at land, which sau'd some, and forbade the rest to follow. The Iewes seeking to bee reuenged of this counterfeite Moses, could no where finde him: and therefore thought him to be some Deuill in humane shape, which sought their destruction, and thereupon, many of them became Christians. Beniamin Tudelensis reporteth of one in Persia called Dauid Elroi, sometime the Disciple of Hafsdai, which was a Head of the captiuitie, one learned in the law and Talmud, in forraine learning, the Isinaelites tongue and in Magike, who gathered together the Iewes in Hbaphthon, and would needes warre on all Nations, and winne Ierusalem, affirming that God had sent him therefore, and to free them from the Gentiles. Many beleened him to be the Messias. The King of Persia sent for him, imprisoned him in the Citie Dabasthan, whence they are not freed during life. But he three dayes after when the King and his Councell fate to examine and take order for this businessse, came amongst them: and when the King asked who brought him thither, hee said his owne wisdome and industrie. The King bid lay hold on him, but his seruants answered, they could heare him, but not see him: and away he went, the King following him to a Riuer, ouer which Dauid stretching his hand-kerchiefe passed ouer, and was then seene of them all, who in vaine pursued him with their boats. This Dauid the same day went ten dayes journey from thence to Elghamaria, and declared to the Iewes there all which had passed. The Persian sent to the Calipha of Bagded, that hee should cause the head of the captiuitie, to perswade him to other courses, otherwise threatening destruction to all the Iewes in Persia; which Iewes likewise for feare thereof writ to the head of the captiuitie. He therefore writ to Dauid: Wee would haue thee to know that the time of our deliuerance is not yet come, nor haue we yet seene our signes: and therefore enioyne thee to desist from these attempts: otherwise, be thou cast out from all Israel. But he proceeded neuertheless, till Zinaldin, a Tunkish King, subiect to the Persian, corrupted his Father in law with ten thousand peeces of gold, who accordingly with a sword slew him in his bed. And thus ended Dauid, but not his designes: for the Iewes in Persia were forced by many talents of gold to buy their peace with the King. About the same time Rambam tells of another, which tooke vpon him to bee the messenger of the Messias, which should direct his way before him, preaching that the Messias would appeare in the South. To him resorted many Iewes and Arabians, whom he led alongst the Mountaines, professing to goe meete the Messias, who had sent him. Our Brethren in the South Countre wrote to me a long letter hereof, declaring the innouations hee made in their prayers, and his preachings amongst them, asking my aduise. And I writ a Booke, saith Rambam, for their sakes, touching the signes of the comming of the Messias. This Seduces was taken after a yeares space, and brought before one of the Kings of the Arabians, which examined him of his courses, who answered that he had so done at the commandement of God, in witnesse whereof he had him cut off his head, and he would rise againe and reuiue: which the King caused to be done, without any such miraculous effect ensuing. The like telleth Isaac Leuita, of one Lemlen a Jew in the yeare 1500. as also of R. Dauid which about the same time was burned for like cause. The Iewes haue Legends (as that of Eldad, translated by Genbrard) of multitudes of Iewes in Aethiopia: whom when we come thither, we will visit. But alas it is small comfort, being burned in the fire, to make themselues merrie with smoke.

Of their miseries sustayned in all places of their abode, all histories make mention. And yet their superstition is more lamentable then their dispersion, as also their pertinacie and stubbornnesse in their superstition. And certainly me thinkes, that euen to him that will walke by sight, and not by faith, not obliging his credit to meere authoritie, as the case standeth betwixt vs and the Scriptures, but will bee drawne by the cords of Reason only and Sense, euen to such a one, me thinkes, this Historie of the Iewes may be a visible demonstration of the Truth of Christian Religion: not on-ly because the truth of the prophecies of ^a Iacob, of ^a Moses, of ^b Esay, and other the Prophets is fulfilled in them; and because Gods iustice still exacteth the punishment of the betraying and murdering that Iust one; but especially in this, that the bitterest Enemies, cruellest Persecutors, and wilfullest Haters that euer were of the Christian Truth, are dispersed into so many parts of the World, as witnesses of the same Truth; holding and maintayning to death the Scriptures of Moses, and the Prophets; then which, euen Reason being Iudge (as is said before) we will not desire fonder and fuller proofes of our Profession. Neither is our Gospell wherein wee differ from them, any other then the fulfilling of their Law: and Christ came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfill the same. In him the Promises, in him the Figures in him the righteousnesse of the Law, righteousnesse in Doctrine, righteousnesse in Practise, righteousnesse of Doing, righteousnesse of Suffering, to satisfie the debt, to merit the inheritance, are the witnesses, that in him they are all, yea, and Amen, haue receiued their perfect being and accomplishment. But ^c the veile is ouer their hearts; eyes they haue and see not, eares and heare not: They hold out to vs the light of Scripture, themselves walking in darkenesse, and reserued to darkenesse; like to a Lampe, Lanthorne, or Candlestick, communicating light to others, whereof themselves are not capable, nor can make any vse.

But to returne, to consider further of their dispersions. Wee haue shewed how they were vtterly cast out of their Countrey: and Italie, and the Empire was filled with Iewish slaues. Nor was this their first dispersion: but as the Assyrians had carried away the other ten Tribes, whose off-spring, as is thought, about the yeare of our LORD GOD, one thousand two hundred, founded that mightie Empire of Cathay; so the Babylonians carried away the two Tribes remainyng, which might haue returned vnder the Persian Monarchie; but many remayned in those Countries till the dissolution of that Iewish state, and after. They had a famous Vniuersitie, at Babylon, which indured till the yeare of CHRIST, one thousand three hundred (so writeth ^d Boterus.) At which time they fleeing the persecutions of the Arabians dispersed themselves into ^e India, where many are found at this day. These, through continuall conuersing with the Gentiles and Christians, haue small knowledge of the law, and lesse would haue but for other Iewes, that resort thither out of Egypt. Before that time also, if we beleue the Ethiopian Historie, twelue thousand ^f Iewes (of each Tribe a thousand) went with the Queene of Saba's Sonne, which, they say, shee had by Salomon, into that Countrey, and there remayne their posteritie to this day.

This is ASIA and AFRIKE fraught with them, but EVROPE much more. Adrian banished siue hundred thousand into Spaine, where they multiplied infinitely, and founded an Vniuersitie at Corduba, about the yeate of our Lord one thousand: and at Toledo was a Schoole of twelue thousand Iewes, about the yeare of our Lord, one thousand two hundred thirtie and fixe, as writeth ^h Rabbi Mosehe Mikketzi: from hence it seemeth they swarmed into England and France. Their miseries here in our Land indured, are by our Authors mentioned ⁱ in the dayes especially of King Richard the first, and King John: and the whole Land gaue a fift part of their goods to King Edward the first, to banish them, Anno one thousand two hundred nineite and one, the ^k number of which expelled out of England were 16511.

Out of France they were thrice banished by three Philips, although in Auinion there still remayne some of them. Being expelled France, they sought habitation in Germanie, where Corradus the Emperour admitted them into the Countrey of Sueuia: and thence they flowed into other parts, into Bohemia (in the Citie of Prague, are about fiftene thousand of them) and in Austria, and into Hungaria, whence, for the crucifying of a childe, they vvere banished by King Matbias: as at Trent, for the like fact, and poysoning of Welles, they sustained much trouble in Germanie: and many passed to Venice; many also went from thence into Russia (vvhhere the people cannot abide to heare them named) and Poland, vvhhere Casimere the Great, for loue of an Hebreuv Lasse, gaue them many priuiledges. They liue disperfed in the townes and Villages, occupied in handicrafts, and husbandrie. They haue great Synagogues in Cracouia, Leopoldis, and at Trochi, a Towne of Liuania: and Master Barkeley a Marchant of London, who hath spent many yeares in Liuania, Polonia, and other of those cold Countries, told me, That the Ievves farme the Custome of the Kings, and at Samaiden in Curland one of these Ievvish Customers beat out the braines of a Polish Merchant, for deferring to open his packe: but in regard of the peoples hatred, prouision is made, vnder great penalties, for their security, and yet many Iewes vvhere there executed by occasion of a murren, procured (as vvvas suspected) by Ievvish exorcismes intending a plague to the men, and not a murren to the beasts if their vvorking had sorted: but the Ievves said it vvvas but a pretence to deprive them of their riches.

They heere in Poland print what bookes they list.

They vvvere cast out of Spaine by Ferdinand and Isabella, in the yeare, 1492. It is thought, ^a that there went out of Spaine an hundred and twentie thousand families of them (besides Moores) and out of their Kingdome of Naples and Cicill. Hence they passed, Anno Domini 1539. into Tuscane, and the Popes Dominions, vvhen they were banished by Paul the fourth, and Pius the fifth; and receiued againe by Pius the fourth, and Sixtus the fifth; Rome and Venice hauing great store of them. This is the Popes holinesse: he that vvould not vvillingly endure a Protestant in the vvorld; besides the stevves vnder his Holinesse nose, can endure the Græcians: yea, and these Ievves, Rome it selfe hauing ten thousand, or, ^b after others reckoning, twentie thousand of them priuiledged, vvith their fine Synagogues, Liturgies and publike Sermons; and to straine vp their Vsurie to eighteene in the hundred: hauing also in some places (it may be in all) a peculiar Magistrate to decide controuersies betweene Christian and them, vvith particular direction to fauour them in their trade. Dulcis odor lucri ex re qualibet, The beastly trade of Currifans, and cruell trade of Iewes is suffered for gaine, these paying a yeaerly rent for the heads they weare, besides other meanes to racke and wracke them in their purses at pleasure, they being vsed as the sponge-like Friars, to sucke from the meanest, to be squeezed of the greatest; in so much that the Pope, besides their certaine tribute, doth sometimes (as is said) impose on them a Subsidie for ten thousand crownes extraordinarie for some seruice of State. So vvell is the rule of Paul obserued by this Bishop, not to be a lover of filthy lucre.

Out of Spaine they vvvent into Barbaric and diuers other Countries, and some into Portugal: vvhere John the second made them pay eight crownes for a poll; and yet limited them short time of departure. Emanuel his successour did the like 1497. except they vvould become Christians, for vvwhich hee assayed diuers meanes. But not preuailling he caused their childten, vnder the age of foure and twentie yeares, to be baptised; some rather hurling their children into pits, some killing themselves: many for feare vvwere baptised; some vvvent into Italie and abode in Ferrara, Mantua, Venetia, in the name of Maranes, and haue a Synagogue at Pisa. But the greatest part of them went into the East to Constantinople and Salonichi, in vvwhich two Cities there are about an hundred and sixtie thousand of them. There are of them in all the chiefe Cities of traffike in the Turkish Empire. ^c Tyberias is vvholly inhabited with Iewes, ^d vvwhich Citie Zelim gaue to Gratiola a Ievvish matron. In Ierusalem there are about an hundred houses of them: There abide not many, because of a superstitious opinion, That before the Messias shall come, a great fire from heauen will consume that Citie and Countrey, to purge it of the abomination committed there, by prophane Nations: At Zante they are so hated, that from Maundie Thursday vntill Saturday noone, they dare not come abroad: for the people, in a foolish zeale, vvould stoue them: and some refuse to eate of their meate or bread. The Turkes in their reproach vse such a kinde of imprecation; If this bee not true, would God I might die a Iew. The old Testament is read of them in these parts in the Hebrew ^e, but their Cakamim and Cohens, that is, their Wise-men and Priests preach in Spanish

^d There is reported to be an Vniuersitie of Iewish studies to haue beene, as Drus. citeth out of Iuchasin. and Elias in rad. Teberia, saith, that the Iews there had the most elegant language of all the Hebreues; and fith thence were the Authors of the Masoreth.

Only at Salonichi (anciently Thessalonica) in Macedonia, and at Safetta in the Holy Land, (two Vniuersities) they speake Hebrew. They will rather in blasphemie testifie their hatred of Christ, then any abilitie to dispute.

AN APPENDIX CONCERNING THE IEWISH
Dispersions, out of BENJAMIN TVDELENSIS.

BENJAMIN TVDELENSIS, a Jew of Nauarre, hauing trauelled Spaine, France, Italy, Greece, Natolia, Syria, and many other Countries of Asia, Africke, and Europe: worthily reckoned one of the greatest Trauellers that euer liued; at his returne into Spaine 440. yeares since, related what Iewish Synagogue he had scene in the world (one chiefe end, as it seemeth, of his trauels) because it appertaineth to this matter we haue in hand, and the book (translated out of Hebrew by Arius Montanus) is very rare, I thought meet to adde heere a brieft of those things which concerne the Iewes, out of the same. At Barchinon they found a populous Synagogue, another, but smaller, at Gerunda: Narbone was, as it were, Antient-bearer of the Law to all the Countries about, where was chiefe, Kalonymus of the seed of David; there were 300. Iewes. Foure leagues thence was the Citie Bidrasch, where was an Vniuersity stored with disciples of the wise: whereof also there were at Mompelier. Lunel was a famous Vniuersitie, where liued Affer the Pharisee, which studied night and day, fasting and perpetuall abstaining from flesh, with Messulam, Ioseph, Iacob, Aurox, which by the bountie of the Vniuersitie gaue food, rayment, and teaching to such as came from farre to studie there, as long as they stayed. Theremas a Synagogue of three hundred Iewes. At Pothiaquiers fortie, at Nogheres about an hundred, at Atles 200. at Massilia two Colledges, and 300. Iewes. At Rome 200. free from tribute, at Salern 600. at Beneuent an Vniuersitie of 200. at Tarraam 200. at Tarenzum 300. at Ornedo 500. at Thebes two thousand, at Coriuth three hundred. There were people liuing in the Mountaines, which robbed and spoiled all, but dealt more fauourably with the Iewes (whose liues they spared) then with Christians, whom they not onely robbed but slew also. These, said they, were descended of the Iewes: they were called Balachi. At Arimbon were foure hundred, at Seleuca fise hundred. Constantinople would not suffer a Iew to dwell in the Citie, nor to ride on horse-backe, except one Solonon the Kings Physitian, yea, the people would beat them in the streets. At Pera liued two thousand Iewes. Two dayes sailing from thence. At Dorostum was an Vniuersitie of foure hundred, at Rhodes were foure hundred, at Dophros were Iewes, and Cyprian Epicures before mentioned. At Behalgad, were a Sect of Ismaelites with a peculiar Prophet of their owne. At Tripoli many Iewes and Gentiles had a little before perished with an Earthquake, whereof died in all Israel twentie thousand. At Gebal was a place where the Ammonites had sometime a Temple, and in it was an Idol of stone couered with gold, sitting, with two Images of women sitting by, and an Altar before. There were an hundred and twenty Iewes: at Beeroth fifty, at Sidon twenty. Here-awaies liued a people called Dogzijn, which others called Pagans, of no sect, nor subiect to any Prince: they kept in the mountaines and rockes, three daies iourney euen from Hermon. They liue incestuously, the fathers lying with the daughters. They haue an yearely festiuall, on which they all meet, both men and women, and there change wiues one with another. They hold opinion, that a good mans soule at his death goeth into some infant then begotten, but the soule of a bad man into some dogge or other beasts bodie. They are exceeding swift, and cannot be overcome; liuing on the mountaines. It seemeth the same with the Drusij mentioned in the former booke, and that they are deceiued, which make those Drusians some remainder of the Latine Christians, seeing they haue continued so long before that Kingdome ended; and perhaps before it began. At Casarea were few Iewes, but two hundred Samaritans, at Sebaite an hundred. This is betweene Garizim, an hill fertile & well watered, and Gebal, an hill stonie & drie. In the place of the sometime Sanctuarie at Ierusalem, was a faire and large Temple, called the Temple of the Lord, built of Ghemar ben Alchetab: there the Christians had no Image, but resorted hither only for prayer.ouer-against it is a wall, made of the walls of the Sanctuarie, Etuarie, this they call the Gate of Mercie: to this place the Jewes come to pray. The pillar of Lots wife was then continuing, which was said to grow to the former bignes, if at any time the flocks had diminished it with licking. At g Hebron was a great Temple: and in a vault six Sepulchres of Abraham and Sara, Isaac and Rebecca, Jacob and Leab: a Lampe perpetually burning: and in the Cave it selfe were tubs full of bones of the ancient Israelites. At Benbera or new Ascalon in the border of Egypt were two hundred Jewes; fortie Carraim, and three hundred Samaritans. At Tiberias were fiftie Jewes, and the Synagogue of Caleb, sonne of Iepbunneh: at h Damascus were three thousand. There dwelt the Head of the land of Israel, called *Esdra*s, and his brother Sar-salem, which was ouer the Judgment, and Ioseph the fift of the Synedrian, and Mar-slah head of the order of Readers: there were two hundred Carraim, and foure hundred Samaritans: amongst all which was peace, but no intercourse of marriages in differing Sects. In Thadmar were foure thousand Jewes: here and at Baghala were buildings of stone, so great, that it was said be the worke of Asmodemus (with as good reason as Dissels-Dike with vs.) At Hamath was at Earth-quake in those times, which destroyed fiftene thousand people in one day; and only an hundred and seuentie remained. Haleb in old times called Aram T-zoba, had fiftene hundred Israelites. At Peirain the Desert were two thousand. At Dakia (sometime Chalne) seuen hundred. Here was a Synagogue built by *Esdra*s in the returne from Babylon; and another also of his building at Charan, two daies iourney thence, the place where Abraham had dwelt, had no building on it, but was frequented by the Israelites to pray there. At Alchabor were two thousand Jewes at Nisibis one thousand, at Gezir ben Ghamar a city on the bankes of Tygris were foure thousand. It is foure miles from the place where Noahs Arke rested, which Arke Ghamar sonne of Alchetab brought from the top of the hill to the use of a Moschee: neere to which was the Synagogue of *Esdra*s, whither the Jewes on festiuall daies resorted to prayer. Two daies iorney thence was i Mosai Al-Musal, sometime called Affur, the beginning of the Kingdome of Persia retaining her ancient greatnes, situate on Tygris, a bridge only being betweene that and Niniue (now wholly destroyed, only castles and streets remained in the circuit thereof) at Al-Musal were seuenthousand Jewes: and three Synagogues of the three Prophets, Abdias, Ionas and Nabum. In Rahaban, anciently Rehoboth, were two thousand. At Karkesia (on the same bank of Euphrates with the former) five hundred at Aliobar, two thousand at Hhardan, fiftene thousand at Ghukbera, built by Ietronia, ten thousand. Two dayes iourney thence is k Bagdad, of the Kingdome of the Calipha, named Amir Almumanin Alghabassi, the chiefe of the Ismaelite-Sect. Here were a thousand Jewes, and ten Synedria or Courts, the heads or chiefe whereof (he nameth them) are called Vacantes, because they attended no other function, but the administering of the society. They giue iudgement to all Jewes, which resort vnto them on any day of the weeke but the second, in which they all meet together before Samuel, the head of the Synedrium. But ouer all these was Daniel son of Hbasdai, entituled the Head of the Captiuitie, descended from Dauid, whom the Jewes called Our Lord, the Ismaelites, Sydna ben Dauid, Our L. son of Dauid. He had great authority ouer all Congregations of Israelites, warranted to him with the Amirs seale, who caused that all Israelites and Ismaelites should rise to him, vnder paine of an hundred stripes. When he goeth to see the King, it is with very great pompe. This dignity is bought with a great summe of money, giuen to the King and Princes at his Confirmation: and then is the second chariot of the King prouided for him. He exerciseth imposition of hands on the men of the Synedrium. There were eight and twentie Synagogues in Bagdad and the Suburb on the other side Tygris. But that Synagogue which pertained to the Head of the Captiuitie, was of marble of diuers colours, adorned with gold and siluer, spacious: and on the pillars were verses of the Psalmes writren in gold. Before the Arke were ten rowes of seates, with marble steppes, in the highest whereof sate the Head of the Captiuitie, with the Jewes of the family of Dauid.

In Gehiagan (sometime Rezen) two daies iourney from thence were five thousand Israelites. One dayes iourney from hence was n Babel, now wholly ruinated, in which are yet seene the ruines of Nabuchodonosors Pallace, but inaccessible by reason of diuers kinds of Serpents. Twentie miles from these ruines dwell twentie thousand Israelites, lites, which there pray in the Synagogues, the chiefe whereof is that of Daniel, of squared stones. There were at Hhilah (five miles thence) ten thousand Iewes in foure Synagogues. Foure miles thence it is to the Tower which the sonnes of Diuisions built with Bricks, which the Arabians call Lagzar: the length of the foundation is about two miles, the breadth of the walls two hundred and fortie cubits: where it is broadest it is an hundred reeds; and betweene euery ten reeds space, are wayes in manner of spires continued thorow the whole building, on the top of which one may see twentie miles about. Halfe a daies iourney from hence is Naphahh, where were two hundred Iewes. And three leagues thence the Synagogue of o Ezechiel neere Euphrates, and in the same place sixtie Towers one against another, and a Synagogue betweene euery one. The monument of Ezechiel was built of Iechonias with five and thirtie thousand Iewes. And this is a holy place, whither they resort from the beginning of the yeare to the day of Expiation, to pray and keepe festiuall. Thither cometh the Head of the Captiuitie, and other chiefe men from Bagdad, and two and twentie miles about they pitch their Tents heere and there: and the Arabians keepe then and there a great Faire. At this time they reade on the Expiation day out of a booke which Ezechiel writ: and there is a holy house full of bookes since the time of the first and second Temple, the custome being, that they which die without children should bequeath their bookes hither. The Iewes in Persia and Media make Vowes to be performed in this place, to which also the Ismaelites resort to pray. The Sepulchre of the three Saints, companions of p Daniel, is halfe a dayes iourney from hence, with faire and great arches. Three miles thence is Alkotsonath, and in it three hundred Iewes. At Kupha the Sepulchre of Ieconia, and seuen thousand Iewes. One and twentie daies iourney thorow the wilderness is the Region of Seba, now called the Land of Aliman, where dwell Iewes, the children of q Rechab. This Region extendeth sixteene dayes along the mountaines, subiect to no forren Nation, hauing therein foure hundred strong Cities two hundred towne, an hundred Castles. The Metropolis is Thema. In all those Cities are about Three hundred thousand Iewes. In the Region of Tilmaas an hundred thousand. Three dayes iourney hence is Chibar, in it fiftie thousand. These (they say) are of the deportation of Ruben, Gad, and Manasses. From hence five and twentie dayes iourney is Vira, which is a Riuer running into Eliman, where were three thousand. And seuen iourneyes from thence Neasat, and in it seuen thousand. Five iourneyes from thence Bosra vpon Tygris, and in it one thousand. Two dayes iourneyes from thence the Riuer Samura, beginning of Persia, with a Towne of the same name, wherein were fiftene hundred. The place is famous by the Sepulchre of *Esdra*s, who in his returne to Babylon in Embassage, heere died. There was a Synagogue honored also by the Ismaelites. In Susan were seuen thousand Iewes in fourteene Synagogues, before one of which was the Sepulchre of Daniel: about which rose a controuersie betweene the Inhabitants of the one and other side of the Riuer: they which dwelt on that side where the Sepulchre was, seeming to the other the more fortunate; this caused blowes, but was after agreed, that euery yeare it should be removed by course, which was done with solemne procession, till r Senigar the Persian King thinking it a prophanation to the holy Coffin, caused it to be hanged in a chest of glasse for all men to see, and forbid to take fish within two miles of that place in the Riuer.

From hence was three dayes iourney to Robad-Bar, where were twentie thousand Iewes. Two iourneyes from hence was the Riuer Vaanath, where were foure thousand Iewes. Foure iourneyes further, Malkhaath: heere they were not Ismaelites, nor vnder the Persian: they had two Colledges of Israelites, which acknowledged, neuertheless, the Head of the Captiuitie in Bagdad. At Ghaarian, five iourneyes beyond, were five and twentie thousand. Here began the mountaines of Hhaphthon, wherein were an hundred Synagogues. This is the beginning of Media: they speake Chaldee: and there were amongst them the s Disciples of the wise. Ghamaria is vnder the Persian, where Duid Elroi was. It was ten dayes iourney thence to Hhamdan, chiefe Citie of Media, there were fiftie thousand Iewes in that Region, and the Sepulchre of Mordecai and Ester. Foure iourneyes further was Debarzethaan, neere the Riuer Gozen, in it foure thousand Iewes. Beyond that, seuen iourneyes, Asbahan the chiefe Citie, twelue miles in compasse, and therein 5000. Israelites, ouer whom, and all the Persian Iewes was Salom by authoritie from the Head of the captivity. Foure journeyes hence was Sia-phaz, called of olde Perfis, whence the whole Region was named Persia; therein 10000. Seuen journeyes thence Ginah vpon Gozen, a famous Mart, in which were 8000. Samartheneth was the furthest Citie of that Kingdome, fise journeyes from Ginah, where were 50000. Foure iournyes thence Tubot: and 28. further I passed to the mountains Nisbon, which ouerlookè the Riuer Gozen, where were many Israelites; and they say there dwell the foure Tribes of Dan, Zabulon, Affer, Naphtali. Their countrey extendeth 20. dayes journey, and hath many Cities, free from subiection to any Heathen: they are gouerned of Ioseph Armacala Leuita: they till the ground, and holde warres with the children of Chus, traouelling through the desert thither. They are in league with the Copher Althorech, a people that worship the windes, and liuing in the Wildernesse: they haue neyther bread nor wine, but eate raw flesh, cyther new or dryed: they haue no nose but onely two holes. Fiftene yeares since, they tooke and sacked Rai a chiefe Citie in Persia; whereupon the King warred against them, and passing through the Wildernesse to them, was deceiued by his guide, and his people almost starued, and aser forced to flie; with whom passed into Persia Moses one of the Iewes in those parts, which tolde me (Beniamin our Author) all this. Hence I went to Chusazthaan vpon the Riuer Tygris, which runneth thence into *Hodu*er the Indian Sea, hauing in the mouth the Iland Nekrokim a famous Mart, where were 500. Iewes. I sailed ten daies thence to Kathiphan, where were 5000. Israelites. Thence to the Kingdome of Haaniem, a people of Chus which worship the Sunne: Thence after 22. dayes sayling I came to the Ile Chenerag, where they worship the fire, where were 23000. Iewes. Forty daies sayling from thence was the Kingdome of Sin, from which to Gingalan was 15. daies; there were 10000. Israelites. Thence I went to Aethiopia in India, which they call Baghdaan, in which were high mountains, and in them many Israelites, subiect to none, which warred on the Hamaghtani, that is, the Libyans. From thence to Azzan was 20. daies journey thlough the wildernesse Sebor, the King whereof was Sultan Alhabas an Ismaelite. Twelue daies thence is Hhalauan, where were 300. Iewes; from which they passe in troupes through the desert al-Tsahaca, into Zenila in the tract of Geena or Ginza, where they encounter showers of sands. This Region is in the land of Chus, and is called Alhabas, towards the West. Thirteene daies journey from Hhaluan is Kits the beginning of Egypt. And fise from thence Pium, once Python, where were 20. Iewes, and many monuments of our fathers to be seene. Thence to Misraim is foure iournies, where were 2000. Iewes in two Synagogues, which differed in their distribution of the Lectures of their Law: the Babylonians finishing it in a yeare, as in Spain, the Israelites in three. But twice a yeare they assembled together in prayers, on the feast Latitia Legis, and on the feast Lata Legis. Nathaneel was chiefe ouer all the Vniuersities (or Synagogues) of Egypt, and appointed Masters, and Ediui. He was familiar with the King Amir Almumain Eli sonne of Abitalib. At Alexandria were 3000. Israelites. But for his trauels in Egypt, and the Synagogues which there he found, as also backe againe into Sicilia, Germane, Boheme, Prussia, &c. because there are yet knowne Synagogues of them I surcease relation. And much may I feare I haue too much wearied the Reader in so long a Iewish pilgrimage; but seeing Authours of best note, Scaliger, Drusius, Lipsius, &c. cite him, and Arias Mont. hath taken the paines to translate him, & his trauels are such ample testimonies of this our present subiect of Iewish dispersions. I haue bin bold to annex these things, som wherof might haue found some other place, if the booke had sooner come to my hands. If any list not to belecue such multitudes of Iewes, I will not vrge him; howsoeuer that deluge of Tartars in all those Ascan Regions soone after Beniamins daies, brought a new face of all things in these Easterly parts: as a Iew, and relating these things to Iewes, and by Iewes passing to vs, it is like he reported, and we haue receiued, with the most. For his Geographie, some of his names are easily reconciled to the present, some hardly, which I leaue to the Readers industrie.

* The Tartars esteemed it beauty to presse downe their nose flat, and hence perhaps was this opinion of No nose.

CHAP. XI.

The Floud happened (as Moses reckoneth the parcells in the Ages of the Patriarchs) in the yeare of the world 1656. which are thus accounted; Adam at the hundred and thirtie yeare begat Seth: Seth at a hundred and fve begat Enos: Enos at ninety Kainan: he at seuentie Mabalaleel, who at sixtie fve begat Iared: Iared being one hundred sixtie two yeares olde begat Henoch, who at sixtie fve begat Methuselab; and he at a hundred eighty seuen begat Lamech, who in his hundred eightie two yeare begat Noah; in the sixe hundreth yeare of whose life the Floud came: whereof euerie Nation almost in the world hath some tradition; howsoever as Censorinus cyteth out of Varro, from the beginning of the world to that first deluge is called ἀδινλον, or vnkowne; as from thence to the first Olympiade was μυθικον or fabulous; onely that deserueth the title of ιστορικον from the Olympiads forwards, if we regard humane History. But the Diuine hath made the former more cleere then the later. Some difference is in what part of the yeare the world was created, which is supposed to be Autumne, because the trees were then in those parts of Eden laden with fruits; and the Iewes still obserue that time. Scaliger also sometime of a contrary opinion, hath now yeilded to this. And the Egyptians in the time of Firmicus held that the world was created in the thirtieth part of Libra. The Floud after Scaliger began in the yeare 1657. on Saturday the seuenteenth of Nouember.

The second age of the world is reckoned from the Floud to Abraham: whose birth was after the Floud two hundred ninetie two yeares: Sem two yeares after the Floud begat Arpachsad: he at thirtie fve yeares Selah, who in his thirtieth yeare begat Heber: Heber at thirtie foure Peleg, who being thirtie yeares olde begat Regu, and he at thirtie two Serug, in whose thirtieth yeare Nahor was borne, who at nine and twentie begate Terah, who at seuentie yeares begat Abram. Thus Scaliger, Caluisius, Buntingus, Arias Montanus, Genebrard, Peverius, Adrichomius, Opmeerus, &c. But Iunius, Broughton, Lydyat, Codomannus, &c. adde sixtie yeares more. For Moses saith, Gen. 11. 32. That Terah died in Charan, aged two hundred and fve yeares, and then Abram (as it is in the next chap.) was seuentie fve yeares old; so that Terah when Abram was born, was a hundred and thirtie yeares olde. Whereas therefore he is said at seuentie yeares to beget Abram, Nahor, and Haran; it is to be vnderstood, that he then began to beget: ^a Abram being named first for diuine priuiledge, not because he was eldest. The like phrase is vsed Gen. 5. 32. Noah being fve hundred yeares olde begat Shem, Ham, and Iaphet; and yet neyther were they all borne at once, nor was Shem the eldest: let the Reader chuse whether of these opinions he best liketh.

In the seuentie fve yeare Abram went out of Charan, hauing receiued the promise: from whence to the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt are numbred foure hundred and thirtie yeares. Rather herein we are to follow Pauls interpretation of Moses, then Genebrards, who Gal. 3. 17. accounts those one hundred and thirtie yeares mentioned by Moses, Exod. 12. 40. from the promise made to Abraham, and not from the time that Jacob went downe with his family into Egypt. So that the departure out of Egypt, after Scaligers computation, and some others, Perkins, Adrichomius, &c. happened in the yeare of the world 2453. whereto if we adde those sixtie yeares of Terahs life before mentioned, it amounteth to two thousand fve hundred and thirteene. And so Broughton reckoneth. Iunius and Lydyat account two thousand fve hundred and nine. The difference seemes to arise from hence, that one accounteth from Abrams departing out of Vr of the Chaldees; the other from his departure from Haran after his fathers death about fve yeares after. But it were an endlesse worke to reconcile Chronologers in their different computations. Some reckon fve and twenty, ^b Scaliger the fifteenth of Aprill, the day of their departure. And then the Hebrewes beganne their yeare

yeare at the Spring-Equinoctiall, which before they beganne in Autumne.

From this departure, to the building of Salomons Temple ^b Scaliger reckoneth foure hundred and eightie yeares, whose first foundations (he saith) were laide the nine and twentieth of May being Wednesday, Anno Mundi 2933. and of the great Iulian Period (which differeth seuen hundred sixtie foure yeares from the yeare of the world) 3697. In this computation of foure hundred and eightie yeares, betwixt the departure and foundation of the Temple, many Chronologers agree, Arias Montanus, Andrichomius, Broughton, Perkins, Lydyat, &c. although some dissent much. The sum ariseth of these parcells. Moses died fortie yeares after their deliuerance. Ioshua ruled seventeene; Othniel fortie; Ehud fourescore; Gideon fortie; Abimelech three; Thola twentie three; Iaer twentie two; Iephie sixe; Ibsan seuen; Elam ten; Abdon eight; Sampson twentie; Heli fortie; Samuel and Saul fortie; Dauid fortie; Salomon in the fourth yeare and second month began to build his Temple, after which he reigned thirtie seuen yeares.

* From thence to the destruction of the Temple vnder Zedekias are accounted foure hundred twentie and seuen. This agrees with ^c Ezekiels account, reckoning a day for a yeare, three hundred and ninetie dayes or yeares after the apostacie of Israel from God, the rebellion against the house of Dauid in the beginning of Rehoboams raigne, by the meanes of Ieroboam; to which if we adde seuen and thirtie yeares which Salomon reigned, after the foundation of the Temple, the summe is foure hundred twentie seuen. The same appeareth thus; Roboam reigned seventeene yeares; Abiam three; Asa forty one; Iehoshaphat twentie five; Iehoram eight; Abaziah one; Athaliah sixe; Ioash fortie; Amazia twenty nine; Azaria or Uzzia fiftie two. Betwixt Amazia and Azaria the Kingdome was ruled eleuen yeares by the States, as some gather out of 2. Reg. 15. 1. (others reckon it not.) Ioatham sixteene; Abaz sixteene; Ezekiah twenty nine; Manasses fiftie fve; Amon two; Iosias thirtie one; Iehoahaz three moneths; Eliakim or Iehoiakim eleuen yeares; Iehoiachin three moneths; Zedekiah or Mattaniah eleuen yeares. The little difference from the former number may be ascribed to the current and unfinished yeares of some of their reignes.

From this time of Sedekias ruine, some begin the reckoning of the seuentie yeares captiuitie; in which time others comprehend all Sedekias raigne, and account the return vnder Cyrus to be fiftie nine yeares after this desolation; and from thence a hundred and eight to the Edict of Darius Nothus; from which time are numbred two hundred fiftie nine to the Dedication of Iudas Maccabeus; and from thence a hundred sixtie two yeares to the birth of Christ. so ^d Scaliger.

It were a worke irksome to my selfe, and tedious to the Reader, to recite the variable opinions of Chronologers, or to traueise their arguments about these points.

To recite here their high Priests and later Kings, with the time of their pontificaltie and reigne, out of Arias Montanus, I hold not unfit. First, Iesus returned with Zorobabel, and built the Temple, whose time of Priest hood, after Scaliger, Iunius, and those that reckon vpon the Edict of Darius Nothus, must needes be very long. To leaue that therefore, his sonne Ioachim succeeded in the Priest hood twentie eight yeares, besides twenty yeares with his father. Eliashib held the Priest hood one and forty yeares; Ioioda twentie fve; Ionathan twentie foure; Seddoa twentie seuen, till the time of Alexander; Omas twentie seuen, after Philo: but Eusebius saith twentie three; Simon Iustus thirteene; Eleazar twenty; Manasses twentie seuen; Omas thirty nine.

Afterwards the Syrian Kings appointed high Priests: of whom Iason was Priest three yeares; Menelaus twelue yeares, in whose seuenth yeare Iudas Maccabeus began to administer the Common-wealth. Ionathas brother of Iudas ruled eighteene yeares; Simon his brother was both Priest and Captaine eight yeares; Ioannes Hircanus his sonne thirtie one. Whereas they had vsed to date their contracts according to the yeares from Alexander, as we reade in the books of Maccabees: when Simon Hircanus was high Priest that order was abolished, & another taken, that euery date should be expressed in such or such a yeare of N. high Priest of the great God. But least the Writing being cancelled, should be neglected, and perhaps the Name of God cast with it on the dung-hill, the wise-men abolished that order on the third of Tisri, which they insti-instituted a holy-day. As for the name of Maccabees, Iunius saith it came from the inscription of those foure letters M. C. B. I. in the banners of those Princes which deliuered the Iewes from the Macedonian thraldome. Scaliger saith, that Judas onely and properly was so called, but by abuse of speech was not onely giuen to all of that kindred, but to all which suffered in those times persecution for Religion; as the seuen brethren, and others. The name Hosmonai began with that Hircanus, Scaliger thinketh, because in the sixty eight Psalme is by the Iewes interpreted Prince.

Aristobulus sonne of Hircanus, first after the captiuitie called himselfe King, and reigned one yeare: Ioannes Alexander his brother twenty seuen: after him his wife Alexandra nine: Hircanus her sonne three moneths: Aristobulus his brother three yeares. Ierusalem was taken of Pompey, and Hircanus recouered the Priesthood, which he held two and twenty yeares: Antigonus by ayde of the Parthians possessed Iudæa five yeares, and in his second yeare Herod was proclaimed King by the Romans, who tooke the Cittie the fift yeare of Antigonus, and raigned foure and thirty.

Scaliger ascribeth to Herods Kingdome the number after Eusebius account, reckoning from the birth of Abram 1977. he died 2016. Archelaus his sonne was made by Augustus Tetrach of Ierusalem 2016. and was banished 2025. Agricola was made King by Caligula 2053. Agrippa his sonne by Claudius 2060. and died 2116. thirtie yeares after the destruction of the Temple. The Dynastie of the Herodians lasted 139. yeares. Thus Scaliger. He attributeth the natiuitie of Christ to the 3948. yeare of the world.

Here we must leaue the Chronologers contending of the yeare of the world, in which this blessed Natiuitie happened; some adding many more yeares, some not allowing so many. It is certaine by the Scripture, that he was borne in the one and forty or two and fortie of Augustus, baptised in the fift of Tiberius, then beginuing to be about thirtie yeares of age: in the thirtie three yeare he was crucified. In the seenty two as Baronius, and seuentie one yeare of Christ, as Buntingus and Linely account, Ierusalem was destroyed by Titus, in the second of Vespasian. Arias Montanus reckoneth this the yeare of the world 3989. and saith, that the Hebrewes reckon it the 3841: which must needs be false. The fault ariseth from the false computation of the Persian and Græcian Monarchies. ^h Iosephus counteth from the time of Herod to the destruction of the Temple twenty eight high Priests, and a hundred and seuen yeares. After Scaliger in his Can. Isagol. 3. this yeare 1612. is the 1614. of Christ, of the world 5461. after the Jewish account of Hillel 5372. of the Armenians 1061. of the Iulian Period 6225. of the Hegira 1021. Anno 4. Olymp. 597. The Dionysian account, which we vsually follow, was not generally receiued till after the time of Charles the great.

Abbi Mosche Mikkotzi,^a in a worke of his, set forth Anno 1236. as Buxdorfius citeth him,^b saith, That the Written Lawe which God gaue to Moses, and Moses to the Israelites, is obscure and hard, because it speaketh some things contradictory (which he speaketh to proue by some places^c mis-interpreted) and because it is imperfect, and containeth not all things meete to be knowne. For who shall teach vs (saith he) the notes of Birds and Beasts? (a Franciscan might answer him^d out of the Legend of S. Francis, the Patron of his Order) who shall teach them the propriety and nature of points, and accents of letters? Also, what fat might be eaten, what not? &c. Many such things are defectiue in the Law, and therefore there is need of some other Exposition of the written Law, whence these things might be learned. This Exposition (forthoother) must be their Talmud, the generation of which Viper, touched before; we will here more fully declare.

They say, that Moses on mount Sinai was not with God forty dayes and forty nights to keepe Geese. And God could haue written those Tables of the Law in an houre, and sent him away with them; so to haue preuented that Idolatry with the Golden Calse. But God brought Moses into a Schoole, and there gaue him the Law in writing first, and then in all that long time expounded the same, shewing the cause, manner, measure, foundation, and intention thereof in the true sense. This vwritten and Verball Law did Moses teach Ioshua, he the Elders; from these it was deriued to the Prophets. After Zachary and Malachy, the last of these, it came to the great Sanhedrin, and after them, by Tradition from father to sonne.

And Rabbi Bechai saith, That Moses learned the Law written; in the day time; and this Traditionall Law by night: for then he could not see to write. Rabbi Mosche Mikkotzi sheweth the cause why God would deliuer the same by mouth onely, and not in writing, lest (I wisse) the Gentiles should peruert this, as they did the other which was written. And in the day of Iudgement, when God shall demand who are the Israelites, the Gentiles shall make challenge, because of the Law written, but the Jewes onely shall be accepted, as hauing this Simani, this verball exposition. God also (say they) gaue them Chachamim, Wise-men, authors of diuers ordinances amongst them, as to blesse God at the Sunne-rising and Sunne-setting; and of Schooles where children should be taught the Law of Moses in euery Citie, and where the Law of Moses should be read weekly; and that the Israelites should not eate or drinke with the Gentiles, nor what they had dressed; after the example of Daniel, &c.

But when the Temple was destroyed, and the Jewes carried away captiues, then arose vp Rabbi Iuda Hammashi, who is called (for his humility and godlinesse) Our great Master; to whom God procured such fauour in the eyes of Antoninus the Emperour, that he had authoritie to assemble out of all places of the Empire the most learned Jewes, to consult in this their almost desperaue estate, what course to take for the preseruacion of the Law amongst the people. And although this Kabala or Law, giuen by word of mouth, might not be committed to writing; yet in consideration and commiseration of their miserie, whatsoeuer thereof was remaining in memory, he writ in a booke which he called Mischna, that is, a Deuteronomie, or Law reiterated, containing sixe summes, diuided into sixtie lesse parts or tractates, and these into five hundred thirtie two chapters. Thus farre R Mikkotzi.

In this booke were containd the Traditions and ordinances of the Elders, according to the prescript whereof, the Iewish Synagogue was to be ordered; and it was receiued and approued of the Iewish Synagogue, in the yeare of Christ 219. Some yeares after, Rabbi Iochanan, Rector of the Vniuersity of Ierusalem for the space of eightie yeares, enlarged that booke, and called it the Talmud of Ierusalem, which for the difficultie and obscuritie thereof was not had in such estimation as the former, nor is it at this day. After him, Rabbi Assè read in the Schooles those Tractates, handling euery yeare two of them; so in the sixtie yeares of his Rectorship, he went twice through it all; but finished in writing onely five and thirtie Tractates. After him in the yeare 427. Maremar was made Rector, to whom Mar the sonne of Rabbi Assè adioyned himselfe. These perfected that which Rabbi Assè had left vnfinished. And that which they thus added was called Gemara, or the complement.

Thus the Mischnaios, and Gemara made vp the whole Talmud. These two spent in their labours threescore and thirteene yeares. And so in the yeare of our Lord 500. the Talmud was perfected, receiued for authentricall, and called the Babylonian Talmud, according to which the Jewes to this day behaue themselves in cases spiritual and temporall, accounting it as their Ciuill and Canon law. The Jewes ascribe the Ierusalem Talmud to the yeare of the world 4229. the other 4265.

And this is that Law verball, or deliuered by word of mouth, which is equalled to the other, without which the written Law cannot be conceiued or vnderstood: The joy of the heart (saith ^m Aben Ezra) and refreshing of the bones; betwixt which and the written Law he can finde noⁿ difference, but being deliuered to them from their Elders. In one of their booke^s,^o printed at Cremona 1556. is this sentence. Thinke not that the Lawe written is the foundation, but rather the Lawe Traditionall is the right foundation: and according to this Law did God^p make couenant with the Israelites; for God foresaw their captiuitie in time to come, and therefore left the people, among whom they should dwell, should write out and interpret this Law, as they did the other, God would not haue it written. And although in processe of time this Law be now written, yet it is not explained by the Christians, because it is hard, and requirerh a sharp wit. That which is spoken of the Law, is applyed to commend their Talmud: If you can frustrate (saith the Lord) my Couenant with the day and the night, that is, according to their booke Tanchuma, when you will no longer learne and obserue the Talmud. And in the^r Talmud is thus recorded; To studie and reade in the Bible is a vertue, and not a vertue, that is, a small vertue: but to learne their Mischna or Talmud text is a vertue worthy reward; and to learne by heart Gemaram (the complement of the Talmud) is a vertue so great that none can be greater. The^{*} Wise men (say they) are more excellent then the Prophets; and the wordes of the Scribes more louely then those of the Prophets: and therefore the one forced to confirme them with miracles, the other simply to be beleued, as is said Deut. 17. 10.

Hence it is that the Rabbins are more exercised in their Talmud, then in the Bible; as on which their faith is founded more then on the other: and according to this doe they expound the Scripture. And as their Talmud is most certaine, so also is that (whatsoever) exposition of their Rabbins, according to the same. Thus saith Rabbi Isaac Abuhabb, whatsoever our Rabbins in their Sermons and mysticall explanations haue spoken, we are no lesse firmly to beleue then the Law of Moses.

And if any thing therein seeme repugnant to our sense, we must impute it to the weakenesse of our conceit, and not to their wordes: as for example: it is written in the Talmud, ^t that a Rabbin once preached, that the time would come, when a woman should every day be deliuered of her burthen; according to the saying, Ierem. 31. 7. Concepit statimque peperit. One not beleuing this, the Rabbin answered, that he spake not of a common woman, but of a Henne, which should every day lay an egge.

Such are their expositions, I know not, whether fitter to be heard of Heraclitus, or Democritus, more lamentable or ridiculous; and yet is it there said, that their wordes are the wordes of the liuing God, whereof not one shall fall to the ground; and must not be derided eyther in word or thought, whether ye respect the persons, or works of their Rabbins. The refore in a Dutch booke printed in Hebrew characters at Cracouia, 1597. it is written, that the Iewes are bound to say Amen, not only to their Prayers, but to all their Sermons and Expositions, according to the Prophet Esay, ^t Open the gates, the people cometh (schomay amunim) which keepeth righteousness, that is (say they) which saying Amen, beleueth all things which the wise Rabbins haue written. And if any be so simple, that he cannot vnderstand, yet must he beleue.

When two Rabbins (saith their Talmud) maintaine contrary opinions, yet must not men contradict them, because both of them hath his Kabala or Tradition for the same: and this is a rule in their Rabbins, Remember rather the word of the Scribes, than of the Law of Moses. R. Salomon Iarchi vpon Deuteronomie, chap. 17. verse 12. Thou shalt not decline from the worde that they shall shew thee, to the right hand or to the left, hath these wordes; And when he saith vnto thee, Of the right hand, that it is the left; and, Of the left hand, that it is the^u right, thou must beleue it; how much more if he saith, The right hand is the right hand &c. They haue a storie in their^x Legend for the same, That there came a Goi, a Gentile to Sammai, and asked how manie Lawes they had, who answered two, a Written and a Verball. He replied, The written Law I acknowledge no lesse then thou; make me therefore a Iew, and teach me the other. Sammai refused; and he went to Hillel (these both liued a little before the time of Christ) who admitted and instructed him; after he bade him pronounce the letters in order, Aleph, Beth, Gimel, &c. which he did. The next day he bade him say the

the same letters backward, Gimel, Beth, Aleph. The Gentile said, Rabbi, yesterday you taught mee otherwise: and yet, said Hillel you belceue mee, and so learne of me; which you must no lesse doe in the Traditionall Lawe, belceuing all that is therein.

I had almost thought in reading of this Hillel, I had beene reading the life and precepts of a Ignatius Leiola the Iesuite-founder (so like is the storie, though the names differ) who practised himselfe, and trained vp others. Ad sapientem hanc sanctamque stultitiam caeca, ut ipse appellabat, obedientie, saith Masseus in a large Discourse hereof: Pauls Omnia probate was in those dayes; but prudentiam non obedientis, sed imperantis esse respondit Ignatius: negabat obedientis nomine dignum haberi oportere, qui legitime superiori non cum voluntate iudicium quoque submitteret: in superiorum insu examinando esse arrogantiam. And thus writeth Ignatius himselfe: Perit celebris illa Obedientia caeca simplicitas, cum apud nos ipsos in quastionem vocamus rectene praecipatur an secus: perit humilitas, perit in rebus arduis fortitudo, &c. To obey in outward execution and effecting the command of a Superiour, may proue no vertue of patience, but a cloake of malice, a very imperfect perfection, not worthy the name of vertue, vntill the inward affect be ioyned to the outward effect: neyther is this a whole sacrifice, except hee not onely will the same, but indge, and be of the same sentence with his superiour: he must in the person of his superiour beholde Christ, who can neyther deceiue nor be deceiued; ready alway to defend, neuer to mislike his command; yea, whatsoeuer his superiour enioyneth he must accept as the precept and will of God, and as he is ready to belceue the Catholique faith, so to be carried without further search, with a blinde force of the will, desirous to obey. Thus did Abraham when hee was commanded to offer Isaac; and therefore thus must the Iesuite do when an Ignatian Superiour commands, or else he is no Holocaust for the Leiolan Altar. Euen as a Car-kasse, saith the Iesuiticall Constitution, which will bee drawne any way, or a staffe in an olde mans hand plyant as hee pleaseth: so, and so must our waxen Iesuites be; Asses without vnderstanding; nay, carkasses without life, staues and flaues and blockes, guided by their guides, though it bee to cracke the Crownes of Kings.

What Diuell of Hell could euer haue taught murders and treasons to be tolerable, nay commendable, nay meritorious, if his Scholer should not first passe: this Iesuiticall Retrograde, from a Christian and a man, with the losse of Religion and Reason, to become (as these Rome-Rabbins terme it) a carkasse indeede, or a staffe in the hand of that olde one, which (like the Egyptian Inchanters) he might make a Serpent at his pleasure? But let the truch preuaile, and Moses rod eate vp these Serpent-rodde of the Egyptians. And what more could olde Hillel say to his Disciples? Or doth God himselfe exact? Bernard throughout his seventh Epistle, teacheth more soundly of the Pope and those religious Superiours; Nec dico praepositorum mandata esse a subditis iudicanda, ubi nihil inbere deprehenduntur diuinis contrarium institutis. Sed necessarium esse dico & prudentiam qua aduertatur, si quid aduersetur, & libertatem qua ingenue contemnatur. Hanc ego nunquam amuler obedientiam: talem mihi nunquam libeat modestiam, vel potius molestiam imitari. Talis siquidem obedientia omni est contemptu deterior: talis quoque modestia ultra omnem modum extenditur. ----- O patientia, omni digna impatientia! But to leaue this question and our Iesuites till fitter time; the Iewish Rabbins auerre, that whofoeuer moecketh or contemneth their sayings, shall be punished in hote and boyling Zoah, or excrement in hell. And thus much of their Talmud, the originall and authoritie thereof. More modest yet were those Fathers of Trent, that would ascribe but equalitie of reuerence and respect to their Traditions with the Scripture. (With equall affection and esteeme (say they) we receiue and reuerence Traditions and the bookes of the olde and new Testament:) which must needs acknowledge themselves beholding to them; lest if they complaine they follow not their Traditionary Masters in making them sit lower: and they haue their Anathema as ready as the Rabbins their Zoah; and their Traditions, Canons, and Constitutions must interpret as well as their Kabala.

But before we leaue their Talmud (thus highly esteemed amongst them) I thought meete also to speake more largely both of that and of their learned Rabbins, out of Pe- trus Galatinus, Sixtus Senensis, Paulus Ricus, Rambam, and others that write thereof.

The Traditional Law they call Tora scebeal pe, that is, the Law which is in the mouth, or deliuered by word of mouth. Rabbi Moses Aegyptius telleth the passages thereof thus; Ioshua receiuing it of Moses, deliuered it to Phineas the sonne of Eleazar the Priest: Phineas to Heli the Priest: he to Samuel the Prophet: Samuel to Dauid: he to Achias the Prophet, who deliuered the same to Elias, the teacher of Elisba: Elisba or Elisauus to Ioiada the Priest: this Ioiada to Zacharias: Zacharias to Hosca, and he to Amos: Amos to Esay, of whom Micheas receiued it, and of him Ioel: Nabum from him, and from him againe Habacuck, who taught it Sephanie the Instrueter of Ieremie, of whom Baruch the Scribe learned it: Baruch taught it Ezra. Vntill this time the Iewes had none other but the written Scripture.

Now for their Scriptures; they call the same Arbaa Ueefrim (that is, the foure and twentie) of the number of the bookes after their computation, all which they reduce to foure partes; The first of which they call Tora, the Lawe, or Humas the Penta-teuch or fiue bookes: and they call euery booke after the first wordes in the beginning thereof. The second part hath foure bookes; Ioshua, Iudges, Samuel and Kings. The third part comprehendeth foure other, which they call the last Prophets; Esay, Ieremie, Ezekiel, and the booke of the twelue smaller Prophets. The fourth part is called Chetrunim, and hath eleuen bookes, Paralipomenon or Chronicles, the Psalmes, the Prouerbes, Iob, Ruth, Ecclesiastes, Lamentations, Canticles, Ester, Daniel, Ezra, which they make one with Nehemia. Ecclesiasticus, Iudith and Tobias, and the first booke of Maccabees they haue, but reckon not among the foure and twentie. The third and fourth bookes of Ezra I haue not seene in Hebrew; but some of them say, that they are lately found at Constantinople: but the second of Maccabees, and the booke of Philo (called the Wisdome of Salomon) I neuer saw but in Greeke, nor those additions to Daniel. But after the Babylonian captiuitie, Ezra writing out the Law, which had bene burned in the destruction of the City, other wise-men writ out the Exposition of the Law, lest, if another destruction should happen, the same might per- rish. And from that time, all the Wise-men, which are called the men of the Great Synagogue, in their teaching the Law, deliuered the same both in word and writing, vntill the Talmud was written. It was then (saith Picus) in seuentie bookes, after the number of the seuentie Elders.

These mens authoritie hath the next place to the Prophets. And are in this order mentioned in their Talmud. Ezra deliuered the same to Simon the Priest, called Iadudus, who was honoured of Alexander. This Simon deliuered this explanation to Antigonus: Antigonus to Iosephus the sonne of Iohn, and to Iosephus the sonne of Iehezzer: They to Nitens Arbulensis, and Ioshua the sonne of Peratria, whose Auditor the Iewes falsly affirme that Jesus our blessed Sauour was, which liued an hundred and tenne yeares after. Those two deliuered the same to Iuda the sonne of Tibens, and Simon the sonne of Sata. These to Samaia and Abatalon: and they to Hillel and Samaus. Hillel flourished an hundred yeares before the destruction of the second Temple, and had eightie schollers or disciples, all of excellent wit and learning: thirty of them for their excellence, had the Diuinitie descending vpon them as Moses; and other thirtie obtained that the Sunne should stand still for them, as Ioshua: the rest were accounted meane. Of these, the greatest was Ionathas sonne of Vziel, the least Iohn the sonne of Zachens, which yet knew the Scripture and Talmud, and all things else to the examples of Foxes, and Narratiours of Diuels.

diuision into Chapters was first by St Langton Archb of Cant. for olde books, are after the Canon of Euseb. C. R. * The Talmud blameth Helisus for too much seuerity to Geheri, and R. Iosben Prabeia, for the like toward Iesus of Nazareth who had followed this his Master to Alexandria, being persecuted by King Iannai, who returning to Ierusalem, and commending his Inne, that his Scholler thinking he had spoken of his Hostesse, said, She had round eyes: What Verlet (saide he R.) hast thou such a thought? and presently commanded him to be proclaymed Anathema, with the sound of 400. Trumpets, nor would after vpon his repentance admit him; whercupon he became an Idolater, a Magician, &c. This Iannai was Hircanus sonne of Simon 110. yeares before our Sauour, and therefore was another: or else this is a malicious deuise of the Talmudist, which confuteth it selfe with the foolish computation of time,

Hillel and Simeon deliuered this explanation to this John, and to Simeon the Iust, sonne of the said Hillel, who after receiued Christ in his armes, and prophecied of him in the Temple. Rabbi Moses proceedeth, and saith, that Simeon taught Garaaliel, Pauls Master; and Gamaliel instructed his sonne Rabban Simeon, who was slaine of Hadrian the Emperour, after hee had taught his sonne Iudas, whom the Iewes for his Learning and Holinesse call Rabbenu Haccados, (that is, our holy Master) of which honourable name there had beene another in the time of the Roman Consuls. This Simeon and his father Gamaliel were two of those seuen, to which the title of Rabban is by the Iewes ascribed, in the posteritie of Hillel: which is the highest name of honour amongst them, and giuen to none before them, but Simeon the sonne of Hillel, and father of Gamaliel, which in likelihood was hee, whose nunc dimittis is neuer like to be dismissed out of the Christian holies. It is a more glorious title then Rab or Rabbi: and this later also more excellent then Rab the former. But all of them Buxdorsius thinkes, are not ancients then the times of Christ: nor were any of the elder Prophets so entituled. But Rabbi in Israel, and Rab and Mar in Babylon, began to be Doctoral titles about that time: of which creation by imposition of hands is spoken before. These for the most part, besides almost infinite others of their hearers, haue left many things written of the explanation of the Law; of which the Talmud was compacted. Of the vnreasonable absurdities and impious blasphemies of the Talmud, howeouer abominable in themselves, yet let it not bee irksome to the Reader to see some mentioned, therein to obserue the depth of diuine vengeance, which in this blinded Nation we may heare and feare. For who would thinke it possible that any could entertaine in his heart that which there they haue written of God? as, that * before the creation of this world to keepe himselfe from idlenesse hee made and marred many other worlds: that he spends three houres euery day in reading the Iewish law? that Moses one day ascending to heauen found him writing accents therein: that God euery day maketh deuout prayers: that God hath a place a-part wherein he afflicteth himselfe with weeping, for bringing so much euill on the Iewes: that euery day he putteth on their Tephilin and Zizis, and so falleth downe and prayeth: that as oft as he remembereth their miseries, hee lets fall two teares into the Ocean, and knocks his breast with both his hands: that the last three houres of the day he recreated himselfe in playing with the Fish Leuiathan; which once in his anger he slew and poudred for the feast, whereof you shall after a heare: that hee created the Element of fire on the Sabbath day: that the RR. one day reasoning against R. Eliezer, because God with a voice from heauen interposed his sentence for Eliezer, the other RR. anathematized God, who thereat smiling, said, My children haue ouer-come me: But I am wearie to adde therest of their restlesse impieties against the Almighty. Neither haue the Creatures escaped them: Thus the Talmud telleth, That God once whipped Gabriel for a great fault with a whip of fire: that as Adam, before Eue was made, had carnally vsed both Males and Females of other Creatures; so the Rauen^b which Noe sent out of the Arke was zealous of Noah lest he should lie with his Mate: that Iobs storie was fained: that Dauid sinned not in his murther and adulterie, and they which thinke he did sinne, are Heretikes: that vnnaturall copulation with a mans wife is lawfull; that hee is unworthy the name of a Rabbine which hateth not his enemie to death: that God commanded them by any manner of meane to spoile the Christians of their goods, and to vse them as beasts: yea, they may kill them, and burne their Gospels, which they entitle, Iniquitie reuealed. Iniquitie reuealed indeede is the declaration of these things: as of their opinion of the soule; if it sinne in one body it passeth into a second: if there also, into a third: if it continue sinning, it is cast into Hell: the soule of Abel passed into Seth, and the same after into Moses: the soules of the vnlearned shall neuer recouer their bodies. Two RR. euery weeke on Friday created two Calues, and then ate them. Nothing ought to be eaten by euen numbers, but by vneuen; wherewith God is pleased. Perhaps they had read in Virgil, Numero Deus impari gaudet; but this is common to all Magicians. And what doe I wearie you and my selfe, anticipating the following discourse, wherein we shall haue further occasion to relate the like absurdities? which yet if any denie, they say he denyeth God.

AND THEIR KABALISTS.

OF the Authentike Authors of the Jewes before Christs time, Galatinus further addeth the threescore and twelue Interpreters, who are said by Ptolemies direction to be separated in threescore and twelue Cels, or severall Roomes; and each interpreting by himselfe, did all agree in wordes, order, and time of their translation, exactly. * But howsoever Iosephus, writing in Greeke, boasteth of this translation, yet the Jewes (I know not whether of envie at the effect thereof among the Christians) keepe the eight day of Tebeth fasting, for griefe of that Greeke translation. Iesus Sirach mentioneth his Grand-father and other writers. And an hundred and sixtie yeares before Christ flourished, Aristobulus, a Jew, and Peripatetike Philosopher: who by Ptolemens Philometers perswasion writ Commentaries on Moses, and spake many things of the Messias: as did also Rabbi Iodam, and R. Ibba not long after: and after them, R. Simeon ben Iohai. After these, Rabbenu Haccados writ a booke called Gale-razeya, that is, the revealer of secrets, very diuinely vtering many things of Christ. The like did Rabbi Nabumias sonne of Haccana, both expounding the Prophets, and affirming that the Messias was to come within fiftie yeares; and writ an Epistle thereof to his sonne, of whom he hoped that hee should liue to see him. About the same time (two and fortie yeares before Christ) Ionathas the sonne of Uziel, and Scholer (as I said) of Hillel, translated all the old Testament into Chaldee, and expounded the same so, that it might seeme rather a Glosse and exposition, then interpretation. This the Hebrewes call Targum, that is, the Translation, which hath with them no lesse credit then the Text it selfe, and thereby expound all hard places of the Text. They tell therefore, that at that time wherein he laboured this worke, if a flie or such creature did flie ouer him or his paper, presently, without any harme to the paper, it was consumed with fire from Heauen. And although his translation of the Pentateuch be most rare, yet I once saw it: for that which is most common was the worke of Ankelos a Profelyte, whom the Hebrewes affirme to be the sonne of Titus the Emperour, who also turned all the Bible into Chaldee, and is of no lesse reputation with the Jewes, then the former, and is also called Targum.

After the Times of Christ, Philo and Iosephus are famous: and after the Resurrection of Christ the Jewes were of three sorts; some true beleeuers, others absolute deniers, the third would haue the Christian Religion and the Jewish Ceremonies to be conioyned in equall obseruation; against which third sort the first Councell, Act. 15. was summoned.

The moderne Jewes insist principally on the literall sense of Scripture; the Elder sought out a spirituall and mysticall sense, accounting this a great matter, the litetall but small, like to a candle of small value ^a, with the light whereof, the other (as a pearle hidden in a darke roome) is found. The Talmudists followed the allegoricall sense; the Cabalists, the Anagogicall.

As concerning this Cabala, in old times ^b they communicated not that skill to any, but to such as were aged and learned; and therefore nothing thereof, or very little, is found written of the Ancient, except of Rabbi Simeon Ben Iohai. But the Doctors of the later Jewes, lest that learning should perish, haue left somewhat thereof in writing, but so obscurely, that few know it, and they which doe, account it a great secret, and hold it in great regard. So saith Elas ^c: in the bookes of the Kabala are containd the secrets of the Law and the Prophets, which man receiued from the mouth of man, vnto our ^d Master Moses (on him be peace) and therefore it is so called, and is diuided into two parts, Speculatiue and Practike. But I am not worthy to explaine this businesse, and by reason of my sinnes haue not learned this wisdom nor knowne this knowledge of those Saints. The word Cabala signifieth a receiving, and in that respect

may be supplied to all their Traditionall receipts; but in vse (which is the Law of speech) it is appropriated to that facultie, which (as ^e Ricinus describeth it) by the type of the Mosaicall law insinuateth the secrets of diuine and humane things: and because it is not grounded on reason, nor deliuered by writing, by the faculty of the hearer receiued, it is called Cabala. Or (if you had rather haue it in ^a Reuchlin's wordes) it is a Symbolicall receiuing of diuine Reuelation deliuered; to the holloine contemplation of God, and of the separated formes; and they which receiue it are called Cabalici, their Disciples Cabalæi, and they which any way imitate them, Cabalixæ. The Talmudists therefore and the Cabalists are of two faculties, both agreeing in this; that they grow from Tradition whereunto they give credit without rendering any reason; herein differing, that the Cabalist as a super subtile transcendent, mounteth with all his industrie and intention from this sensible World vnto that other intellectuall: but the ^a grosser Talmudist abideth in this, and if at any time hee considereth of God or the blessed Spirits, yet it is with relation to his workes and their functions, not in any abstract contemplation, bending his whole studie to the explanation of the Law according to the intent of the Law-giuer, considering what is to be done, what eschewed; whereas the Cabalists most indeuouereth himselfe to contemplation; leauing the care of publike and priuate affaires to the Talmudists, and reseruing only to themselves those things which pertaine to the tranquillitie of the minde. As therefore the minde is more excellent then the body, so you must thinke the Cabalist superior to the Talmudist. For example, In the beginning God created Heauen and Earth, saith Moses: Heauen ^b here after the Talmudist is all that part of the World which is about the Moone, and all beneath it, Earth: also by Heauen hee vnderstandeth forme, and by Earth, matter; the composition whereof he effected not by labour of the hand, but by that ninefold Oracle of his word: for so often is it mentioned, ^c and God said; likewise he findeth the foure Elements in those wordes; darkenesse, spirit, waters, drie land. But the Cabalist frameth to himselfe two Worlds, the Visible and Inuisible; Sensible and Mentall; Materiall and Ideall; Superior and inferior: and accordingly gathereth out of the former wordes, God created Heauen and Earth, That he made the highest and lowest things, meaning by the highest the immateriall, by the lowest this materiall; and this is gathered out of the first letter, Beth, which in numbring signifieth two, and insinuateth there these two Worlds. Yea they also finde two Paradises, and two Hells, one in this world, and the other in the other and future, for the body here, and the soule hereafter. Euen as, saith R. Saadia, the white of the Egge comprehendeth the yolke, so that first intelligible world infoldeth the second: in this are nine Spheres, moued of the immoueable Empyrean, in that nine Orders of Angels, (^d Ricinus reckoneth ten; Haias, Hekadesch, Offanin, Erelim, Hasmalim, Seraphim, Malachim, Elohim, bene Elohim, Cherubim). Some Diuines count them thus out of Dionysius; Seraphim, Cherubim, Throni, Dominations, Virtutes, Potestates, Principatus, Archangeli, Angeli: The tenth Order the Peripatetikes terme Anamastica, the Cabalists Ischim, that is, Men;) moued of the vnchangeable God, who in vn moueable silence first created altogether, and after by nine times speaking moued and promoted each thing to its own distinction. The Talmudists dreame of an earthly Messias to free them from this their slauerie: the Cabalists (if our Cabalists haue not seene these things through spectacles) expect a spirituall deliuerie from sinne. Doubtlesse they deliuer many excellent assertions, howsoeuer their collection seemeth curious and vncertaine, gathering the same on grounds without ground, beyond all Sense, Reason, Scripture, and therefore often leauened with other superfluous absurdities. And better may it serue to conuince the Iewes with testimonies of their owne, then for an instruction to vs, who can not enforce arguments out of Symbolicall senses. If any bee in loue with these mysteries, let him resort to Paulus Ricinus, his Theorimes to Iohn Reuchlin, to Iohannes Picus and his Commenter Archangelus, to Abrahams supposed Booke of the creation ^e to R. Ioseph Castiliensis his Porta lucis, which Ricinus hath also translated and epitomised, to Galatinus and others ^f. Commendable is the labour of some of these, and of many others ^g both conuerted Jewes, which haue sought to reclaim their peruerse brethren, and of our owne, Morn. de Verit. C. R. as Mornans, Gregentius, Pomeranus, and out of whom, they which please, may borrow arguments to convince the Jewish incredulitie, and stubbornenesse, and to confound them by their owne testimonies, both from these elder Writers about mentioned, and also from the later. So great is the Truth, and so mightily it prevaileth, that it extorteth not only her owne weapons, vsurped and stollen by her enemies: but their owne also, wherewith they come armed against the Truth, and retorteth them on themselves; as David serued the Philistims: * Who cut off Goliaths head, with Goliaths sword: as ^a Benaiah (one of his Worthies) slew an Egyptian, a man of great stature five cubites long, and in the Egyptians hand was a speare, like a Weavers beame; and he went downe to him with a staffe, and plucked the speare out of the Egyptians hand, and ^b slew him with his owne speare. Thus did ^b Dioxippus the Champion (if forrainers delight any) deale with Horratus the Macedonian in a set combate: and thus hath our ^c Worthie and Champion come often into the field against the Popish Giants, armed inwardly with Truth, outwardly with Arguments, wrested (without wresting) from his enemies.

He, in his Latine, and English workes, hath obserued the two-fold rule of Policie: Diuide and Rule, against the Papists: Unite and Rule, for the Protestants: Which Brerely would haue brought into the like bryers. But those his troupes are shewed not to be Men, but Apes; like those that held Alexanders Armie in suspence: and like Semramis Elephants, which were but stuffed Oxe-hides, kill-cow-frayes. But Malte virtute esto (worthie Deane.) Euen so goe on still, and fight the Lords battels: that thy Sparta (so happily vnderaken) still adorne, and shew the confusion of Babels babblers, Diuide that Societie, which now in their last age haue hissed with their forked, venomous Tongues; feared and enuyed at home, for their arrogance, no lesse then hated abroad, for their heresies and treasons.

Let St. Iohns, Let England, and the whole Church still sing the ten thousands, that thou doest thus slay with their owne weapons; and let the Apostolicall Truth escape, whiles her Apostaticall enemies, the Pharisees and Sadducees, are set together by the eares. A happie and diuine stratagme, which (not to detract from others iust praises, in this or other parts of the battell) had bene singled, and singularly managed by thy prowess, which speakest (more iustly then he which vsed those words) to these Babylonians, ^d in their owne language, that they may eat their owne dung, and drinke their owne pisse together.

^e Pag. 342. Doctor White also, in (that Lactea via, his Milke-white) ^e Way to the true Church, chalengeth in all points of Poperie both Authoritie of Scriptures, Fathers, and later Romanists, to produce the same against the Trent-Councell, and the Iesuites.

But how hath that fatall name of Babel confounded mee? Truly the likenesse of these Traditionaries, Cabalists, muddie Talmudists, and Legendaries (as will appeare to an easie obseruer and comparer of this ensuing Historie to their practise) which haue bene mustered from the Easterne and Westerne ^f Babel, and the like manner of their confusion, hath almost made me forget the Historie and my selfe, but neuer a whit the Truth. And this will be further manifested in the rest of this Booke, where their superstitious deuotion is related.

As for those testimonies of the Iewes against themselves, besides the Scriptures (which (in regard of the true sense) the veile ouer their hearts, will not suffer them to reade, but it is a sealed Booke vnto them, and they haue left the riches thereof vnto vs, as ^g the Aramites left their Tents, with their horses and treasure, to the pined Israelites.) Their other Authors are so plaine and plentifull in the mysteries of our Religion, as I know not whether it cause greater pleasure to reade their writings, or astonishment and wonder at the Nation; so stricken with madnesse, and with blindness, and with astonishment of heart, since they haue shut their eyes against the Sunne of righteousnes; on whom that threatned plague is come, ^h Thou shalt groape at Noone-dates, as the blinde doth groape in darknesse. For out of their Talmud-Authors is plainly deliuered the mysterie of the Trinitie, the Incarnation of the Sonne of GOD, his two Natures, his Birth of a Virgin, his Spirituall Kingdome, the time of his Comming, the truth of his Prophecies, and power of his Miracles; the Redemption of mankind by his Death, his Crucifying, Descent, Resurrection and Ascension: and that their Nation was to be reiected, the Old Law to cease, New to succeed, &c. All which as they agree vnto that sweet and blessed Name, and Person of Iesus (which name, and that of Emanuel, is also found in their writings) so do they argue the severitie of Gods Iudgements, when men will not beleue the Truth, that by the efficacie of error, they shall haue eyes and see not, eares and heare not (neither ours nor their owne) as Paul, and Christ himsele often told them. But those particulars, as rather appertaining to disputation, then Historic, (and therefore too much impertinent to our purpose) the desirous Readers may at large finde in Morney and Galatinus, not to mention ^a others.

Death,

The witnesse of Iosephus, being one, whose name we often vse in this Historic, may iustly challenge me, if I should omit him, especially seeing he liued in the very daies of the Apostles, who, as he witnesseth of Iohn Baptist, and of many other things mentioned in the Gospell, fully agreeing therewith: so concerning our Lord and Sauour, hath this testimony.

^b In the time of Tiberius, there was one Iesus, a wise Man (if at least-wise he was to be called a man) who was a worker of great Miracles, and a Teacher of such as loue the Truth; and had many followers, as well of Iewes as of Gentiles. This was Christ. Neuerthelesse being accused vnto Pilate, by the Chiefe of the Iewes, he was crucified. But yet for all that, those which had loued Him from the beginning, ceased not to continue still. For he shewed himsele aliue vnto them three daies after his Death, as the Prophets had foretold of him, both this and diuers other things. And euen vnto this day doe those continue still, which after his name are called Christians. Thus much Iosephus. Thus did the Truth force him to confesse, whose Historic of the destruction of his Nation, what is it but as a Commentarie on Iesus Prophecie therof, and their fearefull imprecation, c His blood be vpon vs and our children, shewing that the wrath of God was come vpon them to the vtmost?

From Mount Oliuet, where Iesus was first apprehended, and where last those blessed feet touched the earth (as if there Mercie had left a print of Iustice) was Jerusalem besieged, and at their Feast of Passouer, (when they had crucified Christ) they were cooped vp, as it were, assembled by Diuine Iustice from all quarters to destruction, together with that their Citie, where they had slaine the Lord. But of this before. It will not be vnfaourie to the Reader, obseruing herein Diuine vengeance, to relate as vnfaourie a tale as euer was deuised, which their Talmud telleth in derogation of *Christ*s Miracles, in which I know not whether to call them Beasts or Diuels, so witlesse, and withall so wickeed is their blasphemie. For sooth in Salomons Temple there was ^d (say they) a certaine stone of very rare vertue, wherein Salomon, by his singular wisdom, had ingrauen the very true name of God, which it was lawfull for euery man to reade, but not to conne by heart, nor to write out. And at the Temple doore were two Lions tied at two chaines, which rored terribly, that the feare thereof made him to forget the name that hed committed the same to memorie, and him to burst asunder in the middest, that had put it in writing. But Iesus, the Sonne of Marie, say they, regarding neither the Curse annexed to the Prohibition, nor the roaring of the Lions, writ it out in a Bill, and went his way with it ioyfully. And lest he might be taken with the thing about him he had a little opened the skinne of his legge, and put it in there, and afterwards wrought his miracles by the vertue of that name. I should be almost as absurd as they, if I should dispute against it, seeing in this, and most of their braine-sicke dreames, the very recitation is sufficient refutation.

^d Vicf. de Carben. lib. 1. c. 13. The Iewes haue a horrible and blasphemous curse directed against our blessed Sauour: whom they will not call by his name fully pronounced, but abbreviated with relation to the curse. Of which (for I loath to mention it) let him, which will see Bux. de abbreviaturis Hebr. ^e Drus. et. ap. sententia.

It cannot be denied that there haue beene many Rabbines very learned, as R. Moses Egyptius, Abben Tibbon. But he which will haue notice of the RR. and their workes, let him reade Buxdorfus and his Bibliotheca Rabbiniça, printed this last Mart: yet euen the best of them haue much chaffe, which needs much fanning from the corne. Many wise sentences and proverbs haue beene by ^e Drusius and others gathered out of some of their workes, which would, as iewels, haue beautified this Discourse; as these for a taste. Vowes are the hedge or wall of defence to holinesse; Tithes are the same to riches: he which encreaseth his flesh, encreaseth wormes. Who is wise? he which learneth of euery one? Who is valiant? he which bridleth his affections: Who is rich? he which is content with his portion: If I care not for my selfe, who shall care for mee? And if I, what am I? and if not now, when? The day is short, and the worke much, and the labourers slow, and the wages great; and the housholder calleth vpon vs. But me thinkes you call vpon me to proceed.

OF THE SCRIPTURES AND THEIR INTERPRETATIONS.

BEfore we shake hands with the learned Writers of the Iewes, it is not vnmeet, in my opinion, heere to meet with some question which some haue moued, concerning them and their dealing in and with the Scriptures. For since that the Councell of Trent hath decreed, in the yeare 1546. both the diuine authoritie of Scriptures Canonical, to the Apocrypha-bookes, which the Iewes receiue not, nor euer did; and hath made the vulgar Translation ^f Authentick in publike Lectures, Disputations, Preachings and Expositions, that none, vnder any pretence whatsoever, shall presume to reiect it: it is wonder to see how eagerly (that I say not impudently) diuers of them haue sought to slander the original Text, and haue blamed, as Authors thereof, in the New Testament, Heretikes, and in the Old, Iewes; couering their malice to vs with pretence of the malice of Heretikes and Iewes, and forgetting the true Rule, That it is a shame to belie the Diuell. Thus haue Canus and Pintus, and Gregorius de Valentia, Sacroboscus, and others; traduced the Iewes in this behalfe; themselues refuted by their owne (which yet by consequent ouerthrow that former Decree) Sixtus Senensis, Ribera, Cardinall Bellarmino himselfe, Andradus, Andreas Masius, Arius Montanus, Isaac Leuita, &c. Besides, of ours many, and especially our owne learned Countymen, Whitaker, Reynolds, Morton, &c.

^h Bellarmino hath both taught vs the vanitie of their opinion, that hold, That the Scriptures were all lost in the Babylonian Captiuitie, and were by Ezra renewed miraculously (who is rather ⁱ commended for his industrie in interpreting and obseruing them, and for ordering and compacting them in one Volume, then for such needlesse reuelation, to finde that which was neuer lost: an Author rather, as ^k Hierome hath obserued, of the present Hebrew Letters, then of their ancient Scriptures, and hath also proued the absurditie of their conceit, that imagine the Hebrew Fountaines corrupted. First, by ^l the Argument of Origen and Hierome, That such corruption must haue bene either before or after Christ: if that; Christ would haue reprobud and not commended their Scriptures to their search: if this; how commeth it, that the testimonies, cited by him and his Apostles, are found now in Moses and the Prophets, as they were then cited? Secondly, out of Augustine, That it is not likely they would put out both their eyes (in depriuing their Scriptures of truth) that they might put out one of ours: nor was it possible that such a generall conspiracie could be made. Thirdly, from their more then reuerent estimation of their Scriptures, for which they would die, if it were possible, an hundred deathes, and euen still (as Isaac answereth B. Lindan his Scholler) they proclaime a Fast to expiate, if by some accident that Booke but falls to the ground. Fourthly, some places in the Hebrew are more strong against the Iewes then our Translations are, and the Prophecies, which make most against them, remaine there vncorrupted. And lastly, the prouidence of God would neuer herein faile his Church, but hath left them, with their bookes, to be dispersed through the world, to beare witnessse to that Truth which they hate and persecute.

These are Bellarmines Arguments; which, because they are the Truth, are also ours: and therefore we haue bene bold with the Reader to insert them. As for that Emendation or Correction of the Scribes, which Galatinus mentioneth, wherein they haue corrupted the Text, he proueth it to be a late dreame of the Talmud, and answereth the Arguments of his fellowes, herein not so Catholike as himselfe.

Now although this may seeme more then enough to conuince that folly, yet it shall not bee impertinent to adde out of Arius Montanus somevvhat touching the same, because it openeth another mysterie touching the Hebrew Learning, and the Masoroth, ^m When the Iewes (saith he) returned into their Countrey after the Captiuitie threescore and ten yeares in Babylon, it besell them partly by occasion of their long troubles, which did distract their mindes, partly by corruption of their Natiue Tongue, which was growne out of kinde, first into the Chaldee, and afterward into the Syriake, that they neither knew nor pronounced so well the words of the Scripture, written (as the manner was) without vowels. Whereby it came to passe, that in the writing of them there crept in some fault, either through iniurie of the Times, or by reason of troubles which fell vpon the People, or by negligence of some Scriueners. But this inconuenience was met withall afterward by most learned men, such as Esdras was, and afterward Gamaliel, Ioseus, Eleazar, and other of great name, who prouided by common trauell, with great care and industrie, that the Text of Scripture, and the true reading thereof, should be preserved most sound and vncorrupt. And from these men, or from their instruction, being receiued and polished by their Schollers in the Ages following, there came, as wee iudge, that most profitable Treasure, which is called Masoreth, that is to say, a Deliuerie, or Traditionall, because it doth deliuer abundantly and faithfully all the diuers Readings that euer were of the Hebrew Bibles. Wherein there appeareth an euident token of the prouidence of God, for the preservation of the sacred Bookes of Scripture whole and sound, that the Masoreth hath bene kept till our times these many hundred yeares, with such care and diligence, that in sundrie Copies of it, which haue bene written, no difference was euer found. And it hath bene added in all the written Bibles that are in Europe, Africke, or Asia, each of them agreeing throughly therein with other, euen as it is printed in the Venice Bibles, to the great wonder of them, who read it. Thus farre Montanus: and by this Masoreth, their obiection of Caari, and Caaru, in the two and twentieth Psalm, is answered, in that certaine readings haue the later and truer, as the Masoreth testifieth. ⁿ Martinus affirmeth, That these Masorites inuented the prickes where-with the Hebrew is now read, to supply the lacke of vowels, herein vsing religious care, lest by inuenting new Letters to that purpose, they should haue changed that ancient forme of writing, and somewhat impaired the yuaestie thereof. They tell, that when a certaine Rabbine had read Zacar for Zecer, he was slaine of his Scholler Ioab, for violating Scripture.

o Genebrard denying their opinion, that make Ezra or Esdras Author of these Hebrew prickes and accents, saith, That they were inuented after the times of Honorius the Emperour, in the yeare, after the Temple was destroyed, 436. which is (saith he) from Christ, 476. in Tyberias, a Citie of Galilee; the chiefe Authors were Aaron, Aseries, and Iames, sonne of Nephtali, whose dissenting one from another caused a diuision among the Iewes, the Westerne Iewes following the former, the Easterne, which dwelt in Babylonia, the later.

The Syriake Tongue some hold to haue spring from the corruption of the Chaldee and Hebrew mixt. The Editions and Translations of the Scriptures, out of the Hebrew into the Greeke, are reckoned nine, besides that which Clement Alexandrinus, saith, was before the time of Alexander, whereof Plato and the Philosophers borrowed not a little. The first (alreadie mentioned) of the seuentie. The second of Aquila, first a Gentile, after a Christian, and now last a Iew, in the time of Adrian. The third of Theodotion, a Marcionist, vnder Commodus. The fourth of Symmachus, first a Samaritan, and after that a Iew. Of the fift and sixt are not knowne the Authors. Of all these Origen compounded his Hexapla. The seuenth was the correction rather then a translation. The eight was of Lucian, Priest and Martyr. The ninth of Hesychius. But the most famous and ancient, which the Spirit of God hath by often allegations, in some measure, confirmed, is that of the Seuentie.

As for that conceit of the Celles, which q Iustine saith, were threescore and ten, in which they were diuided, and which r Epiphanius placeth by couples, and numbreth fixe and thirtie Celles, in which, by miracle, these thus diuided did all agree, in words and sense. f Hierome detideth the same as a Fable, because neither Aristeus, which then liued, nor Iosephus, doe euer mention it. Now whereas Iosephus mentioneth only the Law translated by them; Iustinus, Irenaeus, Clement, Eusebins, write, That they translated all. And although Aristeus name but the Law, yet who knoweth not, that

b Verf. 14.

Say ^a your selues and wonder (saith the Lord of this people) they are blinde, and make blinde: they are drunken, but not with Wine: they stagger, but not by strong drinke, &c. And after, because of their Hypocrites, And their feare toward me is taught by the Precept of ^b Men Therefore behold, I will againe doe a maruellous worke in this People; euen a maruellous worke and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise-men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. This day is this Scripture (as it hath been many Ages heretofore) fulfilled in our eyes: as it hath appeared by our former declaration of our Talmud, and further followeth, in rehearsing the thirteene Articles of their Creed ^c, thus briefly expressed in their daily Prayer-bookes.

c Bux. Syn. c. 1.

* He attained (saith R. Moses hercon) to the height of humane perfection, and is reckoned among the troope of Angels. Neither sensitiue, facultie, nor appetite was amisse in him, nothing left but only Spirit and spirituall vnderstanding. The difference betweene him and other Prophets he hadleth Morab. Neb lib 2. cap. 36. that the name of the Prophet is equiuocall, of him and others, and his signes were of another kind then others, thereunto applying those words Exod. 6. 3. &c.

1. I beleue with a true and perfect faith, that GOD is the Creator, Governour, and Preseruer of all Creatures, and that he hath wrought all things, worketh hitherto, and shall worke for euer.

2. I beleue with a perfect faith, that GOD the Creator is one, and that such an Vnity, as is in him, can be found in none other, who alone hath bene OVR GOD, is yet, and for euer shall continue OVR GOD.

3. I beleue with a perfect faith, that GOD the Creator is not bodily, nor indued with bodily proprietie, and that no bodily essence can be compared to him.

4. I beleue that GOD the Creator is the first and last, and that nothing was before him, that he shall abide the last for euer.

5. I beleue that he alone is to be adored, and that none else may be worshipped.

6. I beleue that all, whatsoener the Prophets haue taught and spoken, is sincere truth.

7. I beleue that the Doctrine and Prophecie of MOSES * was true; that he was the Father and chiefe of wise men, that liued then, or before his time, or should be in times to come after.

8. I beleue that all the Law, as it is this day in our hands, was so deliuered by GOD himselfe to MOSES.

9. I beleue that the same Law is neuer to be changed, nor any other to be giuen vs of GOD.

10. I beleue that he knoweth and vnderstandeth all the workes and thoughts of men, as it is written in the Prophet, He hath fashioned their hearts together considering all their workes. Psal. 33. 15.

11. I beleue that GOD will recompence to all men their workes: to all, I say, which keepe his Commandements, and will punish all transgressors whomsoeuer.

They alleage foure excellencies in Moses. First, That he Prophecied not by mediation of an Angell. Secondly, Others prophecied in the night, and in dreames. The Scripture saith, God appeared in visions: But Moses in the day, standing betweene the two Cherubims. Thirdly, Their members were in manner disioyned, and their mindes distracted: But God spake to Moses as one doth to his friend. Fourthly, They prophecied not at their will, but when the Spirit was sent, Moses alway when he would. Moses otherwise, Deut. 18. 15. Act. 3. 21. And Paul, Hebr. 1. 1, 2. and 2. 2, 3.

12. I beleue that the MESSIAS is yet to come, and although he do long defer his coming, yet will I hope, that he will come, waiting for him every day, till he doth come.

13. I beleue with a perfect faith, that there shall be an awakening of the dead, at that time which shall seeme fit to GOD the Creator: the name of which GOD the Creator be much blessed and celebrated for ever-more. AMEN.

Genebrard out of the Spanish Breniarie hath annexed this their Creed-prayer. O God and King which fittest on the Throne of Mercies, forgiuest iniquities, &c. O God which hast taught vs the thirteene Articles of the Faith, remember this day the covenant of thy thirteene Properties, as thou reuealedst them to Moses in thy Law. 1. Lord, Lord. 2. Strong. 3. Mercifull. 4. Gracious. 5. Long-suffering. 6. And of great goodnesse. 7. And Truth. 8. Which keepest mercie for thousands. 9. Which takest away iniquitie. 10. Transgressions. 11. And sins. 12. Which absoluest not. 13. But rendrest the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children to the third and fourth Generation: then follow those thirteene Articles in forme of an Hymne, with the exposition of R. Moses: which also you may reade in the Treatise of Philip Ferdinand a Polonian Christned Iew. And he which thus beleueth, saith Ferdinand, is a Iew, and as a brother to be loued; and though he commit all the sins of the world, howsoeuer he shall be punished for his sinne. yet shall he haue part in the Kingdome of heauen, though he be reckoned among the sinners of Israel. But he which shall ouerturne one of these Precepts shall be blotted out of the number of the Saints, and be reckoned an Heretike, Apostata, Epicure, worthie to be hated of all.

This is the Iewish Faith, in which with much vexation, doubting, and lamentation, they die, vpon which, their Religion hath bin alway founded: but it was first put in writing, and brought into this order by R. Mosche bar Maimon,^a who died in the yeare after their reckoning 4964. An. Dom. 1104. and strait charge was giuen, That the Iewes thenceforth for euer confessing it in this order, should according to the same, liue and die. This their Creed, howsoeuer Charity may construe much of it to a better sense, yet according to their vnderstanding doth it principally aime at the subuersion of Christian Religion; as appeareth in a more strait examination, after their sense of the 2, 3, 4 and 5, the 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Articles: all which make against the person or the office of the Son of God, as they vnderstand them; denying his God-head, and disannulling his office, affirming, as a Iew shamed not to professe and vtter vnto M. Buxdorfius, That it needed not that any should satisfie for thē. for euery Fox must yeeld his owne skin and haire to the slayer. And the Iewish Faith, saith R. Joseph Albu, is founded vpon three foundations: vpon the vnyty of the diuine Essence; vpon the Law of Moses, and vpon the eternal reward of good works, and punishment of euill, concerning the Passion of Christ^b, by whose stripes we are healed, and on whom God hath laid the iniquities of vs all. It is written also in their^c Talmud, that all the Israelites haue their portion in the world to come, not al alike, but he shal haue a greater part that hath done more good works, and the wicked and impenitent shall be punished twelue moneths in Hell or Purgatorie, after which time they also (and some sooner, if they haue bin lesse sinners) shall haue their part, but a lesse then the former: but to them which deny God (which become Christians) their fore-skin groweth againe, and as vncircumcised eternally are punished in Hell. And the son of a deceased Iew is bound to say, for the space of one yeare,^d a prayer called Kiddish, thereby to redeeme him from Purgatorie; in which respect the father dieth with ioy. A good woman may do the like for her husband. But R. Bechai (who excludeth all other Nations from their part in the Resurrection, preferring the Iewes in a four-fold priuiledge, viz. the Land of Canaan, the Law, the Prophees, and the Resurrection) reciteth out of the great^e Talmud, That three sorts of men shall rise againe at the day of Iudgement: one, of the best Israelites; a second sort of the wicked and worst; the third of a meane, who haue done as much good as euill. The good shall presently go into life eternall; the wicked shall be cast into Hell, as in the twelue of Daniel, and shall be for euer in torments of bodie and soule. The third and meaner sort of

Prophet: And in that day two parts shall be cut off, and die, and the third shall be left therein: and I will bring that third part thorow the fire, and will fine them as siluer is fined, and will trie them as gold is tried. And in another place, g The Lord killeth and maketh aliae, bringeth downe to Hell, and raiseth up; Iust as fitly applied, as 1. Cor. 3. and such like places by our Purgatory-Spirits. R. Dauid Kimchi vpon the first Psalme, and Es. 26. commenteth, That the wicked shall not rise, but in the day of death their soule shall die together with their bodie. And Aben Ezra in his Exposition of Dan. 12. writeth out of R. Higgaon, That many shall rise, and many not rise, but suffer euerlasting reproch; and expoundeth it thus, that the good Jewes which die in exile, shall rise againe when the Messias shall come, and shall liue as long as the Patriarkes before the Flood: and then they shall make merrie with the great Fish Leuiathan, and the great Bird Ziz, and the great Oxe Behemos^h, of which we shall speake after. When this is done, they shall die, and at the last day shal be raised vp againe, and shall possesse eternall life, where shal be no eating nor drinking, but glory, &c. *Iacob*ⁱ desired to be buried in Canaan, not in Egypt, for three causes (saith R. Salomon Iarchi) because he foresaw. That of the ^k Dust of Egypt shall be made Lice: Secondly, because the Israelites which die out of Canaan shall not rise againe without much paine of their rolling thorow the deepe and hidden vaults of the earth: Thirdly, lest the Egyptians should make an Idoll of him. For the better vnderstanding hereof, let vs heare what is said out of the booke Tanchum (an Exposition of the Pentateuch) concerning this subiect. The Patriarkes (saith he) desired to be buried in Canaan, because they which are there buried shall first rise in the time of the Messias. And R. Hananiah saith, That they which die out of Canaan, must endure two deaths: and the same appeareth, Ier. 20. where it is said, Pashur should goe into Babel, and should there die, and there be buried. What (quoth R. Simon) shall then all the Iust perish, which die out of Canaan? No, but God will make them Mechillos, that is, deepe Clifts and Caues vnder the Earth, by which they may passe into the Land of Promise; whither when they are come, God shal inspire into them the breath of life, that they may rise againe, as it is written^l, I will open your Graves, and cause you to come out of your Sepulchres, &c. The like is written in their Targum, or Chaldean interpretation of the Canticles: When the dead shall rise, Mount Oliuet shall cleaue asunder, and the Israelites which haue beene dead shall come out of the same, and they which haue died in strange Lands, comming thither by holes vnder the earth, shal come forth. And for this cause I my selfe (saith our Author) haue heard the Jewes say, That sometime some of the wealthiest and deuouetest amongst them go into the Land of Canaan, that their bodies may there sleepe, and so be freed from this miserable passage vnder so many deep Seas and rough Mountains. There be three sorts of^m men, saith Salmanticensis in the booke Iuchasin, which see not the face of Hell; those which are extremely poore, those which are in debt, those which are troubled with the collicke (the Hafidæi chastised themselves ten or twentie daies before their death with this paine of the bowels, that so they might cleanse all, and goⁿ pure to the other world) some adde in this exemption from hell, or comming to iudgement, him which had an euill wife, and some also Magistrates. But in Pauls time, they themselves did allow (saith^o he) a resurrection of the dead, both of the iust and vniust. They did then hold also a μετεμψύχως, in which sense it is likely, the Jewes thought^p Christ to be Elias, or Ieremie, or one of the Prophets: and the Disciples somewhat towred with this leuen, asked of the blind man, q whether he had sinned, vnderstanding, as it seemeth, according to the Iewish errour, when his soule had bin in some former body. And the Cabalistical Authors, saith^r Elias Leuita, are of opinion that euery soule is three times created, they meane, it rolleth or passeth thorow three mens bodies, according to that of^s Iob, God worketh all these things with a man thrice. So the soule of the first man (saith he) rolled it selfe into the bodie of Dauid, and shall thence returne into the bodie of the Messias. So they say that the soules of sinners passe into the bodies of beastes; as if a man committeth Sodomie, his soule passeth into a Hare, because that creature is sometimes Male, sometimes

Now to come from their Faith to their workes : The wise Rabbines perswade the silly people, That they are the only elect people of God, who easily can keepe, not the Decalogue, or ten Commandements alone, but the whole Law of Moses. They diuide the whole Law into sixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, and them againe into Precepts and Prohibitions : Of the commanding Precepts they number two hundred fortie and eight ; iust so many as (according to the Rabbines Anatomie) a man hath members in his bodie. Of the prohibiting Commandements, they reckon three hundred, threescore and five, ^u as many as are dayes in the yeare, ^u or (as in the booke Brandspiegel) veines in a mans bodie. Therefore if euery member of a man doe euery day performe one of the Precepts, and omit one of the things prohibited, the whole Law of Moses shall be euery yeate, and so for euer, fulfilled. Their wise Rabbines say further, That the men only are to obserue those sixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, the women are only subiect to the Prohibitions ; yea, of those prohibitorie Mandates, onely to threescore and foure are they obliged by some, and to six and thirtie of the former ; and this because of their other household-businesse, and subiection to their imperious husbands. Some of their deeply-wise Rabbines adde to those sixe hundred and thirteene, seuen other Commandements, making vp the number of sixe hundred and twentie ; iust so many as are ^x letters in the Decalogue, and as arise of the word Keter, signifying a Crowne : for were it not for the Law, God would not haue created the World ; and for the obseruation thereof it yet subsisteth. And they which keepe all the Commandements, do set a Crowne on the head of God, and he vpon the head of those which crowne him, shall set seuen Crownes, and make them to inherite seuen Chambers in Paradise, and will keepe them from the seuen infernall Dungeons, because they haue obtained the seuen Heauens, and the seuen Earthes.

Their Wise-men affirme, That euery veine of the bodie of a man doth prouoke him to omit that which is forbidden, and hee which doth omit such their vaine veine-warning, hath no good veine in him : euery of his members also doe prouoke him to performe those iusorie inuentions. But as vaine should I be as they, if I should not make some end, where they can finde none. We would now from these generalities proceed to the particulars of their superstitions, tracing them herein from their birth to their graues, Religion being, in the pretence of their Law, the square of all their (otherwise ciuill) actions ; at least to speake of their Superstitions in the same. But first, seeing Sebastian Munster hath written a whole booke, both in Hebrew and Latine, of those six hundred and thirteene Precepts, taken out of Moses, with the Expositions of their Rabbines, as also P. Ricinus hath done, and Philo Ferdinand likewise out of Ben Kattain, I thought good to cull out some, which seeme most remarkable and strange, to entertaine our Reader ; out of him, and Ricinus.

OVT OF THE NEGATIVE PRECEPTS EXPOUNDED BY THE Y RABBINES.

1. Thou shalt haue no strange Gods in my sight. Exod. 20. The name of God is forbidden to be communicated to any creature.
2. Thou shalt not violate z mine holy name. Thou shalt not destroy a Synagogue or Temple be it neuer so old, nor shall blot out one of the holy names, wheresoever thou findest it written. The Rabbines say, If any doe against an Affirmatiue Precept, and repent, his sinne is forgiuen him : but hee which transgresseth a Negative Precept, is not cleansed by repentance, but it remaineth to the day of Expiation (which is the day of their solemne Faßt and Reconciliation.) But he which committeth a sinne, whereby he deserueth Death, or Excommunication, is not then purged, but must abide thereunto the diuine chastisements : and he which violateth the name of God, cannot be absolved from that sinne but by death.
5. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. He which is wronged by another, should not hate him, and hold his peace, but reprove him openly ; and if hee repent,

- he ought not to be cruell to him : But if any be often reprov'd, and will not amend, it is lawfull to hate him. This Christ ^l confuteth.

19. No^t Idollis to be adored. If a man have a thorne in his foot, he may not bow before an Image to pull it out : and if money fall out of his hand, he may not there, before an Image, stoop to take it vp, lest he might seem to adore it, but he must sit downe on the ground to doe it. And if the water of a Fountaine bee caused to passe thorow the mouth of an Image, he may not drinke thereat, lest hee should seeme to kisse the Image.
22. An^u Image may not be made, viz. The Image of a man in siluer or gold, if it be embossed or set out, but if it be stamped in mettall (in manner of a seale) it is lawfull. But of Beasts, Birds, Trees, and Flowers, those prominent Images (which are made standing out) are lawfull. Otherwise of the Sunne, Moone and Starres.

Things imployed to Idolatrie may be vsed of vs, if the Gentiles haue first prophaned them. It is not lawfull to sell them Waxe or Frankincense, especially at their Candlemasse Feast; nor bookes to vse in their Seruice. Our women may not performe a Mid-wiues office to them, nor nurse their children.

65. Thou shalt y^e doe no worke on the seventh day. Nothing that belongeth to the getting of Food or Rayment. It is vnlawfull to walke on the grasse, lest thou pull it vp with thy feet; or to hang any thing on the bough of a tree, lest it breake; or to eat an apple, plucked on the Sabbath, especially if the tayle or wooden substance, whereby it groweth, be on it; or to mount on a horse, lest hee be galled; or to goe into water, lest thou wipe thy cloathes: which holdeth also, if they be moystened with Wine or Oyle (but not in a woman that giueth sucke) who may wipe her cloaths, for the more puritie of her prayers. The stopple of a Vessell, if it be of Hempte or Flax, may not be thrust in, though it runne, especially if any other Vessell be vnder. To mixe Mustard-seed with wine or water; to lay an apple to the fire to roast; to wash the bodie, chiefly with hotte water; to sweate; to wash the hands; to doe any thing in priuate, which may not be publikely done: (but some say, it is lawfull priuately to rubbe off the durt with his nailes from his cloathes, which publikely he may not:) To reade by a Light, except two reade together: To set sayle: (but if thou enter three dayes before, it is not necessarieto go forth on the Sabbath) to be carried in a Waggon, though a Gentile driue it: If fire happen on the Sabbath, to carrie any thing out, but thy food, rayment, and necessaries for that day, and that wherein the holy Booke lieth: to put to pasture Horses or Asses, coupled together: to receiue any good by the Light, or Fire, which a Gentile hath made for the Iew; (otherwise, if he did it for himselfe:) To play on any Instrument; to make a bed; to Number, Measure, Iudge, or Marrie, lest they should write any thing: To reade at home, when others are at the Synagogue: To speake of buying and selling (which it seemeth they obserue not:) To visite Field or Garden: To Runne, Leape, or tell Tales, &c. All these on the Sabbath day are vnlawfull. For dangerous diseases it is lawfull to violate the Sabbath^u: Such are the three first dayes after a womans trauell, &c. But of this, see^z also the obseruation of their Sabbath. It is not lawfull to walke out of the Citie, but their limited space: but within the Citie, as farre as they will, though it be as big as Niniuic.

For what greater blindenesse then to thinke that their Messias was borne that day the Temple was destroyed, and to remaine at Rome till that time, when he shall say to the Pope, Let my people goe, as Moses borne so long before, at last said to Pharaoh? CHAP. XIII.

Of the Iewish opinions of the Creation, their Ceremonies about the birth of a Child: Of their Circumcision, Purification, and Redemption of the first-borne, and Education of their Children.

When a Iewish woman is great with child, and neere her time, her chamber is furnished with necessaries; and then some holy and deuoute man (if any such may be had) with chalke maketh a circular line round in the chamber vpon al the wals, and writeth on the dore, and within and without on euery wall, and about the bed in Hebrew Letters, Adam, Chanu, Chuts Lilis, i. Adam, Eue, away hence Lilis. Hereby they signifie their desire, that if a woman shall be deliuered of a sonne, God may one day giue him a wife like to Eue, and not to Lilis: if it be a daughter, that she may once proue to her husband a helper like Eue, and not a shrew like Lilis. This word Lilis is read in the Prophet, interpreted a Skrich-Owle: but the Jewes seeme to meane by it a diuellish Spectrum in womans shape, that vseth to slay or carry away children, which are on the eight day to be circumcised. Elias Leuita writeth, that he hath read that a hundred and twentie yeares Adam contained himselfe from his wife Eue, and in that space there came to him Diuels which conceiued of him, whence were ingendred Diuels and Spirits, Fairies and Goblins; and that there were foure mothers or dammes of the Diuels, Lilith, Nacmah, Ogereth, and Machalath. Thus is it read in Ben Sira, When God had made Adam, and saw it was not good for him to be alone, he made him a woman of the earth, like vnto him, and called her Lilis. These disagreed for superiourity, not suffering Casariæ priorem, Pompeiæ parem: Lilis (made of the same mould) would not be vnderling, and Adam would not endure her his equall. Lilis seeing no hope of agreement, vttered that sacred word IEHOVAH, with the Cabalisticall interpretation thereof, and presently did flie into the Ayre. Adam playning his case, God sent three Angels after her, viz. Senoi, Sensenoi, Sanmangeleph, eyther to bring her backe, or to denounce unto her, That a hundred of her children should die in a day. should be drowned) and did their message to her: she refusing to obey, they threatened her drowning: but she besought them to let her alone, because she was created to vex and kill children on the eight day, if they were men; if women children, on the twentieth day. They neuertheless forcing her to goe, Lilis sware to them, That whensoever she should finde the name or figure of those Angels, written or painted on Schedule, Parchment, or any thing, she would do infants no harme, and that she would not refuse that punishment, to loose a hundred children in a day. And accordingly a hundred of her children or young diuels, died in a day. And for this cause doe they write these names on a Scroll of Parchment, and hang them on their infants neckes. Thus saith Ben. Sira.

Their exposition of Scripture is so absurd, that we haue hence a manifest argument, that as they denied the Son that Eternall Word and Truth, whose written word this is; so that spirit which indired the same, the Spirit of Truth hath put a vail on their heart, and iustly suffered the spirit of error to blinde their eyes, that seeing they should see and not vnderstand. This will appeare generally in our ensuing Discourse; but for a taste let vs begin with the beginning of Moses, whereon R. Iacob Baal Hatturim hath left to the world these smoakie speculations. The Bible beginneth with Beth, the second letter in the Alphabet, and not with Aleph the first, because that is the first letter of Be-racha which signifieth blessing this of Aroun, that is, a curse. Secondly, Beth signifieth two, insinuating^a the two-fold Law, written and vnrwritten: for Beresbeth hath the letters of Barasbetes; first, hee made; secondly, Lawes; thirdly, Beresbitb (the first word of Genesis) hath as many letters as Aleph be Tisfrei, that is, the first of Tisfrei or Tisfri, on which the Iewes say the world began: fourthly, Beresbitb hath the letters of Bajthroshe .i. the first Temple, which he knew the Iewes would build, and therefore created the world: fifthly, it hath the letters of Iare shabbath .i. to keepe the Sabbath; for God created the world for the Israelites which keepe the Sabbath: sixthly also, of Berith esb, which signifieth the couenant of fire, to wit, Circumcision and the Law, another cause of the creation: seuenthly, likewise it hath the letters of Bara iesb, that is, he created as many worlds as are in the number iesb (that is, three hundred and ten) that the Saints might^b reioyce therein. Now if I should follow them from these letters and spelling, to their mysticall sententious exposition of greater parts of the sentence, you should heare Moses tell you out of his first words that the world was created for the Talmudists, for the six hundred and thirteene precepts, because hee loved the Israelites more then the other people: Againc, that before saw the Israelites would receive the Lawe (but he is now an Ass, saith he, which beareth wine and drinketh water). There are in the first verse seuen words, which signifie the seuen dayes of the weeke, seuenth yeare of rest, seuen times seuenth the Iubilee, seuen times seuen Iubilees, seuen heauens, seuen lands of promise, and seuen Orbes or Planets, which caused Dauid to say, I will praise thee seuen times a day. There are 28. letters in it, which shew the 28. times of the world, of which Salomon speaketh, Eccles. 3. 1. There are in it 6. Alephs, and therefore the world shall last 6000. yeares. So in the second verse, The earth was without forme and voyde, are 2. Alephs, which shew the world should be 2000. places voyd: now in the third^c verte are 4. Alephs, which shew other 4000. yeare, two of which should be vnder the Law, and two vnder Messias.

Now for the first man, his body (saith R. Oza in the^d Talmud) was made of the earth of Babylon, his head of the land of Israel, his other members of other partes of the world. So R. Meir thought he was compact of the earth, gathered out of the whole earth, as it is written, Thine eyes did see my substance, now it is elsewhere written, The eyes of the Lord are ouer all the earth. There are 12. houres of the day, saith R. Aha, in the first whereof the earth of Adam, or earthly matter was gathered: in the second, the trunk of his body fashioned: in the third, his members stretched forth: in the fourth, his soule infused: in the fifth, he stood vpon his feet: in the sixth, he gaue names to the creatures: in the seuenth, Eue was giuen him in marriage: in the eighth, they ascended the bedde two, and descended foure: in the ninth he received the precept, which in the tenth he brake, and therefore was iudged in the eleuenth; and in the twelfth was cast out of Paradise: as it is written, Man continued not one night in honour. The stature of

Adam was from one end of the world to the other, and for his transgression, the Creator by laying on his hand lessened him: for before, saith R. Eleazar, with his head hee reached (a reacher indeede) the very firmament. His language was Syriake or Aramitish, saith R. Iuda, and as Reschlakis addeth, the Creator shewed him all generations, and the wise-men in them. His sinne, after R. Iebuda, was heresie; R. Isaac thinketh, the nourishing his fore-skinne.

He knew or vsed * carnall filthinesse with all the beasts which God brought vnto him before Eue was made, as some interpret R. Eleazar, and R. Salomon: but Reuchline laboureth to purge them of that sense: who affirmeth, that hee had an Angell for his Master or Instructor: and when he was exceedingly deicted with remorse of his sinne, God sent the Angell Raziel to tell him that there should be one of his progenie which should haue the foure letters of Iehouah in his name, and should expiate originall sinne. And here was the beginning of their Cabala: and also presently hereupon did hee and Eue build an Altar and offer sacrifice. The like offices of other Angels they mention ^a to other Patriarchs and tell that euery three moneths are set new watches of these watchmen, yea euery three houres, yea and euery houre is some change of them. And therefore we may haue more fauour of them in one houre then another: for they follow the the disposition of the stars; so said the Angell Samael (which wrestled with him) vnto Jacob ^b Let me goe for the day breaketh: for his power was in the night. But let me returne to Adam: of whom they further tell ^c that he was an Hermaphrodite, a man-woman, hauing both Sexes & a double body, the female part ioyned at the shoulders and back parts to the male, their countenances turned from each other. This is proued by Moses his wordes, So God created man in his Image, male and female created he the m. And he called their name Adam: yet after this is mention of Adams solitarinesse, and forming of Eue out of his side, that is, cutting the female part from the male, and so fitting them to generation. Thus doth Leo Hebraus reconcile the fable of Platos Androgynus with Moses narration, out of which he thinketh it borrowed. For as hee telleth that Iupiter in the first forming of mankinde, made them such Androgyni, with two bodies of two sexes ioyned in the breast, diuided for their pride, the nauill still remaining as a skarre of the wound then made: so with little difference is this their interpretation of Moses. But let vs looke to our present Iewes and the historie of their life.

In their chambers alwaies is found such as Picture; and the names of the Angels of Health (this office they ascribe to them) are written ouer the chamber dore. In their Booke ^d Brandspiegel, printed at Cracouia, 1597. is shewed the authoritie of this Historie, collected by their Wise-men out of those wordes; ^e Male and Female created he them, compared with the forning of Eue of a Ribbe in the next Chapter, saying, That Lilis the former was diuorced from Adam for her pride, which shee conceived, because she was made of earth, as well as he; and God gaue him another, Flesh of his flesh. And concerning her, R. Moses ^f tels, that Samael the Deuill came riding vpon a Serpent, which was as bigge as a Camell, and cast water vpon her, and deceiued her.

When this Iewesse is in trauell, shee must not send for a Christian Mid-wife, except no Iewish can bee gotten: and then the Iewish women must be very thick about her for feare of negligence or iniurie. And if shee be happily deliuered of a sonne, there is exceeding ioy through all the house, and the father presently makes festiuall prouision against the Circumcision on the eight day. In the meane time ten persons are invited, neither more nor fewer, which are all past thirteene yeares of age. The night after her deliuerie, seuen of the invited parties, and some others sometimes, meete at the Child-houfe, and make there great cheare and sport all night, Dicing, Drinking, Fabling, so to solace the Mother, that she should not grieue too much for the child's Circumcision. The Circumciser is called Mobel, who must be a Iew, and a Man, and well exercised in that facultie: and he that will performe this office, at the beginning giueth monie to some poore Iew, to be admitted hereunto in his children, that after his better experience he may be vsed ^g of the richer. And this Mobel may thence forwards be knowne by his thumbes, on which he weareth the nailes long and \S sharpe, and narrow-pointed. The circumcising Instrument is of stone, glasse, yron, or any matter that will cut: commonly sharpe kniues like Rasors, amongst the rich Iewes closed in siluer, and set

And if in the time of Circumcision (for paine) hee defileth himselfe, the Mobel must suspend his praying, till he be washed and laid cleane againe. This is performed commonly in the morning, while the child is fasting, to prevent much fluxe of blood.

In the morning therefore of the eight day all things are made readie. First are two seates placed, or one so framed, that two may sit in the same apart; adorned costly with Carpets, and that either in the Synagogue, or some priuate Parlor: if it be in the Synagogue, then the seat is placed neare the holy Arke, or Chest, where the Booke of the Law is kept. Then comes the Suretie or God-father for the child, and placeth himselfe at the said seat, and neare him the Mobel, or Circumciser. Other Jewes follow them, one of which cryeth with a loud voice, That they should bring presently whatsoeuer is needfull for this businesse. Then come other children, whereof one bringeth a great Torch, in which are lighted twelue Waxe-candles, to represent the twelue Tribes of Israel: after him two other Boyes, carrying cups full of red wine. After them another carrieth the circumcising knife: another brings a dish with sand; another brings another dish with oyle; in which are cleane and fine clouts, which after the Mobel applyeth to the wounds of the child. These stand in a ring about the Mobel, the better to marke and learn: and these their offices are bought with monie by those children. Some come thither also with spices, Cloues, Cinnamon, strong Wine to refresh, if any happen to swoone. These being thus assembled, the God-father sitteth downe vpon one of those two seats: right against him the Mobel placeth himselfe, and sings the * song of the Israelites, and others. Then the women bring the child to the dore, all the Congregation presently rising vp. The God-father goeth to the dore, taketh the child, sitteth downe on his seat, and crieth out, Baruch habba, i. Blessed be he that commeth; in their Cabalistical sense, habba, being applied either to the eight day, which is the day of Circumcision, or the coming of Elias, whom they call the Angel of the couenant, (so they interpret a the Prophet) and say, that Elias commeth with the Infant, and sits downe on that other emptie seat. For when the Israelites were prohibited circumcision, and Elias complained thus, ^b The children of Israel haue forsaken the couenant, i. Circumcision, God promised him, That from thence-forwards he should be present at circumcision, to see it rightly performed. And when they make ready that seat for Elias, then they are bound in set words to say, This seat is for the Prophet Elias ^c, otherwise (as an vnbidden guest) he commeth not. This seat remaineth for him three whole daies together.

Then when the God-father holdeth the child in his lap, the Mobel takes him out of his clouts, and layeth hold on his member, and holding the fore-skinne, putteth back the toppe thereof, and rubbeth the fore-skinne, so to make it haue the lesse sense of paine. Then hee taketh from the Boy the circumcising-knife, and saith with a lowd voice; Blessed bee thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandements, and given vs the Couenant of Circumcision: and whiles hee thus speaketh, cuts off the fore-part of the skinne, that the head of the yard may bee seene, and presently hurleth it into the ^d San-dish, and restoreth his knife to the Boy againe: taketh from another a cup of Red Wine, and drinketh his mouth full, which he presently spitteth out on the Infant, and therewith washeth away the blood; and if hee see the child beginne to faint, he spitteth out some thereof on his face. Presently he taketh the member of the child in his mouth, and sucketh ^e out the blood, to make it stay from bleeding the sooner, and spitteth out that blood so sucked into the other cup full of Wine, or into the dish of Sand. This hee doth at least thrice. After the blood is stayed, the Mobel with his sharpe-pointed thinne nailes rendreth the skinne of the yard, and putteth it back so farre, that the head thereof is bare. Hee is more painefull to the infant, with this rending of the remayning skinne, which action is called Priab, then with the former. This being done, hee layeth the clouts (dipped in oyle aforesaid) to the wound, and bindeth them three or foure times about; and then wrappeth vp the Infant againe in his clouts. Then saith the Father of the child; Blessed be thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs in thy Commandements, and hast commanded vs to succede into the Couenant of our Father ABRAHAM. To which all the Congregation answereth, As this Infant hath happily succeded into the Couenant of our Father ABRAHAM; so happily shall he succede into the possession of the Law of MOSES, into Marriage also, and other good workes. Then doth the Mobel wash his bloudie mouth and his hands: The God-father riseth with him, and standeth ouer-against him; who taking the other cup of wine; saith a certaine prayer, and prayeth also ouer the Infant, saying; O our God, God of our Fathers, strengthen and keepe this Infant to his Father and Mother, and make that his name, in the people of Israel, may bee named (here he first nameth the Childe, calling him Isaac) *Isaac, which was the sonne of Abraham. Let his Father reioyce in him that hath come out of his loynes; Let his Mother reioyce in the fruit of her wombe, as it is written, * Make glad thy Father and Mother, and her that bare thee to reioyce. And God saith by the Prophet, a I passed by thee, and saw thee troden in thy blood, and I said vnto thee in thy blood, thou shalt liue; yea, I said vnto thee, in thy blood, thou shalt liue.* Here the Mobel puts his finger into the other cup of Wine, wherein hee had set the blood, and moisteneth the childs lips three times with that wine, hoping, that according to the former sentence of the Prophet, hee shall liue longer in the blood of his Circumcision, then otherwise he should. David also saith, b He is mindfull of his marvellous acts which he hath done, and of his wonders, and the iudgements of his mouth, &c. Then he continueth his prayer for the present assembly, and that God would giue long life to the Father and Mother of the Boy, and blesse the child. This done, hee offers the blessed Cup to all the yong men, and bids them drinke. Then with the Childe (who is thus made a Iew) they returne to the Fathers house, and restore him to his Mothers armes. This last prayer hee makes neare the Arke, and some of the deuouter Jewes, before and after Circumcision, take the Childe, and lay him vpon Elias pillow, that Elias may touch him. c The skinne cast into the sand, is in memorie of that promise, d I will make thy seede as the sand of the Sea; and of Balams saying, e Who can number the dust of IACOB, i. his posteritie, whose fore-skinne is cast in the Sand or Dust, and because the Curse f on the Serpent is thus fulfilled, Dust thou shalt eat, i. this skinne in the dust: thus to their enemy the Serpent fulfilling also that precept, g If thine enemy hunger, feede him. And by this meanes the Serpent can no more seduce this man.

If a child bee sick on the eighth day, they deferre Circumcision till his recouerie: they hold also the blowing of the North winde necessarie to this action, and therefore thinke that their Fathers forbore circumcision those fortie yeares in the wildernesse, because the North winde blew not all that time, lest it should haue blowne away the pillar of smoke and fire: and besides this winde is holsome for wounds, which else are dangerous. But least they should stay beyond the eighth day expecting this Northerne breath, their Talmud tells that euery day there blow foure windes, and that the North is mixed with them all, and therefore they may circumcise euery day. If the child die before the eighth day, he is circumcised at the graue without any prayers: but a signe is erected in memorie of him, that God may haue mercie vpon him, and raise him at the day of the Resurrection. In some places all the people stand, except the God-father, because it is written, All the people stood in the Couenant, But to pursue the rest of their niceries, grounded vpon such interpretations, would be endlesse. We will follow the child home, if you be not alreadie wearie, and see what rout is there kept.

Ten must be the number (you haue heard) of the invited guests, and one or two of these learned Rabbins, who must make a long praier and sermon at the table, although others mean while are more busied in tossing the cups of wine. I was once present (saith Buxdorffius) at one of their circumcision-feasts, and one of their Rabbins preached on Pro. 3. 18. Wisdome is a tree of life; but more woodden or ridiculous stufte I neuer heard in all my life. This feast they obserue by example of Abraham, who i made a great feast when the child was weaned: their Kabal peruerbs it, when he was circumcised. The Circumciser abideth some time with the mother, lest the blood should again issue from the child. The mother keepeth within, six weeks, whether it be a male or female; all which z The Iewes make small account of women because they are not circumcised, and because it is written, Pro. 8. O men I call unto you, they thinke women are not worthy of life eternal. Yet are they more eagerly zealous of their superstition then the men. Vul. Carb. l. 1. c. 15.

time her husband must not so much as touch her, or eat in it in the same dish with her. If a female child be borne, there is small solemnitie; only at sixe weeks age, some yong wenches stand about the cradle, and lift it vp with the child in it, and name it; she which stands at the head, being God-mother: and after this they iunke together.

When the fortie daies are accomplished, before the wife may accompany or have any fellowship with her husband, shee must be purified in cold water, and put on white and cleane garments. Their washing is with great scrupulositie, in a common watering, or in private Cesternes, or Fountaines; which must be so deepe, that they must stand vp to the neck in water: and if it be muddie in the bottome, they must haue a square stone to stand on, that their whole feet may stand in cleare water, and that the water may passe betwixt their toes: for the least part not covered with water, would frustrate the whole action: and for this cause they lay aside all their haire-laces, neck-laces, rings: they diue vnder the water, so that no part may bee free from the same. Some Iewesse must stand by for-witness hereof, which is twelue yeares old and a day at least.

They redeeme their first-borne in this sort; when the child is one and thirtie daies old his father sendeth for the Priest^a with other friends, and sets the child on a table before him; adding so much monie, or monies-worth, as amounteth to two florens of gold, or two Dollars and a halfe: my wife (saith he) hath brought me forth my first-borne, and the Law bids me giue him to thee. Doeft thou then giue me him: saith the Priest? he answereth, yea. The Priest asketh the mother, if she euer before had a child, or abortion? if shee answer, No: then the Priest asketh the father, Whether the child, or the monie be dearer to him? hee answereth, the child: then doth the Priest take the monie and lay it on the head of the Infant, saying: This is a first begotten child, which God commanded should be redeemed, and now, saith he to the child, thou art in my power, but thy parents desire to redeeme thee; now this monie shall bee giuen to the Priest for thy redemption: and if I haue redeemed thee, as is right, thou shalt be redeemed: if not, yet thou being redeemed according to the Law and custome of the Iewes, shalt grow vp to the feare of God, to marriage and good workes, Amen. If the father die, before the child be one and thirtie dayes old, the mother hangeth a scroll about his neck, wherein is written, This is the first-borne, and not redeemed: and this child when he cometh of age must redeeme himselfe.

The Iewish Chachamim, or Wise-men, haue left no part of life vnprovided of their superstitious care: as we haue seen concerning the birth and circumcision of their children, with the Purification of the mother, and Redemption of the first-borne. To proceede with them: they enioyne the mother, while shee giueth suck, to eat holeosome foode of easie digestion, that the Infant may suck good milke; so that the heart and stomack be not stopped, but may come so much inore easily to obaine wisdom and vertue. For God hath great care of children, and hath therefore giuen a woman two breasts, and placed them next her heart; yea in the dangerous persecution vnder Pharaoh, Exod. 1. he^b caused the earth to open it selfe, and receiue their Male children, and created therein two stones, from one of which the Infant sucked milke, and from the other honie, till they were growne, and might goe to their Parents: yea, and if you beleeue their Gemara (can you choose?) a poore Iew hauing buried his wife, and not able to hire a nurse for his child, had his owne breasts miraculously filled with milke, and became nurse himselfe. Yea, Mardocheus (saith their Medrasch) sucked the breasts of Hester, and for this cause did shee, after her exaltation, so preferre him. The conclusion is, if shee giue grosse foode to her Infants, shee shall bee cast into hell. Shee must not goe naked breasted, nor too long fasting in a morning, nor carrie her Infants, or suffer them to goe or be naked, lest c the Sunne hurt them, if it bee in the day, or the Moone in the night: and that they may soone learne that the earth is filled with the Maieitic of diuine glorie: and for this cause must they beware, that they neuer goe bare-headed: for this were a signe of impudencie, and ill disposition. And as religiously they must provide, that they be alway girded with a girdle: for the girdle distinguisheth betwixt the heart and the priuities; and in his morning prayer he saith, Blessed bee thou, O God, which girdest Israel with the girdle of strength: which, if he should not haue a girdle on, would be in vaine. Their Mothers therefore sow their girdles to their coats:

coats: with great care they avoid going bare-foot, especially in Januarie and Februarie.

When they can speake, they are taught sentences out of Scripture, and to salute their parents with good-morrow, good-Sabbath, &c. and after seven yeares they adde the name of God, God giue you good-morrow, &c. but they must not name the name of God but in a pure place. These teach them the names of things in the vulgar, and some Hebrew names among, that so they may not commonly be vnderstood: for pure Hebrew they cannot speake, except their most learned Rabbines only. Their children must not conuerse with children of Christians, and their parents make all things in Christians odious to them, that they may season them from their child-hood with hatred of them. When they are seven yeares old they learne to write and reade: and when they can reade, they learne to construe the Text of Moses in their vulgar tongue. When the Mother carryeth him first to the schoole to the Rabbi, she maketh him cakes seasoned with honie and sugar, and as this cake, so (saith shee) let the Law be sweeter to thy heart. Speake not vaine trifling words in the schoole, but only the words of God. For if they so doe, then the glorious Maiestie of God dwelleth in them, and delighteth it selfe with the aire of their breath. For their breathing is yet holy, not yet polluted with sinne: neither is he  bar-mitzuab*, bound to obey the Commandements, till hee be thirteene yeares old.

When he is ten yeares old, and hath now some smattering in Moses, he proceedeth to learne the Talmud: at thirteene yeares, his father calleth ten Iewes, and testifieth in their presence, that this his sonne is now of iust age, and hath beene brought vp in their manners and customes, their daily manner of praying and blessing, and hee will not further stand charged with the sinnes of his sonne, who is now bar-mitzuab, and must himselfe beare this burthen.

Then in their presence he thanketh God, that hee hath discharged him from the punishment of his sonne, desiring, that his sonne by diuine grace may be long safe, and endeouour to good workes. At the fifteenth yeare of their life, they are compelled to learne their Gemara, or the complement of their Talmud Disputations and subtile Decisions about the Text of their Talmud. And in these they spend the greatest part of their liues, seldome reading any of the Prophets, and some not in the whole space of a long life reading one Prophet through, and therefore know so little of the Messias.

At eighteene yeares their male children marrie, according to their Talmud-constitution, and sometimes sooner, to auoide fornication. Their maidens may marrie, when they are twelue yeares old and a day. At twentie yeares they may traffike, buy, sell, and circumuent all they can: for their neighbour in the Law, is (in their sense) such a Iew as you haue heard described.

CHAP. XV.

Of their morning Prayer, with their Fringes, Phylacteries, and other Ceremonies thereof.

He good-wife is to waken her husband, and the parents to awaken their children, when after thirteene yeares they are subiect to the Iewish Precepts: before their Pentecost, they rise before it is light, and after, the nights being shorter, when it is now day. They are to awaken the day, not to tarme till it awaken them. For their Morning-praier must be made whiles the Sunne is rising, and not later: for then is the time of bearing. as they interpret, Lament. 2. 19. And he which is deuout ought at that time to be sad for Ierusalem, and to pray euery morning for the reedifying of the Temple, and Citie: if in the night-time any sheddeth teares for their long captiuitie, God will heare his prayer, for then the Startes and Planets mourne with him: and if hee suffer the teares to trickle downe his cheekes, God will arise and gather them into his bottle, and if any decree be by their enemies enacted against them, with those teares hee wil blot out the same, Witnes^b Dauid, Put my teares in thy bottle, are they not in thy booke?

b Psal. 56. 9.

And if any rubbe his forehead with his teares, it is good to blot out certaine finnes that are there written. In the beginning of the night God causeth all the gates of heauen to be shut, and the Angels stay at them in silence, and sendeth euill spirits into the world, which hurt all they meet: but after mid-night, they are commanded to open the same. This command and call is heard of the Cocks, and therefore they clap their wings and crow, to awaken men: and then the euill spirits loose their power of hurting: and in this respect the Wise-men haue ordained them a thanksgiuing to be said at cock-crow-ing. Blessed art thou, O God, Lord of the whole world, who hast giuen vnderstanding to the Cocke.

They must not rise vp in their beds naked, nor put on their shirts sitting, but put their heads and armes into the same as they lie, lest the walls and beames should see their nakednesse. It is a brag of Rabbi Iose, that, in all his life, hee had not herein faulted. But to goe or stand naked in the chamber, were more then piacular: and much more, to make water standing naked before his bed, although it be night. He must not put on his garments wrong: nor his left shooe before the right, and yet hee must put off the left-foot shooe first; When he is clothed, with his head inclined to the earth, and a deuout minde (in remembrance of the destruction of the Temple) hee goeth out of the chamber, with his head, feet, and all couered, because of the holy Schechinam (diuine glorie) ouer his head. Then he goeth to stoole in some priuie place; for so hath Amos commanded, * *Prepare thy selfe (O Israel) to meet thy God: and DAVID; a All that is within me praise his holy name: that is, all within the body emptie and cleane: For else must not God bee named; and therefore his garments must not be spotted and fouled. To restraine nature too long, were a sinne, and would cause the soule to stinke: and (sauing your reuerence) he must wipe with the left hand, for with the right he writeth the name of God, and the Angels. And in this place and businesse he must take heede, hee thinke not of God or his Word; much lesse name him, for God will shorten the daies of such a one. R. Sira told his Scholers, that the cause of his long life was, that in an impure place he neuer thought of the Word, nor named the name of God. Besides, he must turne his face, and not his hinder-parts toward the Temple of Ierusalem. He ought not to touch his body with vnwashen hands, in regard of the euill spirits which rest thereon till they be washed, and if he should touch his eyes hee would bee blinde, his eares deafe, his nose dropping, his mouth stinking, his hand scabbed with these vn-washed, and therefore venemous hands: and when hee washeth hee must powre water three times on his right hand, and as oft on the left, before one hand may touch the o-ther: he must not be sparing in his water, for store of water, store of health: after the hands, the mouth and face must be washed, because they were created after the Image of God: and how should the name of God be vttered out of a foule mouth? hee must wash ouer a basen, not ouer the ground: he must drie his face very well, for feare of wheales and wrinckles: and that with a cleane Towel, not with his shirt, for this would make them blockish and forgetfull. After all this followeth his Brachab, or blessing, Blessed be thou, O God, our God, King of the whole world, who hast commanded vs to wash our hands. Their hands they must alwaies wash on these occasions: in the morning; at their returne from the stoole; from bathing; when they haue cut their nailes; haue scratched their naked bodie; haue pulled off their shoes with their hands; haue touched a dead body; haue gone amongst the dead; haue companied with their wiues, or haue killed a louse; If he respect washing after these, if he be learned, he shall forget his learning; if vnlearned, he shall lose his sense.*

They^b haue a foure-cornered garment, which some put on with the rest, when they rise; others then, when they will pray. The foure-cornered parts thereof are made of linnen or silke, tyed together with two winding-bands, of such length that they may draw through their head betwixt them, so that those two quadrangular peeces may hang down, one on his breast, the other on his back. In euery of these four corners hangeth a labell, made of white woollen threads, by a litle knot, downwards to the ground, and the same is foure, or eight, or twelue fingers broad. These labels they call Zizis. Those which are deuout wear this garment euery day, vnder a long outward coat, in such sort that those labels may appeare out a litle, so that they may alwaies see them, as monitories of the Commandements of God. When they put them on, they praise God that hath commanded them to weare these Zizis. He (say they) that keepeth duly this Precept of Zizis, doth as much as if he kept the whole Law: for there are in all five knots, compared to the five bookes of Moses: eight threads added to them, make thirtreen. And the word Zizis, maketh sixe hundred, all together amounting to six hundred and thirtreen, the number (as you haue heard) of Gods Commandements. They ascribe the continencie of Ioseph in Potiphars house; and of Boaz, when Ruth slept by him, to these Zizis. May it please your patience, a storie out of the Talmud. One Rab. Iochanan saw a boxe full of iewels, which one of his Scholets, Bar-Emorai purposed to steale, but was forbidden by a voice sounding out of the aire, let it alone Bar-Emorai, for it belongeth to R. Chaninas wife, which in the other world, shall put into the same violet wooll, to make threed for Zizis, that of them, the iust men there may haue their fringed garments sewed. Once, hee which weareth this garment without intermission, is fortified against the Deuill, and all euill Spirits.

e Besides this memorable Vestiment, they weare a certaine knot neare their nose, out of Deut. 6. 8. they shall be frontlets betweene thine eyes. They make it thus. They take a little black foure-square calfe-skin, which they fold eight times, that it may haue foure double folds and distinct breadths. They put into these, distinct Scriptures, the same being foure-fold of parchment. These Scriptures are taken f out of Exod. 13. and Deut. 6. Then take they haire out of a cow or calues taile, and wash them cleane, and binde them about those writings of Scripture, so that any one may see, that they are good by the ends of them appearing out of the skin. This skin they sew with cleane and fine strings, taken out of Calues or Kines bodies, or made of Bulls sinewes, or if such strings cannot be had, with strings of Calue-skin-parchment. Then doe they sew a long and black thong to that thick hide or skin, and knit a knot about it. This peece of worke they call Tephillim, to put them in minde of often prayer: and tie it so about their heads, that the thick knot, wherein the Scriptures are, may hang berwixt the eyes. After this, they take another foure-cornered skin, which they fold as the former, and write certaine verses out of Exodus in parchment, and put it into a little hollowed skin, and sew it vpon the thick folded skin; to which they adde a long thong, and call it the Tephillim of the hand. This they tie to the bare skin, about the elbow of the left arme, that so that which is written may be ouer against the heart, which may hereby bee the more enflamed to prayer. That long string is so fastned that it commeth to the forepart of the hand, thus fulfilling that Commandement, g The wordes which I command thee this day, shall be on thine heart, and thou shalt tie them for a signe in thy hand. They tie on first this Tephillim of the hand, and then that of the head, and make their brachab or prayer, saying, Blessed be thou, O God, our Lord, who hast sanctified vs in thy Commandements, and hast commanded vs to put on Tephillim; looking while he speaketh, diligently on the knot on his fore-head. In folding, sewing, knitting, and tying them, they very subtilly frame the name of God Schaddai: Other their manifold ceremonies about these Tephillim, I willingly omit. Their sanctitie is such, that hee which weareth them must be pure within and without: and if he lets them fall on the ground, all that shall see them so lying, must fast with him one whole day: they must not bee hanged vp bare, but in a bagge: nor may they bee left in a chamber, where a man and his wife lie together, except in triple chest or bagge. A man must not sleepe while he hath them on, nor may he breake winde; and if he haue list to the stoole, he must lay them foure ells from the place of his easement, or lay them against his heart in a double bag. Their women seruants, and sick folkes are free from wearing them. It is sufficient for women to say Amen to their prayers. And all this Moses learned in Mount Sinai.

We haue beene tedious in furnishing our Iew to his Mattins; at Sun-rising is their houre, as you haue heard: but their Rabbins haue enlarged and lengthened that time to about nine of the clock. Where many of the Iewes liue together, they resort at a set houre to their Synagogue. Thither they must goe chearefully: before their Synagogue they haue an yron fastened, to make cleane their shooes, according to Salomons counsell, h Keepe thy foot when thou goest into the house of God. Hee that hath Pantoffles, must put them off, as it is written, i For the place where thou standest in holy ground.

i Exod. 3. 5.

At the entrance in at the doore, he pronounceth some things out of Dauids Psalmes: they must enter with feare and trembling, considering whose presence it is; and for a while suspend their praying for the better attention. And every Jew must cast in a halpennie at least into the Treasure, as it is written; I will see thy face in righteousness, that is, in almes, as they interpret it. In this attention they bow themselves towards the Arke, in which is the booke of the Law, and say, How faire are thy Tents, O IACOB? and thy dwellings, O Israel? And I will enter into thy house in the multitude of thy mercie, I will bow downe in thy holy Temple in thy feare. And, O Lord I have loued the habitation of thy house, and the place of the Tabernacle of thy glorie: and diuers other verses out of the Psal. After these things they begin to pray, as is contained in their common prayer booke: and because these praier are very many, therefore they run them ouer: he that cannot read, must attend, and say Amen, to all their praier. These praier are in Hebrew rimes, Their first praier is, The Lord of the World, which raigned before any thing was created, at that time, when according to his will they were created, was called King, and then when all shall be brought againe into nothing, shall remaine King, to whom shall be giuen feare and honor. He alway hath beene, is, and shall remaine in his beautie for euer. He is One, and besides him there is none other, which may be compared or associated to him, without beginning and end; with him is rule and strength. He is my God and my deliuerer which liueth. Hee is my Rock in my neede, and time of my trouble, my Banner, my Refuge, my Hereditarie portion, in that day, when I implore his helpe. Into his hands I commend my spirit. Whether I wake or sleepe, he is with me, therefore I will not be afraid.

This done, they say then their hundredthⁿ benedictions one after another, which are short, and twice a day repeated. First for the washing of their hands, that if he then forgot it, he might now in the Congregation recite it. Then for the creation of man, and for that he was made full of holes, whereof, if one should be stopped he should die: then, a confession of the Resurrection: then for vnderstanding, giuen to the Cock (as you haue heard) to discern day and night asunder, and with his crowing to awaken them; and in order, Blessed, &c. That he hath made me an Israelite or Jew, Blessed, &c. That he hath not made me a seruant, Blessed, &c. That he hath not made me a woman (The women here say, that he hath made me according to his will) Blessed, &c. That exalteth the lowly, Blessed, &c. That maketh the blind to see; which they should say at their first wakening, Blessed, &c. That raiseth the crooked; at his rising, Blessed, &c. That clotheth the naked; at his apparelling, Blessed, &c. That raiseth vp them that fall. Blessed, &c. That bringeth the prisoners out of prison, Blessed, &c. That stretcheth the world vpon the waters; when he setteth his feet on the ground, Blessed, &c. That prepareth and ordereth the goings of man; when he goeth out of his chamber, Blessed, &c. That hath created all things necessarie to life; when he puts on his shooes, Blessed, &c. That girdeth Israel with strength; his girdle, Blessed, &c. That crowneth Israel with comelinesse; when he puts on his hat, Blessed, &c. That giueth strength to the wearie, Blessed be thou God our Lord, King of the world, who takest sleepe from mine eies, and slumber from mine eie-lids. Then adde they two praier to be preserued against sinnes, euill spirits, and men, and all euill. After this, humbling themselves before God, they confesse their sins, and againe comfort themselves in the couenant made to Abraham, We are thy people, and the children of thy conenant, &c. O happy we! how good is our portion? how sweet is our lot? how faire is our heritage? Oh happy we, who every morning and evening may say, Heare Israel, The Lord our Lord is one God. Gather vs that hope in thee from the foure ends of all the earth, that all the Inhabitants of the earth may know that thou art our God, &c. Our Father which art in heauen, be mercifull vnto vs for thy names sake, which is called vpon vs: and confirme in vs that which is written, At that time will I bring you, and gather you, and make you for a name and praise among all the people of the earth, when I shall turne your captinities, saith the Lord.

Then follow two short praier for the Law giuen them. And then they goe on to the Sacrifices, which, because they cannot execute in action out of the Temple, they redeeme with wordes, reading the precepts concerning sacrifices, according to their times, comforting themselves with the saying of H O S E, P We will sacrifice the calves of our lippes. Then repeate they an Historie of Sacrifice, and a Prayer of the vse of the Law, and how many wayes it may be expounded. This done, they (with a still voice that none can heare) pray for the reedifying of the Temple, in these words; Let thy will bee before thy face, O God our Lord, Lord of our Fathers, that the holy house of thy Temple may be restored to our dayes, and grant vs thy will in thy Law. After, rising with great ioy and clamour, they sing a prayer of prayse in hope hereof; and sitting downe againe, they reade a long prayer, gathered heere and there out of the Psalmes: and some whole Psalmes, and part of 1. Chronic. 30. and lastly, the last words of Obadia. 9 The Saviours shall ascend into Mount Sion, to iudge the Mount of Esau, and the Kingdome shall be the Lords. Which they speake in hope of the destruction of the Christians, whom they call Edomites, and of their owne restitution. (In some of their close Writings, which they will not suffer to come into the hands of Christians, they say that the soule of Edom entered into the bodie of Christ, and that both hee and wee are no better then Esau.) The proceed * singing, And God shall bee King ouer all the earth: in that day God shall be one, and his name one, as it is written in thy Law, O GOD, Heare Israel, GOD our GOD is one GOD: And these words in their next prayer they repeat, resounding that last word † One by the halfe or whole houre together, looking vp to Heauen: and when they come to the last letter thereof, Daleth, d, they all turne their heads to the foure corners and windes of the World, signifying that God is King of the whole world: hauing in the word, echad, many superstitious subtilties; that the letter Daleth in regard of his place in the Alphabet, signifieth foure, and the word echad two hundred forty and fise, whereunto adding haclelochememes, God your Lord is true, they make vp the number of three hundred fortie and eight, and so many members there are in mans bodie: for euery member, a prayer secures them all. And this verse thrice recited, secureth against the ill spirit. They † esteeme it a holy prayer, by which miracles may be wrought, and therefore vse it morning and euening. They haue another prayer called Schone esre, that is, eighteene, because it containeth so many thankesgiuings, which they say twice a day, and the chiefe chanter of the Synagogue singeth it twice by himselfe. They thinke by this prayer to obtaine remission of their sinnes. They must pray it standing so, that one foot must not stand more on the ground then the other, like the Angell, † And their foot was a right foot. When they come to those words in it, holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hosts; they leape vp three times aloft. And he (say their Chachaminim) which speaketh a word during this prayer, shall haue burning coales giuen him to eate after his death. These eighteene thankesgiuings, are for the eighteene bones in the chine or backebone, which must in saying hereof be bended.

After this followeth a prayer against the Iewes reuolted to Christianitie, and against all Christians, saying; These which are blotted out (that is, reuolters) shall haue no more hope, and all vnbeleeuers shall perish in the twinkling of an eye, and all thine enemies which hate thee, O God, shall be destroyed, and the proud and presumptuous Kingdome shall quickly be rooted out, broken, laid euen with the ground, and at last shall vtterly perish, and thou shalt make them presently in our dayes obedient to vs. Blessed art thou God, which breakest and subduest them which are rebellious. They call the Turkish Empire the Kingdome of Ismael; the Roman, Edomiticall, proud, &c. They are † themselues indeed exceeding proud, impatient; and desirous of reuenge. The Talmud saith, That the lying spirit in the mouth of Achabs Prophets, which perswaded him to go and fall at Ramoth Gilead, was none other but the spirit of † Naboth, whom he had before slaine. And † Victor Carbensis, a Christian Jew, testifieth, That there are not vnder Heauen a more quarrelsome people, themelues acknowledging the Christians far mecker then themelues: when they haue this prouerb, that the modestie of the Christians, the wisdom and industrie of the Heathens, and faith of the Iewes, are the three pillars which sustaine the world.

But to reture to their deuotions: After those other before mentioned, followeth a prayer for the good sort, for profelytes, reedifying of the Temple, for sending the Messias, and restauration of their Kingdome. In the end they pray God to keepe them in peace, and when they come to these words, He that make peace aboue, shall make peace

Other their niceties in praying, as laying the right-hand on the left ouer the heart: not spetting nor breaking winde vp or downe; not (interrupted by a King) to cease prayer; to shake his bodie this way and that way; not to touch his naked bodie; and to say Amen, with all his heart: for they that say Amen, are worthy to say it in the world to come. And therefore ^u David endeth a Psalme with Amen, Amen: signifying, that one is to be said heere, and the other in the other world: also in a plaine eminent place, purged from all filth, freed from the sight of women, his face to the East, standing, his feere close together, fixing his eyes on the ground, eleuating the heart to heauen, &c. I hold it enough thus to mention.

cap. 46.

Their praying to the East must be vnderstood from our Westerne parts, because Ierusalem standeth that way: for otherwise Rombam * sheweth that Abraham prayed in Mount Moriah toward the West; and the Sanctum Sanctorum was in the West, which place also Abraham set forth and determined. And because the Gentiles worshipped the Sunne toward the rising, therefore Abraham worshipped Westward, and appointed the Sanctuarie so to stand. The Talmud saith, Praying to the South bringeth wisdom; toward the North, riches.

I might here also adde their Letanie and Commemoration of their Saints almost after the Popish fashion. As thus for a taste. We haue sinned before thee, haue mercie on vs. O Lord doe it for thy names sake, and spare Israel thy people. Lord doe it for (Abraham) thy perfect one, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was bound in thy porches (to wit, in Mount Moriah, where the Temple was afterward builded) and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was heard in the ladder (Jacob) from thy high place, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, do it for the merit of Ioseph thy holy one, &c. Lord, doe it for him which was drawne out of the waters (Moses) and spare &c. Lord, doe it for (Aaron) the Priest, with Urim and Thummim. Lord, grant it for him that was zealous for thy name (Phineas). Lord, doe it for the sweet Singer (Dauid). Lord, doe it for him which built thine house. They name not any, but expresse him after this sort. And then proceed in like manner, with the titles, attributes, and workes of God. Doe it for thy name, Doe it for thy goodnesse, for thy couenant, thy law, thy glory, &c. in seuerall verses. And then to their Saints in a new passage. Doe it for Abraham, Isaac and, Jacob. Doe it for Moses and Aaron, for Dauid and Salomon (as if their combined forces should effect more then single) Do it for Ierusalem the holy Citie, for Sion, for the destruction of thy House, for the poore Israelites, for the bare Israelites, for the miserable Israelites, for the widowes and Orphans, for the sucking and waigned; and if not for our sake, yet for thine owne sake. Then in another forme, Thou which hearest the poore, heare vs; thou which hearest the oppressed, heare vs: Thou which heardest Abraham, &c. With renewing a commemoration of their Saints larger then before: and (after some repeating the diuine titles) in another tune they oppose their Saints and wicked ones together: as Remember not the lie of Achan, but remember Iosua, forgiuing him, and remember Heli and Samuel, and so on in a tedious length.

CHAP. XVI.

Of their Ceremonies at home, after their returne, at their meales and otherwise: and of their Euening Prayer.

Hus haue we seene the Iewish Martins, which they chant (saith a another) in a strange wilde hallowing tune, imitating sometimes trumpets and one ecchoing to the other, and winding vp by degrees from a soft and silent whispering, to the highest and lowest Notes, that their voices will beare, with much varietie of gesture: kneeling they vse none, no more then do the Græcians: they burne Lampes: but for shew of Deuotion or Eieuation of spirit, that yet in Jewes could I neuer discern: for they are reuerend in their Synagogues, as Grammar boyes are at Schoole, when their Master is absent. In summe, their holinesse is the very outward worke it selfe, being a brainelesse head, and a soulelesse bodie. Meane-while, the good-wife at home, against her husbands returne, sweepeth the house that nothing may disturbe his holy cogitations, and layeth him a booke on the table, either the Pentateuch of Moses, or a booke of Manners, to reade therein the space of an houre, before he goeth out of the house about his businesse. This studie is required of euery deuout Iew, either in his owne house, or else in their Schoole or Synagogue. And being thus come home, they lap vp their Tephillin in a Chest, first that of the head, then that of the hand.

They account it healthfull also to eate somewhat in the morning before they go to worke: for whereas there are threescore and three diseases of the gall, a bit of bread, or a draught of wine can cure them all. About eleuen of clocke his wife hath prepared his dinner, pure meats, purely dressed: but if she haue pullen or cattell, she must first feed them. For it is said, ^b I will giue grasse in thy field for thy cattell, and thou shalt eate and be satisfied: you see, the Cattell are first mentioned, And to keepe such Domesticall cattell, is good in respect of the disafterous motions of the Planets, which must some way sort to effect. But if they be studious of almes, and good workes, then Saphyra Rabba the great Chancellor (some Angell) according to his office, registreth the same, and commendeth them vnto God saying, Turne away that planetarie misfortune from such a one, for he hath done these and these good workes. And then doth it befall some wicked man, or else some of the Cattell. Before they come to the table, they must make triall againe in the priuie what they can doe: for it is written, ^c Thou shalt carry out the old, because of the new. Especially let there be cleane water, wherein the household must first wash, then the wife, and lastly the good-man, who presently without touching or speaking ought else, might more purely giue thanks. He (saith R. Iose in the ^d Talmud) that eateth with vnwashen hands, is, as he that lieth with an Harlot, for it is written: ^e For the strange woman a man commeth to a morsell of bread. They must wash before meat and after, so strictly, that they may not keep on a Ring on their finger, for feare of some vncleannesse remaining vnder it. I had rather (saith R. Akiba) die for thirst, then neglect this washing tradition of the Elders: when he had ouely so much water brought him into prison, as might serue him but to one vse of washing or drinking, at his owne choise.

On the Table cleanly spread, must be set a whole loafe well baked, and the salt, and then the householder or the chiefest Rabbi at Table taketh the loafe into his hands, and in the cleaneft and best baked part thereof, maketh a cut into it, and then setting it downe, and spreading his hands on it, saith, Blessed art thou Lord God, King of the world, who bringest bread out of the earth: and then breaketh off that peece of bread which he had cut before, and dipping it into the salt or broth, eateth it, without speaking a word for if he speake, hee must say ouer his grace againe: After this, hee taketh the loafe, and cutteth for the rest. Then he taketh a cup of wine ^{*} (if they haue any) with both hands, and with the right-hand holdeth it vp a handfull higher then the table, and looking stedfastly on the cup, saith, Blessed &c. who hast made the fruit of the Vine. Ouer water they pronounce no blessing: and if there be not three at least at the Table, each

Concerning Angels, it is thus written in the booke Abth. fol. 83. frō the earth to the firmament all is full of troups and rulers, and below are many hurt full and accusing creatures, which all haue their abode in the aire, no place being free: of which some are for peace, some for war, some prouoke to good, some to euil, to life and death, &c. Drus. lib. 7. p. 121.

Sanbed. C. helck. g. Psal. 39. 10. 11 h Schole pulsator among the Iewes, is as our Sexten. They will not admit of bells, because it is an inuentiō of the Chistians, and because (saith Carbenis) they are baptised:

they vse this prouerb therēof, He which ringeth a bell let him fall in the dunghill: and he which hangs on the bell-rope, may he hang in hell. Vit. Carb. lib. 1. cap. 21. i Psal. 84. 4. & 144. 15. & 145. 5.

man must blesse for himselfe: if three or more, the rest say, Amen. Salt is religiously set on in remembrance of the sacrifices. If when they cut, they should cut off the peece of bread, it would offend God. Both hands they spread ouer the Loafe in memorie of the ten Commandements, which God hath published concerning Wheate, of which bread is made. The bread must be had in speciall honor, no vessell supported with it, or set vpon it: and a ^f spirit called Nabal giueth attendance, as deputed to obserue such as (through negligence) treade it vnder foote, and to bring them into pouertie: and another man (dogged by this spirit, which sought to bring him to pouertie) eating victuals one day on the grasse in the field, the spirit hoped to effect his purpose: but this deuout Iew, after he had eaten, pared away the grasse, and threw it with the crummes scattered into it, into the Sea for the fishes, and presently heard a voice, saying, Woe is me foole, who haue attended to punish this man, & cannot haue occasion. They dreame that Elias and euery mans proper Angel attendeth at table, to heare what is said, if they talke of the Law: otherwise an ill Angell commeth and causeth bralles and diseases: and in respect of these spiritual attendants, they cast not their bones beside or behind them. They are curious not to eate flesh and fish together: but first flesh, and then scoure their teeth from the flesh, and eat a bit of bread, and drinke a draught of drinke, before they eat the fish. They must not vse the same knife to meats made of milk, which they vsed in eating flesh. Milke must not stand on the table with flesh, nor touch it.

Besides the 23. Psalme set before them in the meale time, they testifie their deuotion by multitudes of new graces or thankesgiuings, if any better wine or dainties be set before them, yea besides the particulars of their cases, euen for euery good sent, as of Oyle, Roses, Spices, &c. and are of opinion, that to vse any thing without thankesgiuing is to vsurpe and steale it. Let this be spoken to the shame of many profane Esaus with vs, that will rather sell Gods blessings for their meat, then seeke them to their meate: although in them the painient of these by tale, and not by weight is no better then a bead-superstition. They make a religion of leauing some leauings of their bread on the table*: but to leaue a knife there were dangerous, euer since that a Iew once in the rehearsing that part of their grace after meate, which concerneth the reedifying of Ierusalem, in a deepe agonie tooke his knife so left, and thrust into his heart. This their grace is long, containing a commemoration of the benefits vouchsafed their fore-fathers, & a prayer for regranting the same: to send Elias, and the Messias: & that they may not be brought to beg or borrow of the Christians: & for his blessing vpon all of that house, &c. wherunto is answered with a loud voice, Amen: and they say to themselves: & Feare the Lord ye his Saints, for they that feare him haue no want: the Lions lacke and suffer hunger, but they which seeke the Lord shall want nothing that is good: and while this is said, there must not a crumme be left in their mouthes. The prayers must be in that place where they haue eaten: or else they shall lose the benefit of buriall: and a certaine deuout Iew in the field, remembering that he had forgotten his grace, returned backe to the house, and there performing his duty, had miraculously sent vnto him a doue of gold.

In cities where are Synagogues, about fiue in the afternoone their ^b Cleark (or some sitch office) goeth about, & with knocking at their dores, giues them notice of euening prayer: thither being come, they sit downe and say this prayer (of the first word, called Afchre.) Blessed are they which dwell in thy house praying thee continually, Selah. Blessed are the people that are thus, blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. I will magnifie thee O God my King, &c. all that 145. Psalme throughout: he which saith this Psalme thrice a day shall haue his portion in eternall life. Then the chiefe Chorister or Chanter, singeth halfe their prayer called Kaddesch: and then all say those eighreene praises mentioned in Morning Prayer. Then goeth their Chorister out of his pulpit, and kneeleth downe vpon the steps before the Arke, and falleth downe with his face on his left hand (all the people doing likewise) saying, O mercifull and gracious God, I haue sinned in thy sight, but thou art full of mercy: be mercifull vnto me, and receiue my prayer proceeding from an humble heart, Reproue mee not O Lord in thy wrath, nor correct mee in thine anger. and so proceedeth through that whole sixt Psalme: his countenance covered and inclined to the ground. This is done in imitation^k of Iosua. Then the Præcentor or chiefe Chorister againe rising vp saith, And we know not whar to doe, but that we direct our eyes vnto thee. And then they say vp the other halfe of their Kaddesch, and so endeth their Euen-song.

^k Iosua. 7. 6.

Now should they goe home, and after supper returne to performe their Night deuotions: but because a full belly would rather be at rest, and might easily forget his duty, after some pause and stay, they proceede before they goe to their other taske: and in that time of pawling between their vespers and nocturnes, if there be any strife between any, and reconciliation cannot be made, then he which cannot reconcile his neighbour, goeth to the common prayer-booke, and shutting it, knocketh thereon with his hand, saying anikelao, I conclude the businesse; as if he should say, I conclude praying till mine aduersarie be reconciled to me: vntill which thing be effected they may not pray further: and so sometimes their prayers are intermitted then and diuers daies together, if one party will be stubborne. These prayers are for substance much like the former: as against the Christians, and for their owne restitution by their Messias. They depart out of the Synagogue with repetition of those sentences mentioned in the former Chapter.

At Supper they behaue themselues as at Dinner. Going to bed they put off the left shooe before the right; their shirt they put off, when they are couered in their beds, for feare of the walls beholding their nakednes. He that maketh water naked in his chamber shall be a poore man: and the prayer, ^l Hearc Israel, must be his last words on his bed, and sleeping on the same, as in Psal. 4. 5. Speake in your heart on your bed, and be silent. Selah. If he cannot by and by sleepe, he must repeat it till he can; and so his sleep shall proue good to him. The bed must be pure: for how else should they think on the name of God? And it must be so placed, that they must lie with their heads to the South, their feet toward the North, for by this meanes they shall be fruitfull in male children. They haue also their Chamber Morals, instructing of duties betwixt the man and wife, vnmeet for sober and chaste eares. Tis time for our pen to sleepe with them, and end this Chapter.

CHAP. XVII.

Their weekly obseruation of Times, viz. Their Mundayes and Thursdayes, and Sabbath.

Hitherto haue we heard of their prayers every day obserued. They haue also their times designed to the reading of the Law. In the ^m Talmud is reported, that Ezra in the Babylonian captiuitie was Authour vnto the Iewes of ten Commandements First, that on the Sabbath: secondly on Munday and Thursday, with singular solemnitie, some part of the Law should be read: thirdly, that Thursday should be Court or law-day for deciding controuersies: fourthly, that it should be a day of washing, sweeping, and cleansing in honour of the Sabbath: fifthly, that men should then cate Leekes: the sixt, seuenth, eight, and ninth are of womens baking, clothing, combing, battering: the last is of cleansing after vnclane issues. Their learned men confirme this institution of Ezra, by authority of scripture, ⁿ They went three daies in the desert, & found no waters. By waters they vnderstand the Law. For so it is said, Esay 55. 1. Come ye to the waters: that is, to the Law: and therefore they ought not to let three dayes passe without some solemne reading of the Law. Munday, and Thursday are chosen to be the daies, because on ^o Thursday Moses went the second time into the Mount, and returned with the two Tables on the Munday, on which day ^p also the Temple was destroyed, and the Law burnt.

This their deuotion is as ancient, as that Pharisee, Luk. 18. I fast twice in the weeke; that ^q which the most deuout amongst them doe to this day obserue. Yea it seemeth the deuouter sort fast foure daies, saith ^r another, on Munday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the first for Mariners and traouellers by sea, the next for such as passe thorow desert places, the third for children which are troubled with the squinancie: (of this Elias Leuita ^s testifieth, that after the beginning of the world it first assailed children, and after that men; so that sometimes when they neezed, their spirit fled away and they died, whence came that custome of saluting and praying well to men in neezing. The strangling of Achitophel, they also intepret of this neezing farewell). The fourth dayes fast is for women which are with childe or giue sucke: but the Tuesday and Wednesday in likelyhood were not ordinary, as the other. Sunday might not be thus honoured being the Christian Sabbath; and Friday was the preparatiue to their owne. Those two dayes are generally halfe holy-dayes. Assembling early in their Synagogues, besides their ordinary prayers they annex many other. Among others they vse one Prayer called Veburachū, of miraculous effect as appeared in Vespasians time, who committing three ships full of Iewes, without Oare or Marriner to the wide Seas, which arriued in three seuerall regions, Louanda, Arlado, Burdeli (sworke for Geographers): Those which arriued in this last port, by tyrannicall Edict of the King, were to be tryed whether they were true Iewes, as Haranias, Misael, and Azarias made proofe of their Religion. Whereupon three dayes being required (as they said Nabuchadnezzar had granted them) wherein to betake themselves to fasting and prayer: in this time of respite three deuoute Iewes, Ioseph, Beniamin, and Samuel, innented each of them a prayer, which they ioyned into one, and continued in praying, the same three dayes, at the end wherof they cast themselves into the fire, and there continued til it was consumed. Hence arose this ordinance euery Munday and Thursday to vse the same prayer, which is this; And he is mercifull, and pardoning sinne doth not destroy the sinner. He often turneth his anger from vs, and doth not kindle all his wrath. Thou, O my God, suffer me not to want thy mercy: let thy gentlenesse and truth keepe me alwayes. Helpe vs, O God, our God, and gather vs from the Gentiles, &c. for their restitution, as in other their prayers and destruction of their enemies, the Christians. After this they prostrate themselves on their faces (as before) with many other orisons to the like effect.

d The maner of the Law-lecture.

Their solemne ceremonie of the Lawe-lecture followeth; In all^d their Synagogues they haue the fīue bookes of Moses, written in great letters on Parchments of Calueskins, sowed together in length, which at both ends are fastened to pieces of wood, by which the book may be lifted and carried. This book is kept in an Arke or Chest set in som wall of the Synagogue. Before the doors of the Ark is a hanging of Tapestry, more or lesse precious, according to the qualitie of their Feasts, & for the most part wrought with Bird-worke. The booke is wrapped in a linnen cloth, wrought with Hebrew wordes: without that is hanged about some other cloth of Linnen, Silke, Veluet or Golde, to which is fastened a plate of Siluer by a chaine of Golde, vpon the which is written, the crowne of the Law, or bolinesse of the Lord. Then goeth one about, crying, Who will buy^e Gelilah etz chaym. This is an office whereby they are authorized to handle those pieces of wood, and to open the book of the Law. He which giueth most for it, hath it: the money is reserued for the poore. The pieces of wood are called etz chaym, tree of life according to^f Salomon: Wisdomme is a tree of life to them that lay holde thereon. When the^g chiefe chanter hath taken out the booke, and goeth with it into the Pulpit, they all sing out of Nym. 10. 35. Arise O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee: and out of Esay 2. 3. Many people shall goe and say, Come, let vs ascend to the mount of the Lord, to the house of the God of Iacob, and he shall teach vs his wayes, and we will walke in his pathes; for the Law shall goe out of Sion, and the word of the Lord from Ierusalem. When this Pracenter layeth the booke on his arme, he saith,^h Magnifie the Lord with me, and let vs exalt his name together: to which all the people answer, Exalt ye the Lord our God, and bow before his foot-stoole, for it is holy: exalt ye the Lord our God, and bow to the mountaine of his holinesse, for Ieroboah our God is holy. There, vpon a Table couered with silke, hee layeth downe the booke; and he which hath bought the Office, taketh from it the clothes wherein it is wrapped. Then these two call some one of the Congregation by his own and his fathers name, who commeth forth and kisseth the book, not on the bare Parchment (for that were a sinne) but on the clothes which couer it; and taking it by those pieces of wood, saith aloude, Praise the Lord, &c. Blessed be thou O Lord, who hast chosen vs before any other people, and giuen vs thy Law. Blessed be thou, O God, the Law-giuer. Then the Pracenter readeth a chapter out of the booke; and then he

which was called forth, with like kissing and blessing returneth. Then another is called forth, and doth likewise. After him another, who had need be of strong armes: for he listeth vp and carrieth this booke that all may see it, all crying, This is the Law which Moses gaue to the Israelues. This Office is called Hagbabah, and is solde as the former. The women meane-while contend amongst themselues in this Synagogue by some Lattice to haue a sight of the Law: for the women haue a Synagogue apart seuered with Lattices so, besides their pretence of modestie, to fulfill the saying of Zacharie,^k The family of Dauid shall mourne apart, and their wives apart, &c. If he which carrieth the booke should stumble or fall, it were ominous, and should portend much euill. These two Officers sould vp the booke as before; and then come all and kisse the same, and then it is carried to his place with singing. After this they end their Prayers as at other times, saying, Lord lead me in thy right cōsnesse, because of mine enemies, direct thy way before me: and, The Lord keepe my going out and comming in from henceforth for euer. Which they also say when they goe forth on a iourney or to worke.

They prepare* themselues to the obseruation of their Sabbath, by diligent prouision on the Friday before night of the best meates well dressed; especially the women provide them good Cakes. They honour the Sabbath with three bankets: first, on the Friday night when their Sabbath beginneth, another on the Sabbath day at noone: the third before sunne-set. ¹ Eate ye it to day, to day is the Sabbath of the Lord, to day ye shall not finde it (Manna) in the field: do you not see To day thrice mentioned, and therefore by Moses owne ordaining, that Manna must so often be eaten on the Sabbath? The richest Jewes and most learned Rabbins, disdain not some or other office, as chopping of hearbs, kindling the fire or somewhat toward this preparation. The table remaineth covered all that night and day. They wash, and if neede be, shaue their heads on the Friday, and very religiously cut their nailes, beginning with the fourth finger of the left hand, and next with the second, then with the fist, thence to the third, and last to the thumme, still leaping ouer one: in the right hand they begin with the second finger, and after proceede to the fourth, and so forth. These parings if they tread vnder foot, it is a greater sinne; but he which burieth them is a iust man, or which burneth them. Now must they also whet their kniues and put on their Sabbath-holy-day-ayment to salute Malehah the Queene; so they terme the Sabbath. The Clarke goeth about and giueth warning of the Sabbath; and when the Sunne is now ready to set, the women light their Sabbath-Lampes in their dining roomes, and stretching out their hands toward it, say ouer a blessing. If they cannot see the Sunne, they take warning by the Hens flying to roost. The cause why the women now and at other feasts light the Lampes is Magistrally determined by the^m Rabbins, because that Eue caused her husband to sin, yea, with a cudgell belaboured him, and compelled him to eate, which they gather out of his wordes,ⁿ The woman gaue me of the tree (to wit, a sound rib-roasting) and I did eate. Now after they had eaten, the sunne which before shined, as it shall doe in the other life, diminished his light, and for dimming that light she lightens this. And for three causes (you shall beleue their^o Talmud) women die in trauell; for forgetting their dough wherewith to make Cakes with Oyle, Ex. 25. for neglecting their termes; and not lightning the Sabbath-Lampes. which their Cabalists gather out of the three letters of the name of Eue or Chauah. These lights are two or more, according to the condition of the roome.

* This preparation or Parasceue they obserue before the Sabbath, and other feasts. Tertullian calls them cena pure.
1 Exod. 16. 25.

They begin their Sabbath thus soone, and end it also later, then the iust time, in commiseration of the purgatory-soules, which begin and end with them this Sabbath-rest, being the whole weeke besides tormented in that fire. Indas himselfe, in honour of the Christian Sabbath, from Saturday Euen-song obtained like priuiledge: witnes S. Brandon in the legend (can you refuse him?) who found him cooling himselfe in the Sea, sitting vpon a stone which he had sometime remoued out of a place, where it was needlesse, into the high-way. (So meritorious euen in Indas is any the least good worke.)
P There did Indas acquaint Brandon with this Sunday-refreshing of the hellish prisoners, and desired his holy company to scarre away the diuels, when they should after Sunday Euen-song come to fetch him againe, which for that time Brandon granted and performed.

Tract. sanhed. c. 7.

The

The Jewes will not quite emptie any place of water, that on the Sabbath these fiery soules may finde where to coole them. Two Angels attend them home from the Synagogue, one good, and the other euill, which if they finde all things well, that is, Jewishly prepared for the Sabbaths honor, the good Angell saith it shall be for the next Sabbath, and the euill Angell (will he, will he) answereth, Amen. If otherwise, the good Angell is forced to say Amen to the euill Angels denunciation of the contrary. They fealt it with much ceremonie, pronouncing their blessing on the wine: with looking on the Lamp, to repaire that fiftieth part of their eye-sight, which they say in the week time ordinarily is wasted: they couer the bread meane-while, that it should not see the shame thereof, in that the Wine is blessed, for the Sabbaths vse before it. This good cheere on the Sabbath is of such consequence, that for this cause in their Talmud is reported, that a Butcher in Cyprus, which still reserued his best meates for the Sabbath, grew by Diuine reward so rich, that his Table and all his Table-furniture were of gold. You may receiue with like credite the Legend of Ioseph following, who buying continually the best Fish, to honour the Sabbath with it, found in the belly of one of these Sabbath-fishes, a Hat-band of Pearles, worth no lesse then a Kingdome. The Table remaineth spread till the next night. The Lampes must not be put out, nor the light thereof applied to the killing of fleas, to reading or writing, &c. The good man must honour that night with more kindnesse to his wife, then on other nights: therefore eate they Leekes before: therefore they marry on the Sabbath: and the children, then conceiued, must needes be * wife and fortunate. If a Jew trauell, and on Friday euening be further from his home, then a Sabbath-dayes-iourney, he must there abide, be it in the middest of a Wood or Wildernesse, till the Sabbath be past. They sleepe longer on the Sabbath morning; so with their greater pleasure to honour it. They then vse more prayers in their Synagogues; and reade seuen Lectures of the Law. They now also reade the Prophets. They stay here till noone and no longer, least by longer fasting and praying they should breake the Propheticall commandement, Thou shalt call my Sabbath a delight. After dinner also they reade in their Law: for on a time, the Sabbath and the Law put vp their complaints to God for want of a companion and learner, and the Israelites were giuen as a companion to the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath a learner of the Law. But for all this they talke not more busily all the weeke through of Vsurie, buying and selling, then on the Sabbath, and haue their trickes to deceiue God Almighty. Their Euen-song they haue soone done, that they might returne, and while the day yet lasteth, make an end of their third banquet, by which they are secured against hell and against Gog and Magog: They conclude it with blessings and singings, till it be late, to prolong the returne of the soules into Hell: so: presently after they haue ended, there is proclamation through hell, to recall them to their dungeons. In these Songs they call vpon Elias to come; so iustly are they deluded, who scoffingly imputed vnto Christ the calling of Elias. But their Elias being busie (as he sometime said of Ahabs Baal) and not comming, then they request him to come the next Sabbath. But he (it seemeth) is loath to leaue his place vnder the Tree of life in Paradise; where he standeth (say they) enrolling their good workes in the keeping of the Sabbath. When this their deuotion is done, the women in haste run to draw water, because the Fountaine of Miriam, Num. 20. flowing into the Sea of Tiberias, doth from thence emptie it selfe in the end of the Sabbath into all Fountaines. and is very medicinal. After this doe the Iewes make a diuision betweene the Sabbath and the new weeke. The Housholder lighteth a great Candle, called The Candle of Distinction: at whose light he vieweth his walls, and blesseth a cup of Wine, and a little siluer boxe full of sweet spices, poureth a little of the Wine on the ground, and applieth the boxe to euery ones nose to smell to, thus to remedie the stinke, which is caued at the new opening of hell for the returne of the soules: or else to keepe them from swooning at the departure of one of their soules. For they are of opinion, that themselues haue a superfluous Sabbatharie soule, which on that day is plentifully sent in to them, to enlarge their heart, and to expell care and sorrow. Antonius Margarita affirmeth, that they dreame of three soules in each man, besides the Sabbatharie soule, two of which leaue him in his sleepe, one mounting to Heauen, where it leaureth things to come; the other

For their Sabbath-workes they are determined Rabbinically: a horse may have a halter, or a bridle to leade, but not a saddle to lade him: and he that leadeth him, must not let it hang so loose, that it may seeme he rather carrieth it, then leadeth the horse: A Henne may not weare her hose sowed about her legge, but this marke must on friday be taken off. And if any cattell fall into a pit, yet may they not helpe it out on the Sabbath: so spitefully haue their Talmudicall Rabbins endeoured to make (where they could not finde) a falshood in the wordes of Christ, testifying the contrary; But from the beginning it was not thus. The Iew may not milike his cattell, nor eate of the milke when he hath procured a Christian to milke them, except he first buy it but at his owne price. A Taylor may not weare a needle sticking on his garment. The lame may vse a staffe: the blinde may not. Clogges or Pattens to keepe them out of the durt they may not burden themselues with. It is lawfull to carrie a plaister on their sores, but if it fall^b off, they may not lay it on againe; nor may they binde vp a wound anew; nor carrie money in their purses or garments; nor rubbe their durtie shooes against the ground, though they may wipe it off against a wall; nor wipe their hands, fouled with durt, on a Towell, but with a Cowes or Horse-taile they may doe it. If a flea bite, he may remoue it, but not kill it; a lowse he may. But their Doctors disagree in this lowse question: for R. Eliezer saith, One may as well kill a Camell. If a flie light on meate, or a spider run thereon it may not be remoued: they will let men take their moneyp vpon pawnes, but not deliuer it themselues; as the Franciscan hath his boy to take your almes, which his vow will not suffer his holy fingers to touch. Hee must take heede of leauing more corne to fowles that day then they shall eate, if it be in an open place, lest it may there grow, and he be said to sowe corne on the Sabbath. To whistle a tune with his mouth, or play it on an instrument, is vnlawfull; as also to knocke with the ring or hammer of a doore, and therefore the Clarke knocks with his hand when he calleth them to the Synagogue. To knocke on a Table to still a childe; to draw a Letter in dust or ashes, or a moistned Table, is vnlawfull; in theayre not so. Of these Sabbath-labours they haue nine and thirtie chiefe Articles: whereto the smaller (as these) are referred, with much ridiculous nicetie, as the first Article is of tilling ground, wherein is referued digging, filling vp ditches, &c. and to this, going ouer a fallow, rubbing his durtie shooe on the ground, &c. Tis time this ditch be now filled, and we proceed further.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Iewish Passeouer, as they now obserue it, and other their Feasts and Fasts.

The Iewish Feasts, as they were celebrated before the comming of Christ, we haue already spoken. In these dayes they blindly and stubbornely persist in like Observation of times, though with some variation of ceremonie. Their Talmud reckoneth foure New-yeares daies; besides the former^d in March and September, whereof we haue spoken, the first of August beginneth their yeare of breeding cattell, accounting from thence their time of tything. In Ianuarie the first, or, as R. Hillel would haue it, the fifteenth began their new yeare for trees, in reckoning the time of lawfulness to eare or rythe their fruit. Their months and moucable feasts are guided by the Moon: of which they tell^e this storie: The Moone, say they, expostulated with God, because the Sunne shined with her, whereas no Kingdome could endure a partner: wherat God being angrie, darkned her light, that from the fourth day wherein she was created till man was made on the sixth, she shined not. Hence it comes to passe, that at the change in two dayes space she is neuer seene. This is the Rabbinicall custome, if they cannot vntye the knot, they haue (not a cutting-sword, as Alexander for that Gordian) but some leaden Legend or fable Rabbinic-all-ly to determine it. Hieronimus à s. Fide (who about two hundred yeares since was the Popes Physitian, and turned from Iudaisme to Christianity) thus relateth it: The Moone, before equall with the Sunne, expostulated with God for the reason aboue recited, and therefore was commanded to goe lessen her selfe. She (like some shrewish Iewesse) replied, she had wrong, and had spoken but reason: he to satisfie her, said, the Sunne should not shine by night, and yet should she appeare in the day. What, saith she, is a candle before the Sunne? He then promised that his people Israel should obserue their solemne festiuals, according to her designement. But when all this would not content her, as yeelding himselfe guiltie he enioyned a pecaliar meat-offering euery New-Moone, for indulgence of that sinne. Thus doe they both dreame ridiculously, and blaspheme also beyond all names of impietie, in their Talmudicall Tract Holyn. And this they proue out of Num. 18. as truly, as in another place out of Es. 40. that God hauing polluted himselfe with burying of Moses, purged himselfe with fire; the water not being sufficient thereto.

f Their order of celebrating the Passeouer at this day.

g Thus curious were the Roman women in the rites of Bona Dea, not leauing a Mouse-hole vnsearched, lest some male mouse might marre the solemnitie.

The richer Iewes prepare thirtie dayes before for their Passeouer (dentem non mentem) good Wheat for their vnleauened Cakes. The Sabbath before the Passeouer is solemne and sacred, wherein they haue a Sermon concerning the Paschall Lambe. Two or three dayes before the Passeouer, they scowre their household implements, of Wood and Metall, with much curiositie and varietie of Rites. For he that in this Feast vseth an impure vessell, is as hee that hath laine by an vnleane woman. The night before the Feast, the Goodman of the house with a Waxe Candle, a Dish, and Wing, beginneth his search for vnleauened bread; and with other men or boyes to helpe him, after their Amen to his blessing, with Waxe Candles in their handes, they leaue not a Mouse-hole vnsearched, and hide that bread which they meane to eate that night, lest they should finde that, and be forced to burne it. That which they finde, they curiously couer, lest some Mouse by carrying it, should make them haue new worke: and for this cause suppe also in a corner, with great care that nothing fall to the ground. When he hath ended his search, Whatsoeuer Leauen (saith he) is vnder mine handes, which I haue not seene, let it be tossed too and fro, like the dust of the earth. In the morning they make their vnleauened Cakes of meale, grownd three dayes at least. The kneading-trough must be lined with Linnen, lest some of the leauened Meale should cleaue thereto. The Goodman himselfe must draw the liquor that it is kneaded with, and that at Sunne-setting. The Cakes are made with as much scruple, round, and pricked full of holes in a colde place, &c. to keepe them from leauening. They eate little, and the first-borne nothing, till night, that then they may haue the better Paschall-stomacke. At the Euen-song they obserue much-what the same ceremonies, as at the Sabbath. They make at home the fairest shew of their plate and riches, and seate themselues on Chaires (as it were) of Sate, and account now of themselues as great Lords, triumphing over their late Egyptian seruitude; at their returne from the Synagogue they haue a Dish with three Cakes set before them, representing the high Priest, the Tribe of Leui, and the people of Israel: another Dish hath in it a loine of Lambe or Kidde, with a hard egge: another containeth a Gallimawfrey of Apples, Nuts, Figges, Almonds, &c. dressed with Wine in Bricke-fashion (with Cinamon strewed on it, in remembrance of the Egyptian Furnace. They haue also a Sallet of hearbes and a Sawcer of Vineger set on the Table. Then sit they down, and euery one (to the child in the Cradle) hath his cup filled with wine. And here with a carowse after a blessing begins the feast, with a scrupulous vse of these things mentioned: then followeth the supper it selfe, with much riot til midnight, with such chere as they haue, with diuers ceremonies, cursing their enemies, calling for Elias, praying for the re-edifying of the Temple; vsing many Diuine Attributes, as, Mercifull God, Great God, Bountifull God, High God, Faire God, Sweet God, Mightie God, and God of the Iewes, now build thy Temple shortly, very soone, very soone, in our dayes, very soone, very soone. Now build, now build, now build, now build, now build thy Temple quickly; quickly; Strong God, sitting God, &c. ouer and ouer with such battologies. This night they thinke themselues secure against men and Diuels; they leaue their doores open all night to entertaine Elias; and one to their solace playeth Elias in a white linnen garment. Each man drinketh foure cups full of the blessed wine, in regard of foure deliuerances, which the Rabbins finde in Exod. 6. ver. 6. 7. The ceremonies of Moses they are not tyed to (forsooth) because they are not in Canaan.

In the morning they visite the Synagogue with their Sabbath-rites. They bring two Bookes out of the Arke, and call forth five men (and if this feast be on the Sabbath, seuen) to reade out of the same. Nice are their determinations what workes they may doe on this day, and what not: they may dresse no more meat then is this day eaten. If they beate spice, the mortar must lie side-wise, for distinctions sake of the day, &c. fasting and weeping must be auoided; if any farse a Henne, the needle must be threaded the day before, and the thread must be burned, not biten or broken asunder. In such trifles the Schoole of Schammai licenseth to eate the same day an egge laide on a festiual day. Hillel denies it, and betwixt them they haue set the Rabbins by the eares, in this and such profane questions. Their Euen-song hath a short dispatch: and then the next day they reiterate the same ceremonies, and that for certainty because they doubt of the first day of the moneth, and therefore obserue two. The foure daies following are halfe-holy daies. Some workes may be done in them, and not some, and what they doe (to make a difference) must be done otherwise, as writing crooked, &c. and that which cannot without losse be deferred, may now be done. The seventh day they obserue in more compleate holinesse, and the eight too, for the reason before alleadged, to be more secure of the true day. After the feast ended, they satisfie with fasting their feasting-riots, & that on two Mundaies and one Thursday: vnto the three and thirtieth day after, they are sad and heauie in remembrance of R. Akhiba, of whose Disciples foure and twentie thousand died in that space, and were buried by women in the night, and therefore after sunne set, all this while the women lay aside their worke; on the three and thirtie day the men bathe them and shauie their beards, and are merry, because then his Disciples ceased dying.

From the second night of their Pesach they number to their Pentecost e fifty daies inclusiuely, and say, Blessed be thou, &c. which hast commanded vs to number the daies before haruest, of which this is the first or second, &c. they number the same standing, praying withall for the restitution of Ierusalem. They let not bloud on the euen of the Pentecost, because of a supposed winde Tabbach, which should haue slaine all the Ista-elites, if they had refused next day to accept of the Laws. They keepe it two dayes, for the former doubt. They take the Booke twice out of the Arke, and reade thereout the precepts concerning this Feasts sacrifices, now that they cannot performe the things. In remembrance of receiuing the Law, they strew the pauement of their houses, streets and Synagogues with grasse. They eate meates made of milke and cakes. One cake they make seuen times folded in thicknes in remembrance of the seuen heauens, by which God descended to Mount Sinai. Now they must haue good cheere, because at this time the King married his daughter, that is, the Law vnto them.

The f Feast of Tabernacles is obserued eight daies: the two first, and two g last more solemnelly: the middle foure are halfe-holy. They mutter ouer their prayers with such haste, that he is the perfectest who speaks most with a breath. They make them Tabernacles with boughs of foure kinds * of trees (more scrupulous then the Law) in which they sup, but doe not lodge. The Precentor in the Synagogue taketh a bundle of boughs and blesseth and shaketh them for it is written, The trees shal clap their hands, and inouerh them three times to the East, and as often to the West, and to the N. and S. and then vp and downe like a Fencer, and then shaketh them againe, as hauing now put the Diuell to flight. Then one taketh out the Booke, and layeth it on the Pulpit, which they all with their boughs compassie seuen times a day, during the Feast; in hope of like destruction to the Christians as befell Iericho, and then renew the shaking of their boughs. The seuenth day is most solemne, called by them Hoschana rabba, the great Hosanna; as if one should say, i the great feast of saluation or helpe, because then they pray for the saluation of al the people, & for a prosperous new year: and al the prayers of this

g The last day they may kinde fire from another, nor strike fire with stone or metall, nor quench it, although to saue their goods: nor blow it with bellows, but with a reede they may: with many trifling obseruations esse, mentioned by *Munf. feast haue in them the words of sauing, as, O God saue vs, and O God of our saluation, and as thou hast *saue*d the Israelites, and such like: the prayers are therefore called Hosannoth. Then they produce seuen books, & in euery of their seuen compassings lay vp one again. This night they know their fortunes by the Moon: for stretching out their arms, if they see not the shadow of their head by Moone-light, they must die that yeare; if a finger wanteth, he looseth a friend; if the shadow yeeld him not a hand, he looseth a sonne; the want of the left hand portendeth losse of a daughter; if no shadow, no life shall abide with him, for it is written, Their shadow is departed from them. Some Iewes goe yearly into Spaine, to prouide Pome-citrons and other necessaries, for the furnishing this feast; which they sell in Germanie, and other places to the Iewes at excessiue prices. They keepe their Tabernacles in all weathers, except a very vehement storme driue them with a heauie countenance into their houses. Their wiues and seruants are not so strictly-tyed hereto.

They say also that on that day God sheweth how much it shall raine all the yeare following: of plenty also & dearth, &c. and direct their prayers accordingly.
h New Moone-day.

The^h new Moones are at this day but halfe festiuall to the Iewes, accounting themselves free to worke, or not in them; but the women keepe it intirely festiuall, because they denied their Eare-rings to the molten Calfe, which after they bestowed willingly on their Tabernacle. The deuouter Iewes fast the day before. Their Mattins is with more prayers, their dinner with more cheere then on other dayes; and a great part of the day after they sit at Cardes, or telling of Tales. That day when the Moone is eclipsed, they fast. When they may first see the new Moone, they assemble, and the chiefe Rabbi pronounceth a long prayer, the rest saying after him, i New yeares day.

Vit. de Carben. l 1. c. 16. Where he rehearseth these ceremonies, saith some RR. beleeue the world began in March.

The Iewes beleeuing that God created the world, in September or Tisri, conceit also, that at the reuolution of the same time yearely, he sitteth in iudgement, and out of the bookes taketh reckoning of euery mans life, and pronounceth sentence accordingly. That i day which their great Sanhedrin ordained the New-yeares festiuall, God receiuing thereof intelligence by his Angels, sent thither to know the same, causeth the same day a Senate of Angels to be assembled, as it is written, Daniel 12. All things prouided in the solemnest manner, the three bookes are opened; one, of the most wicked, who are presently registred into the Booke of Death: the second, of the iust, who are inrolled into the Booke of Life: and the third, of the meane sort, whose iudgement is demurred vntill the day of Reconciliation (the tenth of Tisri,) that if in the meane time they seriously repent them so, that their good may exceede their euill, then are they entered into the Booke of Life; if otherwise, they are recorded in the Blacke Bill of Death. Their Scripture is produced by R. Aben:^k Let them be blotted out of the Booke of the liuing, and not be written with the iust. Blotting points you to the Booke of Death: Liuing, that of Life; and not writing with the iust, is the third Booke of Indifferents. All the workes which a man hath done through the yeare, are this day examined: The good workes are put in one balance, the bad in the other (what helpe a siluer Chalice or such heauie metall could afford in this case, you may finde by experience in Saint Francis Legend, who, when the bad deedes of a great man, lately dead out-weighed the good, at a dead lift cast in a siluer Chalice, which the dead partie had sometime bestowed on Franciscan deuotion, and weighed vp the other side, and so the Diuels lost their prey:) God (say they) pronounceth sentence of punishment or reward, sometime in this life to be executed, sometime in the other. In respect hereof, their Rabbins ordaine the moneth before to be spent in penance, and morning and euening to sound a Trumpet of a Rams horne, as an Aue Mary-Bell, to warne them of this iudgement, that they may thinke of their finnes; and besides to befoole the Diuell, that with this often sounding being perplexed, he may not know when this New-yeares day shall be, to come into the Court to giue euidence against them. The day before they rise sooner in the morning, to murter ouer their prayers for remission: and when they haue done in the Synagogue, they go to the graues in the Church-yard, testifying, that if God doe not pardon them, they are like to the dead, and praying, that for the good workes of the Saints (the iust Iewes there buried) he will pittie them, and there they giue large almes. After noone, they shaue, adorne, and bathe themselves, that they may be pure the next day; (for some Angels, soiled with impuritie here below, are faine to purge themselves in the fiery brooke Dinor, before they can praise praise God; how much more they?) and in the water they make confession of their finnes; the confession containeth two and twentic wordes, the number of their Alphabet; and at the pronouncing of euery word, giue a knock on their breast; and then diue wholly vnder water. The feast it selfe they beginne with a cup of wine, and New-yeare Salutations: and on their Table haue a Rammes head, in remembrance of ^a that Ramme which was offered in Isaacks stead: and for this cause are their Trumpets of Rammes horne: Fish they eate, to signifie the multiplication of their good workes: they eate sweet fruits of all sorts, and make themselues merrie, as assured of forgiueneffe of their finnes: and after meat, all of all sorts, resort to some bridge to hurle their finnes into the water: as it is written, ^a He shall cast all our finnes into the bottome of the Sea. And if they there espie any fish, they leape for ioy, these seruing to them as the scape-goate, to carrie away their finnes. At night they renew their cheare, and end this feast.

From this day to the tenth day ^b, is a time of Penance or Lent, wherein they fast and pray for the cause aforesaid; and that if they haue beene written in the booke of Death, yet God seeing their good workes, may repent, and write them in the Life-booke.

^c Thrice a day very early they confesse three houres before day, and surcease suites at Law, &c. And on the ninth day very early ^d they resort to the Synagogue; and at their returne, euery male taketh a Cock, and euery female a Hen; if shee bee with child, both: and the householder, saying out of the hundred and fift Psalme, verses 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. and out of Job chapter 23. vers. 23, 24, 25. swingeth the Cock three times about his head, euery time saying, This Cock shall make an exchange for me: hee shall die for me: and I shall goe into life with all the people of Israel, Amen. He doth it three times, for himselfe, for his children, for the strangers that are with him. Then hee killeth him, and cutteth his throat, and hurleth him with all his force to the ground, and roasteth him: signifying that he himselfe deserueth death, the sword, stoning, and fire: the inwards they hurle on the top of the house, that the Crowes may, with it, carrie away their finnes. A white Cock for this purpose is principall; a red Cock they vse not, for they are full of sinne themselues by Esaias authoritie, ^e If your finnes were red as scarlet, &c. ^f Antonius Margarita saith, That this propitiatorie creature shou'd be an Ape, as most like to a man; but they vse a Cock for the names sake: a man in Hebrew is Geaber, which is the Talmudicall or Babylonish name of a Cock. Thus those that with a Rammes horne beguiled the Deuill, and with a Cock beguiled God, iustly beguiled themselues, who refuse that sacrifice of Christ, in whose stripes they might be healed. They haue another fable of a Cock mentioned by ^g Victor Carbensis, thinking that as often as a Cock stands on one legge and his combe lookes pale, that God is angrie: which hapneth, they say, euery day, and only in the day time, and that but the twinkling of an eye. And therefore they praise God which hath giuen such vnderstanding to a Cock.

After the performance of this Cock-sacrifice, they goe to the buriall-place, vsing like ceremonies there, as on New-yeares euen: and after noone, bathe them likewise. After Euen song, he which hath offended others, askes them forgiueneffe, which if he obtaine not at first, then the offender taketh with him three other, and asketh the second and third time: if all this be in vaine, he taketh ten others and reneweth his suite; if he obtaine, it is well; if not, God will hold him excused, and the other partie shall be guiltie ^h; if the partie offended be dead, the offender, with ten other goeth to the graue, and there confesseth his ⁱ faults. They confesse one to another also, and that in a secret place of their Synagogue, where each receiue mutually at his fellowes hand with a leather belt nine and thirtie blowes: at each blow the partie beaten beateh himselfe on the breast, and saith one word of his Confession, taken out of the seuentie and eight Psalme, and eight and thirtieth ^k Verse, being in the Hebrew fifteen words, which he thrice repeateth: then the striker lyeth downe and receiueh like penance at the hands of the former, you may iudge with what rigour. This done, they runne home, and make merrie with the Cocks and Hens before mentioned, supping largely, because of the next dayes fast. Their supper must be ended before Sunne-set: for then

They reſort to their Synagogues with waxe candles (in Germanie they haue for euerie man one) and then light them. The women alſo light Candles at home, as on the Sabbath. It is ominous, if the Candles burne not clearly. They ſpread the floore with Carpets, for ſoiling their pureſt clothes.

Their ſiue humiliations at the feaſt of Reconciliation.

Their humiliations at this Feaſt are ſiue: firſt, foure and twentie, or ſeuen and twentie houres faſt, whereunto children are ſubiect: the Males after twelue yeares, the Females after eleuen. Secondly, they weare no ſhoes. Thirdly, they muſt not annoint them. Fourthly, nor bathe them, nor put a finger into the water. Fifthly, nor companie with, nor touch their wiues. Before they beginne prayers, thirteene of the principall Rabbies, walking in the Temple, giue licence to all, both good and badde, to pray. And the Præcentor or Reader fetcheth the Booke out of the Arke, and openeth it, ſinging a long prayer, beginning all compacts, vowes, and oathes, &c. inſinuating, that all the vowes, promiſes, oathes, and couenants, which euery Iew had that yeare broken, be diſannulled and pardoned: and that, becauſe now all haue power to pray and praife God. They continue ſinging till late in the night. Some remaine all night * in the Synagogue: yea the deuouter ſome ſtand vpright ſinging and praying without intermiſſion all that feaſt, the ſpace of ſeuen and twentie houres in the ſame place. Thoſe that departed the Synagogue, returne in the morning before day, and there ſtay all that day. Often they proſtrate themſelues with their face couered, at euery word of their Confessions knocking their breſt. When it beginne to bee night, the Prieſt draweth his Talles (a large cloth made of haire) before his eyes, and pronounceth the bleſſing, Numb. 6. holding his hand towards the people, who meane-while couer their faces with their hands: for they may not looke on the Prieſts hand, becauſe the ſpirit of God reſteth thereon. Then he ſingeth a prayer ſeuen times together, ſometimes higher, ſometimes lower with his voice: becauſe that God now aſcendeth from them into the ſeuenth Heauen: and they with their ſweet melodie bring him on the way. Then they make a long and ſhrill ſound with their Rammes-horne-trumpet: and there followeth preſently a voice from Heauen, Goe eat thy bread with ioy and gladneſſe, &c. After this they returne home, ſome carrying home their lights, to diſtinguiſh the holy Times (as you haue heard) from the prophane: ſome leaue them in the Synagogue all the yeare, at certayne times lighting them. Some Saint-Iewes prouide to haue a wax-light continually burning all the year long in the Synagogue. In their returne they wiſh to each other a good yeare. For the Bookes, before mentioned, are now cloſed; nor may they expect any alteration. They ſup largely, and betimes the next morning returne to the Synagogue, leſt Sathan ſhould complayne at ſo ſoone a cooling of their zeale. But the Deuill may be quiet; for when the Law was giuen, ^a Sammael the euill ſpirit complained, that he had power ouer all people, but the Iſraelites: God answered; That he ſhould haue power ouer them, if on the Reconciliation-day he found any ſinne in them: But he finding them pure, ſaid, That this his people were like the Angels, liuing in vnitie, without eating or drinking. c The feaſt of the Lawe fini-
ſhed.

The Iewes diuide the Law into two and fiſtie parts, and reading euery Sabbath one, the laſt falleth on the next day after the feaſt of Tabernacles, about the three and twentie day of September. In this c day they leape, dance, and make much ioy. They aſſemble in their Synagogue, and take all the bookes of the Law out of the Arke (lea-uing in it meane-while, that it be not left emptie, a burning light) they reade the firſt Lecture and the laſt thereof, and leape about the Arke with the Bookes; and they hurle Peares, Nuts, and ſuch fruits among the youth, which in their ſcrambling ſometimes fall together by the eares, and marre the ſport. On this day they ſell their Synagogue-offices, the Clarke making proclamation: who will giue moſt at the third time, obtayneth firſt the office of lightning the Lights all the yeare, then that of prouiding the Wine, which they uſe to beginne the Feaſts with, in reſpect of the poore, which haue haue no wine to hollow at home. Thirdly, Is set to sale the office Gelilah, of folding vp and vnfolding the Law. Fourthly, Hagbohah, of lifting vp the Law, and carrying it in Procession. Fifthly, The office Etz-chaym, of touching those turned peeces of wood, whereto the Law is fastened: which the yong men are forward to buy, in hope of holinesse and longer life. Sixthly, Aeberon, to bee called forth last on the festiuall dayes, to reade somewhat of the Law. Seuenthly, Sebetria, to be deputed or substituted in place of the negligent officer, &c. The monie, hence arising, is for the vse of the poore, and reparations of their Synagogue: but in these sale-offices, wealth hath more honour then worthinesse.

Their feast of Dedication, wee cannot say much more of, then that which already hath beene said: much nicenesse herein is obserued, about the lights wherewith they solemnize this darknesse, which I willingly omit: these lights they vse in their houses all the space of these eight daies burning.

Their * feast of Lots they keepe with all riot two dayes, as with some at Shroue-ride: ^{* Hospinian. ex} the men disguising themselves in womens habite; the women in mens: they quaffe ^{M. Lombard.} and drinke (it is, saith Rabbi Isaac, Tirna, a good worke) till they finde no difference betweene Arur Haman, and Baruch Mordecai: curfed bee HAMAN, blessed bee MORDECAI; vociferations that day obserued.

They ^a obserue festiuall the Equinoctials and Solstices; and a certayne Rogation day: ^{a Hospinian,} they vse the fasts before mentioned out of Zach. 7. with other superstitions. Some of them ^b fast also, as is said, on Mondayes and Thursdayes; and some on the tenth of ^{b Syn. Iud.} March for the death of Miriam: at whose departure, ^{Buxdorf.} a certayne fountaine dried vp, and the people were left without water: but in this moneth the most Rabbins will not allow fasting, because of their deliuerance therein out of Egypt. Some fast for the death of Samuel, Aprill 28. and for the taking of the Arke, Aprill 10. and at other times for other Prophets. Some fast on the new-moones euen: some, when they haue had an unfortunate dreame; and all that day in which their Father died, through their whole life. Their fasting is an abstinence from all eating and drinking till night. But of these fasts and other their solemnities, is said before in the abstract of their Kalendar, taken out of Ioseph Scaliger. Their fast on the 17. of the fourth Moneth for the destruction of their Citie is rigorously kept, and from thence to the ninth day of the moneth following, are holden vnluckie dayes, in which schoole masters may not beat their scholars, nor any man will sue at the law. And for the burning of the Temple in the ninth day of the fifth moneth they goe bare-foot, reade heauie stories, and Ieremies Lamentations, and mourne among the graues of the dead, and are sad all that moneth: from the first to the tenth they eate no flesh nor drinke wine, nor bathe, nor marrie, nor cut their haire; the sue not at the law; for Hosee saith, The moneth shall deuoure their por- ^{Hof. 2. 7.} tion: and they shall be taken, saith Ieremie, in their moneth. On the eight day they eate ^{Ier. 2. 24.} only Lentils: for they may not eate Pease or Beanes, because they haue black spots like murtheres, which Lentils want, and therefore more fitly represent a heauie man which wanteth his mouth for sorrow: egges they may eate in the night for their roundnesse: for sorrow as if it were round rolleth from one to another. They haue their fasts also on speciall occasions, as they tell of one Chone Hammagal, which in a great drought, put himselfe into a pie made fit for his body, and prayed, saying, Lord of the World. the eyes of thy children are vpon me, as one whom they thinke familiar with thee: I sweare by thy holy name that I will not come hence till thou shew mercie. And then it rained presently, for how could it choose. They tell the same pie-tale of Moses likewise, and of Habbacuc, expounding that Hab. 2. 1. I will stand on my watch, I will stand in my Pie. Their manner is, saith Vilior Carbenis, to curse Titus, and say he was of the generation of Agag the Amalechite, and such a blasphemmer as neuer was any, and that for his blasphemies he was stricken with madnesse.

CHAP. XIX.

Of their Cookerie, Butcherie, Mariages, Punishments, Funerals.

BUt why doe we intertayne you so long in Feasts and Fasts? both almost violent to humane nature, howsoever the Glutton is neuer gluttered with the one, and the superstitious rather kill the flesh, then the vices of the flesh, with the other? Medio tutissimus ibis. We will soberly recreate your spirits with a walke into the Cooke-roome, and thence to the butchery, and then to the Bride-chamber, to take view of their Espousals, Mariages, Diuorces, and thence diuorce your eyes from these spectacles, and diuert them to their Beggars, Penances, and to that fatall diuorce, ending your walke where the walkes of all flesh end, at Death and the Graue. They haue ^a Kitchen-vessells of two sorts, one for flesh, another for whit-meats. Their milke vessels of wood are marked with three cuts, because that sentence, Thou shalt not see the a Kid in his mothers milke, is three times in the Law repeated. Euery Jew carrieth two kniues with him, one for flesh; the other for cheese and fish, and these also are marked with three cuts. And if these vessels should be intermingled ^a, our Iew might not eate that which is dressed therein: yea the innocent vessels are broken if of earth, most accurately washed if of wood, and purged in the fire if they be of yron. They see the nor milke and flesh at one time, and ouer one fire, ouer against each other: nor set them together on the Table, but separate them with somewhat set betweene. One cloth is laid for flesh, and another for whit-meate. Hee which eateth flesh, or broth thereof, may not eate white-meates an hour after, yea the most religious will abstaine ^b fixe houres after. Yet may they eate a Hen together with Almond-milke. If any haue not the gift of such abstinence, very carefully must he cleanse his teeth and wash his mouth, and with a peece of drie bread take away the taste of the flesh. If any suet fall into their whit-meats, they may not be eaten, except there be sixtie times as much of the meat as of the suet. An egge may not be poched in a flesh-vessell: they breake it also, and diligently obserue that none of that bloudie resemblance in the top of the egge remaine. If in cutting vp of a Hen they finde egges, they may not eate them till they bee washed and sofined in water and salt. Flesh and fish may not be dressed, or set on the table, or eaten, together: for this (they write) would bring the leprosie. In their diet difficulties they consult with their Rabbines. Glasses, knives, and all their kitchen vessels new-bought, must be curiously washed, and if they will beare it, purged with the fire.

Butcherie is with the Iew exalted about the liberall sciences, and must be learned by much bookishnes and long experience. They haue a booke of shamble-constitutions, and in harder cases they aduise with some learned Rabbi. Neither may any practise this Arte without licence from the Rabbi, whereby he signifieth that he had taken examination and prooffe of the partie, and found him expert therein both in word & deed, and therefore hath permitted him to kill, and others to eate the meate by him killed: prouided that he diligently reade euery weeke for one yeare, and euery month the next yeare, and once a quarter during his life, the Constitutions abovesaid. They haue their especiall kniues, for this businesse, great ones for greater cattell, and small for the smaller: the greater haue blunter and broader points: if they haue any rifts in them they may not vse them. The greater beasts feet must be bound in remembrance of Abrahams binding Isaac, and then with one cut or thrust he cutteth the Wes and asunder; which done he lookes on his knife if there be any rift in it, for that would terrifie the beast, and cause the bloud to recoil back to the heart, whereby the beast would not be fit for vse as retayning some of the bloud. After this, hee hangs vp the beast, takes out the inwards, and cutting a hole on both sides of the heart, thrusteth his hand through the same into the bodie of the beast, to search if there bee any bloud: and if there bee any fault in the beast it is not for their diet, applying that which the law saith of a carkasse found torne in the fields. They cut the throat of a bird inlike manner, if it be a Foule which hath quills in the wings, in remembrance of an office performed by the soules sometimes, sometimes, as they say to Rebecca, when she descended from her Camel at the sight of Isaak; and therefore they let the fowle bleed into a heap of ashes, and therein cover the blood. They cover the blood also of other creatures in the ground, because the Earth opened her mouth to drinke in the blood of Abel: and because Satan should not accuse men of iniustice for slaying the innocent beasts, seeing so much blood-shed by them. When they have killed a great beast, they cut out all the veines and sinewes (of which subiect they have written speciall Treatises) and likewise all the Suet: which done, they diue them in water to mollifie them, and wash them throughly to rinse away all the blood; and then lay them on a bord, that all the water may passe from them: after which they salt them in a vessell full of holes, that the salt may draine out all whatsoever bloudinesse yet remaining. They eat not the hinder parts in remembrance of Lab-cobs thigh.

But in Italy they have inuented a new anatomizing trick, by taking away the veines and sinewes to make them lawfull. Pitie they cannot doe the like for swine and other forbidden meats: but you see they have some trickes to cousin God, as before to cousin the Diuell: but the most cousinage (saue that in the former they cousin themselves) is to Christians which buy those hinder parts of them, in polluting those meats, before they sell them, with filth, and with vrine of their children, adding curses and imprecations to the eaters. Thus you see the Jew-butcher had need be no botcher, but halfe a Physitian in Anatomizing, and halfe a Rabbine in cases of conscience. And who knoweth whether so many Iewish Physitians come not from (and perhaps also carrie to) the Shambles?

But weary of this bloudie spectacle, let vs take a more pleasant view, of their Virgins and Espousals. These were made, saith e Moses de Kórsi, either with money, or with an instrument, or with copulation. It seemeth this last is vnderstood of such as had lien with a maide, and therefore must by the d Law marrie her (if the father denied him not his daughter) whereas otherwise they might not haue carnall companie before the marriage were solemnized, this being forbidden no e lesse then to lie with a woman in her discase. Their Prayer-booke f saith thus, He which shall espouse a woman, bringeth witnesses, and before them doth betroth her with money, or somewhat money-worth, which he giueth her saying, Be thou espoused to me according to the Law of Moses and Israel. If there be no witnesses it is nothing, notwithstanding they both confesse it. If one shall affiance a woman to another, he saith, Be thou espoused to N. with this Ring, according to the Law of Moses and Israel. g Buxdorfius (to whom I am most beholding in many of these reports) writeth that when promise hath passed betweene two, many Iewes are called together into a great chamber: where euerie of the youthes holdeth a pot in his hand. Then comes one, and reades the letters of contract, that N. sonne of N. and N. daughter of N. haue promised marriage to each other, each giuing so much in dowrie, which marriage is to be solemnized on such a day: and the partie which faileth in the promises, shall giue the other fiftie Florens. This done, they wish ioy to each other: and the Iewlings presently breake their earthen pots, whereby they signifie to the parties prosperitie and abundance. At parting, euery one hath a cup of wine giuen them. Eight dayes after neither partie goeth out of the house: and many youthes come and make merrie with the Bridegrome, imitating (they thinke) Sampson herein. Some say h that the man taketh the espoused Bride home to his house, to be both witnesse and keeper of her virginities till the marriage solemnitie. The day before the marriage, the Bride must wash her in that absolute manner i before described, certaine women ringing with somewhat when she goeth in and out of the water, some of them also leaping and dancing. The Bridegrome sends the bride a wedding girdle embossed with k gold, and she him another with siluer studs. On the wedding day the Bride adorne her selfe in the best Iewish dréssé, with her marriage attire, and by women singing their sweetest Epithalamia is conueyed into a chamber, and there placing her on a faire seate, braid her haire into goodly cutles, and put a vaile ouer her eyes (in imitation of *Rebecca*s modestie) singing mean-while, dancing, and expressing the greatest signes of ioy, thinking they therein please God, as being taught by their Rabbines, that God vsed the like curling, singing and dancing, when he presented Eue to Adam; ¹ yea refused not to serue that new couple, and with his owne hands made the canopie vnder which they were to receiue their marriage blessing, the Angels with pipes and trumpets making musicke to leade the dance. That which Moses saith ^m, God built a woman, the Talmud interpreteth, He made curls, and he brought her to Adam, to wit, with leaping and dancing. When the marriage benediction is to be solemnized: foure boyes beare a ⁿ canopie on foure poles into the place appointed, which is some street or garden ^o abroad in the open aire, the people sounding their acclamations, Blessed be he which commeth. The Bride (being led by others) goeth three times about the Bridegrome, as a cocke goeth about a hen, and that forsooth to fulfill that Prophecie, P. A woman shall compasse a man: he also must fetch one compasse about her. The people also besprinkle the Bride with wheat, crying out, Increase and multiply, according to that of the Psalmist, ^q He filleth thee with the fat of wheat. In some places they mingle money with the wheat, which the poore Iewes gather vp. The Bride stands on the right hand, for it is written, ^r Tby wife standeth at thy right hand: with her face also to the South, for then she shall be fruitfull. The Rabbi which marrieth them, taketh the end of the Vestment about the Bridegromes necke, (they call it Talles) and puts it on the Brides head, after the example of ^t Boaz and Ruth: and then takes a glasse filled with wine, ouer which hee vttereth the marriage blessing praying God by whose instinct these persons were espoused: and so reacheth the glasse to them, and bids them drinke. This glasse, if she be a Virgin, hath but a narrow mouth, at Wormes they vse an earthen pot. Now the Rabbi receiuing a Ring of pure gold, without any ^u Jewell in it, and sheweth it to some witnesses, asking them if it be good and worth the money it cost; and then puts it on the brides finger, and with a loud voice pronounceth the spoufall letters. After this he takes another glasse of wine, and blesseth God that the Bridegrome and Bride haue accepted of each other, and giues it them to taste. This done, the Bridegrome breaketh the former glasse against the wall or ground, in remembrance of the destruction of Ierusalem: in which respect, in some places they put ashes on the Bridegromes head. Hee weareth for this cause a black hood on his head like a mourner: and the bride likewise weareth a black cloth, fit to terrifie children with the defonnitie. Thus doe they mixe mirth and mourning, as Dauid warneth, Reioyce vnto him in trembling. This ended, they sit downe at tables, and then must the Bridegrome make triall of his breast in singing a long prayer: others in the meane time call to make readie the hens. Then is there a hen and an egge set before the Biide: of that the Bridegrome carueth her a peece, and then presently all the company, men and women, teare the hen amongst them like hungrie hounds, snatching out of each others hands and mouthes, and all to glad the new married couple. The egge is not sodde, but in another scene of mirth, one casteth it in the face of another, of some Christian especially, if any be present at the nuptialls. In the same is a mysterie included for the Bride, that she shall haue as easie trauell in child-birth, as the hen layeth her egges. After this they fall to their cheere, and dances; one they call the Mitzuab or commandment-dance, as if God had enioyned it. The chiefe guest takes the bridegrome by the hand, another him, and so on through the company: likewise the chiefe woman takes the Bride, another her, and so one another: then do they dance in a long row with a tumultuous noise, and so end the nuptiall sports. Among all their other blessings, the Bridegrome is to say one, ubi perspexerit sanguinem virgineum, to vse the words of Genebrard, who expresseth it, being borrowed from some words of the Canticles, fleshly abused by such application.

N. lib. 3. cap. 50.

The mariage commonly lasteth eight daies: and on the Sabbath they dance the lustiest of all, doing the Sabbath herein a singular honor, because that also is called a Bride. It is prohibited to bid any vncircumcised guest to this banquet: for ^u Salomon saith, The stranger doth not intermeddle with his ioy. Yea the good Angels seeing such there, will depart; and the euill will come and raise strifes and contentions. For they thinke no ^x place emptie from the earth to the skie, but all full of good or bad Angels flying or standing in the same. The mariage ^y is in publike, lest whoredome should be couered vnder that pretext, pretending themselues married when they were not.

Let it not grieue you to heare somewhat of the duties betwixt man and wife. The husband oweth ten things to the wife: ^a three according to the Law; her nourishment, her cloathing, and her time; namely, of due bencuolence to be performed; and seuen things according to the words of the Scribes: the first whereof is the fundation of dowrie, viz. two hundred denarij, if she be a virgin, otherwise an hundred. The other concerne the condition of the dowrie. The woman which rendereth not her husband his due, is rebellious and refractarie; and he is bidden to expell her without a dowrie. The conditions of the dowrie were: first, to cure her in sicknesse: secondly, to redeeme her being captiue: thirdly, to burie her, being dead: fourthly, to nourish her out of his owne goods, and that she dwell in his house in her widow-hood: fifthly, to keepe her daughters till marriage: sixthly, that her sonnes inherit. They appoint not only loue, but honor to the wife (as Peter also enioyneth to this weaker vessell) which honor, they say, is in meat and drinke, and goodly garments, for which he shall (this was a womans friend) haue fauour with God. The Author of Arbaa Turim, addeth, That a man should loue his wife as his owne bodie, and honor her aboue his bodie, and keepe her as one of his members, For the wife is the other halfe of man, and a man without a wife, is but halfe a man. And let him take heed of striking his wife, said ^b another, or to be virulent in termes against her. For, for her teares (how pitifully easie are they to some?) his punishment is necre. And howsoeuer since the destruction of the Temple, the dores of Prayers hath beene shut, yet the dores of teares hath not bin shut, as saith Danid, Be not thou silent at my teares. And should not a man honor his wife? Yes, saith ^c R. Hanina, for a man hath no blessing but for his wife, as it is written, He blessed Abraham for her. Let a man cloath himselfe (I would not haue women heare it) beneath his abilitie, his children according to his abilitie, and his wife aboue his abilitie. Let the wife honor her husband as her father, and feare to displeasē him, and let him spare her in his anger, remembering that she was taken out of his ribbes. But for the wiues choice, A man ought, saith ^d one, to sell all that he hath and buy a wife, the daughter of a wise Disciple: if he finde not such an one, let him take a daughter of the great men of his time: if not such, the daughter of a Synagogue-Ruler; in that defect, let him take the daughter of one which gathereth almes: if not, then of a Schoole-master, and not the daughter of the people of the Land, of whom the Scripture saith, ^e Cursed be he that lieth with a beast.

They say that a man ought ^f not to lodge in the same chamber, no not with his sister, daughter, or daughter in law: yea, their wise-men forbid conference with a woman altogether.

The bill of diuorce is still practised among the Iewes: it must be written in twelue lines (it is therefore called Get) neither more nor lesse, and deliuered to the woman before three credible witnesses, vnder their hands and seales. Then doth the husband deliuer it to her, saying, Lo woman, the bill of thy diuorce, take it of me, by it being diuorced from, be thou free to another husband. The tenor of this bill is this: The second day of the weeke, the eight and twentieth of the moneth, N. in the yeare of the world 5363. as we heere at Mentz vpon Rhene vse to reckon, I Isaak, sir-named Eckendorf, sonne of R. Abr. now dwelling at Mentz: of my free will, without constraint, thee Sara, sir-named Trummerle, daughter of R. Levi, which hitherto hast beene my wife, haue determined to free, forsake, and diuorce. And now to forsake, free, and put thee from me, that thou mayest be thine owne, and at thine owne free will and pleasure mayest depart whither thou wilt, and none from hence forth for euer shall prohibite thee: And thou art so freed, that thou mayest marry to any other man.

This diuorce may not be done in euery place, but they haue some speciall place appointed, noted, and knowne, situate on some knowne Riuer: whereto certaine chiefe Rabbines are called by writing, if there be none there dwelling, which consummate the businesse. By the old ^h Law, a woman might be reconciled to her husband before the Bill of diuorce giuen, not after.

The obseruation of the brother, to marrie the wife of his brother deceased without issu, or else to lose the inheritance, which was testified by pulling off his shooe, and spetting in his face; is now thus ruled by the Rabbines, that none shall marrie such a widow, widow, but rather suffer the promised ignominie; which is performed in this sort. She comes before the chiefe Rabbi with five witnesses, where the Rabbi demands, if she haue been three months a widow, if her husband had a brother vnmarried, if the partie conuicted be he, &c. and lastly, if she be fasting (for other wise) she might not spee in her brothers face. Of him also the Rabbi asketh like questions, and receiuing a deniall of marriage, there is brought a shooc of singular fashion for that purpose, which he putteth on his right foot bare, and then setteth himselfe against a wall. The woman comes, and disclaiming his affinitie, stoupeth, and with her right hand (for if she want a right hand, it putteth the Rabbines out of their right wits to skanne, whether with her teeth, or how else it may be done) vnlooseth the shooc and taking it off, spets in his face, so that the five witnesses may see it, saying, Thus it shall be done with him which will not build the house of his brother.

For this they alleage, Leuit. 12.4.

In the time of her vncleanness, a woman may not enter into the Synagogue, nor pray, nor name the Name of God, nor handle any holy booke; which if they obserue, the Rabbines promise them longer life. As soone as she knoweth of her vncleanness, she presently separateth her selfe from her husband the space of seuen dayes, not touching him, nor sitting on the same seate, nor eating in the same dish, or on the same cloath, nor may drinke out of the same cup, nor stand against him, nor speake in his face. If one will giue any thing to the other, one layeth it on a bench or rable, and goeth away, and the other commeth and taketh it. They say it procureth the Leprosie in the children which are then gotten, which they obiect to Christians.

When shee hath numbered seuen ⁱ dayes of her vncleanness, shee proceedeth to number as many of her purification: after which time finding her selfe pure, she clotheth her selfe in white, and taking a woman with her, washeth her selfe in cold water (some in winter put in warme water to it, which others in the coldest season refuse) and leaues not a haire of her head vnwashed, as before is described. Some ^k fast till they haue done it, lest the flesh in the teeth should hinder the water from comming to them; for mouth and eyes must be open, and they must stoope, that the pappe keep not away the water from the breast: and if they haue a plaister on a sore, it must off, and their nailes must be pared.

Buxdorf. c. 33. Iewish beggers.

The poorer Iewes on the Friday night, and euery Festiuall, entering into the houses of the richer, beg prouision for the Feast. And if any be exceeding poore, the Rabbines make him a licence to beg, therein testifying of his honestie and Iewish faith; where-with he wandereth through the Countrey, visiting all the Iewes he can finde. And if he come to a place where are many Iewes, he sheweth his licence to the chiefe Rabbi; or to the Clarke which calls men to the Synagogue, or to the Elders, or Ruler of the Synagogue, which is as their Consul, or to the Ouerseers of the poore, and craueth their fauour: which granted, he standeth with two others at the dore of the Synagogue, and beggeth; or else those two go from house to house and beg for him. The like is done when a poore Iew hath a daughter marriageable; to beg for her dowrie. When poore Iewes trauell, they may turne in to another Iewes houte, where (their prouerb is) the first day he is a guest, the second a burthen, the third a fugitiue.

Cap. 34. Diseases of the Iewes.

The falling sicknesse is vsuall among the Iewes, and they vse to imprecate it to each other in their anger, as they also doe the plague. In a generall pestilence they write in their chamber strange characters and wonderfull names, which (they say) are the names of the Pest-angels. And I once saw (saith our Author) Adiridon, Bediridon, and so on, the word Diridon riding on quite through the Alphabet, written with great letters in their houses, as a present remedie for the Plague. The Leprie they haue seldome, which may be attributed to their diet.

Cap. 35. Iewish penances.

Now the Sword and Scepter is taken from them, in stead of other penalties, they inflict infiect sharpe penances according to the nature of the crime. Thus the Adulterer satisfieth for his hot lust in cold water, wherein he is enjoyned to sit some winter dayes: and if the water be frozen, the ice is cut, and he set therein vp to his chinne, as long as an egge is roasting. In summer time he is set naked in an Ant-hill, his nose and eares stopped, and after washeth himselfe in cold water. If the season be neither cold nor hot, he is enjoyned a certaine kind of fasting, in which he may not eat any thing till night, and then only a little bread and water is allowed him, and yet he must after endure the Ant or water-penance. In Medrasch is written, that Adams fate vp to the nose in water an hundred and thirtie yeares, till he begate Setb, for eating the forbidden fruit. If the penance seeme lighter, they enioyne him further to runne thorow a swarme of Bees, and when the swelling of his bodie through their stinging is abated, he must do it againe and againe, according to the measure of his offence. If he hath ofien that way offended, he is bound to endure that penance many yeares, yea sometimes a three yeares fast together, eating bread and water at supper, otherwise nothing, except he rather chuse to redeeme this, with fasting three whole daies together in each yeare, without tasting any refection at all, as Queene Esther did. When any hath lien with a woman in her vnclannesse, he incurreth the penance of fortie daies fast, and twice or thrice euery of those dayes to receiue on his bare back with a leather thong or girdle nine blowes: to eat no flesh or hot meat, nor drinke any wine, but on the Sabbath. If a man kisse or embrace his menstuous wife, the case is alike. A robber is adjudged three yeares banishment, to wander three yeares thorow the Cities where Iewes dwell, crying aloud, I am a robber, and suffer himselfe to be beaten in manner aforesaid. He may not eate flesh, nor drinke wine; nor cut the haire off his head or beard: hee must put on his change of garments, and shirts vnwashed. He may not wash himselfe: euery month once he must couer his head: he must weare his arme, wherewith he committed murder, fastened to his necke with a chaine. Some are enjoyned that where they sleepe one night they may not sleepe the next, that they may wander ouer the world like Cam. Some are constrained to weare an iron breast-plate next their skinne: and some to throw themselues downe before the dore of the Synagogue, that they which go in may treade on him. That Iew which accuseth another before a Christian Magistrate, is accounted a Traytor, and neuer made reckoning of after.

But why doe I tire the Reader, to whom I feare I haue bene ouer tedious? But in this matter of Religion, of whom is it fitter to protract discourse, then of them, whom the old world yeelded the onely example of Truth, and the present age, a principall example of falsehood and superstition? Let it not grieue the Reader, to performe the last office of humanitie to our Iew, and as he hath seene his birth, his Synagogue-Rites, and home-superstitions, so to visit him on his death-bed, and help lay him in his graue: and examine his hope of the Resurrection, and of their Messias, and we will end our Pilgrimage in this Holy Land.

When ^a a man lieth sicke, the Rabbines visit him; and if he be rich, order is taken for his Will, and then they exhort him to perseuere constantly in their Faith, They aske him if he beleue that the Messias is yet to come. He maketh his confession on his bed, saying; I confesse before thee my God and Lord, God of my parents, Lord of all Creatures, that my health and death is in thy hand, I pray thee grant me recouerie of my former health, and heare my prayer, as thou diddest heare Hezekiah in his sicknes. And if the time of my death be come, then grant that death may be my remission of all my sinne, which of ignorance or knowledge I haue committed, euer since I was a man: grant that I may haue my part in Paradise, and the world to come, which is reserved for the iust: grant that I may know the way of euerlasting life, fill me with the ioy of thy excellent countenance by thy right hand for euer. Blessed be thou O God, which hearest my prayer.

Thus they which refuse the merits of Christs death, ascribe remission of sinnes to their owne. When he ^b giueth vp the ghost, all the standers by rend their garments, but in a certaine place of the same, where they doe no great harme, about a hand-breadth. They lament the dead seuen dayes. They presently after his death powre out all the water in the house into the streete: they couer his face that it may no more

^a Ceremonies about the sick.

^b And about the dead in the house,

be seene: they bow his thumbe in his hand, framing a resemblance of the Hebrew name Schaddai: his other fingers are stretched out, to testifie a forsaking of the world: they wash him with hott water, and hauing annointed his head with wine and the yolke of an egge mixed together, they put on him a white vestment, which he vsed to weare on the Feast of Reconciliation. When they carrie him out of the house, they hurle after him a broken sherd, signifying, that with him all heauiness should be expelled and broken. When they are come to the place ^c of buriall, they say, Blessed be God, which hath formed you with Iudgement and Justice, hath created, fed, sustained, and at last hath deprived you of life (speaking to the dead.) He knoweth the number of you all, and will quicken you againe in his time. Blessed be God, which doth to die, and maketh alme. Let thy dead line, with my carkasse let them rise againe. Awake and reioyce yee that lie in dust, because thy dew is the dew of light, and the earth shall cast forth her dead. This the Minister saith alone: then he goeth on with a long prayer of three and twentie sentences, which the people say after him, going about the sepulchre. They call this prayer Tzidduck haddin, the subiect whereof is the iustice of God; calling for pardon in the name of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: acknowledging that by three things the foundations of the world are founded, the Law, worship, and pietie to the dead: calling for deliuerance for the bloud of his seruants shed in the 856. yeare, for the confession of his holy Name, and for the merit of the only-begotten, which was seuen and thirtie yeares old, in whose place a Ramme was taken; concluding with the mention of their Captaines slaine in the 126. yeare. Heere they take downe the corpse; and then the Minister singeth, the people following. This is the way of all the world, let him sleepe in peace, &c. Yee Fathers of the world which sleepe in Hebron, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and say, his comming bee in peace. Yee euerlasting hills of the double caue, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and bid him welcome. Yee Angels of peace go forth to meeete him, vnlocke to him the gates of Paradise. Ye keepers of the treasures of the garden of Eden, open the gates and let N. enter, and enjoy the fruits of Paradise; good things be at his right hand, pleasant things at his left. Heare this O Lord, and let his comming be in peace. Then they lay him into the ground, and his neereft kinsmen cast in the first earth: after which they turne to the East with diuers other blessings. When ^d they returne, they bow themselues backwards three times, and throw grasse ouer their heads, signifying their hope of the Resurrection, according to that, Es. 66. 14. and your bones shall bud as the grasse: saying also, Dust thou art, and to Dust thou shalt returne. Then doth euery one mutter a prayer to himselfe, as he goeth out of the buriall place. In the porch of the Synagogue, God ^e shall destroy death for euer (say they) and wipe away all teares from their eyes, and will take away their reproach from all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it. Then enter they into the Synagogue, and leape vp and downe, and change their Seates seuen times, and there say ouer their Purgatorie prayer Kaddisch. The Mourners goe bare-foote seuen dayes, and eate not Flesh, nor drinke Wine, except on the Sabbathes and Festiualls. They bathe not in three and thirtie dayes after, cut not their nailes, worke not make a pitifull howling, &c. The first night the Mourner eateth nothing of his owne, but meat sent him from his friends. The childe mourneth for his father a yeare. The sonne, eleuen monethes, saith ouer his Kaddisch; for meane sinners are freed sooner; but the wicked stay the whole twelue monethes: and therefore to persist the twelfth moneth in his prayer, should be to acknowledge his father a wicked man. And for this effect hereof, Rabbi Akibba met once in the way a man, with an Ass-like burthen of stickes, which vpon examination confessed, That hee was a Purgatorie-ghost, carrying to burne himselfe, such bundles euery day. Rabbi Akibba enquired if he had a sonne or wife, and where; and finding out his sonne, taught him this prayer, which was so effectually, that in a dreame this ghost returned to the Rabbi with thanks, for his deliuerance, and said hee was now in Gan Eden, or Paradise. Rabbi Akibba signified this to the Iewish Synagogues, with iniunction to teach their children this prayer.

But to returne to our Funeralls: when they are come backe to the mourning-house they wash their hands, but obserue not the Mosaicall Rites, because the Temple is not standing. Then doe they power out a long blessing ouer a cuppe of Wine, and another ther ouer their meat exceeding much longer. Their Purgatorie-prayer, or (as Genebrard calleth it, their) Requiem, vel libera, is this. It is better to goe into the house of mourning, then into the house of feasting, in which is the end of all men? which let the liuing remember. Let vs heare the end: Feare God, and keepe his Commandements: this is the duty of euery man. A sure rest in the high habitation vnder the wings of God, in the degree of the Saints, shining as the brightnes of the skie. The change of bonds, pardon of sins, grant of saluation, indulgence and mercy from the sight of him which dwells in heauen, and a portion in the life to come: there let the portion be, and the dwelling of the soule of the wise Master N. The Spirit of the Lord make him to rest in Gan Eden, and giue him peace, as it is written in Esay, Let peace come, and let him rest in beds, walking before it, he and all the deceased of Israel, through his mercy, Amen. They write also on the Tombe, Let his soule be in the garden of Eden, Amen. Or, let his soule be bound in the bundle of life. And sometimes, Thou art the Tombe of N. which departed into Eden, such a day of such a month and yeare. Thus poore Purgatorie with Iewes and Romists is preached by walking ghosts. They haue a light burning for the dead seuen daies. They powre the water out of the dores, because the Angell of Death washeth his sword (lately vsed) in water, and enuenometh it. This his sword he holdeth in his hand at the beds head, hauing on the end thereof three drops of gall: The sicke man spying this Deadly angell, openeth his mouth with feare, and then those drops fall in, of which one killeth him, the second maketh him pale, the third rotteeth and putrifieeth. Elias Lesuisa * addeth, that after a man is dead the Angell of Death commeth and sitteth on his graue, and presently the soule entreth into his body, and he maketh him stand on his feet, hauing, to that purpose, in his hand a chaine, halfe of iron and halfe of fire, wherewith he striketh him. At the first blow his members are dissolved, at the second his bones are scattered; then come the Angels and gather them: at the third he is brought to dust and ashes, and returneth into his graue. And this, saith R. Meir, is more grieuous then the iudgement of hell, for the iust, and the sonnes of the Princes, and abortiues are iudged therewith, except they which die on the euen of the Sabbath, and in the land of Israel: of which you haue heard their rolling opinion before; neither will we roll this stone to our Reader againe.

CHAP. XX.

The Iewes faith and hope touching their Messias.

He Iewes generally belecue, hope, and pray for a Messias; but such a one, whose kingdome shall be of this world, and who shall (to vse the Apostles a phrase, who were also, euen after Christs death and resurrection, partakers of this dreame) Restore the Kingdome to Israel. And because the Scripture speaketh somewhat of the poore, contemptible, and deiected state, of the promised Messias, sometimes of the puissance, renowne, and glorie of his kingdome: they therefore frame to their conceits, two Messiahs, one poore and simple, but a mightie warriour, whom they call Messias Ben-Ioseph, the other, Messias Ben-David; after the other in time, but before him in glory, and the true Messias: howsoeuer euen this also be in their opinions but a meere man, and one which shall marrie and leaue behind him a remaining and raigning posteritie.

The ancient Iewes looked for this Messias to be sent them about this time, when Iesus came in the Flesh: as that Prophecie which is fathered on Elias testifieth, to wit, that the world should be two thousand yeares Tohu, empty and without Law, two thousand vnder the Law, two thousand vnder the Messias: and accordingly Christ Iesus came into the world about the yeare after the Creation, 3963. The Iewes reckon 202. yeares fewer in all their computations, then the Christians. Vpon this occasion, and in regard of the generall expectation of the Messias, about that time rose so many Sects, and especially that rebellion of Ben-Cochab, before spoken of, to whom R. Akibba (famous for his foure and twentie thousand disciples) gaue testimonie, and called him Mefias the King. But this Ben-Cochab, the sonne of the Starre, Numb. 23. was by Adrian (as you haue seene) besieged, taken, and executed, and was called after ^b Ben-Cozabb, the sonne of lying. They therefore, when as they found no Mefias, said, that the time was deferred, because of their sinnes: and after renounced Anathema to him, that should set downe the time of his comming. And being conuincid in their consciences, that the ^c Prophecies of this time were alreadye past and accomplished, they affirmed in their writings, that he was then borne, but did not yet reueale himselfe, because of their sinnes. R. Salomon Iarchi writeth, that the ancient Iewes thought he was borne on that day in which Ierusalem was last destroyed; but vncertaine where he hath lien hid. Some say that he abideth in Paradise tied by the haire of a womans head: so interpreting that of the Canticles, The ^d haire of thy head is as purple, The King is tied in the rafters; by rafters meaning Paradise. The Talmudists ^e write, that he lay at the gates of Rome among the Lazars and Leapers, according to Esay 53.

Before he commeth, they write, that ten notable miracles shall happen to warne them thereof. First, God shall raise vp three Kings, which shall make profession of the true Faith, but shall indeed betray it, and seduce men, and cause them to deny God. The louers of the Truth shall flee and hide themselues in caues, and holes of the earth, and these Tyrants shall pursue and slay them. Then shall there be no King in Israel (as it is ^f written) no Pastor, no holy men. The heauens shall be shut vp, the people shall be made few: for these Tyrants, (which yet by diuine dispensation shall raigne but three months) shall impose ten times as much, as was before exacted, and they which haue not to pay shall lose their heads. And from the ends of the earth, shall come men, black and loathsome; the dread of whose countenance shall kill men: for they shall haue two heads and seuen eyes, sparkling like fire.

The second Miracle shall be a great heate of the Sunne, causing Feuers, Pestilences, and other diseases, so that the Gentiles shall digge themselues graues, and there lie and wish for death. But the Israelites shall haue this heate to be as a wholesome medicine to them: so interpreting the ^g Prophet.

God shall make a bloody dew fall on the earth, of which the people, and the wicked of the Israelites shall drinke, thinking it to be good water, and shall die: it shall not hurt ^h the iust, who shall shine, &c.

Fourthly, God shall make a wholesome dew to fall, whereof the indifferent meaner sinners, sicke of the former dew, shall drinke and liue, Hos. 14. 6.

Fifthly, The ⁱ Sunne shall be darkened thirtie dayes, and then receiue againe his light, whereby many shall embrace Judaisme.

Sixthly, God, shall permit the Edomites (or Romans) to rule ouer all the world: but one especially at Rome shall raigne nine monethes ouer all the world, wasting large countries, laying heauie tributes vpon the Israelites. Then shall the Israelites haue no helper (as saith Esai 49. 16.) But after nine months God shall send Mefias Ben-Ioseph of the children of Ioseph, whose name shall be Nehemias, the sonne of Husiel. He shall come with the race of Ephraim, Manasse, Beniamin and Gad, and the Israelites hearing of it, shall flocke to him, as Ieremie sheweth, ^k Conuert ye to the Lord, ye rebellious children, I will take ye, one of a Citie, and two of a Tribe, &c. This Mefias shall ouerthrow the Edomites, and slay their King, and destroying the Empire, shall carrie to Ierusalem holy vessels, reserued in the house of Eluan for a treasure. The King of Egypt also shall make peace with the Israelites, and shall kill the men about Ierusalem, Damascus, and Ascalon; the same whereof shall affright all the inhabitants of the earth.

Seuenthly, There is at Rome a marble Image of a Virgin, not made by mans hand, to which shall resort all the wicked of the world, and shall incestuously conuerse therewith. Hence shall God frame an Infant in the same, which shall with breach of the marble come forth. This shall be named Armillus the wicked, the same which the Christians call Antichrist, of ten elles quantitie of breadth and length; a span-breadth betweene his eyes, which shall be red and deepe in his head; his haire yellow, the soles of his feet greene, deformed with two heads. Hee shall professe himselfe the Roman Mefias and God, and shall be accepted of them. He shall bid them bring him the lash which he hath giuen them, which they shall bring with their Prayer-booke: he shall cause them to beleue in him; and shall send Embassadors to Nehemias the sonne of Husiel, and to the people of Israel, commanding them also to bring him their Lawe, and to acknowledge him for God. Then shall Nehemias goe vnto Armillus with three hundred thousand Ephramites, carrying with him the booke of the Law; and when he comes at him, he shall reade out of the same this sentence, I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt haue none other Gods in my sight. Armillus shall reply, that there is no such sentence in their Law, and therefore they should acknowledge him for God, as well as the Gentiles. Then shall Nehemias ouerthrow two hundred thousand of Armillus his Armie; whereat Armillus shall be so wrathfull, that he shall assemble all his forces into a deepe valley, and there shall destroy (with many other Israelites) this Nehemias. But the Angels shall take and hide him, that Armillus may not know of his death, lest he should not leaue one of Israel liuing. All Nations shall then expell the Israelites, and such affliction shall befall them, as neuer since the beginning of the world. At this time shall the Angell Michael come forth, and separate the wicked from Israel, as writeth Daniel. They which remaine shall flie into the desert, and for fise and forty dayes space, liue with grasse, and leaues, and hearbes; but all the wicked Israelites shall die. Armillus shall after subdue Egypt, and shall turne thence against Ierusalem, and seeke againe to waste it. These things after their manner they fable out of the eleventh and twelfth of Daniel.

a Cap. 12. v. 1.

The eighth Miracle is the arising of Michael, who three times shall winde his great horne, Es. 27. 13. and Zach. 9. 14. At the first sound, the true Messias Ben David, and Elias the Prophet, shall shew themselves to those deuout Israelites in the deserts of Iuda, who shall then gather courage: and all the Iews in the world shall heare this sound, and shall confesse Gods deliuerance, and all that haue bene led captiue into Assyria shall assemble together. The same horne shall strike feare and diseases into the Christians and other people. Now shall the Iewes make great journeyes towards Ierusalem and together with Elias and Messias shall come thither with ioy. Armillus hearing this, in his proude surie shall re-assemble his Christians against the Messias and Ierusalem. But God not suffering his people to fal out of one trouble into another. shall say to the Messias, Come place thy selfe at my right hand; and to the Israelites, Be still and waite for the great succour of the Lord this day. And then shall God raine fire and brimstone from heauen, as Ezekiel reporteth, wherwith Armillus and his armie shall die and the house of Iacob shall be as fire, and the house of Ioseph as a flame, and the house of Esau (the Idumæan Atheists which destroyed Gods house) as stubble.

c Obad. 18.

At the second sound or blast of this horne of Michael the graues at Ierusalem shall open and the dead arise and Messias Ben David with Elias shall reuoke into life that Messias Ben Ioseph; and the Israelites shall send Messias Ben David into all countries of the Iewes dispersion. to cause them to come to Ierusalem; and the Nations with whom they are, shall bring them in their Chariots, and on their shoulders.

The last Miracle, is the third time of Michaels winding his horne, when God shall bring forth all the Iewes, which are by the Riuers Gosan, Lachbach, Chabor, and in the Citties of Iuda, and they without number or measure, shall with their infants enter into the Paradise of Moses; and the ground before them and behinde them shall be meere fire, which shall leaue no sustenance to the Christians. And when the ten Tribes shall depart out of the Nations, then the pillar of the cloude of Diuine glory shall compass them, and God shall goe before them, and shall open to them the fountaines flowing from the tree of life, Esu 49. 10. I might adde to these miracles that of the d Assie, which Abraham rode on when he went to sacrifice his sonne; which Moses also vsed when he returned into Egypt (and some say Balaams Assie was the same) this shall the Messias ride on according to Zacharies Prophecie, Zach. 9. 5.

c. 15.

Against these ten miraculous signes, fore-shewing Messias his coming, the most being full of troubles, they haue ten consolations: first, The certaintie of Messias coming: secondly, That he shall gather them from all places of the dispersion, Ierem. 31. 8. but the same there mentioned shall be so cured, that they shall leape as Harts, &c. c

uer all the earth, Esa. 60. 1 2. yea, all the world shall be subiect to the Law, Soph. 3. 9. sixtly, God will destroy all their enemies. Ezech. 25. 14. seuenthly, God will take from them all diseases, Esa. 33. 24. eightly, God will prolong their liues, that they shall liue as long as an Oake, Esa. 65. 2 2. and as in the times from Adam to Noe: ninthly, They shall see God face to face, Esa. 40. 5. and they shall al prophecie, Joel 2. 28. tenthly, God shall take away from them all euill concupiscence, and inclination to euill, Ezech. 36. 26. Thus farre out of the booke Abhkas Rachel.

Their cheere in these dayes shall be the greatest beasts, birds, and fishes, which God euer created; and no other wine then what grew in Paradise, and was kept in Adams Celler till that time: the great Oxe Behemoth mentioned in s Job, and Psal. 50. 10. All the beasts of the wood are mine, and the beasts feeding on a thousand hills, that is, Behemoth which euery day feedeth on a thousand hills. But lest this denouring beast should consume all the hills in the world, they tell you that he is a stalled Oxe, still abiding in the same place, and what he eateth in the day, groweth againe in the night. The huge Whale Leuiathan, or as they pronounce it, Lipiasan, must honour also this Feast: of this they write in the Talmud; that to prevent filling the world with these huge monsters, God gelded the male Leuiathan, and the female is flaine, and preserued in pickle, for the iust, to be eaten in the times of the Messias, Esa. 27. The male Behemoth was gelded also, and the female was stored vp for this feast. Elias Leuita reporteth of a huge huge bird, also called Bariuchne, to be roasted at this feast; of which the Talmud faith, that an egge sometime falling out of her nest, did ouerthrow and breake downe three hundred tall Cedars; with which fall the egge being broken, ouerflowed and carried away sixtie Villages. We will haue the Whetstone before we part. R. Barchanuth saw a Frogge as big as Akra, a Village of sixtie households: then came a huger Serpent and swallowed that huge Frogge. Lastly, the hugest hugest Crow that euer the Rabbin saw, flew and deuoured these both; and flying away, sate on a tree, which tree sure could not be lesse then the three hundred Cedars before mentioned, if this Crow were but as bigge as that egge. R. Papa answereth, that he would neuer haue beleeued it, but that he saw it (I hope they will pardon vs if we be of the same mind). But would you not faine heare of a man holding like proportion? then let R. Saul tell you of his adventures in the burying of a dead corps, where hee encountered with a bone of a man, into which there flew a Rauens, and the Rabbi would needes follow after, to see what became of her: and so, he went and he went, three leagues in the hollow of the same bone and could finde no end thereof, and therefore returned: so he perceiued it was one of the bones of Og the Giant, whom Moses had flaine. Perhaps you will maruell how Moses could archieue such an exployt. Forsooth you must vnderstand that Moses was tenne cubits high, and had an Axe tenne cubits long, and leaped other ten cubits in the ayre, and so gaue the deadly blow to Og (who it seemes was laid along in some deepe Trench, or else you will thinke the Rabbin lied. Tush, your incredulitie makes you vnworthy to heare their storie of R. Osna, who beguiled the Angell of Death, of whom (when he came to finite him) he would in kindnesse needes learne his future place in Paradise; wherewith the deadly Angell was content, and went with him, yea, for his security, at his request resigned his deadly weapon into his hands. Thus at last they came at Paradise, where he shewed him his place: which he desirous to take better view of, required his helpe to lift him higher, and then with a quicke deliuerie leapt into Paradise. Thus did the poore couensured Angel misse his prey, and was glad with much a-doo to recouer his sword from the Rabbin. And that you might see their skill, no lesse in Cosmographie then Theologie, another was carried to the place where heauen and earth meet, and kisse each other; where, whiles he might take the more diligent view in obseruing those parts (which the Frier of Oxford neuer saw, nor Fausinus with his Mephostophiles) he hanged his Cloke on a window in heauen; and suddenly it was conueyed out of sight. Hereat amazed that there should be theeues in heauen, a voyce tolde him it was the heauens motion, and at such an houre the next day he might attend, and againe obtaine his Cloke; which he did accordingly. But to take view of other strange creatures, make roome, I pray, for another Rabbi with his Bird; and a great deale of roome you will say is requisite: Rabbi Kimchi on the 50. Psalme auerret auerreth out of Rabbi Iehudab, that Ziz is a bird so great, that with spreading abroad his wings, he hideth the Sunne, and darkeneth all the world. And (to leape back into the Talmud) a certaine Rabbi sayling on the Sea, saw a bird in the middle of the Sea, so high, that the water reached but to her knees; whereupon he wished his companions there to wash, because it was so shallow; Doe it not (saith a voyce from heauen) for it is seuen yeares space since a Hatchet, by chance falling out of a mans hand in this place, and alwayes descending, is not yet come at the bottome. I perceiue by your incredulous smiles, you will scarce beleue that a Lion in the wood Ela, roared so dernely, that all the women in Rome (foure hundred miles from thence) for very horror proued abortiue; and when he came an hundred miles neerer, his terrible noyse shooke the teeth out of all the Romans heads; and the Emperour himselfe, that caused the Rabbi to obtaine of God by his prayer to make this triall of the Lion, fell downe from his Throne halfe dead: and with much importunity requested his helpe, to caute him retire to his den. But this roaring hath almost marred our feast.

Our wine you haue heard of, fetched out of Adams Celler, Esa. 27. 2. 3. and Psal. 75. 9. Before the feast, Messias will cause these prettie creatures, Behemoth and Leuiathan to play together, and make them sport: but when they haue wearied themselues in the fight, Messias with his sword shall kill them both, Esa. 27. 1. Then followeth the feast, and afterwards his marriage; o Kings daughters shall be among thine honourable women: at thy right hand standeth the Queene in the golde of Ophir. Amongst the Messias his excellent women (Rabbi Kimchi expoundeth) shall be Kings daughters, for euerie King shall repute it his owne glory to bettow a daughter on the Messias: but the true Queene shall be one of the fairest Israelites daughters, and shall continually conuerse with him, whereas the others must come onely at call. He shall thus beget children, which shall raigne after him, Esa. 53. 10. when he is dead.

Now the state of the Jewes in his time shall be such, that the Christians shall freely build them houses and Citties, and till their grounds, and bestow on them their goods; yea Princes shall serue them, and they shall walke in faire garments, Esa. 60. 10, 11. 12. and Esa. 61. 5. 6. The ayre also shall be new and wholesome, Esa. 65. 17. by the benefit whereof, they shall abide sound, and liue long, and in their age be as fresh as if they were young, Psal. 92. 14. 15. The Wheat once sown shall alway grow vp of it selfe, no otherwise then the Vines, Hosea 14. 8. And if any shall desire any raine for his field, or garden, or one hearbe by it selfe, he shall haue it, Zach. 10. 11. Then shall be peace among men and beasts, Hos. 2. 19. Esa. 11. 7. If there arise any war among the Gentiles, the Messias shall accord them, Esa. 2. 4. They shall liue in great felicitie, full of the knowledge and praise of God. The earth shall be ful hereof, &c. The Talmud also speaketh of a thousand yeares wherein the world shalle be renewed (somewhat like the opinion of some Ancients in the Primitiue Church) in which time the iust shall haue wings given them like Eagles whereby they may flie over the face of the waters. But the bodies of the iust which shall rise againe, shall neuer returne to dust. Ricinus in this and many other of their absurdities, seekes to giue an allegoricall interpretation: but which of the Heathen haue not so patronized their superstitions and idolatries? as appeareth in the Poets, Philosophers, Chaldean and Egyptian Priests, whose mysticall learning cannot free their religions from being mysteries of iniquitie. Sixe thousand yeares the world endureth, saith R. Katina, and a thousand yeares shall be a desolation, and God onely shall be exalted in that day (for one thousand yeares is one day of the Lord) as it is written, A thousand yeare in thy sight are as yesterday; and this is a Sabbath, wherein shall be the feasting aboue mentioned. And thus did Elias affirme, as is said two thousand yeare the world was empty, two thousand the Law, & two thousand Messias; but for the sins of men that is wanting which we see wanting. (This last clause Ricinus saith is added by the Talmudists, we ch still expect their Messias) eighty fiue Iubilees shal the world endure, & in the last, saith this Elias, shall com the son of Dauid.

Thus haue we heard the infancie of the Church in the time of her nonage, and of those Hebrew Patriarchs: wee haue seene also their present Infancie in these Iewish fables, the iust reward of 9 Losing darkeness rather then light. And so with our prayers to God, at last to take that Veile of Moses from their hearts, that there may be

One proper Shepheard, and one sheepefold, and that mean-while, we may learne preciously to esteem, and reuerently to make vse of that light we haue; warned by the spectacle of Diuine Iustice in them, through so many ages blinded in so palpable fooleries; we will now leaue them and this Holy Land, and seeke further what aduenteres we shall light on in the next neighbouring Nation, hoping and crauing for pardon of such prolixitie in this part of our Discourse, fittest, of all the other in this part of our worke, to be considered.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the hopes and hinderances of the Iewes Conuersion.

When I had now (as I thought) brought this Iewish Relation to an end, and euen wearied the Reader with that which might much more wearie the Writer: that Prophecie of ^a Paul, That all Israel shall be saued, &c. which by most Interpreters is construed of the generall conuersion of that Nation, after the fulnesse of the Gentiles be come in (as in the beginning of this Worke is said) caused my straying penne (ready to wander from these, so farre wandering from their holy Progenitors) to vndertake this taske, also to declare, what future hopes, and what present feares and lets may be conceiued of their conuersion to Christianity. The hope (though it be yet tossed vpon surges of almost-desperate Seas, yet) hath Anchoram sacram, a sure Anchor to relie on, and a kinde of obscure kenning of that wished-for Hauen, where it would be. For ^b Non ita perierunt ad unum Iudaei, vt nulla super sit de illorum salute spes. The destruction of the Iewes (saith Peter Martyr) is not so desperate, but that there is some hope left of their saluation. And a little after (alluding to the Apostles mysterie) Cum enim plenitudo fuerit iam ad Christum conuersa ex Gentibus, tunc & Israelita accedent: For when there shall haue been a full conuersion of the Gentiles vnto Christ, then shall the Iewes also come in. So Chrysostome; ^c Quia subintrauit plenitudo Gentium, in nouissimo saluabitur omnis Israel; because the fulnesse of the Gentiles hath come in, at last all Israel shall be saued. The same hope is generally cherished by the rest of the Fathers: yet doth indeed depend more vpon Diuine goodnesse then on humane probability; the stability of his Truth, which hath promised (as Paul also Rom. 11. expoundeth the former Prophets) the vntchangeablenesse of Gods Election, the bottomlesse Sea of his Mercies, the vnsearchablenesse of his Iudgements, minister hope beyond hope. Heereunto also may be added the common grounds, both of Reason, which they holde with vs in Nature; and of the Scripture, the auncienter partes whereof, and especially the Lawe of Moses, they maintaine with equall acknowledgement, and (for the most part) with more forward industrie and zeale, then doe the commoner sort of Christians.

Iewes conuersion.

But the ^d impediments which haue hitherto, and do yet with-hold them from Christianity, doe excede in number and power. For that fore-stalled prejudice of theirs, the glory of the Temple, the sacrifices and legall worships past, their hopes then and still of such a Monarch to their Messias, as you haue heard of, the splendour of their renowned Ancestors, the keeping of the Diuine Oracles, their peculiar title of being Gods people, haue bred in them such a swelling pride, that they naturally enuie and abhorre the very thought thereof, that the Gentiles should in these things eyther equall or succede them.

4. 1. 2.

Sooner (saith Martin Luther) then they would endure that the Gentiles (which in their daily prayers they curse and reuile) should haue any part with them in their Messias, and be accounted co heires thereof, they would crucifie ten Messiahs: yea (if it were possible) would doe to death God himselfe, with all the Angels and creatures else, although they should therefore vndergoe a thousand helts.

Hence, in a great part proceedeth their naturall and long continued obstinacie. And besides that prejudice, pride, and enuie, they are not a little scandalized from the Christians

Asians themselves, somewhat in regard of the mutuall differences and disagreements among Protestants; which, though in it selfe bad, is made much worse by the vnreasonable and vnreasonable exaggeration of their common aduersarie, the Papist: but more, in respect of those which call themselves Catholikes, and are not, but euen by these men are found to be manifest Idolaters. ^d A scandall it is to see Gods Law neglected, and mans exacted with rigour: a greater matter, at some times to ease flesh, then the adulterous pollution of the flesh at any time: the blasphemies of some Nations; these being interiections to the vulgar, and phrases of gallantrie to the Princes: the forging and packing of miracles; wherein the Friers and Iewes concurre with equall diligence, the one in contriuing, the other in discovering them. A scandall are the alterations which they are forced by the Inquisitors to make in their Authors and Monuments of Antiquitie: thinking, that these deuises are our best euidences. A scandall is the vowing and praying to Angels and Saints, yea, more to the Mother of Christ, then to Christ himselfe, or to God, to whom alone they repute this a due sacrifice. But the greatest scandall of all others, is the worshipping of Images. Indeeed it seemed strange to me, and doth to the rest of my Brethren: according to the flesh, (Nabianael a Iew borne, baptised in London, before the Congregation at All-hallowes ^e made this confession) euen vnto this day, in whom this blindnesse and hardnesse of heart is in part continued, through occasion giuen by them that professe the name of Iesus: and not only in vs, which are of the house of Israel, but in others, as the Turkes and Mahumetanes, which are of the race of Ishmael. We and our Fathers and Elders say, and in our bookes call them by no other name, but Baale abodazara, Idolatrous Masters: a thing so detestable vnto vs, as nothing more, &c. They say vnto vs oftentimes, that they doe not worship them as Gods, but God in them: Neither are the Heathen, we say, that are round about vs, so blinded, that they thinke the stocks and stones to be God, but they are perswaded that God may be worshipped in them. And yet they goe farther: for the Christians in Spaine and Portugall haue it written in their Bookes, That the Virgin Marie is the Lords Treasure, and that shee bestowes gifts and graces vpon her seruants: That her mercie pardoneth them, whom the Iustice of her Sonne might condemne, and that our saluation lyeth in her hands. But our Law teacheth, That God is All sufficient, hee giueth to whom hee listeth, Hee will not give his glorie to another, &c. The Reader may (if he please) from that Iew himselfe, in his printed Confession, be further informed of that Partition-wall, which separateth the Iew and Catholike.

^e Apr. 1577.

They are so much the more scandalized, when they see the Catechismes recite the Decalogue, with omission of that second Commandement, which they thinke (as one of their greatest Rabbines contested with our ^f Author) was the Ordinance of Christ himselfe. Yea, the Priests and Friers let passe in their Conferences with them for current, their Iewish vpbraidings, That Christ, a Carpenters Sonne, was an Image-maker, or at least an Author of their worshipping. As for those speculatiue plaisters of δουλεία and λατρεία. of intention instrumentall and finall in worship, of Images of the true, and Idols of the false Gods, they are (as euen now you heard) the vnfaourest dregs to the Iew in the world.

^f Rel. West.

The poore Idiot, among the Christians, can as little distinguish as the Pagan, and both amongst the Christians is like honour done to Gods Image, and to that of Saints, and to them both, in like forme of worship, as amongst the Pagans. They are forced to be at some Sermons, and there are well edified by their hearing, when they see the Preacher direct his prayer to a Crucifixe, calling it his Lord and Sauiour. Their Transubstantiation is a monster as hideous as the former.

The meanes vsed to their conuersion are weake; especially in some places, where they haue not the New Testament in such Language as they can vnderstand: and the Inquisitors haue inhibited and taken from them all bookes written on that Theame, in defence of Christian Religion, or against it; alledging, they will haue no disputing in matters of Religion either way, like the Iesuites Edict at Dola, forbidding all talke of God, either in good sort or in bad.

But of all other this is a good furtherance, that when in their Baptisme they denie
the

the Deuill and all his workes, they muſt renounce their right and propertie in all their goods and poſſeſſions; the ſhamefull couetouſneſſe of hypocriticall Chriſtians hauing brought theſe irritamenta malorum within the compaſſe of the Deuils workes: preſuppoſing (forſooth) that either the conuerted Iew, or his corrupt anceſtors, haue ſcraped together ſuch heaps of wealth by uſurie, or oppreſſion, or ſome vnlawfull meanes or other. Therefore for the good of his ſoule, his body ſhall bee left to begge or ſtarue; while, with the leauing of his Iewiſh ſuperſtition, hee muſt likewiſe leaue all that hee hath: and his new-receiued Religion muſt be a meanes to ſtrip him of his riches, and to weane him from his well beloued Mammon, which that Nation is naturally ſo farre in loue with. This alone, to the world-bewitched Iew, is ſuch a partition-wall to keepe him from Chriſtianitie, that he will venture ſoule and all, rather then thus betray himſelfe, his wife and children, to extreme beggerie and want. And ſo much the worſe, ſaith ^a Viſt. de Carbenſis, one of theſe conuerts, becauſe in their Iewiſh eſtate they had not learned any arte which now might miniſter vnto them ſubſtance: Thus are they driuen to begge from dore to dore for their foode, expoſed not only to this extremitie of want, but to the opprobries alſo of vnchriſtian Chriſtians, who Iewiſhly hate the name of a Iew, nor can the Iew be waſhed from it with the ſacred tincture of Baptiſme; ſcumme of the irreligious religious vulgar, which ſcoffe and point at them, ſaying, there goes a baptiſed Iew (a name beſt fitting themſelues) while on the other ſide their owne Countrey-men hate and abhorre them as Apoſtataes, Renegadoes, and Fugitiues. And if any ſhew them kinder intertainment, yet (as a nine-dayes wonder) it laſteth but a little while, whereof the Iewes haue this prouerbe, A new conuert is as a new or cleane cloth: which at firſt is pleaſant, but after a little wearing groweth ſoule and loathſome. Eſpecially ſince the faireſt of his preferment (to welcome him to our Religion) is to turne Frier: then which profeſſion, nothing can be more hatefull to him, who accounteth it a courſe againſt Nature; and a breach of that Ordinance of ^a God, (Crescite & multiplicamini) of multiplying the world by a holy propagation in that ^b Honorable eſtate of Marriage, which that ^c doctrine of Deuils hath made the Frier vncapable of. As for the example of Elias, and ſome other holy Men (whom our Popiſh Votaries would make Patrones of their diſorderly Orders;) the Iew (herein more truly-Chriſtian then the Papiſt) holdeth it a courſe extraordinarie, and ordinarily preferreth holy Marriage farre before that ſeeming-holy Vow of Virginitie.

Thus wee ſee what outward ſcandalls, beſides their generall preiudice againſt Chriſtianitie, doe hinder them from it: which offences, in behalfe of the Chriſtians, together with that preiudice, Pride, and Enuie, and aboue all, that Veile which Diuine Iuſtice hath left vpon their hearts, God in his good time remoue, and grant, according to that Prophecie,

THE THIRD BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Of ARABIA, and of the ancient Religions, Rites, and Customes thereof.

ARABIA is a very large Region, ^a lying betweene two Bayes or Gulfes of the Sea, the Persian on the East, and that which hereof is called the Arabian, on the West : On the South is the Ocean ; on the North is Syria and Euphrates. ^b Plinie sets downe the Northerne Limits, the Hill Amanus, ouer against Cilicia and Commagena ; many Colonies of them being there planted by Tigranes the Great :
it thence (saith he) declineth to our Sea and the Egyptian shore, and to the heart of Syria to Mount Libanus. By a certaine workmanship of Nature it much resembleth the forme and site of Italie.

^b Plin. 1. 6. c. 28.

^c Arabia signifieth Holy. The Nations of this wide Tract of Land are many. It is the next to be spoken of in this our Discourse, according to our Geographall methode, as confining vpon Iudæa, whence we last departed.

^c Solin, 36.

^d Some deriue the name from Arabus, the sonne of Apollo and Babylonia. And the forged Berosus of Annius telleth, That Ianus Pater sent one Sabus into Arabia Fœlix, Arabus into Arabia Deserta ; and Petrieus into Petræa, all Nephewes of Cham ; all indeede the Sonnes of Annius his braine. True it is, that Arabia is commonly diuided into those three parts, Petræa, Deserta, and Fœlix. Of the Nations in Arabia, Plinie writeth largely, amongst the rest naming the Saracens, whom S^t. Hierome often, Epiphanius also, and other of the ancient Fathers mention, of which wee are anon to speake at large. But long before Plinie, the Scripture speaketh of the people of this Region (not only those which are said to descend of Cush, the Sonne of Cham, but of many others, which descended of Abraham, as Ishmael the sonne of Abraham, by Hagar ; and ^e Zimran, and Iokshan, and Medan, and Midian,

and Ishbak and Shuab, with their posteritie, the issue of Abraham by Keturah: who, after that Seba and Sabbetha, and Rama and Sabtheca, had peopled some parts of Arabia; were sent away with their portions Eastward to the East Countrie, that is, into Arabia; where it is likely they mingled their Seede and Generations with those former of the posteritie of Cham: for therefore it seemeth Moses wife, Zipporah, was called a ^f Cushite, or (as some reade) an Ethiopian, not that shee was of the Countrie Ethiopia in Africa, but a Midianite of Arabia, of Abrahams race: which Countrie, because the posteritie of Cush had first inhabited, and happily had mingled themselves in marriages with them, shee is called a Cushite, which some wrongly expound an Ethiopian, if they vnderstand it properly; although Cush were also the Father of the Ethiopians. But of this name Ethiopia sometimes taken more largely, otherwhiles more straitned, you shall see more in our seventh Booke, the first Chapter. This posteritie of Abraham are, in Scripture, often called the children of the East. The many names of the Arabian Nations, they which will may reade in Plinie and others.

The name Fœlix, or Happie; is giuen to the Southerly parts of Arabia, for the fertilitie thereof: & the name Petraea to a second part, of Petra the seat Royall, after called Arach, of Aretas an Arabian King.

The Desert Arabia hath a name answerable to the nature thereof; being, in great part, without Inhabitants, for the barrenesse of the soile: as is also a great part of that which is called Petraea. This Desert Arabia is also ^h called Aspera, Inferior, Caua, and of the Hebrewes Cedar. It is bounded on the East with Babylonia, and part of the Persian Gulfe; on the North with Mesopotamia, neare to Euphrates; on the West, with Syria and Arabia Petræa; on the South, are the Mountaines of Arabia Fœlix. Neare to them and to Euphrates it hath some Townes, and is frequented with Marchants, otherwhere partly vnpeopled, partly (Strabo therefore termeth it ⁱ Scenitis) fed with such Roming Arabians, as haue no dwelling-houses, but remoue to and fro, seeking where to finde pasture for their Beasts, and lodge in Tents.

Dauid accounteth himselfe ^k miserable for this dwelling in the Tents of Kedar, or (as Tremellius reades it) ^l as the Scenites of Kedar. Thus did the Patriarchs of old, thus did the Scythians, and thus doe the Tartars and the Arabians in Asia, Africa, and Europe, at this day, roming, rousing, robbing: and therefore the ^m Iewes call the Tartarians Kedarim, because of their like course of life.

They ⁿ which dwell in Townes and Cities, obseruing a more ciuill life, are called Moores, the other Arabians, in more proper appellation. The name Moores was giuen them of the Spaniards, because out of Mauritania they inuaded Spaine, and now ^o is taken vsually, not so much for the Inhabitants of the Arabian Cities, as for all of the Arabian and Mahumetan superstition. Bosra is the chiefe Citie.

Arabia Petræa adioyneth on the West and North of Syria; on the East to the Desert Arabia; on the South to the Happie. Plinie, Strabo, and Ptolemie, call it Nabathæa. Some thinke, of Nebaioth, sonne of Ishmael. Tyrus calls it Arabia Secunda. Now it is called by Ruscelli, Baraab; or after Ziglerus, Barra; or Bathalatha, after Castaldus. ^p Mela ascribeth the Hill Casius hereto: which saith he, is so high, that from the fourth watch of the night, or the last quarter thereof, it sheweth the Sunne rising. But Nonius Pintianus correcteth him, saying, there are two Casus, the one of Syria, the other of Arabia, and that this report is to bee applied to the Syrian Casius: wherein Schottus is of another minde.

Nigh to Syria it is more plentifull, then in other parts. The scarcitie of wood and water, with the barrenesse of the soile in other places, shew how it is maligned of the Elements. Both in this part, and the former, they had neede goe strong and well accompanied, for feare of robbie and spoile, which the Arabians attend.

This part is famous vnto all Generations, not so much for the Amalekites, Midianites, and other their bordering Neighbours (of whom and their Religion somewhat is spoken ^q before) as ^r for the miraculous passage of the Israelites through the same, and abode therein fortie yeares, in which time they received the Law, were fed with Manna; their Meat, Drinke, Clothing, Iudgements, Mercies, continually yeelding miraculous euidence of Gods presence amongst them.

Bellonius visited the Mount Sinai: he saith, it is a mile and a halfe from Horeb, and farre higher: from whose top, (which is hard stone of yron colour) may both shores of the Red Sea be seen. This Sea is not therefore called Red, because either the ground, or the sand, or the water thereof is Red, as Bellonius hath obserued, for none of them are so. The people thereabouts take care for no other houses then the boughes of Palme-trees, to keepe them from the heate of the Sunne (for raine they haue but seldome:) the cattell are lesse there then in Egypt. In the ascent of Mount Sinai are steps cut out in the Rock: they beganne to ascend it at breake of day, and it was after noone before they could get to the Monasterie of Maronite Christians, which is on the top thereof. There is also a Meschit there for the Arabians and Turkes, who resort thither on pilgrimage as well as the Christians. There is a Church also on the top of Mount Horeb, and another Monasterie at the foot of the Hill: besides other Monasteries, wherein liue religious people, called Caloteri, obseruing the Greeke rites who shew all (and more then all) the places renowned in Scriptures and Antiquities to Pilgrims. They eate neither flesh nor white meates. They allow foode vnto strangers such as it is, rice, wheat, beans, and such like, which they set on the floore without a cloth, in a wooden dish, and the people compose themselues to eate the same, after the Arabian manner, (which is to sit vpon their heeles touching the ground with their toes, whereas the Turkes sit crosse-legged like *Taylor*s.) There is extant an Epistle of Eugenius Bishop of M. Sinai, written 1569. to Charles the Archduke, wherein hee complaineth that the Great Turke had caused all the reuenues of the Churches and Monasteries to be sold: whereby they were forced to pledge their holy vessells, and to borrow on vsurie.

Arabia Felix trendeth from hence Southwards, hauing on all parts the Sea: against which it doth abut the space of three thousand fise hundredth and foure miles. Virgil calls it Panchæa, now Ayaman, or Giamen. This seemeth to be the Countrie wherein Saba stood, chiefe Citie of the Sabæans, whose Queene visited Salomon: for so the Iewes reckon, howsoeuer the Abassines challenge her to themselues. Aben Ezra on Dau. 11. calls this Saba Aliman or Alieman: and Salmanticensis, Ieman, which is all one (for all is but the article) signifying the South: as the Scriptures also call her Queene of the South. For so it was situate, not to Judæa alone, but to the Petraean and Desert Arabia. The name Seba or Saba agreeth also with the name of Sheba, Gen. 10.7. As for Sheba the Nephew of Abraham by Ketura, it is like he was founder of the other Seba or Saba in Arabia Deserta, the elder posteritie of Chush hauing before seated themselues in the more fertile Southerne Countrie: and because both peoples, these in Arabia and those in Africa were comprehended vnder one generall name of Æthiopia, hence might those of Africa take occasion to vsurpe the Antiquities of the other. Yea it is more likely that these Abassines in Africa 1000. yeares after that Queene was buried were seated in Arabia, and thence passed in later ages into Africa, subduing those Countries to them. For so hath Stephannus, Ἀβασσωνί ἐθνος Ἀεθλιας: ἢ τὸς Σαβαίως. The Abassines (so we now call those *Æthiopian*s in the Empire of Presbyter Iohn) are a Nation of Arabia, beyond the Sabæans: so that out of Arabia they carried this Tradition with them, as it is likely, into Africa, where want of learning, and plentie of superstition, hath so increased their Legend of this Queene, as we shall after heare. Beniamin Tudelensis writeth likewise that the Region of Seba is now called the Land of Aliman, and that it extendeth sixteene dayes iourneis along the Hills: in all which Region there were of those Arabians, which had no certaine dwellings but wandred vp and downe in Tents, robbing the neighbour Nations (as is also reported of the Saracens neare Mecca, which gouernement of Mecca Salmanticensis adioyneth to that of Aliman, or the Kingdome of Saba: for so, saith he, the Iewes in those parts still call the chiefe Citie of that Kingdome. It hath store of Riuers, Lakes, Townes, Cities, Cattel, fruits of many sortts. The chiefe Cities are Medina, Mecca, Ziden, Zebit, Aden. Beniamin addeth Theima or Themana, a Citie walled fifteen miles square, enclosing ground for tillage in the walls. Tilmaas also, Chibar and others. There is store of siluer, gold, and varietie of gemmes. There are also wilde beasts of diuers kindes. As for the Phoenix, because I (and not I alone) thinke it a fable, as neither agreeing to reason nor likelihood, lihood, and plainly disagreeing to the Historie of the Creation and of Noahs Arke, in both which God made all Male and Female, and commanded them to increase and multiply, I thinke it not worthie recitall. One wonder of Nature done in Abis a Citie of this Region, will not, I thinke, be distastfull: cited by Photius out of Diodorus Siculus, written in some part of his workes which is now wanting. One Diophantus a Macedonian being married to an Arabian woman in that Citie Abis, had by her a daughter called Herais, which in her ripe age was married to one Samiades, who hauing liued a yeare with her, did after trauell into farre Countries. In the meane time, his wife was troubled with an vncouth and strange disease: a swelling arose about the bottome of her belly, which on the seuenth day breaking, there proceeded thence those parts whereby Nature distinguisheth men from the other sexe: which secrets shee kept secreter notwithstanding, continuing her womans habire till the returne of her husband. Who then demanding the companie and dutie of his wife, was repelled by her father, for which he sued him before the Iudges, where Herais was forced to shew that which before her modestie had forbidden her to tell: and afterwards naming himselfe Diophantus serued the King in his warres, with the habite, and heart of a man, and leauing her feminine weakenesse, as it seemed, to her husband, who in the impatience of his loue slue himselfe. Our Author addeth also, that by the helpe of the Physicians, such perfection was added to this worke of Nature, that nothing remayned to testifie hee had beene a woman: he annexeth also like examples in some others.

Ludovicus Vertomannus, or Barthema (as Ramusius nameth him) tells * at large his journey through all this threefold Arabia: hee trauelled from Damasco to Mecca Anno 1502. with the Caravan of Pilgrims and Marchants, being often by the way set vpon by Armies of those Thecuish and Beggerly Arabians. This journey is of fortie dayes trauell, traueiling two and twentie houres, and resting two for their repast. After many dayes they came to a Mountayne inhabited with Iewes ^a, ten or twelue miles in circuit, which went naked, and were of small stature about fise or sixe spannes high, black of colour, circumcised, speaking with a womanish voice. And if they get a Moore in their power, they slay him aliuie. They saw there certaine white thornes, and in the same two Turtles, which seemed to them as a miracle: for in fifeene daies and nights they had neither seene Birds nor Beasts. They giue their Camells by the way not about fise Barly loaves at a meale, as bigge as a Pomegranate, and drinke once in three dayes. At the end of eight dayes they stayed a day or two to rest them. Their Pilot directed their journey by the Compasse (in Diodorus times, they obserued the North-starre) no lesse then if it had beene at Sea. They trauelled fise dayes and nights through the sandie Sea, which is a great plaine Champaine, full of a small white sand like meale: where if, by some disafter, the winde blow from the South they are all dead men. And although they had the winde at North, yet could they not see one another about ten paces off. And such as ride on Camells are inclosed with wood, with holes to receiue the aire; the Pilots going before with their Compasse for direction. Many dyed there for thirst, and many with fulnesse, drinking too much when once they came at water. When the North windes blow, those sands are driuen to a heape. Hee supposed that *Mummi*a was made of such as the sands had surprisid and buried quick: but the truer *Mummi*a is made of embalmed bodies of men, as they vse to doe in Egypt, and other places. For I haue read, not only of Women, but Infants also, (which were not likely to take such dangerous iourneys) whose bodies haue beene thus vsed to *Mummi*a. As for the other parts of Arabia, they which list, may by this our Author, by Plinius, Niger, and others, be informed further.

To come to the disposition of the people, they are small, naked, beggetly. What they haue done in Asia, Afrike, and Europe, by force of Armes, vnder the name of Saracens, and pretence of Religion, shall follow in the next Chapter: What they still doe, if they meete with purchase, Trauellers know to their cost. The practise of Marchandise amongst some of the Arabian people, and namely the Ismaelites, the ^b Scripture recordeth. For their ancient Religion, it is not like it could bee good, when as they had so bad an Author of their stock, accursed Cham: the sonnes of Abraham were better better instructed: but as they were borne after the flesh, and not according to promise, so if they and some of their posteritie did a while hold the Truth, (as the Historie of Iob and his friends euinceth) yet this lasted not long: but soone after * in Iewrie was God * Psal. 76. 1. & knowne, and he dealt not so with any other Nation. Herodotus ^a (Father of the Greeke Historie) affirmeth in his Thalia, that the Arabians worshipped Dionysius, whom they named Urotalt; and Vrania, whom they called Alilat: these alone they esteemed Gods. They shaue their Maidens like to Dionysius, in a round forme about the temples. Suidas telleth ^b that they were excellent Archers, their Arrowes were as long as themselves: their Bowes they bent not with hands, but with feet.

Curio ^c in his Saracenicall Historie testifieth of them, that as they descended in great part of Abrahams race by Ismael, the sonnes of Keurab, and by Esau: so they of old had and still retaine many rites obserued by the Hebrews: as numbring by Tribes, and marryng only within their owne Tribe: every Tribe also had their owne King, (which it seemeth the Tent-wandering or Scenite-Arabians obserue still.) That sonne succeedeth not which is eldest, but he which is borne first after he is proclaimed King or Ruler, being of Noble race on both sides. They vsed also Circumcision. For their Religion in old times; some were Christians, of which (about the times of Mahomet) there were many sects: some were Iewes; others worshipped the Sunne and Moone: others, certaine Serpents; others, some kindes of Trees; and some a Tower called Alcaba, which they supposed Ismael had built; and some others, some other Deities. ^d Clemens Alexandrinus obiectioneth to the ancient Scythians the worship of a Sword, to the Persians the like deuotion to a Riuer, adding that the Arabians worshipped a Stone. ^e Arnobius hath also the same testimonie, explaining that stone to bee rude and vnformed, a fit Deitie for rude, stonie, senselesse worshippers.

Eusebius ^f tells that they vsed humane sacrifices, which not only Sardus confirmeth; saying, that they sacrificed every yeare a child whom they buried vnder the Altar: but Nicephorus ^g also reported of one Naaman a Scenite-Arabian, a Chieftaine amongst them, who in zeale of that superstition, killed men with his owne hands, and sacrificed them on the Altars to his Gods. He in the time of Mauricius, warned by a vision, became a Christian, and with him an innumerable companie of his, whom he offered a liuing vnbloudie sacrifice in baptisme vnto Christ.

When they entred league with any, their manner was, that one standing in the midst betweene both parties did wound the hand with a sharpe stone, in the palme, neare to the thummes of them both, and taking flocks of the garments of them both, annointed, with that bloud, seuen stones set in the midst of them: Meane while inuoking Dionysius and Vrania: and then this Mediator becommeth suretie for the partie, who thereby esteemeth himselfe bound to obserue it. And thus did ^h they make league with Cambyses. To these two Arabian Gods, Great Alexander would haue added himselfe a third (saith ⁱ Arrianus, in his life.) He made great prouision to inuade them, both because they had sent him no Embassage, and for that they worshipped only these two Deities; Heauen, for that it containeth the sunne and starres; and Dionysius, because he had inuaded the Indians: and therefore equalling this his owne expedition to that of Dionysius, he would also for robbing of men, be reckoned a God. Strabo ^k saith, that in respect of the wealthinesse of this Countrie, hee had thought (had not death preuented him) to haue made Arabia the Imperiall seate. Hee affirmeth also that Sesostris the Egyptian King, passing through Arabia, in that his renowned expedition, erected there in diuers places Egyptian temples and superstitions: that the Troglodytæ which dwelt in Caues, and bordering on the Egyptians, by some reputed Arabians, were circumcised as the Arabians and Egyptians were.

The Nabathæans worship the Sunne, burning Frankincense on an Altar vnto him. They neglect the bodies of the Dead, burying euen their Kings in a dung-hill. Of the other Arabians hee reporteth that they vsed incestuous copulation with Sister and Mother. Adulterie with them is death: but that only is Adulterie, which is out of the same Kindred, otherwise all of the same bloud to vie the Woman is their (incestuous) honclie. When fiteene brothers (Kings Sonnes) had by their continuall companie tyred their one and only sister, shee deuised a meanes to rid her selfe, or at least to ease her somewhat of that trouble. And therefore whereas the custome was, that hee which went in, left his staffe at the doore to prohibite others entrance, shee got like staues, and alway hauing one at the doore, was disburthened of their importunitie; euery one that came, thinking some other had bene there before them. But they being once altogether, one of them stole from his fellowes, and finding this staffe at the doore, accused his sister to his Father of Adulterie, whereof by discouerie of the Truth shee was cleared. Linschoten ^k telleth of the like practise obserued by the Nairos in Cochin, leauing their Armes at the doore, when they enter to their Nairo-Kinswomen which they vse likewise in common, being neuer married.

Their Circumcision they obserued, as ^l some write, at the thirteenth yeare of their age, imitating Ismael herein. Euery one abideth in his Fathers profession. The possessions and wealth are common to the whole kindred. Alexander ab Alexandro nameth Dyasares an Arabian Deitie. Their Priests he saith were attired in linnen garments, with Mitres and Sandals. ^m Solinus affirmeth, that they abstaine from Swines flesh; neither will that sweet aire of Arabia breath life to that fordid and stinking creature. This is in the Happie Arabia, where happinesse maketh them vnhappy: their sweets ⁿ breeding bitter effects in diseasing their bodies, which they are forced to cure with the sents of brimstone, and Goates beards burnt. That which others admire and almost adore for rarenesse and excellencie, is here their common fewell for their fire: ^o Vulcans deuouring iawes being fed with hearbs, shrubs, trees, gummes, spices, for humane and diuine vses most esteemed.

Frankinsence (saith ^p Plinie) groweth only in Arabia, but not in euery place thereof. About the midst of the Countrie is Sabota (the chiefe Citie of the Sabæans) in a high Mountayne: eight Mansions from thence is the Region of Frankincense, which is called Sabba, that is, a mysterie: looking toward the East, euery way guarded and made vnpassable with Rocks. The soile is reddish, inclining to white. The length of the Frankinsence-wood, is twentie schæni, the bredth halfe as much, (a schænus in this account is five miles.) Other Arabians besides these and the Minæi see not this tree, nor all of these, but only some three hundred Families, vnto whom the right of these rites deuolueth by succession. Therefore are they called Sacri, Holy, neither may they in the time, when they cut them, be polluted with knowledge of Women or with Funerals. What manner of tree it is, Plinie saith he knew not, nor any Roman to his knowledge. They gathered it in the Spring and Autumne: they cut the trees from whence it sweateth. There needes no watch to keepe them, but the innocencie of the Inhabitants. When Alexander in his youth bestowed large store of Frankincense in his deuotions, Leonides his Master told him, he should so doe when he had conquered the Countrie where it grew: He after enjoying (some part of) Arabia, sent him a ship laden with Frankinsence, and bad him serue the Gods plentifully. The Frankincense, when it is gathered, is carried on Camels to Sabota by one way, out of which to goe were capitall. There they pay the tithes to a God which they call Sabis. The Priests take it by measure, not by weight. Certaine portions are allowed to them and to the Kings Scribes. Plautus therefore ^q calls Frankincense Odor Arabicus. Virgil calls it Panchæan, and Sabeian Frankincense. The manifold rites which the Heathens vsed in their holy things with this drugge, Stuckius ^r sheweth at large. Here also grew the Myrre in the same woods, and among the Trogloditæ. But this and Cinamon, and other things which grew elsewhere as well as here, neede not much discourse. They vsed yet some Religion in gathering of their Cinamon, as ^t some obserue, sacrificing before they beganne, and after diuiding what they had gathered, with a sacred Speare assigning a portion to the Sunne: if the diuision bee iustly made, the Sunne sealeth his consent by fire, with his beames consuming the same. Thus much of their spices, and holy drugges.

Of their other riches I meane not to speake, saue of their sheepe with great tailes, some of which weigh fortie pound. ^v Leo, saith he, saw one at Cairo, whose taile, supported by a Cart with wheelles (for else shee could not haue carried it) weighed fourescore pound, and heard of such as weighed a hundred and thirtie pound. ^w Paul, presently after his conuersion preached the Gospell in Arabia.

Panchæa, and another Iland, called Sacra, are adioyned by ^u Diodorus to Arabia, both fertile (as he saith) of Frankinsence. In Panchæa is the Citie Panara, whose Inhabitants are called the Ministers of Iupiter Triphylins, whose Temple is thence distant threescore furlongs, admirable for the Antiquitie, magnificence and nature of the place: it is two hundred foot long, the breadth answerable, hauing in it large Statues, and about it the houses of the Priests. Many Fountaines there springing make a navigable streame, called the water of the Sunne, which is medicinable to the bodie. The country about, for the space of two hundred furlongs, is consecrated to the gods, and the reuenuè thereof spent in sacrifices. Beyond is a high mountaine, called the seate of heauen, and Olympus Triphylins: where Cælus is said to haue instituted the rites there yearly obserued. The Priests rule all in Panchæa, both in ciuill and religious cales: and liue very deliciously, attired with linnen stoales and mitres, and party-coloured sandals. These spend their time in singing Hymnes, and recounting the acts of their gods. They deriue their generation from the Cretan Iupiter. ^x They may not go out of their sacred limits assigned them, if they doe, it is lawfull to kill them. The Temple is enriched with gifts and offerings. The doores excell for matter and workmanship. The bed of the god is sixe cubits long, and foure broad, all of gold faire wrought, The Table stands by, nothing inferiour. In the middest is another bed of gold, very large, grauen with Egyptian letters; in which are contained the gestures of Iupiter, Cælus, Diana and Apollo, written by Mercurie. Thus farre Diodorus. Iustine ^y mentioneth Hierotimus an Arabian King, which had sixe hundred children by Concubines. Some ^z are of opinion that the Wise-men which by the ancient conduct of a Starre came to Ierusalem, (the first fruits of the Gentiles) came out of Arabia. Scaliger ^a mentioneth a conquest anciently made and holden by the Arabians in Chaldæa. Philostrophus ^b saith, the Arabians are skilfull in Auguries, or diuinations, because they eat of the head and heart of a Dragon. That they eat Serpents, Solinus affirmeth. Athenæus ^c saith, That the Arabians vsed to maime themselues, if their King happened to be maimed, and that in the same member: and in ^d another place he citeth out of Heraclides Cumæus, the delicacies of this Arabian King, and his quiet or idle course of life, committing matters of iudgement to Officers: and if any thinke himselfe wronged by them, he pulls a chaine fastened to a window in the highest part of the Pallace: Whereupon the King takes the matter into his hand, and whether part he findeth guiltie dieth for it. His expences were fiftene Babylonian Talents a day. The Arabians kill ^e Mice, as a creature supposed enemy to the gods, a custome common to them with the Persians and Ethiopians. The ^f women couer their faces, contented to see with one eie, rather then to prostitute the whole face. They kill not vipers, but scarre them away with Clappers from their Balsame-trees, saith ^g Pausanias, when they gather that commoditie, because they thinke them consecrated to those Balsame-trees, vnder which they liue and feed of that liquor, with which also they cure themselues if they are bitten by them.

The Arabike tongue is now the common language of the East, especially among such as embrace the Mahumetan religion: this language in the first diuision of tongues, according to ^h Epiphanius, was begun in Armot, the first speaker and Author thereof. It is now the most vniuersall in the world, as Bibliander, Postellus, Scaliger, and Claude Duret in his late Historie, del' Origine des Langues de cest vniuers, doe proue at large, from the Herculean Pillars to the Molluccas, and from the Tartars and many Turkes in Europe, vnto the Ethiopians in Afrike, extending it selfe, which was neuer granted to any other language, since that first confusion and babbling at Babel.

CHAP. II.

Of the Saracene Name, Nation, and proceeding in Armes.

He Arabians are distinguished by many sir-names, the chiefe whereof (saith ^a Scaliger) are the Hagarens (so called of Hagar the hand-maid of Sara) whom the Arabians call Erabelhagari, and Elmagarin; and the Saracens still called by their neighbours Essarak, that is, the euish. The Hagarens were more ciuill, whose chiefe hold was Petra, and their Princes were all entituled Areta, as the Egyptians Ptolemai. Hierome in many places affirmeth, that the Ismaelites, and Hagarens are the same which now are called Saracens: so in his Commentarie on the second of Ieremie, Cedar (saith ^b he) is the Region of the desert and of the Ismaelites, whom now they call Saracens. And on the 25. of Ezechie, the Madianites, Ismaelites and Agarens, are now called Saracens. And on Esay 21. hee extendeth their desert from India to Mauritania, and to the Atlantike Ocean. ^c Epiphanius likewise affirmeth, That the Hagarens and Ismaelites in his time were called Saracens.

Plinie ^d mentioneth the Saracens: placing them neere to the Nabathæans. Ptolemy ^e likewise nameth the Scenites, so called of their tents, which with themselves, their flockes, and substance, they remoued vp and downe from place to place. Posteritie hath called all these Tent-wanderers (saith ^f Scaliger out of Ammianus Marcellinus) Sarracenes: and so doth Ptolemy in the next words call the next adioyning people, seating them in the Northerly bounds of Arabia Felix. In the same Chapter he setteth downe Saraca, the name of an Arabian Citie. ^g Some Authors haue written, that because Ismael was the sonne of Hagar a bond-woman, his nicer posteritie haue disclaimed that discent, and deriued their pedegree and name from Sara: Peruerso nomine, saith Hierome, assumentes sibi nomen Sara, quòd scilicet de ingenua & domina uideantur esse generati. Iosephus Scaliger, in his Annotations vpon Eusebius Chronicle, after that he hath cited the former testimonie of Ammianus, and of Onkelos on the 37. of Genesis, addeth the authoritie of Stephanus; who affirmeth Saraka to be a Region of Arabia, neere the Nabathæans, of which he thinketh that the Saracens borrowed their name. We know (saith Scaliger) that the Arabian Nomades are so called: for Sarak in Arabike soundeth as much, that is (furaces & λικρικοις) the euish or robbers, such as the Cosak-Tartars bordering on the Turkes, the Bandoliers in the Pyrenæan hilles (and the Borderers sometimes betwixt England and Scotland). De Sara, perridiculum: To call them Saracens of Sara, is ridiculous; for then either they must be called Saras, or three Saraca. ^h Marcellinus thus writeth of them; this people stretcheth from the Assyrians to the falles of Nilus: all warriours, halfe naked, in coloured iackes. None ploweth or planteth, but they wander vp and downe without houses or lawes; their life being alwayes in flight. Their wiues they hire and couenant with for a time: which breed child in one place, and bring forth in another, and neuer rest. Their food is Venison, Milke, Hearbes, and such towles as they can take: the most that we haue seene, know not the vse of Wheat or Wine. Like Kites they snatch their prey, but stay not by it, whether they winne or lose. They are such, as the Romans need neuer wish them their friends or their enemies. In the time of Iulian ⁱ they made out-rides and spoiles on the Roman Prouinces, because they were denied their wonted stipends by Iulian, who told them that hee had better store of iron then gold. Saint ^k Hierome interpreteth that Prophecie concerning Ismael, That hee should be a wilde man, his hand against euery one, and euery mans hand against him, of this robbing, rousing, rogueing life of his posteritie: Significat semen eius habitaturum in eremo, id est, Saracenos vagos incertisq; sedibus, qui uniuersus gentes quibus desertum ex latere iungitur, incurfant, impugnantur ab omnibus. In his second booke against Iouinian, he testifieth that their food was the milke and flesh of Camels, a creature easily bred in those barren desarts: but they thought it valawfull to eate Swines flesh, and that Swine were seldome, or not at all found among them. The Prophet ^l Ieremie reckoneth their Tents, Tents, Camels, and Flockes, as their greatest wealth, in that his Prophecie of their destruction by Nabuchodonosor.

This name Saracene may well besit that course of life which they embraced: in the more Southerly parts of Arabia, they are more ciuill and rich, dwelling in Cities, and haue quicke trade, which all are wanting about Medina and Mecca, places so renowned by the life and death of Mahomet^m. Neither doth it seeme probable, that those which are called Agarens in the continued succession of so many ages, as appeareth, 1. Chron. 5. 10. and Psalme 83. 6. would after grow ashamed of that: or that Ismael, which derided the hopes conceined of Isaac the sonne of Sara, would nourish his posteritie in the same hope, or leaue to them any honorable memorie of Sara, who had reiected him together with his mother. Yea, and their owne superstitious Legend pro- ueth the contrary, as shall appeare in the next Chapter.

For their Religion in old times, One saith, ⁿ That the Saracens adore the Starre of Venus, and in their praying cry, Alla, oua, cubar^o, that is, God, and Venus. Ioannes Meursius noteth thereon, That they worshipped the Image of Venus, set on a great stone, on which they beleue, that Abraham lay with Hagar, or else that hee tied his Camell thereunto while he was sacrificing Isaac. Anonymus in Saracen. ^p Scaliger calleth her Chubar and Chobar, and saith that neither Circumcision, nor the Friday-Sabbath, were of *Mahomet*s institution, but of ancient time both those rites had beene vsed by the Arabians, and left by him as he found them. ^q Herodotus testifieth that the Arabians worshipped Alilat, which is the Moone: for still they call the Moone newly horned Helal: and the Turkes and Saracens salute the new Moone at her first appearance, with a kind of veneration. In Sylburgius his Sarracenicæ, is reported, that the Saracens till the time of Heraclius worshipped the Morning-star and Venus, which they called Chabar, that is, ^r Great. In the beginning of the Spring, and in the beginning of Autumne, the Sunne entering into Aries and Libra, the Arabians vsed (which they had borrowed from the Zechiam and Albarachuma, people of India) to cast stones vpon heapes, being naked and bare headed, with great cries, and going about their Idols, kissing the corners in honor of their gods. This they vsed at Mecca in honor of Venus: and therefore in that solemnitie did they cast stones vnder their priuities, because those parts were vnder her dominion. Only whereas nakednesse was immodest, some ordained that they should binde a cloath about their raines. This Mahomet found before his time, and did not reiect, as he did some other Idolatrous Rites; but in their Pilgrimage Rites they still obserue it. Properly they called the morning Starre Chobar or Chubar: but as the Phœnician Astarte was with them in their confused worship, both Inno, Venus and the Moone: so they intended the like in this Arabian citie. For as Orania and Alilat and Venus, were the same, as Herodotus auerret: so the same confusion of deuotion was in Arabia, as well as in their neighbour Countrey, Phœnicia. Their Circumcision, it seemeth, came from Ismael, and the rest of Abrahams sonnes of old: their Friday-Sabbath from this Chubar-deuotion, both before *Mahomet*s time, as was also the abstinence from Swines-flesh, as we before haue obserued out of Saint ^t Hierome, who also mentioneth this their worship of Chobar, so interpreting those words of Amos, The Starre of your God, that is, saith hee, Chobar or Lucifer, which the Saracens still worship to this day.

And in the life of Hilarion, he telleth, that Hilarion passing thorow the desert, came to a Citie or Towne called Elusa, on that very day whereon their Annuall solemnitie had gathered all the people into the Temple of Venus (for they worshipped her for the Morning-starre, to the worshipp whereof the Saracen Nation is addicted.) These hearing that Hilarion passed by, who had before cured many of them, came flocking about him with their wiues and children, crying in Synake, Barah, that is, Blesse vs. Hee in courteous and milde words, perswaded them rather to worship the liuing God, then those stones; promising, if they would beleue in Christ, hee would visite them ofiner. Marueilous was the grace of God: they suffered him not thence to depart, before hee had laid the line for building of a Church; and their Priest, crowned as he was, was marked with the signe of Christ. Thus saie Hierome.

This

This robbing and roguing people liued in much obscuritie, vntill that darknesse brought them to light, and a Religion newly stamped by Mahomet, in a secret and iust iudgement of God, for the contempr of the Truth, was by as new a kinde of preaching (viz. force of Armes) obtruded on the luke-warme world. For when as Mahomet, (of whose life followeth a large discourse) had obserued that sick state of the Empire afflicted with Iewish rebellion, Persian inuasion, and Nestorian infection, besides the securitie of the Head it selfe, Heraclius then Emperour: he thought good to take Occasion by the fore-lock, and to strike whiles the yron was hot. First, vnder pretence of Religion hauing inueigled a multitude of Disciples, he made a commotion in Arabia: and being therefore driuen out of Mecca, many of his followers resorted to him: Of whom he appointed Captaines and Leaders of the rest, Vbequar, Omar, Ozmen, Alifre, Talaus, Azuibeirus, Zadimus, Zaedinus, and Abnoheid. The Arabians (as some affirme) aided Heraclius in his warre against Cosdroes the Persian: and after that warre ended, the Arabians complaining for want of pay, the Treasurer answered, that there was scarce sufficient for the Greeke and Roman Souldiers, much lesse for that companie of Dogges. Whereupon, as long before on like occasion they had rebelled in the reigne of Iulian, so now enraged, they departed into Syria, and adioyned themselues vnto Mahumet, who euen then after the Persian victorie had obtained (some say) of the Emperour whom he serued in those warres, to himselfe and his followers, a Region to inhabite; the Emperour so rewarding his exploits in the late warres. Mahumet with this supply assailed Mecca, which diuers times before hee had in vaine attempted, and tooke it, with other peeces in Arabia, viz. Hunaim, Ierrip, Tambic, &c. He afterwards created foure Generalls, whom hee called the foure sharpe swords of God, and commanded them to goe into the foure parts of the world, and kill all such as would not embrace his Law. These foure were Ebubezer, s or Vbequar, Omer, Osmen, and Ali. Ebubezer went into Palestina, but was ouerthrowne by Theodorus Begarius, Casars Lieutenant. About the same time died Mahumet, and this^h Ebubezer succeeded him; although Mahumet had designed Ali his successor. Eubocara or Abubacher (for diuersly is this Ebubezer called) hauing by his might, and the assistance of Homar and Osmen, obtayned to beⁱ Califa, ouerthrew the Imperialls, and soone after died. Homar the next Califa, wanne Bosra, the chiefe Citie of Arabia, and all the Countrey as farre as Gabata, and put Theodorus, the Emperours brother, to flight. He besieged Damascus, and hauing broken the forces that came to rescue it, obtayned it: subduing also all Phœnicia. After that, turning his forces into Egypt, Cyrus the Bishop of Alexandria stayed him with promise of two hundred thousand peeces of gold, for yearly Tribute. This was disannulled by Heraclius, and Emanuel the Deputie denyed the paiement: whereupon entring the second time vnder conduct of Hamrus, Egypt was conquered. After two yeares siege, Ierusalem also was wonne. Iaidus one of his Captaines subdued Edeffa, and all Mesopotamia. Afterwards placing Muanias ouer all the Countries betweene Euphrates and Nilus, he inuaded Persia: where the Persians lost both their King Hormisda, their State, Religion, and Name: of Persians being conuerted into Saracens. This victorious Homar made Ierusalem his Royall seat, where he built a Temple to Mahumet: and while he was praying, was murdered by his seruant.

Ozmen,^k the succeeding Caliph, sent a great Armie into Africa, vnder the leading of Hucha: who ouercomming Gregorius Patritius and destroying Carthage, subiected all that Prouince to their Empire; making Tunes the Mother-citie: but loone after translated that honour to Charoan, which hee built thirtie fixe miles from the Sea, and a hundred from Tunes. In the third yeare of his raigne Muanias the Deputie of Egypt with a Nauie of seuen hundred, or, as others say, of a hundred and seuentie faile, assailed Cyprus, and taking Constantia, wasted the whole Iland: and hauing wintered his Armie at Damascus, the next yeare besieged Arad in Cyprus, and won it, and dispeopled all the Ile. Thence he inuaded the continent of Asia, and carried away many prisoners: and after, in a Sea-fight with Constans the Emperour, died the Lycian Sea with Christian blood. He wan Rhodes, and sold to a Iew the brazen Colosse or pillar of the Sunne, which laded nine hundred Camels, sometimes rekoned one of the worlds seuen wonders, made in twelue yeares space by Chares. After this hee afflicted the Cyclides Ilands in the Archipelago, and then sent his Fleete against Sicilia, where they made spoyle with fire and sword, till by Olympius they were chased thence. Muauis himselfe with an armie by land entred into Cappadocia: Iaid hauing ouer-run all the neighbouring Armenia, vnto the hill Caucasus. But meane while Ozman, besieged in his house by Ali his faction, slew himselfe, when he had liued eightie and seuen yeares, and reigned twelue. The Saracens could not agree about their new Prince; Muani and Ali with great armies, being Corriuals of that dignitie: and Ali being treacherously murdered by Muauis meanes, in a Temple neare Cusa a Citie of Arabia was there buried, and the place is of him called Massadalle or Alli his house. ^m Albacem, the sonne of Ali and Fatima Mahumets daughter, was by Muauia his owne hands crowned, ⁿ and by him soone after poisoned. Thus was Muani sole Caliph, who graunted peace to the Emperour, on condition that he should pay him every day ^o ten pounds of golde, and a Gentleman seruant with a horse. Damascus was now made the seate royall. Of which Citie, although we haue said somewhat in our first booke, yet let vs be a little beholden to Beniamin Tudelensis, to shew vs the Saracenicall face thereof. In his time it was subiect to Noraldine (as he termeth him) King of the children of Thogarma, that is, the Turkes. The Citie saith he, is great and faire, containing on euery side fiftene miles; by it slideth the riuer Pharphar and watereth their gardens: * Amnana is more familiar, and entreteth the Citie, yea, by help of art, in Conduits visiteth their priuate houses; both striuing in emulous contention whether shall adde more pleasure or more profit to the Citie, by Naaman therefore in the heate of his indignation preferred before all the waters of Israel. But nowhere is so magnificent a building, saith Beniamin, as the Synagogue of the Ismaelites, which is therein: the people call it the Palace of Benhadad. There is to be seene a wall of Glasse, built by Art-Magicke, distinguished by holes as many as the yeare hath dayes, and so placed, that euery day the Sunne findeth them fitted in order to his present motion, each hole hauing therein a Diall with twelue degrees, answering to the houres of that day, so that in them is designed both the time of the yeare and of the day. Within the Palace are Baths and costly buildings, so rich of golde and siluer as seemeth iucredible: I saw there hanging a ribbe, of one of the Enakims or Giants, nine Spanish palmes long, and two broad, on the Sepulchre was written the name of Abchamaz. After this, in the time of Tamerlan, the magnificence of their Temple was not quite extinct, but as is reported, it had fortie great Porches in the circuit thereof, and within nine thousand Lamps, hanging from the roofe, all of golde and siluer. For the Temples sake at first he spared the Citie, but after, prouoked by their rebellion, he destroyed it and them.

He subdued the Sect of Ali in Persia, and after inuaded Cilicia, and sent (to ayde Sapores) a band of Saracens, which afflicted Chalcedon, and sacked Armaria a Citie of Phrygia; and with a Fleet inuaded Sicill, tooke Siracuse, and carried away with them the riches of Sicilia, and of Rome it selfe, lately fleeced by the Emperour, and here horded. Another Armie of Saracens, ouer-running the Sea-coast of Africa, led away eight hundred thousand prisoners.

Muamad and Caise on the other side subdued to Muani, Lydia, and Cilicia; ^p and after, with Senus another Saracen Generall, besieged Constantinople, from Aprill to September; and taking Cizicum, there wintred their forces, and in the Spring returned to their siege, which they continued seuen yeers; but by Diuine assistance, and force of tempest, they were chased thence. And Constantine slew three hundred thousand Saracens, in a battell (not long after) against Susia the nephew of Muani, and compelled the Saracens to pay a great tribute. ^q Iezid reigned after the death of Muani his father (a better Poet then Souldier) he soone died. Neyther did his successors Maruan and Abdatan liue two yeeres in the roome. ^r Abdimelec was chosen Caliph, who descended from Hali, when as Abdatan of the lineage of Eubocara (the Arabians call this the Marauinian race; the other Abaxian) had possessed himselfe of that title by force, whom Ciasa the kinsman of Abdimelec ouerthrew. Ciasa after this victorie, entring Damascus, pluckt Iazid (one of the former Caliphs) out of his graue, burned his bones, and hurled the Ashes into the riuer, and cruelly persecuted all the Marauinian stocke.

lowers fled into Mauritania Tingitana, where he was welcomed of the Saracens there being, & first intituled himselfe Miralimumim, which signifieth The Prince of Beleeuers, and then builded Marocco. Abdimelec hauing other yrons in the fire, neglected this: first appeasing tumults in his own state; then ouerthrowing the Emperour in the field: after, receiuing (by treason of the Deputie) Armenia; winning that part of Persia, which yet was subiect to the Romans, and by his forces spoyling Thracia, whiles the Greekes were diuided amongst themselues. He also chased the Roman Garrisons out of the coast-Townes which they held in Africke. Abdimelec being dead, Ulitus the sonne of Abedramon succeeded, vnder whom the Saracens, besides the spoile of Galatia, conquered all Africke betwixt Niger and the Sea, a little pcece excepted at the mouth of the Straits subiect to Rodericus the King of Spaine: Mucas was made Lieutenant of the Saracen Empire in Africke. To him Iulianus Earle of Cepta, full of indignation against his Prince, for deflouring his faire daughter Caba, about the yeare 712. offerech the conquest of Spaine, if he would furnish him with some competent forces of his Saracens. This Traytor, thus strengthened with the authority of his place (being Governour of the Ile Viridis and diuers places in Africa and Spaine) backed with his friends, and aided with the Saracens, ouerthrew the Gottish Empire, which had now ruled Spaine about three hundred years: Rodericus loosing the field and his state, and spending the remnant of his daies with an Hermite in a solitarie desert of Lusitania. Iulianus himselfe was after slaine by the Saracens, as were the Spanish Traytors; the iust end of vniust treacherie. Scaliger out of an Arabian Geographer, calleth that Captaine, Muses or Moses, sonne of Nutzir of the Marawan stocke, who had with him a valiant Captaine named Tark or Tarik, of whom the hill and the strait is named (as the vulgar pronounce it) Gibraltar properly Gebal Tarick, that is, the hill of Tarik, because he had shipped over his Barbarians thither, and fortified himselfe in that hill, in the nintieth yeare of the Hegira: which he did lest his barbarous souldiers should forsake him, and therefore also cause his ships to be burnt.

Zulciminus the next * Caliph, sent Malsmas with a great power into Thrace, where hauing spoyled the countrey, he laid siege to Constantinople; Zulciminus his master assaulting it by Sea, with a Nauie of three thousand Ships, in which siege he died, Anno Domini 719. Aumar, z his successour, had no success in this attempt, partly, through the violence of frost, causing famine and diseases in his Campe, and partly, by force of an artificiall Glasse, wherewith Leo the Emperour cast fire amongst the enemies Fleet, and fiering euen the Seas about the ships: that by this subtiltie and force of tempest, of three thousand faile, fise ships onely are said to haue escaped. a Gizid, sent with supply of three hundred and threescore ships, durst not approach for feare of this fire: and the Saracens by their Caliph were reuoked, when the plague had slaine in Constantinople three hundred thousand people.

When Aumar was dead, Gizid was chosen in his place; and after him Hafscham, son of Abdelmelech: who being murthered, Walid, or Enelit sonne of Iezid; in whose time the bottome of the Sea, neere the coasts of Asia minor, burned, and sent forth smoake first, and after, heapes of stones, with which the shores of Asia, Lesbos, and Macedonia, were filled, and a new Iland b tooke beginning of the heaping together of earth, which was annexed to the Iland called Sacra.

The Saracens in Spaine erected amongst themselues many petite Kingdomes, and by their diuisions made way to Pelagius, with some remainder of the Spaniards to recouer some of their lost countrey, who dying in the yeare 732. his sonne Fafila succeeded, in whose time the Saracens passed the Pyrenæan hills into France, where Theodoricus the second was then King; but c Charles Martell master of the Kings house ruled, as did his father in that office before, and his sonne, (both Pipins) after him. The Saracens tooke Narbone, and after Burdeaux, killing in it, man, woman, and childe, and rasing the Temples to the ground; they passed Garunna, and ouerturned Angolfine and Bloys, and came into d Turon, where Eudo the Goth then King of a great part of France, in wars with Martell, for feare of the common enemy, entred league, and with their ioynt forces slew * three hundred and seuentie fise thousand Saracens; and those of Nauarre slew the rest that escaped, in their returne. But when Eudo was dead, dead, Martell tooke part of his Kingdome from his sonnes, Hunoldus and Vaisfarus, who thereupon recalled the Saracens, which vnder the leading of Atinus tooke Auenion by the treason of Mauricius then Gouvernour, from whence, and out of France they were driuen e by Martellus.

The Saracens made foure inuasions into Thrace while Euelitus was Caliph, to whom succeeded, Anno 74. f Gizit the third, who wasted Cyprus, and carried away the people into Syria. After him and s Ices (which two ruled not two yeares) Maruan reigned; and after, another of the same name, and the Saracens were diuided, Tebid Dadae, and Zulciminus, challenged each to himselfe the Soueraigntie: and when all these were ouerthrowne and slaine, Asmulinus amongst the Persians raised vp the seruants to murder their masters, and with them he ouerthrew Iblinus with one hundred thousand Saracens; and after, Maruan himselfe with three hundred thousand, who fleeing into Egypt, was there also vanquished and slaine in a Temple.

This murder grew through the faction of the Abasian stocke, who conspired against him, because he had slaine one of their kindred. Abulabas the chiefe of this conspiracie, succeeded him, in the h yeare 749. and remoued the Chaliphate to that familie from the Marauianus, in the yeare of their Hegira 132. after the Arabian computation; as we follow Scaliger herein; and he the Chronicle which Abraham Zacutus gathered out of the Monuments of the Ismaelites. In the former relations, we haue principally followed Curio his Saraccnicall Historie; though by the way we haue borrowed of others also.

This Abulabas being dead, Abugephar Elmantzar i succeeded. Hee imprisoned the twelue sonnes of Hafin, the sonne of Ali, where they perished: Hee began first to build the Citie of Bagded: he died k in the 158. yeare. Iohn di Barros l ascribeth this Citie to the same Bugiasfar also, for so he calleth him; but Curio to one Muamat long after. Scaliger m thinketh this to be Seleucia, a Citie built nigh vnto Babylon by S. leucus, neere the meeting and mixing of Euphrates and Tygris; of which see our Babylonian Historie.

Mubdi his sonne succeeded n anno Hegira 165. after him Aharun Erreschid, anno Hegira 170. and in the yeare 193. Irrin the sonne of Reschid, slaine by the faction of his brother Mamon, 198. This Mamon was studious of learning, and learned men: He made Ali King of Chorasan, and made a law, That the Posteritie of Ali should be cloathed in yellow silke. In his time many bookes were turned out of Greeke into Arabike; he died o 218. Muetzani followed; and after him in the yeare 226. of the Hegira Aharan Elwathak; and next to him Metbucal, who was slaine in the yeare 247. by a Turke. Mutbnazar his sonne and successor died in the yeare after, whom Elmustein followed; vnder him the Turke-men set vp Achmad sonne of Tolon, seruant of Mamon King of Egypt and Syria, and slew the Chalipha anno Hegira 255. Anno Domini 868.

After this time was the Caliphate or Popedome diuided, one sitting at Bagded, another in Egypt. The Egyptian Chaliphs in our Egyptian Historie are expressed in their due place and order. In Bagded succeeded Mubiadi. And the next yeare Mutemad, who died p anno Hegira 279. Muetzed his successor died 288. Muchtaphi, who slew Aharon the last of Tolons familie that reigned in Egypt, died 295. Muetdan held the place till the yeare 320. The next was Elkabar, to whom succeeded in the next yeare, Ratze, and after him Mukiaphe his brother, who made Toson a Turke his chiefe Captaine; of whom afterwards he was blinded. Mustekaphe succeeded q anno Hegira 342. In his dayes the family of Bawia ruled, whose sonne Meaz Eddula slew the Chaliph. Their father had dreamed, that as hee pissed, fire ascended from his yard vp to heauen; which the Diuiners told him, signified the ensuing greatnesse of his sonnes.

He placed Matia in the Chaliphate, but ruled all things himselfe. Vnto Matia succeeded Taia, in his time Meaz Ledin Illah was made King of Mecca, Medina, Aliman; Egypt he obtained before. Etzad Eddula sonne of Meaz repaired Bagded, now much decayed, and gaue his daughter in marriage to the Chalipha. This r Etzad Eddula died anno Hegira 371. to whom Tzantzani Eddula succeeded, imprisoned by

In the yeare 640. of Christ 1242. succeeded Musteatzem, the foure and fiftieth Saracenicall Chalipha. The Tartar King Chita made his brother Halacho King of Irak and Mesopotamia, who besieged and sacked Bagded, and slew Musteatzem. This Chalipha was starued by his commandement in the middest of his treasures, because he would not employ the same (through niggardise) for his owne defence. From that time there hath beene no Chaliph (saith this Arabian historie) in Bagded. In him ended the Abasian line, of which had beene five and thirtie Chaliphaes.

After Mabumet or Muhammed the false Prophet, the first Captaines of warre were called Emirelmumenim, that is to say, Præfetti orthodoxorum, the Captaines of the Sound-Beleeners: and after, because, vnder cloake of Religion, they seised on the Primacie and tyranny (spirituall and temporall) they named themselues Chaliphaes, that is, Vicars. The first Emirelmumenim was Abubecher. When by his successors, Gouernours were sent into Spaice and Africa, they for a time held the same as Deputies, although to their power nothing lacked but the title of a King, yet they professed to doe all in the name of the Emirelmumenim, vntill afterwards they tooke that Title also themselues, and became absolute. Whence all the petite Kings of Spaine, and the African Potentates, were called Emirelmumenim; and the Kings of Barbarie are so stiled at this day, euen as the French King is called Christianissimus, and the Spaniard Catholicus. The Legats of the Chalipha were called Naibm, which also signifieth the same that Chalipha; but this was made peculiar to those Saracen Tyrants, which vsed both Swords, (to speake in the Romish language) supreme in matters Diuine and Humane. Thus obserueth Ioseph Scaliger * of these names: whereby appeareth, that Emirelmumenim was not giuen only to Abedramon and his successors in Africa, as is before obserued out of Curio.

Beniamin Tudelenfis nameth the Chaliph, which in his time ruled in Bagded, Amir Abmumanin Alghabafsi, which Montanus translateth, The Prince of the beleeners which liue in penance, or heauineffe: it seemeth rather to be some title arrogated to his deuotion, then his proper name; for wee finde none of that name in this Catalogue. And he was there about the time of Muktaphi or Mestnaged. Of that Chalipha Beniamin tells, That hee had a Palace of three miles compasse within the Citie, within

u Such were the Gouernours of Chorasán, Irak, Siras, Damasco, Taman, Mutzul, Halep, Gunia, Mahaan; The Arabian calleth them Kings: and their heires succeeded them.

which was a wood or groue of trees of all sorts, both barren and bearing: beasts also of all sorts for game, and in the middest thereof a great lake with plentie of fish, neither wanted there fowles, for varietie of disport. Hee was skilfull of the Hebrew, and well respected that Nation. He had imposed this rule on himselfe, not to vse any meate or apparell, which he had not ^x first earned: to which purpose hee made fine mattes, which being sealed with his owne seale, were by his Courtiers sold, the great men buying them for their vse. None of the Ismaelites (so hee calleth the Mahumetans) might see his face: and the Pilgrimes which came from Mecca, in the Land of Eliman, and passing this way, desired to see him, vsed to enter the Palace, and there cried out, O Lord, Light of the Ismaelites, and Sunne-beame of our Law, shew vs the brightnesse of thy face. But he answered them nothing, as not seeming to regard them. Then his Courtiers and great Attendants sued for them, saying, O our Lord, spread thy peace ouer these men which come from farre Countries, &c. Then would he let out at the window a skit of his garment, which they deuoutly kissed: and (when one of those great men had said, Goe in peace) returned full of gladnesse to their home, where they were receiued almost with veneration for so happie an exploit. Euery of the Princes which attended on him had their seuerall Palaces within the great Palace, and were duely obserued, wearing also Iron chaines, because they had once conspired to set vp his brother. But they had the reuenues of Townes and Cities belonging to them, brought them by their Officers, notwithstanding.

x The Great Turke obserueth some shadow of this custome, in vsing one or other handicraft.

Thus did he conferue his Maestie with the people, and securitie with his owne. I omit the Edifices and pillars of gold and siluer, adorned with Gemmes, which he mentioneth in that Palacè: Out of which the Chaliph came but once in the yeare, in the moneth Ramadan, or their Easter solennitie, at which time they resorted thither out of far Countries to see him, as if he had been Mahomet. He was then carried on a Mule, royally apparelled, and crowned with a Diadem of vspeakable price, on which he ware a blacke cloath, in token that the day of death would obscure all that pompe and splendour. The Princes of Arabia, Media, Persia, Tuboth, did attend him: and thus he went to the great Temple built in the gate Bosra. The people, men and women, all cloathed in silke and purple, salute him, Peace be on thee our Lord King: Hee resaluting them, with his hand, or mouing his garment. Being thus conueyed to the Porch, with musicke also of all kinds, and dances, he ascended a Tower of wood, and there maketh a Sermon of his Law; the wise-men of the Ismaelites applauding his learning, the people answering, Amen. After this, hee giueth them all his blessing: and a Camell is brought to him, which hee killeth for the Paschall Feast, and causeth the Princes to distribute peeces of the flesh of the beast which himselfe had slaine; this they esteeme a great gift. This done, they depart, the King returning by another way, by the bankes of Tygris, alone, (the Princes passing in the riuer) vnto the Palace. He had built a Palace on the other side of Tygris, on a branch of Euphrates which floweth by one side of the Citie, in which he had raised great Houses, Hospitalls for the sicke, and for the poore, and for madde men, with all prouision for them at his charge. Thus much I haue bene bold to insert out of this Iew, because I know none other Author that can acquaint vs with the State of Bagded in the time of her chiefe flourishing, before it was destroyed by the Tartars.

Thus haue we giuen you a Chronographically view of the ancient Chaliphæes, with their first and greatest Conquests, omitting the lesser and later; as in the yeare 807. in Sardinia and Corsica: in 826. in Creete, 842. in Sicill; and presently after in ^y Italy, ouerrunning Tuscan, and burning the Suburbs of Rome it selfe, with the Churches of Peter and Paul 845. the next yeare in Illyria Dalmatia; besides the taking of Ancona: in 847. chased by Pope ^z Leo from Ostia. These with other their affaires of war, in Lucania, Calabria, Apulia, at Beneuentum, Genua, Capua, (which Cities they tooke) I passe ouer. After this great bodie grew lubberly and vnweldie, it fell vnder the weight of it selfe, none so much as the Saracens ouerthrowing the Saracens, as their ^a Sects and Diuisions make plaine. Neuerthelesse, this dis-ioyning and disioyning notwithstanding, their Religion euen still couereth a great part of the World. For besides the triumphing sword of the Turke, Persian, Mogore, Barbarian, and other a Cairaoan became a Papacie absolute, though schismaticall, as they caled it: so did Marocco; the Persians were alway prone to such Schismes; and other, as it serueth for their aduanrage.

Mahumetan Princes: such is the zeale of the superstitious Mahumetan, that in places furthest distant, this their Religion hath bene preached, which they trade together with their merchandize, euen from the Atlantike Ocean vnto the Philippinaes: It hath founded in China, it hath pierced Tartaria: and although the name of Christian extendeth it selfe into so many Sects and Professions in the Countries of Asia, Africke, and America, besides Europe (almost wholly Christian;) yet is it hard to say, whether there be not as many Disciples and Professours of this ridiculous and impious deuotion, as of all those which giue their names to Christ, in whatsoeuer Truth or Heresie.

Thus hath the Field and the Church stouped to Mahomet: wee may adde more, (Saul among the Prophets;) Learning hath flourished among the Mahumetans, at first so vnlearned and rude.

When the Kings of Africa possessed Spaine, they founded Vniuersities both at Marocco (it is b Scaligers report) and in Spaine, allowing yearely stipends to the Professors. And in those times was great ignorance of good learning in the Latine Church, when good Disciplines flourished exceedingly amongst the Muhammedans. Yea whatsoeuer the Latines writ, after the industrie of the Arabians had acquainted them with their ignorance, is wholly to be ascribed to the Arabians, both their Philosophy, Physicke, and Mathematikes. For they had no Greeke Author which was not first translated into Arabike, and thence into Latine, as Ptolemy, Euclide and the rest; till Constantinople being taken by the Turkes, the Greeke Exiles brought vs backe to the Fountaines. But now the Muhammedans are growne artlesse in Africa: onely in Constantinople may good Arabike and Persian workes be gotten by the helpe of the Iewes. Ludonicus Vimes c saith, That they translated Arabike out of the Latine, but he was not so well able to iudge thereof, although he rightly ascribeth the corrupting of Arts to vnskillfull translations, and sheweth the difference of Abenrois or Auerrois his Aristotle (as the Latines haue him) from the Greeke. But his inuectiue is too bitter in condemning all the Arabians, as vnlearned, dotting, and saouring more of the Alcoran, then of Art. But the Spaniard might beare some grudge to that Nation, which so many hundred yeares had spoiled Spaine: still leauing the fourth part of the Spanish Language (as Scaliger d testifieth thereof) Arabike, in monument of their Conquest.

Of their learned men were c Auicen, Auerrois, Auempace, Algazel, &c. Philosophers; Mesue, Rasis, and many other Physitians and Astrologers, mentioned in the Chronicles of Zacuthi; Leo, and Abulfada Isnael, Geographers; Cairoan, Bagded, Fez, Marocco, Corduba, &c. were Vniuersities of Saracen students. But now Learning and Schooles are decayed and ruined: euen as at first also it was amongst some of them little countenanced, as appeareth by that Hagag in the 96. yeare of the Hegira, who being Governour or King of Irak, in his sicknesse consulted with an Astrologer, Whether the Starres had told him of any Kings death that yeare: he answered, That a King should die, but his name was Cani: Whereupon Hagag, remembring that at his birth his mother had imposed that name on him: I shall die, saith he; but thou shalt go one hour before; and presently caused his head to be smitten off. An vnhappie Harbengership in regard of his Art: an vnhappie Art which can better tell others Destinies then their owne. But no maruell in Hagag, who was fleshed in bloud, that his Herodian Testament should be thus bloudie, who in his life had in that Median Prouince slaine an hundred and twentie thousand men, besides fiftie thousand men, and fourescore thousand women, which perished in his imprisonments.

CHAP. III.

The Life of Mahomet, or Muhammed the Saracen Law-giuer.

He life of Mahomet is at large described by diuers Authors, but I find it no where so fully as before the Alcaron in the Italian Edition, the sum whereof, and of the other reports touching the same, is this; Ismael was the first (according to that Italian Author, others ascribe it to Abraham) that built the Temple at Mecca, and hauing to wife an Egyptian Idolatresse, had by her twelue sons, which (as he saith) being disperfed in Arabia, Persia, Armenia, sowed so many sorts of Religion: and Chedar his second son, placed in the Temple of his father (vpon an high Tower called Alquibla) an Idoll named Allech and Alleze, instituting certaine ceremonies: and amongst the rest, the sacrificing of a Ram, in remembrance of that Ram which was presented to his grand-father Abram at the offering of Isaac. Of Chedar ^a descended Thebic, and so in order, Caab, Numbib, Almucaien, Ablucen, Acaba, Amubasca, Amir, Celuf, Nisca, Abhimaste, Adrem, Scaad, Mudhar, Ilges, Mudicita, Hudhaifa, Chinene, Anascere, Melich, Phasce, Paliff, Lunai, Cabnai, Morta, Chelef, Facien, Abdamanef, Abdalmutalif, Abdalla the supposed father of Mahomet: his mothers name was Hennina or Hemina a Iewesse (as some ^b write) his father was an Ethnicke or Pagan Idolator. His base condition and obscuritie was such, that the Turkes themselves doubt whether he were an Arabian or Persian, notwithstanding that genealogicall rable. ^c Richerius reporteth that he was a Cyrean by birth, and that in the time of his minoritie or child-hood, he was by some Plagiary stolne away from his friends, and sold to the Ismaelite-Merchants. Others say, that he was abandoned both of father and mother, and (according to the cruel custome of that barbarous people) sold to strangers. From so base a beginning did this cunning impostor and seducer of the World arise, to be the scourge of Princes, and disturber of the World.

He was comely of person, and of sharp wit, and therefore was made ouerseer of the busines of Abdalmutalif his Master, or (as some say) his Grand-father: and traded for him in Soria, Egypt, and Persia, and after his death, inherited his goods: Continuing his trade of merchandize with a great man of Corozan, he succeeded him in his bed and wealth, by the mariage of his widow Gadisa (whom ^d others call Adega the daughter of Hulert) and that (as some suspect not vnprobably) by the helpe of Sorceries and incantations. With this widdow, after she was become his wife, he liued in his wonted course of his life thirteene yeares, and had by her one son and three daughters. And by this means grown great, he aspired higher; assembling to himself a company of thieues, vnthrifts, and out-lawes, which with him became Voluntaries and Aduenturers in the wars of the Emperour Heraclius against the Persians: in which he valourously behaued himselfe, and was wounded in the visage. & Cosdroes the Persian King was overcome.

After this, Mahomet deuising further how to satisfie his ambitious desire of Soueraignie, met with occasion fitting those his aspiring designs. The Arabians being denied their pay (as is said) raised a mutinie and ^e rebellion: these chose Mahomet to be their Captaine, who vsed them as his instruments of robbery and violence about the countries of Mecca. But the Nobles opposing themselves against him; he, percciuing that their power and authoritie would be a peillous rub in his way, thought it his safest course to insinuate with them, and therefore sought by alliance to winne their better liking, taking some of their daughters to his wiues; of which hee had at one time eleuen, and in all his life fiteene, besides two slaues.

Heraclius at that time fauouring the Heresie of the Monothelites; and neglecting the affaires of the Empire, *Mahomet*s projects tooke better effect. Hummar also and Mauchia caused all Soria, Iudæa and Egypt to rebell. Sergius at that time a Nestorian Monke of Constantinople (thence for that Heresie excommunicated) resorting to Mahomet, kindled these sparkes into a great fire, perswading him to countenance his Rebellion, with the pretence of Religion; the rather now that Heraclius had offended the Christians by his exactions and Heresies, and the Iewes, by new cruelties because by Magicke he had beene warned to beware of the Circumcised Nation. Thus some malecontented Iewes, and some hereticall Christians being called to counsell, it was agreed, that he should professe himselfe to be chosen in this turbulent state of the world, to bring vnto the same a New Law, appointed hereunto by Diuine authoritie: to the Iewes affirming himselfe their expected Messias; to the Christians promising amidst so many Heresies The rule of Truth; to the excommunicate Heretikes, restitution of their persons and goods; to seruants, libertie; to subiects, immunitie from tribute.

f He neither was Circumcised himselfe, (saith an Arabian nobleman in consultation of the Alcoran) nor did command anything thereof in his law, but the Arabians vsed Circumcision before his time.

g Sanseuino calleth him Bacira, and addeth also Nichol is a Priest of Rome.

And thus he caused himselfe of Sergius to be baptised, and to be ^f circumcised also of Abdalla a Iew, hauing before beene a Paynime. After he got himselfe into a Caue two miles from the Towne called Garbe, continuing there two yeares in companie of Sergius and Abdalla, which acquainted him with the Christian and Iewish Principles: and in the night resorted to his wife, whom he perswaded to this vaine beleefe by Zeidinus his seruant, rewarding him therefore with freedome, and proclaiming (as by an Edict from Heauen) the like libertie to all seruants of all sorts, which would follow him. This rout resorting to him, and by their numbers strengthening his faction, their masters not a little aggrieved, gaue out a rumour, that Mahomet was madde, and possessed of a Diuell, and that an euill end would befall him and his followers. And although they might haue gotten him into their hands, yet in regard of his nine vnecles, and some noble Families linked with him in kindred, viz. the Corasists, the Hassinists, the Benitamines, they abstained from further rigour:

Thus with the helpe of Sergius and Baira a Iacobite, and Cillenus, in the caue, with the fauour of his two vnecles, Hanza and Alaben at Mecca, with his elder brother (that tooke his daughter Fatima) and Eubocara (a chiefe man of that place, afterwards his father in law) he composed after his and their pleasure Constitutions and Canons, and published the same at Mecca; with protestation that the Angell Gabriel had beene sent to him from God, as in old times to the Prophets, to teach him these things. And in the first place commanding them to beleue in God the Creator of heauen and earth the causer of raines and fruits, that inflicteth death on men, and after raiseth them vp to giue them either, in reward of their good workes, Paradise; or of their bad, Hell; and such other things, neuer before heard of among these simple Idolatrous Inhabitants of Mecca, he grew in great estimation.

For in Persia and Arabia, before this time, some worshipped a Tree, which they called Putulangua, offering sacrifices thereto: some an Idoll, called Bliomum; and some the Sunne; and others, other Idolatries; spread by the so many sonnes of Ismael: and therefore the ruder multitude, astonished with these Propheticall and Angelicall titles, were easily bewitched. And by degrees he published his intended wickednes, not sparing outrageous villanies, as ^h the stealing of a Camell, the murdering of a Iew sleeping vnder a tree. Yea, he pretended not humane infirmitie, but diuine authority, to his most mischieuous designments. For example, being lustfully affected to ⁱ Zameh, the daughter of Gaisi, the wife of Zaid, he writ in his Law, That after vow or promise of marriage it was lawfull for him to enioy her, and (if he pleased) to take her to his wife. And being reprehended, that Aissa his wife ^k was dishonest with Zaphagam, the son of Amuthabum, the Angell (forsooth) said, she was chaste. And being found by his wiues, with Mary the wife of Miscobe, the King of the Iacobites, he in another Chapter is absolved of his oath, and free to lye with any woman, not being able to containe himself, notwithstanding he had sworne so to do. And by the same authority he enioyned them penance, for blaming the Prophet. And willing to diuorce one of his wiues, but fearing the greatnesse of her kindred, he frameth one Chapter, blaming him for fearing man more then God. Meeting once with a woman on the way, hee would haue abused her, but she refusing, hee set vpon her Ass (Lettrice besfitting his lippes) affirming that that woman had more sinned, then if shee had slaine an hundred men. And the Saracens to this day, saith ^l Petrus Alfonsi, deplore that fact of this Saracen woman.

He wanteth not his miracles also in his Legend. As he journeyed in the heat of the day day¹ with his Camels, a Cloud couered his head from the scorching heat of the Sun, about the seuenteenth yeare of his age. And when he first entered the Caue, he saw the Angell Gabriel in his proper shape, with white wings on a seat of gold betwixt heauen and earth, who brought him his Prophecie: and going to Mecca to tell his wife; the Beasts, Trees, Stones, and Hearbes, saluted him with the name of a Prophet, and a Messenger of God; and the trunke of a Tree standing in the way, diuided it selfe for him to passe betweene, and then after closed againe. He also, to satisfie his incredulous vncle Bugellinus, caused the Moone to descend from heauen, which entered into his fleec, and after parted it selfe in two, and then ascended againe. To satisfie the peoples doubtings, he caused a Bull (taught before to come at his cali) to bring on his hornes a Chapter, which he there had tied, to testifie the truth of Mahomet.

miracles.

But while the same of this his Propheticall Function filled the mouthes of the vulgar with acclamations, it no lesse filled the hearts of the Nobles of Mecca with disdain, who sought therefore to apprehend him; but he closely fled to Ictrib or Medina with his followers, where he liued with the name of a Prophet thirteene yeares. From this flight they begin the computation of their Hegira: the word Hegirathi signifieth a persecution for Religion. Wherein Mahomet imitated the Christians of those parts, who accounted their yeares from the persecution of Dioclesian. That his flight hapned on the sixteenth of July An. Dom. 622. on Friday: Therefore doe they keepe holy the Friday. And because then the Moone shewed her new hornes, that became a sacred ensigne to the Mahometans: & on Towers where they watch to obserue the new Moone, they set vp an horned Moone, as Christians on Steeples vse to erect the Crosse. For then there was no New Moore day of their moneth Muharram^m, but was the second day after the Iewish account: and therefore the new Moone might then be seene. But for the Friday it was obserued, before Mahomet's time, as shall after be shewed. He deprued a certaine Carpenters poore Orphans of their patrimonie, and consecrated their House into a Temple. This Citie being for most part inhabited with Iewes, they asked a signe in confirmation of his Office. He said, That he was not sent with miracles, but denuntiation of Armes heere, and Hell hereafter: and those which would not receiue his new Doctrin, he expelled by force. Being absolute Lord heere, he aspired also to the Dominion of Mecca. He sent thirtie horse with Hanzeta to rob the Merchants, traueiling thither: but being thenpreuented, he sent, foure yeares after, sixe hundred of his best souldiers, vnder Hugaida, to assault Mecca, but he also was discomfited: yet not desisting his enterprize, seuen yeares after he archieued it, and after eleuen battailes entered and sacked the Towne, and gaue the spoile to his souldiers: and for feare, the neighbouring-Cities submitted themselues. Mahomet herewith encouraged, assaulted the Persians and Egyptians, exchanging with those he conquered, his New Religion, for their old wealth and libertie, binding the Gouvernours therunto. But now being old, and through his intemperances weake, and diseased also with the falling Sicknes; he coloured his often falling with pretext of Gabriels brightnesse, and the vsufferable splendour of his presence.

He was of meane stature, large sinewes, browne colour, broad face, with a cut lip, and had one of his fore-teeth stricken out in one Expedition, and in another his face wounded. He had a great head, thinn haires, long shankes, not proportionable to his head. He was of few words, but deceitfull; couetous, and withall prodigall, (but of other mens goods) and in deeds of lust equalling himselfe to fortie other men, or (as some say) fiftie. When he was threescore and three yeares of age, he died; of which he liued in trade of Merchandize thirtie eight, and in the Caue two; at Mecca ten, in Medina thirteene. He had commanded, that they should not burie him; for that on the third day after hee would ascend in bodie and soule into heauen. Meane while the Earth being poysoned with the stinke of his carkasse, they buried him, not at Mecca (as some affirme) but at Medina. His Law, in his life-time, sustained many alterations; Cellenus his Scribe writing what himselfe pleased: and the seuerall parcels of the same being collected by Odmen, one of his successors, this Book was therupon called Alcaron, that is, a Summary, or Collection of Precepts. Thus Mahomet aduantaged himselfe with the mutinous Rebels, Fugitiues, Vnthrifts, Apostata-Iewes, and heretical Christians in that diseased State of the Empire: the bodie whereof was afflicted on the East by the Persians, on the West by the Gothes and other Barbarians, and fretted within the owne bowels by intestine rebellions: the Soule thereof being no lesse torne and rent by the Sects and Heresies of the Arrians, Donatists, Nestorians, Pelagians, and others. He fishing in these troubled waters, set on foot his new Religion, to bring light to the Gentiles, and to mitigate to the Jewes and Christians the severitie of the Law and Gospell. But the Mahometans themselues doe report otherwise, fabling of this Fable great matters, as if he had bene the Promise and Hope of Nations, and the most excellent personage of the World.

n Legend of Mahomet, Heron inno Dalmata interprete.

o These Prophets were Abdalla, Abnalmutaira, Abuxaid, Abancumet, Alabez, Alfad, Abulumbez, Ezerigi, Abnamare, Kabalchaber (scholler of Kabelmedi) or Kabalachbar.

p A Mahometan Chronicle saith, That this Light claue to the hands of God two thousand yeares before Adam, worshipping him as the Angels; after inclosed in the Rib of Adam, &c.

q Sound, courageous, faire, swift, iust, a Hunter, and Archer.

They haue written a Booke of the generation of Mahomet to this effect: " The Booke of the generation of Mahomet, the Messenger of God, (the Prayer and Salvation of God be vpon him) from Adam and Eue to the time when God brought him forth gracious, perfect, and fit for himselfe. When as Kabachbar had learned out of the Scriptures, and by Astrologie, that his Prophet should be borne to the world, hee heard, That there was a man borne in Ieseras, a Citie of Arabia, hauing all such markes and tokens, as hee had fore-seene by the Prophecies and his Art, viz. A spot on his forehead, a print betweene his shoulders, &c. And to satisfie his desire, hee went thither to see; where finding those tokens fulfilled in yong Mahomet, he thereupon expounded the darke mysterie of his farre-fetched Light, learned of his Master Kabelmedi, in this manner: When Adam was newly created, as he stood vp, his braine shaked and made a noyse, as the leaues doe, which are shaken with the winde: whereat Adam wondering, God said vnto him, The sound which thou hast heard is the signe of the Prophets and Messengers of my Commandements. Take heed therefore that thou commit this Seed of Light only to worthe Ioynes and to a cleane Wombe. And this Light of Mahomet that should be borne, shined from the face of Adam, as the Sun or Moone at the full. And when he had begotten Seth that Light passed instantly from the face of Adam into the face of Eue, in so much, that the birds of the Aire, and beasts of the Earth, wondered at her beautie. Yea, the Angels euery day saluted her, and brought her odours out of Paradise, till she brought forth Seth alone, hauing before at euery burthen, brought forth a brother and a sister.

Seth inherited this Light, which remained betweene heauen and earth, the Angels thereby ascending and descending vpon Seth, and crying alwayes, Reioyce thou Earth, worthe of the Light of Mahomet, on him be Prayer and Salvation of God. Adam drawing neere to his end, declared vnto him, by his Testament, the mysterie of that Light, and the Genealogie of the Prophets. Then descended Gabriel accompanied with threescore and ten thousand Angels, bearing euery one of them a white leafe and a pen, which signed the writing, for the continuance of the order of the Propheticall generation. Seth receiued this writing, and was cloathed with a double red garment, shining as the Sunne, and soft as the violet-flower.

From him it passed by succession to Noe and Sem; then to Abraham, at whose birth two lights from the East and West (meeting in the middest) lightned the whole world: and the Angels were heard singing, That it was the Light of the Prophet Mahomet, who should be borne of his Seed, whose Word should be in the vertue of God. This Light passed from Abraham to the face of Hagar, being with child, and after to Ismael; and God told him, That the Soule of Mahomet, in the beginning of the Creation, was mingled with his, and that his name in Heauen should be Asmet, in Earth Mahomet, in Paradise Abualtrazim. At this Sara grieued, vntill three Angels comforted her with the promise of Haac. From Ismael it remoued to Keidar his sonne, who being indued with 9 seuen Gifts, married Nulia of the Land of Isaac, but, being warned by an Oracle, he rooke to wife Algadira, an Arabian; and after, by diuine warning, carried the chest of this Light vnto Jacob. Then was Himel borne to him, and receiued the same Light; in which succeeded Thebicht, Hamieffa, Adeth, Aduus, Adne, Machat, Nizar, Musar, Aliez, Madraca, Horeima, Knicua, Anofra, Melic, Falbrem, Lue, Galben, Kab, Murran, Cudai, Abdameief, Hefim, a man by diuine testimonie free of all vncleanness. To him did all Kings offer their daughters in marriage, and among the rest Constantine, which he refused; and married Seline the daughter of Zeit, and and had by her Abdalmatalib, whose Light caused raine in drought. To him an Elephant prostrated himselfe, and said with mans voice, Saluation be on you, and on the Light that shmeth out of your Reines, Dignitie, Fame, Honor, and Victorie be on you. and that there should proceed from him a King, greater then all the Kings of the Earth: Another time, as he slept on the stone which was placed by Abraham in his Oratorie at Mecca, he dreamed of a chaine reaching East and West, and to Heauen, and to the Depth, which was presently conuerted into a flourishing hearbe. Noe and Abraham presented themselues interpreters of this Dreame. Abdalla his sonne, the father of Mahomet, had a Tutor giuen vnto him, to defend him from his enemies, who seemed a man, but was none. Hee was preserued from the lying in wait of the Iewes, by threescore and ten Angells, which seemed Men. Hee wedded Ermina, and therefore two hundred Women perished for his loue; some hanging, some burning themselues. When the prescribed time was come, in the moneth Dulheia, on a Friday night, God bad Aridruvan to open the gates of Parádise, that the innermost of his secret might bee manifested: for it pleaseth mee (saith hee) this night to transport the Light of my Prophet from the reines of Abdalla into the wombe of Ermina, and that it come into the world. This being done, as Abdalla, the Iudge and Lord of the Arabians, went into the house of Prayer, he perceiued a great light to lighten from his house vp toward Heauen, and presently dyed. On the twelfth day of Rab, on a Tuesday, Mahomet was borne, circumcised, and all frolick. And then all Idolls fell and became black: All Kingdomes were destroyed, and not one stood vp-right. Lucifer was cast into the bottome of the Sea, and in fortie dayes could not get out, and then called his fellowes, and told them, that Mahomet was borne with the power of the sword, who would take away all their power. The same also God caused to be proclaimed in Heauen and Earth. His mother said, That shee was deliuered of him without paine, and Angelicall Birds came to nourish the child, and a man clothed in white presented him with three keyes, like to Pearles, which he tooke; the key of Victorie, the key of the Lawes, and the key of Prophecie. And after came three persons with shining faces, presenting him a Cauldron of Emeralds, with foure handles, which Mahomet accepted as a signe of his rule ouer all the world. The Birds, Clouds, Windes, Angels, contended for the nourishment of the child. But the case was determined by heavenly voice, assuring, That hee should not bee taken from the hands of men. An Assle, almost famished, worshipped him, and receiuing him on her back, became Herald to this new Prophet, with mans voice proclayming the worthinesse of her Carriage. Three men carryed him vp into a Mountaine: of which, one of them opened him from the breast vnto the Nauell, and washed his entrailles with snow: the second cleaued his heart in the middest, and tooke out of it a black graine, saying, That it was the portion of the Deuill. The third made him whole againe. Seraphim nourished him three yeares, and Gabriel nine and twentie, who gaue vnto him, in the fortieth yeare of his age, the Law, and carryed him to Heauen. This his journey is related by Frier Richard, sometimes a student in the Vniuersitie of Baldach, Chapter 14. and in his life.

The fifth of Diamond, and in it Moses. The sixth of Rubie, and in it Iohn Baptist. The seuenth of Fire, and in it Iesus Christ. All these recommended themselues to his Prayers.

old Father Adam, reioycing for such a Sonne, and commending him to his prayers. Then hee brought him to the second Heauen, which was a iourney of five hundred yeares, and so forth on to the seventh Heauen: Here hee saw the Angelicall people, euery of which was a thousand times greater then the World, and euery of them had threescore and ten thousand heads, and euery head threescore and ten thousand mouthes, and euery mouth seenteene hundred tongues, praising God in scuen hundred thousand Languages. And he saw one Angell weeping, and he asked the cause, who answered, That he was Sinne. And Mahomet prayed for him. Then Gabriel commended him to another Angell, and he to another, and so forth in order, till hee came before God and his Throne. Then God (whose face was couered with threescore and ten thousand clothes of light, and from whom Mahomet stood two stons cast below) touched him with his hand, the coldnesse whereof pierced to the marrow of his back-bone. And God said, I haue imposed on thee and on thy people Prayers. When he was returned as farre as the fourth Heauen, Moses counselled him to returne back, to obtayne ease vnto the people, which could not beare so many prayers, which he did oftentimes, till there remayned but few. Thus returning to his Elmparac, hee rode back to his house at Mecca. All this was done in the tenth part of the night. But when he was requested to doe thus much in the peoples sight, he answered, Praised be God, I am a Man, and an Apostle.

The booke Asear (saith Bellonius) telleth further, That in this iourney Mahomet heard a womans voice, crying, Mahomet, Mahomet, but he held his peacc. Afterwards another called him, but he gaue no answer. Mahomet asked the Angell who they were? He answered, That the one was shee which published the Jewes Law, and if he had answered her, all his Disciples should haue bene Jewes: the other was shee which deliuered the Gospell, whom if hee had answered, all his followers had bene Christians.

The said Booke telleth, That Gods face was couered with threescore and ten thousand linnen clothes made of Light, and that God gaue him a five-fold priuiledge. First, That he should be the highest creature in heauen or earth: Secondly, the most excellent of the sonnnes of Adam: Thirdly, An vniuersall Redeemer: Fourthly, Skilfull in all languages: Fifthly, That the spoiles of Warres should be giuen him. Gabriel after (saith that booke) carryed him to Hell, to see the secrets thereof, and the scuen gates thereof, &c. where (as in the place fittest for him) we will leane him. The booke of the vertues of Mahomet saith, That in glorying of his strength he would boast, that he had knowne his eleuen wiues successiue in one houre.

One of their Chronicles telleth of his Martiall affaires. This Chronicle reckoneth from Adam to Noe one thousand two hundred two and fortie yeares: From thence to Abraham, one thousand and fourescore: Hence to Moses, five hundred and fiftene: After him to Dauid, five hundred threescore and nine: and from this time to Christ, one thousand three hundred and fiftie: from whence to Mahomet is numbred sixe hundred and twentie; in all five thousand three hundred threescore and sixteene, from Adam to Mahomet. All the Prophets were in number an hundred and twentie thousand, and the Messengers of God three hundred and fiftene: whereof Adam, Seth, Esdrik, Noe, Abraham, were Hebrewes; Huth, Schale, Ishmael, Schaib, Mahomet, were Arabians.

If this Historie of *Mahomet*s life be long and tedious, I thought good, out of an Arabian Chronicle, to adde this Epitome thereof. His Mother dyed in a iourney to Mecca, when he was foure yeares old, and his Nurse restored him to his Grand-father Abdalmutalif, with whom hee liued eight yeares. The Seraphim preserued him, but was neuer scene. After that, Gabriel was his Guardian, of whom he received the Law, which he kept close three yeares, communicating it only to some of his owne opinion, by whose helpe he became Priest and Prince of the Arabians and Saracens, and about eighteene moneths after was carried into Heauen: and being returned into the Earth, he tooke Eubocara, Ali, and Zaid to be his Companions in this enterprise. Hee went to Zaif, or Atharf, and preached publikely, and thence to Mecca, ten yeares going from place to place. And of his Conuerts, he chose some for guard of his Person, who

sware the obseruance of his Law, to the number of fortie, who now with Word, now with the Sword, set forward this Doctrin. After ten yeares, Mecca was peopled only with beleeuers; and all Arabia was conuerted, without difficultie. Then hee sent to the neighbouring Kings to become of his Religion; to the King of Persia, to the Roman Emperer, to King Cinna, to the Lord of the two Seas, to the King of Aethiopia, &c. After he returned to Ietrib, and on Tuesday, the twelfth of Rab, in the eleuenth yeare, dyed. His Sepulture was appointed by God in the house of Aisca his Wife, in the Chamber where he was wont to sleepe, where, at this day, is a Temple of Brick. His body was wrapped in three white clothes, without any pompe. His seale was a siluer Ring, with this inscription, Mahomet the messenger of God. He went twice on Pilgrimage, and nineteene times conducted an Armie.

The place of his buryall is at Medina, surnamed of him Talnabi *, that is, of the Prophet; not (as some write) at Mecca. Neither doth his Corps hang in the aire by force of Load-stones, drawing vp his yron Coffin or Chest, but lieth buried in the ground (if any where) as Ludouicus Vertomannus, by his owne view, hath obserued. Of this place, and of Mecha, wee shall speake more, in relating the Rites of the Pilgrims that visit them.

Some relate otherwise of the death of Mahomet, as that hee dyed at fortie yeares of age, being poisoned by one of his Disciples, called Albunor, to make triall of his boasting propheticie, that he would rise againe within three dayes after his death. This Albunor after coming to see him, found his body torne in peeces, and deuoured of Dogges: whercupon gathering together the bones that remained, into a Coffin, hee caused them to be buryed. Which in my minde is not so probable as the former report. The day of his death Scaliger accounteth the tenth yeare of the Hegira, on Monday the twelfth of Rabie 1. or rather the Euening before, that is, the sixteenth of Iune, in the yeare of our Lord 631. and was borne the 5. of May, An. Dom. 570. on the same day and moneth, 63. Arabike yeares before.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the Alcoran, or Alfurcan, containyng the Mahometane Law: the summe and contents thereof.

He Booke of Mahomets Law is called by the name of Alcoran, which signifieth a collection of Precepts; and Alfurcan, (as it is exprest and expounded in a Booke, a called the Exposition or Doctrin of the Alcoran) because the sentences and figures thereof are seuered and distinguished, for Al is the Article, and phurcan signifieth a distinction, or as some say, Redemption. Claude Duret citeth an opinion that of the Hebrew word Kara, which signifieth the Law or Scripture, commeth this word koran, which with the article Al, signifieth τὴν γραφήν, the Scripture, as with them it is esteemed: the like hath Soranzo. The Word of God (saith Mahomet in that Booke) came not to mee all at once, as the Law vnto Moses, the Psalmes to Dauid, and the Gospell to Christ. The Sentences or Chapters thereof are called Azoaras, which is interpreted a Face, as we call them Capita, Heads. The stile ^b is not in Meter, as some haue imagined: for Iosephus Scaliger ^c (a great Critick, and reputed one of the greatest Linguists in the world) affirmeth, That that Language is not capable of metricall measures by quantities of Syllables; as neither the Hebrew, Abyssine, or Syrian. Hee saith yet, That the Alcoran is composed in Rime, but such, as is not in any tunable proportion; but that word which maketh vp the Rime, being sometimes nearer, and sometimes farre beyond all harmonie, distant from that word whereto it answereth. At the end of such Rimes are set the figures of Flowers, or some such matter: which if it bee so, the Turkish nicetic of making no likenesse of any thing in their Carpets, or other Workes, is stridter then

these Alcoran-bookes themselues, and indeede is not common with them vnto other Mahumeranes, who vse their libertie in this point.

- ^a The phrase. For the wordes and * phrase; no man euer writ any thing in Arabian more rudely (saith an Arabian Christian in confutation hereof) and much better might Muzeilania, Heleaisi, and Alabazbi the Aethiopian, and Calliata Ellecedi, which vpon emulation composed also euery one an Alcoran, glorie of those their Workes, contayning more honestie and truth. Neither hath it pleased any noble or wise man, but the rude vulgar: of which sort, the wearie labourers gladly gaue care to his promise of Paradise, the poore delighted to the heare of Gardens in Persia, and Bankrupts and Felons easily listened to securitie and libertie. The methode ^a is so confused, that our Arabian Author (who liued before it was so generally embraced, and in freer times) saith, That he had heard euen good Saracens affirme with griefe, that it was so mixed and heaped together, that they could finde no Reason in it. Bad Rime, as you haue heard, and worse Reason. Hierome Sauanorola ^b hath the like saying, That no man can finde herein any order: Nor could so confused and foolish a Worke proceede from any naturall or supernaturall light. It is yet craftily ^c contriued, when he hath set downe some wicked Doctrine, presently to lace and fringe it with Precepts of Fasting, Prayer, or Good manners: alwaies taking away things hard to bee beleued or practised: and where it deliuereth any truth, it is maimed with defect, eclipsed with obscuritie, and serueth for a stale to falshood. The Copies thereof ^d were diuers; and after Mahomet's death made (if it could be) worse, at least otherwise, then hee left them. For Hali had one Copie left him by Mahomet, which the Iewes corrupted, adding, racing, changing at their pleasure, and promised him their assistance, if he would professe himselfe a Prophet. But Ozimen commanded all the Bookes to bee brought and deliuered into the hands of Zeidi and Abdalla, to bring all into one Booke, and, where they dissented, to reade after the Copie of Corais, and to burne all the rest.

They thus composed the Alcoran, whereof they left foure Copies, which after were lost. And yet Hali, Abit alib, and Ibenimuzod then refused to deliuer vp their Bookes: Whereupon arose diuers Readings, and afterward diuers Schismes; which to compound, others often endeouored by like labours after, but could not throughly perfect the same. Neither doth that which we haue translated, agree with those things which Frier Richard and others cite out of it, in their confutations thereof.

- ^e The truth of the matter in it. f Io. Ludouic. Vin. The ^e truth thereof is such in his deuising of new, and seeking and altering the old, that it is not probable in Vines opinion, that euer he read the old and new Testament: For (saith ^f he) though I thinke of him exceeding badly, yet thinke I him not so mad to change and wrest the Scripture, there especially, where it made nothing against him: but he had partly heard of such things, partly was so perswaded by his fellowes, Apostata-Iewes and Christians. This riming, harsh, confused, packing, worke, disagreeing each Copie from other, and all from truth and honestie, hath been ^g translated into Latine ^h once by an English-man, Robertus Retmensis; and after by Ioannes Segobiensis, a Spaniard, at the Councell of Constance, & after out of Arabian into Italian, published by Andraa Arinabene. The first, and last of these, that is, Reinensis, and the Italian translations are here by vs followed. For the Arabike I vnderstand not: nor can warrant this when so great a man as Scaliger findeth great fault with it: Hce that vnder-tooke to mend the Latine stile, marred the sense; and the Italian beguileth the world in professing to haue translated out of the Arabike. Thus Scaliger, who mentioneth another translation then in hand, which we are almost out of hope to see. In the meane while, such as we haue, we giue to you.

It contayneth Chapters, or Azoara's 124. euery of them beginning, In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. The first ⁱ of these are the wordes of Mahomet, and is called the Mother of the Booke, and is as it were their Creede: the rest are all deliuered as the wordes of God; hee being induced as speaker. The first is in this sense. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. Thankes bee vnto God, the Lord of the World, mercifull, pittifull, Iudge at the day of iudgement. Wee pray vnto thee: wee trust in thee. Leade vs into the right way, the way of them whom thou hast chosen, not of them with whom thou art angrie, and of the Infidels.

^g The Translators.
^h Anno 1143. Moused by Pet. Cluniacensis, whose Epistle thereof to S. Bern. is extant.
ⁱ In the Italian are 124 chapt. besides this first: and the Easterne Saracens, reckon it but one, Azo. to the fifth. Bellon. lib. 3. diuideth it into foure Bookes, and 201. chap.

Of * God he a writeth further, that he is One, necessarie to all, incorporeall, which neither hath begotten, nor is begotten, nor hath any like him: the Creator, long-suffering; searcher of the heart, true. That he will confound enchantments, that without his gift, none can beleue (this his Alcoran) that he hath no sonne, for he needeth nothing ^b, and he which setteth a second in the place of God shall goe into hell, Az. 31. and he hath no partaker, 32. yet in Azoar. 67. hee induceth God, speaking thus: To Christ the Sonne of Marie, we haue giuen the Gospell, that by him men may obtaine the loue and fauour of God: and that the beleeuers amongst them (Christians) shall receiue a great reward: as also in Az. 2. he saith, Euery one whosoever liueth rightly, be he Iew or Christian, or if he leaueth his owne Law, and embrace another, if hee worship God, and doe good, shall vndoubtedly obaine Diuine fauour. Az. 2. The Creator said, I am the only Creator, alwaies the same, pittifull, mercifull, besides whom there is none other; whose miracles and great workes are vnto the wise the frame of heauen and earth, the intercourse of night and day, the ships in the Sea fit for the vse of men, raine for the refreshing of the earth, the composition of all creatures, the windes, the clouds, &c. 15. Inuoke and worship one God alone. 43. All the miracles of God cannot bee written, if all the trees in the world were pens, and the Sea seuen times greater, and were inke; with whom it is a small thing to raise the dead.

* Of God and Christ.

Of the birth of Christ he writeth thus, Azo. 29. We sent our Spirit to Marie (the best of all women, and the wombe vntouched, Azoar. 31.) in liknesse of a man, professing himselfe a diuine Messenger concerning a Sonne, &c. And when shee in trauell plained, Christ came from vnder her, and said, Feare not: and when some chid with her about the child, the child it selfe made answer, I am the Seruant and Prophet of God. He saith, the Iewes did not slay Christ, but one like him, Azo. 11. and vbraidereth them, for not receiuing him, Azo. 2. and chap. 4. To Christ, the Sonne of Marie, properly communicating our owne soule, we haue giuen him strength and power more then other Prophets: yet chap. 14. hee excuseth that worship which is done him and his mother.

Az. 4. We giuing our soule to Christ the Sonne of Marie, preferred him before all others, that had bene exalted by me, to speake with God, to power and vertue. He insereth the prayer of the Virgins Mother, when shee felt her selfe with childe, by Joachim: and maketh Zacharie to be the Virgins Tutor. 5. Who (he saith) for his vnbelieve was dumbe three dayes. The Angels saluted Marie, saying, O thou the purest of all women and men, deuoted to God, Ioy vnto thee of that great Messenger, with the word of God, whose name is Iesus Christ, an excellent man, at the command of the Creator: he shall come with diuine power, with knowledge of all learning, with the Booke of the Law and Gospell; shall giue Commandements to the Israelites: shall giue life; cure diseases; shew what is to be eaten, and to be done; shall confirme the old Testament; shall make some things lawfull, which before were vnlawfull, &c. He acknowledgeth that his Mother knew not man. 11. They say (the Iewes) that they killed Christ, the Sonne of Marie, the Messenger of God, but it was not true, but they crucified in his stead another like him; for the incomprehen- ble God caused him to goe vnto him. Iesus is the Spirit, and Word, and Messenger of God, sent from heauen. 11.

Concerning ^c his Law and Alcoran, he handleth it in the second Chapter or Azoara, which beginneth thus. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. This booke without any falshood or error, shewing the Truth (to them which loue, feare, and worship God, and are studious of prayers and almes) and the obseruation of the lawes giuen of God from heauen to thee and other thy Predecessors, and the hope of the world to come, hath manifested the true Sect. For this bringeth the followers thereof to the highest, enricheth them with the highest good, as to the vnbeleeuers and erroneous, it menaceth truly the greatest euill to come. This he after applyeth to Paradise and Hell, which is due to the Enemies of Gabriel which iutimated this Booke to his heart by the Creator, and to all the Enemies of God, and Michael, and the Archangels. This his Alcoran hee calleth the establishing of the Law of the Israelites: and

and Azo. 21. he arrogateth to his booke wisdom and eloquence: and 47. hee saith, ^k it was composed of the incomprehensible and wise God, euery where agreeing with it selfe, and calleth it (63) the booke of Abraham: and (69) if it should bee placed on a Mountaine, that mountaine for diuine feare would bee dissolued. Those which will not be conuerted, take and slay, by all meanes intrapping them: and fight against them till they be your tributaries and subiects. The fifteenth part of all the prey is due vnto God, and his Prophet, and to your Kindred and Orphans, and the poore. Those that are taken in Warre kill or make slaues; but pardon them if they will turne to your law, and God also will pardon them. Such good Warriors shall haue full pardon. The Jewes and Christians (contrarie to that he had said before) let God confound. He hath sent his messenger with the right way and good law, that he may manifest and extoll it about all lawes. Of the twelue moneths foure are to be consecrated to fight against the enemies. Those that refuse this war-fare loose their soules, and they which flie in the day of battell (Az. 6.) doe it by the Deuills instigation, thus punishing them for their former sinnes. They which are well (Az. 10.) and remaine at home are not of like merit, as they which goe to warre. The fire of hell is hotter then the danger of warre. And although thou (Prophet) shouldest pardon the resisters of God and his messenger seuentie times, yet God will neuer pardon them. The sick and weake, and such as haue not necessaries, are excused from this necessitie of war: but to the good warriors God giueth Paradise, in reward of their soules and goods, whether they kill or be killed, Azo. 18. 19. And in 57. Kill the vnbeleeuers whom you conquer, till you haue made great slaughter. God could take vengeance on them, but he chooseth rather to doe it by you: he shall lay deafnesse and blindnesse on the faint-hearted. Yet in 52. and 98, as contrarie to himselfe he affirmeth, that he is sent only to teach, not to compell and force men to beleue: except we expound it rather, that Jewes, Christians, and all vnbeleeuers, are compelled to be tributaries, and their slaues; not forced to their Religion, but instructed only; which agreeth with their practise. From this doctrine, and that of destinie in the 50. Az. hath risen their forwardnesse to the warre, and the greatnesse of their conquests. Agreeable to this doctrine is their manner of teaching it: the Reader or Preacher (as saith Frier Richard, student amongst them in the Vniuersitie of Baldach) holdeth a bare sword in his hand, or setteth it vp in an eminent place, to the terrour of the gaine-fayers.

^l Mahomet disclaimeth Diuine miracles, and Humane Disputations, prouing with the sword,

ⁿ The Fox will cate no grapes because they are sowre, and hang too high.

But disputation ^l and reasoning about his law he vtterly disliketh, Az. 32. To such as will dispute with thee, answer that God knoweth all thy doings, which in the last day shall determine all controuersies. And 50. Nothing but euill cleaueth to the heart of such as vnwisely dispute of diuine Precepts: but commend thou thy selfe vnto God, that knoweth all things. And chap. 4. 15. Hee is commanded to goe away from such. This booke is giuen to take away discord from men: miracles hee disclaimeth as insufficient proofe; for though it should make plaine the mountaines, and make the dead to speake, yet they would bee incredulous: But it is thy dutie only to shew them my Precepts, Azo. 23. And Az. 10. Yee which are good, beleue in God, in his Messenger, and in the booke sent from heauen. They which first beleue, and after denie, and become incredulous, shall haue no pardon nor mercie of God, but shall goe into the fire. And (11.) We will bring infinite euill vpon him, that will not obey God and his Messenger, and will be Disputing. To them which ^m demand that the booke may raine vpon them from heauen, thou shalt say that some asked a greater thing of Moses, that he would shew God vnto their eyes, and were therefore smitten with lightning from heauen. (12.) To the Jewes and Christians God hath giuen disagreements, till God shall determine the same at the day of iudgement. Make not your selues Companions of them which deride our Law. No man receiuethe perfection of the Law, but hee which beleueth the Testament, the Gospell, and this Booke sent of God. 14. They which erre will say, let God shew vs miracles. These hurt none but their owne soules, for if they should see all ⁿ miracles done, they would dispute with thee, saying, that they could not be done but by inchantments. Thou shalt not come to them with manifest miracles; for they would refuse them, as odious things. 15. Dispute not with them which will not heare; and if they demand miracles, say, God only doth them:

I know

I know not the secrets of God, and follow nothing but that which God and the Angel hath commanded: and if Angels should speake to such, they would not beleue. 16. God himselfe and his blessed Spirit haue compounded this most true booke. 26. 44. They which say his Law is new or fained, goe to the Deuill. 47. Hee induceth some gainsaies, saying, we will not leaue worshipping our Images for this Iester and Rimer. Yet is he alone come wirth the truth, confirming all the other Messengers. 55. He saith I (God) writ this booke with my owne hand. 56. The vnbeleueers say I am a Magician, and haue fained it: but then I pray God that I may haue no part in him when hee shall be our Iudge. Say not there are three Gods, but one God alone without a Son, to him all things are subiect. Christ cannot denie but that he is subiect to God, as well as the Angels. 12. We sent Christ to whom we gaue the Gospell, which is the light and confirmation of the Testament, & the right way to him which feareth God, by the fulfilling of your law. All that say that Christ is God, are vnbeleuers and liars (Christ himselfe hauing said, Yee children of Israell beleue in your God and my Lord) of whom he which will be partaker, shall bee cast into the fire eternall. Christ is but the messenger of God, before whom were many other messengers: and his mother was true, and they did eate. Good people exalt not your selues in your law, further then the truth. 3. The soule of Christ was cleane and blessed, he cured the leaproous, raised the dead, taught wisdom, the Testament, and the Gospell. The vnbeleuing Israelites beleued that he was a Magician. And 34. We haue giuen a good place and abounding with water to the son of Marie, and to her, for hauing done such miracles in the world.

Of the * Creation he affirmeth (Az. 2.) that when God had made the world, hee disposed the seuen heauens: he told the Angels he would make one like vnto himselfe in the earth: they answered, we in all things are subiect to your Maiestie, and giue praise vnto you: but he will be wicked and a shedder of bloud. Then God testifying that he knew a thing not knowne to the Angels, taught Adam the names of things by himselfe, not knowne to the Angels, and therefore commanded the Angels to doe reuerence before Adam, which wicked ^a Belzebub refused; they obeyed. And Az. 25. We made man of clay, and I breathed into him a portion of mine owne soule, after that I had created the Deuill of pestiferous fire: and because Belzebub refused to humble himselfe to this man (made of black mire) he was damned; and when he desired respice till the resurrection, it was denied: and therefore he said he would teach all euill things, that they shall not giue thee thanks, &c. Of the Angels he affirmeth (45.) that some of them haue two wings, some three, some foure: and (52.) the heauen would fall vpon men, were it nor for the Angels that call vpon God. There they shall possesse rings of gold, chaines, iewels, clothed with cloth of gold; their beds shall be of gold, and this for euer.

* Creation.

^a Belzebub, said he, was made of fire, and therefore better then he which was made of earth, Az. 17.

Of ^b Paradise he dreameth in this sort. Az. 65. He which feareth God shall receiue the two Paradises full of all good, pleasant with streaming fountaines. There they shall lie on silken and purple Carpets, and shall be accompanied with many Maidens, beautiful as the Hyacinth and pearles, neuer deflowred of men or Deuils, neuer menstruous, sitting in pleasant shades with their eyes fixed on their husbands: their eyes large, with the white of them exceeding white, and the black very black, lying on the shining Greene. Faire yong men shall serue them with Vials and other Vessels, full of the most excellent liquor, which shall neither cause head-ach, nor drunkenesse, and shall bring them the choicest fruits, and flesh of fowies. They shall there heare no fildie or displeasing word: and (Az. 86.) In Paradise shall bee administred to them in well-wrought vessels of glasse and siluer, drinke, as the faou. ie ginger, out of the fountaine Zelzebub: they shall haue garments of silke and gold, chaines of siluer, blessed wine, Maidens likewise with pretie breasts: there tall trees of colour betweene yellow and Greene. They shall haue in Paradise all pleasures, and shall enioy women with eyes faire, and as great as egges: sweet smelling Rivers of milke, and honic, and fruits of all sorts. Of this Paradise, Anicenna (a Mabumetan) saith, that it concerneth the body, but wise Diuines more respect the minde; the felicitie whereof, in coniunction with truth, they farre preferre before the other of the body.

^b Paradise. The Turkes Paradise a beastly carnall one.

fleas, that they shall be fed with the tree Ezeem, which shall burne in their bellies like fire, that they shall drinke fire; and being holden in chaines of feuentie cubits, shall be kept sure; the fire shall cast forth embers like Towers or Camels. They which contradict shall be punished with the fire of hell: they which feare, shall goe into Paradise; and as it were in a middle space betwixt the one and the other, there shall stand some other with hope and expectation of Paradise. We haue set Angels ouer hell, and haue appointed their numbers. (84.) 98. There shall be fountaines of scalding waters, and they shall eate vpon a reede, but shall not satisfie their hunger: they shall bee bound in chaines. 121.

* Of Purgatorie.

a Of the Prophet Mahomet.

He ^a sometime excuseth his owne basenesse, as Azo. 36. The vnbeleeuers (saith he) murmure that he is followed only of Weauers, and the raskall-rout. And 53. That the Alcoran was not committed to a man of great possessions: and they say, that it is Art-magick, and that I haue fained it. And in 64. The Moone was diuided, and they say it is forcerie. (The tale is told by Frier Richard thus: Mahomet pointed to the Moone with his thumbe, and middle finger, and it was diuided, the two peeces falling on the Hills of Mecha, which entring into Mahomet's coat was made whole againe.) Hee ^b sometime extolleth himselfe, blasphemously inducing Christ, thus saying to the Israelites; O yee Israelites, I being sent a Messenger vnto you from God, affirme by the Testament which I haue in my hand, that a Messenger shall come after me, whose name is Mahomet, of whom they shall say that he is a Magician. 71. His beastly prerogatiue he boasteth, (43.) saying, he is the seale and last of the Prophets. To thee, O Prophet, we make it lawfull to lie with all women which are giuen thee, or which thou buyest. and thy Aunts, thy Kindred, and all good women which freely desire thy companie, if thou be willing: and this is permitted to thee alone. Diuorse these, couple thy selfe to those at thy pleasure. And being by some other of his wiues found in bed with Marie the wife of a Jacobite Christian, he sware that he would neuer after vse her companie: but after being impotent in his lusts, he ordaines a law to himselfe. Az. 76. Why doest thou, O Prophet, make that lawfull, for the loue of thy women, which God hath made vnlawfull? God full of pittie, and giuer of pardon, hath commanded thee to blot out, or cancel thine oathes.

b Mahomet guilte of his witchcraft, often speaketh of it; that he may not be thought such a one.

Of his journey to heauen; to receiue the Law, he speaketh. Az. 63. and 82. mingling iniunctions of deuotion. 83. Thou, O Prophet, rising in the night, spend halfe the night, or a litle more or lesse, in watching, and continually and deuoutly reade ouer the Alcoran: be thou iust, patient, and refuse not to wash thy garments, O thou man clothed in woollen. 42. Let none enter into the house of the Prophet before he call; but let him stand without the gate: let none doe dishonestie within his house, let none hurt the Prophet in any thing, or haue his wife after him.

c Of the Prophets in Scripture.

Some ^c Prophets hee mentioneth, not named in Scripture; and of those there named hee telleth many fables. Ismael was a true Prophet, and found a good man before God. Ioseph nine yeares imprisoned for the Queene. Abraham ouerthrew his Fathers Idols, and should haue bene burned for the same; but the fire lost his force. The Mountaines and Birds that praise God, were subiect to Dauid. ^d Salomon learned Magick of Arot and Marot, Diuels so called: hee knew the Language of Birds; and when he was in the midst of his Armie, consisting of Devils, Men, and Birds: the Lapwing brought him newes of the Queene of Saba's comming, to whom by this Lapwing hee sent a Letter, &c. Of this Armie the Ants or Pismires being affraide; one Ant perswaded her fellowes to get them into their holes, lest they should bee troden on. Moses married Pharaoh's Daughter. (27.) One Ascemel made the golden Calfe in the Desert against Aarons will. Pharaoh requested Hemen to build a Tower, whereon to climbe to heauen, to the God of Moses. (50.) In the time of Noe they worshipped Idols, whom he nameth Huden, Schuan, Iaguta, Iannea, Nacem.

d Such tales as these of Abraham, Salomon, &c. you shall finde both in the Iewish and Popish Legēds as if the Iew, Papist, and Mahometan, had contended for the whetstone: which any one that readeth shall finde.

The Prophet Huth was sent to the Nation Haath, to teach them the worship of one God: and Schale to Themuth; and Schabe to Madian; and Abraham and Lot to the Sodomites; on whom, because they were incredulous, it rained yellow and sharpe stones. (Az. 21.) Moses was sent to Pharaoh, &c. His scope of these Narrations is, that he is sent likewise a Prophet, and therefore iudgement will pursue them which refuse him, as it did those incredulous Nations. These fauour of a Iewish helpe. He tellt also of Alexander & Mag. that he had all knowledge: hee found the Sunne, where it lay resting in a yellow fountayne, and the mountaines in which it riseth. And finding men without vse of speech, he diuided them from other men, &c. Az. 28.

that

q Alexander, Mahomet's first Saint to follow.

He proueth substantially that there shall be a resurrection, by the historie of the seven Sleepers, which slept in a Cauer 360. yeares. (28. Az.) and (49.) He saith, that at the time of death, God taketh away the soule at an houre knowne, restoring it to some; to some, neuer: at the first sound of the trumpet all shall die, except those which shall be protected by the will of God: at the second sound all things shall reuiue, and bee iudged: and (66.) The earth shall tremble, the mountaines shall bee brought to dust, and the whole companie shall be diuided into three parts: some before, others on the right hand, both which sorts shall be blessed: but those on the left hand, in their left hands shall receiue the scroll or sentence of their condemnation. And 79. In the last iudgement the earth shall be ouerthrowne, the heauen shall be powred forth. 8. Angels shall beare vp the Throne of God. And (80.) The heauens shall vanish as smoake, and the earth shall be plucked as wooll. And (111.) There shall bee set vp the ballance of Iudgement: they to whom shall befall a light weight, shall liue, but they which haue a heauie weight shall be cast into fire. The booke of bad workes shall be kept in the botto- me of the earth; the booke of good workes in a high place.

r Of the resurrection & last iudgment.

In diuers places of the Alcoran, the better to colour his filthinesse, he hath dispersed good sentences, like Roses scattered on a dung-hill, and flowers in a puddle: concerning Almes, Prayer, Tithing, Iustice, &c. Others he hath of another sort establishing his owne Tyrannie and Religion. Az. 26. Swines flesh, Bloud, that which dieth alone, and that which hath the neck cut off, not in Gods name, is vnlawfull. Be chaste euery where, but with your owne wines, or such as are subiect to you, and doe serue you. Eucry Adulterer shall haue an hundred stripes in the presence of many. He which accuseth a woman of adulterie, not prouing it by foure witnesses, shall haue eightie. The iealous husband accusing his wife, must sweare foure times that hee chargeth her truly; and a fifth time curse himselfe, if it be otherwise. The woman must doe the like to cleare her selfe. (43.) After a woman be diuorced from one, any other may marrie her. (19.) Trust not a sonne or a brother, except he be of your owne Law. 72. On Friday when they are called to prayer, they must lay all businesse apart: when prayers be ended, they may returne to their commodities. Redeeme captiues; and thy sinnes by good workes. About Circumcision I finde no iniunction in the Alcoran. In the 3. 8. and 9. Az. Hee permitteth all licenciousnesse with all women which they haue of their owne: but prescribeth washings after Venerie, and after naturall casements. Loue not your enemies: the women of another faith proue first: and if they fauour the vnbeleeuers, diuorce them. (70.) It is no sinne to reuenge iniuries. 52. The women must couer their faces. 43.

Morals and Indicials.

f Az. 33. 34.

The going on^r Pilgrimage, and the perpetuall abode at the Temple of Harau (that is, vnlawfull, because nothing but their holies are there^u lawfull) we repute of equall merit. They which loue it not, or doe it iniurie, shall sustaine grieuous euils. Abraham founded this Temple, and blessed it, and cleaused it, for them which abode there, and for the Pilgrims. He^x preached one God without partaker, and the pilgrimage to this Temple, that on the dayes appointed they might, in naming God, sacrifice beasts, wherewith to feast themselues and the poore, and might fulfill their vowes, and goe in Procession round about the old Temple, a worke which God will greatly reward. Az. 32. and 19. In the times of fasting and pilgrimage hunting by Land is vnlawfull, except that so gotten be bestowed on the poore at Mecca: takiug fish by Sea as they goe or returne, is lawfull. Az. 13. The vnbeleeuers are not worthie to visit the Temple Harau. And these good Pilgrims are not equal to the good warriors. 38. He entered into the Temple Harau with his head shauen.

u Contrarie to which is the word commor in Scripture, for that which is lawfull in common vse.

Hecha (saith Scal) alwaies in the Alcoran is called Harau: and the Pilgrims Hurmu. i. votaries. x Abraham Author of pilgrimage rites.

Az. 2. Wee enioyne vnto you (as to your Predecessors) fasting in the time thereto appointed, and in a certaine number of dayes, that is, in the moneth Romadan, in which, this Booke (which discerneth between good and euill) was sent you from hea-

uen. Euery one must obserue it, but the sick and traveller, and let them doe the same in the remainder of the time. The rich vse to satisfie their fasting with almes; let them doe both the one and the other. He permitteth you the vse of your wiues in the night, because it is hard and impossible to abstayne. But let none vse their companie in the Temples. Fast all the day, and when night is come, eate and drinke as much as you please, till the morning. By the Moone is knowne the time of Pilgrimages, and of Fastings, whereby is knowne that you loue and feare God. Spend your money in the loue of God in Pilgrimage, not despairing. Hee that is impotent, and that is not accompanied of his wife in the pilgrimage, must fast three dayes in the voyage, and seuen after his returne. To the sick, fasting with almes is sufficient. They which purpose this pilgrimage, let them not giue their mindes to any euill. Let them not be ashamed to aske necessaries. 2. Hold it for iust and good to enter the house at the doore, nor at the side, or back-side thereof. 35. Salute those which yee meete, when yee enter into the house.

His Oaths.

Ridiculous is the confirmation of this holy Law, by such varietie of Oathes, as I am almost afraide to mention, in regard of our Gull-gallants of these times, who would sometimes bee at a set in their braue and brauing phrascs, if they should not haue varietie of Oathes and Curses, to daube vp with such interiections all imperfections of speech and make smooother way for the current of their gallantrie. But yet euen for their sakes, let vs mention a few, that they may see Mahomet had as braue a humour this way as they. He induceth God swearing by lesse then himselfe, as by the order of Angels, by the Alcoran, by the blowing Windes, by the waterie Clouds, by the sayling Ships, by the Mount Sinai, the Heauen, the Sea, the euening Starre, the West, his Pen and Lines, the guiltie Soule, the Devils, by the Morning, ten Nights, the Passc-ouer, by the Figges and Oliues, by the Dawning, and Twilight, and a World more of the like: only he saith (Azoara 100.) that he may not sweare by the earth, nor by the Sonne like to the Father.

Iust dealing.

Az. 8. They which eate the inheritance of Orphans, euerlasting fire shall eat them. Be faithfull in keeping and deliuering their goods, for God taketh knowledge of all accounts. Let one Sonne haue as much as two Daughters. In bargayning vse no lying, slaying your owne soule. The couetous shall haue endlesse punishment: hee that killeth vnwillingly, shall giue to the Kindred of the partie slaine, another man; or if he cannot doe that, let him fast two moneths together; hee which killeth wilfully shall be cast into the fire.

Courtesie.

Salute him which saluteth thee, for salutation is much pleasing to God. 56. The Devils hearing the Alcoran, shall be conuerted, and flie from their Companions.

Sentences.

Az. 27. Worship one God alone. Honour thy Father and Mother, and doe them good. Giue them no bad word when they are old. Be subiect with all humilitie, and pray God to pardon them. Giue to the poore and to your kindred, but not superfluously: for they that doe superfluously are of Kinne to the Deuill. Slay not your children for no cause. Be yee not Fornicators; for that is wickednesse and a bad way. Be reuenged on Murtherers. Say nothing till yee know it; for you must giue account of your saying. 26. In disputing or reasoning vse only good wordes. Answere in honest sort to him which asketh thee. 27. Be iust in weight and measure. 27. The Deuill standeth ouer the makers of songs and lies, that is, the Poets, if they amend not, doing good. 68. If you cannot giue, be daly in prayers. Pay your tithes, following God and the Prophet. They which doe not good but for vaine glorie and ostentation, shall be damned. 118. The Histories which are in the old Testament, are so cited by him, as if he neuer had read them, so many dreames and lies are inserted.

Prayer.

Az. 12. Before praier wash the face, the hands, the armes vp to the elbow, the feet vp to the ankles; and after carnall companie wash in the Bath: and if water cannot be had, with dust of cleane earth. God desireth cleanness. 9. In praier let them be sober, that they may know what they say. 2. God will not aske why men pray not toward the East, for the East and West is his; but will demand of the workes which they haue done, of their Almes, Pilgrimages, and Prayers. He conuanderh that they be humble in prayer, and that in prayer they turne towards Mecca. Euery one which shall pray, pray, asking that which is good, which way soeuer hee shall turne him, shall bee heard of God: although the true manner of praying be toward the Center of the Temple of Mecca. They which are good, make their prayers to helpe them by their patience and abstinence. God dwelleth in such men. Pray according to the vsuall custome in all places, the foot-man on foot, the horse-man on his horse.

Alz. 3. He that giuerh his owne for Gods sake, is like a graine that hath seuen eares, euery of which containeth an hundred graines. Good men loose not your Almes by vaine glorie. 4. Giue almes of the good gaires of your monie, and of that which the earth produceth; but God respecteth not gifts of that which is vniuistly gotten. Satan perswadeth you to giue nothing for feare of pouertie. To giue almes publikely is good, but to giue priuately is better: and this blotterh out finnes. Giue specially to those which stay in one place, and are ashamed to aske. 6. God will giue Paradise to them which in time of famine and scarcitie giue liberally, and which receiue iniuries, and repent of their finnes.

Alz. 2. They which are intreated to beleue the diuine Precepts, say, they will follow their Ancestors in their Sect. What would yee follow your Fathers if they were blinde or deafe? Will yee be like them in being mute, blinde, and foolish?

Alz. 2. O good men, eat that good which he hath giuen you, and giue him thanks; about all other things calling vpon him. Abstaine from that which dieth of it selfe, from Swines flesh, from Bloud, and from euery other creature that is killed, and not in the name of the Creator. But in case of necessitie it is not sinne; for God is mercifull, and will forgive you this. 12. Eat not of that which is drowned, burned in the fire, and touched of the Wolfe. 16. Eat noth ng which hath not before bene blessed. To the Iewes we made many things vnlawfull, because of their wickednesse. 2. He which shall contradict this Booke, shall continually bee consumed in vnquenchable fire, and none of his workes shall helpe him.

Alz. 2. Euery one which draweth nigh to death, let him leaue of his monie to his familie and kindred to distribute in almes, and they which shall change that vse, shall be iudged of the Creator, &c.

Alz. 2. To them that doubt of Wine, of chesse, scailles, and of tables; thou shalt say that such sports, and such drinckes are a great sinne, and although they be pleasant or profitable, yet are they hurtfull finnes: if they say what shall wee then doe, thou shalt say, The good things of God. Perswade them to seeke the Orphanes, and succour them, as their Brethren, or else God will make them so poore, that they shall not be able to helpe either themselues or others. 13. Wine, chesse, and tables, are not lawfull, but the Devils inuentions, to make debate amongst men, and to keepe them from doing good. Let none goe on hunting in the Pilgrimage moneth.

Alz. 3. Take not a wise of another Law, nor giue your daughters to men of another Law, except they before conuert to your Law. Let no man touch a woman in her disease, before shee be well cleansed. Vse your wiuies, and the women which are subiect to you, where and how you please. Women which are diuorced, may not marrie till after foure moneths, hauing had three times their menstruous purgation. Let them not denie their husbands their companie at their pleasure. They are the heads of the women. After a third diuorce from one man, they may not marrie the same man againe, except they haue in the meane time bene married to another, and be of him diuorced. Let the women nurse their children two yeares, receiuing necessaries of the fathers. After buriall of a husband, let them stay vnmarried foure moneths, and ten daies; and not goe out of the house in a yeare after. Take yee two, three, foure wiuies, and finally as many as in your minde you are content to maintayne and keepe in peace. It is vnlawfull to marrie with the Mother, Daughter, Sister, Aunt, Neece, Nurse, or the mother or daughter of the nurse; and take not a whore to wife. 9. Let the wiuies keepe their husbands secrets, or else let them be chastised, and kept in house and bed, till they be better. 10. Let the husband seeke to liue peaceably with his wife. 31. Cast not thine eies on other mens wiuies, though they be faire. A woman conuicted of adulterie by testimony of foure women, must bee kept in her house till shee die and let none come at her. Az. 8. If you loue not your wiues you may change them : but take away nothing of that which is giuen them.

Swearing.

Az. 3. Swear not in all your affaires by God and his names. They which forswear themselves shall haue no good thing in the world to come. And 35. Swear not rashly, for God seeth euery thing.

Forcing to beleue.

Az. 4. Offer violence to no man in respect of the Law, for the way of doing good and euill is open. 4. God gaue first the Testament, then the Gospell, and lastly the true Booke, the Afurcan of your Law, in confirmation of those former.

Vsurie.

Az. 4. They which liue of Vsurie shall not rise againe otherwise then the Devils : they embrace that which God hath said is vnlawfull: but they say Vsurie is as merchandize. Yee which are good feare God, and forsake Vsurie, lest the anger of God, and of the Prophet, assaile you. Take only the principall; and if hee cannot pay you, stay till he can, and giue him almes; for this shall be better for you.

Repentance.

Az. 4. He which repenteth him, and leaueh his sinne, obtayneth pardon, and the cancelling of that which is past; but returning againe thereto, he shall suffer eternall fire. In the 5. Vnto bad men is denyed humane and diuine mercie, except they repent. God careth little for the conuersion of them, which, after that of Infidels they are made beleeuers, become worse. Such shall suffer without any remission intolerable punishment. 10. God pardoneth lesse faults, but not criminall.

Friendship.

Az. 5. Let no man reckon him a good friend, which is an vnbeleuer, except it bee for feare. If betwixt you there grow discord, laying aside all stomach, doe the will of God, and become Brethren together, imitating God, who hath deliuered you from the fire, and from dangers. 6. God would not that any should doe euill to those of his owne Nation, and those which consent to your Law, but rather their profit and commodity.

Infidels.

Az. 6. Thinke not that euer Paradise shall be open vnto you, if you bee not first valiant and couragious in battaile: and before you enter into battaile, prepare your selues for death: and after the death of the Prophet Mahomet, defend the orders by him giuen with Armes. No man can die, but when God will, that is, when his time is come. Those which flee out of the warre, are prouoked of the Deuill; but God pardoneth them which repent. They which die in the way of God, are not truely called dead: They liue with God. Let none feare them which are goiered of the Deuill. 7. Bee patient, and you shall haue eternall life. 10. Accompanie not with vnbeleeuers, neither in friendship, nor other businesse. They which goe on war-fare for God and the Prophet, shall receiue abundance in the Earth, and after death the mercie of God. They which refuse (except they be sick or children) shall bee cast into Hell. Neglect not prayers in your expeditions. Some may pray, whil's others stand in Armes. Pray not for them which hurt their owne soules. 18. Looke to your selues that there be no discord amongst you.

^a Magdeburgenses in Centuria 7. haue also gathered some heads of this headlesse Monster, the same is done by Cantacuzenas, & in Summula sectæ Sarac. &c. but not thus fully,

His last Azoara is this: In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God; sanctifie thy selfe, and pray continually, and humbly vnto him which is Lord of all Nations, Lord of all, God of all, that he will defend and deliuer thee from the Deuill, which entreteth the hearts of men, and from deuillish and peruerse men. (From Mahomet himselfe and from his deuillish and peruerse Law. A M E N.)

Thus haue I endeouored to bring some order out of confusion, and haue framed these heads out of that Alcoran-Chaos*, where is scarce either head or taile: this tale they haue and beleue (for what will not? what shall not they beleue, which refuse to beleue the Truth?) that hee which readerh this Booke a thousand times in his Life, shall haue a woman in Paradise, whose eye-browes shall be as large as the Raine-bow. Annot. Anonymi in Alcoran.

CHAP. V.

Other Muhameticall speculations, and explanations of their Law, collected out of their owne Commentaries of that Argument.

Such writings as haue come to our hands touching Mahomet's doctrine and Religion, that seemeth most fully to lay them open, which is called by some, Scala, a booke containing the exposition of the Alcoran, in forme of a Dialogue, translated into Latine by Hermannus Dalmata, and made the twelfth Chapter of the first booke of the Alcoran in Italian. I haue therefore presumed on the Readers patience, to those former collections out of the Alcoran it selfe to adde these ensuing, as a further explanation of their opinions. The Messenger of God (so beginneth that booke) was sitting amongst his fellowes (the prayer and saluation of God be vpon him) in his Citie Ierab; and the Angell Gabriel descending on him, said, God saluteth thee, O Mahomet, &c. There come foure wise-men, Masters in Israel, to proue thee; the chiefe of whom is Abdia. ben. Salon. Mahomet therefore sent his cosin Hali to salute them; and they being come to Mahomet, after mutuall salutations, Abdia telleth him, that he and his fellowes were sent by the people of the Iewes, to learne the vnderstanding of some obscurer places of their Law. Mahomet asketh, if he come to enquire, or to tempt. Abdia saith, to enquire. Then Mahomet giuing him full leaue, he beginneth; hauing before gathered out of the whole bodie of their Law an hundred most exquisite questions. The principall dregges you shall heere haue.

a F. Sansou. &
Bellar. lib. 3.

Abdia. Tell vs (O Mahomet) whether thou be a Prophet or a Messenger? Mahomet. God hath appointed me both a Prophet and a Messenger. Ab. Doeft thou preach the Law of God, or thine owne Law? Mah. The Law of God: this Law is Faith, and this Faith is, that there are not Gods, but one God, without partaker. Ab. How many lawes of God are there? Mah. One, the law, and faith of the Prophets, which went before vs, was one; the rites were different. Ab. Shall we enter Paradise for faith or workes? Mah. Both are necessarie; but if a Gentile, Iew, or Christian, become a Saracen, and preuent his good workes, Faith only shall suffice: But if Gentile, Iew, or Christian, doe good workes, not in the loue of God, the fire shall consume both him and his worke. Ab. How doth the mercie of God preuent his anger? Mah. When before other creatures Adam rose vp, he kneeced and said, God be thanked; and the Angels hearing it, said, The Pitié of God be vpon thee, Adam, who answered, Amen: Then said the Lord, I haue receiued your prayer. Ab. What be the foure things which God wrought with his owne hands? Mah. He made Paradise, planted the tree of the Trumper, formed Adam, and did write the Tables of Moses. Ab. Who told thee this? Mah. Gabriel, from the Lord of the world. Ab. In what forme? Mah. Of a man standing vpright, neuer sleeping, nor eating, nor drinking, but the praise of God. Ab. Tell me in order what is one, what is two, what three, foure, fíue, sixe, &c. to an hundred. Mah. One is God without Sonne, partaker or fellow, almightie Lord of life and death. Two, Adam and Eue. Three, Michael, Gabriel, Saraphiel, Archangels Secretaries of God. Foure, The Law of Moses, the Psalmes of Dauid, the Gospell, and Alfurcan (so called of the distinction of the Sentences). Fíue, The prayers which God gaue me and my people, and to none of the other Prophets. Sixe, The dayes of Creation. Seuen, Heauens. Eight, Angels which sustaine the Throne of God. Nine, Are the miracles of Moses. Ten, Are the fasting-dayes of the Pilgrimes: three, when they goe, seuen in their returne. Eleuen, Are the Starres whereof Ioseph dreamed. Twelue monthes in the yeare. Thirteene, is the Sunne and Moone, with the eleuen Starres. Fourteene candles hang about the throne of God, of the length of fíue hundred yeares. Fífteene, The fífteenth day of Ramadam, in which the Alcoran came sliding from heauen. Sixteene, Are the legions of the Cherubims. Seunteene, Are the names of God betweene the bottom of the earth and hell, which stay those flames, which else would consume the world. Eighteene, Interpositions there be betweene the the Throne of God, and the aire; for else the brightnesse of God would blinde the world. Nineteene, Be the armes or branches of Zachia. a riuer in hell, which shall make a great noise in the day of Iudgement. Twentie, The day of the month Ramadam, when the Psalmes descended on Dauid. The one and twentieth of Ramadam, Salomon was borne. The two and twentieth, Dauid was pardoned the sinne against Vriah. The three and twentieth of Ramadam, Christ the Sonne of Mary was borne; the prayers of God be vpon him. The foure and twentieth, God spake to Moses. The five and twentieth, the Sea was diuided. The sixe and twentieth, He receiued the Tables. The seuen and twentieth, Jonas was swallowed of the Whale. The eight and twentieth, Jacob recouered his sight, when Indus brought Iosephs coat. The nine and twentieth, Was Enoch translated. The thirtieth, Moses went into Mount Sinai. Ab. Make short worke, for thou hast done all this exactly. Mab. Fortie are the dayes of Moses his fasting. Fiftie thousand yeares shall the day of Iudgement continue. Sixtie are the veines, which euery of the heauens haue in the earth, without which varietie there would be no knowledge amongst men. Seuentie men Moses tooke to himselfe. Eightie stripes are due to a drunken man. Ninetic, The Angell said to Dauid, This my fellow hath ninetic sheepe, and I but one, which he hath stollen from me. An hundred stripes are due to the Adulterer.

Ab. Well, shew vs how the earth was made; and when? Mab. God made man of mire: the mire, of froth: this was made of the tempests; these, of the sea: The sea, of darknesse; the darknesse, of light; this, of the word, the word, of the thought; the thought, of Iacynth; the Iacynth, of the commandment. Let it be, and it was. A. How many Angels are set ouer men? M. Two, one on the right hand, which writeth his good deeds; another on the left, which registreth his bad. These sit on mens shoulders. Their pen is their tongue, their inke is their spittle, their heart is the booke. Ab. What did God make after? Mab. The bookes wherein are written all things, past, present, and to come, in heauen and earth; and the pen made of the brightest light, five hundred yeares long, and eightie broad, hauing eightie teeth, wherein are written all things in the world, till the day of Iudgement. The booke is made of the greatest Emerald; the words, of Pearles; the cover, of pitie. God ouer-looketh the same an hundred and sixtie times in a day and night. The heauen is made of smoake of the vapour of the sea: the greenesse of the sea proceedeth from the mount Kaf, which is made of the Emeralds of Paradise, and compasseth the world, bearing vp the heauens. The gates of heauen are of gold, the lockes of light, the keyes of pietie. About the heauen are the sea of life, about that, the cloudie sea; then the ayrie sea, the stonie sea; the darke sea, the sea of olace, the Moone, the Sunne, the name of God, Supplication, Gabriel the parchment rased, the parchment ful written, all these in order one ouer another. Then, about all these, the threescore and ten spaces of light: then threescore and ten thousand hills, with threescore and ten thousand spaces betweene, and threescore and ten thousand troupes of Angels on them, in euery troupe five thousand Angels alway praising the Lord of the world: about these the limits or bounds of Angelicall dignitie; and about the same the banner of glorie, and then spaces of pearles, and in their orders one about another, the spaces of Grace, of Power, of Diuinitie, of Dispensation, the Foot stoole, the Throne, the house of the Vniuerse.

Ab. Are the Sunne and Moone faithfull or not? Mab. They are faithfull, and obey euery command of God. Ab. Why then are they not of equall light? Mab. God created them equall but by this it came to passe, that the vicissitude or intercourse of day and night was vncertaine, till Gabriel flying by the Moone, darkened her with the touch of his wing. Ab. How many orders are there of the Starres? Mab. Three, the first of those which haug by chaines from the Throne of God, giuing light to the seuenth Throne: the second chase away the diuels, when they would enter into heauen: the third in the sight of the Angels. There are seuen seas betweene vs and heauen. There are three windes: the first barren; the second tempestuous, which shall blow the fire in the day of Iudgement: the third ministrerth to the earth and sea. Ab. Where is the Sunne? Mab. In a hot fountaine: this, in a Serpent, which is a great space in the mount Kaf, and this Kaf is in the hand of the Angell, which holdeth the world world till the day of Iudgement. Abd. What is the manner of them, which beare vp the Seate of God? Mab. Their heads are vnder the Seat of God, their feete vnder the seuen Thrones, their neckes are so large, that a bird in a thousand yeares continuall flight, could not reach from the one eare to the other. They haue hornes, and their meate and drinke is the prayse and glorie of God. Abd. How farre is it to heauen? Mahom. Fiue hundred yeares iourney to the lowest, and so from each to other. Abd. What birdes are betweene vs and heauen? Mahom. Some which touch neither heauen nor earth, hauing manes like horses, haire like women, wings like birdes, and lay their egges and hatch them on their tayles till the day of Iudgement.

Ab. What was the forbidden tree? Mab. Of wheat, which had seuen eares, whereof Adam plucked one, wherein were fiue graines; of which, two he eat, two he gaue to Eue, and one he carried away. This graine was bigger then an egge, and being bruised, brought forth all kinds of seed. Ab. Where was Adam receiued after his expulsion from Paradise? Mab. Adam in India, Eue in Nubia. Adam was couered with three leaues of Paradise; Eue, with her haire: They met together in Arafé. Further, as concerning Eue, she was made of a rib of the left side, for otherwise she had bene as strong as the man.

Ab. Who dwelt in the earth before? Mab. First the Diuels, seuen thousand yeares after them the Angels: lastly Adam, a thousand yeares after the Angels. Ab. Who began the Pilgrimage. Mab. Adam. Gabriel shaued his head, and he circumcised himselfe; and after him Abraham. Ab. To what Land spake God at any time? Mab. To Mount Sinai, that it should lift vp Moses to heauen: Abitabil and Moses are the two men, whose sepulchres are not knowne. Moses by chance found a sepulchre, which while he measured with his bodie, the Angell of Death drew from him his soule out of his nostrils, by the smell of an apple of Paradise.

Ab. Where is the middle of the earth? Mab. In Ierusalem. Ab. Who made the first ship? Mab. Noe: he receiued the keyes thereof of Gabriel, and going forth of Arabia, compassed Mecca seuen times, and like wise Ierusalem. In the meane while Mecca was receiued vp into heauen, and the mount Abikobez preserued Ierusalem in her belly. Ab. What shall become of the children of the Infidels? Mab. They shall come in at the day of Iudgement, and God shall say vnto them, would yee doe that thing which shall be commanded you? And he shall command to flow forth one of the riuers of hell, and bid them leape into the same. They which obey, shall goe into Paradise. This shall be the triall of the children of the faithfull also, which are borne deafe, blinde, &c. Abd. What resteth vnder these seuen earthes? Mahom. An Oxe, whose feete are on a white stone, his head in the East, his taile in the West; hee hath fortie hornes, and as many teeth; it is a thousand yeares iourney from one horne to another. Vnder that stone is Zohor, a mountaine of hell, of a thousand yeares iourney. All the Infidels shall ascend vpon the same, and from the top shall fall into hell. Vnder that Mount is the Land Werelea; vnder that, the sea Alkasem: the Land Aliolen, the sea Zere: the land Neama, the sea Zegir: the land Theris, the land Agiba, white as milke, sweet as muske, soft as saffron, bright as the Moone: the sea Alkuitar; the fish Alchbut, with his head in the East, his taile in the West: all these in order one after another. And beneath all these in like infernall order the Winde, the Mountaine, the Thunder, the Lightning, the bloudie Sea, Hell closed, the fiery Sea, the darke Sea, the Sea Pa, the cloudie sea, Prayses, Glorifications, the Throne, the Booke, the Pen, the greater name of God.

Ab. What hath come out of Paradise into the World? Mab. Mecca, Ierusalem: as on the contrarie, out of Hell; Vastat in Egypt, Antiochia in Syria, Ebheran in Armenia, and Elmeden of Chaldæa. Ab. What say you of Paradise? Mab. The ground of Paradise is of gold, enameled with Emeralds, and Hiacinths, planted with every fruitfull tree, watered with streames of milke, hony, and wiper: the day is of a thousand yeares continuance, and the yeare of fortie thousand yeares. The people shall haue whatsoeuer can bee desired, they shall be cloathed in all colours, except blacke, which is the proper colour of Mahomet: they all shall be of the stature of

b The Turkes reckon Greene the Prophets colour.

Adam, in resemblance like Christ, neuer encreasing or diminishing. As soone as they are entered, shall be set before them the liuer of the Fish Albebbut, and whatsoeuer dainties they can desire. They shall not need going to stoole any more then the child in the wombe, but they shall sweate out all superfluities, of sent like muske. They shall eat but for delight, not for hunger. Vnlawfull meates, as Swines flesh, they shall refraine. And if you list to know why this beast is vncleane, vnderstand that Iesus on a time called forth Iaphet to tell his Disciples the Historie of the Arke; Who told them, that by the weight of the ordure, the Arke leaned on the one side, whereupon Noe, consulting with God, was bidden bring the Elephat thither, out of whose dung, mixed with mans, came forth a Hog, which wrooted in that mire with his snout, and by the stincke thereof was produced out of his nose a Mouse, which gnawed the boords of the Arke: Noe fearing this danger, was bidden to strike the Lion on the forehead: and by the Lions breath was a Cat engendered, mortall enemy to the Mouse. But to returne from this stincking tale, to refresh our selues with the like sweets of this Paradise. Hee addeth, that there they haue the wiues that heere they had, and other concubines, whom, how, when, wherefoeuer they will.

Abd. But why is wine lawfull there, and heere vnlawfull? Mab. The Angels Arot and Marot, were sometime sent to instruct and gouerne the world, forbidding men wine, iniustice, and murder. . . But a woman hauing whereof to accuse her husband, inuited them to dinner, and made them drunke. They inflamed with a double heare of wine and lust, could not obtaine that their desire of their faire Hostesse, except one would teach her the word of ascending to heauen, and the other of descending. Thus she mounted vp to heauen. And vpon enquirie of the matter, shee was made the Morning-starre, and they put to their choice, whether they would be punished in this world, or in the world to come: they accepting their punishment in this, are hanged by chaines, with their heads in a pit of Babel, till the day of Iudgement.

Hell, saith Mahomet there, hath the floore of Brimstone, smoakie, Pitchie, with stincking flames, with deepe pittes of scalding pitch, and sulphurous flames, where in the damned are punished daily: the trees beare most loathsome fruits, which they eate.

The day of Iudgement shall bee in this sort. In that day God will command the Angell of Death to kill euery Creature; which being done, he shall aske him if nothing be aliuie: Adreiel the Angell of Death shall answere, Nothing but my selfe. Then go rhy wayes betwixt Paradise and Hell; and last of all kill thy selfe. Thus hee, foulded in his wings, prostrate on the earth, shall strangle himselfe with such a bellowing noise, as would terrifie the very Angels, if they were aliuie.

Thus the world shall be emptie fortie yeares. Then shall God hold the Heauen and Earth in his fist, and say, Where are now the mightie men, the Kings and Princes of the World? Tell me (if yee be true) whose is the Kingdome, and Empire, and Power? Repeating these words three times, he shall raise vp Seraphiel, and say, Take this Trumpet, and goe to Ierusalem, and sound. This Trumpet is of fise hundred yeares iourney. At that sound all Soules shal come forth, and disperse themselues vnto their owne bodies, and their bones shall be gathered together. Fortie yeares after he shall sound againe, and then the bones shall resume flesh and sinewes. After fortie yeares the thitd sound shall warne the Soules to re-possesse their bodies: and a fire from the West shall driue euery creature to Ierusalem. When they haue here swumme fortie yeares in their owne sweate, they shall, with much vexation, come to Adam, and say, Father Adam, Farther Adam, Why hast thou begotten vs to these miseries and torments? Why sufferest thou vs to hang betweene hope and feare? Pray to God, that he will finish his determination of vs betweene Paradise and Hell: Adam shal excuse his vnworthines for his disobedience, and send them to Noe, Noe will post them to Abraham, Abraham to Moses: He shall send them to Iesus Christ: To him they shall come and say, The Spirit Word, and Power of God, let thy pitie moue thee to make intercession for vs. Hee shall answere them. That which you aske, you haue lost. I was indeed sent vnto you in the power of God, and Word of Truth, but ye haue erred, and haue made me God; more then then euer I preached to you: and haue therefore lost my benefit. But goe to the last of the Prophets, meaning him with whom thou now talkest. Abdia. Then shall they turne to him, and say; O faithfull Messenger, and friend of God, we haue sinned, heare vs holy Prophet, our only hope, &c. Then shall Gabriel present himselfe to helpe his friend, and they shall goe to the Throne of God. And God shall say, I know why you are come, Farre be it that I should not heare the prayer of my faithfull one. Then shall a Bridge be made ouer Hell, and on the toppe of the Bridge shall bee set a ballance, wherein euery mans workes shall be weighed, and those which are saued, shall passe ouer the Bridge, the other shall fall into Hell. Abd. How many bands of men shall there be in that day. Mahom. An hundred and twentie; of which three onely shall be found faithfull; and euery Band or Troupe of men shall be in length the iourney of a thousand yeares, in breadth five hundred. Abd. What shall become of Death? Mak. He shall be transformed into a Raimme, and they shall bring him betweene Paradise and Hell. Then shall arise much dissentions between these two peoples, through feare of the one, and hope of the other. But the people of Paradise shall preuaile, and shall slay Death betweene Paradise and Hell. Abd. Thou, O Mahomet, hast ouercome, and I belecue, that there is but one God Almighty, and thou art his Messenger and Prophet.

In this long and tedious Summarie, of that longer and more tedious Dialogue, compared with the former Iewish opinions, touching their Behemoth, Leuiathan, Ziz, Ierusalem, Swines flesh, the Angell of Death, and other their superstitious opinions, it may appeare, that the Iewes were forward Miut-masters in this new-coyned Religion of Mahomet.

In the beginning of this Dialogue are mentioned their five Prayers and their Ramadam, or Ramazan: Of which, that Arabian Noble-man, in confutation of the Alcoran, writeth thus: ° He which hath fulfilled these five prayers, shall be prayesd in this world, and the next. They are as follow: Two kneelingings in the morning, afternoone foure; at Vespers, or a little before Sunne-set, foure; after Sunne-set, foure; at their beginning of supper, two; and after supper, when it is darke, two; in all eightheene kneelingings in a day.

Their Lent ^d, or Fast of the Moneth Ramazan, is thus: In the day time they must fast from Meat, Drinke, and Venerie, till the Sunne be downe: then is Riot permitted them, till a white threed may be discerned from a blacke. But if any be sicke, or in iourneying, he may pay at another time the same number of dayes, Sampsates Ispacanes, a Persian, in a letter written to one Meletius, which had conuerted to Christianitie, and fled to Constantinople, to reduce him to his former vomit, allegeth this saying of God to Mahomet: I haue made all things for thee, and thee for me: obiecteth to Christians the worship of three Persons, the Father, Mother, and Sonne, the worship of many gods. And how (saith he) can God haue a Sonne without a woman? And how can they agree together? How can God be made man? And why could he not haue saued man by a word, but as if he had bene hindered through weaknesse, did therefore become man? And if hee were God, how could he suffer? Yea, the name of Mahomet; saith he, was expresse both in the old Testament, and the Gospell, Christ himselfe commending it, which the Christians haue rased out: yea, from euerlasting it was written on the right side of the Throne of God. And the Musulmans deriue their faith from Abraham. This I haue inserted, to shew the vaine conceits they haue of our Religion, and their blinde confidence in their owne, with their carnall dreames and diuine mysteries, and diuellish slanders of our Scriptures, which they know not. they scandall also from the worship of Images and Saints.

Frier Richard ° reciteth among *Mahomet*s opinions, That of threecore and thirtene parts of the Saracens, one onely shall be saued; and, that the Diuels shall once be saued by the Alcoran; and that the Diuels call themselues Saracens; fit companions with them in their holy things.

Some ^f make it a Canon of Mahomet, That they should looke toward the South when they pray, that when they pray they should say, God is one God, without equal, and Mahomet his Prophet: which, Lod. Barthema saith, are the Characters of the profession feſſion of a Mahometan, and that, by the pronouncing of thoſe words, he was tried whether he was an Infidell, or no. Theſe words, ſaith the aboue-ſaid Arabian (as they affirme) before the beginning of the world were written in the throne of God.

Bellonius in his Obſervations telleth out of their Bookes, That there is a Tree in Paradife which ſhadoweth it all over, and ſpreadeth her boughes over the wals, whoſe leaves are of pure gold and ſiluer, each of them after the Name of God, hauing therein written the name of Mahomet. And that if a Chriſtian, at vnawares, ſhould pronounce the ſaid Prayer, La illah, &c. God is one God, and Mahomet his Prophet, he muſt either die or turne Turke. Such reputation haue they of this forme, which they call a Prayer, with as good reaſon as the Aue Marie among the Romilts, wherein yet they pray not for any thing Bellonius alſo ſaith. That they hold the Heauen to be made of Smoake, and the Firmament ſtabliſhed on the horne of a Buffall, by whoſe ſtirring Earthquakes are cauſed: That there are ſeuen Paradifes, with Houſes, Gardens, Fountains, and whatſoever ſenſe accounteth delectable; where they ſhall enioy all delights without any ſorrow, hauing Carpets, Beds, Boyes, Horſes, Saddles, Garments, for coſt and workmanſhip moſt curious, and readie for attendance. Thoſe Boyes richly adorned, when they haue ſatiſfied their hunger and thirſt, ſhall preſent euery Saracen a huge Pome-citron in a golden Charger, and as ſoone as they ſhall ſmell thereof, there ſhall thence proceed a comely Virgin in gallant attire, which ſhal embrace him, and he her; and ſo ſhal they continue fiſtie yeares. After which ſpace ended, God ſhal ſhew them his face, wherat they ſhal fal down, not able to endure the brightnes, but he ſhal ſay, Arife my ſeruants, and enioy my glorie; for hereafter ye ſhal neuer die, nor be grieued. Then ſhal they ſee God, and each lead his Virgin into his Chamber, where al pleaſures ſhal attend them. If one of thoſe Virgins ſhould come forth at midnight, ſhe would lighten the world no leſſe then the Sunne; and if ſhe ſhould ſpit into the Sea, al the water thereof would become ſweet. Gabriel keepeth the keys of Paradife, which are in number threeſcore and ten thouſand, each ſeuen thouſand miles long. But he was not able to open Paradife without inuocation of the Name of God, and Mahomet his friend. There is a Table of Adamant ſeuen hundred thouſand daies journey long and broad, with ſeats of gold and ſiluer about it, where they ſhal bee feaſted.

Methodij Conſtitut.
in B. b. Pat.
vbi & Abucare

There is extant a Conſtitution of Methodius, Patriarke of Conſtantinople, touching the diuerſities of Penances (according to the diuerſitie of the offence) to be performed by ſuch as haue reuolted from the Faith to Mahumitiſme. Likewiſe there is a fragment of Nicetas, wherein are expreſſed the abiuurations and renunciations of Mahomet and his Law by new Conuerts, both before Baptiſme, when they were admitted into the number of the Catechumeni, and at Baptiſme, as was then uſed in the Church, ſome of which I heere mention, as fitting to our purpoſe. After the Anathema pronounced againſt Mahomet, Ali his ſonne in law, Apompicertus, Baeicer, Ammar, Talcan, Apipachren, Sadiceu, and the reſt of his conſorts and ſucceſſors; alſo againſt Gadiſe, Aiſe, and other his wiues, with Phatuma his daughter: he Anathematifieth the Core, that is, Mahomet's Scripture, and all his learning, lawes, Apocryphall narrations, traditions and blaſphemies. The fiſt Article is againſt Mahomet's Paradife, theſe thus expreſſed, That in it are foure Riuers, one of cleare water, a ſecond of ſweet milke, a third of pleaſant wine, a fourth of hony: and that the Saracens at the day of Iudgement (which ſhall be five hundred thouſand yeares after his time) ſhall liue carnally with their wiues vnder the ſhadowes of certaine trees called Sidra and Telech, and ſhal eat what fruits and birds they wil, and ſhal drinke of the Fountains Caphura and Zinciber, and wine out of the Spring Theon. Their age ſhal be the ſame with the Heauens: their members foure cubits: they ſhal haue their fill of luſt in the preſence of God, who is not aſhamed. Sixtly, He Anathematifieth Mahomet's Angels, Aroth, Maron, Tzapha and Marona, with his Prophets, Chud, Zalech, Soaip, Edres, Dnaciphel and Lechna. Seuenthly, His doctrine of the Sunne and Moone, and his challenge to be the Key bearer of Paradife: alſo his houſe of Mecca, in the middeſt whereof they ſay, is a ſtone, repreſenting Venus, on which Abraham lay with Hagar, and tied thereto his Camell, when hee ſhould haue ſacrificed Iſaac: where the Pilgrimes holding holding their eare with one hand, point to the stone with the other, and so turne round till they fall downe with giddinesse. He renounceth likewise their casting seuen stones against the Christians, and the tale of Mahomets Camell and them which worship the Morning-STARRE, or Lucifer and Venus, which the Arabians call Chobar, that is, Great. And thus he proceedeth in two and twentie Articles, abandoning his former Sect: after which he desireth Baptisme.

Of like subiect are the Catecheses Mystagogicae, or instructions of Peter Guerra de Lorca, concerning conuerting and keeping from Mahometisme, in which are rehearsed and refuted a great part of their superstitions, dedicated to King Philip the second: But King Philip the third hath otherwise conuerted the Mores of Spaine, for whom he writ his booke, by an vtter subuersion and turning them quite out of his Dominions. He therein telleth of the Diuels appearing to Mahomet in forme of a Vulture, with a beake and feathers of gold, professing himselfe to be Gabriel, sent of God to teach him his Law: that Mahomet would not permit Iewes to turne to his Law, without baptising them first vnto Christianitie: that the Saracens worship the New-Moone: that the women spend all their time and care to adorne themselues for their husbands lust, and because they respect faues in their wiues, these therefore with idlenes sleepe, and diet according; doe fat themselues like Swine: that a Mahometan may attaine to that perfection, that he may satisfie for sinne past, and after liue without sinne, especially by Fastings and Pilgrimages: that the blessed Virgin shall (as they dreame) in the other life be married to that cursed monster Mahomet: that women shall rise againe in the male sex, and shall also haue women for their lust, which shall be produced out of certaine trees: with diuers other things scarcely objected to them by others. Thomas à Iesu another Spaniard, hath written prolixly of this Argument, but I may not here now follow him.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Pilgrimage to Mecca.

WE haue heard of the antiquity of this Pilgrimage in the former Chapter, derived from Adam, who was shauen & circumcised for that purpose: and the Alcoran nameth Abraham the founder of the Temple, &c. Pity it were, that the last of the Prophets should not honor that which was first instituted by the first of men. If we wil rather beleue that Arabian before mentioned, we shall finde another originall, namely, that whereas two Nations of the Indians, called Zechian and Albarachuma, had vsed to go about their Idols naked and shauen, with great howlings, kissing the corners, and casting stones vpon an heap, which was heaped vp in honor of their gods, and that twice euery yeare, in the Spring, and in Autumne: the Arabians had learned the same of the Indians, and practised the same at Mecca, in honor of Venus (casting stones backe betweene their legs, the parts of Venus) in the time of Mahomet. Neither did Mahomet abrogate this, as he did other Idolatrous Rites; only for modesties sake they were enjoyned to gird a peece of linnen about their Reines. *Petrus Alphonsi an ancient Author, who of a Iew had become a Christian, thus relateth this Historie. The Ammonites and Moabites erected two Idols, one of white stone called Mercurie, in honor of Mars: the other of blacke, called Chamos, in honour of Saturne. Twice a yeare these men ascended to worship them; when the Sunne entred into Aries, in honor of Mars, and then at their departure they cast stones (as before is said); when the Sun entred into Libra in honor of Saturne. at which time they sacrificed naked, with their heads shauen. The Arabians also worshipped them: Mahomet did not abolish them, but placed the Image of Saturne in a corner, with his back part forwards; and buried the Image of Mars in the ground, and laid a stone ouer it. These stones he permitted them to kisse, and with shauen crownes and naked backs to cast stones backwards betweene their legs, which they say, is done to scarre away the Diuell. This is suffered to be done at Mecca in honor of Venus. But we haue already heard that Venus was the ancient Arabian and Saracenicall Deitie, to whom they performed such Rites of old.

a Pilgrimage
to Mecca. M.
Hak. tom. 2.

b Vertoman,
lib. 1. cap. 14.

Mecca, or (as they call it) Macca, signifying an Habitation, containeth in it about six thousand houfes, fairely built, like those of Italy: Other walls it hath not, then such as Nature hath enuironed it with, namely, with high and barren Mountains round about. Some ^a report, That betweene the Mountaines and the Citie are pleasant Gardens, abundance of Figges, Grapes, Apples, Melons, and that there is store also of Flesh and Water. But it seemeth, that this is of later industrie, not of Natures indulgence, if it be true. For Lod. Barthe ^b, or Vertoman, being there in the yeare 1503. saith, That the place was accursed of God, as not bringing forth Hearbs, Trees, Fruits, or any thing, and besides, hauing great scarcitie of water, and is serued with these things from other places. It is gouerned by a King (tributarie, then to the Soldan, now to the Turke) called the Seriffo, lineally descended from their great Seducer, by his daughter Fatima (the onely issue of this libidinous poligamous Prophet) married to Hali. All of this kindred are called Emyri, that is, Lords, cloathed with (or at least wearing Turbants of) greene, which colour the Mahumetans will not suffer other men to weare.

The Number of Pilgrimes which resort hither, is incredible. From Cairo cometh a Carouan of deuotion, some to Mammon, some to Mahomet, either for trade of Merchandize, or for Superstition, and another yearely from Damascus: besides those which come from the Indies, Ethiopia, Arabia, Persia, &c. Lud. Barthe saith, That (at his being at Mecca) of the Carouan of Damasco, wherein he went, were five and thirtie thousand Camels, and about fortie thousand persons: of that of Cairo were threescore and foure thousand Camels, and now in these times about fortie thousand Camels, Mules and Dromedaries, and fiftie thousand persons, besides the Arabian Carouan, and of other Nations.

This Mart of Mecca is much impaired, since the Portugales haue intercepted the Indian commodities, which by a Carouan, from thence, were wont to be brought hither.

Let me desire the Reader to haue patience, and goe along, on this Pilgrimage, with one of these Carouans, thorow these Arabian Desarts to Mecca and Medina: and because that of Cairo is the chiefe, we will bestow our selues in it, and obserue what Rites they obserue before they set forth; what by the way, and at the intended places of their deuotion. ^c Touching the necessitie whereof; they thinke, that they which go not once in their liues, shall, after death, go to the Diuell. Yea, some, for deuotion, plucke out their eyes after so holy a sight.

c Alcor. Italic.

The moneth Ramazan (as you haue heard) is their Lent; falling sometime high, sometime low, being that whole moneth, during which time the Pilgrimes and Merchants resort to Cairo from Asia, Greece, Barbarie, &c. After their ^d Lent ended, they obserue their Easter, or Feast, called Bairam, three dayes. Twentie dayes after this Feast, the Carouan is readie to depart. Against this time, they assemble themselues at a place, two leagues from Cairo (called Birca) attending the coming of the Captaine. This Captaine of the Carouan, whom they call Amarilla Haggi, is renewed euery third yeare; and to him the Grand Signior, euery voyage, giueth eighteene Purfes (each containing six hundred twentie five duckats of gold) for the behoofe of the Carouan, and also to doe almes vnto needfull Pilgrimes. He hath foure Chaufi to serue him, and foure hundred Souldiers, two hundred Spachi, mounted on Dromedaries, and as many Ianizaries, riding on Camels. The Chaufi and Spachi, the Captaine maintaineth at his owne charges: The Ianizaries haue their prouision from Cairo. He hath eight Pilots for guides; which Office is hereditarie.

to Mecca. Hak.

They carrie sixe pieces of Ordinance, to terrifie the Arabians, and to triumph at Mecca. The merchandize that goeth by Land, payeth no custome; that which goeth by sea, payeth ten in the hundred. At the Feast, before the Carouan setteth forth, the Captaine, with his Retinue and Officers, resort vnto the Castle of Cairo, before the Basha, which giueth vnto euery man a Garment, and that of the Captaine is wrought with gold, the others according to their degree. Morcouer, he deliuereth vnto him the Chisua Tunabi, or Garment of the Propher; a Vesture of Silke, wrought with these letters of gold, La illa ill' alla Mahomet Resullala; that is, There are no gods but God, and Mahomet is the Messenger of God. After this, he deliuereth to him a Gate,

Gate, wrought curiously with gold; and a couering of greene veluet, made in manner of a Pyramis, about nine palmes high, wrought with fine golde, to couer the Tombe of the Prophet Mahomet, and many other couerings besides of gold and silke, to adorne it. The two former are for the house of Abraham in Mecca.

Then the Captaine hauing taken his leaue, departeth accompanied with all the people of Cairo, in manner of a Procession, with singing, shouting, and a thousand Ceremonies besides, and passing the Gate Bab-Nassera, layeth vp, in a Mosquita, the said Vestures very safely. This Ceremonie is performed with such publike resort, that it is not lawfull for any man to forbid his wife the going to this Feast: for shee may, vpon such a cause, separate her selfe from her husband, and lye with another man. The Camels which carrie the Vestures, being adorned with Cloath of gold, and many little Bells, the multitude stroweth flowers and sweet water on them; others with fine cloth and towels touch the same, reseruing these for Reliques. Twentie daies after this Feast, the Captaine, taking the Vestures out of that Mosquita, repaireth to Birca, where his Tent abideth some ten dayes. In this time, they which meane to follow the Carouan, resort thither, and amongst them, many women, atired with Triffles, Tassels and Knots, accompanied with their friends, mounted on Camels. The night before their departure, they make great feasting and triumph, with discharging their Ordinance, Fireworkes, &c. shouting, till, at the breake of day, vpon the sound of a Trumpet, they march forward on their way.

From Cairo to Mecca is fortie dayes journey, traouelling from two a clocke in the morning till the Sunne-rising; and then hauing rested till noone, they set forward, so continuing till night, obseruing this order, till the end of their Voyage, without change; except ^e at some places, where, in respect of water, they rest sometimes a day and a halfe, to refresh themselues. The Carouan is diuided into three parts; the fore-ward, the maine battaile, and the rere-ward. The fore-ward containeth about the third part of the people; and amongst these, the eight Pilots, a Chausi, and foure knaues, with Bulls sinewes, which punish offendours on the soles of their feet. In the night time they haue foure or foue men goe before with Peeces of drie wood, which giue light: they follow the Starre, as the Mariners. Within a quarter of a mile followeth the maine Battaille, with their Ordinance, Gunners, and fiftene Archers, Spachi. The chiefe Physitian, with his Oyntments and Medicines for the sicke, and Camels for them to ride on. Next goeth the fairest Camell that may be found in the Turkes Dominion, decked with cloath of golde and silke, and carrieth a little cheft, made of pure Legmame, in forme of the Israelitish Arke, containing in it the Alcoran, all written with great letters of Gold, bound betweene two Tables of masse Gold. This Chest is couered with Silke, during the Voyage; but at their entring into Mecca and Medina, it is couered with cloath of Gold, adorned with Iewels. This Camell is compassed about with Arabian Singers and Musicians, singing alway, and playing vpon Instruments. After this follow fiftene other most faire Camels, euery one carrying one of the abouesaid Vestures, being couered from top to toe with Silke. Behind these, goe the twentie Camels, which carrie the Captaines money and prouision. After followeth the Standard of the great Signior, accompanied with Musicians and souldiers, and behind these, lesse then a mile, followeth the rere-ward, the greatest part Pilgrimes; the Merchants for securitie, going before: for in this Voyage it is needfull and vsuall, that the Captains bestow Presents, Garments, and Turbants vpon the chiefe Arabians, to giue him free passage, receiuing sometimes, by pilferings, some damage notwithstanding. They passe by certaine weake Castles in the way, Ageiut, Nachel, Achab, Biritem, between which two last is the Riuer of Iethro, and the Ponds of Midian, where Moses sate downe. At Iebhir, the first Towne subiect to the Serisso of Mecca, they are receiued with much ioy, and well refreshed with the plentie which that place yeeldeth. They finde other filthie Commodities also more then plentie, which fact (they hold) purgeth them from a multitude of sinnes, and encreaseth their deuotion to prosecute the Voyage. The next day they goe towards Bedrihonem, in which place groweth shrubbes, whereout issueth Baulme. Hereby they lodge one night, in memorie of a victorie heere obtained against the Christians, at the earnest prayers of their Prophet, dreaming of Drummes, heere still sounded by Angels, as they passe. The next morning, by Sunne-rising, they arriue at Bedrihonem, where euey one washed himselfe from top to toe, couering their priuities with a cloth, and their shoulders with another white one; and they which can goe in this habite to Mecca, merit more; they which cannot, make a vow to offer a Kamme at the Mountaine of Pardons. After this washing, it is not lawfull for any man or woman to kill a Flea or Lowse with their hands or nayles, till they have accomplished their Vowes at that Mountaine.

This night they come within two miles of Mecca. The next morning they march on, and the Seriffo meeting them, resigneth his Gouernment to the Captaine, during his abode there: and the Captaine giueth him a garment of cloath of gold, with other Jewels. After this, hauing eaten together vpon Carpets and Hides, they take with them the Gate and Garment abouesaid, and goe, attended but with few, to the Mosquita, and there cause the old to be pulled downe, and put the new couerture on the house of Abraham: and the old Vesture is the Eunuches which serue in the said Mosquita, which sell it deere to the Pilgrimes, euey little piece being accounted a most holy Relique. And well may it be so, for (can you doubt of it?) putting the same vnder the head of a man at his death, all his sinnes must, by vertue hereof, be pardoned. They take away the old dore, which is the Seriffoes fee, and set in place the new. Thus after some Orisons, the Captaine returneth to his pavilion, the Seriffo remaineth in the Citie.

f Description of the Mosquita
at Mecca,

That you may be the better acquainted with this Mosquita, and house of Abraham, you are to know, f that in the middest of the Citie is the great Mosquita, built (they say) in the time when their Prophet liued. It is foure-square, euey square halfe a mile, being in all the circuit two miles, in manner of a Cloyster: The Galleries round about are in manner of foure streets; these streets being separated from each other with Pillars, of Marble some, and some of Lime and Stone. In the middest of all, separate from the rest, is the house of Abraham. This Mosquita hath fourescore and nineteene Gates and siue Steeples, from whence the Talismani call the people to their deuotion. And the Pilgrimes, which are not prouided of Tents, resort hither, men and women lying together: their House of Prayer becoming a den of Theeues. Barthema saith, That this Temple is round, like the Coliseo at Rome. That at euey entrance is a descent of ten or twelue steppes, on both sides whereof stand Jewellers, which sell Gems onely. Within it is vaulted, gilded, and odoriferous, beyond what can be spoken: for there are foure or siue hundred men which sell powders to preserue dead corpes, and other Sweetes. It seemeth, that since his time the Temple and House of Abraham are altered. This g House is foure-square, made of speckled stone, twentie paces high, and fortie in circuit. And vpon one side of this House, within the wall, there is a stone of a spanne long, and halfe a spanne broad, which stone (they say) fell downe from Heauen; a voice from Heauen, at the same fall, being heard, That wheresoeuer this stone fell, there should be built the House of God, wherein he will heare the prayers of sinners. Then was the Stone as white as snow, but now, through the kisses of sinners, it is become so blacke as it is. The entrance into this House is small and high. There are without this House one and thirtie pillars of brasse vpon square stones, sustaining a threed of Copper, reaching from one to another on which are fastened many burning Lampes. The founder of these was Solyman. Being entred into this house through that difficult passage, there stand two pillars of Marble at the entrance: in the middest are three of Aloes-wood, couered with tyles of India, of a thousand colours, which serue to vnderprop the Terrazza, or roofe. It is so darke that they can hardly see within for want of light; nor is it without an euill smell. Without the gate siue paces, is the Pond Zunzun; that blessed Pond which the Angell shewed to Agar for her soune Ismael.

g The house
described.

Of their Feast Baraim is said already: About sixe dayes after they be come hither to Mecca, they celebrate another Feast called Bina Baraim, that is, the great Feast, which is also called, The Feast of the Ramme. In those dayes space they prepare themselves hereunto with due ceremonies. First, departing from the Carouan, guided ded with such as are skilfull in the way, they goe twentie or thirtie in a Companie, walking thorow a street, which ascendeth by little and little, till they come vnto a certaine gate, whereon is written in Marble, Babel Salema; that is, the gate of Health. And from this place is described the great Mosquita, and twice saluted, saying, Peace to thee, Messenger of God. Then proceeding on their way, they finde an Arch on their right hand, whereon they ascend fise steppes, vpon which is a great void place made of stone: after descending fise other steps, and proceeding the space of a flight-shoot, they finde another Arch, like vnto the first; and this way, from the one Arch to the other, they goe and come seuen times. saying alwayes some of their prayers, which they say, the afflicted Hagar said, whiles she sought and found not water for her sonne. After this Ceremonie, they enter into the Mosquita; and drawing neere vnto the house of Abraham, they goe round about it other seuen rimes, alwayes saying, This is the house of God, and of his seruant Abraham. This done, they goe and kisse that blacke stone abouesaid; and then goe they to the Pond Zunzun, and in their apparell, as they be, wash themselues from head to foot, saying, Tobak Allah, Tobak Allah, Pardon Lord, Pardon Lord; drinking also of that muddie vnsauourie water: and thus returne they, cleansing from all their finnes. Euery Pilgrime performeth these Ceremonies once at the least; the deuouter fort often.

An hundred yeares since these Ceremonies were somewhat different, after Barthe-mas ^h Relation. On the three and twentieth of May, the people (before day) compassed that house of Abraham seuen times, alway touching and kissing euery corner. Ten or twelue paces from this house was another, in manner of a Chappell, with three or foure gates, and in the middest thereof a pit of brackish water, threescore and ten yards deepe. Thereat stand sixe or eight men, appointed to draw water for the people; who after their seuen-fold Ceremonie come to the brinke, and say, All this be for the honor of God, and the pitious God pardon me my finnes. Then doe those other powre vpon them three buckets full of water, from the top of their heads to their feet, be their garments neuer so costely.

The Carouan ⁱ hauing abode at Mecca fise dayes, the night before the euening of their Feast, the Captaine with all his Companie, setteth forwards, towards the Mountaine of Pardons, called Iabel Arafata, distant from Mecca fisteene miles. This Mountaine, or small Hill rather, is in compasse two miles, enuironed round about with the goodliest Plaine that a maus eye hath seene, and that Plaine compassed with high Mountaines. Vpon the side towards Mecca there are many pipes of cleare fresh water, wherewith the people refresh themselues and their Cattell. Adam and Eue, when they were banished Paradise, after they had bene separated fortie yeares, one in Nubia, and the other in India (as you heard before) met at this pleasant place, and here inhabited and built a little house, which they call at this day Beyt-Adam, the house of Adam.

Hither come also the same day the other Carouans of Arabia and Damasco, and all the inhabitants for ten dayes iourney round about, so that at one time heere is to bee seene aboue two hundred thousand persons, and three hundred thousand cattell. Now all this company meeting together, the night before the Feast, the three Hostes cast themselues into a triangle, setting the Mountaine in the middest, and fill Heauen and Earth with shouting, singing, hallowing, gun-shot and fire-workes all that night. The next day being their Feast, in silence they attend their sacrifices and prayers only. And in the euening, they which haue horses, mount thereon, and approach as nigh vnto the Mountaine as they can: others make the best shift they can on foote; giuing euer vnto the Captaine of Cairo the chiefe place, the second to the Captaine of Damasco, and the third to the Captaine of Arabia. And being all approached, there commeth one of the Santonnes mounted on a Camell well furnished, who at the other side of the Mountaine ascendeth fise steppes into a pulpit, made for that purpose, and there maketh a Sermon to the people. The Contents whereof, are the benefits which God hath bestowed on them, deliuitance from Idolatrie, giuing them the house of Abraham, and the Mountaine of Pardons: adding that the mercifull God commanded the Secretarie Abraham, to build him an house in Mecca, wherein his suc-

cessours might be heard, at which time all the mountaines in the world came together thither with sufficiency of stones for the building thereof, except that little low hill, which for pouertie could not goe to discharge this debt: for the which it became sorrowfull, and wept thirtie yeares, at the end whereof God in compassion said vnto it, weepe no more my daughter, comfort thy selfe: I will cause all those that go to the house, of my seruant Abraham, that they shall not be absolved from their sinnes, vntill they first come to doe thee reuerence, to keepe in this place their holiest feast. And thus I haue commanded to my people by the mouth of my friend and Prophet Mahomet. This said, he exhorteth them to the loue of God, to prayer, and almes. The Sermon ended, at the Sun-setting they make three prayers: first for the Seriffo, second for the grand Signior, the third for the People: to which prayers all with one voice, crye Amin Ia Alla, Amin Ia Alla; Be it so Lord, Barthema addeth to the Sermon the Cadi or Santones, exhortation to weepe for their sinnes, and knocke their breasts with inuocation of Abraham and Isaac, to pray for the people of the Prophet; and reporteth further, that there were killed on the first day more then thirtie thousand Rammes or Sheepe toward the West, and giuen to the poore: of which there were thirtie or fortie thousand. Thus hauing had the Santones blessing, and saluted the Mountaine of pardons, they returne the way they came, in the middest of which way, is a place called Mina: and a little from thence foure great pillars, two on each side of the way. If any passe not thorow the middest of these, hee loseth all the merit of his Pilgrimage. And from the Mount of pardons, till they bee passed these pillars, none dare looke backward, for feare lest his sinnes, which hee hath left in the mountaine, returne to him againe.

Being past these Pillars, euery one lighteth downe, seeking in this sandie field fiftie or threescore little stones, which they binde in an handkerchiefe and carrie to that place of Mina, where they stay fūe dayes, because at that time there is a Faire, free and franke of all custome. And in this place are other three Pillars not together, but set in diuers places, Monuments of those three Apparitions, which the Diuell made to Abraham, and to ^k Ismael his sonne: for they now a dayes make no mention of Isaac, as if he had neuer bene borne. They say that when as Abraham at Gods command went to offer his sonne Ismael, the diuell dehorted him from the same: but seeing his labour lost, he went to Ismael and bid him pitie himselfe. But Ismael tooke vp stones and threw at him, saying, I defend me with God from the Diuell the offender. These words the Pilgrimes repeate in their visitation of these pillars, hurling away the stones they had gathered. From hence halfe a mile is a mountaine, whither Abraham went to sacrifice his sonne. In the same is a great den, whither the pilgrimes resort to make their prayers, and there is a great stone separated in the middest by the knife of Ismael (they say) at the time of this sacrifice. Barthema reporteth that heere at Mecca he saw two Vnicornes: which I mention, because since that time I haue not found any Author, which hath testified the like sight. They were sent to the Seriffo for a present to the Ethiopian King.

The Carouan departing for Medina, as soone as they come in sight thereof (they call the place the Mountaine of health) they alight, and going vp the hill, shout with loude voyces and say, Prayer and health be vnto thee, O Prophet of God, Prayer and health be vpon thee O beloued of God. They proceed on their journey; and lodge that night within three miles of Medina, and the next morning are receiued with solemnitie of the Governour. Medina, ^l is a Citie two miles in circuite, with faire houses of Lime and stone, and a square Mosquita in the middest, lesse, but more sumptuous then that of Mecca. This Medina, called Tal Nabi, that is, of the Prophet, in Barthemas time contained about three hundred houses, and was very barren, one garden of Dates excepted: but now they haue store of Fruits. This Temple is square, an hundred paces in length, fourscore in breadth. It hath in it an Ile made Arch-wise, supported with foure hundred Pillars, and supporting (as he saith) three thousand lampes. In one part of this Mosquita was a Librarie of fortie fūe Mahumeticall books. Also within the same (in a corner thereof) is a ^m Tombe built vpon foure pillars with a Vault, exceeding in height the Mosquita; being couered with Leade, and the top all inameld with gold, and an halfe Moone vpon the top, wrought within very Artificially with gold. Below there are round about great iron staires ascending vp to the middest of the pillars, and in the middest lyeth buried the body of Mahomet (not in an yron Chest attracted by Adamant at Mecca, as some affirme.) Or to say the truth, neither here nor at Mecca can they shew this Seducers body. For the Captaine of that Carouan of Damasco, in which Barthema went on this Pilgrimage, offered to the chiefe Priest of that Mosquita, three thousand Saraffi of gold, to shew him the body of the Nabi or Prophet; that (saith hee) being the only cause of my comming. The Priest answered proudly: How can those eyes, wherewith thou hast committed so much euill in the world, see him by whom God hath created Heauen and Earth? The Captaine replied, True Sir, but doe me that fauour, to let mee see his body and I will presently pluck out ^z mine eyes. The Priest answered, O Sir I will tell you the truth. It is true, that our Prophet would die here to giue vs good example: for hee might haue dyed at Mecca, but such was his humilitie for our instruction: and presently after hee was dead, hee was carried by the Angels into heauen. And where (saith the Captayne) is Iesus Christ the Sonne of Marie? The Priest answered, At the feet of Mahomet.

z Which some are reported to doe indeede after so holy a sight, not further polluting their eyes.

In the night time by some fire-workes in the steeple, they would haue gulled the credulous people with opinion of miracle, vsing out-cryes in the night, saying Mahomet would rise againe: and when the Mamalukes could see no such light shine forth of Mahomet's Tombe, as they rumoured, they said it was because they were slaues and weake in the faith, and could not see heavenly sights.

To returne to the discouerie of this supposed Sepulchre: Ouer the body they haue built a Tombe of speckled stone, a brace and halfe high, and ouer the same another of Legname four-square in manner of a Pyramis. Round about the Sepulchre there hangeth a curtaine of silke: which hideth the Sepulture from their sight, that stand without. Beyond this in the same Mosquita are other two Sepulchers of Fatima and Hali. The attendants on these Sepulchers are fiftie Eunuches, white and taunie, of which, three only of the eldest and best esteemed white Eunuches, may enter within the tomb: which they doe twice a day to light the Lamps, and for other seruices. The other attend on the Mosquita and those two other Sepulchers. Where euery one may goe and touch at his pleasure, and take of the earth for deuotion, as many doe. The Captayne with great pompe presenteth that Pyramidlike Vestment (whereof you haue heard) for the Tombe, the Eunuches taking away the old, and laying on the new: and after this, other vestures for the ornament of the Mosquita. And the people without deliuer vnto the Eunuches, each man somewhat to touch the Tombe therewith: which they keepe as a relique with great deuotion.

Here is a stately Hospitall built by Cassachi, or Rosa, the Wife of great Solman, richly rented, and nourishing many poore people. A mile from the Citie are certaine houses, in one of which they say Mahomet dwelt, hauing on euery side many Date-trees, amongst which there are two growing out of one stock exceeding high, which their Prophet forsooth grafted with his owne hands. The fruit thereof is alway sent to Constantinople for a present to the Grand-Signior, and is said to bee the blessed fruit of the Prophet. Also there is a little Mosquita wherein three places are counted holy. The first they affirme their Prophet made his first prayer in, after he knew God. The second is that, whither hee went when he would see the house of Abraham. Where when he sat downe to that intent, the mountaynes opened from the top to the bottome, to shew him the house, and after closed againe as before. The third is the middest of the Mosquita where is a Tombe made of Lime and stone foure square, and full of sand, wherein they say was buried that blessed Camell which Mahomet was alway wont to ride vpon. Euen still (as one Master Simons a marchant and beholder thereof reported to mee) they haue a superstitious custome at Cairo, of carrying the legge of Mahomet's Camell (as they affirme) in a Coch, the women in zeale of their blinde deuotion hurling their shashes to receiue thence some holy and blessed touch, for their Mahometical edification; as the Papists ascribe no small holinesse to the touch of our Ladies Image at Loretto with their Beads, or other implements of their superstition, as my friend master Barkley, an eye-witnesse, hath told me. Maruell much wee may that the Souldiers which crucified Christ and parted his garments by lot, and Judas which kissed him, and the Deuill also which carried his body out of the wildernesse and set it on a pinnacle of the Tempie, did not from such holy touches acquire much holinesse. But here a good intent was wanting, which though the Mahumetans haue, yet a Camels legge is not so holy as our Ladies Image; Grant it: but they pretend Tradition and deuotion no lesse then these: and otherwise, there is as little warrant* for that house and Image of our Ladie that they are true, as of the other. Blessed Virgin, whom all generations call blessed, and iustly admire for that holinesse, which with thankfulness to God and Charitie to man; wee are to imitate; that these stones and blocks should thus vsurpe thy name, and (in a worse sacrilege) diuine worship, yea more then those holies of diuine institution, which were so farre from conueying^a holinesse by touching, that being themselues touched by any vnclene thing, they received thence infection of vnclennesse. And if Christ himselfe should thus bee honoured, where in all the Christian world are such vowes, pilgrimages, and deuotions in his name, as here to the supposed Ladie of Loretto? as if they would rather be Mariani then Christiani in their Religion. But who brought vs now to Loretto? Nay, who can but in reading the one thinke of the other, both being frequented so generally in pilgrimages, offerings, and I know not what superstitions? Only in this is Loretto worle, that it abuseth more holy names of God and his Saints, to like vnholies. But of this subject that Reuerend and learned Deane D. Sutcliffe hath largely and learnedly written, both in confutation of that impious pamphlet of Giffords Caluino-Turcismus, and plainly paraleling the Mahumetans and Turkes in very many points of their Religions. To him I referre the industrious Reader. Yea the very Narration of the Saracenicall and Turkish Rites by vs in this Booke, shall be sufficient to them which know the Popish, in many things to discern and acknowledge the Kindred, and like hellish descent of both; like Sampsons Foxes, hauing their tailes knit together with fire-brands, which both fill and empie the world with their flames, howsoeuer their heads looke contrarie, one toward Christ, the other toward Mahomet. That which I speake of Popish, I vnderstand of that which our Aduersaries maintayne by authoritie (not from Scriptures or the ancient Councels and Fathers, but) from the Popes pretended Supremacie and visible Monarchie as Head and Vice-God in the Church; the Alcoran whereof is his Decretals, Extravagants, Consistorie constitutions, and such Canons as^b their holy Ghost sent from Rome in a boxe, lately thundered at Trent besides and against the Canonickall Scripture, which holy men of God wru as they were moued by the holy Ghost. But let vs back to Medina. On the other side of the Citie are Tombes of the holy Mahumetans, Abubachar, Ottoman, Omar, which Bartemay saith were buried in the same Temple with Mahomet, and all vnder the earth. A dayes iourney from Medina is a steepe mountaine, hauing no passage but one narrow path, which was made by Hali: who fleeing from the pursuing Christians, and hauing no way of escape, drew out his sword, and diuided this mountaine, and so saued his life. The Captaine at his returne to^c Cairo, is with a sumptuous feast receiued of the Basha, and presented with a garment of cloth of gold: he againe presenteth the Alcoran, out of the chest to the Basha to kisse, and then it is laid vp againe. By this time your pilgrimage hath more then wearied you.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Successors of MAHOMET, of their different Sects, and of the dispersing of that Religion through the World.

MAHOMET hauing with Word and Sword published his Alcoran (as you haue heard) his followers after his death succeeding in his place, exceeded him in tyrannie. Eubocar, surnamed Abdalla, vnder-tooke the defence of that faithlesse Faith and Kingdome, and that (as his Predecessor had done) partly by subtiltie, partly by force. For when as Mahumets Disciples had buried their new Religion with their old Master, except a few of his kindred, hee applyed his wits to recall them; and whereas ^a Hali. Mahomets nearest kinsman and sonne in law disagreed from him, and was perswaded by the Jewes to profess himselfe a Prophet, with promise of their best aide and assistance: Eubocar (or Ebuber) reconciled him, and (as their Arabian Chronicle witnesseth) conuerted many Infidels, and slue the gaine-fayers. He reigned one yeare, and three moneths, and thirteene dayes. The next successor Aomar (saith the same Author; ^b Leo termeth him Homar) ordained their prayers in the month Ramazan, and that the Alcoran should be read through, which he caused to be written out, and vnit- ted in one Booke; he conquered Egypt by Hanir his Captayne; after that Damasco, Ierusalem, Gaza, and a great part of Syria were subdued. Hee reigned ten yeares, and fixe moneths. ^c Odmen or Ozimen succeeded, and reigned twelue yeares: and after him Hali; and next to him his sonne Albatem; and then Moani the great Conqueror, &c. These foure Eubocar, Aomar, Ozimen, and Hali, are the foure great Doctors of the Mahumetan Law: and Mahomet before his death prophesied that they should succede him, and of their worthinesse.

But as Mahomet had pretended the name of Gabriel to the dreames of Sergius, and other Apostata's of the Christians and Jewes, disagreeing both with the truth and themselves: so it was not long, that this untempered mortar would hold together these buildings. For the ^d Alcoran being (according to diuers Copies thereof,) read diuersly, was cause of different Sects among them. Ozimen, to prevent the danger hereof, commanded that all the copies of their law should be brought and deliuered into the hands of Zeidi and Abdalla; who conferring their Copies, should make one Booke, and, where they dissent, should reade according to the Copie of Corais. Thus these two, according to the Kings Edict, to stablish an vniformitie in the reading of the Alcoran, hauing out of all those Copies framed one to bee authentically, burned all others. Yet were they deceiued of their hopes, partly because Hali, Abitalib, and Ibenmuzod, would not bring in their Bookes, of which that of Hali was the same which Mahomet had left, and was after by the Jewes altered, putting out and in at their pleasure: and partly, because that Booke, which they had thus culled out of the rest to remaine Canonically, was lost, and of the foure Copies which they had written thereof, by fire and negligence all perished. Eletragig would haue vsed the like policie after; but this many-headed Serpent, which could not in the shell bee killed, much lesse in his ripper growth could be reformed.

Those foure Doctors aforesaid, emulous of each other, intending their owne private ends, sowed the seeds then, which fructifie in their venomous multiplication till this day. ^e Hali or Alli was Author of the sect Imemia, which was embraced of the Persians, Indians, and of many Arabians; and the Gelbines of Africa. Ozimen or Odmen began the sect Baanesia or Xefara, and hath in diuers Countries his followers. Homar founded the Anefia, followed of the Turkes, Syrians, and in Zahara in Africke. Ebocar (otherwise called Ebuber, or Abubequer) taught the sect Melchia, generally possessing Arabia and Africa. These are holden as Saints in the Saracene Kalendar, as ^f Scaliger testifieth, who had one in Semiarabike and Persian, wherein ouer against the 27. of December was written, the death of Phetima (shee was the daughter of Muhamend) God haue mercie on her. Against the 10. of Ianuarie, the death of AbuBoker; God haue mercie

Sarrac.

From these soure in proceesse of time arose other * threescore and eight sects of name, besides other pedling factions of smaller reckoning. Amongst the rest the Morabites haue bene famous; liuing for the most part as Heremites, and professing a morall Philosophie, with principles different from the Alcoran. One of these not many yeares since, shewing the name of Mahomet in his brest (there imprinted with Aqua fortis, or some such like matter) raised vp a great number of Arabians in Afrike, and laid siege to Tripolis: where being betrayed by one of his Capraines, his skinne was sent for a present to the Grand Signior. These Morabites affirme, that when Hali fought, hee killed a hundred thousand Christians with one stroke of his sword, which was a hundred cubits in length.

The Cobuni are a sect ridiculous. One of them shewed himselfe riding in the Countrie of Algier, on a Reede, rained and bridled as a horse; much honored, for that on this Horse this Assie (had as he said) rid a hundred leagues in one night. R. Moses Aegyptius ^a writeth of two sects of Moores, the one called Seperatists, the other Intelligents, or Vnderstanders, both followed in their opinions by many Iewes. These later were of opinion that nothing in the world commeth to passe by chance or accident, neither in generall nor particular, but all are disposed by the will and intent of God, as well the fall of a leafe, as the death of a man, the least motion and stirring of any man or other creature; which (seeme they neuer so casuall) can neither come to passe sooner, later, or otherwise; for God doth thus moue and effect them, to whose absolute will they referre all things in a fatall necessitie. The Seperatists in a contrarie extreme, allow to man and beast a freedome, and that God rewardeth all creatures according to their merits or demerits: his prouidence extending it selfe to the fall of the leaues, to the way of the Ants: and if one be borne defectiue, it is better for him, then if hee had bene perfect, and so if any aduersitie befall him; for his reward shall bee the greater in the world to come: yea the beast which is slaughtered, and the Ants, Flea, or Louse shall not loose his reward from the Creator: the Mouse also which hath not sinned, and is killed of the Cat shall there be recompensed, (Now beasts pray for their soules, and Fleas and Lice pray vpon their bodies which hatched this beattly lousie Diuinitie.) The Intelligent beleueeth that it is conuenient that men be punished in this life, and for euer in hell, because the Creator would: the Seperatist thinketh that vniust; and that whatsoeuer is punished in this life, shall bee rewarded in the next, because such is the Creators wisedome. Thus is the infinite and vnmeasurable will and wisedome of the Creator, measured and defined according to the will and wisedome of wilfull witleffe men. Neither may we beleue the Rabbine, who reciting fise differing opinions concerning the Prouidence of God: First, of the Epicures, which exclude it wholly: Secondly, of Aristotle, that it descendeth not beneath the Moone: Thirdly, of the Intelligents: Fourthly, of the Seperatists: Fifthly, his owne, which he attributeth to the law of Moses, that euery man hath free-will, and all good befalls him in reward, all euill for punishment, and what measure any man meteth shall bee measured to him againe: but for other creatures, beasts, plants, and their operations, as of a Spider catching a Flie and the like ^b, he attributeth with Aristotle vnto chance, and not to diuine Prouidence, which he appropriateth in things below vnto man: these opinions hee ascribeth; that of Aristotle to Iob, that of the Seperatists to Bildad, that of Sophar to the Intelligents, that of Eliphaz is the same with his owne: and then let him with Eliphaz sacrifice to expiate it. But what doe the Iewes in our way? These waies and sects of the Moores haue brought them hither: but let vs looke further. 1. Leo lib. 3. writeth, that one Elefacin had written at large of the Mahumetan sects: of which hee reckoneth threescore and twelue principall (which agreeth with our former number) euery one accounting his owne to bee good and true, in which a man may attaine saluation. And yet Leo there addeth, that in this age there are not found about two. ^c One is that of

^c But two principall factions Mahumetan, at this day.

Lesbari;

Lesbari; which in all Turkie, Arabia, and Africa is embraced: the other Imamia; current in Persia and Corofan (of which in his proper place more.) So that by Leo's judgement all which follow the rule Lesbari or Hasbart, are Catholike Mahumetans; although of these the same Author affirmes, that in Cairo and all Egypt are foure religions different from each other, in Spirituall or Ecclesiasticall ceremonies, and also concerning their Ciuill and Canon Law; all founded on the Mahumetan Scripture in times past, by foure learned men, diuersly construing the generall rules to such particulars as seemed to them fitter for their followers; who disagreeing in opinion, agree in affection, and conuerse together without hatred or vpbraiding each other. As for those other sects, it seemeth that they are for the most part long since vanished: and those differences which remaine, consist rather in diuersitie of rule, and order of profession, then in differing Sects and Heresies of Religion: except in some few which yet remaine, of which * Leo thus reporteth: Fourescore yeares after Mahumet, one El-hesembnu Abilhasen gaue certaine rules to his Disciples, contrarie to the Alcoran-principles: but writ nothing. About a hundred yeares after Elharit Ibnu Esed of Bagaded writ a Booke vnto his Disciples, condemned by the Calipha and Canonists. But about fourescore yeares after that, another great Clarke reuiued the same doctrine, and had many followers; yet he and they were therefore condemned to death. But obtayning to haue triall of his opinions by disputation, hee ouerthrew his Aduersaries, the Mahometane Lawyers: and the Califa fauoured the said Sect, and erected Monasteries for them. Their Sect continued till Maticfab, of the Nation of the Turkes, persecuted the same. But twentie yeares after it was againe reued, and one Elgazuzli (a learned man) writ feuen bookes, reconciling these Sectaries and the Lawyers together: which reconciliation continued till the coming of the Tartars: and Asia and Africke was full of the se reformers of their law. In old time none but learned men might be admitted Professors hereof: but within these last hundreth yeares euery ignorant Idiot professeth it, saying that learning is not necessarie, but ^a the holy Spirit doth reueale to them, which haue cleane hearts, the knowledge of the truth. These contrarie to the Alcoran sing loue-songs and dances, with some phantasticall extasies; affirming themselves to be raiuished of diuine loue. These are great gluttons: they may not marrie, but are reputed Sodomites.

* I. Leo. l. 3.

a What difference herein, betweene the Mahumetane and our Separatist.

The same our Author writeth of some which teach, that by good workes, fasting, and abstinence, a man may attaine a Nature Angelicall, hauing his minde so purified that he cannot sinne, although he would. But he must first passe through fiftie degrees of Discipline: And although he sinne before hee bee past these fiftie degrees, yet God doth not impure it to him. These obserue strange and inestimable Fasts at the first: after, they liue in all pleasures of the world. Their rule was written in foure Volumes by a learned and eloquent man, Essehrauar: and by Ibnul-farid another Author, in exact and most learned Verse. That the Spheres, Elements, Planets, and Starres, are one God, and that no Faith nor Law can be erroneous, because that all men (in their minds) intend to worship that which is to bee worshipped. And they beleue that the knowledge of God is contayned in one man, who is called Elcorb, elected and partaker of God, and in knowledge as God. There are other fortie men amongst them, called Elauted, that is ^b Dunces, because of their lesse knowledge. When the Elcorb or Elcorb dyeth, his Successor is chosen out of these: and into that vacant place of the fortie, they choose one out of another number of seuentie. They haue a third inferiour number of a hundred threescore and foue (their Title I remember not) out of which they choose, when any of the threescore and ten die. Their Law or Rule enioyneth them to wander through the World in manner of Fooles, or of great Sinners, or of the vilest amongst men. And vnder this cloke many are most wicked men, going naked without hiding their shame, and haue to deale with women in the open and common streets like beasts. Of this base sort are many in Tunis, and farre more in Egypt, and most of all in Cairo. I my selfe (saith our Author) in Cairo in the street called Bain El-cafrain, saw one of them with mine eyes take a beautifull Dame coming out of the Bathe, and laied her downe in the middest of the street, and carnally knew her, and presently when hee had left the woman, all the people ranne to touch her clothes,

because a holy man had touched them. And they said, that this Saint seemed to doe a sinne, but that he did it not. Her husband knowing of it, reckoned it a rare fauour and blessing of God, and made solemne fasting, and gaue almes for that cause. But the Iudges which would haue punished him for the same, were like to be slaine of the rude multitude: who haue them in great reputation of sanctitie, and euery day giue them gifts and presents.

There are another sort, that may be termed Caballists: which fast strangely, nor doe they eat the flesh of any Creature, but haue certaine meates ordayned and appointed for euery houre of the day and night, and certaine particular prayers, according to the dayes and moneths numbring their said prayers: and vsē to carrie vpon them some square things, painted with Characters and numbers. They affirme that the good Spirits appeare, and acquaint them with the affaires of the world. An excellent Doctour, named Boni, framed their rule and prayers, and how to make their squares: and it seemeth to me (who haue seene the worke) to be more Magicall then Cabalisticall. One booke sheweth their prayers and fastings: the second, their square: the third, the vertue of the fourescore and nineteene names of God, which I saw in the hand of a Venetian Iew at Rome. There is another rule in these sects, called Suuach, of certaine Heremites which liue in woods, and solitarie places, feeding on nothing but hearbs and wilde fruits, and none can particularly know their life, because of this solitarinesse. Thus farre Leo,

Beniamin Tudelenfis^d telleth of a Nation neare to Mount Libanus, which he calleth Hbasissim, which varied from the ordinarie sort of Ismaelites, and followed a peculiar Prophet of their owne, whose word they obeyed, whether for life or for death. They called him Hbech al Hbasissin: his abode was at Karmos. They were a terror to all about them sawing asunder euen the Kings if they tooke any. They warded with the Francs (the Christians which then held Ierusalem) and the King of Tripolis. Their Dominion extended eight dayes iourney. Zachuth mentioneth one ^e Baba which about the 630. yeare of the Hegira, fained himselfe a Prophet sent of God vnder which colour hee gathered together a great Armie, wherewith he filled all Asia with slaughter and spoile, slaying Christians and ismaelites without difference: till Gathbeddin King of Gunia, ouerthrew and destroyed him and his Host.

Besides the former, they haue other Heremites of another sort: one is mentioned by Leo,^f who had fīue hundred horse, a hundred thousand sheepe, two hundred beeuies, and of offerings and almes betwixt foure and fīue thousand Ducates, his fame great in Asia and Afrike, his Disciples many, and fīue hundred people dwelling with him at his charges; to whom he enioyneth not penance, nor any thing: but giueth them certaine names of God, and biddeth them with the same to pray vnto him so many times a day. When they haue learned this, they returne home: hee hath a hundred Tents for strangers, his Cattell, and Familie: he hath foure Wiues, besides slaues, and (by them) many Children sumptuously apparelled. His fame is such that the King of Telesin is afraide of him: and hee payeth nothing to any: such veneration haue they towards him, reputing him a Saint. Leo saith hee spake with him, and that this Heremite shewed him Magick-bookes: and hee thought that this his great estimation did come by false working of the true science, to the Heremite termed Magick.

f Leo lib. 4.

But these Heremites we cannot so well reckon a Sect, as a religious Order; of which sort there are diuers in these Mahumetane Nations; as in our ensuing discourse shall appeare. To returne therefore to the consideration of the meanes vied to prevent the varietie of Sects among them: The Caliphs sought to remedie these inconueniences by their best policie. ^g Mouui about the yeare of our Lord 770. assembled a generall Councell of their learned men to consult about an Vniformitie; but they disagreeing among themselues, hee chose fixe men of the most learned, and shut them vp in a house together with their Scriptures, commanding them that out of those Copies disagreeing (as you haue heard) they should choote that should seeme best. These reduced the Doctrine of Mahomet into fixe bookes; forbidding any on paine of death to speake or write otherwise of their Law. But because the Arabians of subtile and piercing piercing wit, which studied Philosophie in the Vniuersities of Bagdet, Marocco, Cordoua, and other places, could not but see and discern the mad folly of the law, so palpable to any reasonable iudgement: it^m was therefore ordayned, that the Philosophie Lecture should bee taken away, and in place thereof they should reade the Alcoran; providing, for all these Students of their Law, their expenses out of the publike charge, and inhibiting all further studie in Philosophie: infomuch that they now (saith our Authour, who himselfe was a student in that Vniuersitie) repute him not a good Saracen, who is addicted to that studie. This Frier Richard mentioneth another Prophet, named Solem, had in estimation with these Babylonians, which was after slaine by the Tartars. Hee and Cardinall Cusanus affirme, that the Saracens of the East differ in their Alcoran from those of the West, making the first fiue chapters but one; and that they differ in the exposition thereof, and in the same Schooles or Vniuersities, one Sect condemneth another.

m Fr. Richard,
cap. 13.

But in these times the Mahumetane Professors are chiefly distinguished by the severall Nations; of which are foure principall: the Arabians, Persians, Turkes; and Tartars: to which wee may adde the Mogore, as a fift: whom the Iesuites (in their Epistles) report to haue from his former Mahumetisme, and to incline to Gentilisme. Of all these the Arabians are most zealous in their superstition; the Persians most agree to Reason and Nature; the Tartars are more Heathenish and simple; the Turkes are the fiercest and most Martiall. The Arabians account it their peculiar glorie, that Mahumet was of that Nation, and that Mecca and Medina are there seated: and therefore haue laboured in the dayes of their former puissance, by the sword, since, by their traffique and preaching, to spread their Mahumetisme through the World. Their first Seducers had possessed Syria and Palestina: Homar had added Egypt, and in a short time their Successors had preuailed in Asia, Africke, and Europe, as weⁿ haue before shewed.

n Sup. c. 2.

They haue beene such in Armes; and in diligence of Preaching they haue beene as forward, and so continue. Seuen hundred yeares since, Perimal reigning in Malabar, they there sowed their Tares: and the more easily to take those Ethnikes in their net, they tooke their Daughters in marriage; a matter of much consequence, in regard of their wealth, and practised of them to this day. They were Authors of great gaine vnto them by their trades, and traffique for spicerie: and were suffered to inhabit, and plant Colonies amongst them. By their meanes, Calicut, of a small thing, became a great and rich Citie. And Perimal himselfe was peruerted by them to their faith: who, zealously inclined to their perswasions, resolved to end his dayes at Mecca, and put himselfe on the voyage with some ships of Pepper, and other things of price, but perished by tempest in the way. From Malabar they passed to the Maldiax, and Zeilan, Sonatra, Iaua, Molucca, the Philippinaes, and in the Continent to Cambaia, Bengala, Siam, Malucca, Ior, Pam, and the huge Kingdome of China, preaching and planting their superstitions, as in the particular Histories of these Nations shall further appeare. They are in this respect so zealous, that euen the Arabian Marriners will stay behinde in the Countreies of the Ethnikes there to diuulge this their Sect: and in the yeere 1555. one of them pierced as farre as Iapon, there to haue laied this Leauen: but the Portugalls in these Easterne parts, treading in the same steps, by their traffique and preachings haue much hindered their proceedings. The Tartars, Persians, and Turkes, require longer and severall discourses in their due place; and first wee will speake of them which are first in this ranke, the greatest of all Mahumetane states, the Turkes.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Turkish Nation : their Originall, and Proceedings.

Although some may thinke that I haue beene so tedious in the relation of the Mahumetan opinions and superstitions, that, to speake any thing more, would seeme but as powring water into a full Sea: Yet, because there is in this World nothing certayne, but vncertaintie, it being diuine prerogatiue to bee yesterday, to day, the same for euer: and that this Saracenicall Religion hath sustayned her chances and changes according to the diuersitie of times and places, where it is and hath been professed: so doe I hold it fit, as wee haue seene the foundation, to behold also the frames and fabriques thereon builded, and from that Fountaine (or sinck-hole rather) of superstition, to leade you along the gutters and streames thence deriued. And because the Turkes are preeminent in ali those things which this profession accounteth eminent, it is meetest to giue them the first place here, which elsewhere take it: and after we haue set downe a brieue Historie of that Nation, and the proceedings of their state, to describe their theorie and opinions, and then their practise and rites of Religion. But before we come to the discouerie of their Religion, it is not amisse to search the beginning and increase of this Nation.

The name of Turkes signifieth (saith Chitranus) Sheepleards, or Heard-men: and such it seemeth was their ancient profession, as of the rest of the Scythians vnto this day. Nicephorus^a (and before him Smocatta, from whom Nicephorus borroweth it) speaketh of the Turkes, and placeth them about Bactria: their chiefe Citie hee calleth Taugast, which is supposed to bee the worke of Alexander. Their Religion hee saith at that time was to worship the Fire, Aire, Water, and Earth, which they adore, and sing Hymnes to. They acknowledge God the maker of Heauen and Earth, to whom they sacrifice, Horse, Kine, and Sheepe: they haue Priests which diuine of things to come. The Prince of Taugast they called the sonne of God: They worship Images. The Prince spendeth the night with seuen hundreth women. The Tartars haue now possessed the same Countrey; but long before, the same rites, as you may reade in our Historie of them. To deriue them (as some doe) from Treians and Iewes, is somewhat fatre^b ferched: nor is there much likelihood that they should receive their name of Turca^c a Persian Citie: the name is ancient, and applied by^d Mela and Plinie to a Nation of the Scythians, and their originall is accounted Scythian by the^e most and best Authors. Beniamin Tudelensis calleth them alway by the name Togarma. There are which bring a long Genealogie from Noahs Arke, vnto the Ottoman Familie: herein disagreeing, while some will haue Magog, others Tubal the Author of their Nation. Leunclavius^f reciteth and refuteth the same. Hee writeth the name Iurki, alleaging Herodotus for his Author: and citeth many Authors to proue that they descended of the Unni or Vngri, which were called Turkes, of which there were two sorts, one westerly in Pannonia, an other easterly neare Persia, called by the Persians Magers, he concludeth that the Unni or Iurchi came from Iuchra or Iuchria (whence the name Iuchri might easily bee deflected to Iurchi) beyond Tanais; and first after they had forsaken their owne Countrey, settled themselues neare Mæotis, from whence they passed to Chazaria, and some went westward to Pannonia, some eastward to Armenia, and thence into Persia.

Many probable Arguments might be brought, to proue that they descended of the Scythians, whose wandering shepheardly-life, both the name and their practise (in old times, and in some places still) expresseth. The first Expedition and militarie employment which I haue read of the Turkes, (except what the feare of them compelled the Persians vnto, as in their Historie we shall after see) was g vnder Varamus a rebellious Persian, aboue a thousand yeares since, when Cosroes was King of Persia, and Mauritius the Roman Emperor: at what time many of them were slaine, and many taken, which confessed, that famine had forced them to those warres, for which cause they marked themselues with a black Crosse; a ceremonie which they said they had learned of the Christians, thinking thereby to expell hunger. This hungrie Nation hath hath since beene a greedie and insatiate deuourer of Nations. Another expedition of theirs (which some reckon the first) was in the year 755. or after an other account, 844. at which time, passing through the Georgian Countrey, then called Iberia; they first seized on a part of the greater Armenia, which their posteritie holdeth at this day, called of them Turcomania. In this wide and spacious Countrey they romed vp and downe, without certaine habitation, a long time with their families and heardes of cattell, like the ancient Scythian Nomades, and the Tartars, and the same Turcoman Nation at this day. Their language also, as Megiserus in his Turkish Grammar sheweth, hath great affinitie, with the Tartarian, as also with the Persian (neare whom, and sometimes, as now will appeare, amongst them, they liued:) But from the Arabike it differeth altogether. Yet in their holies they most vse the Arabike by reason of the Alcoran written in that language: likewise they vse the Arabike letters and pricks.

When as the Saracens Empire grew now vnweldie, through her owne greatnesse, and the Soldans, which were wont to conquer for the Chaliph, beganne now to shiare with him in his large Dominion: Mahomet (then Sultan or Soldan of Persia) was for this cause hardly beiet with the Chaliph of Babylon; assayed also on the other side by the Indians. Hee sought to strengthen himselfe against these enemies with the new friendship of these Turkes, of whom hee obtrayned for his aide three thousand hardie Souldiers, ^h vnder the conduct of Togra Muculet, the sonne of Mikeil, a valiant Captaine, and chiefe of the Selzuccian Tribe or Familie, whom the Greeks commonly call Tangrolipix, and some Selduc, or Sadoc. By the helpe of this Tangrolipix, Mahomet the Persian Sultan ouercame Pisafiris the Chaliph. The Turkes, after this warre, desiring leaue to passe ouer the Riuer Araxis to their Countrey-men, were both denied, and threatned, if they againe should seeke to depart. Whereupon they with-drew themselves into the Desart of Carauonitis; liuing there, and thence making roads into the Countries adioyning. Mahomet sent against them twentie thousand men, which by a sodaine surprize in the night, Tangrolipix defeated, and furnished himselfe with their spoiles. And now durst Tangrolipix shew his face in the field, where his Armie was increased by the resort of lawlesse persons; seeking after spoile. Mahomet on the other side, impatient of his losse, put out the eyes of the Captaines, which had the leading of the Armie, and threatned to attire the Souldiers, that had fled, in womens apparell; and raising an other great Armie, set forward against Tangrolipix, who was now fiftie thousand strong, and was presently made stronger by those threatned Souldiers, who fled from their Lord vnto him. They met at Ispahan (a Citie of Persia) and there Mahomet falling with his horse, brake his neck: vpon which mischance both armies comming to agreement, by common consent, proclaimed Tangrolipix Sultan in his stead; and so made him King of Persia, and the Dominion thereunto pertayning, which was done Anno 1030.

Tangrolipix opened the passages of Araxis to the rest of his Countrey-men, whom hee exalted to the highest places of command, so bridling the Persians, and he and his receiuing in their new Conquests the yoke of the Mahometan Religion. Ambition inciting him to further exploits, he warred also vpon Pisafiris the Chaliph: and after diuers ouerthrowes, slue him, and seised on his state. He sent Cutlu-Muses his Kinsman against the Arabians, by whom he was discomfited: whereat aggriued, hee went against them himselfe, but with like successe. Hee sent Asan his brothers sonne to inuade Media, who in that enterprize was slaine: he sent againe Habraime Alim his brother with an Armie of an hundred thousand men, who tooke prisoner Liparites Governour of Iberia, (who came to aide the Emperours Lieutenant in Media) whom Tangrolipix frankly set free, and sent his Embassadour to the Emperour, proudly demanding him to become his subiect.

Such haps, and such hopes had Tangrolipix, the first Turke that euer was honoured with a Diademe. His sonne ^k and successour Axan tooke Diogenes the Emperour of Constantinople prisoner in the field: But Cutlu-Muses with his Cofin Melech (who in his Fathers dayes had fled into Arabia) rebelling, and taking armes against him; as Axan was readie to ioyne battell with them, the Caliph (who retayned the highest place still in their superstition, although dispoyled of his Temporalties) setting aside all his Pontificiall formalitie, whereby he was bound not to goe out of his owne house, thrust himselfe betweene these Armies: and with the reuerence of his place and person, together with his perswasions, moued them to desist, and to stand to his arbitrement: which was, that Axan the Sultan should still enjoy his Dominions entirely: And that Cutlu-Muses, and his sonnes aided by him, should inuade the Constantinopolitan Empire, and should be absolute and only Lords of whatsoeuer they could gaine thereof. There was neuer any thing to that impietic more commodious, nor to our Religion more dangerous. For by this meanes Cutlu-Muses with his sonnes in a short time conquered all Media, with a great part of Armenia, Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia; which their designes were much furthered by treasons and dissensions in the Greeke Empire. Axan the Sultan also gaue to his Kinsmen Ducat and Melech, the gouernement of Aleppo, and Damasco, with the adioyning parts of Syria, by that meanes to inroach vpon the Egyptian Caliph, which accordingly they in a short time did.

k The memorable Expedition of the Christian Princes into the holy Land. Historia belli sacri G. Tyrj. and many others write at large of these Warres.

But these their haughtie attempts were stayed, and being now in the flower, were cut shorter by that fortunate Expedition^k of the Christian Princes of the West, agreed vpon at the Councell of Claremont, and performed by Gualter Serfauier; Peter the Heremite, first and principall mouer hereof; Godfrey Duke of Lorraine, with his two brethren Eustace and Baldwin, of the honorable house of Buillon; Hugh, surnamed the Great, brother to Philp the French King; Raymond and Robert Earles of Flanders; Robert of Normandie sonne to William the Conquerour; Stephen de Valois Earle of Chartiers; Ademar the Popes Legate; Bokemund Prince of Tarentum, and others, conducting as the most receiued opinion is, three hundred thousand Souldiers, in defence of the Christian Faith against the Turkes and Saracens, which both ouerthrew the Turkes in the lesser Asia, and recouered also the holy Land. The Principallitie, or (as some stile it) the Kingdome of Antioch was giuen by common consent to Bobemund Prince of Tarentum; the Kingdome of Ierusalem, to Robert: who (hearing of his Fathers death) refused it in hope of England; and Godfrey of Buillon was saluted King.

The Turkes and Saracens seeking to recouer that which they had lost, lost also themselves; a hundred thousand of them being slaine in one battell: the like successe had the Turkes after against Conrade the Emperour, at Meander: leauing for trophees and triumphall arches to the Christians, huge heapes; or hills rather, of their bones. Hereunto helped the dissensions among the Turkes, and diuisions of their state among diuers brethren. The Egyptians also paid tribute to the Christians: which Dargan the Sultan detayning, he was by Almericus the King of Ierusalem ouerthrowne in battell. Noradine the Turke, King of Damasco, sent thither also Saracon to aide Sanar the Sultan (before expulsed) to recouer his state from this Dargan: but hee hauing won certaine townes kept them to himselfe, so that Sanar betooke him to the patronage of Almericus, who ouerthrew Saracon in battell, and after besieged and tooke Alexandria, and Pelusium, seeking also to conquer Egypt to himselfe; but indeede (as the euent proued) so subuerted his owne state. For Sanar sought helpe of Saracon, and for feare of both their forces, Almericus left Egypt. Saracon, moued with ambition, treacherously slue the Sultan, and by the Caliph was appointed Sultan, the first of the Turkes that euer enjoyed the same, to whom Saladine his Nephew succeeded. He (not respecting the maiestie of the Caliph, as the Sultans before had done) struck out his b:aines with his horse-mans mace, and rooted out all his posteritie; the better to assure himselfe and his Turkish successors in the possession of that kingdome, vnder whom it continued to the time of the Mamalukes. Noradin also the Turke being dead, the Nobilitie disdainig the gouernment of Melechfala his son (yet but a youth) betrayed^l that state vnto Saladine. And thus did he hem in the Kingdome of Ierusalem on both sides: and not long after, Aleppo was betraied vnchristianly into his hands by a Traitor, which gouerned the same for the Christians: Neither was it long, before hee had (through discord and treason amongst the Christians) obtained^m Ierusalem it selfe, Anno 1187. and after Ascalon and Antioch also: Neither could the Christians of the West euer recouer the possession of that Kingdome; the cause continuing the same, which before had lost it, viz. dissention and treacherie: as the examples of Richard and Edward (first of those names) Kings of this Land doe shew.

About 1202. yeares after Christ, the Tartars (of whom in their due place) having conquered East, West, North, and South, among others ouerthrew that Togrian Kingdome of the Turkes in Persia, 170. yeares before founded by Tangrolipix. The Turkes which remained (driven to seeke shelter from this violent storme) fled out of Persia into Asia the lesse: where Cutlu Muses his successors (their Countrie-men) inioyed some part of the Countrie. And there many of them arriuing vnder the conduct of Aladin the sonne of Kei Hufren descended also of the Selzuccian Familie in Persia, taking the oportunitie offered by the discord of the Latines with the Greekes, and the Greekes among themselues, seized vpon Cilicia, with the Countries thereabout; and there first at Sebastia, and afterward at Iconium, created their new Kingdome, bearing the name of the Aladin * Kings or Sultans.

The Tartars vnder the conduct of Haalon, sent by Margo the Great Cham, having conquered and starued the Chaliph of Babylon (as is said before) ouerthrew the Turkish Kingdome of Damasco, and rased ^a Aleppo; the other arme of this faire and farre spreading Tree being surprized by the Mameluke slaues, who after Haalons departure recouered Syria and Palæstina, and were againe with great slaughter disposed of the same by Cassanes ^b a Tartarian Prince, who repaired Ierusalem and gaue it to the Christians of Armenia, and other the Easterne Countries. But Cassanes retyring into Persia to pacifie new broiles, the Sultan recouered the same; the Christians of the West neglecting the iust defence thereof, specially through the pride and contention of Boniface the Pope (contrarie to his name) filling a great part of Europe with faction and quarrells.

The Turkes in Asia paid tribute to the Tartar Cham, till (succession in the bloud of Aladin failing) this Kingdome was diuersly rent, euery one catching so much as his might could bestow on his ambition. The greatest of these sharers was ^c one Caraman Alusfrinus, who tooke vnto himselfe the Citie Iconium, with all the Countrie of Cilicia, and some part of the frontiers of Lycaonia, Pamphylia, Caria, and the greater Phrygia, as farre as Philadelphia; all which was after of him called Caramania. Next neighbor & sharer to him was Saruchan: of whom Ionia Maritima is called Saruchanili. The greatest part of Lydia, with some part of the greater Mysia, Troas, & Phrygia fell to the sons of Omer, which countrie is called Bolli. These all were of the Selzuccian familie. But the foundation of far higher fortunes were then laid much lower by diuine providence, exalting Ottoman of the Oguzian tribe or familie, who then held one only poore Lordship, called Suguta in Bythinia, not farre from Olympus, giuen before to his father Ertogrul in meed of good seruice: which he increasing by winning somewhat from the weaker Christians his neighbors, afterwards erected into a Kingdome which hath deuoured so great a part of the world, as is this day subiect to the Turkish greatness. When as the Tartars chased (as is said) the Turkes out of their Persian kingdome, which Tangrolipix had there established, one Solyman a Turke (of the Oguzian Tribe) raigned in Machan ^d over a small Realme, which for feare of those Tartars hee also forlooke, and with a thousand of his people, fled, and seated himselfe in a part of Armenia about Erzerum; and after, vpon some better hopes, resolved to returne againe into Persia, but in seeking to passe the Riuer Euphrates, was drowned, and his followers disperfed following their ancient trade of wandering heards men. He left behinde him foure Sonnes Sencur, Teken, Iundogdis, Ertogrul the father of Ottoman, and Dunder. The two eldest returned into Persia. The two yongest stayed, and with them 400. families, with their tents and carts, their moueable houses. And insinuating into the Sultan Aladins good liking, by sute and desert, this Ertogrul was rewarded, as ye haue heard, being made Lord of Suguta, and Warden of those Marches: and liued there in securitie, till he was of great yeares, and had seen much alteration in that state. He died Anno 1289. hauing liued ninetie three yeares. And him succeeded by common consent, as Lord over the Oguzian Turkes, his sonne Ottoman, saluted therefore by the name of Osman Beg, or Lord Osman. He first got into his subiection a great part of the Castles and Forts of the greater Phrygia; equally protecting his subjects both Christians and Turkes: he conquered Nice, the name whereof is reuerend for the first Generall Councell of Christendome; and Aladin the second, Sultan of Iconium sent vnto him a faire ensigne, a Sword and Robe, with ample Charters, that whatsoeuer hee tooke from the Christians, should bee his owne: and that publike prayers should bee said in their Temples for his health, which was of him humbly accepted, and such prayers made by one Dürsu, whom hee had appointed Bishop and Iudge of Carachisar, Anno 1300. Neapolis was made his seat Royall. He fished so well in the troubled streame of the Greeke Empire, that hee subdued the most part of Phrygia, Mysia, and Bythinia; and Prusa after a long siege was yeilded vnto his Sonne Orchanes, and made the Royall seat of the Ottoman-Kings, where Ottoman himselfe was buried 1328. His Sonne Orchanes succeeded: Aladin his Brother contenting himselfe with a priuate life, who after built two Mahumetan Churches, and another at Prusa. Orchanes also erected in Nice a sumptuous Temple, appointing a Preacher to preach to the people every Friday, and two faire Abbies: in the one of which, he with his owne hands serued the strangers and poore the first dinner. Hee was the first that builded Abbies among the Turkes, followed herein by most of his Successors. He got Nicomedia, and the Townes adioyning. Hee also wanne all Charasia, and at his returne built a Church and Abbey at Prusa, placing therein Religious men, sought out with all diligence. His sonne Solyman first of the Turkes that possessed any foot in Europe, crossed the Hellespont, and wanne the Castle Zemeenic, and after that Madinus, receptacles for the Turkes, which came ouer in multitudes; he transporting Christians into Asia, to dwell in their roome. And after, he wanne Gallipoli, spoiling the Countrie, and winning from the Greekes who were negligent in preventing or remedying this danger. But Solyman dying with a fall, his old father Orchanes liued not two moneths after; a Prince very zealous in his superstition, who besides building diuers Churches, Abbies, Colledges, and Cells, allowed Pensions to all such as could in the Church say the booke of Mahomets law by heart, and competent maintenance to the Iudges that they should not sell iustice.

Amurath which succeeded, exceeded him in this blinde zeale. He kept in awe the Turkish Princes in Asia, and wan many Townes and Castles in Thracia: and amongst others, Adrianople the seat Royall of the Turkish Kingdome, vntill Constantinople was after subdued. This was done 1362. He ordayned, that euery fift Captiue of the Christians aboue fiftene yeares old, should be taken vp for the Turkish King, which were distributed among the Turkish husband-men in Asia, to learne the Turkish Language, Religion, and Manners; and after two or three yeares, choice was made of the better sort, to attend vpon the Princes person, and for his warres called Janizars, that is, new Souldiers: which Order after grew to great account, and is yet a principal pillar of the Turkish greatnesse. Hee ouerthrew Aladin the Caramanian King, which made the other Princes of the Selzuccian Familie to submit themselues vnto him. And busying himselfe in his new Conquests in Europe, after a great victorie obtayned against Lazarus, Despot of Seruia, as hee viewed the flaine carcaffes, was flaine of a wounded and halfe-dead Souldier; who, comming staggering as it were to begge his life, stabbed this great Couquerour, with a dagger, hidden vnder his garments.

Baiazet his sonne and successour oppresseth most of the Mahumetan Princes in Asia, inuadeth Valachia, besiegeth Constantinople eight yeeres, ouerthroweth the King of Hungarie in battell, subdueth the Caramanian Kingdome; and amidst his aspiring fortunes, is by Tamerlane deprived of his Kingdome and libertie, shut vp and carried about in an yron Cage; against the barres whereof he beat out his braines, Anno 1399. Mahomet his sonne (after much warre with his brethren) wholly possesseth the Ottoman Kingdome both in Europe and Asia, almost quite ouerthrowne before by Tamerlane. Hee tooke the Caramanian King, and his sonne Mustapha prisoners: who became his Vassals, as did also the Valachian Prince; he died 1422. Amurath his successor winneth Thessalonica, the greatest part of Ætolia, infecteth the Princes of Athens, Phocis, and Bœotia, to become his Tributaries, oppresseth the Mahumetan Princes of Asia, subdueth Seruia, spoileth Hungarie. He after retyred himselfe to a Monastical

 a He inuading Epirus, at the siege of Croia died 1450.

Mahomet was there saluted Sultan in the field, a man equally vnequall and troublefome to the Christian and Mahumetan Princes. Hee wanne Constantinople the twentieth of May 1453. the taking whereof, is by Leonardus Chiensis,^b declared in a Treatise composed of that vnhappy Argument, and likewise by Cardinall Isidorus Rubenus. He wanne Trabezond, the Imperiall seat of another Christian Empire, Anno 1460. Hence he was called Emperor (a name not giuen to the Turkish Kings.) He burnt Athens, Anno 1452. He obtained Epirus and Mysia, Anno 1436. and did much harme against the Soldan and Mamalukes. He conquered Eubœa and Illyricum, in the yeare 1474. ouerthrew the Persians; and in the last act of his bloudie life he tooke (by Achmetes his Captaine) Otranto or Hydruntum in Italy, with no small terrour to all Italy. He was fir-named Great, and is said to haue conquered two hundred Cities, twelue Kingdomes, and two Empires: which he left to Baiazet his sonne, Anno 1481. His brother Zemes was forced to flee into Italy, where a great summe of money^c was yearely allowed the Pope to keepe him for his owne securitie, and for loue of his brother, whom Alexander the Bishop is reported^f to poyson, as some thinke, by composition with the grand Seignior. Hee had some warres against the Mamalukes, some against the Christians, more vnnaturall against his brother, but most most vnnaturall and monstrous against his sonne Selym. His conquests were in Cilicia, Caramania, and Peloponnesus

Selym, not content to haue thrust his father out of the Throne, aspired to a further effect of aspiring ambition, depriuing him of life, from whom himselfe had received it. To this end he corrupted a Jew, Baiazets Physitian (whom Knolles calleth Hamon; but Menauino an eye-witnesse, nameth him Vstarabi) who with the powlder of beaeren Diamonds poysoned him; and for reward, when he claimed Selyms promise, had his head stricken off in the Tyrants presence. So much did he hate the traytour, whose treason he so much loued. The bodie of Baiazet was embalmed, and interred at Constantinople, in a beautifull Sepulchre neere to the Meschit which himselfe had built, and Priests were appointed, which should euery day pray for his soule. Two of his Pages did Selym put to death, for wearing black and mourning apparell for their Masters death: and three others (whereof Menauino was one) hardly, by entreatie of Selyms daughters and some Bassaes, escaped.

This Viper, that spared not his father, proceeded with bloudie hands to make an end of the rest of his Ottoman-kindred, beginning with fise sonnes of his brethren, and adding the remnant, as hee could bring them into his power. And hauing thus founded his throne in bloudie cruelties of his owne at home, no maruell if abroad his proceedings were no lesse cruell and bloudie towards his enemies. Of whom, the first which offered himselfe (after his domestical warres appeased) was Ismael the^h Sophie; who with thirtie thousand Persian horsemen gaue battaile to Selym (notwithstanding his three hundred thousand Turkes) where was fought in Armenia, neere Coy, a terrible and mortall battaile betwixt them: the Turkes at last (very hardly) preuailing, by helpe of their great Ordinance: but so little cause had they to reioyce of their victory, that this is reckoned among the dismall and distastrous dayes, tearmed by the Turkes, The only day of Doome. The nextⁱ yeare he entred againe into the Persian Confinnes, and there tooke Ciamassum, ouerthrew Aladeules the Mountaine King, who raigned in Taurus and Antitaurus, and slew him. But his most fortunate attempts were against Campson Gaurus, the Egyptian Soldan, and his forces of Mamalukes, whom by his multitudes (notwithstanding their fame and valour, not inferiour to any souldiers of the World) he ouercame; the Soldan himselfe being left dead in the place, August. 7. 1516.

Neither had Tomumbeius, his successer, any better successfe, but succeeded as well in his fortune, as to his Scepter, who by reason of his owne, and power of his enemy, lost both his life and Kingdome; all Egypt and Syria thereby accrewing to the Ottoman. Selym from theaceforth purposing to turne his forces from the Sunne-rising against the Christians in the West, came to his owne Sunne-set, the period of his raigne and

His disease was a Canker in the backe (eating out a passage for his Viperous soule) which made him rotte while he liued, and become a stinking burthen to himselfe and others. He died in September, 1520. hauing before bequeathed bloudshed and desolation to the Christians, and ordained Solyman, his sonne and heire, executor of that his heillish Testament: And further, to excite him thierunto, had left him the liuely counterfeit of himselfe, with sundrie bloudie Precepts annexed: His title therein writren, was, Sultan Selym Othoman, King of Kings, Lord of all Lords, Prince of all Princes, Sonne and Nephew of God. We may adde, Heire apparant to the Diuell, that breathed his last in bloud, resembling him that was¹ a Murderer from the beginning.

A Continuation of the Turkish Warres and Affaires: together with the succession of the Great Turkes, till this present yeare 1612.

Solyman, sir-named the Magnificent, succeeded his father Selym in place, and surmounted him exceedingly in exploits. Belgrade, (which ominous name did presage happinesse vnto him in his Warres and Proceedings) was the beginning of his Conquests, wonne by the Turkes, August 29. 1521. ^a Rhodes receueth him on Christmas day, 1522, but withall exileth both Cheere, Christmas, and Christians. He inuadeth ^b Hungarie, and in the field discomfiteth and killeth Lewes, and slayeth or captiueth two hundred thousand Hungarians in that Expedition, 1526. He entreth Hungarie the second time, 1529. and (after some butcheries therein) marcheth to Vienna in Austria, where he left fourescore thousand of his Turkes, and then with shame and anger returned. In the yeare 1532. he returneth with an Armie of fivie hundred thousand men; to whom Charles the fift opposed himselfe, and the Christian forces, in greater numbers then hath in many ages beene seene, mustering in his Armie at Vienna two hundred and threescore thousand men, whereof fourescore and ten thousand foot-men, and thirtie thousand horse-men were old souldiers, to whom Solyman did not, or durst not, bid battaile. Poore Hungarie rues it meane while, whether he getteth or loseth in Austria, being made his through-fare as he went and came.

After this he trieth his successe against the Persian, where he taketh Tauris and Babylon, with the Countries of Assyria and Media, Anno 1534. each of which had sometimes beene Ladie of the World. At incredible costs he prepared a Fleet in the Red sea, 1537. and taking Aden and Zibyth, two pettie Kingdomes in Arabia, by his forces ^c besieged Dium, a Castle of the Portugals in the East Indies, but without his wished successe. For the Portugals still retaine their Indian Seas and Traffique, and not onely freed that their Castle from Turkish bondage, but had meanes to fortifie it better, by the Ordinance which the Turkes, in their hastie flight, had left behind. A more dangerous plot did Solyman, meane while, contriue against Christendome, preparing his forces to inuade Italy, and to that end was come to Aulona. an Hauen in Macedonia, with two hundred thousand Souldiers, where Barbarussa and Lutzis Bassa. his great Admirall, met him with his Fleet, to transport his Armie. But Solyman first employed these Sea-Forces on the coast of Italy, and tooke Castrum; his horsemen (which hee had sent ouer in great Palendars) carried away the People, Castell and Substance, betwixt Brundusium and Farentum, fortie miles space; all the Countrey of Otranto terrified with feare of a greater tempest. But the Venetians turned it from the rest of Italy vpon themselues (notwithstanding their league) by vnseasonable exacting of that

Sea.

Sea-courtesie, the vailing of the bonnets or top-sailes of some Turkish Gallies vnto them, as Lords of that Sea: for which neglect some of them were funke. ^d Auyria also, the Emperours Admirall, had surpris'd some of the Turkes stragling Fleet, and after held cruell fight with twelue great Gallies full of Ianizaries and choise men, whom he ouerthrew and tooke. But the Ianizaries that were left, cast their scimitars ouer-board, left such choice weapons should come to the Christians hands. Solyman conuerting his Forces against the Venetians, for the indignities mentioned, had almost fallen into the hands of the Mountaine-Theeues, which liued in the Acroceraunian Hills: who in a strange resolution had conspired to kill him in his Tent, and had almost (to the wonder of the world) in a night, by vnknowne wayes, suddenly effected it, had not the cracking of a bough discovered their Captaine, who in a tree was taking view of the Campe, how to bring to passe his desperat designes. This their Captaine, (by name Damianus) was, after confession hereof, torne in pieces, and those wilde Mountainers (living on robberie, without Law or Religion) were, like wilde beasts, hunted to destruction.

The Turkes inuaded Corfu, whence they carried sixteene thousand of the Islanders captiues. They likewise, in their returne, committed great spoyle in Zante, and Cythera, sacked Agina, Paros, and other Islands in the Archipelago; bringing Naxos vnder Tribute. Barbarussa sacked Botrotus, a Venetian Citie: The like did Vstrif to Obroatium, and the Castle of Nadin. Nauplium also, and Epidaurus were besieged. But Ferdinand (who had intituled himselfe King of Hungarie, after Lewis his death) receiued a greater disgrace in Hungarie by the Turkish forces, then befell the Venetians in all their losses; Cazzianer (the Generall of the Christians) shamefully fleeing, and betraying his associates to the Turkish crueltie. The next yeare, 1538. Barbarussa chafeth the Christian Fleet, in which the Emperours, Venetians, and the Popes forces were ioyned.

In the yeare 1541. Solyman againe inuadeth Hungarie, professing himselfe Protector of the yong King, which Iohn, late King of Hungarie (who had held long warres with Ferdinand about that Title) had left behind him his heire and successor. But vnder colour of protection, he maketh himselfe Lord of Buda, the chiefe Citie, turning the Cathedrall Church into a Meschit; and maketh Hungarie a Turkish Prouince, bestowing Transyluania, and what he pleased, on the Orphan. Two yeares after he rentreth Hungarie, and taketh Strigonium: turning the Christian Temples into Mahometan; sacrificing there for his victorie, as he had done at Buda. He entred also into ^e Alba Regalis, (where the Hungarian Kings lye entomb'd) another chiefe Citie of that Kingdome, and slew the Magistrates. I speake not all this while of the spacious Countries in Africa, which, from the Riuer Mulvia, he added to his Dominions: the Kingdomes of Algier, Tremisen, Tunes, Tripoli, &c. being annexed to his Turkish Soueraigntie. Howbeit, Tunes, by aide of Charles the Emperour, somewhat recouered her selfe, but breathed out againe her last gaspe of libertie, in the dayes of Selym his sonne. And thus was ^f Solyman victorious and happie, otherwhere victorious and vn-happie, when he was forced to darreine battaile against his owne bowels, and hauing murdered Mustapha his eldest sonne (the hopefullest branch in Turkish estimation that euer grew out of the Ottoman stocke) he warred against Basazet, another of his sonnes; whom, with foure of his children, he procured to be done to death in Persia. And after much domesticall trouble, in his seuenth Expedition into Hungarie (his fleet in the siege of Malta being before, with great disgrace, repulsed) he died at the siege of Zigeth, the fourth of September 1566.

^f Solyman as vnaturall to his children, as Selym was to his father Basazet.

Selym, the onely sonne which the bloudie father had left aliue, succeeded in the Throne, not in the prowesse and valour of his father. Neither hath any Turkish Sultan, since his dayes, led their Forces in person, but committed it to their Deputies and Generals; except once, when Mahomet the third had almost lost his Armie and himselfe. Yet did this Selym, by his Bassaes, make himselfe Lord of Cyprus, and also of the Kingdome of Tunis. But this sweet meat was souerely sawced by his exceeding losse in the Sea-fight betwixt Haly Bassa, Admirall of the Turkes, ^h and Don Iohn of Austria, Generall of the Fleet, set forth by the Pope, Spaniard, and Venetian, 1571. wherein

^h Our gracious Soueraign King Iames hath written a Poem of this battell, wherein an hundred three score and one Gallies were taken, fortie sunke or burnt, and of Gallioes, and other small Vessels, were taken about threescore. The Turkish Admirall was then slaine. Wittily did a Turke descant vpon this losse of the Turkes, and their gaine of Cyprus, comparing this to the shauing of a mans beard, which would grow againe: that, to the losse of an arme, which, once cut off, cannot be renewed. Lately, Tunes came in, and Selym went out of this Turkish Soueraigntie, both in manner together, 1574.

Amurath, his heire, began his Empire with the slaughter of his five brethren. The mother of Solyman (one of that number) slew her selfe with a dagger, for anguish of that losse. He in viewing a new Gallie, by the breach of a Peece, hardly escaped death, thirtie of his company being slaine. And because the Plague was exceeding hor, hee by deuotion sought to appease diuine anger: and therefore prohibited all vse of Sodomie, Blasphemie, and Polygamie, and himselfe put out five hundred women out of his Seraile. In a private habit he visited the Markets, and hanged vp the hoorders of come. He by the Tartars inuaded Polonia: And, Henry of France secretly leauing that Kingdome of Polonia, he wrote vnto them to chuse Stephen Battor for their King; in which letters he called himselfe, God of the Earth, Governour of the whole World, Messenger of God, and faithfull seruant of the great Propbet: which wrought so much with the Nobilitie, that either they would not, or durst not doe otherwite, howsoeuer Maximilian had bene before by many of them chosen.

i Minado's Historie of the warres betwixt the Turks and Persians, translated by Abraham Hartwell
in nine books, relateth these things at

Tamas the Persian (at the same time dying) bequeathed his Crowne to Ismael his sonne, whom Aidere, his brother, seeketh to depriue, but is therefore himselfe depriued of that ambitious head, which he sought to adorne with the Crowne; and Ismael adding the slaughter of eight his yonger brethren, ascendeth the Throne, which, together with his life, he lost, by like vnatural treacherie of Periaconcona his sister, the foure and twentieth of November, 1577.

Mahomet his brother succeeded in this troublesome State, which Amurath the Turke (in these troubled waters) thought fit time for himselfe to fish for. Hereunto also helped the hatred and ciuill broyles in Persia, for the head of Periaconcona, presented to Mahomet, with the haire disheuelled on a Launce, and for other vncouth and bloudie spectacles; Sahamal, and Leuent Oglu (two Georgian Lords) seeking also innovations. Amurath therefore, in the yeare 1578. sent Mustapha Bassa, which had lately conquered Cyprus, with an Arme of an eleuen hundred thousand, into Persia: who, in the first battaile he had with them, slew five thousand, and tooke three thousand Persians: and to strike that Nation with terrour, commanded a bulwarke to be framed of those heads: but by an exceeding tempest, which lasted foure dayes together (whereby the Heauens seemed to melt themselves in teares for the Persians losse, and with Lightnings to shew that indignation against the Turkes, which in their thundering Dialect they aloud vttered) there grew such horror to their minds from above, and such sicknesse to their bodies, from those putrified carkasses beneath, that Mustapha was forced to remoue, missing fortie thousand of his first musters. After he had fortified the Armenian Castle of Teflis, his Armie being driuen to shifts for lack of victuals, ten thousand of his foragers were slaine by the Persians, who were recompenced with like slaughter by Mustapha, that came vpon them whiles they were busie about the spoyle, and spoyled the spoylers. In passing ouer the Riuer Canac, hee lost fourescore thousand Turkes, which the Riuer seemed to take for Custome (as it had many of the Persians in the late conflict) whereof his violent current was a greedy and cruell exactor. Mustapha erected a Fortresse in Eres, and tooke Sumachia, chiefe Citie of Siruan (Derbent offering her selfe to the Turke) and then returning into Natolia. But Emir Hamse Mirise, the Persian Prince, recovered, after his departure, both Eres and Sumachia, slew and captiued the Tartars, thirtie thousand of whom were newly come to the Turkes aide. He rased Sumachia euen with the ground. The next yeare Mustapha fortified Chars in three and twentieth dayes, wherein they were hindered with Snowes on the five and twentieth of August, although it standeth in fortie foure Degrees. Anno 1580. Sinan Bassa was chosen Generall for the Persian Warre; who, as he departed from Teflis, lost seuen thousand of his people, besides such as the Georgians

Georgians and Persians, together with the spoyle, carried away. This was earnest, the rest was but sportfull shewes of warre, in trayning his souldiers; after which he returned. In 1583, Ferat Bassa was sent Generall: but little was done, till Osman Bassa, a new Generall, 1585. tooke Tauris, the ancient Ecbatana (as Minadoris of opinion.) But the Persian Prince, carried with indignation, reuenged this losse on the Turkes with his owne hands, slaying Caraemit Bassa, Generall in the place of Osman; then sicke, and gaue his head (as opima spolia) to one of his followers; and afterwards an Sanceran slew twentie thousand Turkes. Osman died of sicknesse; and the Persian Prince (the Morning-starre of that Easterne State) was soone after murdered. In that dismall yeare 1588. Ferat tooke Genge: fiftene thousand houses, seuen Temples, and fise and twentie great Innes were burned in Constantinople, the tumultuous Ianizaries not suffering the fire to be quenched. An Impost was lenied of the subiects, to satisfie the pay due to the souldiours for the Persian warre, which raised these stirres. Yea, the Priests dissuaded the people from those new payments, and perswaded them to maintaine their ancient Liberties. shut vp their Melchits, intermitted their Orisons: and the Great Turke was forced to call in his Mandats, and deliver the authors of that counsell (whereof the Beglerbeg of Græcia was one) to the Ianizaries furie, who made Tennis-balls of their heads. In 1592. Whitz, chiefe Citie of Croatia, was yeelded to the Turke. The next yeare Siseg was besieged, but relieued by the Christians, who slew eighteene thousand Turkes, and tooke their Tents; yet was it soone after taken by the renewed forces of the Turkes. Sinan tooke Vesprinium in Hungarie and Palotta, but their losse was farre greater then their gaines; which continuing, and a broyle of the Ianizaries added thereto, brought ^k Amurath into melancholie and sicknesse, whereof he died, the eighteenth of January, 1595. Transyluania, Valachia, and Moldauia, hauing before reuolted from him to Sigismund, who was entituled their Prince. This Amurath in a letter to Queene Elizabeth, entituleth himselfe, By the mercie of God free from all sinne, with all height of grace made possessour of great blessednesse aboue the 72. Lawes of the world.

Mahomet his sonne succeeded; who inuiting his nineteene brethren to a Feast, sent them to learne his fathers death in the other world, accompanied thither with ten of Amuraths women, from whom issue was feared, which with drowning them hee preuented. Much adoe he had with his Ianizaries at home, much losse in his Dominions abroad, for which caute he sent for Ferat Bassa out of Hungarie, and strangled him, and sent Sinan, his emulous corriuall, in his room, whom the Transyluanian Prince ouerthrew in battaile, and after chased him ouer a Bridge, which he made a mile in length for his Armie to passe ouer Danubius, with great losse of his people. His Bridge the fire and water diuided betwixt them; and the conceit of this ill successie (as was thought) procured his death soone after. In the yeare 1597. Mahomet in his owne person enterprised these warres, and not farre from Agria, on the sixteenth of October, fought a cruell battaile with the Christians, wherein (had not Couetousnesse, rightly called the root of all euill, hindered) had bene atchieued the most glorious victorie against those Barbarians, that euer Christendome was blessed with. Mahomet himselfe for feare, seeing his Ordinance (an hundred fourescore and ten great Peeeces) raken, and his men slaine in multitudes, fled with Ibrahim Bassa towards Agria, shedding teares by the way, which hee wiped off his bloudie face with a peece of greene Silke, supposed to be a peece of Mahomet's garment, carried with him as a holy Relique. But whiles the Christians were now halfe Conquerours, by greedie turning to the spoile, their victorie was wholly lost, and twentie thousand of them slaine, who had slaine threescore thousand Turkes. Master Barton the English Embassadour, was present in the fight and Master Thomas Glouer also, who in a large iournall of this Expedition, testifieth that the Great Turke was in great feare; but being animated by some about him, he tooke his bow and arrowes and slew three Christians therewith. Those former reports he mentioneth not. Not long after, the Bassa of Buda was taken, and the Bassa of Bosna, with some thousands of Turkes slaine, Anno 1599. Yet did not all his losses in the West by the Christians vex the Great Sultan so much, as a rebellion ^m raised in the East, which many yeares continued. Cusabin Bassa of Caramania k To this Amurath was M. Hareborn her Maiesties Embassador: and after M. Barton: of which, see Hak. to 2. part. c. pag. 293. you may reade of the Turkes officers, reuenues, payments, forces, &c. Also the Letters of the Great Turke to the Queene, and of the Sultanesse, and of Sinan Bassa, and many other things worthy obseruation. manta rose in armes against his Master, and hauing now done great matters, his souldiers before false to their Prince, became now also false to him: he fleeing, was after taken and tortured to death. His rebellion out-liued him, and was maintained by one, called the Scriuano, who ouerthrew Mehemet Bassa in the field, and the second time, in the yeare 1601. ouerthrew him with his Arnie of fiftie thousand, and foraged all the Countrey almost as farre as Aleppo, proclaiming himselfe the defender of the Mahometan faith, and soone after gaue the Bassa a third ouerthrow. The Turkes Embassadour, sent into Persia to demand the Sophies sonne in hostage, for assurance of the peace betweene those two Monarchs, was for his proud message put to the Bastinado, & grievously threatened, sent backe to the Grand Signior. The Scriuano's proceedings were much furthered by the dissentions betweene the Ianizaries of Aleppo and Damasco: but death stayed him, not his rebellion, which a yonger brother of his prosecuted, against whom Hassan Bassa was sent, but lost himselfe and his Arnie. The Rebels besieged Angole, and forced them to giue two hundred thousand duckats to buy their peace. Meane while the Ianizaries, after their insolent manner, in a mutinie forced Mahomet to commit the Capi-Aga, one of his greatest Officers, and some others, to whom the successe of these Rebels was imputed, to their cruell execution. The Rebels sacked Burze, one of the chiefe Cities, the Turkes Store-house for his warres, and Treasurie for his reuenues; and the great Shaugh of Persia had taken Corberie also from the Turkes. The Gouvernour of Babylon inclined now also to the Rebels. Mahomet, not able with force to preuaile, by faire meanes sought to winne them, and gaue them their demands, making Zelalie one of their Chieftaines, Bassa of Bosnia. Whereupon his men of warre entered into a resolution, to depriue him of the State, and to inuict therewith Mahomet his eldest sonne: about which an Astrologian being consulted, promised all happie successe: (vnhappie foole, that knew not his owne approaching ruine, which Mahomet executed on him, together with yong Mahomet the Prince, and fiftie other conspirators.)

o Of the disposition of this Mahomet, his cruelties, forces, power, gouernment, &c. see Soranzo his Ottomannus.

p Achmat the present Sultan.

He set forth a Fleet of Gallies against the King of Fesse; which, hauing encountred with a tempest, was forced with great losse to retire to their former Port. The chiefe Rebell making shew he would come into Europe, as Zelalie had done, Mahomet sent certaine Gallies to receiue him, but he received them, and possessing himselfe of the Gallies, slew the men, and mocked the Sultan. Hassan a great Bassa, ioyned himselfe also vnto them, about such time as Taurisⁿ was againe recovered by the Persian. All these disasters draue Mahomet to his deuotions for refuge, accounting these crosses to be inflicted for his sinnes, and therefore appointed publike Prayers in all the Mosques of his dominion, and sent two Priests bare-headed and bare footed to Mecca, on pilgrimage to pray for him. But that Mahomet either had no eares to heare this, or else was so farre entreated, as to be better acquainted with this great Sultan in the place of his eternall residence, whither (about the yeare 1593.) Mahomet the Turke^o was by death soone after sent. His sonne Achmat succeeded; for his eldest was strangled in his sight. He was buried in a faire Chappell, by himselfe, for that purpose built about fiftie foote square, with foure Turrets or Steeples: in the middest is his Sepulchre, in a great Coffin of white Marble: his Turbant at his head, two exceeding great candles of white Waxe, standing (but neuer burning) the one at his head, the other at his feet. The floore is couered with Mattes, and faire Carpets on them. Rount about are like Tombes for his wiues and children, but not so great and faire. Diuers such Chappels there are neere to the Temple of Sophia, as of his father Amurath, with his siue and fortie children, entombed about him, and of the other great Sultans, two Selyms, Solyman, Baiazet, Mahomet, each hauing a faire Hospitall for the reliefe of the poore adioyning. Some of the great Bassaes imitate the same. No other Turkes are buried in the Cities, but in the fields, with stones laid ouer, or set vpright, fashioned with some resemblance of the head, which beareth ensigne of his dignitie, and whether it bee a man or woman, with letters engrauen further to testifie the same.

Achmat p set a sure guard about his brother, and to prevent the insolencie of the Ianizaries and souldiers, distributed amongst them two millions and a halfe, and being fiftene yeares old, was crowned Emperour. He is said in behauiour and resemblance blance much to resemble Mabomet the Great, first Conquerour of Constantinople. At the same time the warres in Transylvania had procured such famine, that rootes, herbes, leaues of trees were their food: yea, a mother is said to haue brought backe into her wombe (by vnnaturall meanes satisfying Nature) her fixe children: two men to eat their mother: others to cut downe malefactors from the gallowes, and eat them. Horses, Dogges, Cats, and such like were rarities to the poore, and dainties beyond their reach. And if the State can be made worse, theeuces by robberies, and Souldiers by continuall spoyles, in taking away their goods, adde to their miseries. Cicala Bassa is sent against the Asian Rebels, and receiuethe an ouerthrow: the second time he reneweth his forces, with renewing his fortunes, namely, the losse of thirtie thousand of his men. The Persian recovered the countrey of Sirvan, and the Citie of Arusta, with the countrie thereabouts, and all that from the dayes of Solyman had bene taken from them, except two or three places. Hassan Bassa is sent against the Christians in Hungarie, assisted with the Tartars, alwayes ready to helpe the Turkes, both because they are linked in marriages, like in conditions, and that huge Empire, for want of heires male of the Ottomans, is entailed to the Tartar Cham: pay and spoile are no small motiues also to fetch them into these Expeditions. Cicala Bassa is sent against the Persians, but defeated with all his power by the Persian.

In Hungarie they doe more with their money, to maintaine rebellions, then with open force. In the yeare 1605. a tumult arose among the Ianizaries in Constantinople, and five hundred shoppes and ware-houses, with two hundred Iewes, and other persons to whom they belonged, were burnt: the Ianizaries enriched themselves with the spoile. Hungarie is at once vexed with forren and ciuill warres: the malicious Christians doing more harme then the Turkes, and the people flee into Polonia; or the Mountaines, for refuge. The Rebels take great Townes, yea they spoyle Stiria and Austria. The German name growes odious to the Hungarian. Botscay, chiefe of the Rebels, is assisted by the Turkes, and called Prince of Transylvania; all Hungarie in manner following his enlignes. But the Rebels in Asia, and the Persian exploits detained the Turkes from making vse of these occasions, else likely to haue swallowed Hungarie and Austria both: yet Pesth was before taken by them, and now Strigonium. Cicala Bassa is againe ouerthrowne by the Persian, and with three hundred flieth to Adena. The Bassa of Trebezond is sent to succour him, but is discomfited, and almost all his armie slaine. Achmat enraged, causeth Cicala Bassaes house at Constantinople, full of wealth and treasure, to be rifled. Adena is yeilded to the Persian. The Bassaes of Damasco and Aleppo had before fallen out, and taken armes. Damasco had ouerthrowne Aleppo in the field, besieged him, and forced him to composition. Now againe, Aleppo ouerthroweth him, and the Bassaes of Tripolis and Gazara his companions, with their armie of threescore thousand men; tooke Tripolis; the Bassa whereof he againe ouerthrew, and added to his garlands Damasco, the treasure of the Turkes reuenue, and chiefe Citie of Syria. The Beglerbeg of Natolia sent his Liefe-tenant with a great armie against him, but to their owne ruine. He intercepted a shippe laden with the tributes of Egypt. The Persian sent him, in token of loue, a present worth fiftie thousand crownes. Achmat is hereby forced to peace with the Christians, and to recall his forces out of Hungarie for this employment. Anno 1606. The Emperour yeeldeth satisfaction to the Discontents in Hungarie, with free vse of Religion to all, and Transylvania to remaine to Botscay and his heires male for euer.

A fire at Constantinople kindled in a Iewes house by the Tartars, burnt many houses and Iewes, and foure millions of goods. Achmat in great magnificence went to his Moschee, to render thanks to Mabomet for a peace concluded with the Emperour. Hee now looketh Eastward with his power, and as Master Henrie Lello (in his letter from Constantinople, dated Aprill 2. 1606.) testifieth of him, hee would needes at first bee a souldiour, but the last winter hauing felt the cold windes from the toppes of the hilles in Bursia, which are all the yeare long covered with snow, and receiuing some hurt in his stomack by drinking those cold waters, he proued stomack-sick to his expedition also, and giuing ouer his enterprife against the Rebels, is become one of Venus Knighrs, therein surmounting his Grand-father Murad or Amurath. An. 1607. he sent the Visier Bassa with an hundred and thirtie thousand against the rebels, who preuaileth more by discret appeasing of them, then by force. The Bassa of A'epo three times withstood his whole forces; the fourth time fleeth towards Persia with his treasure. Aleppo is left to be taken, and the Garrison put to the sword: But the Bassa himselfe obtained pardon, with restitution of his goods taken from him in Syria. Another fire arose at Constantinople, and consumed two millions of goods. The Duke of Florence doth much harme to the Turkes by the sea, 1608. The rebels make new commotions in Asia. Matthias the Arch-Duke standeth out with his forces against the Emperour, and commeth with his armie toward Prague, obtaineth the crowne and royalties of Hungarie by composition, comes King to Vienna; but the Protestants refuse to sweare alleageance, till free vse of Religion in Austria by King Matthias was granted. He was crowned at Presburg. And the last yeare 1612. the Emperour Rodulph being dead, he was chosen in his place. Anno 1610. the Persians ^a ouerthrew the Turks in diuers battels, wherein many thousands of them were slaine. This last yeare, 1613. The Turke ^b had prouided a great armie at Adrianople to passe into Transyluania, and his Garrisons began some stirres in Hungarie, and a new warre was there feared: but new occurrents in Asia altered that course. For the people in Natolia rose againe in rebellion, committing spoile and rapine: and in Arabia a certaine Rebell vsurped the title of a King, and gathering together about fiftie thousand followers, hath possessed himselfe of Aden, a commodious Citie for the Indian Merchandize, and suly seated for the command of the Red-sea. The Persian King put his Embassadour to death, because he had capitulated with the Turke, that his Master vnder colour of gifts should pay him a yearely tribute: and sent the Turkish Legate, which was sent with the Persian Legate, backe to Constantinople, hauing first cut off his hands, and put out his eyes. Hereby the Turke was forced to employ his forces this way, which hee had intended for Transyluania: and by the Bassa of Buda hath promised to keepe peace: hath sent also his Embassadour into Poland with a great present to the King, swearing by his God, his Horse and Sword, to conserue the peace. This yeare also about Aprill was a great fire at Constantinople, which burned two thousand houses: the Merchants meane while labouring to conuey and saue their goods, the Bassa Nassuffensis pretended, that a certaine Merchant of Aleppo (whom vpon that occasion he found there weaponed) intended violence against him, and confiscated his goods (the chiefe cause of the quarrell) which amounted to an hundred thousand Chekins: which I mention, to shew the miserie of Turkish subiection.

Sultan Achmet is now Anno 1613. five and twentie yeares old: of good stature, strong and active more then any of his Court. He hath three thousand Concubines and Virgins for his lust: his eldest sonne is about eight yeares old: hee is much delighted with pleasures of the field, for which in Græcia and Natolia hee hath fortie thousand Falconers: his Hunts-men are not much fewer. And whereas their Religion binds them once euerie day to practise some Manuall trade, as his father did making of Arrowes: This Sultan euerie morning, after his deuotions maketh Horne-rings, which they wear on their thumbs for the better drawing of their bowes. Eight thousand persons are alway resident in his Palace. His Officers ^c are the Capi Aga, by whom he speakes to such as haue suites to him; Treasurer of the Houshold, Cup-bearer, Steward, Ouerseer of his women, and principall Gardner. These sixe are in great place: he hath Mutes (persons borne deafe and dumbe) which attend him; he hath fiftene hundred gelded men, from whom their priuities are wholly cut, and they make water thorow short quilles of siluer, which to that end they wear on their Turbants. His Visier Bassas, or Priuy-counsellors, whereof there are nine at Constantinople, and were wont to be much fewer, are now thirtie. The rest of them are in their charges, or Beglerbegs places abroad. They sit euerie Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tuesday, in the Diuano or Counsel-hall. The Aga is Captaine of the Ianizaries. The Chiauses are his Pursuants. The Spahi his guard of horse-men. The Ianizaries are his best foot-men, who in their child-hood are taken from their parents, rents, and brought vp in all hardnesse, and in the rules of their religion. Then are they put to Schooles, where vnder most seuerer Masters they are taught the vse of diuers weapons, and such as proue fit are enrolled for Ianizaries. Of whom in all are fortie thousand, and about sixteene thousand with their Aga, attend the Grand Seignior his person at Constantinople, where they are employed as Constables, Clearkes of the Market, Warders of the gates, Sergeants for arrests, to guard Embassadors, and other Offices. He hath also in pay others called Topegi, sixe thousand which are Gunners; & twelue thousand Gebegi, which haue charge of the powder and shot in the armies. He hath Seminaries for the trayning vp of those yonglings, the one sort of which are called Ieheogiani, whereof are iue thousand, which neuer goe out of the Seraglio in sixteene or twentie yeares, neuer see any but their Officers, where they are trayned vp to future seruice. The Gemoglani (who are also tithed children of the Christians) are brought vp with some more libertie, and to base offices of husbandrie and such like; and may also proue Ianizaries. Of these are twentie thousand. The Ianizaries and tithed children, with his Timariots, are the maine pillars of his Empire. His Timariots, which hold land in Fee, to maintaine so many horse-men in his seruice, are in Europe two hundred fiftie seuen thousand; in Asia and Africa, foure hundred sixtie two thousand. Beglerbeg signifieth Lord of Lords; of which were wont to be two; one in Europe, another in Asia: but by Solyman encreased, that though Romania and Natio- lia haue still the chiefe titles, yet in Europe are foure others; in Asia before these Persian warres, nine and twentie, in Africa foure, in all nine and thirtie, which are as Vice-royes, and haue their Begs or Sanzackes vnder them. His Admirals place is as great by sea. And thus much of Turkish affaires, the summe of the large worke of Master Knolles, whom I principally follow.

CHAP. X.

Of the Opinions holden by the Turkes in their Religions ow the Turkes from so small beginnings haue aspired to this their present greatnesse you haue seene; bought indeed at a deare price, with their temporall dominions accepting of a spirituall bondage, becoming the Lords of many Countries, and withall made subiect to those many Mahumetan superstitions. The occasion and chiefe cause of sects in the Saracenicall deuotions ye haue heard in the fourth and seuenth Chapter: to which we may adde heere out of ^a Bellonius. He saith, that besides the Alcoran, they haue another booke called Zuna, that is, the Way, or Law, or Councell of Mahomet, written after his death by his disciples, but the readings thereof being diuers & corrupt; the Ca'iph assembled a generall Councell of their Alphachi, or learned men at Damasco, wherein six Commissioners were appointed, namely, Musulin, Hochari, Buborayra, Anneccy, Atermindai and Dent, to view and examine these bookes, each of which composed a booke, and those sixe bookes were called Zuna; the other copies being two hundred Camels-lading, were drowned in the Riuer; those sixe only made authentical, esteemed of equall authoritie among the Turkes, with the Alcoran, and after by one of their Diuines contracted into an Epitome; which booke was called the Booke of Flowers. But this Zuna being not Una (one as the Truth is) but full of contrarietie, hence haue arisen sects amongst them; the Turkes differing from other Mahumetan Nations, and diuided also amongst themselues.

Anthony ^b Menauinus (who liued a long time in the Turkish Court) saith that the booke of their Law is called Musaph, or Curaam, which Georgiowitz reckoneth another booke; not the Alcoran but perhaps some Glosse, or some Extract thereof in Arabian, which they hold v^l lawfull to translate into the vulgar. They haue it in such reuerence, that they will not touch it, except they be washed from top to toe: and it is read in their Churches by one with aloud voice; the people giuing deuout attendance without any noise: nor may the Reader hold it beneath his girdle-stedde; and after he hath read it, he kisseth it, and toucheth his eyes with it, and with great solemnitie it is carried into the due place. Out of this booke are deriued eight principall Commandements of their Law. The first is, God is a great God, and one only God, and Mahomet is the Prophet of God: this article of the Unitie (they thinke) maketh against vs, who beleue a Trititie of Persons: in detestation whereof, they often reiterate these words, hu, hu, hu, that is, he, he, he, is onely God, who is worthie to be praised for their limbs, health, &c. and for that he hath prouided sustenance for euery one fortie yeares before his birth.

The second Commandement is, Obey thy parents, and doe nothing to displeafe them in word or deed: they much feare the curses of their parents. 3. Doe vnto others, as thou wouldest be done vnto. 4. That they repaire to the Meschit or Church at the times appointed; of which after. 5. To fast one month of the yeare, called Romezan or Ramadan. 6. That they giue almes to the poore liberally and freely. 7. To marrie at conuenient age, that they may multiplie the sect of Mahomet. 8. not to kill. Of these Commandements is handled at large in Menanino, and in the booke ^a of the Policie of the Turkish Empire, and in others.

^b Some say that the Turks now vse to resort to their oratories but three times a day, and Eusbequius saith foure, omitting that in the night. Bisbeq. epist. 1. they measure the time of prayer by houre-glasses of water.

Their times of prayer, according to the fourth Precept, are ^b in the morning, called Salanamazzi, before Sunne-rising: the second at noone, called Vlenamazzi. (On the Friday they pray sixe times, resorting to their Church two houres before noone) the third, about three houres before Sunne-set, called Inchindinamazzi. The fourth at Sunne set, Afcannamazzi. The fifth, two houres within night, before they goe to sleepe. They which meane to goe to prayer, goe first to the house of office, and there purge their bodie: they wash their priuie parts; and then going thence, wash their hands, their mouth, their nose, their countenance, and their wrists, each of them three times, and after their eares and neckes, saying a certaine Psalm, and then wash their feet to the mid-legge, saying another Psalm: and after all this, with a graue pace, walke to Church; without these washings they hold their prayers vnprofitable. Septemcastrensis saith, That for this cause of washing they cut their nailes, and all their haire; except on their heads and beards (which yet they combe, and bestow curious paines about, that the water may haue free passage to all parts) yea for this cause hee thinketh they obserue Circumcision, that nothing be left couered and vnwashed. They haue thre kinds of washings: the first of all the bodie, no part being left free, called Zcoagivmeg, which is necessarie after any pollution. The second is called Tachriat, of the priuities and hinder parts after stoole, vrine, or breaking of winde. The third, Aptan, or Abdas, in the instruments of the five senses, beginning at the hands, from thence the wrists to the elbow; then the mouth and nostrills; then all the face with the eyes; then the eares, and from thence to the feet, which he washeth as high as the ankles. This is not necessarie before euery prayer, except some vncleanness happen, but may serue for all day.

Their Almes, enioyed in the sixt Commandement, are publike or priuate. Their publike almes is a sacrifice or offering of some beast once euery yeare. For whereas of old they should haue giuen a certaine pension of money to the poore, namely, two in the hundreth: Mahomet vpon their complaint eased this heauie burthen, and conuerted it into this sacrifice. This beast must be cut in peeces, and giuen to the poore: neither must they themselues eate of it, yet may each man eate of his neighbours offering, and this sacrifice ought to be of the fairest and best, Horse, Veale, or Mutton. The place for this sacrifice is called Canaara: where are many Butchers, which cutting the throat thereof, say; In the name of him which hath made heauen and earth, and all things else; this sacrifice be to his honor and worship, and let his infinit bountie accept the same. They vse the like vpon occasion of vovves, if any of their house be sicke. As for their priuate almes, they hold it necessarie: hauing a vaine conceit, that it freeth them from all imminent miserie, which (they say) together with the almes, turneth from them to the poore man; whence it commeth that the poore are so full of diseases. But for all this charitable Precept, many poore people die amongst them for want of reliefe: and ^c if the poore pay not their head-money to the King yearely, they are beaten, and their women and children sold to pay it.

Marriage ought to be sought (they say) for procreation, not for lust. They which

liue vnmarried (after fit time, which is about five and twentie yeares of age) are not iust, nor please God. Their Law enioyneth them to performe their mariage-ceremonies, with prayers and prayes, and modest shamefastnesse; and they ought to learne each other to reade, if either partie be ignorant. But their mariage is now farre degenerate from that ancient simplicitie: For if a man like a yong woman, he buyeth her of her father, and then enrolleth her in the Cadies booke; the mariage following with all Bacchanall solemnities. The father giueth only some pceces of household with her, carried openly by particulars thorow the streets. When he disliketh any of his wiues, he selleth them, or giueth them to his men-slaves. They sit not at table with their husbands, but waire and serue them; and then they dine by themselues, admitting no man or mankind with them, about twelue yeares old. And they neuer goe abroad without leaue, except to the Bath, and on Thursday to weepe at the graues of the dead: They rise to their husbands, and stand while they are in presence; and besides them, come in no companie of men, nor doe they speake with a man or in any part of their bodie are seene of any man; because they thinke sight, especially where beautie or comeliness is, cannot be without sinne. Only the brother may be permitted to see the sister, but not the husbands brother. For this cause that sexe is not suffered to buy and sell, but is closely mewed, saue that their law alloweth them to frequent the publike Baths. The wife and concubine differ in the right to a dowrie, which the later wanteth: but the wife must cause the other to be her husbands bed-fellow, when he commandeth, without gain-saying, except on their Sabbath, or Friday night, which is the wiues peculiar. Yet are the Turkes giuen in both sexes to vnnaturall lust (in these times) euen the women in publike Bathes, sometimes are so enflamed in that filthinesse, as is intolerable. Busbequius tells of one woman, which falling in loue with a yong maid, and no way else preuailling, cloathed her selfe in mans apparell, and hiring a house neere, procured the fathers good-will to haue that his daughter in marriage; which being solemnised betwene them, and the truth discouered (which the blacke mantle of night could not couer from Hymeneus) complaint was made, and the Governour quenched the hot flames of this new Bridegrome, causing her to be drowned for that offence. If the man abuse the wife to vnnaturall lust, she may haue her remedie by diorce, if she accuse her husband; which modestie forbiddeth to be done in words, and therefore she puts off her shooe, and by inuerting the same, accuseth her husbands peruersenesse. One Master Simons, which liued amongst them, told me, that there are some which keepe Boyes gallantly arrayed, to serue for the worse then beastly lust of such as will hire them. He affirmed also, That they haue this lothsome punishment for that lothsome sinne of whoredome, to take the panch of a beast new killed, and cutting a hole thorow, to thrust the Adulterers head in this dung-wallet, and so carrie him in pompe thorow the streets. It is death, either to the bodie by iudiciall sentence, or to the soule by turning Turke, for a Christian to haue carnall dealing with any of their women. A Iew which had dealing with a Turkes wife, with her husbands consent, could not escape hanging therefore, (this indeed was a fauour, for hee should haue bene burned) notwithstanding his rich country-men offered two thousand duckats to saue him: Her husband was hanged for his wittoldly permission, and shee her selfe drowned. George Donsa reporteth the like danger, which an Armenian hardly escaped, but for talking with a Turkish woman, both of them being therefore imprisoned, and thence deliuered at a deere rate. He telleth of their Pæderastie that they buy Boyes at an hundred or two hundred duckats, and mew them vp for their filthie lust, till they proue bearded: they will also steale Boyes for that villanie, as hee instanceth of one which came with the Polonian Embassadour so stollen, and neuer could after be heard of.

Murther (prohibited in their eight Commandement) they hold unpardonable, if it be done wilfully. Often will the Turkes brawle, but neuer in priuate quarels strike one another, for feare of this law, and the seneritie of the Magistrate. And if one be found dead in a streete or house, the master of the house, or the Parish, must find out the murderer; otherwise he himselfe shall be accused of it, and the whole Contado shall be fined, and likewise in case of robbetrie.

Georg. Donsa in itin. Constantinopol.

Menauinus reckoneth also seuen mortall finnes; Pride, Auarice, Lecherie, Wrath, Enuie, Sloth, and Gluttonie. The first, they say, cast Lucifer out of heauen. The second is the root of many other finnes. The third is most rife amongst them, and that in the most filthie and vnaturall kind of Sodomie; their law to the contrarie notwithstanding. The fourth maketh a man a beast. The fifth shutteth men out of Paradise, and so forth of the rest. Wine ^a is also forbidden them; but yet they will be drunke with it, if they can get their fill of it. And Mahomet the third (Anno 1601.) imputing diuers insolencies of the Ianizaries to their excessiue drinking of wine (by the Mufties perswasion) commanded on paine of death, all such in Constantinople and Pera, as had wine, to bring it out and stauce it (except Embassadors onely) so that the streets ranne therewith. One drinking ^b wine with Busbequius, made great clamors; being asked the cause, he said he did it to warne his soule to flee into some corner of the bodie, or else be quite gone, lest it should be polluted with that sinne. Yet in their Fast or Lent they abstaine very religiously. ^c If it be proued against a Priest, that he hath drunke wine but once, he shall neuer be beleued as a witnessse after it. Swines flesh is prohibited too: in abstaining from which they are more obedient; it being vtterly abhorred.

^d The Turkes are no fashionmongers.

The Turkes ^d generally hate (saith Septemcastrensis) that lightnes in apparel, speech, gesture, &c. vsed of the Christians, whom for this cause they call Apes and Goates. Likewise they are not sumptuous in their priuate buildings. They goe to the warre, as it were to a wedding, esteeming them blessed which are therein slaine. The wiues and women-servants agree in one house, without iealousie and grudging, they are in their habite and behaiour modest: and, where himselfe dwelt, the father in law had not seene the face of his daughter in law, liuing in the same house with him, in twentie yeares space; so religiously doe they veile themselues.

On Friday they pray more deuoutly, but (as the Alcoran also permitteth) they abstaine not from all labour. He saw the grand Signor himselfe goe to their Church, and likewise to the Bath, attended only with two youthes; none vsing any acclamation to him. And in the Church he prayed on the pauement covered with a Carpet, like to the rest, without any Throne or ensigne of Royaltie. And he obserued the like modestie in his other behaiour.

The Turkes are so zealous in their superstition, that they will rather lose their life then Religion: as among other examples in Scanderbegs time at Dibra, many Turkes chose rather to die Turkes, then to liue Christians; yea some, as it is reported, rather to kill themselues, then to leaue their superstition: and in the yeare 1568. the Persian Embassador was shot at, and one of his followers hurt by a Turke, who being apprehended, confessed that he did it because he was an Heretike, and sent from an Heretike: for which fact he was drawne at an horse-rayle thorow the Citie, and then had his right hand cut off, and after his head. They hate the Persians, as Russian Basse: told Busbequius, more then they doe the Christians: like as the Traditionarie Jew doth the Textuarie, and the Papist the Protestant.

Images they haue in such detestation, that (besides the scratching out the eyes of those in the Musaique worke of Saint Sophies Temple) when Solyman ouerthrew King Lewis of Hungary, he carried away three Images of cunning worke in Brasse, representing Hercules with his Club, Apollo with his Harpe, Diana with her Bow and Quiver, and placed them in the tiltyard at Constantinople: but by the perswasion of the Mufti, they were molten into great Ordinance. They haue no Scutchions or blazing of Armes: nay, they vse no scales in their letters or other writings, which seeme to them to sauour of superstition, or superfluitie.

^f Septemcast. Master Simons told me that now they are herein more sumptuous. Voy. du Vil-lament. l. 3. c. 6.

When they conquer any Citie, they turne the Temples into Mosques, and sacrifice there. Thus did Solyman ^e at Buda, and Amurath sacrificed sixe hundred captiues to his fathers ghost.

They are moderate in their priuate buildings, and detest ^f the Christians for their excessse and superfluous expences that way: What (say they) doe those Pagans thinke they shall liue euer? they often lodge (saith Willamont) at the signe of the Moone; and the like moderation they vse in diet and apparell. They haue a brasse pot, and their other meane houshold implements with them in the warres, which they vse in peace.

Readie

Readie mome is their surest riches, because the Grand Signior is their surest Heire.

They haue the rising of the Sunne in great reuerence; and especially the appearing of the new Moone: as * when Mahomet the great besieged Scodra, the new Moone * Knoll p. 421. beginning to shew her selfe, the Mahometane Priests, going about the Armie, gaue the Souldiers warning thereof, as their manner is, by singing of a Song in manner of a Proceffion; whereunto the whole Armie answered with a short respond, and at the same time bowing themselues to the ground, saluted the Moone with great superstition.

They may ^a haue twelue lawfull wiues, and as many Concubines as they will (some say, but foure wiues.) The children of the one are equally legitimate as well as the other, and inherite alike: yet few of them keepe two wiues together in one house: but in seuerall places where they haue dealings, they haue seuerall wiues, which they diuorce at pleasure. a Septemcast.

They tell many things of Antichrist (whom they call ^b Tetshchel) and of the Resurrection, and of the last Iudgement, of Hell, and Purgatorie: And that Mahomet after Iudgement shall deliuer all of all Religions from thence. b Leunclau: saith Degnal.

They haue no knowledge of liberall Arts, of cases of Conscience, of Originall sinne, or of actuall, further then the outward act.

Their respects to reliques appeareth by Mahomet ^c the third, 1597. who in the discomfiture of his Armie fled towards Agria, shedding some teares as hee went, and wiping his eyes with a peece of Mahomet's garment, which he carried about him as a Relique. c Knoll.

The Turkes may neither eate, drinke, nor make water, standing.

In their aduersitie they seeke with earnest prayets to their Prophets; and publike supplications are sometimes decreed. At ^d the taking of Alba Regalis, 1601. the Bassa of Buda (then prisoner at Vienna) hearing of it, abstayned from meat with his two seruants a whole day, prostrate vpon his face, praying vnto his Prophet Mahomet, who hee said had bene angrie all that yeare with the Turkes. They ^e endure punishments inflicted by the Magistrate with great patience, thinking they shall escape all torment in those parts in the World to come: they therefore reward the whipper, and esteeme the whip (which I enuie not to them) sacred. d Knoll p. 1136
e Burbeq.

They are (but contrarie to the Alcoran) addicted to sorceries and dreames: their Priests write them letters or spells, to keepe them from danger and harme of shot, &c. called ^f Haymayly. They will write any thing for monie, as letters of freedome for seruants to runne away from their Masters, and such like. They make a shew of holinesse, but are closely wicked, ignorant of their owne law (to couer which, they answere in darke sentences) and the people much more. Nothing is sinne, to count of, but that which endamageth ciuill societie. f Septemcast.

They esteeme for good workes, & the buildings and endowings of Hospitals, making Bridges and high-waies, digging of pits, and wells, and conueying waters to high-waies and Cities, building Bathes, and founding of Churches, and such like publike workes. Restan ^h Bassa left his wife, the Daughter of Solman, at his death fifteene millions of gold, and shee had of yearely reueneue halfe a million: shee, amongst other her workes, attempted one most famous, which was a conduit to conuey water, for the vse of the Pilgrims betwixt Cairo and Mecca, fortie dayes journey; and for the same iurent procured the Sultan Selym her brother, to write to the Venetians for a licence to extract out of Italie an hundred thousand pound of Steele, only to make Chuffells, Hammers, and Mattocks, for the cutting of certaine rocks, by which this water must passe. g Their good Workes.
h M. Harborn.

Their ⁱ Oathes (especially of their Emperors) are of many cuts, and varietie of fashion. And for vowes; in necessities and dangers, they will promise vnto God the sacrifices of beasts in some holy places, not vpon Altars, but ^k hauing flaid off the skinne, they giue it with the head, feete, and fourth part of the flesh to the Priest; another part to the Poore; the third to the Neighbours; the fourth is for the Gnefts. i Their oathes and vowes.
k Andr. A. i. habene.

They are so addicted to the opinion of Fate, that God is esteemed to blesse whatsoeuer

soever hath successe, as namely, Selims murdering his Father; and to detest what wanteth good event, whatsoever ground it had. They feare not the Plague, accounting every mans time limited by Fate, and therefore will wipe their faces with the cloathes of such as haue dyed thereof.

Eusb. ep. 3. & 4.

They hold it alike acceptable to God, to offer almes to beasts, and to bestow it on men, when it is offered for the loue of God. Some there are, which will redeme birds, imprisoned in their cages or coupes, and hauing paid their price, let them flie. Others (for the loue of God) cast bread into the water to feede the fishes, esteeming it a worke greatly meritorious; but Dogges are accounted vncleane, in stead whereof they delight in Cats, following (they say) their Prophet Mahomet, who falling asleepe at table, and awaking to goe to his deuotions, rather cut off his sleeue, whereon hee found his Cat fast asleepe, then he would disturbe her. Master Simons told me that he hath seene them at Cairo feede dogs with baskets of bread, one standing by with a club to keepe them from fighting; and one gaue almes for a Bitch which had Whelps vnder a stall. Herein perhaps (as in other things) the Egyptians are more superstitious then the Turkes, especially in this of Dogs which fauours of their old Anubis and dog-worshipping.

They say Moses was the first great Prophet, to whom was giuen the booke Tefrit, that is, the Law, and they which obserued it in those times were saued. But when men grew corrupt, God gaue Dauid the booke Czabur, or the Psalter; and when this preuailed not, Iesus was sent with the Booke Ingil, or the Gospell, whereby in that time men were saued. Lastly, Mahomet receiued his Alcoran, and all the former were disannulled. This Law and Law-giuer is so sacred to them, that in all their prayers, euen from their mothers breasts, they obserue this forme: La illah, illelah Mehemmet irrefullelah tanre rirpeghamber hacc: That is, there is no God but one, and Mahomet his Prophet: one Creator, and more Prophets. This they suck in with their milke, and in their first learning to speake lisse out this deuotion. The infants go with the rest to their Mosques or Meschits, but are not tied to other ceremonies, sauing washing, till they are circumcised. Every man hath (in their opinion) from his birth to his death two Angels attending him; the one at his right hand, the other at his left. At foure or fise year old they send him to the Schoole to learne the Curram, and the first words which their Masters teach them are to this sence; God is one, and is not contayned in any place, but is through all, and hath neither father nor mother nor children, eateth not, nor drinketh, nor sleepeth, and nothing is like to him. The two Angels befoie said, are called Chiramim and Chra tabin, which write the good or euill that men doe against the day of Iudgement. The Turkes & abhorre blasphemie not only against God and Mahomet, but also against Christ and the Virgin Marie, and other Saints: and they punish blasphemers of whatsoever Sect: they account it a sinne for a man to build a house which shall last longer then a mans life: and therefore howsoever they are sumptuous and magnificent in their publique buildings, yet are there private dwellings verry homely, and ill contriued. They eate much Opium, thinking it maketh them courageous in the wartes. They haue a remedie for paine in the head or elsewhere, to burne the part affected with the touch-boxe (which they alway carry with them) or with some linnen cloth whereby they haue many marks on their foreheads and temples, witnesses of their needlesse and heedlesse respect to Physitians.

As the Scripture contayneth some Prophecies of the arising and proceedings of the Turkish Nation, the rod of God, whereby hee scourgeth his Christian people; so haue they also prophecies amongst themselues of their end and ruine, when God in his mercy to Christians shall execute iustice vpon the Turkes, and cast the rod into the fire, wherewith he had chastised his children. Such an one is that which Georgiovitz translateth and expoundeth: and such is that which Leunclavius hath transcribed out of their Booke called Messibili, wherein is written that Constantinople shall bee twice taken before Degnal Lain, that is, the cursed Antichrist, shall come; once by the Sword, another time by the force of the prayers of the sonnes of Isabac. Lain is an Epithete which they giue to Degnal, signifying wicked or mischieuous. Of this Degnal the Turkes fable, that before his comming, shall Mechdi enjoy the Empire. This

As for the bloody practises which each Emperour vseth in murdering his brethren to secure him in his Throne, in rooting out of the Nobilitie of the Countries which they conquer, in rasing the Walls and Fortresses of the Cities, least they should bee receptacles for conspiracie, in translating people from one Countrie to another, in turning the Countries into Timars, or erecting Fees and Tenures of Land to hold in seruice of the Turke in his warres, whereby without any charge to him hee maintayneth more horse-men in continuall pay and readinesse then all the Princes Christian: also of their Court, Seraile, manner of government by Vezier Bassas, Beglerbegs, Siniacks, &c. Of the Turkish Nauies reuenues and other things: (not concerning their Religion, but their Policie) I hold it not sutable to our scope and argument. Others in diuers languages haue done it in set Treatises and Discourses. Of the Religious places amongst the Turkes: their Meschits, Hospitalls, and Monasteries: with their Liturgie and Circumcision.

He places ^{*} of most Religion to the Turkes abroad are those which Mahumet himselfe polluted with his irreligion: as Mecca, Medina, &c. The places of most Religion amongst themselues are their Mosches, or Meschits: that is, their Temples and Houses of prayer, (whereof they haue many in all Turkie) and next thereunto their Hospitalls for the reliefe of the poore, impotent, and Pilgrims. Neither are the Turkes sparing in these or the like (seeming) charitable expences. For when a Turke falleth sick, and thinketh he shall thereof die, hee sends for his friends and kinsfolkes, and in their presence maketh his Testament: the greatest Legacies whereof are bequeathed to publike vses, which they thinke will be meritorious to their soules.

Empire.

Such are the making and repaying of Bridges, Causeyes, Conduits to conuey water to their Hospitalls or Temples. Some also giue to the Redemption of Captiues. Many of their Women (the deuouter Sexe, whether in Religion or superstition) bequeath monie to bee distributed amongst such Souldiers as haue slaine any certayne number of Christians: a deede in their conceit very religious. These are the wills and deedes of the inferiour sort. But the Emperours, and great Bassaes, appoint Legacies to expresse a greater magnificence with their deuotion, as the building of Temples and Hospitalls.

Their Temples or Meschites are for the most patt foure square, not much vnlike to our Churches, but larger in length then bredth. The Temple of Saint Sophie in Constantinople is of all other in the Turkes Dominion the most admirable, built long since by Iustinian, and (by Mahumet the Conquerour) peruerted to this Mahumetan vse about nine hundred yeares after. Of this Temple they write, ^a that it was first built by Constantinus, sonne of Constantine the Great, with a roofof Timber: and burnt by the Arians in the time of Great Theodosius, who againe repayred it. Sozomennus ^b saith, that in the broiles which hapned not long after in the raigne of Arcadius and Honorius about Chrysofome, the Church was fired, his enemies ascribing it to his partakers, and they againe to his Aduersaries. It is reported that Theodosius Iunior rebuilt it. But in the time of Iustinian, Procopius ^c testifieth, that base and wicked men burnt it againe, which Iustinian built anew in such sumptuous and magnificent sort, that in regard of his his change it might haue bene wished that it had perished long before. His chiefe workemen were Anthemius, and Isidorus, who raised it into a most goodly frame, which might amaze the beholders, and seeme incredible to the hearers. Both hee and Euagrius e recite the particulars. The length was two hundred and threescore feete: the bredth one hundred and fiftene: the height a hundred and fourescore. Zonaras, Agathias, and Georgius Cedrinus, tell of the harmes it receiued by Earthquakes, while Iustinian liued, which yet he repaired, as did Basilius and Andronicus after him. Nicephorus f saith, that Constantine raised the Temple of Peace (which before was but smal) to that large and stately greatnesse, which in his dayes it retayned: and his sonne Constantinus finished the Temple of Sophia so neare it, that they seemed to haue but one wall. It was g founded by Constantine his father: and was burnt in a sedition of the people, in the raigne of Iustinian, in which rebellion thirtie thousand of the people were slaine, and partly to pacifie the wrath of God (saith he) for so great a slaughter, he built this Temple. From the side of the Temple he tooke h foure hundred twentie and seuen pillars on an Image of Heathen Gods, and of twelue signes of the Zodiacke: and fourescore statues of Christian Emperors, which hee distributed in the Citie. But more then enough of the ancient structure thereof.

As it is at this day, diuers haue described it: but of them all most diligently, Petrus i Gyllus. The walls and roofes thereof are of brick, the inner part lined with marble most excellent, and of diuers sorts, the rooffe is set with stones, and peeces of glasse gilded: Nature and Arte conspiring to breede the beholders both pleasure and wonder. It is so composed, and the Pillars and Arches so placed that the middle Ile within (considered by it selfe) seemes like the forme of an Egge, long and round: but the whole fabrick both within and without, yeeldeth to the curious obseruer a square forme. All the inner part hath Arches, (in the top open to receiue light) which are sustained with marble Pillars of diuers colours, and there are, saith Bellonius, (if one may say it) as many doores in that Temple, as are dayes in the yeare. It is farre more admirable then the Roman Pantheon: The worke of that being grosse, solid, and easie for a workeman to conceiue. But this Sophian Temple is more subtle to the view of the eye and minde. It hath two rowes of Pillars each ouer other, those vpper ones supporting the hemisphere, loouer, or steeple, which is wrought all with Musaike worke, garnished with gold and azure. The doores or gates are couered with fine Latten of Corinth: one of which (they imagine) was made of the wood of Noahs Arke. And therefore there are in it three places left vacouered for the deuouter people to kisse, for the pardon of their sinnes. It had sometimes about three hundred thousand Ducats of yearly reueneue. The Turkes, when they turkeised it, threw downe the Altars, turned the Bells into great Ordinance, and either tooke away the Images, or put out their eies, for (say they) God, and not walls and pictures, is to be adored. Nicolas k Nicalui saith, that it had in compasse more then a mile, within which were comprehended the houses of Canons & Priests: of the most part of the Cloister (because it was neare the Scraile) they l made a stable for Horses; as Constantines Palace for Elephants: and a Temple (neare the Tilt-yard, or Hippodromus) for wilde beasts, which are tyed to the seuerall pillars thereof, Lyons, Beares, Wolues, wilde Asses, Ounces, &c. No Christian may enter into this Meschit, but he may put his body in at the doores and view it: But Mr. Simons saith, they are not now so scrupulous: for he hath bene suffered to goe in: as G. Doufa also reporteth of himselfe. There haue bene at once, in the time of Baiazet, numbred thirtie and sixe thousand Turkes assembled for deuotion at an Easter-solenitic. It had in Iustinians time Porches or Galleries on both sides, one of which it seemeth fel by some earthquake. The innumerable windowes and vnspeakable ornaments of the Temple would easly detayne our pen as a willing prisoner in the relation thereof. But besides the ancient, P. Gillius, Menaemus, Bellonius, Nicolai, Doufa, and many others haue done it already: neither will my Pilgrimage suffer mee to stay long in one place, which am to visit so many, both here and else where in the World. Let vs proceede therefore to their other Temples: especially seeing this is such that none is able to expresse the excellencie, nor could euer worthily expresse the least part thereof. Hee besides what others haue reported, telleth of a marble pilier therein, which which continually sweates forth a certaine liquor, which the Turkes wipe off with their hand-kerchiefes, as (in their opinion) profitable against diuers diseases.

Mahomet the conquerour ^a built one in like fashion without any figures, which hath about an hundred houses covered with Lead for their Doctors and Priests, and for all strangers and pilgrims of any Nation or Religion, where they may refresh themselves, their seruants, and horses for three dayes, with meat and lodging at free cost. There are also without the precinct of the Mosche an hundred and fiftie other Tenements for the poore of the Citie, which haue there an asper a day, and as much bread as they need: but they account that kind of life so vnhappy, that oftentimes those Tenements stand emptie: but the money which should this way be bestowed, is sent to the Hospitals of the diseased. There are also siue other Meschits, in forme resembling the former, but not so great nor so rich. The rest ^b of the Meschits are of diuers sorts, some high, some low, of severall fashions. The Turrets, vpon which their Priests call the people to prayers, are of a great height, made in manner of watch-towers; their greater Churches hauing two, the lesser one of them. Vpon the tops is set an halfe Moone or Crescent, which is the Turkes ensigne, as the Crosse is vsuall to the Christians. Within their Temples they haue no kinde of ornaments, but bare walles, with Arabian Letters (some in gold) written thereon, saue onely their bookes, and Lampes burning with oyle in great abundance, and cloathes of Tapestry, on the which being spread ouer mattes vpon the pauement, they prostrate themselves in prayer time.

Their Hospitals they call Imarets; of these there are great vse, because they want Innes in the Turkes dominions. They found them for the reliefe of the poore, and of Trauellers, where they haue food allowed them (differing according to the vse of the place) and lodging places, without beds. They are open for the most part to all men of all religions. The chiefe Hospitals in Turkie, are in Constantinople: two of which Mahomet and Baiazet his sonne founded, Both these haue about siue and twentie round Turrets covered with Lead; one of which, being in the midst of the other, is larger and greater then the rest, and vnder are lodgings for the Priests: On one side are beds for Pilgrims and Trauellers, on the other for Lepers. Thrice a day may any man resort thither into a certaine place for meat. There are maintained fourteene Doctors of their Law. Some say that the reuenues of Mahomet's Hospitall amount to an hundred and fiftie thousand ducats, and the other as much or more. Each of which hath a little Chappell adioyning, in which the Founders are buried; who were at this great charge, that the Priests and such as are there refreshed should pray for their soules, and say, Alla Rehfmetile son: that is, God haue mercie on them. Selim finished that which Baiazet his father had begunne to build. But his sonne Soliman erected one farre surpassing the former. Orchanes was the first of these Ottoman Princes which founded Monasteries. Mahomet the first finished ^c the great Temple at Hadrianople, the seat Royall of the Turkes in Europe before Constantinople was wonne. He built also, besides a Palace, another Temple with a most sumptuous Abbey, and a publike Schoole adioyning, endowing the same with great reuenues. He also gaue great summes of money to be distributed yearely at Mecca and Medina, for the reliefe of poore Pilgrims. ^d Soliman erected, in memoriall of Mahomet his eldest sonne, a stately Tombe, a sumptuous Church, a Monasterie and Colledge, with other things for the health of his soule. He was buried himselfe in a Chappell which he had in his life-time built most stately with a Colledge and Hospitall, and his wife Roxolana, and some of his murdered children lying intombed by him: his Scimatar also hanging by him, in token that he died in warres, which honor they grant not otherwise to their Princes. The reuenues of the countrey about Sigeth in Hungarie (lately wonne from the Christians) were giuen to the maintenance of those houses which his denotion had founded. Neither is it lawfull for them to conuert any Lands to such sacred vses, except they haue first with their owne sword wonne them from the enemies of their religion; the most acceptable seruice to their Prophet. And therefore Selym the second, sonne and successour of Soliman, intending to build a magnificent Temple, and munificent Colledge, Monasterie and Almes-house at Hadrianople, where he intended his Sepulchre, brake his league with the Venetians, and wan Cyprus from them, that thence he might endow the same with maintenance. But it were tedious to insist further in declaring their expences; which deuotion in all Turkie hath procured: their Emperours and Bassa's esteeming nothing of more honor in the world, or merit for heauen. Let vs come to their Church-rites and ceremonies.

The Temples in Turkie are (as hath beene said) innumerable, both publike, and priuate of meaner buildings: on which is a Tower, as with vs a Steeple, whereupon the * Muedex or Thalisman ascendeth: and it being open with pillars or foure windowes, first he goeth to that on the East-side, and calleth the people to prayer with a loude voice, stopping his eares with his hands, crying: There is no God but one, and Mahumet his Messenger: come to make prayer for remission of your sinnes, and know that there is no stronger then the God of Mahumet his messenger. This hee saith in order on euery side of the steeple. If there be in the Citie many Moschees, the Cathedrall beginneth, and then all the other Parishionall follow. This they doe five times a day, and on Friday their Sabbath sixe times. First at sunne rising with foure bendings to the earth, and twice praying. The second, about noone with ten bowings, and five prayings: the third, at afternoone before sunne-set, with eight inclinations and foure prayings. The fourth, with five bendings and three prayings about sunne-set. The fift, longer then the rest, with fiftene bowings, and eight prayings. This bending or bowing they call Erket, which is a doubled bowing with prostrating himselfe: their prayer they call Czalamet, which they make sitting after euery Erket, with a salutation on the right hand and on the left, and the impressiō or signe of peace, which is done with bringing both hands ouer the face. Euery Busurman is bound to resort to these their Liturgies at his Parishionall Mefchite, except he haue some lawfull impediment: and if not at all of them, yet at least at one to be well washed, for which purpose they haue innumerable Bathes in Turkie stately built: nor may any enter into the Temple, especially in the morning, but first well washed in the Bathe, as is said before: and if he keepeth him cleane the rest of the day, that washing will serue: but ^a if he haue committed any carnall sinne, or be any way soiled, or haue eaten any vnclane thing, then in some secret place he washeth his hands and armes to the elbow, his hinder parts ^b and priuities, and this sufficeth without going to Bathe, except he be otherwise polluted. For defect herein they haue inquisitions, and appointed penalties; respect or pardon being giuen to none that faile, especially on Friday, and in their Lent: such a one is carried about the Towne with a boord fastened to his neck, all be-hanged with Foxe-tailes, besides a penaltie according to his state in monie: and hee that will not thus order himselfe, shall not be allowed their buriall rites. After they are thus washed, they put off their shooes in imitation of Moses, and then enter into the Mefchita, where the floore is couered with Mats or Carpets, nor is any other thing seene but white walls, and great store of burning Lamps, and in golden Arabian letters those ^c wordes before mentioned.

There is a Pulpit on which the Choza or Focqui ascendeth, and the first thing hee doth is to stretch out his hands at large, and then ioyning them together he kneeleth and kisseth the ground: then hee listerh vp his head, and stopping his eares with his hands standing a good space as it were * distracted or rauished in his praiers, after, list-ting vp his hands, he againe kisseth the ground so many times as the houre of prayer according to that former rule requireth: and then list-ting vp himselfe againe, he stretcheth out his hands againe, so standing about a quarter of an houre, and againe kneeling with his mouth to the ground, so continueth mouing it euery way about a Pater-noster while, and then list-ting vp his head, and setting his hands to his eares, falls to his praying another quarter of an houre, and then licenseth the people to depart. There is no noise heard ^d as if there had beene nothing within. Not so religious is their course (and yet that religion admits it) which Martin Braidenbach reporteth to be practised by them in a Moschee on Mount Sinai where Moses receiued the Law: which the Saracens vse to get therein Prophets, thinking the issue there gotten is holy, and full of the Propheticall spirit.

Menauino thus describeth their rites. After their mysticall washing (as before) they goe with a sober pace to the Mefchit (not like one which runneth away) and if he happen to breake winde by the way, his former washing is vn sufficient and he must returne to renew it. Being assembled in the Meschit, they all turne their faces ^a Southwards, and the Meizin or Muerten, (Clarke, Sexten, Priest, Bell-ringer, or Bell-rather) standeth vp and readeth that Psalm which before he had cryed to them in the steeple, and euery one standeth vp holding his hands fastened to his waste, and bow their heads to their feet with great reuerence and without stirring. Then ariseth another Priest of another order called Imam, and readeth a Psalm aloude, the Meizin as his Clarke answering, which being ended they fall on the ground and say, Saban alla, Saban alla, Saban alla, that is, God haue mercie on vs most wretched sinners, abiding prostrate till the Priest Imam singeth againe his Psalm, and then they rise. And this they doe foure or fve times according to the order of their seruice. After this they all kneele and prostrate themselues on the ground, the Meizin obseruing a long ceremonie, in which with a loude voice he prayeth God to inspire the Christians, Iewes, Greekes, and generally all Infidels to turne to their Law. This being said, euery man listeth his hand to heauen, crying aloude, Amin, Amin: and then they touch their eies, or wipe them with their hands, (which is, as crossing among the Papists, a blessing themselues) bringing their hands ouer their face, and so they depart. In the English Treatise of the Turkish Policie these things are related, with some other ceremonies: as that they say together with the Priest the first Azoara or chapter of the Alcoran &c. Bartholomæus ^b Georgionitz saith, that only the chiefe sort are bound to assemble to the daily deuotions which they obserue fve times a day; others which cannot spare the times are not tyed. On their Sabbaths it is otherwise.

a They pray towards Mecca, as the Iew towards Ierusalem.

b Bar. Georgionitz.
i. Nobili & gli ociofi.

The women enter not their Mesquitas but on Fridayes at nine a clock, or at Easter, and then they are in a Gallerie or Terasse apart, where they may see and not be seene, and this is not common to all, but the Wiues and Mothers of the chiefe of the place. And as we haue said of the Priest, so it is to be vnderstood that all the Men and Women there doe the same without failing in any point. They suffer not ^c a Christian to enter therein: and yet will they enter into the Churches of the Christians to heare the Church-musick. The women abide in their Churches from nine of the clock to midnight, continually praying with certaine motions & strange cries, continuing so long in this act, that they fall vpon the ground as in a swoone through wearinesse: and if any feele her selfe at that time to be with child, the Turkes hold that they are conceiued by the holy Ghost, and presently vow that child to God, and call such Nefecs Ogli, that is, sonnes of the holy Ghost. And on Friday at nine of the clock the Priest vseth to preach to the people: and these their discourses last about two houres. That which is said is not very manifest, yet they say that he preacheth the miracles of Mahomet, some time exalting their faith, sometime commending obedience, and sometime rehearsing fabulous tales to terrifie the bad, as that such mens soules are carried of certaine Camels (there being some sixe thousand flying about in the ayre for this purpose) into the Sepulchres of wicked Christians, and that the good Christians are put in their emptie Sepulchres, inuicighing against the blasphemers of Mahomet, Christ and the Saints, exhorting to almes, rehearsing their commandements of the law. And if they preach scandalous doctrine, the Musfi and the Cadicscher depriue them, & correct them as heretikes: yea, some of them, for preferring Christ before Mahomet, are put to death; of which one Ibraim Schec a Priest of Constantinople (reported to haue wrought miracles amongst the Turkes in the daies of Soliman) was stoned to death, his head cut off, and his bodie burned; and of his Disciples some were beheaded, others thrust into the Gallies, for preferring Christ, and denying Mahomet. And were it not for the terrour of the sword there would be more innouations of religion: and some haue perswaded the Grand Signior, not to suffer the Alcoran to be so common to be read & interpreted of euery one; guilty of the absurdities therein contained. But to returne. After this preaching ended, two yong Clarks goe vp to him, & sing certaine prayers, which ended, the Priest againe beginneth to sing with the people in a base voyce, with wrigling euerie way for the space of halfe an houre, saying nothing but La illah, illellah, that is, there is but one God. And these ceremonies are done only on their Lenten fridaies. Their Lent is one Moone or moneth in the year, which, if this year it be Iuly, the next it shalbe Aug-

c Some say they are now lesse curious in this point.

gust, & so in order: that in twelue years they haue fasted all times of the yeare, making no other difference of meates then at other times, but eating only in the night. They prepare * themselues by diminishing their fare (not as the Christians at Shroue-tide) that they may the better endure it: for on the day, in which they fast, they will not so much as taste a cup of water, or wash their mouthes therewith, till the starres appeare: And eight or ten dayes after it beginneth, some Officers ride about the Towne, crying; Such a day beginneth the Fast, prepare yee, prepare yee; and when it is begun, the Cadi and Subassi, if they finde any shops open, or any body eating in the day, set him on an Ass backwards, with the taile in his hand, as Adulterers are punished. Neither will they suffer Jewes or Christians to scandalise their Turkes this way. And when their Lent is neare the end, they goe all to the Bathes and pluck off all their haïres, but of the head and beard, with an ointment for that purpose: they colour their nailes red with an enduring colour called Chua, with which they die also the tailes and feet of their horses; and the women their hands, feet, and priuie parts. This they doe in honour of their solemnity, which lasteth three daies with great feasting, in which nothing else but meates and drinks may be sold. They goe to the Sepulchres of the dead there to eat, full of gladnesse, and salute each other, saying; Baaram glutioczong, that is, God giue you a good Feast: and if they meete with a Jew or a Christian, woe vnto them. The Turkes keepe ^c another Easter, especially in Mecca, more solemn to the Tartars, Moores, and Arabians, then to the Turkes, except the Pilgrims, which resort thither. The Turkes say they are ^d circumcised, because they are the sonnes of Ismael, and because they may be cleane when they goe to their Temples, no filth lying hid vnder the skinne. At seuen or eight yeares of age, or later, this ceremonie is performed. The first thing they doe, is, to inuite many thither, both Turkes, Jewes, and Christians, besides the friends and kintred, to make the greater gaine, euery one giuing somewhat according to his abilitie. When the day is come, they which are inuited mount on horse-back, for else it is ^e no solemnitic, and goe to the house of the child, who being mounted on a faire horse richly clothed with a great Tullipant on his head, is carried to Church with a long speare borne before him, hauing a torch on the top worth a crowne, more or lesse, according to the state of the partie, adorned with Roses and Garlands, which with the speare is left a gift to the Church, the fees of the Priest: all the way they sound on instruments: after the sonne followeth the father, the kinred, and the rest of the friends, that sometimes there are a hundred horse; at Church they alight and accompanie the child to the Priest, which waiteth for them. Here one of the friends sitteth downe, and on his lap the child is set: presently another pulleth off his shooes, another holdeth his hands, and others his feet, and many hold him in talke with wordes, and these are the Gossips. The Priest seeing all things ready, taketh the end of the skinne of his yard, and draweth it out, and nippeth it with siuer Pinfers, so to mortifie it, and cut it off with lesse paine: then making him beleue he will deferre it till the next day, he riseth, the other holding him fast: and after, as if he had forgot somewhat to be done about it, with sizzers, which he holdeth closely in his hand, so dainly cutteth it off, and another layeth thereon a certaine powlder to ease the paine, and in fīue and twentie daies they looke to the curing of it, laying on it salt and marmalade of Quinces, and thence forwards he is called a Musulman. But his name is not then giuen him, but at his birth, and that according to their qualitie.

After the child is loosed, who to shew himselfe of courage, smileth, and listing vp his greatest finger saith those former words of their profession, and is againe mounted, and all the companie, after a little prayer and offering at the Church, with like pompe conueigh him home, where is great feasting prouision; some feast it three dayes together.

Amurath circumcised his sonne Mahomet at sixteene yeares old. Vnto which solemnitic many Christian Princes were solemnely inuited, who sent thither their Ambassadors with presents, who had there their scaffolds prepared for them, and furnished according to their states. The solemnitic lasted fortie dayes, and fortie nights, in the great Market-place of Constantinople. And to end these ^f solemnities, Mahomet the Prince was circumcised, not publikely, but in his fathers chamber, by Mechmet one of the inferior Bassas, sometime the Emperour Solymans Barbèr. And it is done of other Turkes also most commonly in the fathers house, not in the Church.

The Women-children about the same age among other women without other solemnitie, say over those wordes, La illah, &c. and likewise the renegado-Iewes; but the Christian renegadoes are carried about the streets of the Cities, with much solemnitie, and many gifts giuen them, besides freedome from tribute: many blinded by coquetoufnesse offer themselues to this circumcision. But if any for blasphemie against Mahomet, or iniurie to a Turke, bee by force circumcised, they haue no such gifts: which punishment the Cadilescher (by the testimonie of two accusing Turkes) inflicteth. And therefore to prevent the same, the Christians obtayne the grand Seigniours safe-conduct, that in cases of conscience they may not be iudged of any, except they were accused at the Court before the foure Bassas, and the Cadilescher of Constantinople, and that by the witnessse of Priests only which had not in twelue yeares drunke wine.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Sepulchres, Funerall-rites, and opinions touching the dead, among the Turkes:

Now, if you be wearie of viewing their Temples, and their prayers, and other ceremonies seeme tedious, I haue thought fit to present you with another sight, and to conclude with (that which is the conclusion of all flesh) a discourse of their Funeralls. When a Turke is sick and like to die, his friends visit him, and putting him in minde of his sinnes, aduise him with a penitent heart to bewaile them. Then doe certaine of their Priests, or one of his kinsmen, reade some Psalmes and Prayers. And if the pangs of death doe still continue, they bring him the Alcoran, or Curam, wherein is one Legend called Thebara Echelezi, which they reade-seuen times: and if hee shall die of that sicknesse, they thinke hee will die before they haue thrice read it: and if they see breath still remaine, they reade another Psalme called Iasinnel Curanil Hecim, to the end that the Deuill cause no impediment to his soule. When he is dead, they lay him forth in the midst of the house vpon Carpets, and place him on his right side, with his face toward the South. Then doe assemble certaine Priests to burie him, who bring with them a string of Beades (such as the Papiests vse in mumbling and numbering their deuotions) being a thousand of them, of lignum aloes, and therewith compass the body, and then say to euery one Subahan Alla, that is, God haue mercie on him, and turne it about foure or fise times. After this, their Priests (which are twentie or more) carie the corps into the Garden, and lay it on a Table two hands breadth from the ground, taking away his shirt, and couering his shame with a new cloth made of fine bombast, with warme water and sope wash him from top to toe: then doe they take two sheets of bombast, in which they wrap the corps, wetting the same with rose-water, perfumes, and odoriferous things, and laying him on the Beere, couer him quite ouer with his best garments, placing his turbant at the head thereof, all bedecked with floures. Then doe the Priests beginne their deuotions, and some of the companie take vp the Beere, carrying the same with the head forwards to the Meschit: the kinsmen follow, and the women remaine at home weeping, and make readie to eate for the Priests. When they come to the Church, they set him downe without doores, and goe and make an end of their seruice. After that, they carie him forth of the Citie to the buriall place: (for it is not lawfull to burie in their Cities) some prouide their Sepulchres in their life time, some haue them made after by their friends, either in their Gardens, or some solitarie place: They haue also common buriall places, as are our Church-yards, wherein are many Tombes of marble, brick, or other matter, according to the qualitie of the person.

b If it be a woman which is dead, the women take this care & paines about it, to lay her forth, &c.

If the deceased were a man of high condition, his horses are led with his corps, and his Tombe is adorned with many Epitaphs. And if he were a great Commander, those horses are saddled the contrarie way, and richly furnished, having certaine things hanged at their noses which cause them to neigh, as it were lamenting the losse of their Master. They carry also the truncheons of their Lances with their Standards and Ensignes, trailing along the ground. There are planted also about their Sepulchres violets and other pleasant floures. The common sort haue their Tombes of marble engrauen with letters.

When they are come to the place, with those sheets they let it into the graue, covering him on euery side with boordes, only on the face they lay a little earth, and there leaue him, and returne home, where they finde store of cheare, and there make a praier for his soule. ^a Georgionitz saith, that they make ouer the graue the forme of an Altar, lest the beasts should goe ouer it, and defile it. They also often repaire thither with teares, and set on the monument flesh, bread, wheate, eggs, milke, &c. which is done for the dead mans soule in almes to the poore, or to the birds, or ants, which they also account an act of mercie, no lesse meritorious then the other. The Priests haue siue aspers a peece giuen them for their paines. And if the partie be poore, they gather monie, to pay the Priests, and to discharge the funeralls. They weare blacks eight dayes in token of mourning: and those that are of great account, three dayes: at which time the friends of the dead assemble, and vsing some wordes of mutuall consolation, from thenceforth resume their wonted habite. Howbeit their kindred, specially of the female sexe, often repaire to the graues to lament there. Bellonius in his Observat. ^b obserueth, that they sew not the sheet at the head nor at the feet. The reason is, their dreame of certaine Angells, sent in commission presently after the buriall, to examine the deceased partie, into whom they say God hath then put a new spirit. These Angells Menavino calls Necbir and Remonchir, who come with dreadfull countenances and burning fire-brands, and examine him of his life, which if they finde wicked, they scourge him with fierie whips, if good, they become goodly Angells, and comfort him. Bellonius a little otherwise telleth, that those Angells (which he calleth Guanequir and Mongir) come, the one with an yron hammer, the other with a hooke, which set the corps vpon his knees, and put a new soule into it; and then aske if hee haue believed Mahomet and obserued his precepts, if he haue done good workes, kept their Lent, paid his Tithes, giuen almes. Of which, if hee can giue good account, they depart from him, and two other Angells come in their places, white as snow, and one of them puts his armes, in stead of a pillow, vnder his head, the other sits at his feet, and defends him vntill the day of iudgement. But if hee satisfie not the demands of those black Angells, hee with the yron mallet strikes him at one blow therewith nine fadome vnder the ground: and neither of them ceaseth, the one with his hammer, the other with his hooke, to torment the deceased partie vntill the day of iudgement. For this cause the Turkes write vpon their dead carkasses the name Croco, and make their Sepulchres hollow, that they may haue roome to kneele, and some lay boords ouer, that no earth fall in. The feare hereof makes them in their morning prayer to say; Lord God, from the questioning of the two Angells, the torment of the graue, and the euill iournie, deliuer me, Amin. Yea, hence are the prayers which the Turkes, Men and Women, say at the graues of the dead, for deliuerie from these Angells.

^d The Turkish Curaam doth not agree in all things with the Alcoran, as appeareth by comparing the text of the one and quotations of the other.

Concerning the day of iudgement, they ^e hold that there is an Angell standing in Heauen named Israphil, holding alway a Trumpet in his hand prepared against Gods command, to sound the consummation of the World. For at the sound thereof, all Men and Angells shall die, for so they finde it written in their ^d Curaam, which Booke is of high authoritie with them. The Turkish Doctores would dissent from that opinion of the Angells mortalitie, if this Booke would giue them leaue: for to contradict the authoritie thereof is punished with fire, or else their Tongues are pulled out of their heads. They hold, that after this dismall sound shall bee a great Earthquake, which shall tumble Mountaynes and Rocks from their places, and grinde them to meale. After this, God will returne to make anew the light, and the Angells as before, and will cause to fall a pleasant raine called Rehemet sui, that is, the raine of mercie: and so shall the earth remaine fortie dayes, although those dayes shall be of a larger size then these. Many also holde, that from thenceforth there shall be no darknesse of the night, as now, but that it shall be most cleare; neyther shall there need any more sleepe for the sustentation of our bodies.

After fortie dayes God will command Israphil to sound his Trumpet the second time, at which sound all the dead shall be raised againe by the will of God, the dead euen from Abel to the end of the world, throughout all the earth, hearing the sound thereof, and rising in manner as they were buried. Amongst them shall be seene diuers faces and countenances, some shining as the Sunne, many like the Moone, many as the Starres. Others shall be obscure and darke, and others with hogges faces, with swolne tongues. Then shall euery one crie Nessi, Nessi, that is, Woe is me wretch who haue suffered my selfe to be overcome with my filthie lusts. The Angels shall with their fingers point at the faces which shine, which are they that haue wrought good workes, and shall shew them to one another. The wicked shall haue enuy thereat. They say, that those with faces like hogs, are such as haue bin vsurers; and those with the swolne tongues, liers and blasphemers. There shall be others troden vnder foote, to wit, the proude persons of this world. God, say they, will then demand account of the Kings, Princes, Emperors, and Tyrants, which vse oppression and violence. ¶ Then shall God diuide this raised company into seuentie parts, all which shall be examined, presenting their sins before their eyes, and all that they haue in this world done well or ill: wherto he shall need no testimony; euery member bearing witnes against it selfe of the deeds, yea, and very thoughts. There shall be also Michael the Angel, holding in his hand the ballance of diuine iustice, and shall weigh soules, & distinguish the good from the bad. There shall be Moses with his Standard, vnder which shall all the obseruers of his lawe be assembled. Neare to him shall be Iesus Christ, the son of the virgin Mary, with another great Standard, & al his Christians, the obseruers of his faith. On the other side shall be Mahomet with his standard and faithfull Mahumetans: they which haue done good shall be all gathered vnder the said standards, where they shall haue a pleasant shadow; the rest shall be extremely scorched by the heat of the Sun, according to the measure of their sinnes. Thus shall both parts abide, till God shall pronounce his eternal sentence. When that doome is pronounced, the Angels shall stand diuided in squadrons, all alike adorned, the Seraphins on one side, the Cherubins on the other: of the which, one part shall sound instruments of diuers sorts, and the other shall sing hymnes: and many shall stand at the gates of Paradise, singing & gratulating the blessed soules which haue obserued the diuine Precepts; Christians, Iews, Turks, & Moors, being all of equall beauty & beatitude, if they haue don well. But sinners shall be known asunder. They affirme also, that God wil giue those soules of Paradise a large space in heauen for their cuerlasting habitation, goodly & shining. They shall also haue Barachi, Sun beames, on which they may ride and take their view round about Paradise, of the pretious delights therein. There shall they haue pleasant fruits, and if they eate one apple, two shall grow in the roome; and to quench their thirst, they shall haue riuers cleare as crytall, sweet as sugar, by drinking of which their sight & vnderstanding shall increase, in such sort, that they shall see from one Pole to the other. The meats which they eate, shall consume by a subtile kind of sweat. Further they say, they shall haue their women called Iri, that is, shiuing, which shall euery day be Virgins, with which they shall continue for euer. Neyther shall there be any danger of olde age; the men alway being as of thirty years olde, the women of fiftene or twentie. Those three Standard-bearers shall be the principall, each of them hauing a peculiar part of Paradise assigned him for his dominion.

Paradise.

Those which for their bad deeds shall be condemned to hell, shall be all known by proper names, which they shall beare in their fore-heads: and they shall beare the number and greatnesse of their sins on their shoulders. Thus shall they be led betweene two mountaines where Hell is situate, at the mouth whercof is a most venomous serpent: and from one mountaine to another is a bridge thirty miles long, which is so made, that they ascend on the first part, the other part is plaine, the last descendeth. This bridge (say they) is made of thinne yron and sharpe: (they call it Serat Cuplissi, that is, the bridge of Iustice.) Vpon this shall passe the sinners with the heauy weight of their sinnes vpon their shoulders: and they which haue not beene altogether euill shall not fall into Hell, but into Purgatorie : but the other shall sodainely be plunged into the bottom of Hell, where they shall burne, more or lesse, according to the quantity of the fire of their sinnes, which they haue carried out of this world : and after the burning they turne to be refreshed, and presently againe to the fire. In the middes of Hell they say is a tree full of fruit, euery apple being like to the head of a Diuell, which groweth Greene in the middes of all those flames, called Zoaccus Agacci, or the tree of Bitternesse, and the soules that shall eat thereof, thinking to refresh themselues, shall so finde them, and by them and their paines in Hell, they shall grow madde. And the Diuels shall binde them with chaines of fire, and shall dragge them vp and downe through hell. Those soules which sometime shall name God in their ayde, they say, after many yeares, shall goe into Paradise; and none shall remaine in Hell, but such as despaire of their saluation and Gods mercie. Thus saith Menauino. To this agreeth Bellonius, and addeth, that in the day of Iudgement, they beleue a resurrection of the Birds and Beasts : and that the Rammes which they kill at their Easter, shall goe into Paradise : and therefore, though one should serue, they kill many. For the Booke of Zuma saith, that those Rammes shall pray for their Sacrificers in the day of Iudgement. It tellet that the Starres are hanged in the ayre by golden chaines, to watch lest the Diuels should learne the secrets of Paradise, and reueale them to Sooth-sayers. Also, that the Ramme which Abraham offered in stead of his sonne, was a blacke one, which had bene nourished fortie yeares in Paradise; that Mah. shall be turned at the end of the world into a Ramme; and the Turkes into Fleas; whom he shall carry sticking to him, out of Hell into Paradise, and there shake them off, where they shall again receiue the formes of Turkes: That he shall wash them with the water of that Fountaine in Paradise, to purge the blackenesse which they got by the scorching of Hell, from whence he will deliuer all good Turkes.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the religious Votaries amongst the Turkes, and of their Saints.

TO proceed vnto the differences of opinion amongst the Turkes : Septemcastrensis (who liued very many yeares amongst them) saith, that although they consent against Christ, yet doe they much dissent amongst themselves, wresting the Alcoran to their purposes, and scarcely one of a hundreth agreeing with his fellow about Mahomet and their Lawe. And besides their differences in Ceremonies, there are, saith he, foure sects differing in maine grounds of Religion; which would not be appeased without bloud, if they feared not the higher power, and were not thereby kept in awe. One of these sects is that of the Priests, holding that none can be saued, but by the Lawe of Mahomet. The second, of heir religious Dermeschler, reputed the Successors of the Saints, the friends of God and Mahomet, who are of opinion, that the Lawe profiteth nothing, but the grace of God : and these ground their opinions on miraculous illusions, of which he reporteth one in the time of Amurath the second, who examining this contention betwixt these Seculars and Regulars, and being purposed to giue sentence in the behalfe of the Priests, and against the religious, one of these Dermeschler appearing to him in a Vision, (others also ground Faith on Visions) and deliuering him out of a great danger, altered his minde : for going to the stoole in the night, the boords gaue way, and he fell in, staying on a crosse timber, where this religious man in their wonted habite appeared to him, and bid him now vse the helpe of his Priests for his deliuerance. This after so affected the King, that himselfe became a religious man till the necessitie of State-affaires compelled him to resume his gouernement. (He that listeth may compare with this, Dunstons deuises for his Regulars :) The third he calleth Czofilar speculariue men; which Sect is founded on Tradition, holding that they are saued by Merit, without Law or Grace. These are verie earnest in prayers, neuer ceasing; and meeting in the night, and sitting in a Circle they begin to say, Layla illalsch, with a Visions and Apparitions among the Turkes as well as among the Papists.

with shaking their heads till they fall downe senselesse : these three sorts are manifest to the people, and as it were of equall esteeme with them: The fourth are called Horise, that is, Heretikes, holding, that euery man is sau'd in his owne Lawe, and all Lawes to be alike good to the obseruers; these are burned if they be taken.

Strange it is, that he reporteth of the miraculous workes of some of them, that they may seeme (as he saith) incarnate Diuels: Some going naked, with their priuities onely hidden, and some of these are impassible, besides the violence of Winter and Summer, induring, like stones, the branding with fire, or wounding with sword: some seldome eate or drinke, and some not at all: others, but from hand to mouth: some are perpetually silent, hauing no conuersation with men, of which he saith he saw one; and some haue their supernaturall traunces or rauishments: some dwell amongst men, some by themselues apart, and some in Wildernesse: some keepe hospitalitie in Cities, at least to harbour men, if they haue not food for them: some carrying about water in leather bagges, giuing it to all, and demanding nothing for the same, except any voluntarily gratifie them. Some inhabite at the Sepulchres of the Sainrs, keeping the same, and liuing on the vov'es and offerings of the people, not obseruing the washings and ceremonies of the Lawe. As concerning those Water-carriers, Nicholas Nicholay saith, that he hath seene in a morning at Constantinople fiftie of those Sacquas (so he calleth them) in a company, all furnished with their scrips of leather, full of Cisterne or Fountaine-water hanging on their side, with cuppes of fine Corinthian latten, gilded and damaskined, bearing in the same hand a Looking-glasse, which they holde before the eyes of them whom they giue to drinke, admonishing them to thinke on death: and if any giue them any thing, they out of a Mioll cast on their faces sweete smelling water. He telleth of some that would seeme to liue a solitary life amongst beasts, but indeede liue in shops in most popular Cities, the walls whereof are couered with skins of diuers beasts, and vpon the hornes thereof they hang tallow Candles. In the midst of this their sacred shop standeth a stoole couered with a greene cloth, and vpon the same a great latten Candle-sticke, without any Candle. Moteouer, they haue painted a Cimiterre hung in the midst, in memory of Haly, who forsooth with his sword cut the rockes in sunder: and they breed vp with them beasts, as Bulls, Beares, Harts, Rauens, Eagles; so that in stead of their liuing with beast, beasts liue with them. And if sufficient be not brought to their shops, they with one of these beasts in their hand goe about the streets begging.

Miracles as well with the Turkes as Papists.

Mock-eremites.

In the armie of the Turkes that assaulted Malta in the yeare 1565. were ^b thirteene thousand of a certaine kinde of men amongst the Turkes, which liue of the reuenues of the Church, who had at Constantinople ^c vowed their liues for their superstition. Antono Pagifetta ^d reporteth, that as the Emperors Ambassadors were conueyed from the presence of the great Turke to their lodging, by the Ianizaries and their Agas, there were amongst them certaine religious men, called Haagi, which vse to follow the Ianizaries, who continually turning about, and in their going singing, or rather howling certaine Psalmes or Prayers for the great Sultans welfare, made them wonder that they fell not downe for giddinesse. And this my friend Mr. Simons hath seene them doe, taking one another by the hand in a ring; and so continuing their whirlegigg-deuotions with continuall turnings (fitly agreeing to so giddie and brainsicke a Religion) till with the great applause of Turkes, and admiration of others, sweat and a long-protracted wearinesse makes an end of thic dauncing their round.

But amongst all their orders of Religion, Nicholas Nicholay, ^e and before him Menavino, reckon foure which are most common amongst them, the Giamailer, the Calender, the Dernisi, and the Terlachi.

e N.N. l. 3, c. 15
& Christoph. Riberius.

The Giamailer are for the most part faire young men, of rich houses, which giue themselues to trauell through diuerse Regions, at other mens charges, vnder colour of Religion; carrying with them none other apparrell then a little Cassocke, of purple colour, girt with a girdle of silke and golde; vpon the ends whereof hang certaine cimballs of siluer, mixt with some other cleare-sounding mettall: and they doe ordinarily weare sixe or seuen of these about their girdles, and vnder their knees. In stead of a cloake they are couered with the skinne of a Lion or Leopard, being whole and and in his naturall haire, which they make fast vpon their breast, by the two former legges. All the rest of their bodies are bare; sauing that they weare great Rings on their eares, and a kinde of sandalls on their feet, their haire groweth long like womens, disheueled ouer their shoulders. They beare in one of their handes a Booke, written in the Persian language, full of amorous Sonets. And thus with their voyces and cimbals, they make pleasant musicke, especially if they meete some faire stripling, whom they set in the midst of them, and incompasse with their Morice-musicke. These are the Pilgrims of loue; and vnder pretext of Religion doe draw vnto them the hearts of women and yonglings, and are called the men of the Religion of loue, vnto which order of Religion youth is prone more then enough. The partakers of their musicke ordinarily impart to them of their coine.

f Nic. Nic. 16.

The Calender ^f is of a contrary profession to the former, glorying of abstinence and chasticitie. They haue for their dwelling certaine little Churches, which they call Techie, ouer the gates whereof they doe write these or like wordes, Cæda normas, dilersincuscunge al, cacbecciur: that is, they which will enter into their Religion, must doe workes like theirs, and remaine in their Virginitie. These Calenders are clothed with a little short coate without sleeues, after the fashion of a haire-cloth, made of wooll and horse-haire, and doe not let their haire grow long, but cut the same, and couer their heads with felt hats, like the Priests of Græcia, about which hang certaine strings, about the breadth of an hand, made of horse haire: in their eares, and about their neckes and armes they weare great rings of iron. They pierce the skin vnder their priuy member, thrusting thorow the same a ring of an indifferent bignesse and weight, to barre them from venerie, if they were thereunto otherwise willing. They also goe reading of certaine songs, made by one of their Order, called Nerzimi, the first Saint and Martyr, after their reckoning, of their Religion, who for certaine words spoken against the law of Mahomet, was in Azamia flaide quicke. Menauino ^g saith, he had read some of his writings agreeing with the Christian faith in many points. Some ^h say, he was martyred for confessing Christ.

g Lib. 2. c. 10.
h Policy of the Turkish Empire,

The Dernis goe bare-headed, and cause their head and beard to be cut with a Rasor, and all the hairie partes of their bodie: and burne also their Temples with a hot iron, or an olde peece of cloth burnt; hauing their eares pierced, wherein they doe weare certaine great rings of Iasper. All their cloaths are two sheepes or goat skins, the haire therof being dried in the Sun, one before, and the other behinde, embracing the body in forme of a girdle, otherwise naked, Winter and Summer. They dwell without the Cities in Suburbes and Villages. Thus vnder the colour of Religion they roame vp and downe, and make no conscience to rob, kill, and murder (if they finde themselues the stronger, with a small Hatchet which they beare vnder their girdle) all men of whatsoeuer law or nation. They are fornicators, and most detestable in that most detestable sinne of Sodomie. For shew of holinesse they eate of a certaine herbe ⁱ called Matslach, the violent operation wherof maketh them to become madde, so as through a certaine furie, they with a certaine Knife or Rasor, doe cut their neckes, stomacks and thighes, vntill they be full of most horrible wounds; which to heale, they lay vpon them a certaine hearbe, letting it lie vpon their kurt, vntill it be altogether consumed into ashes, suffering in the meane time extreme paine with maruellous patience. Thus doe they imitate their Prophet Mahomet, who, through abstinence in his denne, fell into such a furie (say they) that he would haue throwne himselfe from the toppe of it. And therefore fooles and mad men are in great reuerence; yea, they account such for Saints: and if such mad men strike or rob them, they take it in good part, and say they shall haue good lucke after it. They erect stately monuments ouer such mad mens graues, as at Aleppo, ^k one Sheh Boubac (who being mad, went alwayes naked) being dead, they built an house ouer his graue, where to this day (saith our Author) there are lampes burning day and night; and many of these Daruises there maintained, to look to his Sepulchre, and to receiue the offerings of such as come, as many do euery weeke out of Aleppo. If any be sicke or in danger, they vow to offer money or other things to Sheh Boubac if they recouer.

i This seemes to be the same hearbe which Menauino calleth Afferal.

k Eiddulph ep. Fooles are esteemed beloved of God: if such be Christians they circumsise them by force, and esteeme them Saints, saying, God hath made him a foole, thus to be saued by their meanes.

The same account they make of one Sheh Mahammet a madde man, yet liuing in Aleppo, Aleppo, going naked with a Spit on his shoulder. Men and women will come and kisse his hand, or some other part of his bodie, and aske him counsell, for they hold that madde mens soules are in heauen talking with God, and that he reuealerh secrets to them. And euen the Bassaes themselues will kisse and consult with this Oracle. Hard I deeme it to say whether is the madde man. In a late victorie against the Christians, they affirme that this Sheh Mahammet was seene in the field many thousand miles distant, fighting against their enemies, whom by his helpe they ouercame.

But to returne to our Daruises, this our Author saith, that oftentimes great Bassaes, in displeasure with the Emperour, will retire themselues into this Order, as the Hospitall and Sanctuarie of their diseased and dangerous state. Their witnesse is of better account then any other mans, although he were an Emir, or of the kindred of Mahomet. They liue of almes, as the other Religious doe, which they begge in the name of Haly. They haue ^a in Natolia a sepulchre of a Saint called by them Scidibattal, who (say they) conquered the most part of Turkie, and about the place of the sepulchre is an habitation and couent, where, about fise hundred of these Deruises dwell: and there once in the yeare they keepe a generall assembly, in which their Superiour (whom they call ^b Affambaba) is present and President; their Counsell or Chapter consisting (saith Menaninus) of about eight thousand of their Order. One of these Deruissars ^c drawing neere vnto Baiazet the second, as if he would haue receiued an almes of him, desperately assailed him with a short Scimitar, which he closely hid vnder his hypocritical habit. But Baiazet by the starting of his horse (afraid of this hobgoblin) auoided the deadly blow, but not vnwounded: neither had hee so escaped, had not Ishender Bassa with his horse-mans Mace presently strucke downe the desperate villaine, as hee was redoubling his blow, who was forthwith rent in peeces by the souldiers. Baiazet thereupon proscribed all them of that superstitious Order, and banished them out of his Empire. The like (as Septemcastrensis saith) they had attempted against Mahomet his father in his youth, while Amurath was yet liuing. And in our dayes Mehemet or Muhemet, the great Visier Bassa, who swayed almost wholly and onely that mightie Empire (as appeareth in the historie of that State) in the dayes of Soliman, Selym, and Amurath, and as Master Harborne relateth, was esteemed to possesse two and twentie millions of gold, was not assaulted only, but murdered by one of these Deruissars. For whereas it is a custome of the great men, that at ordinarie houres all their Chaplaines, or Priests, assemble themselues in the Diuano, there together mumbling their superstitions: and this Deruissar ^d ordinarily thither admitted, vpon an old grudge, for that Mehemet had before depriued him of a souldiers place and pension, when the Visier sate there to giue publike audience, sitting right against him, after his Mumpsimus finished, the Visier reaching vnto him his wonted almes, hee with a dagger closely before provided, stabs him into the breast, and was therefore of Mehemets slaues with exquisite torments done to death. In their great Counsel before mentioned, there are yong men clothed in white, which tell the most memorable obseruations in their trauailes, which they present to the Affambaba in writing, subscribed with their names. On the Friday they vse after prayer and eating, the herbe ^e Afferal, to reade the same with dances, and after their dance (which is about a huge fire, made of as much wood as an hundred beasts can carrie) they cut the skinne of their armes, legges, or breasts, engraving some figure thereon, whereto they after apply ashes and vrine. In the doing hereof they vtter this speech: This I cut for the loue of such a woman. Vpon the last day of their Feast, they take leaue of their Governour, and depart in troupes like souldiers with banners and drummes; and so returne to their owne Monasteries.

The Torlaquis by other called Durmislurs, cloath themselues with sheeps and goats skins, like vnto the Dernis: about the same they wrap about them in maner of a cloake the skin of a great Beare, with the haire, made fast vpon their stomacke with the legs: vpon their heads they weare a white bonnet of felt folded with small plaits, hauing the rest of their bodies altogether naked. They also burne their Temples as the former. A beastly generation. For they know not, nor will learne to reade, write, or doe any ciuill profitable act, but liue idly vpon almes, roaguing thorow the Countrie alone, and in troupes thorow the deserts, robbing such as they meete handsomely apparelled, causing sing them to goe as they doe, naked. They professe palmistry and fortune-telling, the people seeing and feeding them for such vanities. And sometimes they carrie with them an old man, whom they worship as a God: lodging themselues neere the best house of the Towne where they come. And there this new numen, and old impostor, faining himselfe rauished in spirit, pronounceth graue words and spirituall commandments; at sundrie times lifting vp his eyes to heauen, and after turning to those his disciples, willeth them to carie him from thence, for some imminent iudgement there to be executed, as is revealed to him. They then pray him to auert that danger by his prayer, which he accordingly doth: which the people (deluded by their hypocrisies) reward with large bencuolence, at which they after amongst themselues doe merrily scoffe. They eate also of the herbe Maislatz, and sleepe vpon the ground naked of cloathes and shame, and commit also abominable Sodomitic. And thus much of their disorderly orders of an irreligious Religion. He that will reade more at large of them, let him reade the booke of the Policie of the Turkish Empire, which out of Menauino discourseth more largely of these things, and other the Turkish rites.

Septemcastrensis f telleth of certaine Saints of exceeding estimation for holinesse, whose sepulchres are much frequented of deuout Votaries: as that of Sedichasi (which signifieth a holy Conquerour) in the confines of Caramania. Another is called Hatschepettesch, that is, the Pilgrimes helpe. Another is Ascikpassa who helpeth in loue-matters, and for children, in barrenesse. Another Vanpassa, for concord: and Scheychpassa, in trouble and affliction: and Goi or Muschin or Bartschinpassa, inuoked for their cattle: and Chidirelles for traouellers, to whom he sometime appeareth as a traoueller; and any one that hath extraordinarily liued, is reputed a Saint after his death.

h Dan. 3. 27.

They haue many whose names I remember not (saith he) in like reuerence with them, as are the Apostles with vs. When they would seeke for things lost, they goe to one Saint; when they are robbed, they go to another; and for the knowledge of things secret, they repaire to a third. They haue their Martyrs, and Miracles, and Reliques. Thus they tell of certaine religious men condemned wrongfully, for suspicion of treason, to the fire; which they entred without harme (as h those three companions of Daniel) and their shooes were hanged vp for a monument. Their Nephesoghli, that is, soules or persons begotten of the holy Spirit (such is their fancie) without seed of man, they hold in such reputation, that they account themselues happie, which can do them any good, yea that can touch them: and if their haire be laid vpon any, they say that their sicknesses are cured.

i Septemcast. cap. 18.

In this reputation of sanctitie, they haue a certaine old woman, which hauing a dog with her (in her pilgrimage to Mecca) readie to die for thirst, made water in her hand, and gaue it to the dogge: which charitable act was so highly accepted, that a voyce was presently heard from heauen, saying, This day thou shalt be in Paradise. And at the same time she was caught vp bodie and soule into heauen: and hereupon are they liberal to their dogges. If this crosse an opinion, which some Saracens hold, that women come not to Paradise, no maruell seeing falsehood is commonly contrarie both to the Truth, and it selfe. He that would reade the miraculous tales which they tell of their Saints, may haue recourse to that namelesse Author, which of his countrey is called, and heere often cited by the name, Septemcastrensis: who telleth i of his Master and his Mistris their deuotion and vowes to Goi and Mirtschin, for preseruation of their cattell, sometimes miraculous (so readie is the Diuell with his sauing destruction, and destroying preseruation) yea hee saith, that the Diuell doth turne himselfe amongst them into an Angell of light, with such effectuall illusions, that there are scene, or (at least) beleeued amongst them, the dead raised to life, diseases of all sorts cured, secrets of the hearts disclosed; treasures, long before hidden in the ground, revealed: and besides, such ostentation, and shew of dissembled holinesse, that they may seeme not to come short of the Fathers and Apostles in that behalfe: if bodily exercise were the triall of sanctitie.

k Busbequins ap. 1.

Busbequins k telles, that they haue like conceit of one Chederles, amongst them, as some superstitious persons haue of Saint George, and the Turkes affirme to be the same:

The

The Deruis haue a great Temple dedicated in his honor at Theke Thioi, not farre from Amasia, the chiefe Citie of Cappadocia, The Countrey and both Legends agree, for the killing of the Dragon, deliuering the virgin, &c. They say that he trauelled many countries, and at last came to a riuer, the waters whereof yeelded immortality to the drinker, and now cannot be seene. Chederles hereby freed from death, rides about euery where on his horse (which thence also dranke in immortality) and delighteth in battells, taking part with the best cause: and to make vp the tale, they say he was one of the companions of Alexander the Great; they affirme, that Alexander was Salomons chiefe Captaine, and Iob his high steward. In that Moschee or Temple at Theke Thioi is a fountaine of water, which they say, sprang vp of the staling of Chederles horse. Like stories haue they of his horse-keeper, and nephew, whose sepulchres they shew, where deuout pilgrimes obtaine many blessings. They shew for reliques the peeces of the shoes which Chederles his horse brake in that Dragon-fight, and vse the same in drinke against agues and head-aches. These places are full of Dragons and Vipers. Sultan Murat Chan,^m or Amurath the second in a battaile against the Christians, vsed this prayer, O righteous God; giue vs strength and victorie, O Muhamet, O Mustapha the top of glorie, by abundance of miracles, by the abundance of Gaib-erenlers, which are friends to the Musulmans, and walke inuincible, by the abundance of the Cheders, grant vs victorie. In the timeⁿ of Vrchan, or Orchanes the sonne of Ottoman, they say these Gaib-erenlers appeared on white horses in a battell against the Christians, and slew them. These (they say) are friends to the Islams, that is, Catholike, or right-beleeuing Musulmans, and are diuine protectors of the Imania or Mahumetan law. Such tales you may reade in the Spanish relations of the West Indies, as at the battell of Tauasco,^o where a strange horse-man discomfited the Indians, &c. And our inuocation of God and Saint George, is rather Turkish, then truely Christian: For God alone ^p is our strength, which teacheth our hands to fight, and our fingers to battell: and ^q whom haue I in heauen but thee, and I haue desired none in earth with thee? As for George and Chederles I know them both alike in matter of Inuocation, saue that it is worse to abuse to impietic a Christian name then a Turkish: and King Edward the third seemed to inuoke Edward as much as George, Ha Saint Edward, ha Saint George (saith Thomas Walsingham.) But that of George is rather an Embleme of euery Christian, as not onely the heroique Muse of our Spenser^r in Poeticall fiction, but the Diuiner of great Diuines,^s in their iudiciall censure haue manifested. It seemeth that the Chederles and Gaib-erenlers are diuers: and perhaps that Martiall Nation in conquest of the Christians of those parts, would soone reconcile themselues to that martiall Saint, and drinke in those further deuotions which his horse pissed. Such Emblemes were those of Christopher, Catherine, George, which the Papists inuocate as Saints; an error proceeding from those pictures (as it seemeth) in Churches, according to that of the Prophet,^t The stocke is a doctrine of vanitie, and ^u the Image a teacher of lies. The ruder posteritie in that mist of Antichrist, and smoak from the bottomlesse pit, not being able to discern an Embleme and Historie asunder, haue made Saint George the Mars^x of the Christians, quem nostra inuentus Pro Mauorte colit. Bellarmino^y strugleth much, rather then hee will lose his Saint, and yet confesseth the Historie Apocryphall. Baronius^z his fellow Cardinall, but beyond in truth, acknowledgeth it an Image of a Symbole, rather then of a Historie, which Iacobus de Voragine without good authoritie, in his Golden Legend maketh historicall. He saith the Virgin representeth some Prouince, which imploereth the Martyrs helpe against the Diuell. But Hyperius^a and Villauscentius Possenini interpret it more fitly, to signifie the Church assaulted by the Diuell, protected by the Christian Magistrate: in which respect our Defender of the Faith, may iustly be termed the Patron of that renowned Order, which hath now learned their George to be symbollicall, not a Cappadocian, and (as Princes of ^b Gods husbandrie, which gaue name to Saint George) to fight against the Dragon, and the beast with hornes like the Lamb, but speaking like the Dragon. As for the Popish George, Baronius also hath another originall from the Artians, worshipped of them for a Martyr. But if any would be further acquainted with this Knightly Saint, let him resort to Doctor Rainolds his larger Discourse touching these Romish Idolatries.

l Alexander Mag. was also one of their Saints.

CHAP. XIII.

Of their Priests, and Hierarchie: with a digression touching the Hierarchie and miserie of Christians subject to the Turke.

After the discourse of their Regulars (which in estimation of deuotion haue with the Turkes, and therefore in this Historie, the first place) their Secular Priests follow to be considered. These are of differing degrees, which Menauino^a thus reckoneth: first the Cadilescher, vnder which the Mofii or Mufti; the third the Cadi; and after these (in subordinate orders) the Modecis, Antippi, Imam, Merzini, and besides these the Sophi. A certaine Ragusian,^b in an Oration before Maximilian the Emperour doth not much disagree: but for Cadilescher, hee calleth the first Pescherchadi, whereof (he saith) there are two, one in Romania, the other in Natolia, chiefe Iudges of the armie, hauing power to reuerse the sentence of the Emperour, if it be against the law of Mohomer. A second Magistrate (saith he) is called Muchii, the chiefe interpreter of the law, from whose sentence is no appeale.

Nic. Nicolai^c saith the same of their two Cadileschers, and that they are chosen out of their most learned Doctours of their Law, and alway follow the Court and with the consent of the Bassaes, constitute and depose the Cadi; hauing for their annuall stipend seuen thousand or eight thousand ducats, besides their ordinarie gaines. They haue ten Secretaries kept at the Grand Seigniors charge, and two Moolorbassis, which are busied about the horses: they haue also two hundred or three hundred slaues. They vse few words, but such as are of their Law and Religion altogether, with very much shew of grauitie. Arnabene^d (in his Preamble to the Italian Alcoran) maketh Cadilescher^e to be a generall name to all their orders of Priests. Others doe place the Mufti in the highest place, and the Cadilescher in the second ranke: and perhaps others gaue the Cadilescher the first place, because their life was more in action and gouernment, as attending on the Court, and on the warres: but the Mufti being highest Interpreter of their law (though without gouernment) must indeed haue preeminence. And so Menauino^e seemeth to affirme, who, though he placeth the Cadilescher first, yet saith, that^f when happily appeale is made from his sentence, they haue recourse to the Mofii. And this opinion is now generall and most current, which ascribeth to the Mufti the chiefe place.

Master Harborn, sometime Embassador into Turkie for Englands Queen (the worlds wonder our Westerne Hesperus, that shined so far ouer and beyond all Christendom, into the East; but my words are too base to vsheer in that renowned name) Elizabeth, thus reporteth. The Turkes doe holde for head and chiefe of their Religion the Mufti (the choyce of whom is made by the great Turke himselfe) such a one as is knowne to be wise and learned, and chiefly of a good life. His authoritie is so esteemed, that the Emperour will neuer alter a determination made by him. He intermedleth in all matters as best him liketh, whether they be ciuill or criminall, yea, or of State. And yet he hath no power to command; but it is in each mans free libertie, when there happeneth any doubt of importance, to make in some few words by writing, a declaration of his matter, in forme of a question: to whom the said Mufti, in a writing likewise (called Zetfa) giueth a brieue answer containing his iudgement thereon. This Zetfa, brought to the Iudge, is the rule of his sentence; provided, that the declaration, made before to the Mufti, contained no vntruth. Also the Grand Signior, to shew that he is religious and iust, doth serue himselfe of the authoritie of this Mufti in affaires of warre and peace, demanding his iudgement (in manner aforesaid;) by this course, the subjects being inclined to more forward obedience. But yet the Mufti will commonly flatter him, and leane to that part, to which he seeth him incline: as in the time of Selim the second, the Mufti hauing discovered the Emperours intent to warre vpon Cyprus, approued the same in his Zetpha. But after, vpon great offers made to Mehemet the Visier, to breake that resolution, the Mufti, by him wonne to fauour the matter, matter, affirmed still, that the warre against Cyprus was good and iust, but that his Maiestie had a greater obligation in conscience, which he was bound to take in hand, namely, to procure the recouit of the Moores in Spaine, there oppressed by the Christians, wherein he was so bold with the Emperour, as to tell him to his face, that if he did neglect the cause of those Mahumetans, hee might bee thereunto by his subiects compelled.

Concerning the Musti, and other steppes of their Hierarchie, Master ^a Knolles writeth, That the Turkes haue certaine Colledges called Medresse, at Constantipole, Andrinople, Bursia, and other places, in which they liue, and studie their prophane Diuinitie and Law, and haue among them nine seuerall steps or degrees vnto the highest dignitie.

The first is called Sofsi, which are yong students. The second are Calsi, who are readers vnto the first. The third Hogi, writers of bookes (for they will suffer no Printing.) The fourth are Napi, or yong Doctors, which may supplie the place of Iudges, in their absence. The fift Caddi, Iudges of their Law, and Iustices to punish offenders; of which there is one at least in euery Citie through the Turkish Dominion: and are knowne from other men by their huge Turbants, two yards in compasse. The sixt are Muderisi, which ouersee the Caddies doings, and are as Suffragans to their Bishops; who are the seuenth sort, and are called Mulli, which place and displace Church-men at their pleasure. The eight, Cadelescari, who are but two great and principal Iudges or Cardinals, the one of Græcia, the other of Natolia: and these two sit euery day in the Diuano among the Bassaes, and are in great reputation. The ninth is the Musii, who is among the Turkes, as the Pope among the Roman Catholikes. When the Bassaes punish any offence against their Law, they send to him. He may not abase himselfe to sit in the Diuano, neither when he comes into the presence of the Grand Seignior, will he vouchsafe to kisse his hand, or to giue any more reuerence, then he receiueth. The great Sultan ariseth to honor him, when hee comes vnto him, and then they both sit downe face to face, and so talke and conferre together. No man can ascend to this place, but by the dignities aforesaid.

Mahomet ^b the third, forced by a tumult of the Ianizaries to present himselfe vnto them, came accompanied with the Musii, and some few others of the reuerend Doctors of their Law, who were by the Sultan commanded to sit downe, whiles the great Bassaes abode standing. Such respect is had to these men. Thus much Knolles.

In the booke ^c of the Policie of the Turkish Empire, it is said, that the Musies authority is like to that of the Iewish high Priest, or Roman Pope. I rather esteeme it like to that of the Patriarkes of Alexandria, Antioch, &c. as binding not all Mahumetans, but the Turkes only: whereas the one had, the other challenge a subiection of all, which professe their religion. That Author also affirmeth, that whensoever the Musii goeth abroad forth of his owne house (which he vseth to doe very seldome) his vse and custome is, first to go and visit the Emperour; who as soone as he seeth him comming to salute him, and do him reuerence, presently ariseth out of his seat, and embracing him with great kindnesse, entertaineth him very friendly and louingly, causing him to sit downe by him, and giuing him the honor of the place.

His authoritie, saith ^d Soranzo, is so great, that none will openly contradict the Musies sentence: but yet if the Emperour be setled in a resolution, the Musii with feare or flatterie inclines vnto him.

Next to the Musii is the Cadilescher, who being also chosen by the Emperour, may be compared to those, whom the Christians call Patriarches, or else to the Primats and Metropolitans of a Kingdome. Of these there are now in this encreased greatnesse of the Turkish Empire, three: whereas it seemeth that they had in the time of Baiazet but one, and long after (as before is said) but two. To one of these is assigned Europe, namely, so much thereof as is subiect to the Turke, for his Prouince: To the second, Natolia or Turkie: to the third, Syria and Egypt, with the parts adioyning. There were but two Cadileschers, till Selim wanne Syria and Egypt, and erected a third. But ^e Soranzo saith, that this third of Cairo is not rightly called Cadilescher, but should rather be called the great Cadi. Out of all which Prouinces, whatsoeuer causes come to be determined, by appeale or otherwise, they are brought to be decided before the Cadilefcher of the same Prouince whence they arise: notwithstanding that the abode of each of them be continually, or for the most part, at Constantinople, or elsewhere, wherefoeuer the Emperour holdeth his Court. The honor done to them, is little lesse then to the Mufsi, for that their authoritie is ouer Priest and people, temporall and spirituall: they are also learned in their law, aged and experienced. Of the Muderisi and Mulli, I can say no more then I haue done.

Cadi.
f Andr. Avit.

Next to these are the Cadi, which are sent abroad and dispersed into euery City and Towne of the Turkish Empire: which besides their Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction (as I may terme it) in forcing men to their religious obseruations, are as it were, Iusticers and gouernours of the places. So neere glued are the Offices and Officers, the religion and politie of the Turkes. There are other which are not sent forth, which are called Chozas, that is, Elders. These, with the *Talisman*s, haue the ordering of their parishionall Churches: The Thalisman calling the people to prayer, and the Chozas executing the Seruice and Preaching; and in absence, each supplying others office. Menano more distinctly, and in other names, numbred those Church-officers. The Modecis is a Governour of an Hospitall, receiuing and disposing the rents, with the other customes thereof. Their Schoole degrees are before spoken of, out of Knolles. Some are adde to these former, these other Priests, of baser condition. The Antippi are certaine Priests, which vpon Friday (called of them Glumaagun, and is obserued as their Sabbath, because Mahomet (as some hold) was borne on that day) and on other their fasting and feasting-dayes, after they haue vsed diuers Ceremonies in a certaine place in the middest of the Temple, about thirtie steppes high, from thence reade vnto the people something concerning the life of Mahomet. After which, two little boyes stand vp and sing certaine Prayers: Which being ended, the Priest and all the people sing a Psalm with a low voice, and then for halfe an houre together they crie Illah, illelah, that is, there is but one God. After all this, one of those Antippi, out of that high place, sheweth forth vnto the people a Lance and Scimitar, with exhortation to vse their swords and lances in defence of their Religion. Of the Imam and Meizin is elsewhere shewed, that the one calleth the people to the Mosche or Meschit, the other there celebrateth publike orisons. The Sophi also are certaine Clerkes or Priests, employed in the singing of Psalmes and Hymnes, after their manner, in their Churches at the times of publike Prayers.

All these inferiour orders of Priests are chosen by the people, and haue a certaine stipend allowed them by the Emperour, which yet is so small, that many of them are driuen to vse either writing of Bookes, or Handicrafts and Trades for their liuing, and are clothed like lay-men. They haue^h no great learning, it is sufficient if they can reade the Alcoran; which being written in Arabian, they are as loth to haue translated into the vulgar, as the Papists are to haue the Scripture. He which can interpret, and make some Exposition of the Text, is of profound learning. Yet are they reuerenced: and if a Turke doe strike or offer outrage to them, he loseth his hand; and if he be a Christian, his life; being sure to be burned. Some say, that now of late some of them are more studious of Astronomie and other Arts. As for those superiour rankes, no doubt may be made of their high account. The Cadilefcher is clothed in Chamlet, Satten, Silke, Damaske, or Veluet of seemely colour, as Ruffet, or Tawnie, and of Purple-coloured Cloth with long fleeces. Their Tulipan on their head is of maruellous greatnes, sharpe in the middest, of Purple Ruffet colour, deeper and thicker then others; their beards great. They ride on Geldings, with Purple foot-cloths fringed; and when they go on foot, they goe slowly, representing a stately and sacred grauitie.

There is another order of sacred persons, which yet are neither regular nor secular, by any vow or ordination, but had in that account for their birth, being supposed to descend of the line of Mahomet. The Turks and Tartarians call them Sens or Sithi, the Moores Seriffi. These weare greene Tulipans, which colour none else may weare, and that onely on their head. Some Christians, ignorant hereof, haue had their apparell cut from their backes, for wearing somewhat greene about them. These they call Hemir. They enjoy many priuiledges, especially in giuing testimonie, wherein one of these is as much as two other, which they abuse to iniurie and wrong. The most of them are Moores, which goe ten or fiftene in a companie, with a banner on a staffe, hauing a Moone on the top; and that which is giuen for Gods sake, they sit and eat in the street, where also they make their prayers, and are poorly clad. Like to these (in priuiledge and prauiledge) are the Chagi or Fagi, which liue on almes like Friers. They attend on the publike Prayers, on the holy Reliques, on the CorpSES and Funerals of the dead, and to prey on the liuing by false oathes.

A DIGRESSION TOVCHING THE HIERAR-
chie, and miseries of Christians vnder the Turke, &c.

AND thus haue we taken a leisurely view of the Turkish Hierarchie from the poore Sofiti to the courtly Cadilescher and pontifical Mufti, flourishing and triumphing together with that Monarchie, which is exalted, & hath exalted them, with the power, not of the word of God, but of the sword of man. But with what words meane whiles shall we deplore the lamentable and miserabie estate of that Christian Hierarchie and Ecclesiasticall Politie, which sometimes flourished there with no fewer nor lesse titles of dignitie and eminence? Where are now those Reuerend Names of Bishops, Archbishops, Metropolitans, Patriarkes, and the swelling stile of Oecumenicall? nay where are the things, the life, and liuing? for the stile, Names, titles, still continue; continue indeed, but as epitaphes and inscriptions on the monuments of their deceased and buried power, as the ghosts, and wandering shadowes of those sometimes quicke and quickning bodies, of rule and government. Great Citie of great Constantine, seated in the throne of the world, the fittest situation to command both sea and land through Europe, Asia, and Africa; at thy first natiuitie honored with a double Diadem of Christianitie and Soueraigntie; to which the sea prostrateth it selfe with innumerable multitudes of fish, the land payeth continuall tribute of rare fertilitie, for which old Rome distobed her selfe to decke this her New-Rome daughter and Imperiall heire, with her most iewel and monuments: a Compendium of the world, eye of cities, heart of the habitable earth, Academie of learning, Senate of government, Mother of Churches, Nurse of Religion, and (to speak in the language of thine owne) ^a A new Eden, an earthly heauen, modell of Paradise, shining with the varietie of thy sacred and magnificent buildings, as the firmament with the Sonne, Moone and Stars: this was thy ancient greatnes, great now, onely in miserie and mischiese, which as chiefe feat of Turkish Greatnes, is hence inflicted on the Christian Name. And thou, the soule of this bodie, the goodliest iewell in this ring of Perfection, which so many wonders of Nature conferred to make the miracle of Art, the temple of that wisdom of God, which is God, called by him which saw thee both Christian and Mahumetan, ^b A terrestriall heauen, a Cherubicall chariot, another firmament, beyond all names of elegance, which I thinke (saith another) ^c the very Seraphins doe admire with veneration, and (which hath heere moued thy mention) high seat and throne of that Patriarchicall and Oecumenicall Highnesse, which hence swayed all the East, and contended with Westerne Rome for Soueraigntie; now excludest rule, rites, yea persons Christian, wholly hallowed to the damnable holies of ridiculous and blasphemous Mahometisme: the multitudes of other Churches, as filly captiued Damfels, attending and following thee into this Meschiticall slauerie. O Citie, which hast beene (wo worth that word, that hasty hast-beene) which hast bin; but who can say what thou hast bin? let one word, the summe of all earthly excellence, expresse what floods of words and seas of Rhetorick cannot expresse, which hast bin Constantinople, which art (that one name may declare thy bottomlesse hellish downfall) in deed, though not in name, Mahometople, the seat of Mahomets power, the setting of Mahumetan dregs: What words can serue to preach thy funerall sermon, and ring thy knell to succeeding ages? Sometimes the Theatre of worldly pompe, but then on that dismal day of thy captiuitie, the stage of earthly and hellish Furies, the sink of bloud, and slaughter-house of Death. What sense would not become senselesse to see the breaches of the wals filled vp with the slaine; the gate by death shutting out death, closed ^d vp to the arch with confused bodies of Turks & Christians; the shouts of me fighting; the cries, grones, gaspes of men dying? the manifold spectacles and varietie of death? and yet the worse estate, and more multiplied deaths of the living? women rauished; maidens forced; persons vowed to sanctitie deuoted to lust, slaughter, flauerie; reuerend age no whit reuerenced; greene youth perishing in the bloome, and rotten before it had time to ripen; the father seeing the hopes of his yeares, deare pledges of Nature, slaine or sold before his face: the children beholding the parents passe into another captiuitie; all taking an euerlasting farewell of all welfare, as well as of each other. Well may we in comparison weep for those miseries, the bitter passion whereof, like a violent whirlwind, did to them drie vp the fountains of tears: Euen he which writ the history of these things, quorum pars magna fuit, George Phraza, Counsellor, and great Chancellor to the Emperour, might much moue vs with his owne particular, himselſe sold to one, his wife to another, his daughter richly espoused, now married to the Scraile. flauerie, his sonne slaine with the Sultans owne hand, for not being obsequious to his beastly lust: if particular and priuate cases could finde any proper place in publike calamities; and if the Emperours owne historie, were not (as some haue to'd it) more tragicall. O Sunne how could thy brightnesse endure to see such hideous spectacles? but clouds of shot, dust and smoake, hid them from thee. O Earth, which otherwhiles at that time a of the yeare, deckest thy selfe with thy fairest robes, embroidered with varietie of flowers; how wast thou then covered with dead carkasses, and furrowed with rills of bloud? O God, that the sinnes of man should thus prouoke thy justice, by vniust and sinfull instruments to punish iniustice and sinne! and to chastise thy Christian seruants by Antichristian and diuellish enemies! Iust art thou O Lord, and iust are thy iudgements, which in iudgement remembreſt mercie, which sauest the soules of thine, in and by the affliction of their bodies, but wilt cast this Rod of thy wrath into a fire that neuer shall be quenched.

But me thinkes I heare some excepting at this long digression, and quarrelling at this Tragedie in stead of the proceeding historie. Shall I craue pardon? Or shall I rather desire the Reader a little to consider with me in this narration of Constantinople (as the Map and Epitome of Easterne Christendome) the miserable and perplexed estate of all Easterne Christians, by like meanes brought and trampled vnder the feet of the Ottoman horse? The larger store of their rites & opinions is reserued to another taske: this I haue propounded as the glasse of their miseries, that being now to take leaue of the Turkes, we might not so much honor them with this peale of our Ordnance, as by this mirrour of miserie, be touched with feare in our selues for like punishments, if in time we meet not God with repentance; and remembering the afflictions of Ioseph, to pray for those our brethren, that God would haue mercie on them, and giue them patience and (in his time) deliuerance. They which wou'd take more view of the miseries of Christians vnder the Turke, may in Vines, Georgioutz, Septemcastrensis, and others reade them; for me, the parallels of the Turkish and Christian Hierarchie, was some occasion of this digression, touching which, let me borrow a few words with our Reader.

Mabomet the Conqueror, for the reepling of the Citie pretended great fauour to the Christians, gaue them licence to elect a new Patriarke, whom he honored with the wonted rites and solemnitie: and vouchsafed to conferre with him about the Christian mysteries (for his mother was a Christian, and he himselſe addicted to studies of learning, being b skilfull in the Greeke, Chalde, Persian, Latine, Arabike, besides his Turkish, languages, professing knowledge also in Astrologie) and receiued at the hands of this Patriarke, (his name was Gennadius) a large treatise thereof, c yet extant in Greeke and Turkish; and gaue him diuers priuiledges. But thing; fained cannot continue: and partly through his owne couetousnes, partly through the ambition and disagreeing of the Clergie, heauie fines were imposed on them, and the Seat receiued in his time nine successions, & eight in the raigne of Baiazet his son, & so groneth vnder that burthen to this day. And howsoeuer the Patriark enioyeth d spirituall and Ecclesiasticall respect amongst the Christians, yet is he contemned of the Turkes, some of them vpbraiding both him and other Christians with the names of dogs, Ethnickes, vnableeuers, and the like zealous Rhetorick: nor is he admitted a roome amongst the Bassas, except when he brings his tribute of 4000. ducats, with almost as much besides to the Bassas and other officers.

officers. In his Monasterie and Patriarchal Church and Palace, are no Bishops or great Prelates nourished, but a few Monks and some lay-officers and Counsellors. He sometimes (but seldome) preacheth, on some chiefe feasts at the Consecration of some Bishop or Archbishop, and very little preaching they haue amongst them, and that which is in the old pure Greeke, which very few of them vnderstand, thinking it sufficient if two or three of their audience conceiue them, and very few can preach. They haue not the Scriptures in the vulgar Greeke. The reuenue of the Patriarch is about 20000. Dollers. They gather much in their Churches, and he sendeth his Collector to gather abroad, and the other Prelates pay an annuities to him. To preuent abuses from the Turkes he hath a Ianizarie or two at the Church-dore in the time of the Lyturgie. They reade in their Churches great Legends of the lies of Saints, as well as the Papists. Their Religion is almost altogether in rites, like the other: and the difference betweene new and old Rome was one principall occasion of the losse of Constantinople, as appeareth * by the Emperour Iohn his going to Rome to sollicite aide, (which had beene giuen him but for refusing a Papall ceremonie) and the proceedings of the Councell of Florence. The Patriarkes of Alexandria, Antiochia, and Ierusalem, acknowledge this of Constantinople Oecumenicall: and his iurisdiction extendeth through Asia Minor, the Archipelago, Greece, Mysia, Walachia, Moldavia, Dalmatia, Russia, and Muscovia. The Calogeri or Monkes haue their Gardens and Vineyards which they till and dresse with their owne hands to sustaine themselues. The other Patriarchs also pay a yearly tribute to the Turke. The Priests are poore, and liue of Almes and the prices of their holies, which are most gainfull in exequies. The Laitie is no lesse miserable for the most part, of spare diet, but giuen to drinking. Both Iewes and Christians pay for themselues and euery of their Children about twelue yeares old, a Ducat by the poll: and much more for the maintenance of the Nauie, besides their tribute-children for Ianizaries.

The Greekes are ignorant and vnlearned, and haue exiled (in a blinde zeale) Poeticall and Philosophicall Authors, for feare of pollution to their studies. And as Simeon Cabasilas writ to Crusius, they haue about 70. Dialects of the moderne Greeke tongue, the purest of which is at Constantinople, the most barbarous of all (O times) at Athens. O Athens, before called Ἐλλάς ἢ Ἐλλάς, *The Greece of Greece; and that which the sight is in the eye, that which the minde is in the soule, such as Athens in Greece, seat of the Muses, Graces, Empire, Arts! O Athens! but I am forced silence. Let Zygomal, an eye-witnesse, speake; There now (saith he) remains no more but the skin thereof, herselfe is long since dead: the True Athens and Helicon are come into our Western parts. And how can any of them labour in learning which must labour to liue? Necessitie hath no law, no learning. Euen we here now behold a Brittish Athens, or rather an Attike Britaine, where whilome our Ancestors (euen after Learning and Religion had here long flourished) found through the Danish pestilence, a brutish barbarisme. Alfred, the sonne of a King, and after King himselfe, could not finde a Master in all his Dominions to teach him the Latin tongue: and procuring with care and cost, forreiners to teach him, first learned that language at fixe and thirtie yeares of his age: hauing begunne to reade the vulgar at twelue yeares, which his elder and lesse studious brethren could not then doe. And himselfe in the Preface of Gregories Pastoralls, (to vse his owne wordes in our later English) saith, that learning was so fallen in the English Nation, that very few were on this side Humber, which their seruice could vnderstand in English, or an Epistle from Latin into English declare: and I weene that not many beyond Humber were not. So few of them were, that I also one only may not remember by South Thamise, when as I to raigne undertooke. I could shew the like in Italie also by the testimonie of Pope Agatho, in the sixt Synode at Constantinople vpon like cause. But I forget my Greekes, as they haue done their Greeke; I feare rather, I seeme to remember them too much, and that seuerer Censors will iudge this an abortiue issue, borne before the time. I will therefore stay my willing pen till fitter time, referring the more studious to those which haue written of this subiect, especially to Martin Crusius his Turcogracia, where out of the letters of Gerlach and others, as also of the Greekes themselues, Iohn and Theodosius Zygomale, and of the Patriarchs, *Me- rophanes, Ioasaphus Ieremias, (betweene the last Patriarch and D. Andreas Crusius their passed some writings of Religion) they may haue further satisfacion. Their stile is, Ieremias by the mercie of God Archb. of Const. New Reme, Oecumenicall Patriarch, Michael by the mercie of God Patriarch of great Theopolis, Antiochia, a and of all the East. Sophronius by the mercie of God Patriarch of the holy Citie Ierusalem, and of all Palestine. In a testimoniall to *D. And isto the Patriarch, Archb. of P. seruant to your holnesse, Gabriel. A Bishop, or humilis Episcopus N. Gerasimus. They make publike mention of the foure Patriarchs in their Church Lyurgies. The Venetians allow the Greekes free vse of their religion through all their Dominion: and Crete is a chiefe place for their learned men.

The greatest miserie which accompanieth the Turkish thraldome is their^b zeale of making Profelytes, with manifold and strong inducements, to such as haue bene more nuzzled in superstitions then trayned vp in knowledg, and see such contempt of Christians, and honours which befall to many Renegados: and very many are perverted and bewitched therewith.

Yea many voluntarily offer themselues to Apostasie; and others, by^c hopes, feares, griefes, despaires, importunities, distracted: by that vizor of vertue in the Turkish grauitie, sobrietie, bodily puritie, and spirituall zeale (after their sect) with whole rables of Satanicall miracles deluded: wanting all intercourse of Sacraments, preaching, reading, and all Christian holies: and full of wants in necessaries for this life; forget a better, and turne Turke. Thus doe they sell to the Deuill their soules, bought by the bloud of Christ Iesus. We may well despaire of words to vtter this miserie, and to describe this mart of Hell. seeing it exceedeth all words to see the markets made of Christian bodies, the remainders of cruell and bloudie warres, chained together in more then beattly bondage, so brought to the markets: if any be sick by the way, driuen on as long as they can goe, and when their feet faile, laid ouer a horse, like as butchers deale with small cattell, and if they die, left for a prey to the soules and beastes: the places of their abode by the way, filled with cries, of younglings of both sexes, abused to vn-naturall lust. In the markets they are stripped, viewed, and (modestie forbids to speake, O image of God thus abased!) openly in the secretest parts handled, be they male or female: forced to goe, runne, leape; and if shame or disdain make them vnwilling, by whips and stripes compelled: the infant plucked from the mothers breast and sold from euer againe seeing her or libertie: the wife thus openly deluded and dealt with before the husbands face. and for a base price giuen by some baser Turke, euerlastingly diuorced from his face: his daughters virginie, openly, secretly: my words are swallowed vp with horroure of the fact: himselfe, at home reuerend for his yeeres, now in that respect contemned, and hanging long on hand as vnprofitable ware, before hee finde a buyer. Priest, souldier, merchant, artificer, husbandman, all equally subiect to this iniquitie, saue that Gentlemen and those of most liberall education are least esteemed and most abused, because they can bring least profit to their Masters. Where besides filthy lusts, they suffer hunger, thirst, cold, and stripes; and which redoubleth those blowes, euen there is the passion of Christ, in this passion of their owne, v^rbraided to them. Some in impatience reuolt, some runne away, and are brought backe to a worse estate. if possible: some kill themselues; and some! But I can say no more. Let vs pray for them: and let vs at last leaue this tragedie, and take view of former Antiquities.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Regions and Religions of ASIA MINOR, since called Natolia and Turkie.

Ext after the Turkish Religion thus related, it seemeth fittest to discourse of the ancient names and limits of Regions, and of the former Heathenish Religions of that part of the Turkish Dominion, which among Authors hath since, in a singular eminencie, obtayned the name of Turkie. And if it seeme strange, that the Turkish Religion (a newer vpstart) be declared before those former of the Pagans, the matter wee had in hand hath thus altered our methode, that after wee had described the deformed dis-ioynted lineaments of the Mother, an Arabian Saracen, her more mis-shapen Daughter, this Turkish Mopsa, might attend her hard at her heeles. As for the Region, wee have followed the Turkish forces hither: and now that wee have glutted our selues with the view of their later affaires of State and Religion, let vs cast our eyes about vs, and obserue the Countrie it selfe, which becaute of her long and entire subiection to this Nation, is styled by their name. The Greekes called it Natolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, because it was the Easterne part of that Empire, as they called Thracia, the Countrie about Constantinople (which was named Νέα Ρωμὴ) Romania. This Natolia, or Anatolia, is of others called Asia Minor: and yet Asia, in most proper and strict account, is peculiarly applied to one Region in this great Chersonelus, or Peninsula, containing besides Pontus, Bithinia, Lycia, Galatia, Pamphilia, Paphlagonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Armenia Minor. It was bounded on the East with Euphrates (now Frat); on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea: on the West, with the Archipelago: on the North, with the Blacke Sea, stretching in length from 51. to 73. degrees of Longitude, and in breadth from 36. $\frac{1}{2}$. to 45. This Countrie hath been anciently renowned for Armes and Arts: now the graue of the carkasses, or some ruinous bones rather and stonie Reliques of the carkasses of more then foure thousand Places and Cities, sometimes inhabited. Many changes hath it sustained by the Egyptian, Persian, Macedonian, Roman, Tartarian, and Turkish Generall Conquests, besides such exploits as Craesus and Mithridates of o'd, and the Westerne Christians of later times, haue therein atchieued. Let the studious of these things search them in their proper Authors: our taske is Religion, whose ouer-worne, and almost out-worne steppes, with much curious hunting in many Histories, we haue thus weakely traced. of the Turkes we haue alreadie spoken, and we leaue the larger relations of the Christians (for why should we mixe Light with Darknesse?) to their proper place. For euen yet, besides the Armenians, there remaine many Christians of the Greeke Church in Cappadocia, and other parts of this Region.

Next vnto those parts of Syria before deliuered, are situate in this lesser Asia, Cilicia, Armenia Minor, and Cappadocia. Cappadocia, called also Leucosyria, and now Amasia, stretcheth foure hundred and fiftie miles along the Euxine Sea, bounded on the West with Paphlagonia, Galatia, and part of Pamphylia; on the South, with Cilicia; on the East, with the Hilles Antitaurus and Molchius, and part of Euphrates. Heere runneth Halys, the end of Craesus Empire, both in the site and fate thereof; the doubtfull Oracle heere giuing him a certaine ouerthrow. For when he consulted with the same touching his Expedition against Cyrus, hee receiued answer. That passing Halys, he should ouer-terne a great State; which he interpreting actiuely of his Attempts against Cyrus, verified it passiuely in himselfe. And here, besides other streames, slideth Thermodon, sometime made famous by the bordering Amazones. Of which Manly foeminine people, ancient Authours disagree: Theophrastus deriuing them from the Sauromate; Salust fetching them from Tanais; P. Diaconus describing them in Germanie; Trogus and Iustine reporting them Scythians; Diodorus crossing the Seas to finde them in Lybia, and thence also, in a further search, passing into an Island in the Atlantike Ocean; Ptoleme and Curtius placing them neerer the Caspian Sea; Strabo doubting whether there euer had beene such a people,

Some haue found them out anew in the new World, ^f naming that huge Riuer of them. Goropius confidently avoucheth them to bee the Wiues and Sonnes of the Sarmatians or Cimbrians: who, together with their husbands, inuaded Asia. And this he proueth by Dutch Etymologies and other coniectures. Which, if it bee true, sheweth, that their Religion was the same with the Scythian. In Cappadocia was seated the Citie Comana, wherein was a Temple of Bellona, and a great multitude of such as were there inspired and rauished by deuillish illusion, and of sacred Seruants. It was inhabited by the people called Cataones, who being subiect to a King, did neuertheless obey the Priest that was in great part Lord of the Temple, and of the sacred Seruants, whose number (when Strabo was there) amounted to sixe thousand and vpwards of Men and Women. The Priest receiued the reuenue of the Region next adioyning to the Temple, and was in honour next to the King in Cappadocia, and commonly of the same kindred. These Idolatrous Rites are supposed to haue beene brought hither out of Taurica Scythia by Orestes and his siter Iphigenia, where humane Sacrifices were offered to Diana. Here, at the solemne Feasts of Bellona, those sacred Seruants before-mentioned, called Comani, wounded each other in an extaticall furie; bloudie Rites fitting Bellona's solemnities. ⁱ Argesiu, whose hoarie head was covered continually with Snow, was reputed a religious Hill, and Habitation of some God.

Strabo ^k reporteth of the Temple of Apollo Catanius, in Dastacum; and of another of Iupiter in Morimena, which had three thousand of those sacred Seruants or Religious Votaries, which as an inferior Order were at the command of the Priest, who receiued of his Temples reuenue fiftene Talents, and was reputed in the next ranke of honour to the Priest of Comana.

Not farre hence is Castabala, where was the Temple of Diana Persica ^l, where the sacred or deuoted women were reported to goe bare-footed on burning coales without harme. It is reported ^m, That if a Snake did bite a Cappadocian, the mans bloud was poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Many excellent Worthies hath this Region yeelded to the World. Mazaca (afterwards of Claudius called Cæsarea) was the Episcopall Seat of Great Basil: Cucusum, the Receptacle of exiled Chrysofome: Amasia (now a Prouinciall Citie of the Turkish Beglerbegs) sometime the Countrie of Strabo, to whom these our Relations are so much indebted: Nissa and Nazianzum, of which, the two Gregories received their surnames. But that Humane and Diuine learning is now trampled vnder the barbarous foote of the Ottoman-Horse. Here is Trapezonde also, whilome bearing the proude name of an Empire. Licaonia, the chiefe Citie whereof is Iconium, celebrated in holy Writ, (and a long time the Royall Seat of the first Turkes in Asia, and since of Caramania, now Conia, or Cogne, inhabited with Greekes, Turkes, Jewes, Arabians, and Armenians) is of Ptolemey adioyned to Cappadocia. And so is Diopolis, called before Cabira, since Augusta, which Ortelius placeth in the lesser Armenia: a Region which hath on the South Cilicia; on the East, Euphrates; on the West, Cappadocia.

n Comana Cap.
padocie, & Pen-
tica, Strab. l. 12.

In Diopolis was the Temple of the Moone had in great veneration, much like, in the Rites thereof, to that before mentioned of Comana: which although it bare ⁿ the surname of Cappadocia, yet Ptolemey placeth it in this Armenia; and Comana Pontica, in Cappadocia, of the same name and superstitious deuotion to the same Goddess. Thence haue they taken the patterne of their Temple, of their Rites, Ceremonies, Divinations, respect to their Priests. And twice a yeare. in the Feasts, which were called, The Goddesse her going out, the Priest ware a Diademe. Hee was second to none, but the King: which Priest-hood was holden of some of Strabo's progenitors. Pompey bestowed the Priest-hood of this Temple vpon Archelaws, and added to the Temples Reuenue two Schæni, that is, threescore furlongs of ground, commanding the

the inhabitants to yeelde him obedience. He had also power ouer the sacred seruants, which were no lesse then sixe thousand.

Lycomedes after enioyed that Prelacie, with foure Schæni of land added thereto: Cæsar remoued him, placing in his roome Ditæntus, the sonne of Adiatorix, whome (with his wife and children) he had led in triumph, purposing to slay his elder sonne, together with him. But when the younger perswaded the souldiers, that he was the elder, and both contended which should die, Ditæntus was of his parents counsailed to yeelde to the younger, and to remaine aliue, to be a stay to their familie. Which piety Cæsar hearing of, grieuing for the death of the other, he thus rewarded. At the Feasts aforesaid is great recourse of men & women hither. Many Pilgrims resort to discharge their vows. Great store of women is there, which for the most part are deuoted; this Citie being as a little Corinth. For many went to Corinth, in respect of the multitude of Harlots prostituted or consecrated to Venus.

Zela, another Citie, hath in it the Temple of Anais, much reuerenced of the Armenians; wherein the Rites are solemnized with greatest Sanctimonie, and Oathes taken of greatest consequence. The sacred Seruants and Priestly Honours are as the former. The Kings did sometime esteeme Zela, not as a City, but as a Temple of the Persian Gods; and the Priest had supream power of all things, who with a great multitude of those sacred Seruants inhabited the same. The Romanes encreased their Reuenues.

In Cappadocia the Persian Religion was much vsed: but of the Persian Rites see more in our Tractat of Persia. The pleasure of the Cappadocians grew into a Prouerbe; if any were enormously wicked, he was therefore called a Cappadocian.

Galatia, or Gallogræcia, so called of the Galli, which vnder the conduct of Brennus (saith Suidas) assembled an Armie of three hundred thousand, and seeking aduentures in forraine partes, diuided themselues: some inuading Greece; others Thrace and Asia, where they settled themselues betweene Bithynia and Cappadocia. On the South it is confined with Pamphilia, and on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea the space of two hundred and fiftie miles. Since, the mother and nursing Citie of Mithridates, is here seated: one of the last Citie of Asia that subiected it selfe to Turkish bondage, in the dayes of Mahomet the Second. Of the Galata were three Tribes, Trogini, Tolistobogi, and Teliosages; all which Goropius deriueth from the Cimmerij. At Tavium, which was inhabited with the Trogini, was a brazen Statue of Iupiter, and his Temple was a priuiledged Sanctuarie. The Teliosbogi had for their chiefe Mart Pisimus, wherein was a great Temple of the Mother of the Gods, whom they call'd Andigista, had in great veneration; whose Priests had sometime bene mightie. This Temple was magnificently builded of the Atalians Kings, with the Porches also of white stone. And the Romanes, by depriuing the same of the Goddesses Statue (which they sent for to Rome, as they did that of Esculapius out of Epidaurus) added much reputation of Religion thereunto. The Hill Dindyma ouerlooketh the Citie, of which she was named Dindymena as of Cybelus (which Ortelius supposeth to be the same) Cybele. Of the Galatians, Deiotarus was King: but more fame hath befallen them by Paulus Epistle to them.

Plutarch tells a Historie of a Galatian woman, named Camma, worthie our recitall. She was faire and noble (the daughter of Dianaes Priest) and richly married to Sinatrus the Tetrarch. But Sinorix, a man richer and mightier then he, became his vniust cornuall, and because he durst not attempt violence to her, her husband liuing, hee slew him. Camma solaced her selfe as she could, cloystering her selfe in Dianaes Temple, and admitting none of her mightie suiters. But when Sinorix had also moued that suit, she seemed not vnwilling: and when he came to desire her marriage, shee went forth to meete him, and with gentle entertainment brought him into the Temple vnto the Altar, where she dranke to him a cup of poysoned liquor; and hauing taken off almost halfe, she reached him the rest: which after she saw he had drunke, she called vpon her husbands name aloud, saying; Hitherto haue I liued sorrowfull without thee, wayting this day, now welcome me vnto thee: for I haue reuenged thy slaughter on the most wicked amongst men, and haue bene companion and partner with thee in life, with him in death. And thus died they both. The like manly womanhood; (if a Christian might commend that, which none but a Christian can discommend) Valerius Maximus sheweth of Ghiomara her country-woman, wife of Orivagon, a great man amongst the Tectosages: who, in the warres of Manilius the Consull, being taken prisoner, was committed to the custodie of a Tribune, who forst her to his pleasure. After that agreement was made for her ransome, and the money brought to the place appointed, whiles the Tribune was busie about the receipt thereof, she caused her Gallogræcians to cut off his head, which she carried to her husband, in satisfaction of her wrong.

At the Funerals of the Galatians † they obserued this custome, to write letters and hurle them into that latest and fatal fire, supposing that their deceased friends should reade them in the other world. At their sacrifices ‡ they vsed not an Aruspex, or Diuinour, which gazed in the Entrailles, but a Philosopher, without whom they thought no Sacrifice acceptable to their Gods. The Diuell certaine was the God to whom their humane Sacrifices were acceptable, which in diuellish inhumanitie they offered at their bloudie Altars †, when they diuined of things to come, which they did by his falling, by the dismembring and flowing forth of his bloud. * Athenæus out of Philarchus, telleth of one Ariannes, a rich Galatian, which feasted the whole nation a whole yeare together, with Sacrifices of Bulls, Swine, Sheepe, and other prouision, made readie in great Caldrons, prouided of purpose for this entertainment, that he made them in spacious Boothes, which he had therefore built. Pausanias saith, That the Pesinuntian Galatians abstained from Swines flesh. The Legend of Agdistis and Aite, which he there addeth, is too filthie to relate. At † Tauium was a brazen Image of Iupiter, and his Temple was a priuiledged Sanctuary.

Betweene † the mouth of Pontus, the Thracian Bosphorus, and part of Propontis on the West, and Galatia on the East, part of the Euxine Sea on the North, and Asia (properly so called) on the South, is situate the prouince called by the double name † of Pontus and Bythinia. There were sometimes two Prouinces, diuided by the Riuer Sangarius: now they are called Bursia by Girana; by Castaldus, Beefangial. The most famous Cities therein are, or rather haue beene, Nice, famous sometime for Neptunes Temple, but more for the first generall Councell therein celebrated, against Arrius in defence of the Trinitie, and Christs Diuinitie: Nicomedia, sometimes the seate of Emperours, now ruinous: Apamia, and Prusa or Bursa nigh to the mount Olympus, where the first Ottomans had their seat royall, and all of that race, except the great Turkes themselves, are still buried: Chalcedon, built seuentene yeares before Byzantium; and therefore the builders accounted blinde, which neglected that better seate. Here was a famous Councell of sixe hundred and thirtie Bishops, against the heresie of Eutyches: here Iason had built a Temple to Iupiter, in the straights which seuer Europe from Asia, after Melas measure, siue furlongs. Of their auncient Kings others haue related: but one cannot passe this our Historie without obseruation, and that is Mithridates †, the sixt King of that name; who loosing his father in the eleuenth yeare of his age, by his tutors was treacherously assailed, but escaped, and by vse of that antidote, which of him still beareth the name Mithridate, out-liued their poysoning conspiracie. He liued indeede to the death of thousands, which eyther his crueltie or his warres consumed. Foure yeares together (to auoyde their Treasons) he liued in the Fields and Woods, vnder a shew of hunting; both preuenting their desigaes, and inuring himselfe to hardnesse. He spake two and twentie languages, being Lord of so manie Nations. He held warres with the Romanes sixe and fortie yeares, whom those renowned Captaines, Sylla, Lucullus, Pompey, did so conquer, as he alway arose againe with great lustre, and with greater terror: & at last died, not by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his olde age, and his owne Kingdome, neuer made to attend the Romane triumphes; *Sylla*es feliciue, Lucullus prowesse, and Pompeyes greatnesse notwithstanding. His aspiring thoughts had greedily swallowed the Soueraignty both of Asia and Europe. He caused in one night, all the Romanes in his dominions to bee slaine; in which massacre perished a hundred and fiftie thousand, as some haue numbered. But it cannot be conceiued (saith † Orosius) how many there were, or how great great was the griefe both of the doers and sufferers, when euery one must betray his innocent quells and friends, or hazard his owne life; no Lawe of Hospitalitie, no Religion of Sanctuarie, or reuerence of Images, being sufficient protection. And no maruell, if he spared not his enemies, when^d hee slew Exipodras and Hemochares his sonnes; and after the poysonings and voluntarie death of Monyma his wife, Statira and Roxane his daughters; his sonne Pharnaces (like to taste of the same cup) wonne to his part his fathers Armie, sent against him, with which he pursued his father so hotely, that he, hauing denounced a beaue curse vpon him, entred amongst his Wiues, Concubins and Daughters, and gaue them poyson, pledging them in the same liquor; which his bodie, accustoined to his Antidotes, easily ouercame, and therefore was faine to intreat another to open a bloudie passage for that his cruell soule. A man (saith Orosius) of all men most superstitious, alway hauing with him Philosophers and men expert in all Artes, now threescore and foureteene yeares olde. The Religion in Pontus was little differing from the Greekes. We reade of the Sacrifices of this King to Ceres, and to Iupiter Bellipotens, in which the King brought the first wood to the fire. He powred also thereon Honey, Milke, Wine, Oyle, and after made a Feast. In honour of Neptune they drownd Charriots, drawne with foure white Horses, with which (it seemed) they would haue him ease himselfe in his Sea-voyages. ^e At the mouth of Pontus was the Temple of Iupiter Iasus, called Panopeum: and nigh therto, a Promontorie sacred to Diana, sometime an Island, ioyned to the Continent by an Earthquake. Hereabouts was the Caue Acherusium, whole bottomlesse bottoime was thought to reach to Hell.

I may in the next place set downe Paphlagonia, which, as it fareth with such as haue mightie neighbours, can scarcely finde her proper limits. Some ^f reckon it to Galatia, before described; and sometimes Pontus hath shared it: and eyther the force of Armes, or bountie of Emperours hath assigned it at other times to Phrygia, Cilicia, or other parts. The bounds thereof are thus deliucred: Pontus confineth on the North; on the East, the Riuer Haiys; on the South, Phrygia and Galatia; on the West, Bithynia. Of the people hereof, called Heneci, some deriue the Veneti of Italie. They now call it Roni. It had the name Paphlagonia of Paphlagon, the sonne of Phineus. The Mount Olgasys is very high, and in the same are many Paphlagonian Temples. Sandaracurgium is another Mountaine, made hollow by the Metall-miners, which were wont to be slaues redeemed from capitall Sentence, who here exchanged that speedie death for one more lingering. So deadly is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending, of this Idoll of the World: which the Spaniards haue verified in the West, by the destruction of another world. Vitruuius tells of a fountaine in Paphlagonia, as it were mixed with wine; whereof they which drinke without other liquor proue drunken.

The Heptaconeta and Mossynœci inhabited about these parts; ^h a people of that beastly disposition, that they performed the most secret worke of Nature in publique view. These are not so much notorious for being worse then beasts, as their neighbours, the Tibareni, for surpassing in iustice other men. They would not warre on their enemy, but would faithfully before relate vnto him the Time, Place, and Houre of their fight; whereas the Mossynœci vsed to assault strangers that trauelled by them verie treacherously. They haue also a venomous kinde of Honey, growing out of their Trees, with which they beguiled and slew three troupes of Pompey. The Tibareni obserued one strange fashion, that when the woman was deliuered of a childe, her husband lay in, and kept his chamber, the women officiously attending him, a custom obserued at this day amongst the Brasilians.

CHAP. XVI.

Of Asia proprie dicta: now called Sarcum.

His Region (in the strict sense) being a particular Prouince of the lesser Asia,^a is bounded on the West with part of Propontis, and Hellespont, the Aegean Icarian and Myrtoan Seas; on the South with the Rhodian Sea, Lycia and Pamphilia: on the East, with Galatia; on the North with Pontus and Bythinia, and part of Propontis. In which space are contain'd Phrygia, Caria, and both Mysia's, Aeolis, Ionia, Doris, Lydia. Some^b circumscribe from hence both Phrygia, and Mysia, alleging the authoritie of S. Luke. But in the Apocalypse chap. 1. these partes are also added; and 1. Pet. 1. 1.

Phrygia is diuided into the greater, which lyeth Eastward; and the lesse, called also Hellespontiaca and Troas, and of some Epietetus. The greater Phrygia hath not many Cities. Here stood Midaum, the royall seate of Mydas, and Apamia the Phrygian Metropolis.^d Phrygia is called of the Riuer Phryx, which diuideth it from Caria. Herodotus telleth e that the Phrygians were accounted the most auncient of all people; for the triall whereof Psammetichus King of Egypt had shut vp, without societie of any humane creature, two children, causing onely Goates to be admitted to suckle them, who after long time pronounced bec, which they had learned of the Goates: but because that (with the Phrygians) signified bread, therefore they account'd the Phrygians first authors of mankind. Before Deucalions flood, Nannacus^f is reported to raigne there, and foreseeing the same to haue assembled his people into the Temple, with supplications and prayers. Hence grew the prouerbe to say, A thing was from Nannacus, which was exceeding olde. Many antiquities are tolde of their Gods; whose Theologie thus is recited by Eusebius. The Phrygians tell, that Meon was the most auncient King of Phrygia, the father of Cybele, who inuented the pipe called Syrinx, and was named the Muntaine mother, beloued of Marjyas. But when as Attis had raised her belly, her father slaying him and his fellowes she, enraged with madnesse, ranne vp and downe the countrey. Marjyas roamed with her, who after, being ouercome in a Muscalle contention of Apollo, was slayed quicke. After these things did Apollo loue Cybele, with whom she wandered to the Hyperboreans: and by his command the bodie of Attis was buried, and Cybele obtained diuine honours. Hence it is, that euen to this day the Phrygians bewaile the yong mans death. In Pessinus a Citie of Phrygia, (after reckoned to Galatia) they erected a Temple to Attis, and Cybele. After the death of Hyperion, the children of Caelus parted the Kingdome amongst them, the most famous of which were Atlas and Saturne: to the first of which befell the parts adioyning to the Ocean. He had great skill in Astronomie. Of his seuen daughters were procreated many of the Gods and Heroes: and of Mama the eldest, and Iupiter, was Mercurie begotten. Saturne the sonne of Atlas being couetous and wicked, married Cybele his sifter, and had by her Iupiter. They tell of another Iupiter, brother of Caelus, and King of Crete (but there and here they are so intangled with Fables, that the least inquirie hath most ease and no lesse certaintie.) This Cretan held the Empire of the world, and had ten sonnes, whom they call Curetes: his Sepulchre they shew to this day. Saturne (the brother of Atlas) raigned in Italy and Sicilia, til Iupiter his sonne dispossessed him, who proued a seuerer Prince to the wicked, and bountifull to the good. Thus much Eusebius of the Phrygian diuinity out of their owne Legends, the mysteries whereof he after vnsolderth. Other tales they had, as that Minerua killed there a fire breathing beaſt; of Philemon and Baucis, and such like, mentioned by the Poets. Meander making warres with the Pessinuntians, vowed for sacrifice whatsoeuer he first met after he returned with conquest, which he performed on Archelaus his sonne, ouercomming^h he saith one, pietie with pietie. Impious is that pietie which destroyeth humanitie, and diuellish crueltie both in the idoll and dolater; as appeared also in the euent. (if our storie be true) the father rewarding such pietie with greater impietie on himselfe, and casting casting himselfe into the river, left his name thereunto. The like is told of the riuers Sagaris and Scamander. Hercules, when hee went with the Argonautes to Colchos, came on shore on Phrygia to amend his oare, and being thirstie sent his sweeting Hylas to the riuer for water, who falling therein was drowned, whereupon hee (leauing his companions) wandered in the woods, bemoaning his Hylas.

About these times Tantalus * liued in these parts, a man besides other vices exceedingly couetous, not sparing the Temples of the Gods. Hence arose the Fable that he was punished in Hell with perpetuall hunger and thirst, whiles pleasant waters and daintie fruits did offer themselues to his mouth, but when he would haue tasted them, fled from him. So indeede doth Mammon torment his followers, making them to want as well that which they haue, as that which they haue not, the medicine being the increaser of the disease, as when fire is quenched with oile: like Gardners Asses laden with good hearbes, a burthen to them, food for others, themselues glad to feede on Thistles. And how many Tantali doe we daily see enduring a hunger and thirst in the middest of their abundance? a monstrous and vnnaturall sicknesse, to hunger after that which they haue, yet cannot, yet will not feede on; a drop sic-thirst, saue that they dare not drinke that, which they haue and thirst for. Vnworthy of that life, which he sacrificeth to that, which neuer had the dignitie to be mortall: vnworthy that body, which he pineth with plentie; or that soule, which he dammeth for a fancie of hauing; or that nature of man which he confineth to the Gallies, to the Mines, in the seruice of a peece of earth; vnworthy of the name of Christian, whose Christ was, to one of hisⁱ forefathers, worth thirty pence, but now this will sell him for three halfe pence, for a peece of bread, yea, like Asops dogge, for the shadow of a peece of bread; vnworthy of any thing, saue that his couetise, to be his tempter, his tormentor, his furie, his deuill: Once, pitie it is, that he priseth a halter so deare, else would he rid the world of a burthen, and himselfe of his worthlesse life. But whither hath Tantalus carried mee? Take heede (reader) he doe not carry thee further, or thou him, beyond words: They say he would haue sacrificed his son Pephtlops, had not diuine power releued him: thou art like to finde him Tantalus still. What the Poets tell of Ganymedes euery one knowes; of Niobe famous for her sons and daughters, which she lost all in one day: of Mydas (another Tantalus) whose couetousnesse became a new Alchymie ^k to turne all into gold. And how doth this two-fold Alchymie gull the world? the one making with vaine hopes a rich estate become poore, the other with full haps making all gold but the man; onely the Romane^l Alchymist is Master of that Art, which the former professe, that turnes so easily a little Lead into so much good gold: onely the wise man, wise in the later, to be Master of himselfe and his wealth, not a slaue to passion or pelfe. And yet Mydas in a pubke calamitie, (happening by an Earthquake, which swallowed vp houses) warned by an Oracle, to cast into those gaping iawes of the Earth that which was most precious: hurled therein much treasure (what could hee thinke more precious: and how much more easily would many a Mydas haue hurled in himselfe?) But the Earth not yet satisfied, would not close vp her mouth, till his sonne Anchurius (esteeming man to be most precious) leaped in, and the reconciled Element received an Altar in witnesse of his haughtie courage. There were many Phrygian Kings named Mydas.

The Phrygians sacrificed to the Riuers Maander and Marsias: they placed their Priests after death vpon stone, ten cubits high. They^m did not sweare, or force others to an oath: they were much addicted to diuination by Birds. Macrobius ⁿ applieth their tales of Cybele, and Attis, to the Sunne. Silennus is reckoned among the Phrygian deities: whom^o Goropius fetcheth out of Scythia, and maketh him Mydas his Master in Geographic and Philofophie: The diligent attendance of the Scholler was occasion to that Fable of his long eares: the learning of the Master gaue him diuine honours.

In Phrygia on the riuer Sangarius stood Gordie (or as Arriannus ^p calleth it, Gordion) of which he reporteth that whē Alexander came thither, he had a great desire to see the tower, in which was the palace of Gordius & Mydas, that he might behold the shafts or beam of Gordius his cart, & the indissoluble knot fastned therto. For great was the fame thereof amongst the next adioining people: that Gordius was one of the ancient inhabitants of Phrygia, hauing a little place of ground, and two yokes of Oxen, the one he vsed to the plough, the other to the waine or Cart. And while he was one day at plough, an Eagle sat vpon the yoke, and there continued till cuening. Gordius, astonished at so ominous a token, went to the Telmissean sooth-sayers (for to the Telmissean both men & women this diuining science seemed hereditarie) and there met with a Virgin, whom he acquainted with this accident: she counselled him to return thither & to sacrifice to Iupiter the King, for the augury was good. Gordius entreated her company with him, that she might instruct him how to sacrifice, which she granted vnto him, and afterwards her selfe also in Marriage. These had betwixt them Midas, a proper stripling. Now, a sedition hapning among the Phrygians, they consulted with the oracle, which answered that a Cart should bring them a King, that should end that sedition. And while they were musing on this answer, Midas came riding in his Cart (with his parents) into the throng, and was by the Phrygians forthwith acknowledged King. The Carre, in memory hereof, was hanged vp to Iupiter in the tower (or temple of Iupiter, so Curtius calleth it) with thanks for that Eagle (Iupiter's bird) sent before to fore-signifie thus much to his Father. The knot fastned vnto it, was of the barke of the Cornell or dogge-tree, wouen with such Art, that a man could neither finde beginning nor end thereof. Bruted it was amongst the Phrygians, that he which could vntie it should be Lord of all Asia. Alexander turning it to and fro, and with vaine curiositie searching how to loosen it, at last with his Sword chopped it in sunder, least hee should otherwise leaue some scruple in the hearts of his Souldiers. Thus far Arrianus.

Qu Curt. li. 3.

In the Lesser Phrygia, (of a Hill therein, called Idæa; of a Riuer, Xanthe, of the Kings, Troas, Dardania, &c.) stood that eie of Asia, and Starre of the East, called Ilium or Troy. Of which, all that I can say will but obscure the renowne and glory which all heathen Antiquitie haue by an vniuersall consent of poesie, and historie, giuen to it. And what Greeke or Latine Author hath not mentioned her ruines, and done exequies to her funerall? Dardanus is named her founder, after whom, and his succeeding sonne Eriethonius, Tros ruled, who erected the Temple of Pallas, and reedified the Citie, leauing thereto his name. To him succeeded Ilus, and after him his sonne Laomedon, whom Neptune and Apollo helped in repairing the Citie: which Hercules sacked, and Priamus restored, but to a greater losse, by the Grecians ten yeers siege, and one nights spoile. Dares, and Diclys, supposed historians of those times, besides Homer, and the Greekes and Latines his followers, haue more then enough related the particulars. Hesione, Sister to Priamus, was by Hercules giuen to Telamon for first entring the walles. Her did Priam demaund in vaine by Antenor, and Aeneas his ambassadours. Paris, otherwise called Alexander, one of the fiftie children of Priamus and Hecuba, was sent in the same businesse, and returned with Helena the wife of Menelaus a Lacedemonian Prince: who consulting with the other Grecian Lords for her recouerie, first Diomedes and Vlysses were sent to intreat; after, a thousand saile of ships, to force her restitution: which after a tedious warre, with much losse on the one side, and viter ruine on the other, was effected. The league of the Greekes was made by Calchas, who diuiding a boare in two parts, caused the Princes with their swords drawne and besprinked with blood to passe betweene, swearing destruction to Priamus and the Troians. The like rites of soleimne Couenant we reade obserued by God himselfe: and by the Iewes.

The religion of Phrygia and Troy, and all these Grecian parts of Asia were little, (if little) differing from the Greeke superstitions: of which in our Europe-discoveries we are to relate. Therefore adiourning a larger discourse till then, we are a little to mention here their deuotions. In Troy were the Temples of Iupiter Hercans, at whose Altar Priam was slaine; of Iupiter Fulminator, of Iuno, Apollo, Minerua, Mercury, Neptune. To Neptune they which sailed, did sacrifice a blacke bull, & oxen, whose hinder parts were burnt, the inwards they tasted; Rams and Hogges were sacrificed also to him. To Mercury clouen tongues hurled into the fire; To Venus, on the hill Idæa; To Scamander, to the Nymphs, in Caues. To the dead also they sacrificed black sheepe ouer a dirch or hole in the ground, with wine, water, & flower, thinking that the soules drank the blood. They had whole flocks sacred to the gods, vntouched by mē. They obserued auguries, Thunders, dreames, Oracles of Apollo, and other superstitions. But the most famous of all, their fatall Palladium (a name giuen to all Images; which superstition beleued not made with hands) was said to haue fallen from heauen at Pessinus, or (as* Apollodorus witnesseth) at Ilium, at the prayer of Ilius when he built it. For hee hauing a pyed Oxen giuen him by the King of Phrygia, and warned by him to build a Citie where that Oxen should lie downe, followed him to this place, where he built a Citie, which he called of his owne name Ilium; and desiring Iupiter to send him some signe, found this Palladium the next morning before his tent. Some^u say Asius a Philosopher made it by Magicall Art: Apollodorus addeth, that it moued vp and downe, holding in the right hand a iauelin; in the left, a Distaffe. It was three cubits long. Apollo's Oracle fore-warned, that that Citie should neuer be taken, in whose walles it was kept. They hid it therefore in a more secret part of the Tower, that it should not bee publickly knowen, making many other like it to deceiue all future deceiuers. A woman-Priest attended the holy things in honour thereof, keeping fire continually burning. It was vnlawfull with common hands or eies to touch or see it. And therefore when Ilius sawed it from flames, the Temple being on fire, hee was for his blinde zeale punished with blindnesse; of which, soone after hee recouered by diuine indulgence. Vlysses stole it from them. And thus perished that famous Phrygian Citie, if that may be said to perish which still continueth, farre farre more famous by Homers pen, then Priams Scepter or Hectors valour.

The ruines thereof are as yet very apparant (according to Bellonius, * an eie-witnesse, his report) the walles of the Citie yet standing, the remnants of her decayed buildings still with a kinde of maiestie entertaining the beholder: the walles of large circuit, of great spongie blacke and hard stones, cut foure square. There are yet to be seene the ruinous monuments of the Turrets on the walles. They spent foure houres, sometime on horse, and sometime on foot, in compassing the walles. Great Marble Tombes of ancient workmanship are seene without the walles made Chest-fashion: and their couers yet whole. There are also extant the ruinous shapen of two great Towers; one in the top of the hill, (on the bending whereof the towne stood) the other in the bottome: and of another in the middle. Many great Cisterns made to receiue raine-water are yet whole. There are the ruines also of Churches built there, by the sometimes inhabiting Christians. The soile about it is drie and barren: the riuers (so much chaunted) Xanthus and Simois are small rilles, in Summer quite drie: as also Mela testifieth, famâ quàm naturâ maiora flumina.

This Ilium (whose sepulchre onely Bellonius hath seene) is not in that place where old Ilium stood, but thirty furlongs Eastward, if Strabo be receiued, yea it changed the place and situation often, and heere at last abode by warning of the Oracle, which also hath now had his Fates as well as Ilium. A small towne was this later Ilium, hauing in it the Temple of Pallas, which Alexander in his time graced, enriching the Temple with offerings, and the place with name of a Citie, with building and immunitie. After his victorie ouer the Persians, he sent them a fauourable Epistle, with promise to build them a sumptuous Temple, and there to institute sacred games, which Lysimachus after his death in great part performed, peopling it from the neighbour Cities. The Romans also planted there a Colonie, when as Lysimachus afore had walled it, and built the Temple. Fimbria, in the warres against Mithridates, hauing treacherously slaine the Consul Valerius Flaccus, and seeking to enter, vpon deniall assailed it, and in the eleuenth day entred by force; glorying that he had done as much in eleuen daies, as Agamemnon with a thousand saile of Greekes, had done in ten yeere. Not so much, replied an Ilian, for Hector was not heere to defend the Citie. Casar, enuulous of Alexanders attempts, and deriuing his pedigree from Iulus, confirmed their former libertie, adding a new region to their territorie. Mela telleth a strange wonder of the hill Ida: Soone after midnight they which looke from the top thereof, discern certaine dispersed fires, which as the light approcheth are more vnited, and at last gathered into one flame, like a fire, which by degrees groweth into a round and huge globe, and then by degrees diminishing in quantitie, but in qualitie of light increasing, is at last taken vp into the Chariot of the Sunne.

Achilles among the later Ilians enioied a Temple and a Toombe: Patroclus also and Antiochus had their Toombes: to them all and to Ajax did the Ilians sacrifice; an honour denied to Hercules for sacking their Citie: an vniust quarrell, if this yet may be a iust excuse of their partiall superstition. Thymbra is a field hard by, through which slideth Thymbraus, disemboking it selfe into Scamander there, where standeth the Temple of Thymbrean Apollo.

Arrianus ^z reporteth, that Alexander sacrificed to Protesilaus, (erecting Altars on his graue) who was the first of the Grecians that in the Trojan warre set foot in Asia; as he had before in the Straits of Hellespont offered a Bull to Neptune and the Sea-Nymphes, powring a golden Viall into the Sea: and in the places from whence hee set saile, and where he arriued, he set vp Altars to Iupiter Descensor, to Pallas, and to Hercules. And being come to Ilion, hee sacrificed to Trojan Pallas, and fastening the armes, which he vsed, in her Temple, (a rite which the Philistims ^a obserued in Saul their enemy, and Dauid ^b with the armour of Goliath) he tooke thence the armour sacred to the Goddess; monuments till that day of the Trojan warre, afterward the weapons ^c of his gard. He ^d appeas'd also Priamus his Ghost, performing his exequies at the Altar of Iupiter Hircius, so to reconcile him to Neoptolemus his house, of which he, by his mother, descended. He crowned Achilles his Toombe: calling him ^e happy, who had Homer to blaze abroad his praises to the world: in which he was greater then Great Alexander.

Not farre hence is the Citie and Hauen Priapus, so called of the beastly God: like to Orphanes and Conisalus and Tychon, drunken Gods of the Athenians. This God or diuell (of more iniquitie, then antiquitie) was not knowne of Hesiod. This Region was called Adrastia ^f of King Adrastus, who first built a temple of Nemesis calling it Adrastia. In the country adjoining was an Oracle of Apollo Aetæus, and Diana: whose oratorie being demolished, the stones were carried to Parium, where was built an Altar, famous for fairenesse and greatnesse. Of this Adrastia was a Temple at Cyzicus.

This Cyzicus was a Citie of Misia minor; (for there is another Mysia called Maior, according to Ptolemeys diuision;) the former is called Olympica, the later by Galen ^h Hellespontica: there is another Mysia in Europe, which Volateran distinguisheth calling it Mæsia. Some ascribe this Cyzicus to Bithynia. We list not to vmpire betwixt Geographers, but to relate our Historie, ⁱ which telleth that this Citie was renowned for Antiquitie, giuen by Iupiter in Dowrie to Proserpina; whom therefore the inhabitants worship. The greatnes, beautie, lawes, & other excellencies of Cyzicus let others shew you: their Temple I cannot but stay to view with wonder, ^k whose pillars are measured foure cubits thicke, fiftie high, each of one stone: in which, the whole building was of polished stone, and every stone was ioined to his fellow with a thread ^l or line of gold: the image of Iupiter was of Iuorie, crowned with a marble Apollo. Such was the beautie of the worke, and costlinesse of the matter, that the Earth whether with loue seeking to embrace it, or with iust hatred for the idolatrous curiositie, swallowed vp both it and the Citie in an Earthquake. The like befell to Philadelphia, another Mysian Citie (one of the seuen Churches ^m to which Iohn writ:) and to Magnesia ⁿ in the same Region. Neere to Cyzicus was the hill Dyndima: and thereon Cybeles Temple built by the Argonautes: who had also vsed a certaine stone for an anchor, which they fixed sure at Cyzicus with Lead, because it had often plaid the fugitiue, ^o called therefore the fugiue Stone. The Cyzican towers yeelded a seuen fold Eccho.

The Mysians for their great deuotion were called smoke-climbers, a fit name for all superstitious. They had in honour the Nymph Bryibia: vnder colour of religion the Parians couens'd the Lampsacens of a great part of their rerritorie. Of this Citie was Priapus aforesaid, a man monstrous in lusts, admirable in his plentifull issue; hated of the men (howsoeuer of the women beloued) and by them exiled to a wilde life in the field, till a greuous disease, sent amongst them, caused them, by warning of the Dodonæan Oracle, to recall him; fit seruitour for such a God. Hence the tale of his huge Genitals, and of his Garden-deitie. Offering to rauish a Virgin at the time of her Wedding, he was scared by the braying of an Asse, a creature for this cause consecrated to his sacrifices. Lettice most suitable to such lips.

A little hence standeth Abydus,* where was a famous Temple of Venus, in remembrance of their libertie recovered by a Harlot. Ouer against the same on Europe side, was Sestus, chaunted by the Poets, the guard of the Hellespont, one of the keys (saith Bellonius) of the Turkish Empire; the Castles being for that purpose well furnished, the Straits not aboue seuen furlongs ouer. Here did Xerxes ioyne Asia to Europe by a bridge, professing warres not against the Grekes alone, but against the elements. To Mount Athos he did this Mount Atheos write his menacing Letters. To the Hellespont he commanded three hundred stripes to be giuen, and fetters to be cast in, with reuiling speeches for the breach of his new-made bridge, which the Sea (disdayning the stopping of his passage, and infringing his libertie) had by tempest broken.

In Mysia^r was that famous Pine-tree, foure and twenty foote in compasse, and growing intire threescore and ten foote from the roote, was diuided into three armes equally distant, which after gathered themselues close into one top, two hundred foote high, and fiftene cubits. Apollo Cillaus had a Temple dedicated to him at Cilla; another was erected at Chrysa to Apollo Smynthius; and twentie furlongs thence, another to Diana Astirina; another (with a sacred Caue) at Andira to the mother of the Gods: this Caue reached vnder the earth to Palea, a hundred and thirtie furlongs. Attalus reigned in these parts, who furnished the Library of Pergamus with two hundred thousand volumes, for the writing whereof those parchment skinnes were inuented, therefore called to this day Pergamene. Of this name Attalus were three of their Kings; the last of which made the Romanes his heires. Here was that cruell Edict of Mithridates published to murder the Romanes, whereby many, driuen to seeke helpe of Æsculapius in his Temple at Pergamus, found him eyther vniuersall, or vnskillfull to cure them, although his Phisicke-shop was in this Citie. Here were inuented (by King Attalus) Tapestry hangings, called Aulea of Aula his hall which was hanged therewith. Here was also a yearely spectacle of the Cock-fight. The Mysian Priests abstained from flesh and Marriage. They sacrificed a Horse, whose inward partes were eaten before their vows.

Southwards from hence along the Sea coast, trende in Eolis: whereunto adioyneth Lydia, called^s aunciently Asia, and the inhabitants, Afiones. It was called Mæonia of Manes their first King, who begat Cotys, and he, Attys, and Asius, of whom (some say) Asia taketh name. Cambletes^t a Lydian King (saith Athenaus) was so addicted to gourmandize, that in the night he did teare and eate his wife; and finding her hand (in the morning) in his mouth, the thing being noysed abroad, he killed himselfe. The same Author telleth^u of King Andramytes, that he made women Eunuches for his attendance: that the Lydians were so effeminate, that they might not endure the Sunne to looke vpon them, for which cause they had their shade bowers: that in a place, therefore called Impure, they forced women and maidens to their lust, which Omphale (who had indured this violence, comming after to be their Queene) reuenged by as vniust iustice. For assembling all the seruants or slaues, she shut vp among them their masters daughters, permitting them to their pleasures. She was daughter of Iardanus of the posteritie of Attys, who set Hercules his taske to spinne amongst her maidens. Her husband Tmolus deflowred Arriphe in Dianas Temple. Of him haply was named the hill Timolus, which yeelded golden sands to the Riuer Pactolus. Halyattis^x was after a long succession the Lydian King, father to Cræsus, whose Sepulcher was an admirable monument being at the bottome stone; elsewhere, earth: built by men and women, slaues, and hired persons. It is fixe furlongs in compasse, and two hundred foote; and a thousand and three hundred foote broad. All the daughters of the Lydians prostitute themselues, and thereby get their liuing and dowrie. These were the first inuenters of coyning money: the first huesters and pedlers: the first players at Dice, Balls, Chess, in the time of Attys the first; driuen to this shift by famine, which when they knew not otherwise to redresse, they deuised these games, passing the time of euery second day with these pastimes, then beguiling their emptie bellies, and (according to their ominous inuention) now not so much the companions, as the harbengers and forerunners of emptinesse, although some contrary to their first originall, vse them to ease their fulnesse. Thus did the Lydians liue (if Herodotus be beleued) two and z Strab. l. 14. Here on the winding streames of Meander (or nigh thereto) was situate Magnesia (not that by Hermus) whose Inhabitants worshipped the Dyndimene Mother of the Gods. But the olde Citie and Temple perishing, and a new builded, the Temple was named of Diana Leucophryna, exceeding that of Ephesus in workemanship, but exceeded in greatnesse and multitude of oblations. And yet this was the greatest in Asia, except the Ephesian and Dindymene. Of Tralles a neighboring City was Metodorus the Priest of Iupiter Laryssaus. In the way from thence^z to Nyssa, is a village of the Nyssaens named Acharaca. There is the Plutonium (compassed with a groue) and the Temple of Pluto and Iuno, and the Cauē Charonium, admirable to the view, ouerhanging the groue, which it threatneth, seeming to deuoure it. They say that sicke men which are deuoted to those Gods, goe thither, and in a streete neere the Cauē, stay with such as are expert in those mysteries, who sleeping for them, inquire the course to cure them by dreames. These inuoking diuine remedies many times leade them into the Cauē, where abiding many dayes with fastings and sweatings, they sometimes intend to their owne dreames, by the Counsells of the Priests. To others this place is pestilent and inaccessible. Here are yearely festiuals solemnized, and then most of all are these deuotions practised. Youthes and striplings naked and annoynted, draw or leade a Bull into the same Cauē with great speed, who falls anon dead. Thirty furlongs beyond Nyssa is a festiuall place solemnely frequented by the neighboring Inhabitants, which is said to haue a Cauē dedicated to the same Gods, and reaching to Acharaca.

Off. 3.* After Omphale, Hercules posteritie, which he had by her, reigned; carrying for their royall Ensigne that Battle-axe, which Hercules had taken from Hippolita the Amazon. Candaules wearie of the burthen, gaue it to one of his Courtiers to beare, interpreted an ominous presage of that which happened. He thinking it not enough happinesse to enioy the beauties of his wife, vnlesse some other eyes were witnesses of his possession, placed Gyges his friend where he might see vnscene (happily the occasion of that tale of Gyges Ring, wherewith he went inuisible) to take view of his wiues nakednesse. But being perceiued by her at his departure, shee put him soone after to his choyce, whether he would enioy what he had seene, and the Kingdome for dowrie, without other ioynture then Candaules blood, or would there himselfe be slaine. Easie to iudge his choyce, by which Hercules his race failed. Of him descended Crcæsus, whose Hittorie is knowne. Him did Cyrus ouerthrowe,^b and had set him on a pyle of wood to burne him, who then cried Solon, Solon, Solon: which Cyrus not vnderstanding, caused him to be asked, why he so called: he answered, That somtimes drunken with wealth and pleasure, he thought himselfe happie, but then was taught by Solon, not to iudge any happie till his end; which lesson he now learned to his cost: to his good indeede; for Cyrus for this pardoned his life, now the second time saued: which a little before a souldier in taking the Citie had bereaued, had not naturall affection in his sonne (before this time dumbe) violently inforced Nature to loosen the instruments of speech, and proclaime, It is the King. Thus had the Oracle prophesied, that the day would be dismall and disastrous to the father, when the sonne should speake (whereto he had before in vaine sought helpe of God and men) and could speake freely all his life after. And this was all that Crcæsus by his sumptuous^c presents, and superstitious deuotion could get of Apollo, which had foretolde him, that he himselfe had no power to auert or alter, not to speake of his enigmaticall answers, snares, not instructions, nocuments, not documents vnto him.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Ionia and other countries in that Chersonesus.

Ionia is situate on the Icarian Sea, ouer against the Island Chios. The Inhabitants are accounted Athenian Colonies (whereas Athens may rather seeme to be Ionian) deducing their name from ^a Ion the sonne of Crenusa and Xuthus. But more probable is ^b their opinion which deriue them from Iauan, as is ^c before obserued by vs. Of the Ionians in Asia, were reckoned ten principall Cities in the continent, Miletus, Myus, Priene, Ephesus, Colophon, Lebedus, Teos, Clazomena, Phocaea, Erythraea, besides Chios and Samos in the Islands, to which they imparted their names.

The Ionians had their common Sacrifices and Ceremonies at the Promontorie of Mycale, generally by all the Ionians dedicated to Neptune Heliconius, erecting there vnto him a Temple: the place was called Panionium, and the feast in which those sacrifices were offered, Panionia. To those twelue Cities, ^d Strabo mentioning the founders of them, addeth also Smyrna, and saith that they were called to the Panionian solemnities by the Ephesians, who were sometime called Smyrnæans of Smyrna the Amazon, who is named the founder of Ephesus. Against those Smyrnæans the Sardians warred, and would on no condition raise their siege, except the Smyrnæan Matrons were permitted to their lusts. ^e The maide-seruant of one Philarchus amongst them deuised, that those of her condition might in their Mistresses habite be sent, to saue their Masters beds, which was accomplished.

As for Ephesus, the place was designed by Oracle for the building thereof, which warned them there to build, where a Fish and a Bore should shew them. It hapned, that as certaine Fishermen at the sacred fountaine Hypelcus were broyling their fish, one of them leaped with the coales into an heape of straw, which thereby was fired; and a Bore which lay couered therein, leaping out, ranne from thence as farre as Trachea, and there fell downe dead of a wound which they gaue him, grunting out his last gaspe, where Pallas after was honoured with a Temple. Greater then Pallas and her swinish deuotion, was that ^f Great Diana of the Ephesians, (so proclaimed in the madnesse of their zeale) and that Image which came downe from Iupiter, which all Asia and the world worshipped. This Image (as ^g Plinie writeth) was thought by some to be of Ebonie; but Mutianus thrice Consull, writ, That it was of the Vine, neuer changed in seuen alterations or restitutions, which the Temple receiued. It had many holes filled with Spikenard, the moysture whereof might fill and close vp the rifts. The dores of the Temple were of Cypresse, ^h which after foure hundred yeares were as fresh as if they had bene new. The rooffe of the Temple was Cedar. The Image, which superstition supposed came from Iupiter, was made (saith the same Mutianus) by one Canetia. The Temple (reputed one of the worlds seuen wonders) was first the building of the Amazons, as Solinus affirmeth. But ⁱ Pausanias reprocueth Pindarus, for affirming that the Amazons had built it, when they made their Expedition against Theseus and the Athenians: for at that time (saith he) the women going from Thermodon, sacrificed to the Ephesian Diana in their way, as they had done before in the times of Hercules and of Bacchus. Not the Amazons therefore, but one Cræsus of that Countrey, and Ephesus (supposed the sonne of the Riuer Cayster) founded it. Of him the Citie also receiued her name. About the Temple dwelt both diuers other suppliants, and women of the Amazonian race. These were spared by Androclus the sonne of Codrus, who here planted his Athenian Colonie, and chased out the Leleges, which before were the Inhabitants; who being slaine in this Expedition, his Sepulchre remained in Pausanias his time, on which was set a man armed. Xerxes when hee burned all other Temples in Asia, spared this, vncertaine whether for admiration or deuotion; most certaine, a bootlesse clemencie. For ^k Herostatus, to lengthen the memorie of his name with detestation of his wickednesse, fired this Temple on that day in which Alexander was borne at Pella. Diana forsooth, (who in her Midwife-Mysterie is called also Iuno Lucina) in her officious care to helpe Olympias in her traueuell, was then absent. It was after restored to a greater excellencie by Dinocrates, or (as Strabo tearms him) Chermocrates, who was also the Architect of Alexandria. Some^m affirme, That two hundred and twentie yeares were spent in building this Temple, by all Asia: Plinie saith, foure hundred. It was built on a Marish, because of Earthquakes (which are said to be more common in Asia then other partes) being founded on Coles, the second foundation Wooll. There were therein an hundred twentie seauen Pillars, the workes of so many Kings, threescore foote in height, and sixe and thirtie of them very curiously wrought. The Temple was foure hundred twentie fise foot long two hundred and twentie broad; of the Ephesians holden in such veneration, that when Crasus had begirt them with a straight siege, ⁿ they deuoted their Citie to their Goddesse, tying the wall thereof with a rope to the Temple. The Priests were Eunuches, ^o called Megalobyzi, greatly honoured, and had with them sacred Virgins. Some ^p call these or else another order of Diana's Priests, Estiatores and Essene, that is, Good fellowes (after the appellation of this bad age) which by yearely courses had a peculiar diet assigned them, and came in no priuate house. All the Ionians resorted to Ephesus, ^q at Diana's festiuall, which with daunces and other pompe they solemnized, with their wiues and children, as they had done before at Delos: the Temple had priuiledge of Sanctuarie, which Alexander extended to a furlong, Mithridates to a flight-shot. Antonius added part of the Citie: But Augustus disanulled the same, that it should no longer be a harbour for villaines. This the Romanes finde (saith a ^r Roman Pope relating this Historie) among whom ate so many Sanctuaries, as Cardinals houses, in which theenes and ruffians haue patronage, which make the Citie (otherwise quiet and noble) a deme of theenes. A lake named Selinusius, and another which floweth into it, were Diana's patrimonie, which by some Kings being taken from her, were after by the Romanes restored. And when the Publicans had seised the profits, Artemidorus was sent in Ambassage to Rome, where hee recovered them to Diana, for which cause they dedicated to him a golden Image in the Temple. In the middes of the lake was the Kings Chappell, accounted the worke of Agamemnon. Alexander ^s not only restored the Ephesians to their Citie, which for his sake they had lost, and changed the gouernement into a popular state, but bestowed also the tributes, which before they had paid to the Persians, vpon Diana, and caused them to be slain which had robbed the Temple, & had ouerthrowne the Image of Philip his father therin, and such of them as had taken Sanctuarie in the Temple he caused to be fetched out and stoned. While he stayed at Ephesus, he sacrificed to Diana with very sollempne pompe, all his armie being arranged in battell aray. But this Temple of Diana, together with their Diana is perished: But neuer shall that truth perish which Paul writ in his Epistle to them; for obseruing which by Christ himselfe in another Epistle written by S. Iohn, they are commended; and which in a Councell there holden, was confirmed against the heresie of Nestorius and Celestius. But alas, that golden Candl. sticke (as was threatned) is now almost by Greekish superstition and Turkish tyrannie remoued thence: a Bishop with some remnants of a Church still continuing.

The Ephesians were obseruers of curious Artes, which not onely Luke ^t mentioneth, but the prouerbe also confirmeth ^u, Ephesia litera: so they called the spells, whereby they made themselves in wrestling, and other conflicts, inuincible. The summe of those Magicall bookes burned by them, Luke rateth at 50000. peeces of siluer, which Budaus summeth at 5000. crownes. The many temples ^{*} of Venus at Ephesus, are not worth memorie. Memorable is the historie of an Ephesian maide, ^x who, when Brennus inuaded Asia, promised him her loue (which he much desired) & withall, to betray the citie to him, if he would giue her all the Iewels and attire of the women; which the fouldiers were commanded to doe, who heaped their gold so fast vpon the Damosell, according to their command, that she was therewith couered & slaine. The Asiarcha, which Luke ^{*} nameth, Bezay saith were certain Priests, whose office it was to set forth publike playes & games in honor of their Gods; as also were the Syriarcha. The Ephesians, sians, ^z as all the other Ionians, were much addicted to nicenesse and sumptuousnesse of attire, for which, and other their delicacies, they grew into a proverbe.

^z Athenensl. 12

The Ionians had other places and Temples amongst them famous for deuotion, and antiquitie, such as no where else are to be seene, as the Temple and Oracle of Apollo at Gemmi. ^a Myus had a small arme of the Sea, whose waters by the meanes of Meander failing, the foyle brought forth an innumerable multitude of fleas, which forced the Inhabitants to forsake their Citie, and with bagge and baggage to depart to Miletus. And in my time (saith Pausanias) nothing remained of Myus, in Myus, but Bacchus Temple. The like befell to the Atarnixæ neare to Pergamus. The Persians burnt the Temple of Pallas at Phoea; and another of Iuno in Samos, the remaines whereof are worthie admiration: the Erythrean Temple of Hercules, and of Pallas at Prienæ; that for the antiquitie, this for the Image. The Image of Hercules is said to be brought in a ship which came (without mans helpe) to the Cape, where the Cbians and Erythreans laboured each to bring the same to their owne City. But one Phormio a Fisher-man of Erythra was warned in a dreame, to make a rope of the haire cut off from the heads of the Erythrean Matrons, by which their husbands should draw the same in to their towne. The women would not yeeld; but certaine Thracian women which had obtained their freedom, granted their haire to this purpose, to whom therefore this priuiledge was granted, to enter into Hercules Temple, a thing denied to all other the Dames of Erythra. The rope still remaineth: and the Fisherman which before was blinde, recouered his sight. In this Towne also is Mineruaes Temple, and therein a huge Image of wood, sitting on a throne, holding with both hands a distaffe. There are the Graces, and Houres, formed of white Marble. At Smyrna was the Temple of Aesculapius: and, nigh to the springs of their riuer Meles, a caue, in which they say Homer composed his Poems. Thus much Pausanias, The Ionian ^b letters were more resembling the Latine; then the present Greeke are, and were then common, as in our first Booke is shewed in our Phœnician relations.

At Miletus, a madde phrensie had once possessed their Virgins, whereby it came to passe, that they in great multitudes hanged themselues. Neither cause appeared, nor remedie: Needs must they goe whom the Diuell driues. Whom ^c neither the sweetnesse of life, bitternesse of death, teares, intreaties, offers, custodie of friends could moue, Modestie detained from proceeding in this immodest butcherie: and which is more to be wondered at, a Posthume modestie, which could not bee borne, till they were dead. For a Law was made, That the naked bodies of such as thus had strangled themselues, should be drawne thorow the streets: which contumely, though it were but a Gnat to those Camels, which with the halter they swallowed, yet strained they at it, and it could not be digested, but stayed their furie. Before the Trojan warre, was Hercules famous at Miletus. The Ionians were subiect to the Assyrians: after that to the Egyptians: next to the Lydians, Persians, and the other Empires, which successuely followed.

From Ephesus to Colophon are seuentie furlongs. This towne grew into a Prouerb; ^d for through their excellencie in horsemanship they vially made the victorie (otherwise doubtfull) to be certaine on that side which entertained them. Before Colophon was the groue of Apollo Clarius. And here died Calchas that famous wizard for grieffe, that when vpon his demand Mopsus had certainly answered how many pigs were in the belly of a Sow, by him propounded: Calchas could not doe the like, when Mopsus asked of the number of figs growing on a fig-tree thereby.

Not farre from hence is Erythra the towne of one of the Sybyls, which liued in the time of Alexander, of which name also there were others in other places and times, renowned for their prophecyings. Beyond Clazomenæ is the Temple of Apollo, and Smyrna famous in thoe blinde times, for the Temple and statue of Homer; since for the Prelacie of Polycarpus, whom our Lord himselfe so highly commiendeth. Pliny ^e writeth of one in Smyrna, which being a maide changed her sexe and became a stripling: of which sort hee affirmeth hee had seene one in Africa, then liuing when hee writ, which on her marriage-day sustained that alteration. Phlegon relateth of Philotis another Smyrnan mayde, thus made a male, Pontanus telleth the like of a woman at Caieta married to a fisher foure yeares, and of another the wife of Antonio Spensa twelue yeares, which after married a wife and had children. And in late times Spaine hath yeilded two such examples: of which I list not to play the Philosopher, whether they were imperfect males, or perfect Hermaphrodites. But to hold on our Asian journey. Neleus builded Miletus (who also erected the Altar at Possidium) The Milesian Oracle was sacred to Apollo Didymus ^a amongst the Branchidæ, who betrayed the treasures of their God to Xerxes the burner of their Temple; and therefore for feare of punishment followed him after in his flight. Afterwards the Milesians builded a Temple, which for the exceeding greatnesse remained without roose, compassed with dwelling-houses, and a groue, adorned sumptuously with gifts of ancient workmanship. Heere was the legend framed of Branchus and Apollo, whom they called Ulios, and Artemis, of healing. Neare vnto the Temple of Neptune at Possidium was Heræum, an old Temple and Oratorie, after conuerted into a store-house, but then also retaining diuers Chappells full of old workes, as was also a Court-yard without, from whence when Antonius had taken three Colosses (the worke of Miro) standing on one basis, Augustus placed there againe Pallas and Hercules, but translated Iupiter to the Capitoll, and built him a Chappell.

Solmissus is not farre hence, where the Curetes or Priests of Iupiter dulled the eares of Iuno with the sound of weapons, while Latona was deliuered. Heere were many Temples, some old, some new. The ^b Curetes or Corybantes, for so they were also termed, were a shauen order of Priests, who, rauished with a sacred furie, played vpon Cimbals, and danced, shaking their heads to and fro, drawing others into the same rage of superstition. These first began their deuotions at Ida, a hill of Phrygia, and after sailed into Creet, and heere with their furious sounds they deliuered Iupiter from Saturnes gullet (who had before couenanted with Titan to kill all his male children) while he could not by meanes of their noise heare Iupiters crying. Diodorus Siculus writeth, That Corybantus was the sonne of Iason and Cybele, and with Dardanus brought into Phrygia the rites of the mother of the gods, and called his disciples in that sect Corybantes. Natalis Comes ^c traueseth many opinions about their originall and rites; their dances were in armour.

The Region of the Dorians was almost rounded with the Sea: Herein was Gnidus a Citie of name for the marble Image of Venus: and Halycarnassus, the Countrey of Herodotus and Dionysius famous Historians, and of Mausolus, whose Sepulchre, erected by Artemisia his wife and sister, was accounted one of the worlds seuen wonders.

In the Suburbs of Stomalymne was the Temple of Æsculapius of great reputation, and riches. In it was Antigonus of Apelles workmanship: there was also Venus naked, after dedicated to Cesar at Rome, as the mother of that Generation, by Augustus.

Neere to Bargolia was a Temple of Diana. Mylasa another Citie of Caria had many publike buildings and faire Temples; among the rest, two of Iupiter (surnamed Osoغو) in the one; and in the other, Labrandæus, of Labranda a Village, a little off, which had an ancient Temple of Iupiter Militaris much frequented. The way leading thither was called Sacred, paved sixtie furlongs, through which their Procession passed in pompous solemnitie. The noblest of the Citizens were ordained Priests, which function dured with their liues.

There is a third Temple of Iupiter Carius common to all the Carians, of which also the Lydians and Myrians are partakers. Strabo reporteth of ^d two Temples at Stratonica; one at Lagina, sacred to Hecate, where were celebrated yearely solemnities; the other neere the Citie of Iupiter Chrysaoreus common to all the Carians, whither they resort to sacrifice, and to consult of common affaires: which their assemblie is called Chrysaorean.

Lydia, called also ^e Meonia, was a rich Country, whose mother-Citie was Sardis, the royall seat of Crasus, washed by golden Pactolus, where idlenes was a speciall fault, and punished by the Law. Fiue miles from the Citie is a lake called Colous, where is the Temple of Diana Coloena very religiously accounted of, wherein, on their festiuals, Apes were reported to dance. The Region, called Burned, stretcheth it selfe heere a-

about the space of five hundred furlongs, mountainous, stonie and blacke, as if it were of some burning, wanting trees altogether (Vines excepted) which yeeld a very pleasant wine. Here was another Plutonium at Hierapolis ouer-against Laodicea. It was a hole in the brow of a hill, so framed, that it might receiue the bodie of a man, of great depth. Below it was a squared trench of halfe an acre compasse so cloudie and darke, that the ground could scarcely be seene. The aire is not hurtfull to them which approach: but within it is deadly. Strabo put in Sparrowes, which presently died. But the gelded Priests called Galli, might approach to the mouth, and looke in, and diue in as long as they could hold their breath, without harme, but not without signes of working passions, whether of diuine inspiration or reluctation of the naturall forces. No lesse maruellous then the dampe of the aire, is the hardning qualitie of the waters, which being hot, doe harden themselves into a kind of stone. Warner mentioneth the like in Hungarie, and Acosta, in Peru. Those Galli here mentioned were Priests of Cybele so called of Gallus a riuer in Phrygia; & the waters whereof, temperatly drunken, did exceedingly temper the braine, and take away madnesse; but being sucked in largely, caused madnesse. These Priests drinking hereof vnto madnes, in that furie gelded themselves. And as their beginning, so was their proceeding also in madnes, in the execution of their rites, shaking and wheeling their heads like mad-men. Volateran ^h out of Polybistor reporteth, that one Gallus the cōpanion of Attys (both gelded) imposed this name on the riuer, before called Teria. Of Cybele and Attys we haue spoken before: I adde, that after some, this Attys was a Phrygian youth, which when he would not listen to Rhea in her amorous suit, gelded himselfe; so consecrating his Priesthood vnto Rhea or Cybele: others ⁱ affirme that she preferred him to that Office, first hauing vowed perpetuall chastitie, and breaking his Vow, was punished with madnes, in which ^k he dismembred himselfe, and would also haue killed himselfe, but that by the compassionate Goddesse he was turned into a Pine-tree. That the Fable! this the Historie! that these gelded Priests wore also long womanish attire, played on tymbrels and cornets, sacrificed to their Goddesse the ninth day of the Moone; at which time they set the Image of the Goddesse on an Asse, and went about the Villages and streets begging, with the sound of their sacred tymbrell, corne, bread, drinke, and all necessaries, in honor of their Goddesse: as they did also in the Temples, begging money in her name, with some muscalle instruments; and were therefore called Marragyrtæ. Thus did the Priests of Corona also begge for the maintenance of their Goddesse, with promises of good fortune to their liberall contributors. Lucian in his Asinus relateth the like knaueries of the Priests of Dea Syria. Concerning this Image, Albricus thus puttayeth it: A Virgin sitting in a chariot, adorned with varietie of gemmes and metals. She is called mother of the Gods and Giants: these Giants had Serpentine feete, one of which number was Titan, who is also the Sunne, who retained his Deitie, for not ioyning in conspiracie against the Gods with his brethren. This chariot was drawne with Lions. Shee wore on her head a crowne fashioned like a tower. Neere her is painted Atys a naked boy, whom in ieaousie shee gelded. Macrobius applies this to the Sun: Boccaccio ^l to the Earth (mother indeed of the Ethnike Deities, which were earthly-sensuall, duellist) who addeth to that former description of Albricus, a Scepter in her hand, her garment embroydered with branches and herbes, and the Galli, her gelded attendants with trumpets. The interpretation whereof, they which will may reade in him, as also in Phorantus, Fulgentius and others, with many other particulars of her legend. Claudian calls her both Cybele and Cybelle, which name Stephanus thinketh she receiued of a hill of that name in Phrygia (as doth Hesychius likewise) so was she called Dindymæa of the hill Dindymus. I could wearie the Reader with long narrations out of Pausanias, Arnobius, Litus Gyrallus and others, touching these things: but in part wee haue before shewed them, in our narrations of Adonis in Phœnicia, and of the Syryan Goddesse (to which Phorantus referreth this) and when we come to a larger handling of the Grecian Idolatries we shall finde more fit occasion.

mon Counsell of three and twentic Cities, till the Romans subdued them. Heere was Cragus a hill with eight Promontories, and a Citie of the same name, from whence arose the Fables of Chymara. At the foot of the hill stood Piuara, wherein was worshipped Pandarus; and a little thence the Temple of Latona; and not farre off, Patara, the worke of Patarus, beautified with a Hauen, and many Temples, and the Oracles of Apollo, no lesse famous (if Mela be beleueed) for wealth and credit, then that at Delphos. The hill Telmessus was here famous for Sooth-sayings; and the Inhabitants are accounted the first interpreters of Dreames. Here was Chymara a hill said to burne in the night. Pamphylia beareth Eastwards from Lycia, and now together with Cilicia of the Turks is called Caramania. Herein was Perga, neare wherunto on a high place stood the Temple of Diana Pergaa, where were obserued yearely Festiuals. Sida had also in it the Temple of Pallas.

m Dom. Niger. There remaine of this Chersonessus, ^m Armenia minor, and Cilicia. Armenia minor, called also Prima, is diuided from the Greater, or Turcomania, by Euphrates on the East: it hath on the West Cappadocia; on the South Cilicia, and part of Syria; on the North the Pontike Nations. It was sometimes reckoned a part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians by their inuasions and Colonies altered the name: As for their rites I finde little difference, but they either resemble the Cappadocians, or their Armenian Ancestors.

n Strabo. l. 14. Cilicia abutteth on the Easterne borders of Pamphylia, and was diuided into Trachea, and Campestris; now hath in it few people, many great Mesquitaes, and well furnished: the chiefe citie is Hamsa, ⁿ sometime called Tarsus, famous for the studies of learning, herein (saith Strabo) surmounting both Athens and Alexandria; but most most famous for yeelding him to the world, then whom the whole world hath not happily yeelded any more excellent that was merely a man, that great Doctor of Nations, who filled these Countries and all Regions, from Ierusalem euen to Illyricum (now full of barbarisme) by preaching, and still filleth the world by his writings, with that truth which he learned, not of man, nor at Tarsus the greatest Schoole of humanity, nor at Ierusalem the most frequented for Diuinity, but of the Spirite of truth himselfe: who both was at first from Heauen conuerted, and after in the third Heauen confirmed in the same.

Strabo mentioneth the Temple and Oracle of Diana Sarpedonia in Cilicia; where being inspired, they gaue answeres: The Temple of Iupiter also at Olbus, the worke of Anax. From Anchiale, a Cilician Citie, Alexander passed to Solos, where he sacrificed with praises to Aesculapius for recovery from a strong Feuer, gotten before in the waters of Cidnus, and celebrated Gymnicall and Musicall ° Games. The Corycian and Triphonian Dennes or Caues were held in much veneration among the Cilicians, where they sacrificed with certaine Rites: They had their diuination by Birds and P Oracles. Of the Corycian Den or Caue (so called of the towne Corycos, almost compassed with the sea) Mela q writeth, that from the hill which ascendeth the space of ten furlongs, this Caue or strange valley descendeth by degrees, the further the more spacious, enuironed with a greene circle of pleasant shadye groues, filling the eyes and mind at once with pleasure and wonder. There is but one passage into it, and that narrow and rough, which continueth a mile and halfe vnder delightfull shades, the rills running here and there, refounding I know not what strange noise in those darked bowers. When they are come to the bottome, another Caue presently presents it selfe, which terrifieth those that enter, with the multiplied sounds of Cymbals and uncouth minstrelsie. And the light failing by degrees, it brings them into a darke vault, where a riuer riseth, and hauing runne a swift course in a short channel, is againe drunke vp of the earth: so soone dieth that streame which is yet immortal, the Earth dealing with this, as some with their children begotten and borne in darknesse, smothering that breath which but euen now from them they receiued, alway bearing, and alway barren. There is a further passage, but none durst view it, possessed with a superstitious fancie of the Gods inhabiting; that conceit presenting all things to the minde as venerable and full of Deitie, which to the sense were dreadfull and full of horror. Beyond this was the Tryphonian, alway couered with a blacke mantle of darknesse, fabulouly supposed the

the bed of Typhon, and naturally extinguishing the naturall life of whatsoeuer entered.

Vnto these things which haue been said of the Temples, Priests and Rites, obserued in Asia, thus much may be added out of ^r Sardus, of their Sacrifices. The Phrygians sacrificed Swines bloud. This did the Galls, Priests of Cybele, and this did the Bedlem Votaries, to recouer of their madnesse. The Colophonians offered a dog to Enodia, which is Hecate, as did also the Carians to Mars. The Phaselites in Pamphylia sacrificed fishes to Caber, the sonne of Vulcan; and the Lydians, Eeles to Neptune. The Capadocian Kings in their Sacrifices to Iupiter Stratioticus, or Militaris, on a high hill, built a great fire, the King and others bringing wood thereto: and after that another lesser, which the King sprinkled with Milke and Hony, and after fired it, entertaining those which were present with good cheere.

Pencer ^s tells of diuinations vsed in some parts of Lycia: betwixt Myra and Phe-lus there was a fountaine full of fishes, by whose forme, nature, motion, and feeding, the Inhabitants vsed diuination. The same Lycians, in the groue of Apollo, not farre from the Sea, had a drie ditch, called Dina, in which the diuiner put in fishes, and ten gobbets of roasted flesh, fastened on spits, with certaine prayers: after which, the drie ditch became full of water, and fishes of all kinds and formes, by which the Priests obserued their Prædictions. And not farre from hence, at Myra in Lycia, was the fountaine of Apollo Curius, where the fishes being three times called with a Pipe, assembled themselues, and if they deuoured the meats giuen them, it was interpreted a good bode and happie presage: if they stricke away the same with their tailes, it was direfull and dreadfull. At Hierapolis in Lycia, the fishes in the Lake of Venus being called by the Temple-keepers, presented themselues, enduing to be scratched, gilled, and mens hands to be put in their mouthes. They diuined by lots six moneths of the yeare together, at Patara in Lycia, in Apolloes Temple. But Saturne hath swallowed his owne children; and Time, which brought forth these, both Gods and Religions, hath also consumed them, not leauing any such memoriall of them as might satisfie any curious searcher: yet in relation of the Greekish Rites (from which these, for the most part, haue not much swarued) you may expect a more full and ample Discourse.

THE FOURTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

*Of ARMENIA MAIOR, and GEORGIA: and

Lowly hitherto haue we proceeded in the discouerie of a part of Asia; sometime the store, sometimes the want, of conuenient matter, detaining our penne: In the one, Time, the consumer of things, causing much time and paines to bee spent in curious search, that wee might produce some light out of darkenesse: In the other, store of Stories, and varietie of varying Authors hath dimmed our weaker eyes with too much light, vncertaine in so many Tracts and Tractates, where to beginne, and when to end. Now at last are wee passed Euphrates, into a Countrey that often exalteth it selfe, as though it would pierce the Skies, and as often receiueth the due punishment of ambitious pride, being cast downe into so many lowly valleyes and deiected bottoms. The World, which after the Flood was re-peopled from hence, still carrieth in the severall Ages, Places, Peoples, and Men thereof, the resemblance of this her Cradle, now vp, now downe, in all varietie and vicissitude of chance and change, constant in vncostancie, treading this Armenian Measure with vnequall paces, ouer Hills and Dales, like it selfe onely in vnlikenesse. Heere Noes Arke settled, and heere must our Shippe hoyse sayle.

Armenia hath a part of Cappadocia and Euphrates on the West; Mesopotamia on the South; on the North part, Colchis, Iberia, Albania; on the East, the Caspian Sea, and Media. Part of this greater Armenia is now called Turcomania, the other part is contained in Georgia. Ptolemy^a reckoneth in it principall Mountaines, the Moschici, Paryages, or Pariedri, Vdacespes, Antitaurus, Abos, and the ^b Gordæi, which the Chaldean Paraphrast calleth Kardu; and Q. Curtius, Cordæi; Berofus, Cordyæi.

^c Haithons, or Antonius, Armenius. On these Hills the Arke rested, whereof we haue spoken in the first booke. ^c Haithon (if we beleue him of his owne Countrey, where he was of royall linage) calleth this Mountaine Arath, little differing from the Scripture-appellation Ararat, and addeth, That although, in regard of abundance of Snow, alway possessing the top thereof, none be able to goe vp thither, yet there alway appeareth in the toppe a certaine blacke thing, which the vulgar people esteeme to be the Arke. Perhaps it may be some cloud or mist which grosse vapours doe often cause on the tops of high hilles. For before Haithons daies, Benjamin Tudelenfis telleth that one Ghamar ben Alchetab had taken thence the remainder of the Arke, and therewith built an Ismaeliticall Meschit. And yet a man may heerein doubt also: for concerning reliques pretending such Antiquitie, Faith can finde no foundation in such ruinous rubbish; and wee haue before shewed out of Berofus and Nicolaus Damascenus of old, and Cartwrights later trauels, what may be thought thereof.

Lib. 1. cap 8.

Armenia (as Strabo^d affirmeth) receiued the name of one of Iasons Companions, which followed him in his Nauigation out of Harmenia, a Citie of Thessalie, betweene Phæx and Larissa. The wealth of this Region appeared, when Ptolemy appointing Tigranes to bring in to the Romanes sixe thousand Talents of Siluer, hee added voluntarily, beyond that summe, to euery souldiour in the Campe fiftie drammes of Siluer, to euery Centurion a thousand, to euery Deputie of a Countrey, and Chiliarche, a Talent.

e Pseudo-Berofus, lib. 3.

Their Religion must at first bee that which Noah and his Familie professed; after by time corrupted. Heere (^e saith our Berofus) Nōah instructed his posteritie in diuine and humane Sciences, and committed many naturall secrets vnto writing, which the Scythian Armenians commend to their Priests onely; none else being suffered to see, or reade, or teach them. He left also Rituall Bookes, or Ceremoniall, of the which he was tearmed Saga, that is, Priest or Bishop. He taught them also Astronomie, and the distinction of yeares and moneths: For which, they esteemed him partaker of diuine Nature, and surnamed him Olybama and Arsa, that is, the Heauen and the Sunne, and dedicated to him many Citie; some (saith he) remaining at this day, which beare these names. And when he went from thence to gouerne Cytim, which now (as he affirmeth) they call Italy, the Armenians were much affected to him, and after his death accounted him the Soule of the heauenly bodies, and bestowed on him diuine honors. Thus Armenia, where he began, and Italy, where he ended, doe worship him, and ascribe to him Names, Heauen, Sunne, Chaos, the Seede of the World, the Father of the greater and lesse Gods, the Soule of the World, mouing Heauen, and the Creatures, and Man; the God of Peace, Iustice, Holinesse, putting away hurtfull things, and preserving good. And for this cause both Nations signifie him in their writings with the course of the Sunne, and motion of the Moone, and a Scepter of Dominion, persecuting and chasing away the wicked from among the societie of men, and with the chastitie of the bodie, and sanctimonie of the minde, the two keyes of Religion and Happinesse. They called also ^f Tidea, the mother of all, after her death, Aræta, that is, the Earth, and Estæ, that is, the Fire, because shee had beene Queene of the Holy Rites, and had taught maidens to keepe the holy euerlasting fire from euer going out.

f The wife of Noah.

Noah, before hee went out of Armenia, had taught men Husbandrie, more aiming at Religion and Manners then Wealth and Dainties, which prouoke to vnlawfull things, and had lately procured the wrath of God. And first of all men hee found out and planted Vines, and was therefore called Ianus, which to the Aramæans soundeth as much as the Author of Wine. Thus farre Berofus lib. 3. and in the fourth Booke hee addeth, That Nymbrot (the first Saturne of Babylon) with his sonne Iupiter Belus, stole away those Rituall or Ceremoniall bookes of Iupiter Sagus, and came with his people into the Land Sennaar, where hee appointed a Citie, and layd the

the

the foundation of a great Tower a hundred one and thirtie yeeres after the Flood; but neither finished this, nor founded the other. Old Ianus when he went hence, left Scythia, with his mother Araxa, and some inhabitants, to people Armenia, being the first King thereof; Sabatius Saga being consecrated High Priest, from Armenia vnto the Baetrians: all which space (saith hee) in our Age is called Scythia Saga. In his fifth booke hee reporteth, That Iupiter Belus, possessed with ambition of subduing the whole world, closely endeouored to make (or take) away Sabatius Saga, who, being not able otherwise to escape his treacherie, fled away secretly. But Nimis the sonne of Belus, pursued his fathers intent against Sabatius, who substituted his sonne Barzanes in his place; and fledde into Sarmatia, and after from thence into Italie, to his father Ianus. Barzanes was subdued by Nimis. But to come to an Authour of better credite, s Strabo saith, The Armenians and Medes haue in veneration all the Temples of the Persians; but the Armenians especially esteeme the Temples of ^h Tanais, as erecting them in other places, so in Acilehna. They dedicate vnto them men-seruants and women-seruants: the most noble of that Nation there (dedicating shall I say? or) prostituting their daughters; where after long prostitution with their Goddesse, they are giuen in marriage, none refusing such matches. How much can the shadow, how little can the substance of Religion perswade men to? The Image of Tanais, or Anaitis, was set vp in her Temple, all of solid golde: and when as Antonius warred against the Parthians, this Temple was robbed. The same ⁱ went, That he which first had layed sacrilegious hands on the spoyles, was smitten blind, and so diseased, that he died thereof. But when Augustus, being entertained of an auncient Warriour at Bononia, asked him of the truth of this report, he answered, Thou now, O Emperour, drinkest that bloud; for I am the man, and whatsoeuer I haue came by that bootie. This Goddesse is supposed to be the same with Diana. A Region of Armenia bare the same name Anaitis.

i Cael. Rhodig. l. 18. c. 29.

How bloudie Rites the Armenians sometimes ysed, appeareth ^k by the Historie of the Riuer Araxes, before called Halmus, borrowing this later name of a King there reigning; to whom, in warres betwixt him and the Persians, the Oracle prescribed the sacrifice of his two faire daughters. Pietie forbad what pietie commaunded; and whiles the King would be an vmpire betweene Nature and the Oracle (which is the vsuall cuent in arbtrements) he satisfied neyther. That the Oracle might be fulfilled, he sacrificed two of noble birth, of notable beautie: that Nature might not be wronged, he wronged Iustice (the true touch-stone of true pietie) he spared his owne, and offered the daughters of Miesalcus: but so he lost both his daughters by Miesalcus reuenging sword, and himselfe in this Riuer by himselfe drowned. Bacchus loued Alphæsthea, an Armenian Damsell, and while Tygris, then (if you beleue the Storie) called Sollax, was too coole a mediator betweene the two hot louers, he swamme ouer on a Tygers backe. Hence the fable of his Metamorphosis into a Tygre: hence that name left to the Riuer. Armenia was subdued to the Persians by Cyrus: one part thereof payed to the Persians twentie thousand Colts for yearely tribute. ^l Sariaſter, sonne to Tigranes the Armenian King, conspired against his father: the Conspirators sealed their bloudie faith with a bloudie ceremonie; they let themselues bloud in the right hands, and then dranke it. Wonder, that in such a treacherie (as immediately before the same Author affirmeth of Mithridates his sonne) that any man would helpe, or that he durst importune the Gods: no wonder, that so bloudie a seale was annexed to such euidence.

The Mountaine ° of Armenia pay tribute vnto many Seas : by Phasis and Lycus vnto the Pontike Sea ; Cyrus and Araxes vnto the Caspian ; Euphrates and Tygris vnto the Red or Persian Sea : these two last are famous for their yearely ouerflowings, the former of them arising amidst three other seas, yet by the inroaching violence of the beetle-browed Hills enforced to a farre longer, more intricate, and tedious way, before he can repose his wearied waues : the other, for his swiftnesse, bearing the name of Tygris, which with the Medes signifieth an Arrow. Solinus, cap. 40. saith, That it passeth through the Lake Arethusa, neyther mingling waters nor fishes, quite of another colour from the Lake : it diueth vnder Taurus *, and bringeth with it much drosse on the other side of the Mountaine, and is againe hidden, and againe restored, and at last carrieth Euphrates into the Sea. The Armenians, besides their naturall Lords, haue been subiect to the Persians ; after that, to the Macedonians, and againe to the Persian ; after to Antiochus Captaines : then, to the Romanes and Parthians, tossed betwixt the Grecians and Saracens ; subdued after successiue to the Tartarians, Persians, and Turkes. Of these present Armenians Mr. Cartwright reporteth, That they are a people very industrious in all kinde of labour : their women very skilfull and actiue in shooting and managing any sort of weapon, like the auncient Amazons. Their families are great, the father and all his posteritie dwelling together vnder one Rooffe, hauing their substance in common : and when the father dieth, the eldest sonne doth gouerne the rest ; all submitting themselues vnder his Regiment : after his death, not his sonne, but the next brother succedeth, and so after al the brethren are dead, to the eldest sonne. In diet and clothing they are all alike. Of their two Patriarches, and their Christian profession, we are to speake in fitter place.

The Turcomanians (later inhabitants) are as other the Scythians or Tartarians, (from whence they are deriued) theeuish, wand ring vp and downe in Tents without certaine habitations, like as the Curdi also their Southerly neighbours, their cattell and their robberies being their greatest wealth. Of their Religion (except of such as after their manner be Christians, which we must deferre till a fitter time) we can finde little to say, more then is said already in our Turkish Historie. This we may here deplore of the vnhappy site of Armenia, which though it reoped the world, yet is it least beholding to her viperous off-spring, a mappe of the worldes miseries, through so many ages. For being hemmed alway with mightie neighbours on both sides, it selfe is made the bloudie Lists of their ambitious encounters, alway loosing whofoeuer wonne, alway the gauntlet of the Challenger, the Crowne of the Conquerour. This (to let passe elder times) the Romanes and Parthians, Greeke Emperours and Saracens, Turkes and Tartarians, Turkes and Mamalukes, Turkes and Persians, do more then enough proue. Ptolomey placeth to the North of Armenia, Colchis, washed by the Pontike Sea ; Albania by the Caspian ; and betwixt these two Iberia, now (together with some part of Armenia) called Georgia, eyther for the honour of their Patron S. George, or haply because they descended of those Georgi, which Plinie q nameth among the Caspian inhabitants. Strabo r recordeth foure kindes of people in this Iberia : of the first sort are chosen two kings, the one precedent in age and nobilitie, the other a Leader in Warre, and Law-giuer in Peace : the second sort, are the Priests : the third, Husbandmen and Souldiers : the fourth, the vulgar seruite people. These haue all things common by Families, but he is Ruler which is eldest ; a thing obserued of the Armenian Christians (as before is said) euen at this day. Constantinus Porphyrogenitus * the Emperour writeth, That the Iberians boast and glorie of their descent from the wife of Yriah, which

David defiled, and of the children gotten betwene them. Thus would they seeme to be of kin to David and the Virgin Marie: and for that cause they marrie in their own kindred. They came (they say) from Ierusalem, being warned by Vision to depart thence, and seated themselues in these parts. There departed from Ierusalem David, and his brother Spandiates, who obtained (say they) such a fauour from God, that no member of his could be wounded in warre, except his heart, which hee therefore diligently armed; whereby he became dreadfull to the Persians, whom he subdued, and placed the Iberians in these their habitations. In the time of Heraclius they ayded him against the Persians, which after that became an easie prey to the Saracens. Of the Roman conquests & exploits in Armenia, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, I list not here to relate.

Albania (now Zuiri) lyeth North and East betwixt Iberia and the Sea, of which Strabo affirmeth, that they need not the Sea, who make no better vse of the land: for they bestow not the least labour in husbandrie, and yet the earth voluntarily and liberally yeeldeth her store: and where it is once sown, it may twice or thrice be reaped. The men were so simple, that they neyther had vse of money, nor did they number aboue an hundred; ignorant of weights, measures, war, ciuilitie, husbandrie: there were in vse amongst them fixe and twentie languages. They had ^t Spiders which would procure death vnto men smiling, and some also which did men to die weeping.

They worshipped the Sunne, Iupiter, and the Moone, whose Temple was neere to Iberia. The Priest, which ruled it, was next in honour to the King: he performeth the holy Rites, ruleth the holy Region, which is large and full of people: of the sacred Seruants, many, being inspired, doe diuine or prophecie. He which is most rauished with the spirit, wandreth alone through the woods: him the Priest taketh, and bindeth with a sacred chaine, allowing him sumptuous nourishment the space of a yeare, and after bringeth him to be slain with other sacrifices to the Goddesse. The Rites are thus: One which is skilfull of this businesse, holding that sacred speare wherewith they vse to slay the man, stepping forth, thrusteth it into his heart: in his falling they obserue certaine tokens of diuination: then doe they bring out the bodie into some place, where they all go ouer it. The Albanians honoured olde-age in all men, death in none, accounting it vnlawfull to mention a dead man; with whom they also buried his wealth. ^u Plinie out of Isigonus affirmeth, that a people called Albani (not these I thinke, if any) were hoary haired from their childhood, and saw as well by night as by day.

Mengrelia (sometime Colchis) adioyneth to the Euxine Sea, in which country Strabo mentioneth the Temple of Leucothea, builded by Phryxus: where was also an Oracle, and where a Ramme might not be slaine. This Temple was sometimes very rich, but spoyled by Pharnax, and after of Mithridates. This countrey the Poets haue made famous by the fables of Phryxus, and Iason. Phryxus the sonne of Athamas, Prince of Thebes, and of Nephele, with his sister Helle fled from their cruell stepdam Ino, vpon the backe of a golden Ramme, from which Helle falling into the water, gaue name thereto, of her called Hellespont: Phrixus comming safe into Colchis, sacrificed to Iupiter, and hanged vp the fleece of his Ramme in the goue of Mars; which custome was yearely practised of his posteritie. Iason after by command of Pelias (seeking by a barbarous enimie, or a dangerous navigation to destroy him) with fourescore & nineteene other companions in the ship, called Argo, fetched this fleece from hence by the helpe of Medea: and the ship and the Ramme filled heauen with new Constellations. That fable ^x had ground of Historie, howsoeuer by fictions obscured. For the Riuers here in Colchis are reported to carrie gold downe with their streams and sands, which the people take with boords bored full of holes, and with fleeces of wooll. Spaine hath of late yeelded many such Argonauts, with longer voyages, seeking the golden Indian Fleece, which their Indian conquest may make the ensigne of their Order more fitly, then their Burgundian inheritance. Suidas applyeth this Fleece and Ramme, to books of Alchymie, written in parchments made of Rammes skinner, which Delrio accounteth an Art of Naturall Magicke, and possible, howsoeuer these Colchians, as well as the Armenians, Egyptians, Persians, and Chaldæans were infamous for that other, which he calleth Demillibis: and Medea is most renowned for that science, the ignorance wherof is the best learning.

The present Mengrelians are rude and barbarous, defending themselues from the Turkes by their rough Hills and ragged pouertie: so inhumane, that they sell their own children to the Turkes. I reade not of any other Religion at this day amongst them but Christian, such as it is. Some adde these also to the Georgians. The wiues of diuers of these people, reported to be exercised in armes and martiall feats, happily gaue occasion to that fable or historie of the Amazons.

Busbequius * saith, that Colchos is a very fertile Countrey, but the people idle and carelesse: they plant their Vines at the foote of great Trees, which marriage pro- ueth very fruitfull, the husbands armes being kindly embraced, and plentifully laden. They haue no money, but in stead of buying and selling they vse exchange. If they haue any of the more precious mettals, they are consecrated to the vse of their Temples, whence the King can borrow them vnder pretence of publike good. The King hath all his tributes paied in the fruits of the earth, whereby his Pallace becommeth a publike store-house to all commers. When Merchants come, they giue him a present, and he feasteth them: the more wine any man drinketh the more welcom he is. They are much giuen to belly-cheere, dauncing, and loose Sonnets of loue and dalliance. They much caroll the name of Rowland or Orlando, which name it seemeth passed to them with the Christian armies, which conquered the Holy-Land. No maruell if Ceres and Bacchus lead in Venus betwixt them; which so ruleth in these partes, that the husband bringing home a guest, commends him to his wife & sister, with charge to yeeld him content and delight, esteeming it a credite, that their wiues can please and be acceptable. Their Virgins become mothers very soone; most of them at ten years olde can bring witnesses in their armes (little bigger then a great frogge, which yet after grow tall & square men) to proue that there is neuer a maide the lesse for them. Swearing they hold an excellent qualitie, and to be a fashion-monger in oathes, glorious: to steale cunningly wins great reputation, as of another Mercurie; and they which cannot doe it, are holden dullards and blockes. When they goe into a Church, they giue meane respect to the other Images: Saint George is so worshipped, that his horses hooves are kissed of them. Dadianus the King of Colchos or Mengrelia, came a suiter to Solyman while Busbequius was there. Betwixt them and the Iberians, their neighbours, is much discord. And thus much of their present conditon.

Haithon a the Armenian, extending the confines of Georgia to the great Sea, saith, In this Kingdome is a thing monstrous and wonderfull, which I would not haue spoken nor beleeued, had I not seene it with mine owne eyes. In these parts there is a Pro- uince called Hamssem, contayning in circuit three dayes iourney; and so farre is it cou- red with an obscure darkenes, that none can see any thing, nor dare any enter into it. The inhabitants therabouts affirm, that they haue often heard the voyce of men how- ling, cockes crowing, neighing of horses; and by the passage of a Riuer, it appeareth to haue signes of habitation. This is reported by the Armenian histories to haue come to passe by the hand of God, so deliuering his Christian seruants (by Sauoreus a Persian I- dolater, Lord of this place appointed to die) and so punishing with outward darkenes the inward former blindnes and rage of those persecuting Idolaters. Thus Haithonus or Antonius à Churchi (for so Ortelius nameth him) but this darkenes seemeth more aun- cient, and to haue bin the cause of that prouerbe, ^b Cimmeria tenebrae.

Westward from hence is entrance into the Circassian countrey, extending it selfe on Meotis five hundred miles, and within land two hundred. Christians they are in profession: from hence the Soldans of Egypt had their slaues, of which were raised their Mamalukes. Their chiefe Cities are Locoppa and Cromuco: at the mouth of Tanais, the Turke hath fortified Asaph. They liue in great part on robberies. In old time in this tract was Phanagoria, and therein the Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia, because, that when the Giants assaulted her, she implored the aide of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. Cimmerium a towne at these straits, gaue name thereunto, of Cimmerius Bosphorus. f Apud Ramus.

Some^g adde vnto Armenia in their moderne Mappes and Discoueries, besides the Turcomani, a people that came thither out of Tartaria, the Curdi, both still retaining the Tartarian and Arabian manner of life in tents, without Cities, Townes, or houses. Their religion halteth betwixt diuers religions of the Turkes, Persians, and Christians of the Iacobite and Nestorian Sects. In heart, they are neither fast to God nor man; dissembling with the Persian and Turke; and better skilled in robbérie, murder, and faithlesse treacherie (their daily practise) then mysteries of faith and religion. They are also Lords of Bitlis, and some other Cities and holds in those parts. They are called Courdines by Sir Ant. Sherley; who saith they know no other fruits of the earth but what belonged to the sustenance of their cattell, vpon the milke, butter, and flesh of which they liue, ruled by certaine Princes of their owne, which giue partly an obedience to the Turke, partly to the Persian, as they are nereest the confines of the one or the other. Yet in that simplicitie of liuing, through ambition warres grow daily among them, euen to the extirpation of a whole Nation. As wec found freshly when we passed by one of those Princes called Hiderbeague; all whose people were deuoured by the sword, or carried away captiue by Cobarbeague; and himselfe remained onely with some twenty soules in a rocke. Ten thousand of these Courdines, subiect to the Turke, abandoned their Countrey, and requested some waste land to be giuen them by Abas the present Persian, which gaue them entertainment: one occasion of quarrell betwixt him and the Turke. They are supposed to be a remnant of the ancient Parthians, and neuer goe abroad without their armes, bowes, arrowes, scimitars and bucklers, euen when age seemeth to haue fastened one foot in the graue. They adore^h and worship the Deuill, that he may not hurt them, nor their cattell: they are cruell to all sorts of Christians: their Countrey is therefore called Terra Diaboli. One of their Townes is named Manuscute, a mile from which is an Hospitall dedicated to Saint John Baptist, much frequented as well by Turkes, as Christians, whom superstition hath perswaded, that whosoever wil bestow kidde, sheepe, or money, to releue the poore of that place, shall both prosper in his iourney, and obtaine the forgiuenesse of his sinnes.

Armenia extending it selfe (if Iustine^a have measured rightly) eleuen hundred miles, on the East encountreth Media, in which lieth our next perambulation. It receiued the name of Madaï, the sonne of Iaphet, not of Medus the sonne of Medea and Iason. It is limited^b on the North, with the Caspian sea; on the South, with Persia; on the East, with Parthia. Ecbatana, the chiefe Citie, built (as Pliny^c affirmeth) by Seleucus, (indeed farre more ancient, and by him happily reedified) is distant from the Caspian Straits twentie miles. These Straits are a narrow way made by hand thorow the hilles, scarce wide enough for a cart to passe, eight miles in length, the rockes manifesting their indignation at this interruption, by obscure frownes, and salt^d teares continually streaming from them, which I know not by what sudden horror, are presently congealed into ice; also all the Summer time with armies of Serpents keeping the passages. Well may this be the house of Envy: so fitly doth that fable of the Poet^e agree with the nature of this place.

Of Ecbatana we read in the Historie of Indith, that Arpachshad built the walles of hewen stones, seuentie cubits high, and fiftie cubits broad, &c. Herodotus^{*} affirmeth, that after the Assyrians had raigned in Asia siue hundred and twenty yeeres, the Medes rebelled, and chose Deioces to be their King, and at his command builded him this roiall Citie, and a Pallace of great beautie (the timber whereof was Cedar, ioined with plates of siluer and gold; it was seuen furlongs in compasse) his successours are there reckoned, Phraortes, Cyxares, Astiages. Iustine^f reporteth that Arbattus or Arhaces, Lieutenent of the Medes vnder Sardanapalus, rebelled against him for his effeminate life, and translated the Empire from the Assyrians, with whom it had continued thirteene hundred yeeres, to the Medes. Diodorus Siculus^g addeth in this conspiracie, vnto this Arhaces the Mede, Belesus, whom some call Phul Beloch the Babylonian, who shared the State betwixt them; the Babylonian possessing Babylonia and Assyria; and Arhaces, Media and Persia. Of this more is^h said before.

In the time of Ninus, Farnus (saithⁱ Diodorus) was King of Media, who, encountering with Ninus in battell, was there taken, with his wife and seuen sonnes: all which the bloudie Conquerour commanded to be crucified. And thus remained Media hand-maid to the Assyrians, till the time of Sardanapalus; but not without some disquiet. For in Semiramis time the Medes rebelled, and destroyed Niniue. But Semiramis invaded their countrey with a mighty army: and comming to the hill Bagistanus, sacred to Iupiter, there pitched her tents; and^k in the plaine fields made a garden, containing twelue furlongs. Beyond the garden she cut a rocke seuentene furlongs high, grauing therein her owne Image, and an hundred others, bringing her gifts. Some^l tell this otherwise, that shee pourtraied her owne Image in that huge quantitie, and appointed an hundred Priests continually to attend the same with offerings and diuine worship. At Chaona a Citie of Media, she espying another huge rocke in the plaine, caused another garden to be made in the middest thereof, with sumptuous houses of pleasure therein, whence shee might behold all her armie, and there gaue her selfe a long space to rest and voluptuousnesse, making choice of the likeliest Gallants in her Campe for her bed-fellows, all whom she after did to death. Thence to Ecbatana she made the way shorter, and more passeable, casting downe hilles and exalting the valleyes valleyes into a plaine, still bearing her name. At Ecbatana^m she built a Pallace, and brought water thither from the hill Orontes, by a laborious and costly channell. And thus did she not onely subdue the rebellious Medes, but made a conquest of Nature in ostentation of her puissance. The sameⁿ Author telleth, that multitudes of Sparrowes, which eat vp their seeds, forced the inhabitants to leaue their soile; as did Mice cause some parts of Italie, and Frogges (rained out of the clouds) the Attariote, and (as we haue^o obserued) the Fleas chased away the inhabitants of Myus. How great is the Creator, that of the smallest of his creatures can muster armies to the conquest of them which swell in conceit of their owne greatnesse? Wee like Giants by our wickednesse defile the Heauens, and defile the Earth saying (by our workes) Who is the Almighty, that we should serue him? when as yet this Lord of Hosts need not tame vs with legions of Angels (one could destroy Senacheribs host) nor set the Heauens in their courses to fight his battailes (as against the Cananites) nor arrauge the Elements with an ouer-whelming Chaos to confound vs, by a Sodomiticall fire, or airic pestilence, or deluge of waters, or deuouring of the earth: nor needs he Lions to challenge a part of this glorie to their strength and prowesse: Frogges, and Lice, and Flies shall be Pharaohs challengers, conquerours, iaylers: And how many Nations in Africa haue the insulting triumphing Grasshoppers exiled from their natieue dwellings? Proud man, well may the basest of thy basest seruants thus make thee to see thy basenesse; and by rebelling against thee, argue thy rebellions against their and thy Creator.

But that we be not too farre transported with this not vniust passion; let vs returne to our Prouince of Media; which Arbaces q deliuered from Assyrian seruitude, and subiected it together with the Easterne Empire to himselfe, vnder whose posteritie it continued three hundred and two and twentie yeeres. Assyages, the last, was by Cyrus his Nephew, conquered, according to two dreames, which had fore-signified this vnto him. In the first he dreamed, that he saw so much yrine streaming from his daughter Mandane (his only childe) that all Asia was drowned therewith: in the other, a Vine grew from her, which shadowed all Asia. His Magi r told him, that hereby was foretold his nephewes greatnesse, with the losse of his kingdome. To preuent this, he wedded his daughter to Cambyzes a Persian: and when she was deliuered of a childe, he committed it to Harpagus (one of his trusty Counsellers) to be made away. He fearing reuenge from the daughter, if she should after succeed her father, deliuereth the Infant to Mitrادات the Kings Heard-man, commanding him in Assyages name, to expose it on the mountaine. Hee returning home, found his wife newly deliuered of a dead childe, which, by her entreaty, was laid forth in stead thereof. Her name was Spaco, which in the Median language signifieth a Bitch: whence the fable grew, that Cyrus being so exposed, was nourished by a Bitch. This Infant growing vp, and called by the Heard-mans name, after ten yeeres was knowne by this occasion. A company of boyes playing together, chose this stripling for their King, who vsed his childish royaltie with more then childish discipline. For hee ordained diuers officers, some of them to be his guard, some builders, messengers, &c. as hee thought fit. Amongst whom was a sonne of one Artembares, a man of great estimation, who for neglecting his office, was by this yong kingling seuerely chastised. Hee complained thereof to his father, and the father brought the childe to the King, accusing the indignitie of the fact, that his Heard-mans sonne should deale so malapertly and cruelly, shewing his beaten shoulders to Assyages. The Heard-man and his supposed sonne was sent for, that Artembares might be satisfied: where the yong King gaue so good account of that his fact, that Assyages much amazed, tooke the Heard-man aside, and with busie enquirie learned of him all the truth of this matter: wherewith enraged against Harpagus, who ought himselfe to haue done that dismall execution, but dissembing the same, he told him that he would doe sacrifice for the childes safetie, and bade him send his childe to beare Cyrus companie, inuiting him also to suppe with him, where he feasted him with the flesh of his owne sonne, whose head, fingers, and toes, were set before him at the last seruice. Harpagus bare it as patiently as he could, till fitter occasion of reuenge offered it selfe, which thus fell out. The Magi told Assyages that that in this childish kingdome of Cyrus, the danger of his dreame was already passed, and that he needed not feare any further danger. Wherefore he was sent into Persia to his parents. After he was now a man, Harpagus, hauing secretly sollicited the Medes to rebellion against their cruell Soueraigne, acquainted Cyrus with his proiect, to that end enclosing a letter in a Hares belly, which he sent to Cyrus by one of his huntsmen : which was with such industrie and successe prosecuted, that Astyages lost his Scepter, and Cyrus translated the Empire to the Persians. For Harpagus being made Generall of the armie of the Medes, reuolted to Cyrus with all such as he had made acquainted with his treason. And when the Medes after rebelled in the time of Darius, they were forced againe to subiection. The Magi were by Astyages command crucified : and he himselve re-enforcing his power, and bidding battell to Cyrus the second time, was taken aline, and by his nephew set ouer the Hyrcans.

The Magi had large and fertill possessions (thus reporteth * Ammianus) assigned them in Media. Their Science called Magia, is by Plato termed Machagistia, which mysticall word signifieth the purest worship of the Gods: to which Science Zoroastres of Bactria in old times added many things out of the mysteries of the Chaldees. But because the Persians had from hence their Empire and this religion, by whose armes they were made knowne to the world : there shall bee fitter place to speake of these Magi, when we treat of the Persian Rites. In this Region was made the oile Medicum, wherein their arrowes were steeped, which being shot out of a looser bow (for a swifter shot extingushed it) did burne the flesh in which it did sticke, and if water were applied to it, the fire thereof encreased. Nor could any remedy cure the same, but hurling dust thereon. It was composed of Naphta. The Medes made league with this ceremonie. † They wounded the souldiers of each partie, either licked others bloud. The North parts of Media were barren, and therefore they liued on Apples, dried and stamped together: of roasted Almons they made bread, and wine of the roots of herbs. This and Venison was their food. In one plaine ^u of Media were pastured fiftie thousand Mares, belonging to the King : the herbe whereon they principally fed, is still called Medica. The race of horses, called Nisai, were heere bred, and hence dispersed all ouer the East.

Among ^x the Medes, none might be King by the law of the Countrey, except hee were in stature and strength eminent. All the Medes (saith Bardesanes ^y a famous Chaldean) nourish dogges with great care, to which they cast men ready to die (whiles they are yet breathing) to be deuoured of them.

The Medes ^z worshipped the fire, with barbarous honours done thereto. Their Kings held such Maiestie, that none might laugh or spit before them : They were seldome seene of their people: They had alway Musicians attending them. Their wiues and children accompanied them in their battailes.

The name of the Medes remained famous after the Persian conquest, as appeareth by the stile which the Scripture ^a giueth them: the law of the Medes and Persians which was unchangeable, the King himselve not hauing power to reuoke his sentence.

As for the Catalogue of the Kings which succeeded Arbaces, vntill the time of Astyages, and the times of their raigne, we haue before shewed it out of Scaliger, ^b in our first booke, Chap. 13. True it is, that all agree not in that account. Reimerus ^c Reineccius leaueth out diuers of them, and numbred the yeeres of the Median Dynastie but 261. whereas our former account hath 322. But I had rather referre the Reader to that Catalogue, then trouble him with new out of this or other Authors.

Media hath beene ^d diuided into Media Maior, and Atropatia: the former containeth Tauris, supposed by Ortelius to be the forenamed Ecbatana (yet now wanting walles altogether) containing in circuit sixteen miles, and of people two hundred thousand ; subdued to the Turke 1585. and before by Selim and Soliman ; but since recouered by the Persian, Sultania ^e famous for the fairest Moichee in the East. Atropatia is now called Seruan; the chiefe Citie is Sūmachia, or Shamaki, in which the Sophi not long since^b built a Turret of flint and free-stone, and in a ranke of flints therein did set the heads of the Nobilitie and Gentrie of the Countrey, for a terrour to the rest: the quarrell was pretended for Religion, intended for Soueraigntie.

Their ancient Religion^d differed not much from the Persian, and such also is it still. Their^k Kings had many wiues, which custome extended after to the Villages and mountaines, in so much that they might not haue lesse then seuen. The women^l also esteemed it a credit to haue many husbands, and a miserable calamitie to haue lesse then siue. Cyrus subdued them to the Persians, Alexander to the Macedons: What should we speake of the Parthians? who made Ecbatana their seate royall in the summer time: and of the Saracens, Tartars, Persians and Turkes, who haue successiually vexed these Countreies?

Not farre from Shamaki, saith Master Ienkinson^m, was an old Castle, called Gullistone (now beaten downe by the Sophi) and not farre from thence a Nunrie of sumptuous building, wherein was buried a Kings daughter, named Ameleck Channa: who slew her selfe with a knife, for that her father would haue forced her (shee professing chastitie) to haue married a Tartar King: vpon which occasion the maidens euery yeare resort thither to bewaile her death.

CHAP. III.

Of the Parthians, and Hyrcanians.

Parthia is placed by Pliny^a in the rootes of the hilles: hauing on the East the Arians; on the West, the Medes; on the South, Carmania; on the North, Hyrcania, rounded with deserts. He affirmeth that the Kingdomes of the Parthians were eightene. Eleuen of them neere to the Caspian sea; and the other seuen neere the red sea. The word Parthian signifieth with the Scythians an exile. Their chiefe Citie was Hecatompylos, now (as some^b affirme) Hispaham, for the excellencie thereof called of the Persians, Halfe the World. These Scythian exiles in the times of the Assyrians, Medes, Persians, and Macedonians, were an obscure people, the prey of euery Conquerour, which after seemed to diuide the world with the Romans. Their speech was mixt of the Median and Scythian: their armies consisted most part of seruaunts, which they held in great respect, instructing them in feats of armes. In an armie of fiftie thousand wherwith they encountred Antony, there were only eight hundred free-men. The Parthians^c had no vse of gold or silver, but in their armor. They had many wiues, wherof they were so icalous, that they forbid them the sight of other men. They performed all busines priuate and publike on horse-backe; this being the distinction of free-men from seruaunts. Their burial was in the bellies of birds, or dogs. Their naked bones were after covered with earth: they were exceedingly superstitious in the worship of their gods: a stout, ynquiet, seditious, vnfaithfull people. Asaces, first a famous theefe, after, the Founder of that Kingdome, left no lesse memorie of himselfe amongst the Parthians, then Cyrus among the Persians, or Alexander among the Macedonians. The day wherein he ouerthrew Seleucus, was solemnly obserued euery yeare amongst them, as the beginning of their libertie. Of him they called all their Kings Arfaces, as the Roman Emperours are named Casars. They^d called themselues the brethren of the Sunne and Moone, which are in those places worshipped. This Arfaces was worshipped after his death. They were no lesse bloudie to their brethren, when they came to the Crowne, then the Ottomans are at this day. Phrahartes^e slew thirty of his brethren, and before them, his father, and after, his sonne, rather then he would endure a possibilitie of a Competitor. About^f 224. yeares after Christ, Artabanus the last Persian King being slaine by Artaxeres or Artaxares the Persian, the Empire returned to the Persians, who were thereof deprived by the Saracens; and they againe by the Tartars: and now for the greatest part vnder the Sophi: they had their cup-quarrels, struiuing who should draw deepest: which custome we need not goe into Parthia to seeke. Strabo mentioneth among the Parthians a Colledge or Senate of Magi and Wise-men. Their ancient religious Rites I finde not particularly related.

The Parthian affaires are thus by some^s related. After Alexanders death, none of the Macedonians vouchsafing so meane a Prouince, Stragonor a forreiner obtained it: after which the Macedonians, contending in ciuill quarrels for the Soueraigntie, Parthia wauered in vncertaintie, till in the time of Seleucus the nephew of Antiochus, Theodotus, Deputie of Cachia, entituled himselfe King: so giuing example of rebellion to the Easterne Nations, which Arfaces among the Parthians easily followed. He combining himselfe with Theodotus, and after his death, with his sonne, strengthened himselfe in his new erected government of two Cities. But Seleucus taking armes against him, was by him ouerthrowne in battell: which day first gaue light to the Parthian greatnesse, not vnworthily obserued therefore of their posteritie with solemnitie. For Seleucus being by more important affaires called home, the Parthians had leasure to establish their hopes. Athenaus reporteth that Arfaces tooke him prisoner, and after gentle vsage he sent him home.

After this first, came a second Arfaces, who encountered with Antiochus the Sonne of Seleucus, comming against him with an armie of an hundred thousand foot-men, and twentie thousand horse. The issue was, they parted friends in mutuall league. Priapatus or Pampatus was their third King, to whom Phraates his sonne succeeded; and next, his brother Mithradates, who subdued the Medes and Helimazans, enlarging the Parthian Empire, from Mount Caucasus to Euphrates. He tooke Demetrius King of Syria prisoner: and died in his old age. His sonne Phraates was the fourth: on whom Antiochus warred, and the Parthian opposed against him his brother Demetrius, till then detained prisoner. But whiles he warred against the Scythians, by treason of his owne subiects he was slaine; and Artabanus his vncler placed in his roome. Hee also soone after died of a wound receiued in the field: and his sonne Mithridates succeeded, whom the Parthian Senate expelled and deposed. But others reckon betweene Artabanus and Mithridates, Pacornus, and his sonne Phraates. So vncertaine is the Parthian Historie; for which cause also^h Scaliger blameth Onuphris for being too peremptorie in such vncertainties.

Next in order is reckoned Orodes or Herodes, who besieged his said brother Mithridates in Babylon, and tooke both it and him, and caused him to be slaine in his sight. Against him Crassus the Roman Consul (moued with couetousnes, ⁱ hatefull to God and man, saith Florus) led the Roman Legions to winne the Parthian gold: And by the way, ^k passing thorow Iudza, spoiled the sacred Treasurie which Pompey spared, amounting to two thousand talents, and robbed the Temple of eight thousand talents besides. Hee also carried away a beame of solid gold, weighing three hundred Mina (euery Mina istwo pound and a halfe Roman) deliuered vnto him by Eleazarus the Treasurer, vpon condition to take nothing else. But Crassus violated the oath which he had giuen to Eleazarus, and carried all hee liked. Many dismall ^l presages prohibited Crassus this expedition, as the curses of the Tribune, whom Dion, Plutarch, and Appian call Ateius Capito. Those curses were denounced with inuocation of some vnknowne gods. Also the Roman ensignes were drowned, with sudden tempests pests in Euphrates: and when ^m he had sacrificed to Venus, his sonne stumbled and fell, and Crassus with him. He reiected the Legats of the Parthian, alledging the former league with Pompey. Thus posting to his destruction, one Mazaras (as Florus calls him; or as Plutarch, Ariamnes; Dion, and Appianus name him Augarus) encountered him, not with armes, but with artes and wiles, professing great hostilitie to the Parthians: Crassus following his aduice, led his army into by-waies and deserts, til being brought into the Parthian snares, his new guide forsooke him, and the couerous Consul, with his sonne were slaine, and eleuen Roman Legions taken or left in the place. His head and periured right hand were sent by Surinas the Parthian Generall (who was said to haue then in the field with him twelue hundred Concubines, and a thousand Camels laden with his owne furniture) vnto King Orodes: who contumeliously, (if contumelie and merit can ioyne societie) vsed the same, powring into his iawes, sometimes greedie of that metall, molten gold. Orodes enuying Surinas the glory of this victorie, slew him, and committed the remnants of that warre to be pursued by his sonne Pacorus, adioyning to him in that exploit Osaces. In the ciuill warres they tooke part with Pompey against Cesar. Pacorus being receiued into societie of the Kingdom with his father, inuaded Iudæa, and placing Antigonus in the Kingdome, captiued Hircanus. But whiles he aspired to greater hopes, he lost himselfe and his armie, in which were twentie thousand horsemen, in a battell with Ventidius; who by a wily Stratageme, counterfeiting flight and feate, and suffering the Parthians to come vp to their tents; that they had now no space for their arrowes, effected this ouerthrow.

Pacorus his head reduced the Cities of Syria to the Roman subiection, without further warre. This newes made his father madde, who before boasting of the conquest of Asia by Pacorus, now in many dayes did neither speake nor eate: but when he once did open his mouth, all his speech was Pacorus, who still seemed present vnto him. In this extaticall moode, Phraates, one of his thirtie sonnes, which he had by so many Concubines, slew him, and after them his brethren, as before is said, with a sonne also of his owne. This crueltie caused many Parthians to betake themselues to voluntarie exile, among which Monases prouoked ⁿ Antonius to warre vpon this Tyrant. He did so, but with bad successe, of sixteene Legions scarce bringing the third part backe againe. Phraates, impotent and vncapable of so glorious aduentures, grew into such infolencies, that the people exiled him, and placed Tiridates in his roome; who was soone after displaced by the Scythians, and Phraates restored to his place. Tiridates fled to Augustus (then warring in Spaine) for refuge and aide, carrying with him the sonne of Phraates, whom Cesar sent backe againe to his father without any price, maintaining neither partie against the other, but allowing liberall prouision to Tiridates.

But after this, ^o Augustus going into the East, the Parthian fearing ill measure, redeliuered all the Roman captiues, and ensignes, and gaue hostages also, his two sonnes, with their wiues and children, and resigned Armenia to the Romans. Phraatax his son slew him, with greatest iniustice repaying that which was most iust, and due to his former parricide. This Phraatax, vsing incestuous acquaintance with his mother Thermusa (an Italian, whom Augustus had bestowed on Phraates, and by whose helpe hee was slaine) was killed in an vprore, leauing his sonne Orodes his successor. He also in a conspiracie was killed; and Vonon ^p substituted, whom the Parthians not long enduring, forced to seeke helpe of the Romans, where he was perfidiously slaine.

Artabanus obtained the Empire, ^q from whence hee was after chased by Vitellius, who placed Tiridates in the throne, which he had scarce warmed, when Artabanus recovered it, and after left it to his sonne Bardanes; the Arfacian stocke being now dispossessed. This Bardanes whiles he minded warres against the Romans, is killed of his owne. Gotarzes his brother succeeded to the Scepter: which he held, notwithstanding the decree of the Roman Senate for Meherdates the son of Vonon, whom he tooke and cut off his eares: Vonones was his successor, a little while, and presently after Sologases; his sonne. The next was Artabanus, and after him Pacorus; and in the next place Cosdroes his brother: against whom Traian warred with good successe, who extended the Roman Empire to the Indians. But Adrian renued league with the Parthian, Parthanaaspates

This kind hearted god warneth his Priests in a dreame, that neere to his Temple they should set horses readie furnished for hunting, which they doe, lading them with quiuers full of arrowes. These after much running vp and downe the Forrest, returne home at night blowing and breathlesse, their quiuers being emptied. And Hercules (no nigard of his venison) acquainteth the Priests at night by another vision with all his disport, what woods he hath ranged, and the places of his game. Better fellowship, certaine, had their Hercules, then their Kings, when they invited any to their feasts. For the King ^x had his table alone and loftie, the guests sit below on the ground, and, like dogges, feed on that which the King casteth to them. And many times vpon occasion of the Kings displeasure, they are haled thence and scourged, and yet they then, prostrate on the ground, adore their striker. They ^y worshipped the Sunne at his rising. Bardesanes ^z in Eusebius, saith of them, that to kill his wife, or sonne, or daughter, or brother, or sister (yet vnmarried) was not prohibited by the law to any Parthian, nor any way subiect to punishment. The Parthian ^a ensigne was a Dragon; the royall ensigne a bow: their stile was, King of Kings; they ware a double crowne. They had an oyntment made of a certaine composition, which no priuate man might vse. Nor might any else drinke of the waters of Choaopes and Eulaus. None might come to the King without a present. The Magi were in great authoritie with them. Their Rites were mixt of the Persian and Scythian. Nothing was more seuerely punished then adulterie. Of Persia, and the Persian State, vntill the Mahumetan conquest.

Persia, if we take it strictly, is thus bounded by^a Ptolomey: It hath on the North, Media; on the East, Carmania; on the West, Susiana; on the South, part of the Persian Gulfe. But this name is sometimes stretched as farre, as that wide and spacious Kingdome; all that Empire being often called in Authors, Persia, and differing in the bounds and limits, according to the enlarging or contracting of that Monarchie. It is supposed, that the Persians descended of Elam, the sodne of^b Shem; whose name remained vnto a Region called Elymais, mentioned by^c Ptolomey, placed in the North partes of Media. Pliny mentioneth^d the Elamita, on the South next to the Sea, which name Le-rome^e in his daies gaue to one of that nation, frater quidam Elamita, &c. Xenophon also nameth the Tribe of the Elamites. Moses telleth of the reigne and power of Chederlaomer King of Elam,^f in that morning of the world extended to the borders of Canaan.^g Herodot. reportes, that they were call'd of the Greeks Cephenes; of the neighboring nations, Artai. Suidas^h affirms that they were call'd of the inhabitants Magog, & Magusai.

From the time of Cbedorlaomer, whom Abram with his houſhold-armie ouerthrew, vntill the time of Cyrus, little mention is made of them: he freed them from the Median ſeruitude, and erected firſt that mightie Persian Monarchie. Bizarus ⁱ (which hath written twelue bookes of the Persian affaires) ſuppoſeth that in that time of their ſubiection to the Affyrians and Medes, they had Governours, and lawes, of their own: onely owing a tributarie ſubiection to the other, as their ſupreme Lords. This he collecteth out of Xenophon. Cyrus was by name foretold by Eſay ^k, and the re-building of Ierusalem, and the Temple, by his authoritie, before that Babylonian Monarchie was erected which destroyed them. God after revealed to Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel by dreames, this Persian both riſing and fall. And by dreames did he make way vnto the effecting of his decree; as appeareth in Herodotus, Iuſtine and others. For Aſtiages ^l dreaming that he ſaw a Vine growing out of the wombe of his daughter Mandane, which couered all Asia (interpreted by his Wizards, of the ſubuerſion of his Kingdome by his daughters future iſſue) married her, as before is ſaid, to Cambyſes, a Persian, deſcended of the ſtocke of Perſeus ſonne of Iupiter, and Danae, and the ſon of Achamenes, * that ſo in that remote Region, meanes might faile vnto any aspiring deſignes. The Chaldeans report, as Alpheus recordeth out of Megaſthenes, that Nabuchodonosor hauing conquered all Libya, and Asia, as farre as Armenia, at his returne, rauished with diuine ſurie, cried out, That a Persian Mule ſhould come, and ſubdue the Babylonians. This agrees ſomewhat both with the dreame, and the madneſſe recorded of that King by Daniel, Chap. 2. and 4. The Oracle of Delphos made like anſwere to Craſus, That the Lydian ſhould then flee, when a Mule ſhould gouerne the Medes. He was termed a Mule, * becauſe of his more noble parentage by the mother, then the father, and their diuerſitie of Nation. Strabo ^m thinkes he was called Cyrus of a Riuer in Persia, being before called Agradatus. Plutarch ⁿ ſaith, he was called Cyrus of the Sun, which with the Persians hath that name. Polyenus ^o calleth his wife Niteticis, daughter of Aprius King of Egypt. Suidas ſaith it was Bardane, and that ſhe was daughter of Cyaxares, otherwiſe called Darius Medus. He conquered the Median Empire firſt; and after added two others, the Lydian and a Babylonian. Craſus the Lydian conſulting with the Oracle about the ſucceſſe of his warre, received anſwer:

Κροῖσος ἄλλω διαβῆς μεγάλῳ ἀρχὴν καταλύσει,

That is,

Craſus paſſing Hale, great ſtate ſhall make to fall.

* Great were the treaſures which Cyrus gate in his warres; but his expenſes in his daily dyet (engrauen in a pillar, which Alexander cauſed to be raſed) ſeeme incredible: the particulars whereof, ſee in Polyen. lib. 4. and Opmeerus pag. 105.

This he interpreted of the ouerthrowe of Cyrus, but proued it in himſelfe; Craſus his ſonne had bene mute, till (now ſeeing the ſword of the enimie readie to giue the fatal ſtroake vnto his father) violence of ſudden paſſion brake open thoſe barres and ſtoppes which Nature had ſet before as impediments to his ſpeech, and by his firſt moſt fortunate-infortunate language, cried to the bloudie ſouldiers to ſpare his * father. After his many great exploits, he warred vpon Thamyris the Scythian Queene, where he loſt his life. I know not how, Diuine Providence ſeemeth to haue ſet thoſe Scythian ſtints to the Persian proceedings; thoſe great Monarches, both in the elder, and our later world, euer finding thoſe Northerne windes croſſing, and in ſome diſmall ſucceſſe prohibiting their ambition that way..

Cyrus was of ſo firme memorie, that he could call all the ſouldiers (ſome ſay but all that had any place of command) by their proper names. He ordained, that his ſouldiers ſhould in the firſt ioyning with the enimie ſing certaine Hymnes to Caſtor & Pollux, that by this means they ſhould not be ſurpriſed with ſudden feare. He gaue leaue to the Jewes to returne and re-people their country, and to re-build the Temple. A. M. 3419. Ezra calleth this the firſt yeare of Cyrus; not the firſt of his raigne, but of his Eaſterne Monarchie, as in his Ediſt himſelfe proclaymeth; The Lord God of heauen hath giuen me all the Kingdomes of the earth. For after he had ouercome Darius Medus (whom Berosus calleth Nabonmidus) in battell, and forced him to keepe himſelfe in Borsippa: hec beſieged besieged and obtained Babylon, where spending som time for the serling of his affairs, he after that forced Darius to yeelde; and returning to Babylon, made a conquest of Sufiana. All which atchieued, the ninth yeare after the taking of Babylon, the seuentieth of the Iewish Captiuitie, the nine and twentieth of his raigne, and the first of that his Babylonian Empire, he made the Decree aboue mentioned, and died the second yeare after. It is probable also, that the Persians who held Cyrus in such veneration, began their Era, or new Computation, from this time of his serled Empire: an honor giuen after by the Easterne world to Alexander in like manner. The Babylonian Kingdome was thus diuided and giuen to the Medes and Persians; first to Darius, by bloud and descent a Mede, and after, by conquest to Cyrus a Persian.

Dau. 5. 28.

We haue large Fragments of Ctesias (who was present in the battell betweene Artaxerxes and Cyrus, as was Xenophon also, who hath written the same at large) collected and referued by Photius, who saith, hee had read foure and twentie bookes of this Ctesias his Persica, in which he much differeth from the reports of Herodotus; professing, that he had eyther seene those things which he writeth, or receiued them of the Persians themselues. He affirmeth that Astygas (so he calleth Astyages) was nothing of kinne to Cyrus, but being by him conquered, was first imprisoned, and after enlarged and kindly intreated; Cyrus taking his daughter Amytis (her husband Spytama being slaine) to his wife. He subdued the Bactrians, and tooke Amorges King of the Sace prisoner. But his wife Sparethra with an armie of three hundred thousand men, and two hundred thousand women, came against Cyrus, and taking him and Parmyses the brother of Amytis prisoners, in exchange of them redeemed her husband. Amorges after this helped Cyrus in his warres against Crasus, who (the Citie being taken, and his sonne, which had beene giuen in hostage, slaine before his face) fledde into Apolios Temple, whence by magicall illusions he made an escape; and being taken againe and bound faster, his bands with thunder and lightning were loosed, whereupon Cyrus freed him, and gaue him the Citie Barene, neere to Ecbatana. Cyrus after that warred against the Derbices, who by the help of the Indians and Elephants, ouerthrew Cyrus, who receiued there a wound by an Indian, whereof hee three dayes afterwards died. But by helpe of Amorges the Derbices were overcome, and their King Amorans slaine with his two sonnes. Cyrus before his death made Cambyses his eldest sonne his heire, and Tanyoxarces his younger, Lord of the Bactrians, Choramnians and Parthians, and set Spytades sonne of Spytama ouer the Derbices. He reigned thirtie yeares.

Cambyses (Ctesias addeth in his twelfth booke) sent his fathers bodie into Persia. He warred vpon Egypt, and sent Amyrtans the King with sixe thousand Egyptians Captiues into Susa, hauing slaine fiftie thousand Egyptians, and lost seuen thousand and two Persians. In the meane time Sphendadates one of the Magi, being corrected by Tanyoxarces for some offence, accused him to Cambyses his brother, who caused him to die with a draught of Bulls bloud, deceiuing his mother and his brothers followers, as if he had put the Magus to death for that slander. And so neerely did they resemble each other, that Sphendadates was sent to the Bactrians, where five yeares after, the mysterie of this iniquitie was detected by Tybethens an Eunuch (by him chastened) vnto Amytis, who, when shee could not obtaine him of Cambyses to punishment, poysoned her selfe. Cambyses after hee had reigned eightene yeares, died at Babylon of a wound which he had receiued in his thigh, by whicling a sticke to passe away the time, hauing receiued before direfull prefaces of this disafter, in his sacrifice not bleeding, and Roxane bringing him forth a sonne without a head. Bagapates and Artasyras his chiefe Eunuches procured the Kingdome to the Magus, reigning with the name of Tanyoxarces, till Ixabates detected him, who fleeing into a Temple was drawne thence and slaine. But seuen chiefe men, Onophas, Idernes, Norodabates, Mardonius, Barises, Ataphernes and Darius sonne of Hystaspes, conspired against the Magus, and by the helpe of Artasyras, and Bagapates slew him in his bed-chamber, hauing reigned seuen moneths, ordaying the solemne festiuall Magaphonia in remembrance thereof.

Princes had before agreed) built him a Sepulchre in his life time, in a hill; which when he would have seene, the Chaldæans forbad him, and his parents curious of that sight, were let downe by the Priests with ropes: but they terrified by the sudden sight of Serpents, let goe their hold, and Darius for that losse of his parents slaine in the fall, cut off the heads of the Priests, in number fortie. Hee marched with eight hundred thousand men into Europe against the Scythians; but returning with losse, died after hee had reigned one and thirtie yeares. But before wee follow Cæsius any further, let vs see what the common report by Herodotus and others hath deliuered of these proceedings: and let the iudicious Reader chuse whom he will embrace. Scaliger and others, rather follow Herodotus, who relateth of Cambyzes, that succeeding his father, he rooke, and after slew Psammetitus King of Egypt. And when hee would have added Aethiopia to his new Conquests, with the spoyles of the Temple of Ammon, for which purposes he sent two Armies; the one was almost consumed with famine, the beasts and prouisions fayling, and that barren desert denying grasse; the remainder by consuming one another, were (a strange remedie) preserued from consumption, euery tenth man being by lot tithed to the shambles, and more returning in their selowes mawes, then on their owne legges. The other Armie was quite buried in the sands. At his returne, finding the Egyptians solemnizing the feast of their Idoll Apis, he slew the same (it was a Bull which they worshipped): and after dreaming that Smerdis reigned, he sent, and slew his brother which was so called, in vaine seeking to frustrate this preface, which was fulfilled in another of that name. He fell in loue with his sister; and asking whether it were lawfull for him to marrie her, the Iudges (whose authority with the Persians lasted with their liues) answered, that they had no such lawe, but they had another, that the King of Persia might doe what him liked; whereupon he married her. His crueltie appeared, in that Prexaspes presuming to admonish him of his too much inclination to drunkennesse, he answered, he should see prooffe of the contrarie, and presently sending for Prexaspes his sonne, with an Arrow shot him to the heart: the father not daring but to commend his steadie hand and Art in shooting. Hee died of this owne sword, which falling out of his scabberd as hee mounted his Horse, killed him, not fearing in this countrey of Syria any such disadventure, because the Oracle of Latona in Egypt had tolde him hee should die at Ecbatana; which he vnderstood of Media, and was fulfilled at another Ecbatana (more obscure) in Syria. He caused a Iudge, which had bene corrupted with money, to be slayed, and made of his skinned a couering for the Tribunall. Polyæmus tells, That against the Egyptians hee vsed this stratageme; to set their Gods (Dogges, Cattes, Sheepe, &c.) in the fore-front of his battaile. He neyther deserued nor obtained that honourable funerall which Cyrus had, who was buried at Pasargadæ, a Tower shadowed with trees, hauing in the vpper part a Chappell furnished with a bed of Golde, a Table, Cuppes, and Vessels of the same met'all, with store of Garments and Furniture, set with Iewels. Certaine Magi were appointed to attend it, with daily allowance of a Sheepe, and once a moneth a Horse for sacrifice. His Epitaph was, O man, I am Cyrus, King of Asia, Founder of the Persian Empire; therefore enuie me not a Sepulchre. Alexander opened the same in hope of Gold, but found nothing, sauing a rotten Shield, a Sword, and two Scythian Bowes: he crowned it with Golde, and couering it with his owne appatrell, departed. These things^u Strabo, Arrianus, and Curtius report.

Next to^x Cambyzes succeeded, for a small time, one Smerdis, which was slaine as an Vsurper, by the seuen Princes; and Darius, the sonne of Hystaspes, succeeded, designed to that greatnesse by the first neighing of his Horse. For when no male issue royal was left, these Princes agreed, That meeting in a place appointed, he whose horse first neighed, should be acknowledged Emperour. Darius his horse-keeper, the night before, had suffered his Horse there to vse his brutish lust with a Mare; which the place presently causing him to remember, he there (by his lustfull neighing) aduanced his Master to the Scepter. Darius for his couetousnesse (first exacting tribute) was called a Merchant, Cambyzes a Lord, Cyrus a Father of his people. Babylon rebelled, and

was recovered by the costly stratageme of Zopyrus^a, who cut off his nose and eares, and fleeing in that deformed plight to the Babylonians, accused Darius of that cruelty. (Ctesias telleth this of Megabyzus.) They beleaving, entertained him, and knowing his Nobilitie and Prowesse, committed their Citie to his fidelitie, which he vpon the next opportunitie betraied to his Master. Darius warred against the Scythians, but vnfortunately. His Armie was of 700000. men. After Darius his death Xerxes^b raigned (whom Scaliger proueth to be Assuerus, the husband of Esther.) He made league with the Carthaginians, warred vpon the Grecians with an Armie (as Herodotus c numbred) of 1700000. footmen, 80000. horsemen, 20000. Chariot men: Others say, That there were 2317000. footmen in Land-forces, besides 1208. shippes. Ctesias hath only 800000. men besides Chariots, and 1000. saile of shippes. Before the Armie was drawne the sacred Chariot of Iupiter, by eight white horses; no mortall man might ascend the Seat. He offered to Minerva at Troy 1000. Oxen. He, taking view of his huge Armie, wept, in thinking, that of all that number in 100. yeeres none would be alue. At the passing of the Hellespontike Straits, he (besides other deuotions performed) at the Sunne-rising tooke a golden Viall full of saered liquor, and cast the same into the Sea, with a golden Bowle and a Persian Sword; vncertaine whether in honour of the Sunne, or in satisfaction to the angrie Hellespont, which a little before, in more then madde arrogance, he had caused to be whipped, and hurled fetters therein, with many menacing threats. He wrote letters with like threatnings to Mount Athos, and accordingly pierced his bowels, and made way by force thorow that high and huge Mountaine. This Expedition was in the yeere of the World 3470. Leonides, with his Spartans, enlarged his glorie at the Thermopylæan Straits^d, or narrow passage, which a long time, with a handfull of men, hindred the Persians from passing. Mardonius was slaine, and Xerxes fled out of Greece, after he had taken Athens, and lost great part of his Armie, which in two yeeres space receiued fise ouerthrowes, at Thermopylæ, at Artemisum, at Salamis, at Plataeæ, at Mycale. Xerxes being slaine of Artabanus his kinsman, A. M. 3485. Artaxerxes succeeded, in whose time Egypt rebelled, helped therein by Inarus and the Grecians.

Among other the mad parts of Xerxes, it is reported, That hee fell in loue with a Plane Tree in Lydia, which he adorned with chaines and costly furniture, and appointed a Guardian thereto. Artaxerxes writ to Hystanes, Governour of Hellespontus, That he should giue Hippocrates Cous (who then liued, and whose writings still remaine the Physitians Oracles) as much Gold and other things as he would, and send him vnto him. In his time the Egyptians rebelled, and created Inarus their King, to whom the Athenians sent three hundred Gallies for defence; but by Artabazus and Megabyzus they were subdued. Artaxerxes died An. M. 3525.

After this Artaxerxes, surnamed Long-hand, another Xerxes succeeded and raigned a small time, as did also Sogdianus, or Ogdianus, or (so Ctesias calleth him) Secyndianus, whom Darius Nothus slew, and possessed the Throne. Ctesias nameth him Ochus, and saith that he changed his name to Darius. In the time of this King was the Peloponnesian Warre, which Thucydides hath related. Artaxerxes Mnemon his sonne succeeded An. M. 3545. Hee slew his brother Cyrus; Ctesias was there present with Artaxerxes, whom hee cured of a wound giuen him on the breast by Cyrus, with whom was then present and partaker that great Philosopher, Captaine, and Historian heereof, Xenophon. Artaxerxes was a name giuen (as some write) to all the Persian Kings: it signifieth a great warriour, as Brisson and Drusius obserue. This Mnemon raigned 40. yeeres. After his death succeeded Ochus, and raigned three and twentie yeeres. Next to him was Arses, or Arsames; and last of all Darius, whom Alexander ouerthrew the second time at Abela, An. M. 3619. and conquered that Persian Monarchie to the Macedonians. Of the Macedonian successors of Alexander (so much as concerneth this place) is before handled in our Syrian relation. They were depriued of these parts by Arsaces, of whom and all his Parthian followers, euen now yee haue read in the Chapter of Parthia.

hours of Scaliger, Iunius, and many others, both Rabbines, and Greekes, and Latines, in whose streams Elephants may swimme and the greatest Students may finde enough to busie their studious braines: for me, it is sufficient to taste, or at least to enter so farre as a Lambe may safely wade, without perill of drowning. The Hebrewes, through ignorance of the Olympiades, and humane Authors (where they are destitute of their owne) are most absurd, some s reckoning but foure Persian Kings in all, till Alexanders time: some h account five: and some i three. Against these, Pererius and *Temporarius most sharply (and not vnworthily) inuicigh, as also against their k Chronicles, which ascribe to the Persians, from the first yeere of Darius the Mede, but two and fiftie yeeres. Iosephus better seene in Ethnike Authors dissenteth from them. As for Metasthenes of Annius, wee haue before shewed him to be counterfet, and the rest of his brethren, to be either the bastards of Annius, or Changelings, which hee hath nursed, and would father vpon those Authors, whose names they beare. *Vines calls them Portentosa, & vel solo auditu horrenda, monstrous reports, dregges, friuolous pamphlets of vncertaine Authors; which, if any be in loue with, he may enioy without him his corriual. ^l Goropius bestowes much paines in the vncasing of them; and learned men m doe now generally distaste them. *Iosephus*ⁿ cites Megasthenes in quarto Indicorum, the fourth Booke of his Indian Historie; from whence Petrus Comistor alliedgeth the same testimonie, with deprauing the word Indicorum, and making it Iudiciorum. Annius addes, not onely the corrupting of the name Metasthenes for Megasthenes, but a Historie vnder his o name, de Iudicio Temporum & Annalium Persicorum, wherein no maruell if he proceed in the Store as he began in the Title. Eroaldus p in the Persian Chronologie faineth diuers names to the Persian Kings; as Assucrus, Artaxerxes, Darius Assyrius, Artaxerxes Pius, Liuely, and other moderne Writers out of the Greeke Olympiads and Histories. haue giuen truer account of the Persian Times and Government, beginning with the five and fiftieth Olympiad, and continuing the same to the third yeere of the hundred and twelfth.

Scaliger and Caluifius (as you haue seene before) doe a little differ from this account of M. Liuely, which he liuely proueth by conference of other Histories, both Humane and Ecclesiasticall Clemens, Eusebius, Herodotus, Diodorus, Polybius, Xenophon, Thucidides, Dionysius Halicarnassensis, Luue, and others. As much adoe is made about the beginning and ending of Daniels weekes, and the time of the building and finishing the second Temple, both which are much illustrated by the right knowledge of the Persian Chronologie. Iunius q, Liuely^r, and some others begin the account of the threescore and ten weekes, and reckon the building of the second Temple, in the second yeere of *Darius Nothus, to whose reasons I referre the Reader, and returne to our Persian affaires. How this Persian Empire agreed to the dreame of Nabuchodonosor and the Visions of Daniel, Broughton^l, Reusnerus, and others haue written; it were too tedious heere to relate. Artaxerxes (others call him, perhaps more truly, Artaxares) recovered the Persian Name and Empire five hundred thirty eight yeeres, as Bizarus, Lib. 4. reckoneth, after Alexander the Great had extinguished them, and in the yeere of our Lord 230. Others say it was in the yeere of Christ 233. and in the yeere of the World 4182. and 562. after Alexanders Conquest: others otherwise. A Rtaxares being a man of haughtie spirit, fought three battailes with Artabanus the Parthian, and at the third time deprived him of Life and Scepter together. He proceeded to subdue the neighbouring Barbarians; and passing ouer Tigris, disturbed the Romane Prouince of Mesopotamia, deuouring in hope, and threatening in tearmes, all those Asian Prouinces, sometimes subiect to the Persians, before the Macedonian deluge. Alexander Senerus (sonne of Mammaea) the Emperour writ to him, to stay his course: But Pikes, not Pens, were like to preuaile with Artaxares, who brought into the Field seuen hundred Elephants, and eighteene hundred Chariots, and many thou-

But Lampridius, Eutropius, Orosius, and Zosimus write, That Seuerus obtained the victorie, and tookē Ctesiphon and Babylon, and subdued also Arabia. Agathias affirmeth, That Artaxares was called Magus.

Valerianus was ouerthrowne by Sapores, the successor of Artaxares, in Mesopotamia, and there taken, and was made a foot-stoole for Sapores, on whose necke he vsed to tread, when hee tooke horse; and at last was slayed aliue, and sprinkled with Salt. Zosimus saith, That he was trecherously taken at a meeting for conference: and Trebellianus Pollio ascribeth it to the treason of his guide. This cruell Tyrant afflicted the Roman Prouinces, to Cilicia and Cappadocia, filling with dead bodies the broken spaces betweene the Hills, feeding (as it were) those deformed gaping iawes with cruell banquets of mans flesh. Odenatus Palmirinus brought some light to the Romans in this darkened and dreadfull Eclipse of their Sunne, and recouered the Roman Territories. His wife Zenobia after his death, like another Sennamitis, proued a fortunate Generall and Warriour against the Persians, and also against the Romans, from whom she withheld Syria, till Valerius Aurelianus carried her to Rome, being by vnexpected accident surpris'd. As for Valerianus, it was the iust iudgement of God for his cruell persecution of the Christians, whom he had at first faouered, till one of the Egyptian Priests had perswaded him to this and other wickednesse, as humane sacrifices, and such like. Euseb. l. 7. c. 9. He was taken of Sapores, An. Dom. 260: after Caluisius computation. Buntingus hath two yeeres lesse.

In the time of Probus the Persians sued for peace, and obtained it; hee procuring such peace in the East (saith Vopiscus) that a rebellious Mouse was not heard to peepe. Carus his successor warred against the Persians, and hauing entred their Countrey as farre as Ctesiphon, was slaine with a Thunderbolt (no Romane Emperour, by I know not what secret destinie, from the time of Crassus, passing those parts, without vnfortunate successe.) This was An. Dom. 283.

Diocletian sent Galerius against Narses the Persian, sonne to Varranes, or Varaanes, the second: (for after Sapores, Hormisda his sonne had raigned a yeere; Varranes the first, three yeeres; Varranes the second, sixteene; and a third of that name onely foure moneths, as Agathias reckoneth.) But not farre from Carrhæ (fatal to the Romans) Galerius Caesar lost almost all his Armie, and therefore found homely welcome at his returne, Diocletian suffering him to lacquey (in his Purple Robes) some miles after his chariot. Indignation supplying his former defects, hee recouered his credit with the ouerthrow of the Persians; Narses fled, leauing his wiues, sisters, and children to the Conquerour. A League was made, with returne of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria to the Romans.

x Oros. & Pom. Latinus, A. D. 296

Misdates the Persian began his raigne An. Dom. 301. To him An. 309 succeeded his sonne Sapores, and raigned (which I thinke was neuer read of any) longer then hee liued in view of the world, beginning his raigne before his birth, which he continued threescore and ten yeeres. For Misdates dying without issue male, and leauing his wife great with childe, the Princes consulted with the Magi, whether this future birth would be a male; which they affirmed, obseruing their predictions by a Mare, then ready to foale: and the Princes set on the Crowne, or Royall Ensigne, on the mothers belly, acknowledging him for their King. This Sapores, in a letter to Constantius the Emperour, intituled himselfe King of Kings, partaker of the Starres, brother of the Sunne and Moone: he demanded all that had before belonged to the Persians, to be restored. Betwixt them grew a bloudie warre, as Ammianus relateth, Sapores tooke Singarâ and Bezabde, An. Dom. 359. but was repelled into Persia by Constantius, Iulian his successour seeking to subdue the Persian, lost himselfe. The best part of himselfe he had lost before in Apotstafic, which plucked this destruction vpon him, An. 362. It is vn-certaine whether diuine or humane hand executed this iustice on him. Iouinian was presently saluted Emperour, but forced to agree on dishonourable conditions with the Persians, leauing the Rabbicens, Carduens, Rhensens, Zalens, and Nisibis to the Persian dominion. And a little after, in the raigne of Valens, the league was broken by Sapo- res, who wonne Ctesiphon: Valens intending this warre, was by the Gothes ouerthrowne, and burnt aliue, before he could effect any thing, An. 377. When Theodosius reigned, the peace was renewed.

After Sapores succeeded Artaxerxes; and after him Sapores, his sonne, both which reigned nine yeeres. Then followed Varanes Cermasat eleuen yeeres, to whom succeeded Isdigertes, who held peace with the Romans. Procopius writes, That Arcadius the Emperour on his death-bed, An. 407. ordained in his last Will, this Isdigertes the Tutor and Protector to his sonne and heire Theodosius, which he faithfully performed. Agathias also acknowledgeth it a currant report. Marubas was in credit with this King. He was a Christian Bishop; and by his praier had cured him of a grieuous sickness, which the Magi with their Fierie superstition, and all their labour, could not effect. The Magi conspiring against Marubas, watched opportunities; that when the King should come (after the Persian wont) to worship the Fire, a man (whom they had hidden before within the earth for that purpose) cried aloud, That the King should goe forth, as being accounted of their God impious, who so loued a Christian Bishop. Heereupon the King berhought him of sending him away. But Marubas suspecting the knauerie, counsell'd the King to cause the earth to be digged vp; for the Fire, saith he, cannot speake. The King going into the Chappell or Sanctuarie, and hearing this voice againe, followed Marubas his counsell, and found out their packing, and punished the authors; allowing Marubas to build a Church, wheresoeuer he pleased, in Persia. And whiles the Magi yet added to their treacheries he not only punished their persons, but distasted their Religion, and purposed to become a Christian, but by death was preuented, which happened An. 421. Varanes, or Vararanes his sonne, followed not his steps; but both brake league with the Romans, and persecuted the Christians. Narses his Generall, with his forces, were defeated, Azamã wasted, Nisibis besieged by the Imperials: The Saracens, which aided the Persian, stricken with a strange furie and amazement, drowned themselues in Euphrates. It is said, a hundred thousand men perished. Theodosius then Emperour knew these things by Palladius^b, who in three daies did ride from Constantinople hither, and backe againe in as many, vsing to flie in this manner to any the remotest parts of the Empire, with such admirable, and almost miraculous expedition, with his celeritie making that spacious Empire seeme but narrow and strait. Vararanes sent an Armie of those expert souldiours which were among them, for their excellencie, called Immortall, but the Roman swords soone proued them mortall. Thus succeeded that warre which he had begun for despight to the Christian Religion and Profession. Hee was forced to seeke peace, and ended or mitigated his persecution. To him succeeded, An. 441. another Isdigertes, who reigned seuentene yeeres; and after him Perozes, who reigned foure and twenty yeeres: after him, his brother Obalus (Bizanus calls him Bleses) ruled foure yeeres. Cabades his successor renewed the Warres with the Romans: and no maruell, for he was cruell to his owne people; and warred euen against Nature: for he ordained (as some report) That women should be common, any wedlock-bands notwithstanding. Whereupon his Nobles conspired against him, deprived and imprisoned him. Bleses was enthronized (Scaliger hath Zamaspes) who foure yeeres after resigned the State vnto Cabades againe, who hauing before reigned eleuen yeeres, added thereto thirtie more. Nicephorus^c tels, That hee became friend to the Christians, and permitted free libertie of that Religion vpon this occasion. Betweene Persia and India was a Castle, called Tzundadaer, wherein Cabades had heard, that much money and iewels were kept. Cabades vsed all meanes to obtaine it, but in vaine; so strongly was it (as the Storie saith) garded with Devils. Hee therefore vted all the Persian Exorcismes to dispossesse them; and when they preuailed not, hee sought to effect it by the Iewes, but with the former successe. At last hee made vse of the Christians, who expelled the spirits, and deliuered the Castle vnto him.

d Manes, first author of this Heresie, was slayed aliue, and cast to the dogs. Niceph. lib. 6. cap. 22.

It is reported, that he slew Zeliobes, King of the Hunnes, for playing on both hands, and comming to helpe him in his warres against the Romans, hauing before sworne to assist the Emperour. About these times were the Manchees^d destroyed in Persia, for corrupting his sonne Phatuarfa with their insectious leauen. Hee therefore slew their chiefe chiefe Prelate Indagarus, and many thousand Manichees, all in one day, hauing assembled them with a wile, professing, that he would make that his son King. He assembled also the chiefe of the Magi, Glouazes; and Boazanes a Christian Bishop, for the greater solemnity, with like deuotion as Iehu sacrificed to Bael, with the presence and assistance of Iehonadab, 2. King. 10. Caluissus saith this was done An. 523. Cabades died An. 531.

His sonne Cosroes the Great succeeded and raigned eight and forty yeares. He about the thirteenth yeare of Iustinians Empire, An. 539. inuaded the Roman Dominions, rooke Surus, burnt Berræa, destroyed Antiochia, and with lesse successe besieged Edesia. Agathias preferreth this Cosroes for his great exploits before Cyrus and Xerxes. Yet was his end ignoble, and vnworthie his high spirit. For Mauritius, in the time of Tiberius, entred into the Persian dominions, and burnt some villages neere to the place where Cosroes then was for his recreation, and saw this burning spectacle: wherewith Indignation and Griefe mustering greater multitudes of fearefull, vnquiet, enraged thoughts in his heart, then Mauritius had souldiers in his Armie, vnable to beare such vnwonted sights of hostile flames in his Countries, and such vnwonted sights of inward perturbations, euen greatnesse of spirit made way to Puffballinitie, and being weakened with colluctation of contrarie passions, a Feauer, taking that occasion and aduantage, apprehends him, and soone after kills him.

Some say, his sonne Ormisdas raigned seuen yeares with his father. Hee succeeded and raigned eight yeares. He was exceeding cruell by reason of a propheticie that his subiects should dispossesse him, which caused him to dispossesse thousands of them of their liues: and made him so odious, that they easily after apprehended the occasion to fulfill that subtil diuellish Oracle. Against him Mauritius performed worthie attempts, which made way vnto him for the Roman Empire. And then also he had good successe against the Persians, by the valour of Philippicus his Generall: insomuch, that the Persians moued with these and other discontents, by incitement of Varamus depoled Ormisdas, killed his wife and sonne before his eyes; which hauing remained to performe vnto him that their last, vncouth, vnnaturall seruice, were presently after put out, with burning needles thrust into them, himselve first imprisoned, and after beaten to death with clubs, by Cosroes his sonne. That Varamus had, a little before, beene sent as Generall against the Roman Armie: which his seruice being found vnseruiceable, and the Romans preuailing, he was not only deprived of his place, but, to his further disgrace, was, by the Kings commandement, clothed in womans attire: which indignities he repayed not in words alone (in his letters stiling Ormisdas, The Daughter of Chosroes) but with those vnnaturall and disloyall practises: which he continued also against Cosroes, sonne and heire of Ormisdas, forcing him to flee to Mauritius the Emperour for succour. For Varamus did not approue his succession, but writ vnto him to relinquish his royaltie, for feare of succeeding in his fathers fortunes. In that letter he stileth himselfe, Friend of the Gods, Enemy of Tyrants, Wise, Religious, Vnblameable; Happie, Prouident, &c. Chosroes giueth him an answer, wherein he thus writeth, CHOSROES King of Kings, Lord of Lords, Ruler of Nations, Prince of Peace, Saluation of men, amongst the gods a man good and eternall, amongst men a god most illustrious, most glorious Conquerour, rising with the Sunne, gining eyes (Starrs) to the night, Noble from his Ancestrie, &c. But for all these great Titles, he was compelled to flee, as is said, and write in a lower stile to Mauritius.

Theophilactus Simocatta, speaking of the Abares a Scythian Nation dwelling neere Ister, saith, that they were descended of the Hunnes, and that Bocolabras (which word signifieth one that is a Priest and Magus, for their Priests were their Diuiners) hauing offended Chagan, the Prince of these Abares, fled vnto their originall Nation, dwelling in the East, neere to the Persians, commonly called Turkes. This I meant to shew the Turkish originall, and their common descent with the Hunnes (with whose posterity in Hungary they now hold such continuall dissentions) by the testimony of an Author which writ his History a thousand yeares since. In his third Book and sixt Chapter, he saith, the Hunnes which dwell in the North-East, whom the Persians called Turkes, were subdued by King Hormisdas; & wheras before the Persians had vsed to pay them forty thousand peeces of gold to buy their peace, they now forced these Hunnes to pay so much for tribute to the Persians. The Persian gold bred such surquedrie and excesse amongst the Turkes, that they had their beds, tables, horse-furniture and armours of solide gold: which prodigalitie made them couetous, and to demand larger contribution from the Persians; hence arose those warres, and that thraldome of the Turkish Nation. This Author, first of all other to my knowledge, mentioneth the Turkish warres, which since haue yeelded matter for Authors more then enough.

These Turkes are ^a said to helpe Varamus in his rebellion; but both he and they receiued discomfiture by Narses the Roman Generall, and six thousand were taken and slaine. The Turkes being asked why they helped Varamus, answered, That they were forced thereto by famine: they were also marked with a black Crosse, which (they said) they learned of the Christians, thereby to expell hunger. Cosroes thus recovered the Kingdome by aide of the Empire, which Varamus had vsurped to himselfe.

^b Niceph. l. 17. c. 18. ex Simocat. lib. 5. c. 15.

He ^b was deeply seene in the Chaldæan mysteries, and being by a Roman Gouernour reproofed for some excesse, in tho'e times when he so much needed their helpe; he answered, That the times did aduantage him to those reproofes: but know (saith he) that calamities shall also befall the Romans, and the Babylonian Nation shall rule them three weekes of yeares. After that, in the fift weeke, the Romans shall subdue the Persians: which being come to passe, a day shall come that shall haue no night, and the expected end of the Empire shall be at hand; in which time corruption shall be abolished, and men shall liue according to Diuine Ordinance. This, either false or vncertaine Prophecie (according to that Deeopenesse of Satan) he vttered, but what effect answerable hath followed, I know not. ^c In his time the Saracens, confederate with the Romans, spoiled the Countries of Babylonia.

This Cosroes reigned nine and thirtie yeares, He held peace with the Romans whiles Mauritius liued; but when Phocas cruelly and treacherously had slaine him, a world of euils at once assaulted the Empire. The Germans, Gaules, Italians, Hunnes, and Persians, by their Armies afflicted the publike State; and the Roman Bishop then began to aspire to an vniuersall Soueraigntie, which that Murth'er first entituled him vnto. That Armie which was yet red with the bloud of Mauritius, by the Persian sword was punished, and died in their owne bloud: who hauing ouerthrowne the Romans in two battailes, possessed Mesopotamia, Syria, Egypt, Palæstina, and Phœnicia. He entered Ierusalem, slew and captiued many Christians ^d, and carried thence the Crosse. Against the Iberians, Armenians, Cappadocians, Galatians, Paphlagonians, euen vnto Chaldæon, he preuailed. Thus did God punish that Murth'erer, and besides (to pay him in his owne coyne) Priscus, *Heraclo*n, and Heraclius conspired against this Conspirer, and murdered the Murth'erer, and hauing cut off his Priuities, and his Head, hurled him into the sea, and destroyed his Issue.

Heraclius succeeded, who repressed Cosroes, vnto whose power Carthage, with Africa, was now also subiected, which he had inuaded, conducting his Armies through Egypt. Heraclius sends an Embassage to him, which receiued this answer, That he would neuer lay downe Armes till the Crucified God were abolished, and the Persian Mithra worshipped. This encouraged Heraclius seeing now Christ himselfe was a partie; vnder whose Banners he could not but finde happie euents of Warre. Cosroes had slaine in Palæstina fourescore and ten thousand Christians, and the Iewes also had brought many of them to the slaughter. Heraclius encountred with Ostanes, and slw thirtie thousand Persians. By a stratagem he wonne Sarbatas, a great Commander, to his part. In another battaile he had lost the Field, but Thunders and terrible Tempests were sent (as Succenturiata Copie) to assist the souldiers of their Lord, and vshered Destruction to the Persian Campe, whiles the Romans killed them, being both blinded with Lightnings, and amazed with inward terrours and outward Tempests. Hee had before chased Cosroes, and taken Thebarma (a Persian Citie) wherein was a Temple of the Fire, which by fire he consumed. And in the yeare 626. Cosroes now at his wits end, or rather quite beyond them, appointed Medarses his sonne to be his successour and heire apparant: wherewith Siroes, his elder sonne, being discontented, conspired to betray his father and brother to Heraclius: and soone after caused them both to be slain at Ctesiphon. Peace was concluded with the Romans, & their Prouinces restored.

Onely

Onely Arabia was by Mahumet holden, as a Seminarie of a greater mischiefe, vnder which the world with griefe and amazement still groneth. Lope Obregon in a large Spanish booke, of the confutation of the Alcoran, which he saith he gathered out of the Moores writings, tells that Mahamet serued Heraclius in his warres against Cosroes, with more then ten thousand horse-men; Ubequar, Homar, Hozmen, and Hali, being chiefe Commanders vnder him, and being after the victorie denied pay, conquered a great part of Persia to himseife. And when Siroes successor to Cosroes, withstood him; he gaue him the ouerthrow, and therefore the Persians chose a new King to repressethese Arabians: and that after this, Heraclius sending for the Crosse which he had recouered from the Persians, from Ierusalem to Constantinople, (this Palladium being gone) he wanne Ierusalem and the Countries about. Other prodigious miracles he farseth into his storie, and describes a Throne which Cosroes had made in a tower of siluer garnished with precious stones, vnder the same on one side the Sunne, on the other the Moone, and iust with it the crosse which he had taken from Ierusalem, and that he would be adored for King and Lord of the world. But I will not ingage my selfe farre for this Historian.

Siroes Adefer, Barazas, and Baram the daughter of Cosroes, in their order of succession in that disordered and turbulent estate, had scarce two yeares allowed to them all: to whom succeeded Ormizda Iezdegird, who about the yeare 632. was ouerthrowne and slaine by the Saracens: and that Persian Kingdome (then weakened by ciuill dissensions) was subdued to Saracenicall seruitude; and that second Persian Dynastie (continued as Scaliger^a reckoneth in eight and twentie successions, the space of foure hundred and two yeares) had an end. From thence vnto this time their Religion is Saracenicall: their State gouerned by the Califas,^b and such Commanders or Sultans as they placed ouer them, till their Sultans warring with the Califa for Soueraigntie, procured aide from the Turkes: who dispossessed them of their Kingdome presently after they had disburthened them of their enemies: The Turkes were displaced and chased away by the Tartars. Of these both Saracens and Turkes you haue the history in the former booke, and therefore needlesse here to be related. Of the Tartars shall follow in their order. Now let vs a little looke back to the Greatnes, and other things most remarkable in the Persian Kings.

CHAP. V.

Of The Persian Magnificence, and other their Antiquities.

THe time of the first Dynastie, howsoeuer Dionysius Halicarnass. contracteth it to two hundred yeares, and Cedrenus to two hundred and fourteene: yet Q. Curtius (who writ the ouerthrow of the same by Alexander, in the time of Claudius, vnder whom, if Brissoni^c hath gathered truly, he was Proconsul of Africa) and Hierom, and Clemens Alexand. and others little disagree from that our former account of 231. In which space the greatnes of their Kings appropriated the title of the Great King vnto themselves, as Drusus in his Observations, and Brissoni out of Dio Chrysostomus, Aristides, Isocrates and others haue obserued: so Artaxerxes Ezra 7. 12. calleth himseife King of Kings, which the Parthian after annexed to his stile. The Kingdome was hereditarie both in Persia and Parthia, the eldest sonne begotten in wedlocke, succeeding. In long expeditions the heire apparent was nominated. They vsed to be inaugurated or crowned (after our phrase) at Pasargadae,^d by their Priests, which Plutarch thus describeth. The designed King goeth into a Chappell of the Goddess of War (it may be thought Minerua) and there putting off his former habit, puts on that which Cyrus ware before he was King: then doth he eat a lump of Figs, & Turpentine, and drinkes a cup of sowre milke: their other ceremonies are not knowne. On his head was set a Cidaris or Tiara; this was a kind of Cap or Turbant, not like a felt of wooll, but of diuers peeces of cloth sowed together, Tritis pilea suta de lacernis; the Kings differing frō the cōmon sort, because his ascended stait with a sharp top not bowed any way; to the other Persians it was deadly to weare a Tiara, except the top bowed (in token of subiection) to their forehead. Onely the posteritie of those, which with Darius Histaspis slew the vsurping Magnus, might weare them bending to the middle of their head, and not hanging downe to their browes, as the other. The Kings Tiara was properly called Cidaris, and was set on by the Sarena, which was an hereditarie dignitie, next to the King. About this Cidaris he wore a Diadem, which some Authors ^a confound, and make to be the same; others otherwise: it was a purple band, or of blew colour, distinguished with white, which was wreathed about the Tiara. The right or strait Tiara, with that purple and white band, was the note of royaltie, as the Crowne in these parts. The Diadem ^b in other Countries was a white band wreathed about the forehead. The new King was placed also in a golden Throne, and (if he pleased) changed his former name, as Codomannus to Darius. His subiects adored him as a god (so did the Greekes ^c interpret it, and Mordecai, which refused this ceremonie to Haman) prostrating themselves on the ground with a kind of veneration; turning their hands behind their back, if they had any sute to the King. Sperchies and Bulis Lacedemonians, and Conon ^d the Athenian refused this Rite: Ismenias ^e the Theban dissembled it with taking vp his ring, which for that purpose he let slip from his finger, when he came before the King. Timagoras ^f, was put to death by the Athenians for doing it. In the time of Apollo-nius ^g, none might come to the presence of the King, which had not before done the like adoration to his Image. They also when they came into the presence of the King, held their hands within their sleeues; for default herein, Cyrus Iunior slew Antofaces and Mittraus, as Xenophon writeth. Likewise for the greater Maiestie they seldome were seene of the people, and then neuer on foot: neither might any enter the Pallace without licence of the King, signifying his attendance first by a messenger: this honor was reserued to the Princes which slew Smerdis, which might enter at all times, but when the King was in bed with his wife; which Intaphernes (one of the seuen) transgressing, therefore lost his head. Yea the Scripture ^h noteth the danger hereof in Haman, the Kings greatest fauorite, and Ester the Queene, neither of which had libertie of entrance without the Kings call or admissiion. It was a capitall offence to sit on the Kings Throne, to weare the Kings garment, or in hunting to strike any beast before the King had stricken. The King (as before is noted of Cambyses) was not subiect to any law: the people were held in much slavery, if that may be so called which is voluntary. In this affection they which were ⁱ scourged at the Kings command, were thankfull to him, for that they were had in remembrance with him. Their obedience appeared, when Xerxes ^k being in a ship in danger, many at his word leaped into the sea to lighten the ship. Yea they would be their owne executioners when they had offended the ^l King. None might salute him without a present. His birth-day was obserued a sacred and solemne festiuall. His death was bewailed with a silence of lawes and sutes five daies, and with extinguishing ^m that fire, which euery one obserued in his house, as his household deity. The Kings abode was according to the season: seuen moneths saith Zonaras ⁿ in Babylon, three in Susa, and two in Ecbatana. Alian therefore compares them to Cranes, & Aristides to the Scythian Nomades: alway by this shifting, enjoying a temperate season. Susa or Sbushan, was so called of the abundance of Lillies, which in that language are so named, saith Stephanus: a Region so defended by high mountains from the Northerne blasts, that in the Summer the vehement heat parched their ^o Barly (it is Straboes report, and therefore they covered the roofes of their houses with earth two cubits deepe) and it killed the snakes as they crossed the waies. It was situate on Choeses and entertained the Kings Court in Winter, as Ecbatana in Summer, the chiefe Citie of the Medes. Sometimes it also remoued to Pasargadæ; and sometimes to Persepolis, the richest Citie, if Diodorus ^p be beleued, vnder the Sun, wherein was a Tower enuironed with a threefold wall, the first of which was sixteene cubits high, and made with battlements, the second twice as much, the third square, and sixty cubits in height of hard stone with brazen gates: on the East thereof was a hill of foure acres, wherein were the Sepulchres of the Kings. Alexander in reuenge of the burning of Athens, and by instigation of wine, and Thais his Concubine (Mars, Bacchus, Venus, three heauy, vnruely, tyrannicall enemies, conspiring) burned this sometime-Treasure-house of Persia.

The Persian Court or Pallace had many gates, and guards which tooke turnes by lot: (you reade the wordes of Aristotle in his booke de Mundo, hereby manifested to be his, or at least as auncient in that he writeth of the Persian State flourishing before Alexander in his time had subuerted it) some, he saith, were called the Kings eares, others his eyes, and others had other offices, by which the King learned whatioeuer was any where done, and therefore holden as a God: And besides his Posts which brought newes, by fires or Beacons, he might in one day learne the State of that huge Empire, extended from the Hellespont to India. The Pallace-roofe admirably shined with the brightnesse of Iuorie, Siluer, Amber, and Golde. His Throne was of Golde, borne vp with foure Pillars, beset with gemmes. His bed was also of Golde (which was propounded the reward to Zorobabel and his companions Exr. 3. 3.) yea, Herodotus tells of a Tabernacle of Golde, of a Plane tree, and a Vine of golde giuen to Darius by Pithius the Bithynian. This Vine Athenaus reporteth, was adorned with jewels, and hung ouer the Kings bed, the Grape-clusters being all precious stones: in a Parlour at his beds feete were 3000. Talents of golde in another at the head, called the Kings bolster, were 5000. Talents. Gardens were^b adioyning, which they called Paradises: some very large, wherein were kept wilde beasts, as Lions, Beares, Bóres, for the Kings game, with spacious woods and plaines, inclosed in walls. Tully out of Xenophon relateth the industrie of Cyrus, which with his owne hand had measured, planted, ordered, and husbanded one of those pleasant Paradises. Alexander enriched them with trees and plants out of Greece. The Persian Kings dranke the water of Choaspes only, which to that purpose was boyled, and carried with them in siluer vessels wheresoeuer they went. The Parthian Kings dranke of this^c and of the Riuer Eulæus (a Riuer rising in Media, which after it hath buried it selfe, againe recouering the light, compasseth the Tower of Susa and the religious Temple of Diana. Daniel calls it Ynai; it seemeth to be or to becom the same with Choaspes; & so doth Ptolemy confound them) they dranke also only Chalybonian wine, made at Damascus in Syria, and their bread was made of the wheat of Affos in Phrygia. Their sumptuous feasting^d appeareth in the Scripture, beyond what is read in any storie of any King: in which was somewhat of euery^e Nation subiect to him, set before him: his Salt was brought out of Egypt. Amongst the baggage and stuffe of Darius, which Parmenio tooke at Damascus, were found two hundred seuentie seuen Cookes, nine and twentie Scullians, thirteen which had charge of white-meates, seenteene which were to minister water, seenty which belonged to the wine-celler, fortie which looked to the oyntments, & sixtie six which made Crowns. How many, may we thinke, were there in his serled Court? His dining-roome was full of muscal women, whereof one began the song, the rest followed: three hundred of these creatures singing, playing, dancing, spent the night in his bed-chamber. He^f which could deuise any new pleasure, was highly rewarded; for which purpose Xerxes promised largely to such Epicurean-Masters by an open Proclamation. The King vsually sate alone, sometimes his mother and wife were admitted: other guests sate where he might see, but not be seene of them: yea, they had slauish sawce to their sweet meats, being narrowly watched by the Eunuches, whether they cast any liberall lookes towards any of the Kings women. Yet the Parthian guests had more seruite entertainment, as euen now we shewed. Concerning the multitudes of their women, and curiositie of their lusts, the booke of Ester yeeldes ample testimonie. Cicero addeth, that they bestowed for the maintenance of their wiues robes, and dresses; one Citie for their haire, another for their necke, yea, the reuenues of whole countries on such excesse. Socrates in Platos Alcibiades telleth of an Embasadour into Persia, which was almost a whole day in traouelling through a Region, called the Queenes Girde, another called the Queenes Head-tire, and so for euery other part of her Wardrobe.

The Kings children (especially the eldest sonne) were presently after their birth committed to Eunuches, which besides education did compose and order their lims: at seuen yeares of age they learned to ride and to hunt, hauing skilfull instructers for that purpose: at fourteene yeares they were committed to the discipline of the Royall Masters, which were foure choisely learned; the first in Prudence, which taught the Magia of Zoroastres, and the institution of a King: the second, in Justice; who taught to speake and deale truly: the third, in Temperance, wherein he instructed his new disciple: as the fourth in Fortitude. The Persian King had one, whose office was to salute the King with these words; Arise, O King, and thinke on such things as Mesoromades would have thee. Almost every day he performed his holy Rites, for which cause were slaine^h every day 1000. sacrifices, amongst which were Oxen, Asses, Harts, the Magi being present. Before their sacrifices they discoursed of pietie: and when they went to this their deuotion, there were men on both sides the way set in ranks, with officers called Mastigophori, who suffered none but great Personages to enter. First were led Bulls, foure and foure together, which were sacrificed to Iupiter. After them were led Horses to be offered to the Sunne. Then followed a Chariot drawne with white Horses, hauing a golden beame, and crowned, sacred to Iupiter: after that, the Chariot of the Sunne like the former. Then a third Chariot, the Horses couered with Scarlet; after which followed men carrying fire, and next, the King in his Chariot; before which went 4000. Target-men, and 2000. Speare-men about it: There followed 300. with Darts on horse-backe: two hundred horses with golden bridles: and after them three thousand Persians, and in the last place the Medes, Armenians, Hircans, Xenophon indeed, which writes this in his Institution of Cyrus, intends rather the frame of a iust Empire, then the truth of history, yet professeth to relate no other rites & customs then which the Persians embraced: neither doth he in these things disagree from Herodotus & Curtius. The Kings Chariot was drawne with white horses, the drowning of one of which was the cause of drying the riuer Gyndes. For Cyrus enraged for the losse of his white Palfrey, diuided the riuer by force of men into 320. rills; so that it wildered and lost it selfe in those many by-waies: an argument what Diuision can doe. These horses were of the Nisæan race in Media. When the King descended from his Chariot, a golden stoole was set him to step on: one alway attending his Chariot with such a stoole. While he rode in his Chariot, he spent the time in whistling with a knife, not in reading or any graue meditation, and therefore was vnlearned. When he went on progresse into Media,^k he enioyned the country to spend three daies before to hunt Scorpions, which there abounded; allowing rewards therfore. They vsed by themselves or their Legats to visit their officers in the Prouinces, and to punish or preferre them according to their merits. In iudgements they not only considered the crimes & accusations, but the counterpoise also of their vertues: and the clemency^l of Artaxerxes (in their irreuocable law) appeared in cutting off the Tyara of condemned persons, in stead of their heads. As often as the King entered into Persepolis, euery Matron was to haue a piece of golde giuen her: the men also were rewarded with multiplied children: but especial rewards were bestowed on them which were called Orosange, which had deserued well of the King, whose names & facts were therefore recorded, as we reade of Mordecai, & his recompence. Themistocles receiued of the kings bounty the Citie Magnesia, to finde him bread (which region was worth 50. Talents yearly) Lampscacum for wine, Myus for cates. The chiefe gift giuen to any was a mill of gold. The kings birthday was a solemne feast called^m Tycta, that is perfect, for the magnificence thereof: in w^{ch} he gaue gifts to the people: yea, he might not denie any petition then made to him: The king nourished so many Indian dogs for hunting, that foure great villages in the plaine of Babylon were assigned to their sustenance. Artaxerxes caused Megabyzus (as Ctesias writeth) to be beheaded for striking a Lion with his dart, which was ready to assault the king, because he therein transgressed the Law, and preuented the kings tryall of his valour. The reuenues of the tributes were 14560. Euboike talents: the silver and gold were melted and kept in earthen vessels, which were broken when they came to vse the same. Besides this, the subiect prouinces yeilded to the maintenance of the king other things: as Armenia, horses; Babylonia, foure moneths victuals, and the rest of Asia the other eight; and other regions their peculiar commodities. The kings ordinarie guard night & day guarded the Pallace, the most of them Persians: another band of 10000. choice horse-men were wholly Persian, and were called Immortal: one thousand of the best of them, called Doryphori and Melophori, were chosen into the Kings guard. They receiued no money but allowance of victuall for their wages. Curtius menmentioneth a guard next the Kings person, called the Kings kinsmen, which were 15000. But it were too tedious to recite the Homotimi, Megistanes, and other his court-officers and attendants, the Surena which was the chiefe Magistrate, & others, wherof Briffonius hath written. As their liues were burthened with voluptuousnesse, so they prepared for their deaths (that they might descend suddenly into the graue, as Iob saith of the prosperitie of some wicked, without any bands, to vse Davids phrase, of a lingring death) certaine poysons, tempered of the excrements of the Dircærus an Indian bird, which in short time, without sense of griefe depriued them of life. After the kings death they extinguished the sacred fire, which rite Alexander obserued^o in Hephæstions funerrall: in Persepolis were erected vnto them stately monuments, with Titles and Epitaphs inscribed.

I might here terrifie the delicate & already-wearied reader with representation of their Martial marching, discipline, numbers, armors, & the like; of which Briffon hath written a whole book. Yet because we haue thus far waded in matters of the Persian magnificence; let vs take a little view of the Heire, successor to that Greatnes, Great Alexander in state entring Babylon, thus by Curtius related. Many came forth to meete him: the wayes were all strowed with flowers & garlands, on both sides were erected siluer Altars, laden with Frankinsence and all kind of odors. There followed him for presents droues of horses and cattell: Lions and Leopards in grates were carried before him. The Magi after their manner of procession singing, had the next place; after them the Chaldæans, & the Babylonian both diuiners and artificers, with muscical instruments. Then the horse-men, furnished beyond magnificence in excesse of prodigalitie. The king with his armie followed, and last of all the townf-men. He that will compare with these relations, that which in the bookes of the Ronish Ceremonies is written of the Popes strait Tiara, enuironed with a triple crown: the veneration performed to him by all, euen Emperors kissing his feet, holding his bridle & stirrop, putting their shoulders vnder his chaire when he lists to ride on mens shoulders, holding water to his handes, and bearing the first dish to his Table: the change of his name at his election: his Pal-freyes alwayes white, like the Nisæan, led before him; one of which carrieth his God vnder a Canopie: his Scala, Processions, and other rites; shall see some hence borrowed, most exceeding the Persian Excesse. Once, all Religion with them seemeth turned into state and Ceremonie, the soule being fled; and this (bodily exercise) body of exercise, in exercise of the body, onely left.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Persian Magi.

HHe name of Magi is somtimes applied (say some) to all the Persians, or else to a particular nation amongst them: sometime it signifieth the most excellent in Philosophie, & knowledg of nature, or in sanctity & holines of life. Thus ^a*Suidas* calls the Persian Magi, Philosophi, and Philothei, studious of knowledg, of nature, & of God. Somtimes it signified such as we now call Magicians, practisers of wicked Arts. Among the Persians this name was ancient & honorable, saith ^b*Pencernus*, applied only to the Priests, which liued in high reputation for dignity & authority, being also Philotophers, as the Chaldæans were. To these was committed the custodie of religion, of ancient inonuments, of later histories, of publike records, & the explanation of the Persian wisdom, whose account appeareth in the former chap. where, after Cambyfes death, one of them is reported to succeed in the Throne. Now wheras the Ethnikes had a tradition of two ^c*Genij*, which attend euery man, one good, the other euill; proceeding (in likelihood) from diuine truth, concerning good & euill Angels, which are either ministring spirits for mans good, or tempters vnto euill: curious men hence took occasion to deuise new arts, which were called μασεια and γουσεια; by the one calling vpon the good Damon or Genius; by the other, on the euill: which euill One could easily turn himselfe into an Angell of light, to delude blinde people, being indeed (as in our White & Blacke witches at this day) worse when an Angell, then when a Diuell. Hereof were diuers kinds; ^d*Necromancie*, which inuocated the spirits of the dead: of which smoaky Soote, the Heathens Diuine. Poets, and

and our poetick Diuines in the tales of Hell and Purgatorie, striue who shall haue the blackest tincture. They had also their Lecanmancie, which was obserued in a Basin of water, wherein certaine plates of golde and siluer were put with Iewels, marked with their juggling Characters, and thence after pronuntiation of their wordes were answers whispered; Gastromancie procured answer by pictures, or representations in glasse-vessels of water, after the due Rites. Catoptromancie receiued those resemblances in cleare glasses: CrySTALLomancie, in Crytall; Dactyliomancie was a diuination with Rings (which perhaps Gyges vsed) consecrated by certaine positions of the heauens, and diuellish inchantments. Onymancie with Oyle and Soote daubed on the Naile of an vndefiled childe, and held vp against the Sunne: Hydromancie with water: Aeromancie with ayre. But what should I adde the many more names of this Artlesse Art, vnworthy the naming? Tibi nomina mille, Mille nocendi artes; Infinitely diuerfified are these blinde by-ways of darkeness and mischiefe. Delrio hath other diuisions of Magike, which from the efficient he diuideth into Naturall, Artificiall, and Diabolicall: from the end, into Good and Bad: and this bad (which is by explicite or implicite compact with Diuels) into Magia specialis, Diuiniatio, Maleficium, & Nugatoria. Zoroaster is supposed Author both of the good and bad vnto the Persians. Naturall Magike is by Delrio deuided into that which worketh wonders (not miracles) and that which diuineth. But I am wearie of this Magicall search. Leauē we them in their Mazes, Circles, Labyrinths of Errour: and let vs take view of the Persian Magi, from whence Plinie deriveth the first originals of Magicall Vanities; which are (saith hee) compounded of three Artes, that exercise most imperious power ouer the mindes of men; Physicke, and that offering her selfe more sublimate and pure, in the sacred name and rites of Religion, beautified also with the addition of Mathematicall Sciences; (a three-fold cord not easily broken, like a three-headed Cerberus, or triple crowned Prelate, holding the world in feare or loue thereof.) Zoroastres (who liued as Eudoxus testifieth, sixe thousand yeares before Plato) first inuented it in Persia. Hermippus affirmeth, that Agonax taught him. Apuſorus and Zaratus among the Medes, Marmaridius the Babylonian, Hippocus the Arabian; and Zarmocenedas the Assyrian, haue beene famous for their practise and writings of this Art. Pythagoras, Empedocles, Democritus, Plato sayled farre to learne it, vnder taking long exiles, rather than pilgrimages or peregrinations, to that end. He impiouſly addeth Moses and Iochabell (it may be he meaneth Iosua) to this impious number. The Scripture tells of Iannes, and Iambres, and Simon Magus famous in this infamie. Hierome saith, they were the Philosophers of the Chaldeans, and that the Kings did all things after the direction of their Art; which (they are Plinies wordes) in the East ruleth the Kings of Kings. Porphyrius affirmeth, that they which were wise in diuine mysteries, and performed them, were called of the Persians, Magi: the same, saith Picus, that Philosophers were amongst the Greekes. The like hath Philo, and Proclus, and Arnobius of Hosethanes Magus. They were studious in prayers, instituted sacrifices, and mysteries, as the Indian Brachmanes, and Gracian Theologi; acknowledged Angels, Paradises, the soules immortalitie. Patricius also addeth to this their Philosophie and Theologie, Astronomie and Physicke, and all knowledge of Nature. It is like that in the Persian Magi concurred both a certayne stocke or kindred; which were all so called (as is said) and the Philosophicall inquisition of Nature, & the Priestly function, and also some eyther implicite or explicite societie with Diuels. The same they were, at least in profession and reputation, that the Philosophers with the Greekes, the Priests in Egypt, Gymnosophistes in India, Chaldeans in Babylon, Druides in Gallia and in this our Isle, the Italian Aruſpices, & other religious persons (the Treasurers of their Theologie & Philosophie) in other places. As for those Magi mentioned in the h Gospell, som suppose them to come from Ethiopia; som from Arabia; some from Mesopotamia; some from Chaldæa; and some from Persia; and some from diuers of these regions. Whencesoeuer they came, they had a brighter Starre to guide them with diu ner light, then those Magicall brands of hellish fire could yeeld.

Plato commends this Magia, and calls it Machugistia, and θεωνθεραπεια the worship of the Gods; and saith, that the Kings of Persia learned it, as a knowledge of diuine mysteries, wherein by the worlds Common-wealth, they were instructed to gouerne their their owne. Others, as they were led by differing affection, doe as much discommend them. And truly (as in the Chaldæan, and Aegyptian Priests) their searching out the mysteries of Nature cannot but deserue commendation, but their abusing this naturall Philosophie to vnnaturall conspiracie with deuils, cannot but bee detested of those which are not themselues detested of God. And either from this deuillish conspiracie, or ouer-curious vanitie, did arise their predictions of future euents : in which respect the Ethnikes had them in high reputation. Ammianus Marcellinus ^k saith, that Zoroastres added much to this Art from the Chaldæan mysteries, and Hyfistes, the father of Darius, from the Brachmanes, which he in his Indian trauels had found in a woodie solitarinesse; and learned of them the motions of the Starres, and pure rites of sacrifices: which he taught the Magi, and they, together with the skill of diuination deliuered to their posteritie by tradition : and that progenie is alway consecrated to diuine seruices, and keepe continually burning certaine fire which first came from heauen; a small portion whereof was wont to be carried before the Kings of Asia. There were but a few of them at the first: and it was vnlawfull to touch the sacrifice, or approach to the Altar, before the Magus with a certaine set speech had powred on his sacred preparatiue liquors. Afterwards being increased in number they grew into an entire Nation, and inhabited vnwalled townes, being gouerned by their owne lawes, and honoured for religion. Cicero writeth, that the Magi did assemble together in Fana, into certaine Temples or consecrated places, to consult about their diuinations. They presaged to Cyrus 30. yeeres raigne. They dranke the hearbe Theangelis, and vsed also the hearbe Aglaphon or Marmaritis when they would diuine. They diuined by the notes and markes of the body: they foretold the euents of prodigies. They might not teach any but Persians the mysteries of their science, without the Kings leaue. And yet Plinie saith, that Plato, Democritus, Empedocles, and Pythagoras, vnderooke exiles rather then trauels, to learne the same, which after their returne they taught. Apollonius also for the same cause went into Persia and India: whose Philosophie plainly appeareth by the historie of his life to be soiled with magicall impuritie. And although some commend one sort of Magia, as being their Theologie and Philosophie, yet seeing their Philosophie was corrupted with curiositie, and their Theologie with superstitious Idolatrie, it could not be free from some kinde of implicite sorcerie, as the examples of those ^m which were most eminent heerein, doe shew. Such an one Pases was, who by enchantments would make shewes and resemblances of sumptuous feasts, with many attendants: and had a Magicallⁿ or enchanted halfe-penny, which would returne to him againe, when hee had bought any thing therewith. Yea howsoeuer, Patricius would not excuse only, but highly commend the Oracles (as he termeth them) of Zoroaster, yet doth he cite out of him, that Barbarous names must not be changed. For all things haue their names of God, which haue an vnspeakable power in holy things: which words seeme to incline to Charmes, which are commonly in barbarous vnsignificant termes. Other things which he with great paines hath gathered out of the Platonikes, stamped with Zoroasters name, are many of them diuine, being interpreted in the best sense. For they are for the most part obscure, and many exceeding the sense of such weake readers as I confesse my selfe. Some I haue heere expressed. In all the world shineth the Trinitie, of which the beginning s vnitie. The Father perfected all things, and deliuered them to the Second Minde, which all mankinde calleth the First: He remaineth in the paternall profunditie. It is the Minde of the Minde which is framer of the fierie world. All the world is of fire, and water, and earth, and aire. He fastned a great company of not-wandering starres, and 7. wandering creatures, joining fire to fire, the earth in the mids, and the water in the receptacles of the earth, and the aire about them. Let the immortall soule lift her eies vpwards, not downwards into this darke world, which is vnstable, madde, headie, crooked, alway encompassing a blinde depth, hating the light, of which the vulgar is carried. Seeke Paradise. The soule of man will after some sort bring God into it selfe: hauing nothing mortall, it is wholly ranshed of God. It resoundeth the harmonie, vnder which is the mortall bodie, extending the fierie minde to the worke of pietie. I desire not sacrifices and inwards, these are plaies, flee these things if thou wilt open the sacred paradise

“ of pietie, where vertue, and wisdome, and the good law, are gathered together. If these things are harsh, what would those obscurities be in his Theologie, wherein he first placeth One beginning, then a paternall profunditie of three Trinities, euery of which hath the Father, the Power, the Minde. Next in order is the Intelligible Lynx, and after it Synocheus, Empyreus, and Etherealis, and Materialis; and after these the Teletarcha: after which the Fontani Patres, Hecate: and such a rabble of names follow, that the recitall would seeme to coniure the reader into some magicall maze or circle. They which are curious of those inextricable labyrinths, may resort to Pfellus, Patricius, and the Platonikes, which ascribe these things to the Assyrians and Chaldeans, as they doe Zoroaster also. Delrio and Patricius finde six of these Zoroasters mentioned in authors, (Goropius after his wont, paradoxicall, none at all) the first of which was inuentor of this Magike, a Chaldean, supposed to liue in the time of Abraham. Berosus first, and after * Iulianus a Magician, both Chaldeans, communicated these mysteries to the Greekes: and diuers of those heretikes * in the prime age of the Christian Church were not a little sowed with this magicall leauen, as appeareth by Irenæus, Epiphanius, Augustine, and others that write against them. Basilides his Abraxas (the mysticall characters of which name make 365. the number of daies in the yeere, and of heauens after his opinion) is supposed the same with Mithra the Persian deitie, and hence to haue deriued his magicall descent: which we may note of others, if this belonged not to another labour.

The Magi had one chiefe amongst them in their Societie, called by Sozomene, Princeps Magorum. Cicero p affirmeth that none might be Kings in Persia, before they had learned the discipline of the Magi; neither was it any more lawfull for euery one to be a Magus, then to be a King: Such was their estimation in Persia. Strabo q tells that they vsed carnall company with their mothers: and when they are dead are cast forth vnburied, to be a prey to the Birds. Heurnius maketh Zoroaster authour of incestuous copulations of all sorts *, and of the not-burying rite, but either to burne or cast forth the carkasse. (yea authors write that he himselfe desired and obtained to be consumed with fire from heauen.) Nothing seemed to them more vnluckie, and signe of former leaudnesse, then that no bird or beast would prey on their dead. And the souldiours which sickened in their armies, were laid forth yet breathing, with bread, water, and a staffe to driue away the beasts and fowles; which yet when their strength failed them, casily deuoured both the meat and keeper. If any recouered, and returned home, the people shunned him as a ghost, nor would suffer him to follow his former trade of life, till he were expiated by the Magi, and as it were restored againe to life. The Romans in pitie, passing thorow some part of Persia, where they found a carkasse in the field, buried it; but the night following, in a vision, a graue old man in habite of a Philosopher, reproued that fact, willing them to leaue the naked body to the dogges and birds, and the mother earth (saith he) will not receiue those which haue polluted their mothers. Which in the morning they found verified, the earth hauing vomited vp that carkasse, which there lay on the top of the graue. The Magi heereby appeare to haue had intercourse with the deuill: as by their predictions also, of Sylla, Ochnus, Sapores, and others, mentioned by Paterculus, Alianus, Agathias, and other Historians. Thus were the Magi buried in the bowels of beasts and birds. Tullie saith that the other Persians were wrapped in wax, and so preserved. The Ostana and Astrampsychi are by Suidas reckoned successours of the Magi. Hierome r citeth out of Eubulus three kindes of the Magi: the most learned of them liued onely on meale and hearbes. Pausanias s reporteth, that in Lydia, in the Cities Hierocesarea, and Hypæpo, hee saw Temples hauing Persian surnames, and in euery of those Temples a Chappell and Altar, whereon were Ashes not like in colour to the ordinarie sort. The Magus entering into the roome, laieth drie wood on the Altar, after that hee hath set his mitre on his head, and then at the name of a certaine God, singeth barbarous hymnes (which the Greekes vnderstand not) out of the booke: which being done, the heape is fired, and the flame breakes forth. Diogenes Laertius t relateth, that these Magi spent their time in the seruice of their Gods, offering vnto them prayers and sacrifices, as if none but they might be heard: they disputed of the substance and generation of the Gods, whom whom they reckoned to be the Fire, Water, and Earth. They reprehended Images, especially such as made a differing sex of Male, and Female, among the Gods. They discoursed of iustice. To burne their dead bodies, they held it impious: but to lie with their owne mothers, or daughters, they accounted lawfull. They practised diuinations, and fore-tellings, affirming that the Gods appeared to them, that the aire was full of formes * or shapes, which subtilly and as it were by euaporation, infuse themselues into the eies. They forbade outward ornaments, and the vse of Gold. Their garments were white, the ground their bed, Hearbes, Cheese, and Bread, their food. Aristotle saith, that they held two beginnings, a good spirit and an euill, calling the one Iupiter and Oromasdes: the other Pluto and Arimanius. (Empedocles ^u translated this plant into Philosophie, and long after, * Manes a Persian heretike into diuinitie.) Theopompus addech these opinions of theirs; That men should againe be restored to life, and become immortall, and that all things consisted by their praiers; Hecateus, that the Gods were begotten: Clearchus, that the Gymnosophista descended from the Magi. Thus farre Diogenes.

Plutarch in his Treatise de Osir. & Isid. citeth, approueth and applieth the opinion of the Magi vnto many others, which they conceiued touching their two beginnings, Arimanius and Oromazes: For whereas they saw such a mixture of euill in euery good, (which made Salomon to brand them all with the title of vanitie) they gathering that good could not be either cause or effect of euill, found out this remedie worse then the disease, to hold two Authors of all things, calling * Oromazes a God; and Arimanius, the fountaine of euill, a deuill; the one cause of light: the other of darknesse. Betwixt these two they placed Mithres as Mediator or Intercessor. Zoroastres was author of this opinion. To the first of these was praise and vowes offered: to the later mournfull deuotions. For, rubbing a certaine hearbe called Omomi, they call on Dis Pater & Orcus, then they wash it with the bloud of a slaine Wolfe, and carry it into a shadowie place, where they powre it out. They assigne plants partly to the good, partly to the bad God: as they doe also quicke creatures; the earthly creatures to the good, the watery to the bad, and therefore esteeme him happie that hath killed most of them. Oromazes, say they, begotten of pure light, and Arimanius the childe of darknesse, warre one against another. The first created six Gods, Beneuolence, Truth, Politie, Wisdome, Riches, Honest delight: the later as many contrary. When Oromazes had thrice enlarged himselfe, hee was as farre beyond the Sunne, as the Sunne is from the earth, and formed the starres: Of which, one hee fixed as a Gardian and watch-man, the dogge-starre: hee made other foure and twentie Gods, which he closed in an Egge. Arimanius did as much, but his foure and twentie brake their shell; and so became good things and euill mingled. But a fatall time shall come, when Arimanius the Author of plague and famine shall perish, and then shall be one societie of all mankinde in happinesse, vsing but one language. Theopompus saith, according to their opinion, that one of these Gods shall raigne three thousand yeeres, the other being discomfited; and other three thousand they shall fight and labour to destroy one another: at last Dis Pater shall be destroyed, and men shall be happie. This opinion of the Magi, the Chaldeans haue applied to their Astronomie; in the seuen Planets, making two good, two bad, three indifferent: The Grecians, to their Iupiter, Dis Pater & Harmonia: Empedocles to his Friendship and Discord: Aristotle to his Forma & Prinaatio: Pythagoras to his One and Two: Plato to his Idem & Alterum: Manes to his deuillish heresie, as before is said. Dio Chrysostomus telleth of Zoroaster the author of this science, that enflamed with the loue of vertue, he forsooke the world, and went apart into a mountaine. And afterwards leauing that habitation he seemed (to those to whom he would shew himselfe, which was only to the Magi) to shine with a fire which came downe from heauen vpon him. This perhaps was borrowed and peruerced from the shining face of Moses.

Only Persians, saith ^a Gramay, were chosen into their number. The name Magi, is among Authors applied also to the Chaldeans, which in Babylon professed the same Arts and superstitions; the disciples (saith ^b Lucian) of Zoroastres, of whose cunning in charmes you may reade in his Necromantia, a pleasant discourse: Mithrobarzanes a Chaldean

Chaldean Magus, and Menippus, whom he washeth nine and twenty daies in Euphrates by the Moone, and in the morning sets him against the rising Sunne, with long charmes: after that spitting three times in his face, hee brings him backe againe, not once looking aside. Their meat was Acornes, their drinke Milke, Mulse, and the water of Choaspi, their lodging on the wide field on the grasse. After all this hee brought him about midnight to Tygris, where washing him, hee purifieth him with a Torch, and the hearbe squilla, and other things, &c. which howsoever Lucian suteth to his scoffing humour, yet I haue inserted, as somewhat expressing their superstitions obserued in charming and diuinations.

CHAP. VII.

lib. 1.

Ueing these Magi, let vs take view of the Persian religious rites which Herodotus thus describeth. The Persians neither erect Images, nor Altars, nor Temples, and impute it to madnesse in such as doe: therefore, as I thinke, because they are not of the Greekes opinion, that the Gods haue arisen from men. Their custome is ascending vp the highest hilles, to offer sacrifices to Iupiter, calling the whole circle of heauen Iupiter. They sacrifice to the Sunne, and Moone, and Earth, to the Fire, and Water, and Winds: to these onely haue they accustomed to sacrifice from the beginning. They sacrifice also to Urania, which they haue learned of the Assyrians, and Arabians. The Assyrians call Venus, Mylitta; the Arabians, Alitta; the Persians, Metra.

Their rites in sacrific'ng are these. Being to sacrifice, they neither set vp Altar, nor kindle fire, nor vse vestments, pipes, cakes, or libamonts: but he which intendeth to sacrifice, placing the sacrifice in a cleane place, calleth vpon that God, wearing their Tians,^d girded about with myrtle. The sacrificer praiech not for himselfe alone, but generally for all Persians, and especially for the King. And after that the sacrifice is cut into small peeces, hee strewech vnder the sodden flesh, small hearbes, chiefly trifoly; and setting the flesh in order thereon, the Magus standing by, singeth e some hymnes (of the generation of the Gods) which they hold to be a most effectuall inchantment. Without one of their Magi no sacrifice is accounted lawfull. After all this, the sacrificer vseth the flesh at his pleasure.

Of all daies euery man accounteth his owne birth-day to bee most solemnly obserued: and then maketh greatest cheere. The richer sort then set whole Beecues, Camels; Horses, Asses, baked in an ouen or fornace, on the Table: the poorer, smaller beasts. The Persians are small eaters: but in their drinking consult of the weightiest affaires. Of which they deliberate fasting, but pronounce sentence after they are well in drinke. To vomit or make water opeuly, is vnlawfull to them. Those that are equal, salute when they meet each other with a mutuall kisse; which is fastened on the cheeke onely, if they be of vnequall degree. They hold themselues the best of all men, their neighbours so much better, how much neerer them they dwell. They are much addicted to Venerie with both sexes. Next vnto Martiall valour, they repute excellent the procreation of many Children; the King allowing annuall presents to him who hath begotten most Children, and therefore they vse many women. The childe commeth not in his fathers sight till he be fise yeeres old, but liueth with the women, that if hee die before, his father should thence conceiue no griefe. From that time till hee bee twentie, hee learneth three things, to ride, to shoote, to speake truth. For to lie is with them the most shamefull thing; the second, to bee in debt. For one fault onely no man ought to be punished. Whatsoever is not meet to be done, ought not to be spoken. A Leprous person, if he be a Citizen, may not enter into the Citie, nor haue any societie with men: for this disease is sent (say they) for some offence against the Sunne: if hee bee a forrenner, they banish him out of their Region, and for the same cause carrie into that Region white Pigeons. In a Ri-uer they neither spit, nor make water, nor wash, but haue them in very religious veneration. They might not cast any carkasse or pollution therein. These things, saith Herodotus, I can affirme of the Persians out of mine owne knowledge: that which followeth I doe not so well know; that they burie not their dead bodies before they be torne of some fowle, or dog: but I well know that their Magi do wrap them vp in wax, and then burie them. These Magi differ both from other men, and from the Egyptian Priests in this, that these pollute themselues with the death of nothing but their sacrifices, but the Magi with their owne hands kill any thing; except a man and a dog: yea, they esteeme it some great exploit, if they haue killed very many Ants or Serpents, or other things which creepe or flie. Thus farre Herodotus. Strabo nameth Anaitis, Amanus, and Anandatis, Gods of the Persians: When the Persian Emperours had ouerthrowne the ^b Saca, they encompassed with a wall a certaine rocke situate in a field, and erecting a Temple of the foresaid Gods, there instituted yearely solemnities, named Saca, which of the inhabitants of Zela are yet celebrated (so they cal the place.) That towne in great part belongs to them which are called Sacred seruants, to which Pompey added a great Countrey. Some report that Cyrus, hauing overcome the Saca, attributing this victorie to diuine power, consecrated that day to his Countrey-Goddesse, naming it Sacaa, and wherefoeuer the Temple of that Goddesse is, there also are celebrated those Sacraean feasts, in manner of the Bacchanals, day and night, the men and women drinking themselues drunken. Strabo in the end of the same eleuenth booke mentioneth their Temples, and amongst others the Temples of Tanais, which before in Herodotus is denied to be the vse of the Persians: ^c Cicero blameth the Magi, for procuring Xerxes to burne all the Temples of Greece, because they included their Gods in walles, and to whom the whole world was a Temple and house. Their deuotion to the Sun and Moone, made them spare Delus sacred to Apollo or the Sun, and the Temple of Diana or the Moone at Ephesus, as an Interpreter of Aristophanes hath glossed. Some hold that Xerxes burnt the Grecian Temples for reuenge of the burning of Sardis, and the Temple of Cybele by the Athenians, and not for hatred of all Temples. The Greekes would not permit the Temples so burned to be re-edified, that those ruinous places might be places of argument to reuenge to all posteritie. The Ionians, as Isocrates testifieth, cursed them which should reuaire them. ^d Strabo thus reporteth of the Persians: They haue neither Images nor Altars: they sacrifice in an high place, they thinke heauen to be Iupiter: they worship the Sunne, whom they call Mubra, the Moone also and Venus, and the Fire, and the Earth, and the Windes, and the water: they sacrifice in a cleane place, and present their sacrifice crowned: and when as the Magus, ruler of this busines, hath diuided the flesh in peeces to euery one, they go their wayes, leauing no part thereof to the Gods, who (say they) are satisfied with the soule of their sacrifice. Some, as it is reported, lay a part of the Numbles on the fire. They sacrifice especially to the Fire, and to the Water, laying on the fire drie stickes, the barks pulled off, and laying thereon fat Tallow, and powring on the same, Oyle, they kindle the same, not blowing with their breath, but fanning, or otherwise enforcing the winde thereto. If any bloweth the fire, or cast any dead thing or durt therein, he is punished with death. They performe their Water-ceremonies in this sort: Comming to a Lake, or Riuer, or fountaine, they make a ditch, and there slay a sacrifice, with great heed that none of the next water be touched with the bloud: after, laying the flesh on Myrtle and Lawrell, the Magi burne the same with small twigs, and making certaine prayers, sprinkle oyle mixed with milke and hony, not in the fire or water, but on the earth. They are a long while muttering their prayers, holding a bundle of small Tameriske-twigs. That which in one place Strabo saith they worshipped Mars only, is a fault of the negligent writers, as ^e Casaubon hath obserued in his Notes. ^f Iulius Firmicus in his Treatise of the mysteries and errors of prophane religions to Constantine and Constantians Emperours, speaketh of the Assyrians and Persians: that the Assyrians ascribed the principality of the elements to the aire, the Image whereof they worshipped, stiling it with the name of Iuno, or Venus the Virgin, whom the Quires of their Priests worshipped with effeminate voices & gestures, their skin polished, and attire fashioned like women. Yea their Priests became impure Ganymedes, and sustained the Sodomiticall lusts of others in the Temples, not shaming, but glorying of such deuotions, & composing ling themſelves to all delicate, laſcivious, filthy behaviour: and thus wantonly dreſſed, with much miſtreſſie cal vpon their Goddeſſe to infute into them a diuining and propheticall ſpirit. Eaſily may that Impure ſpirit finde acceſſe and intertainment in ſuch impure bodies. But the Perſians and all the Magi prefer the Fire. Theſe diuide Iupiter into two powers, metamorphoſing his nature into both ſexes. They make the woman with a three-formed countenance, wound about with monſtrous Serpents (ſit enſignes for the Diuels worſhip): and worſhip a man which had driuen away kine, applying his holies to the power of the Fire; him they call Mithra, whoſe blinde deuotions were done in places anſwerable, namely in hidden caues.

In Cappadocia, where is very great ſtore of the Magi, which (of the Fire) are called Pyrethi, and many Temples of the Perſian gods, they ſlay not the ſacrifice with a knife, but a club or mallet, wherewith they beat it. The Pyretheia are great incloſed places, in the miſt whereof there is an Altar: Thereon the Magi keep much aſhes, and a fire continually burning, whither they euery day reſort, and make their prayers about an houres ſpace, holding a bundle of twigges before the fire, hauing their heads couered with a kind of labelled Mitre, hanging downe on both ſides, that the ſtrings couer their lips. Theſe things are done in the Temples of Anaitis and Amanus. For there are their Temples, and there the Image of Amanus is caried in proceſſion. Theſe things we haue ſeene. It ſeemeth, that whereas Herodotus reporteth they had no temples, Altars, nor Images: and Strabo ſo often mentioneth their Temples, and heere the Altar and Image of Amanus; that in Herodotus's daies they had none: which grew afterwards in uſe, as a forren rite brought in among the Perſians after the Macedonians had conquered them; or elſe that there were differing Sects among their Magi, ſome (as theſe in Cappadocia) embracing Altars, Images, and Temples; ſome reſuſing ſome or all of theſe. For otherwiſe Strabo diſagreeth not only from Herodotus, but from himſelfe, before denying them the uſe of Altars and Images, and heere affirming it of the Cappadocian Magi (in other things) of the Perſian Religion. Perhaps the burning of the Græcian Temples purchaſed to them that conceit with the vulgar: we know they honored the Temple and Altar at Ieruſalem. And leſſe matters ſet on the Friers laſts, make ſeely Papiſts beleue now, that Proteſtants haue no Churches nor Religion, nor ſcarſely the ſhape of men. Hefychius ſaith that Mithras or the Sunne was the chiefe god with the Perſians: and therefore the moſt religious and inuiolable oath of the King was By Mithra. Iulius Firmicus ^a teſtifieth (as before is ſaid) that the Perſians prefer the Fire before all the other Elements, and that they call the ſame Mithra. (The reaſon is, becauſe they held, as in the beginning of this worke we noted out of Zoroaſter, that the Sunne and all the Stars are celeftiell fires.) They performed their deuotions to the ſame in darke caues, where they could not ſee the brightnes of that light. This Hierome calls Mithras den: and Tertullian affirmeth that Mithras Knights or Souldiers were initiated in the ſame. To whatſoever god they ſacrificed, they fiſt called vpon the Fire, and poured out their prayers therto. To this Fire they dedicated certaine Chappels or Oratories, wherein to keepe it alway burning; theſe were called Pyreia: of which Claudian, penetralibus Ignem Sacratum rapere adytis. They ſuppoſed that it came downe from heauen. They worſhipped al πυροδῆν, whatſoever ^b had any reſemblace of fire, as the Carbuncle ſtone. They obſerued differing ceremonies in their Fire and Water-deuotions. To the Fire ^c they uſed theſe ſet words when they added ſewell thereto, Lord Fire, eat. They offered wine in a cup, which they called Condy. The coſtly ſacrifices of their Kings we haue already mentioned. Plutarch ^d tells that Artaxerxes married his owne daughter Aroſſa. (Heraclides addeth his other daughter Amiſtris). And when Atoſſa was leprous, his loue notwithstanding continued, and hee beſought Iuno for her, touching the ground with his hands, replenifhing the way betweene the Temple and Pallace (which was ſixteene furlongs) with offerings of gold, ſiluer, purple, horſes.

We may further adde (from Gramay ^e his Collections out of diuers Authors, and from others, concerning the Perſian Religion) that they ſometime obſerued the Græcian Deities, calling Iupiter, Bel; Hercules, Sandes; Venus, Anaitis. To Iupiter was ſacred a Chariot with a Beame of gold. The Sunne they worſhipped (by the name of Mithra, and Eldētus) at Sunne-rifing: and adored alſo the painted Image thereof. They accounted the Horſe the Sunnes peculiar beaſt, and offered vnto him white horſes.

ses.ouer ^b Darius his Tabernacle, the Image of the Sunne, enclosed in Cristall, shone forth so that it might be seene of all. The order also of Darius his march, when he warred against Alexander, had in the first place their Fire, which they called Sacred and Eternall, caried on siluer Altars. Next hereunto the Magi, singing their country-Hymnes, followed by 365. yong men, (so many as their yeare had daies) clothed in bright red; then came Iupiters Chariot, drawne by white horses: after whom followed a horse of exceeding greatnes, consecrated to the Sun. Their riders had white garments, and golden rods. Likewise, both sides of the Kings Chariot were adorned with Images of gold and siluer: two being most eminent among them; the one, of Peace, the other, of Warre.

That souldier, which was initiated in Mithraes hallowed orders, was first proued by 80. seuerall kinds of punishment: and if he continued stedfast, he was washed, putting on his head a ^c crowne, with a sword interposed. Chast virgins were hallowed the Suns Priests or Nuns. They worshipped Diana, whom they called Nannea (as some wil haue it) in that history of ^d Antiochus. They solemnized certain feasts, the chiefe whereof was that of Mithra. Another holy day they called the Destruction ^e of vices, in which the Magi killed venemous things, and offered; and the seruants lorded it fise daies together, ruling both the family and their masters. Magaphonia they celebrated in memory of the Magi slaine by Darius Histaspis, and his Colleagues. Of their holy-day Saca before is spoken: in which (some report, that) the seruants changed offices & garments with the masters. Minutius Felix ^f obiecteth against them their incestuous copulation with their Mothers. Arnobius derideth their worshipping of Riuers. The Christian Fathers and Heathen Authors are plentiful in the narration of the Persian vanities; Eusebius ^g citeth a saying of Bardesanes Cyrus; Among the Persians there was a law to marrie their sisters, daughters, and mothers: which custome the Persians obserued also in other Countries, and therefore other Nations hating them, called them Magussai; of which are many in Egypt, Phrygia, and Galatia, whose posterity succeedeth them in the same wickednesse. This name Magussai is deriued of Magi.

But of all other things, this was most commendable & admirable which the Persians obserued for learning and practise of vertue, if we may giue like credit to ^h Xenophon here in, as ⁱ others haue done. They had a kinde of publike Schoole, called the Free or liberall Market, not for the sale of merchandize (which kinde of markets the ancient Persians ^k wanted) but the learning of ingenuous, liberal, & vertuous conditions. This was diuided into foure parts, one for children till 17. yeares of age, the second for youthes to 17. the third for men till fifty, the fourth for old men. In this liberal Market or Colledge was a Pallace, & Iudgment-place. Early in the morning the children resort hither: here also were the striplings, and the riper-aged men, daily: the old men often. The striplings borded and lodged there (except they were married) and presented themselues to the Magistrates in armor. Each Court had 12. Prefects, according to the nuber of the Persian Tribes. To the children are old graue men appointed, likewise to the youthes men of riper age, as masters of manners. The children come not in the fathers sight till fise yeares of age, or as Valerius Maximus ^l hath, till seuen, and especially learne truth: they were here taught by these Prefects the rules of Iustice, not by bare rules, but by examples (for which cause also, Augustus ^m would haue the Senators children present in the Court). Yea a good part of the day was to this end spent by those Prefects, in hearing and deciding such cases as sel out amongst these their schollers, about thefts, reproches, or other wrongs. Next to Truth and Iustice, they learned Sobriety, Abstinence, Continnence, & Temperance, wherein they were well furthered by the examples of their Masters: neither might they ⁿ eat but in their presence and with their leaue, and that not of the choifest fare, but bread and cresses, whereto they added drinke from the next riuier. They planted in them a hatred of vices, especially of lying, and in the next place of debt, which cannot but be attended with much disquiet: and therefore wisely did Augustus command to buy him the pillow of a Roman Gentleman, that died incredibly indebted, as if there had therein rested some sleeping power, whereon one so much indebted could take any rest. Ingratitude was as little gratefull as the former, and by the Persian lawes, ingratefull persons were subiect to accusation and punishment, as not Xenophon only, but ^o Marcellinus also hath marked, howsoeuer Seneca ^p findes such a law only amongst the Macedonians, which perhaps was hence borrowed. They hated such as forsooke their friends and country-men in need. Their awfull respect to their parents was such, that they might not sit in the mothers presence without her leaue: the father had tyrannicall power ouer his children, for life and death. That which was vnto them vnlawfull in deed, was not permitted in obscene and filthy words to be spoken. Thus were the Noble-mens children brought vp neere the Pallace gates: and in the Prouinces neere the gates of the Deputies or Gouvernours.

For bodily exercise, they learned to shoot, to cast darts, to ride and manage vnruely hotses, & to fight on horse-back. And this was their education till 17. yeares of age: at which time they were of the second ranke of Springals & youths, & for ten yeares after did not repaire home at nights, but lay & abode in this Court or Colledge. When the King went on hunting, halfe of them attended him in armour. Their diet was the same, but somewhat larger, as is before related of the children: and in hunting, if it continued two daies, had but one daies allowance. They vsed to runne long races, of 30. or 40. furlongs; they exercised the sling, leaping, & wrestling, the King propounding rewards to the Victor. The help of these were vsed by the Magistrates against robbers, murtherers, and the like wicked persons: as also of the Men, which was the third order, the Seminary of Magistrates, and the souldiery of the Persians, till they were 50. yeares old or somewhat more, at which age they were freed from musters & forren employments, but at home were employed in publike & priuat iudgements. None might attaine this honor in Age, but by those degrees before expressed: nor might any haue that education but the children of the rich, which were able to beare the charge. It was vnlawfull amongst the Persians ^o to laugh in loud manner openly, or openly or by the way to doe the easements of nature by seege, vrine, or vomit: or to make water standing.

But this ancient Pertian discipline and sobrietie, with wealth and loosens were afterwards corrupted, especially in drinking; to repress which, the Kings made an order, Est. 1. that none should be compelled to forget their health, in remembring of healths or other Bacchanal deuises, wherof would God we had lesse cause to cōplaine. The vse of Harlots ^p were also added to their drinkings, which when the Embassadours, sent to Amyntas King of Macedon, to demand Earth and Water (which was the Persian custome when they exacted full subiection and possession) extended to Matrons, Alexander his sonne ^q sent yong men armed in womés habit amongst them, which quenched these hot flames of lust with their blood. Hence haply it was, that Assuerus would needs make shew of Vashti the Queene in his magnificent feast, which occasioned her deprivation and Esters succession. Amidst their cups they consulted of war and weightie affaires; but decreed not till afterwards. The Persians vsed bankettings vnder Aras hangings, before the time of Attalus, from whom the Romans first borrowed the vse of them, of his aula or hall hanged therewith, calling them aulae. But the walls of the richer Persians were hanged with them, the flores spread with costly carpets, their cubbords furnished with rich plate, their bodies shining with curious & costly ointments, their kitchins stored with garlike, as a preseruatiue against Serpents & venemous creatures, their chambers swarming with Concubines, yea mothers, daughters, and sisters, wedded and bedded with them: their second seruices called in Scripture The banquet of wine, when after the belly ful forced with meats, with which they drank water, they had other tables set with wine, on which they gaue a new onset, as a fresh enemy: these and the like excesses wold glut our Reader. To bring him to their mourning ^r rites in which they shaued themselves, their horses, & mules; their sackcloth, & not entring the courts: their covering the face of such as incurred the Kings anger, as we reade of Haman: their executions, with flaying, crucifying, burning, burying aliue, stoning, cutting asunder, &c. This pertaineth to their religion, their diuination by lots, as before Haman they, perhaps the Magi, cast Phur, that is, a lot from day to day, & from month to month, to see which would be the most lucky and fatall time for his mischieuous plot against the Jewes. Their mariages they celebrated in the Spring: & on their mariage day the husbands eat nothing but an apple, or the marrow of a Camel. The Persians are accounted authors of making ^t Eunuches, which ^t Petronius Arbitr & M. Seneca impute to the curiosity of their lust, which might thus be longer serued of them. paintings of their faces, long haire: of their kissing salutations if they were equall, and of the knee of the superiour by the inferiour, and adoration of the chiefe: of their womens womanly detestation in the eagerest degree of hatred and indignation, the singering of wooll: of their inhumane crueltie to the kindred of those which had committed some grievous crime, to punish all for the offence of one. The Persians made banquets to their Gods, and gaue them the first fruits thereof. But it is time to leaue their Gods and them; and let me obtaine pardon, that this great Monarchie, sometime stretching from India to Ethiopia in twelue Prouinces, hath stretched so far, and commanded me so long attendance in this Discourse. Let me now looke vpon the Mahumetan face thereof.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the alterations of the State and Religion in Persia, vnder the Saracens.

The Saracens (as is already shewed) a people bred, as it were, of putrefaction in that corrupt estate of the world, dispossessed of his state & life. Ormisdas the last Persian King. Their Religion had sustained small alteration in Persia before this time, for ought I finde, sauing what the Christian had in these partes preuailed, (which belongeth to another taske.) But from that time that the Saracens were Conquerours, the soules of the Persians haue no lesse benee subiect to those foolish Mahumetan superstitions, then their bodies to cruell slauerie: yea, the name of Persian was drowned in the title of Saracens. Hemar was then Caliph. But when Iezid the sonne of Muan was Priest and King (such are the Caliphs) of the Saracens; Mutar, the Deputie or Governour of Persia, proclaymed himselfe a Prophet, and seized on the State: from him the Persian Sophi deriueth his originall. When Iezid was dead, the Inhabitants of Cusa in Arabia proclaymed Hocem the sonne of Ali Caliph: but Abdalam the sonne of Iezid intrapped and slew him; and at his Sepulchre was after erected the Citie Carbala. This Hocem had twelue sonnes, Zeinal, Abadin, Zeinal Muamed, Bagner Muamed, Giafar Cadeneg, Ciafar Musa, Cazin Musa, Hali Macerat, Alle Muamed Taguin, Muamed Halmaguin, Alle Hacem Asquerin, Hacem Muamed Mahadin: This last^b the Persians say that he is not yet dead, but that he shall come sitting on a Horse, to preach their Law to all Nations: beginning in Massadalle where Ali his grandfather lieth buried. And therefore they haue there alway a Horse prepared ready, which in time of Diuine Seruice, on a certaine festiuall day, they bring with Lights burning to the Temple, in which Ali is buried, praying him to send his nephew quickly. That day is solemnely celebrated, with so great concourse of people, as a Portugall there present, said, he had neuer seene the like. The other eleuen brethren were buried in diuers places. To returne to Mutar; Abdimelec one of the following Caliphs, sent Ciafa against him, by whose ouerthrow that new Prophet wan new and greater estimation then before. But another Tyrant Abdala Zubir, arising amongst the Saracens, sent his brother Musub against Mutar, who slew Mutar, and was soone after slaine himselfe of Abdimelec, who recouered againe that Prouince of Persia. Abdimelec being dead, in the yeare seuen hundred and two and twentie, Gizid his sonne^c succeeded, and another Gizid vsurped the Scepter in Persia, but was ouerthrowne by Masabner the Captaine of Abdimelecs sonne.

a Curio Sara. hist. lib. 1. Blondus saith, that Mahumer was present at their first conquest, and that by his command they relinquished their name, & accepted the Saracen. dec. 1. l. 9. So also affirmeth Lope Obregon in consut. of the Alcaron. fol. 44. b Barr. Af. dec. 2. lib. 10. c. 6.

c Curio Sarac. hist. lib. 2.

In the reigne of Maruan, Asmulin tooke on him the protection of Mutars Sect, affirming Ali to be greater then Mahumet: he was Prince of the Corasens in Persia, and by one Catabanus his counsaile incited the seruants, by force or treacherie, to kill their Masters: and these being growne great by their Masters wealth, were diuided into two factions, the Caismi, and the Lamonites. Asmulin Captaine of the Lamonites destroyed the Caismi: and with his Lamonites, and Catabanus inuaded Persia, and were there encountred by Iblinus the Lieutenant, with an Armie of an hundred thousand men; but the Lamonites, by the encouragement of Asmulin and Catabanus, (whom they reckoned holy men) discomfited him and his; and after encountered Maruan himselfe with three hundred thousand men, and made him to flee with foure thousand into Egypt, where Salin the sonne of Asmulin overthrew him. Thus the Maruanian race being expelled (the reliques whereof settled themselves in Fesse and Spaine) Asmulin, from whom the family of the Sophi descendeth, with Catabanus reigned ouer the Saracens.

By this which hath been said, appeareth a continuall difference betwixt the Persians and other Saracens about their Religion; eyther (as some affirme) for that the Persians preferred Ali to Mahumet, or for that (which is more likely) they accounted Ali, and not any of the other three (Eubocar, Osman, or Homar) to be the true successor of Mahumet. The Sultans or Deputies of Persia, which gouerned there vnder the Caliph, vsed that their Schismaticall fancie, as they sawe occasion, to their owne ambitious designs, vnder colour of Religion. Among the rest Muamet or Mahumet is famous, who being hardly beset for the like cause by his Master, the Caliph of Bagadet, required ayde (as before is more largely shewed) of the Turkish Nation then wanding in part of Armenia, called of them Turcomania, who sent him for his succour three thousand Turks vnder the leading of Tangrolipix, by whose help Pisafiris the Califa was ouerthrowne. And after this he obtained both the Sultanship of Persia, in the yeare of our Lord, 1030. and also slew Pisafiris, and enioyed that soueraigntie: from thenceforth the Califa's of Bagadet being stripped of their temporalls, but retayning still the places of Patriarchs of their Religion (as some relate) euen to this day. But by the relations of Beniamin Tudalensis, and others, it appeareth that the Caliphas of Bagadet recouered their state till the Tartar dispossessed both the Turke and them, as wee haue already shewed out of Zachuthi, in our Historie of the Saracens. The Turkes thus possessing the Persian royaltie, and possessed of the Persian superstitions, there reigned one hundred and seuentie yeares, the Tartars then chasing them out of Persia. For after that Changis Can had founded that Empire, Hocota, or Occoda Can his successor, sent out his sonnes diuers wayes with diuers Armies, with intent to subdue the world: Iochi conquered Turquestan and Persia: and not long after Mango Can sent Haolon his brother, who continued and profecured the Tartarian Conquests beyond Phison or Tygris, subduing the whole Kingdome of the Persians, taking Baldach, with the great Chalifa, whom hee starued amidst his Treasure; beleagred a Castle of the Assassini, with a siege of seuen and twentie yeares; and then taking the same by composition of the defendants, onely for want of clothing: he wanne Aleppo, and the Kingdome of Syria, with Damascus the head Citie thereof: and had intended also the Conquest of the Holy Land from the Saracens, if hee had liued; for this Haolon and Mango the great Can were both Christians by perswasion of Aithon the Armenian King.

About this time in the North-East parts of Persia (which of this new heresie they called Mulebet) there was an olde man, named Aloadin, a Mahumetan (as all those partes then were) which had inclosed a goodly valley, situate betwene two hills, and furnished it with all varietie, which Nature and Art could yeeld, as fruits, pictures, rills of milke, wine, honey, water, pallaces, and beautifull damosells richly attired, and called it Paradise; to which was no passage, but by an impregnable Castle. And daylie preaching the pleasures of this Paradise to the youths which he kept in his Court, sometimes he would minister a sleepe drinke to some of them, and then conueigh them thither; where being entertained with these pleasures foure or fise dayes, they supposed themselves rapt into Paradise. And then being againe cast into a traunce by the said drinke, he caused them to be carried forth; and then would examine them of what they had seene, and by this delusion would make them resolute for any enterprise, which he should appoint them; as to murder any Prince, his enemy. For they feared not death, in hope of their Mahumeticall Paradise. But this Haolon or Ylan, after three yeares siege, destroyed him, and this his Fooles Paradise. Some tell this of Aladeules in the time of Zelim the first. Abaga succeeded him in the gouernment of these partes, Anno 1264. but not in the Christian religion: Tangodor the next, became a Saracen, and called himselfe Mahomet, and at Tauris and other places destroyed the Churches

Churches of the Christians, as Haolon had done of the Saracens: he banished the Christians, and perverted as many Tartars as he could to Mahumetisme. But Argonus the sonne of Abaga rebelled, and taking him, cut him asunder in the middle, succeeding in his place, Anno 1285. After him Regayto, whom the Tartars slew, placing in his stead Baydo a Christian, who forbad the preaching of Mahumetisme among the Tartars, and reedified the Churches of the Christians: Casan succeeded in his Dominion and Deuotion: and after his death Carbaganda, who in his childehood had beene bapri- zed, and named Nicholas, but when his Christian mother was dead, hee became a Sa- racen.

Thus farre out of Haithonus; in which History appeareth the vicissitude of diuers Religions, sometime Tartarian, sometime Christian, sometime Mahumetan, as in the Princes who gouerned these Countries vnder the great Cham or Can of the Tartars: so also no doubt in a great part of the countries themselues, which vsually are of the kings religion. This Carbaganda, reigning about 1305, is the last Tartar Prince which ruled in these parts; for as their religion, so also their Empire failed; the Egyptian Soldans preuailing in Syria; the Ottoman Turkes, in Asia; and Gempfas, in Persia. This Gempfas was Soldan of the Parthians: and about the yeare 1350, restored that Persian Kingdome to the Parthians. From him descended the^m Persian Kings to Malaenchres, who being taken away by fraude, Vjun Cassan succeeded. Yet was not the Persian state so settled in Gempfa his posteritie, but that great Tamerlaine subdued the same vnto him- selfe, which his sonne after lost againe.

m Peucerus l. 4. & 5.

Vjuncassan (called also Assymbeius) deprived the Sultan of Parthia and Persia of his life and kingdome: his name is by some Malaonchres; by others, Demir: but Ambrosio Contarini, and Iosapha Barbaro (which both were in Persia with Vjuncassan) call him Iansa. In the yeare 1478, died Vjuncassan; and his sonne Iacob succeeded, whose wife, bea- ring dishonest affection to one of the Court, sought by the murder of her husband to aduance this Courtier to her husbands bed and Empire. Andⁿ hauing conueyed ve- nime into a golden Cup, presents her husband the same to drinke, who somewhat sus- pecting her, caused her to begin; himselfe and his sonne following her both in drink- ing and dying. And thus was Persia, by the wickednesse of one woman, made the stage of ciuill warres, whiles the chiefe Nobles sought each to possesse himselfe of the state, which at last, after fise or fixe yeares warre, befell to Alumut or Eluan-beg, then being but fourteene yeares olde, who was slaine by Ismael in the yeare 1499.

This last yeare 1613, was printed at Paris, a large French volume of the Estates, Em- pires and Principalities of the World, in which is an abridgement of the Historie of the kings of Persia, written by Tarik Mirkond a Persian, and translated by a Portugall, from Cyrus to our times: wherein he relateth of the auncient Persian Dynasties, some- what otherwise then the Greekes and Latines: to which after Izdegird, whom he cal- leth Yazd Gerd, he annexeth the succession of the Califs which ruled Persia, in this or- der. Abubakar, Homar, Osman or Otman, Morts Aly, Acen, after whom the family which he termeth Ben Humya, of which were successiuely, Mawya, Yezid, Mawya 2. Marwan, Abdel Malek, Oelid, Soleyman, Hamar, Yezid 2. Ochon, Oeleyd 2. Yezid 3. Ebrahim, Marwan 2. Ganiarukhan, Budukhan, Gazunkhan, Alyapukhan, who after was called Sultan Hamed, Sulton Abuzayd Bahader Khan. After whom follow the Mogol Tartars (fifty yeares being omitted without name) Teymurlang, Mirzah Karok, Ologhbek, Mirzah Abdeltife, Mirzah Abdula, Mirzah Sulton Abusayd, who raigned in Maurenahar, Mirzah Sulton Hamed, Mirzah Babor: Then in Karason, Mirzah Hyadigar, Mirzah Sulton Ocen, Bahady or Pedy Azamon, and his brother Muzapha: These raigned from the yeare 1388. to 1509. In which meane time there were of the Turcoman Nation which commanded other parts of Persia, first Kara Issuf of the family Karakasyon, who began his raigne anno 1413. to whom succeeded Amir Scandar, Iooncha, Acen Aly, and after him, of the family Akyonlu, Ozun Acenbek, Sulton Ralil, Tacub Bek Baysangor, Mirzah, Roftambek, Hagmet Bek, Alwan Bek, Morad Bek; which through mutuall quarrels enjoyed the Throne a small space. And in the yeare 1501. Cha Ismael Sophy, and his line succeeded, and still continue. Howsoever the Chalis is here expressed as Lords of Persia, yet Beniamin Tudelensis telleth that Senigar then King of Persia, had two and fortie Kingdomes subiect to him, and that his Dominion extended foure moneths iorney, and speaketh as though he were not subiect to the Caliph in his temporalities: M. Polo reckons eight Kingdomes of Persia, Casbin, Curdistan, Lor, Suolistan, Spaan, Siras, Soncaia, Timocaim; not reckoning Hirak, the chiefe Citie whereof was Tauris, and diuers other Countries now, and before his time subiect to the Persian. And by most Historians it appeareth that Persia had before the dayes of Tangrolopix, and till the Tartars conquest, Sultans which yeilded small subiection to the Chaliph:

The historie of Ismael, because it giueth much light both into the state and religion of Persia, is more fully to be reported. After that Mustacen Mumbila, or Almunstacenbila Abdula, the Chaliph of Bagdet, had bene by the Tarrars done to death, in the yeare after Hairthomus account 1258. (about the yeare 1369.) there arose in Persia a Noble man called Sophi, Lord of the Citie Ardouil, reporting himselfe to be of the bloud of Alle or Hali, descended from Musa Cazin, or Cersin one of the twelue sonnes (as is said) of Hocem, thirteene descents distant. This Sophi, or (as our Tarik Mirkond afore said calls him Cheque Sasy) had issue Cheque Mucha, the father of Cheque Aly, who begate Cheque Ebrahim, and he Sultan Inueyd, father of Cheque Aydar, who begate Ismael. These continued their Hali-holies. Our Autho: mention none from Sophi to Inueyd, whom they make his sonne, calling him Guinne, otherwise written, Giuni, Guine, and Giuner. Minadoi saith, That Sexchimi, or more distinctly, Sciec Giuner, was Author of the Persian Sect, who vnder the name of Sofi, and of Siec (that is, of a wise man, and an Author of Religion) or rather vnder the pretence of holinesse, began to perswade the people, that the three first successors of Mahomet were vsurpers, onely Ali ought to be named lawfull successor, and ought to be called vpon in their prayers, and by all meanes to be honoured. From this time forward the Sepulchre of Ali and his sonnes in Cafe grew in great credite, and was visited euery yeare after the same sort that the Turks visit the Sepulchre of the other three: and the kings of Persia vsed there to be crowned, and girt with their sword, & their great Calife there kept his residence. Because this Cafe was neere Babylon, hence grew the common error, that these things were done at Babylon or Bagdet. Iomius also is deceiued, where he maketh Ardnelle or Aidere, author of the Persian faction. Sofi is by Minadoi deriued of Sofiti: a people subdued by Alexander: but Scaliger more fitly Tzophi, which in Arabike signifieth a man of pure Religion. In this respect there is no lesse contention betweene these and other Muhammedans, then between the Samaritans & the Iewes: so that the Persians are a kinde of Catharists or Puritans in their impure Muhammedrie. Claude Duret mentioneth another Etymologie, that Sophi signifieth wooll, and that this profession in token of humility, wearing nothing on their heads more pretious then wooll, were so called. But the former deriuation is more probable. Nic. Nicolai in his third booke hath also that woollen deriuation: and Geffrey Ducket saith, that Sophi signifieth a Begger, and that the King is not there in Persia so called, but Shaugb; which agreeth with their report, which say that Ismael renewed or continued the name Sofi or Sofiti: but his successours leauing that, and the name of Siec, haue retained onely the title of Saba, which some write Shaugb, some Xa, a royall title communicated by the head head of this superstition to those Kings which participate with them therein. Ioseph Scaliger saith, that Sa or Scha is the same with Monsieur among the French, and Don among the Spaniards. The Jewes and Arabians write it פשוט, and the Grecians σαχ. It is sometimes set before the name, as in the present King Scha Habas; sometime comes after, as Melixa for Melic-seha. Barrinus begins this pedigree at the father of Ginnet, or Guine (so he calls him) and not as Minadoi, with Guinet himselfe. He addeth, That for the Ensigne, Character, or Cognisance of his Sect, he ordained, that in the midst of their Turbant (which they weare with many folds) there should arise a sharpe top, in manner of a Pyramis, diuided into twelue parts (in remembrance of Ali his twelue sonnes) from the top to the bottome. They vsed the colour red on their heads (saith Minadoi) by ordinance of Arduelle, and therefore were called Cheselbas, that is, Red-heads; some write it Cuselbas. Sophi, as Mirkond affirmeth, was holden in such reputation of holinesse by Tamerlane, that he came to visit him as a Saint; and at his request, set free 30000. slaves, which he had taken in the wars against Baiazer, to whom Cheque Sophi gaue apparell and other necessaries, and sent them home to their houses: whereby he wanne great fame and affection. Barrinus and others attribute this to Guine, and say that these slaves became his disciples first, and after souldiers to his sonne Aidar against the Christian Georgians.

This Aidar Erdebil (or after Iouius, Harduelles) forsaking (as some say) the world, led a streight life in continencie and austeritie, and was therefore admired as a Prophet, and resorted to out of all parts of Armenia and Persia comming to Tauris to see him: He inueighed against the common opinion concerning Mahomets successors, as Guine and Sophi had done, shutting vp heauen to all, sauing Hali his followers. For so the Persians vse to say in their prayers; Cursed be Ebubeker, Omar, and Osman: God be fauourable to Hali, and well pleased with him. Vsuncaffan moued with his fame, gaue him in marriage his daughter Martha begot of the Christian Lady Despina, daughter of Calo Ioannes Emperour of Trapezond; both of them by this alliance strengthening themselves against the Turke. Aider had by this Martha, Ismael, whom shee trained vp in the principles of Christian Religion. Jacob, successor of Vsuncaffan, zealous of the multitude of Aiders disciples, and the greatnesse of his fame, caused him to be secretly murdered; persecuting all his professed followers with fire and sword. Ismael then a childe, fled into Hircania to one Pyrchales, a friend of his fathers, who afterwards aided him to the recouering of his patrimonie. Boterus saith, that Jacob, after the murder of Aidar, committed his two sonnes, Ismael and Solyman, to Amanzar (a Captaine of his) to be conueied to Zalga, a strong mountajny place: but he brought them vp liberally with his owne children, and in his last sicknesse, gaue them horse and two hundred ducats, with aduice to repaire to their mother; where taking vpon him the protection of the sect of Hali, and the reuenge of his fathers death, his enterprises succeeded prosperously. Giovan Maria Angioloello saith, that Jacob being poisoned 1485. the seignorie was possessed by a kinsman of Jacobs called Inlauer, after whose 3. yeeres raigne succeeded Baysingir two yeeres; after, Rustan seuen yeeres, who sent Solimanebec against Sechaidar the father of Ismael, who made challenge to the State in right of his wife the daughter of Vsuncaffan, who slew him in the field. Rustan would also haue killed the mother and her sonnes, had not intreatie of his Nobles preuented it: He committed them to ward in the Island of the Armenians in the lake Astumar; whether he sent for them againe after three yeeres; but they for feare fled to Ardouill, and there liued closely for a time. Rustan was slaine by Agmat through his mothers procurement, who loued that Agmat, who abode Sultan five months, and was slaine by Rustans souldiers. And Aluan the kinsman of Vsuncaffan was Seignior, whom Ismael slew.

A certaine Merchant who abode a long time in Tauris, and trauelled thorow the most part of Persia (skilfull of the Turkish, Persian, and Arabian languages, either seeing himselfe, or learning of them which did see) in the time of Ismael, relates this Historie som what otherwise, whom, as learning of the Persians themselves the Persian affaires, we may reckon worthy to be followed, saith, that this Sechaidar in Ardouill was the head of this Sophian Sect, and had three sons and three daughters by the daughter of Vsuncaffan. Hee was a zealousemie against the Christians, oftentimes with his followers repairing into Circassia, doing the people much damage, which when in the daies of Sultan Alumut he attempted as before times, he was by Alumut's order forbidden at Darbent further passage: but seeking to make way by force, hee was by the forces of Alumut taken, and his head, on the top of a lance, presented to Alumut, and by his command, giuen to the dogges to be eaten; the cause why the Sophians are such enemies vnto dogges, killing all they finde. This newes comming to Ardouill, his three sonnes fled, one into Natolia, another to Aleppo, Ismael the third to an Iland in the lake of Van, in which is a citie of Christian Armenians, where hee abode foure yeeres in the house of an Armenian Priest, being then about thirteene yeeres old, who vsed him courteously, and instructed him in the rudiments of Christian Religion. A yeere after he went from Arminig to Chillan, where he kept with a Goldsmith his fathers friend. In this time he had intelligence, by mutuall writing, with his friends at Ardouill: and with this Goldsmith hauing gathered together eighteene or twentie men of their Sect secretly to take a strong castle, called Maumutaga, and hidden in ambush two hundred horsemen of his friends in Ardouill, suddenly slaying the gard, and possessing himselfe of the Castle, he entred a Towne not farre from the Castle, killing the inhabitants, and carrying the spoile to the Castle. This Castle was very rich, because it was a principall Hauen of the Caspian Sea; and so strong, that when Alumut had newes heereof, he was dissuaded from sending any power thither to besiege him. Two daies iourney from hence is Sumachi: which with his power, now encreased, he also tooke, and diuided the spoiles euery where to his souldiers, which with fame of this liberalitie came from all parts vnto him. He sent also into Hiberia, three or foure daies iourney from thence, which was then gouerned by seuen great Lords, three of which, Alexander Sbee, Gorgurambec, and Mirzambec, with many promises of present spoiles and future exemptions from tribute, he wonne to his side, receiuing from each of them three thousand horse, so that he was now growne fiftene or sixteene thousand strong. Alumut with thirtie thousand valiant souldiers went to meet him betweene Tauris and Sumachia, and hauing passed a great riuer, ouer which were two Bridges, hee presently caused them to be broken: Ismael arriuing there the next day, with great diligence found a passage thorow the streame, and with his whole forces, in front, in the breake of the day, assailed Alumut's armie, little suspecting such a good morrow, that Alumut with a few companions hardly escaped. The paulions, horses, and other bootie, Ismael bestowed on his souldiers: and then hasted to Tauris, where entring without resistance, he made great slaughter, killing all the race of Iacob, opening his Sepulchre, and the Graues of other Noblemen, which had beene at the battle of Darbent against his father, and burning their bones; 300. harlots hee caused to be cut asunder in the middle: he killed all the dogges in Tauris, and because his mother had married to one of those Nobles which were in the battle of Darbent, he caused her head to be stricken off in his presence. In this while many Townes, Cities, Castles, and Lords submitted themselues to him, and ware his red-coloured Turbant: but the Castle Alangiachana (whereto were subiect eighteene villages of Christians, which vsed yeerely to send to Rome two men from the Patriarch to the Pope, of whose faith they were, speaking Armenian, hauing some bookes, but quite lost the vse of the Italian language) this Castle (I say) held out for Alumut vntill his death.

While Ismael was Sultan in Tauris, the Sultan in Bagadet Murat Can son of Iacob, with an army of 30000. marched against him, and in a plaine meeting with Ismael was there ouerthrowne, not 70. persons escaping to Bagadet with Murat Can: the place bearing witness of the slaughter, buried vnder many new hills of bones. All these things were done Anno 1499. And while I was in Tauris, many came from Natolia, Caramania, and Turkie to serue him; of whom they were graciously entertained. An. 1507. our Author being then in Malacia, saw with his eyes, the Sultan Alumut conueied prisoner by Amirbec, who with foure thousand men going from Mosul (sometime Niuiue) to Amit, where the Sultan kept, with promise and profession of his succor, being admitted the citie, tooke him, and cast a chaine about his necke, whose head Ismael smot off with his owne hands. He was presented to him by Amirbes in the country of Aladali, duli, against whom Ismael was now warring: where taking the citie Cattibirt, he cut off the head of Becarbec sonne of Aladuli Lord thereof with his owne hands. From thence returning to Tauris he had almost done as much to his two brethren, whom he had left Gouvernours in his absence, for transgressing their Commission, but with much intreatie of his Lords, spared their lues, yet confined them to Ardouill, not to depart from thence. The next yeere he pursued Murat Can, who was come to Syras, a Citie not inferiour to Cairo in Egypt, with six and thirtie thousand men, but male-content, and therefore many of them fleeing vnto Ismael. Whereupon Murat Can sent two Embassadours with five hundred followers, with offer of Vassallage vnto him; Ismael cut them all in peeces, saying, That if Murat Can would be his Vassall, hee should come in person, not by Embassage. Murat Can had closely sent Spies to obserue the sequle of his businesse, and being heereof by them aduertised, fled: For many of his Nobles had already put on the red Turbant, of whom hee feared to bee taken, as Alumut had beene; and therefore with three thousand of his most faithfull hee fled vnto Aleppo: but the Soldan of Cairo not admitting him, hee went to Aladuli, who entertained him honourably, and gaue him his daughter to wife.

Ismael, after great slaughters in Siras and Bagadet, was forced to returne to Spaan with his Armie. For Ieselbas the Tartar had taken all the Countrey of Corasan, and the great Citie of Eri, which is in compasse betwixt fortie and fiftie miles, well peopled; and full of Marchandize: Hee had taken also Straua, Amixandaran, and Sari, on the Caspian shore; and with intent to beguile Ismael, desired leaue to passe thorow his Countrey to Mecca on Pilgrimage. Ismael with deniall, and other sharpe words; repelled his suit, and abode a yeere in Spaan, to withstand his enterprises. After hee returned to Tauris, where were great Triumphs solemnized in his honour. This Sophi is so loued and feared (saith this Marchant) that they hold him as a God; especially his souldiers: of which, soine goe into the warres without Armour, holding it sufficient, that Ismael will succour them: others, because they content themselves to die for Ismael, goe into battaile with naked breast, crying, Schiack, Schiack, i. God, God. And they forget the name of God, alway naming Ismael: they hold, That he shall not die, but liue euer. And where other Mosulmans say, La ylla yllala, Mahamet resullalla; the Persians say, La ylla yllala, Ismael vellalalla; reputing him a God and a Prophet. I haue learned, that Ismael is not contented to be called or worshipped as God. Their custome is to weare red Bonnets, with a certaine thing like a girdle, large below, and straiter vpwards, made with twelue folds, a finger thicke, signifying the twelue Sacraments of their Sect, or those twelue brethren, nephewes of Ali. Ismael was of faire countenance, of reasonable stature, thicke and large in the shoulders, shauen all but the mustaches; left-handed, stronger then any of his Nobles, but giuen to Sodomie. At his second comming to Tauris, he caused to take twelue of the fairest boies in the Citie to serue his lust, and after gaue to each of his Nobles one for the like purpose, and before tooke ten of the best mens sonnes for the same intent.

Thus farre haue wee had commerce with this namelesse Persian Marchant in Ramusius his shoppe, who sometime attended on his Court and Campe. Others adde heereunto, That he sent Embassadours to all the Mahumetan Princes of the East, to receiue that redde-Hat Ensigne, together with his Sect; as did his sonne Tammaz after him, when Nizzamulucco onely accepted thereof. But it is the common opinion, that the greatest part of the Mahumerans in Soria and of Asia Minor are secretly of that Sect. Ismael after this warred, and wonne, vpon the Zagatai Tartars, and other adiacent Nations, that he left vnto his successours a very great Estate, reaching from the Caspian Sea to the Persian; and betweene the Lake Iocco and Tigris, the Riuier Abdiam, and the Kingdome of Cambaya, more then twentie degrees from East to West, and eighteene from North to South. Hee ordained a new Lyturgie, and forme of Praier, differing from the ancient. Such was his authoritie, that they would sweare, By the Head of Ismael, and blesse in his name, saying, Ismael grant thee thy desire. Vpon his Coyne, on the one side, was written, La illabe illalahn Muhamedun resulallabe: And on the other, Ismaill balife lullabe, that is, Ismael the Vicar of God.

The Jewes, at the first, had this Ismael in such admiration, that they foolishly reckoned Ismael to be their promised Messias, gratulating themselves, in this conceit, throughout the most part of Europe, celebrating festiuall Solemnities, with mutuall Presents, in testimonie of their ioy; which yet was soone dashed, none hating the Jewes more then Ismael. He lieth buried at Ardouil, in a faire Meskit, with a sumptuous Sepulchre made by himselfe in his life time; where is a faire Stone-Hospitall erected by him for strangers, allowing to all trauellers three daies reliefe for horse and man freely. Ardouil is in latitude 38. degrees.

The life of Ismael had bene answerable to the bloudie presages in his ominous birth; for he came forth of his mothers wombe with both his hands shut, and full of blood: for which cause his father would not haue brought him vp, but commanded him to be slaine: but they which carried him away, moued with compassion, secretly nourished him three yeeres, and after presented him to his father, who then acknowledged and receiued him with loue and kindnesse: for this his bloudie and ware-like spirit dwelt in a louely and amiable body, adorned with all the Ensignes of beautie. He died Anno 1524.

Schiach Thecmes, or Shaugh Tamas, succeeded, and raigned about fiftie yeeres. He liued deuoutly, and yet (for their Law reconcileth both) very voluptuously, inheriting his fathers Throne, but not his valour, and spending the greatest part of his time amongst his women. So zealous he was of their superstition, that when M. Ienkinson came to his Court with the Queenes Letters to treat with him of Traffique and Commerce for our English Marchants, before his feet touched the ground, a paire of the Sophies owne Shooes or Basinackes (such as himselfe vsed to weare, when he arose in the night to pray) were put vpon his feet, lest their holy ground should be polluted with Christian steps. And being admitted into his presence, and asked of his Religion, Whether he were a Gower, that is, an Vnbeleueer, or a Muselman, (so they call them of their owne profession) hauing answered, that he was a Christian, beleueing Christ to be the greatest Prophet: Oh thou vnbeleueer (said he) wee haue no need to haue friendship with the vnbeleueers, and so willed him to depart: which he did, and after him followed a man with a Basinet of Sand, lifting all the way that he had gone within the said Pallace, cuen from the Sophies sight vnto the Court gate.

Lib. 3. cap. 8.

In his time Solyman (as in our Turkish Relations before is shewed) much endamaged the Persians, and tooke Babylonia, Tauris, and other parts of their dominions: yet did Tamas recover some part thereof againe, and draue Solyman out of Tauris, (or Ecbatana, as Minadoi interpreteth) and, by a composition, caused him to raise the Fort of Chars, erected by the Turkes in his frontiers. Hee died the eleventh of May, 1576. leauing behinde him eleuen children: Mahamet the eldest, who had liued a while in Heri (sometime called Aria) and after in Siras (anciently named Persepolis;) his second sonne was Ismael, whom for his fiercenesse his father had confined to the Castle Cahaca: the third, Aidere; the rest, Mamut, Solimano, Mustaffa, Emanguli, Alichan, Amet, Abraham, and Ismael the younger. Hee appointed his second sonne Ismael his successour, esteeming him more worthie then Mahamet Codabanda (this surname was giuen him for his diseased eies*) as being giuen to a studious and quiet life, and contenting himselfe, that Abas Mirize (which now raigneth) was confirmed in the Citie of Heri, and honoured with the title of the Visier of that Country.

* Others say, blinde: Mirkoud and Sir A. S.

Periaconcona, the daughter of Tamas, and elder then any of the brethren, being in Commission with other Counsellors of State to see her fathers Will executed, whiles the Posts raune with aduertisements to Ismael, was attempted by Aidere with earnest solicitation for the Crowne: whose ambitious desire shee so farre satisfied, as that shee caused him to be inuested in Regall apparrell, and settled in the great Gallerie, attending the acclamation of the people; being publickly installed, as though he were elected King. But meane while shee set sure gards of men, deuoted to Ismael, at the gates of the Palace; thus purposing to entertaine him (with dreames of dangerous honours) till Ismael arrived at Casbin. But whiles he (suspecting the deceit) sought to flee, he left his head behinde in the hands of Sahamal his vncle, which he cast, all-bloudie, in the middelt of his conspiring partakers. Ismahel soone after came, and receiued with publike applause the desired Soueraignty: and as he had before addicted himselfe to the studie of the Turkish Law; (enough, if it had been knowne, to haue barred his succession) so now, after the Turkish manner, he foundeth his Throne (a foundation too slipperie to stand) in blood, causing the heads of his eight yonger brethren to be cut off, together with all such as were nere them in blood or affinitie; and all the fauourites of the late slaine Aidere. Thus is Casbin dyed in the blood of her hopefull Gallants, and entertaines her beholders eyes with streames of blood running from the slaine, which cause another streame of teares to issue from their liuing friends; who filling the ayre with mournfull complaints (which returning answere by ecchoes, seemed to sympathize their griefe) and in compassion of those dying bodies, then gasping their fatall breaths, imitating (with true affection, and not affected imitation) the same in deepe and broken sighes: viewing also their owne dangers in the present ruine of their neereft and deereft some-time allies and acquaintance: tossed with this varietie of turbulent passions, conceiue, in this confusion of thoughts (that which is truely the daughter and mother also of confusion) Treacherous Disloyaltie to the author of these their sorrowes. Ismahel posting on to his owne destruction, had now forbidden the deuotions of Aly the Persian Prophet, and enioyned the Turkish Rites of Abubar, and other the followers of Mahomet, by imprisoning, rayling, pulling out the eyes, and killing Aly his obseruants, establishing his Decree, not sparing; in this persecution, to torment the tender Ladies (some of them of his owne blood) nor reuerencing age or profession, depriuing euen the Calisse of Casbin (the eye of their blindness) of both his eyes, because hee would not see equitie in this noueltie; and purposing (as the Fame went) to go to Bagdat, there to receiue the Crowne from him whomsoever he should finde the successour of the great Calisse, in the middelt of his cruelties he was (with like crueltie) murdered by Periaconcona. The Executioner of her fathers Will is thus made an Executioner of her fathers sonne, hauing brought in the conspirators, apparrelled in womens weeds, to strangle him among his Paramours. This was done the foure and twentieth of Nouember 1577. after he had reigned one yeare, seuen moneths, and sixe dayes. Mahamet Codabanda thought it now time for him to looke to his right, which by meanes of Mirize Salmas, the chiefe of the Sultans, he obtained. This Sultan presented him with the head of that Virago Periaconcona vpon the top of a Lauce, with the disheuelled haire, gally lookes, and bloudie impressions, yeelding an vncouth (though not vnderseuered) spectacle to the beholders: which (if like the Snake scalp of Medusa it did not transforme them into stones, yet, as if it had bene the banner of Megara) seemed to display new quarrels, kindling inward hatreds, tumultuous seditions, and ciuill broyles, which exposed them to Amn-raths forces, who thought it fit time for him to fish with his Turkish Nets in this troubled Persian streame. Of these warres is already spoken. ^a Much losse did the Persians by this meanes sustaine, and much more had followed, had not Emir Hamze, Mahomets eldest sonne, with his valorous attempts, stopped the Turkish proceedings, and, like the Easterne Sunne, with his greater brightnesse disperfed those weaker beames of The Moonie Standards of proud Ottoman.

But soone was this Sunne eclipsed, not by the Moones interposition (for that is naturall, if we vnderstand it of the heauenly; and ordinary, if of the earthly and Turkish) but by extraordinary and vnnaturall procurement (as was thought) of his ambitious brother Abas, or of others suspected of his father, effected by a treacherous Eunuch that guarded him, which suddenly stricke him thorow the bodie and slew him. Abas his brother by solemne oath cleared himselfe of this odious imputation. And yet he is no lesse suspected of a more monstrous and vnnaturall treacherie against his owne father, who is thought ^b to bee poysoned by his meanes, that by these bloudie steppes hee might ascend to that Throne which now he enioyeth. But (all this notwithstanding) he hath since so subtilly handled the matter, that he is both beloued of his owne, and feared of his enemy: his subjects sweare and blesse in his name. ^c He hath recouered from the Turke both Tauris, and other Regions of Servania and Georgia, which the Turke had before taken from the Persians. Hee was reported also to haue taken

Bagdat, but (it seemeth) not truely. Iansonius d in his Newes 1610, reporteth of diuers victories obtained by him against the Turke (which caused publike Fasts and supplications to be appointed at Constantinople): and of the Persian Embassage, with rich Presents and holy Reliques to the Emperour at Prague. Gotardus Arthus likewise in his e Gallobelgicus of the last Mart, relateth of Abas his Embassage to Constantinople about a Peace: but when his Embassadour returned with Articles, whereby the Persian was bound, vnder shew of gifts, to pay an annuall tribute to the Sultan, he therefore put him to death; putting out the eyes also, and cutting of the hands of the Turkish Embassadour which was sent with him. Of Bagdat and old Babylon we haue spoken elsewhere: let this be heere added out of Balbi f, that traouelling from Felugia to Bagdat, which hee reckoneth a daies iourney and a halfe, one whole daies iourney thereof, was by one side of the ruines of Babylon, which he left on the left hand. 20.
 As for Tauris, in the year 1514. Selim tooke it (as some say) on composition, which he brake, and carried thence three thousand of the best Artificers to Constantinople. Anno 1535. Solyman gaue it for a prey to his souldiers; Anno 1585. Osman spoiled it with vncouth and inhumane cruelties; whatsoeuer the insulting Conqueror, in the vtmost extent of lawlesse lust, could inflit, or the afflicted condition of the conquered could in the most dejected state of miserie sustaine, was there executed. Abas in recouerie hereof vsed the Canon, an Instrument which before they had, to their owne losse, scorned: This Prince is (saith our g Author) excellent both of composition of bodie, and disposition of minde, of indifferent stature, sterne countenance, piercing eyes, swart colour, his mustachees on the vpper lippe long, his beard cut close to the chinne. He delights in Hunting and Hawking, Running, Leaping, and trying of Masteries: He is an excellent Horse-man and Archer. In the morning he vseth to visit his stables of great Horses, and hauing there spent most of the fore-noone, he returns to his Pallace: About three of the clocke in the afternoone he goeth to the At-Maidan, which is the high street of Hispaan, the Citie of his residence, round about which are scaffolds for the people, to sit and behold the King and his Nobles at their Exercises of Shooting, Running, Playing at Tennis, &c. all on horse-backe. In this place very often, in his owne person, he heareth causes, and pronounceth sentence, executing Iustice seuerely.

Now that we may mention some of the chiefe Cities of Persia (vnder which name I heere comprehend, as vsually in this Historie, their b Dominion, not as it is measured by the Pens of Geographers, but by the Swords of their Princes.) In Sumachia Master Cartwright saith, They saw the ruines of a cruell spectacle, which was a Turret erected with Free-stone and Flints, in the midst whereof were placed the heads of all the Nobilitie and Gentry of the Countrey. A mile from this Towne was a Nunnerie, wherein was buried the bodie of Amaleke Canna, the Kings daughter, who slew her selfe with a knife, for that her father would haue forced her to marrie a Tartarian Prince: the Virgins of the Countrey resort hither once a yeare to lament her death. Sechi is foure dayes iourney thence, not farre from which is Eres, which, because they yeilded to the Turk, were by Emir-Hamze viterly destroyed, man, woman, and child. Arasse is the chiefe Citie of Merchandize in all Seruania, especially for raw Silkes. Tauris hath out-liued many deaths, and is very rich by reason of continuall Trade, nourishing almost two hundred thousand people within her compasse; for walls, it hath i not. This was sometime the Seat-Royall, and after that, Casbin, which is situate in a fertile Plaine, foure dayes iourney in length, wherein are two thousand Villages. The buildings are of Bricke dried in the Sunne, as in Persia is most vsuall: The At-Maidan, or chiefe street, is foure-square, almost a mile in circuit. Neere to it is Ardouil, of chiefe note for beginning of the Sophian Superstition. Geilan is foure dayes iourney from Casbin, and stands neere to the Caspian Sea. Neere to Bachu is a Fountaine of blacke oyle; which serueth all the Countrey to burne in their houses. Cassan is well feared, and rich in Merchandize, but subiect to heat more then other parts of Persia. No person is there permitted to be idle. Hispaan is thought by some to be Hecatompolis: the walls are a dayes iourney about on horse-backe; before the greatest, now the Royall Citie of the Persians. It hath a strong Fort, two Seraglio's, the walls whereof glister with red red Marble and Parget of diuers colours, paved all with Mofaique worke, all things else combining Maiestic and Louelineffe, Magnificence and Beautie. The inhabitants, as did the ancient Parthians (whose chiefe Citie it sometime hath beene) buy, sell, talk, and performe all their publike and priuate affaires on horse-backe: the Gentlemen neuer goe on foot. Sierasis thought to be Persepolis, it is rich of Trade, and there is the best armour made in all the East, of Iron and Steele, cunningly tempered with the iuice of certaine herbes. The Government of this State in Warre and Peace, I leaue to others.

AN APPENDIX TOVCHING THE PRESENT
Persian King, out of Sir ANTHONY SHERLEY.

HAuing thus followed the currant of Authors in these Relations of Persia: there hath since our former Edition beene published the Trauells of Sir Anthony Sherley into these parts (with Sir Robert Sherley his brother) penned by himselfe: with some extracts whereof to furnish this Chapter (alreadie tedious) as with a second seruice after a full stomacke, will (I hope) renue appetite, with the varietie (so farre fetched and so deare bought) howsoeuer before cloyed with fulnesse: To let passe therefore those worthie Brethren (Worthies indeed in this kinde, beyond the reach and worth of my blurring praise, and eclipsing commendations) and to come to their Trauell and obseruation. Hauing passed not without manifold dangers to Aleppo: and thence to Birt, and so downe Euphrates: by the way they aduentured to see the campe of Ahorisc King of the Arabs inhabiting the deserts of Mesopotamia, a poore King with ten or twelue thousand beggerly subiects, liuing in tents of blacke haire-cloath, well gouerned. They came to Bagdat, which is wholly on the other side of Tygris, except one Suburb in the Peninsula, to which men passe by a bridge of boats, euery night dissolued for feare of the Arabs, or stormes: whence through the bountie of an Italian Merchant, Sr Vittorio Speciero, they escaped (for they were not vn suspected) with a Carauan of Persian Pilgrims which came from Mecca. Thirtie daies they were on the way to the Confines: and fiftene from thence to Casbin, where they stayed a moneth attending the Kings arriual; being in the meane time well vsed, vpon conceit that the King would like well of their comming: the people otherwise are ill in themselves, and onely good by example of their King, and strict obedience to him. For of the ancient Persians there are few, these being the posteritie of those which haue beene here seated by the transplantations of Tamerlane and Ismael (not to mention any more ancient) out of other Countries.

b This King was a Saniack of the Turke; whereas they on the West-side of the Riuer in an huge extent and infinit numbers, roue, and rob all: the Turke keeping against them fiftene hundred Ianiz. at Damasco, and twelue thousand at Cairo. Old Babylon is North from Bagdat about fise and twentie mile.

The King himselfe by our Authors relation, in his vertues and gouernment, is, as if some Philosopher should discourse of what shoud be, rather then an Historian declare what is: as did Xenophon sometimes in his Cyrus: Of those imputations of Paricide and ambition, not a word. His order of attaining the Crowne, is thus reported.

The Persian custome being that onely the elder brother ruleth, the rest are made blinde by butning basons, hauing otherwise all contentments fit for Princes children: when Xa-Tamas was dead without issue, his brother (so hee calleth him, contrarie to our former relations) Xa-Codabent, was called blinde to the Kingdom. He had issue Sultan Hamzire Mirza the eldest, who succeeded him, and this present King called Abas. The eldest in his fathers life-time administred all things, which blindnes made the other vnfit for: but Abas at twelue yeares of age, vnder the gouernment of Tutors held the Prouince of Yafde, where the loue of the people made him suspected to his Father, who secretly resolued his death. Abas by his friends hearing it, fled to Coras an Tartar people on the East of Persia, both by their religion and dependance, Turkish, and of themselves otherwise vnquiet, and addicted to spoile. This King honored Abas as his sonne. His father soone after dying, Sultan Hamzire succeeded, who was forced to renue his truce with the Turke, by reason of the rebellion of the Turcomans, whom by force he subdued, beheaded their Princes, and for his securitie slew twentie thousand of the ablest amongst them for the warres. And then wholly bending his thoughts against the Turke, was by treason slaine by his Barbar. His Princes,

d Some haue foolishly beleued as Historie, those things which Xenophon writ as a Philosophicall Poem, &c.

authors of this fact, shared his State amongst them, euery one making himselfe Lord of that Prouince which he gouerned: vniting their resolutions against Abas, whom also the Turke (which had his hand in the businesse) had vnderaken should be kept still in Corazan. Abas neuerthelesse so wrought, that the King of Corazan dismissed him, with three thousand horsemen, to winne possession of that State, which since hath deuoured the Tartars, and is growne terrible to the Turke, being no lesse in Extent then the Turke hath in Asia, and better both peopled, gouerned, and deuoted to their Soueraigne. But it was not easily atchieued. In Sistane one of the neereft Prouinces, he was encountered with twentie thousand, his troups cut in peeces, himselfe forced to flee to the mountaines, where he liued three months vnknowne amongst the heard-men, sitting vp and downe with ten or twelue followers. Wearie of this life, he determined to shew himselfe in Yafd, his quondam Prouince, which so well succeeded, that numbers came flocking to him, and Ferrat Can also a great Prince (discontent with the present State, no part of which had falne to him, hauing at that time no Prouince in his gouernment, when the King was slaine) resorted to him with his brother and ten thousand followers. They were welcome, but he much more, as a great souldier and a wise Prince. With these forces hee ouerthrew his neereft enemies, which caused those of Shyras, Asphaan, Cassan, assisted by the Kings of Gheylan and Mazandran, to gather mighty forces. In the meane time, the Turkes armed at Tauris, and the Prince of Hamadan, hauing called in a strength of the Courdines, was marching towards Casbin. Thus beset with armies, he leaueth Ferrat Can with Zulpher his brother and fve thousand men in Casbin: and himselfe with the rest of his power, marched towards the Can of Hamadan. Now did Ferrat Can (according to former agreement betweene the King and him) profess himselfe altered from the Kings part, and writeth to the Rebels, offering to ioyne his strength with theirs; and to murine the Kings armie also, which was lodged in the mountaines, in shew to keepe the straits, in deed to expect the euent. Thus the Caus assembled at Casbin, and after long deliberation, concluded that it was needlesse and not safe to call in the Turkes forces, and dispatched a messenger and present to the Bassa of Tauris, to reserue his fauour till a time more needfull. Hereof Ferrat sent word closely to the King, and of a banquet which should be at his house a few nights after, where the Principalls of the Armie should meet. Hither Abas bid himselfe a guest, posting thither with fve thousand of his best horse, which he disposed in the mountaine, couered with Ferrats troupe, expecting the appointed signe: which being giuen late in the night when the whole company was heauie with wine and sleepe, the King was receiued into the house with three hundred men, where without any vptore he slew seuentie. And at the breake of the day the Kings people made as great shouts and noise, as if all the Armie had beene there: whereat the Alarme being giuen, all betooke them to their armes, repairing to Ferrats lodging to their Princes; whose heads laced vpon a string, were there presented to them out of a Tarras, vpon which the King presently shewed himselfe with Ferrat Can; Zulpher hauing his fve thousand men readie in a troope in the great place. All these things together so amazed them, that they thought the Kings pardon a high preferment, which he freely granted both them, and the succours sent thither by the Kings of Gheylan and Mazandran. The reports hereof made Hamadans Armie to vanish, and the King tooke order presently by new Caus for the gouernment of those parts. He led his souldiers to Hisphaan, giuing out that the treasures of the Kingdome were there laid vp by the Rebels; a good pollicie to winne it, which with as much pretended indignation he rased, for failing of his seeming hopes. To satisfie his souldiers better, hee led them against the Kings of Gheylan and Mazandran, where the entrance by Nature difficult, thorow the vnpassable woods and hilles, were made easie by the revolt of those to whom the charge of keeping the Straits was giuen, whose liues Abas had before spared at Casbin. The successe was; the two Kings were slaine, and the souldiers enriched with the spoile of a Countrey exceeding fertile, thus subdued to his Scepter. The people he remoued into other parts of his Dominion, sending the former inhabitants into Gheylan and Mazandran.

Not long after the brother of that King of Corassan, which had beene Tutor to Abas.

Abas, rebelled against his brother, and slew him and all his children, except one, with whom his Tutors fledde into the Mountaines. This occasion Abas apprehended for the subduing of that countrey in the infants right, which (notwithstanding the treasons of Ferrat, now weary of his former loyaltie, and conspiring with the Turke and Tartar to betray his Master to them) he effected. These things with larger circumstances Abas himselfe related to Sir Anthonie and Sir Robert. As for his government, the same is there also described, but I haue bene too long in the former. He hath Posts once a wecke from all parts. The Viseire sitteth in counsel with the Kings Councell euery morning, and the King himselfe euery Wednesday. The poorest may offer him any Supplication, which he readeth, registreth, ordereth. One example of iustice is admirable, which he sentenced on the Governour of Casbin, conuict of many extortions, briberies, and other crimes: That all his goods and lands should be sold for satisfaction to those whom he had spoyled; and if any thing wanted, since the King by giuing him that authoritie, was partly the cause of those excesses, hee condemned himselfe to pay the residue out of his treasure. If any thing aduanced, it should be giuen to his children, with a grieuous Edict, that no succour should be ministred to himselfe. Neyther should he at once end his punishment by death; but during his life weare a Yoke like a Hogs-yoke, and haue his eares & nose cut off: nor might any relieue him; but he should get his liuing with his own hands, that he might feele in himselfe the miserie of pouertie. This made the Turkes Embassador there present sweare, that such fortune & such vertue must needs be his Masters ruine. His bounty to our Author, his magnificence otherwise, let the Reader there learne, as likewise his private disports and exercises. At his entrance into Hisphaan, the wayes were couered two English miles with Veluet, Sarin, and Cloth of golde, where his horse should passe. Hee feasted Sir Anthonie, before his employment in that honourable Embassage to the Princes Christian (after the manner of the auncient feasting vsed by the Persians) thirtie dayes together, in a Garden of two miles compasse, vnder Tents pitched by small rills of water; where euery man that would come, was placed according to his degree, vnder one or other Tent, provided abundantly with meate, fruite, and wine, drinking as they would without compulsion. The ioy of which feast was augmented by the Tartars of Buckhawrd, yeelding themselues to his subiection, and by the great Mogors great offer with his eldest sonnes daughter, to the young sonne of King Abas in marriage. But I referre the more desirous, to Sir Anthomes owne booke; hauing thence gathered this, because it differeth so much in some things from others: then whom he had farre better meanes of intelligence.

He carrieth with him 500. dogs, and as many hankes for all game: Sparrowes for Flies, Martins for buds, Eagles, &c. a Ester. Athena. l. 4. tells of 15000. guests, and 400 talents spent in one of those feasts; but that of Assuerus was greater, b Bucara, or Bogharre.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Sophian Sect, or Persian Religion, as it is at this present.

That haue already shewed, how the Saracens had one Calyfa, or Caliph, whom they esteemed the Head of their Religion and Empire, in right vnto both succeeding their grand Seducer, Mahomet; and how the foure Captaines or Doctors, each ayiming, vnder colour of Religion, to further his ambitious Proiects, made way to difference of Sects in the beginning; and in succeeding Ages the Sword decided who was rightfull successour, the posteritie of each challenging to himselfe that right, according as they were able in the Fielde to maintaine it. These Persians affected Hali, as truest interpreter of their law, and Lorde of the State; to whome Mahomet gaue his daughter in his life time, and his Alcaron at his death, being his kinsman also by birth: and although, by the violence of the contradicting Caliphes, they did not alway make heereof open profession, yet euer and anone, as occasion was offered, this fire brake out, yet neuer into so great a flame, as after the yeare 1369. by Sophi, Guine, Aidar, Ismael, and their successors, vnto this day:

their sect being that onely of the seuentie two Saracenicall (so many some * account) which shall in the Persian estimation haue admission into Paradise, all the rest (and why not this also?) leading to hell.

From that diuision betwixt the Persians and Arabians, about the successor of Mahomet (it is Barrus his relation, in which the Persians call themselves Sia, which signifieth the vniou of one bodie, but the Arabians call them Raffudin, that is, Vnreasonable, and themselves Cunnin) proceeded other sects amongst the Mahumetans; and amongst the Persians, two, called Camarata and Mutazeli, which follow little the saying of the Prophets, but would haue all proued to them by naturall reason, not allowing Moses or Mahomet any further. There is one sect amongst them, called Malaheda, which subiecteth all things to Chance and to the Starres, not to Diuine Providence. There are other called Emozaidi, which reiect many things in the Alcoran, and follow the doctrine of Zaidi, the Nephew of Hocem, second soune of Ali; these inhabite on the confines of Prester Iohn, and in Melinde.

But to come to the common Persians, and to obserue out of Barrus the diuersitie of opinion betwixt them and the Arabians; their Doctores reduce these differences into seuentene Conclusions. The Persians say, That God is the Author and worker of euerie good, and that euill commeth from the Diuell: The Arabians say, That would bring in two Gods, one of good, the other of euill: the Persians say, That God is eternall, and that the law and creation of men had a beginning: the Arabians answer, That all the wordes of the lawe are prayes of the workes of God, and therefore eternall, like himselfe: the Persians say, That the soules of the blessed in the other world cannot see the essence of God, because he is a spirit of Diuinitie; only they shall see his greates, mercie, pitie, and all other good things which he works in the creatures: the Arabians answer; That they shall see him with their eyes, euen as he is: the Persians say, That when Mahomet receiued the law, his soule was carried by the Angell Gabriel into the presence of God: the Arabians affirme it of his bodie also: the Persians say, That the children of Ali, or Alle, and Fatema, and their twelue Nephewes, haue preheminance about all Prophets: the Arabians graunt it, about all other men, but not about the Prophets: the Persians say, that it is sufficient to pray thrice a day vnto God; in the morning when the Sunne riseth, which is called Sob; the second (Dor) at noone; the third (Magareb) before Sunne-set, because these three containe all the partes of the day: the Arabians require twice besides, according to their law, called Hacer, & Asfa. The rest of their seuentene Articles of difference, mine Author hath not expressed. These are sufficient, to shew that they not only differ about the successors of Mahomet, as Minadoi affirmeth, but about Dogmaticall points also in their ridiculous Theologie, and interpretation of their law.

These differences haue continued of old and long continuance; what hath in later times accrewed hereunto by the Sophian additions of Guine and his followers, is in part touched in the former Chapter. Let vs now take view thereof, as the same at this present hath infected Persia and the neighbouring Regions.

* Minadoi lib. 3
The chiefe is now at His-
paan. Cartw.

There is resident in Casbin* their profane Priest, called Mustaed-Dini, that is to say, the chiefe of the law, who is as the Mufti among the Turkes; and in the other subiect Cities are certaine peculiar heads obedient to this chiefe Priest, who notwithstanding are not chosen or displaced at his pleasure, but by the King himselfe, who should not onely be a King, but a Priest, as Ali and Mahomet were; from whom hee challengeth succession. And we haue shewed before that Ismael was called Halife, or Chalif, that is, the Vicar of God. Howbeit, for auoyding of greater trouble, he granteth that fauour, and putteth ouer that burthen from himselfe vnto others; to whose iudgements hee also referreth himselfe, whensoever there is any Consultation or Treatie touching their lawe and religion. Vnder the Mustaed-Dini are the Califs (saith Minadoi) and these are they that execute their daily Seruice in their Moschees or Temples. The chiefe of these Califs is he that putteth the Horne vpon the Kings head when he is first enthronized; a ceremonie now performed in Casbin, because the Turkes forbad it to be performed in Casfe, nere vnto Babylon, according to the ancient wont. Other Cities also haue a Mustaed-Dini and Calife, although inferiour to them of Casbin. These in-

seriour Califes seeme to be Vicars (so the word signifieth) of the Mustaed-Dini.

The difference betwene the Turke and Persian (as commonly it happeneth in case of Religion) is so hotely pursued on both sides betwixt them, that they neyther vse mutuall Marriage, nor Merchandise, as some affirme: there can be no certaine Peace, or continuing Truce. And if one alters his Religion, and turnes to the other side, he is not receiued without a new * Circumcision. Basazet the great Turke burnt two hundred Houses in Constantinople, infected with this sect, together with the inhabitants, and set forth a publike Edict against it. Ismael is said, in like hatred of the Turkes, to haue caused a Swine to be nourished, which, in despite of the Ottoman, he named Baiazet. Solyman returning from Amasia, was entertained in the house of one of this Sect, who therefore, after the departure of his Prince, purified his house with washings, perfumes, and other ceremonies; as if it had bene polluted with a Turkish guest: for which cause himselfe was slaine, and his house razed. But let vs take a further view of this sect in other Countries.

Neither could it containe it selfe in the limits of the Persian Kingdome, but was spread further, and receiued euen in the heart of Turkie, and skirts of India. For amongst other the Disciples of Aidar, Chasan Shelife and Schach Culi, afterwards surnamed Cuselbas, fleeing the furie of the Persian King, who had slaine their Master, and persecuted his followers, came into Armenia Minor, and there tooke vp their dwelling at the great Mountaine Antitaurus, at the foote whereof the broken Rockes haue many darke Caues, the worke of Art partly, partly of Nature; which place of the Inhabitants is called Teke-ili, whereof Schach Culi was after called Techellis. Here these two giuing themselues wholly to a contemplatiue life, in a strict austeritie contenting themselues with such things as the earth voluntarily afforded, beganne to grow in knowledge, first of the Heards-men and Shepherds, after, of the Husband-men and Countrey people, admiring their new holihesse. Yea, Baiazet himselfe, then Emperour of the Turkes, moued with zeale of their deuotion, sent them yearly fixe or seuen thousand Aspers. Afterwards becoming Fortune-tellers, and prognosticating things to come, they were by the superstitious people drawne into Villages and Cities, where they preached Hali, according to Aidars doctrine, enioyning their Disciples the redde Band on their Turbants; of which the Turkes tearme them Cuselbas, that is, Red-Heads, with which, in short time, the Cities and Townes were filled.

When they were thus multiplied, there met ten thousand of them at a Faire at Tascia, or Attalia, where they executed the chiefe Magistrate; and being perswaded by these new Masters, they sware neuer to forsake their Captains, or refuse any labour for their most holy Religion, vowing their soules & bodies in defence thereof. These Captaines not hauing otherwise to maintaine their followers, gaue them leaue to forage the countrey adioyning, and to liue vpon the spoyle of them that would nor receiue their new doctrine, which they in many troupes, and with many preyes accordingly performed. They entred into Lycaonia, and the people fled out of the countrey into Iconium. There two Prophets set vp Proclamations of blessings to all such as would receiue their sect; and of destruction to the gain-sayers. Ismael also, to encrease their strength, had sent them some troupes of horse-men. In the Politike Historie which Crusius hath giuen vs, in the first booke of his Turcogracia, it is said, that two hundred thousand followed Sach Cules: in this warre Baiazets two nephewes, with the forces of the countrey, encountering them in battell, receiued the ouerthrow: Coronus, the sonne of Baiazet, with his Armie durst not assaile them. Thus marched they into Bitthynia, where neere vnto the Riuer Sangarius, Caragos Bassa, Viceroy of Asia, affronted them, hauing before commanded Achmetes, the eldest sonne of Baiazet, to leuie forces in his government of Cappadocia and Pontus, to shut them in at their backes. But Techellis, after the losse of seuen thousand men, and all his ensignes, chased him out of the field into Cutaie, the seat of the Viceroy, where he besieged and tooke him with his wiues and children: and after being pursued by Alis Bassa, with forces out of Europe, he impaled this Caragos in the way on a sharpe stake fastened in the ground. Here was he forced to fight, and his fellow Chasan Shelife slaine; but Techellis recouering ring the battell almost lost, left Alis Bassa slaine in the place; the Turkes fleeing before him. Ionuses Bassa was sent against him, when hauing lost a great part of his strength, he had retired his weakened forces into Antitaurus, out of the Woods and Mountaines, often assaying the Turkes: whence at last he fled into Persia. Ionuses caused strait inquisition to be made for these new Sectaries, doing such to death with exquisite torments, as had borne armes in the late rebellion, and burned the rest in the forehead with an hot iron: and after transported them, together with the friends and kinsmen of such as had beene executed, into Europe, there to be dispersed through Macedonia, Epirus, and Peloponnesus, for feare of a second returne of Techellis. The remainder of Techellis his power, as they fled into Persia, robbed a Carauan of Merchants; for which outrage, comming to Tauris, their Captaines were by Ismaels command executed, and Techellis himselfe burnt aliue; but yet is this sect cloley fauoured in Asia.

We haue now seene the proceedings of this Sophian sect, both in Persia and Turkie, both here kept downe, and there established by force. To weare red on the lower parts of their body, were to these Red-heads scarcely piacular. Touching Hali, they haue diuers dreames: as that when they doubted of Mahomets successour, a little Lizard came into a Councell assembled to decide the controuersie, and declared that it was Mahomets pleasure, that Mortus Ali, (or Morts Ali) should be the man. He had a sword wherewith he killed as many as he stroke. At his death he tolde them that a white Camell would come for his bodie, which accordingly came, and carried his dead body and the sword, and was therewith taken vp into heauen; for whose returne they haue long looked in Persia. For this cause the King kept a horse readie saddled, and kept for him also a daughter of his to be his wife; but she died in the yeare one thousand five hundred secenty and three. And they say further, that if he come not shortly, they shall be of our beleefe.

They haue few bookes, and lesse learning. There is often great contention and mutinie in great Townes, which of Mortus Ali his sonnes was greatest: sometime two or three thousand peo- ple being together by the eares about the same; as I haue seene (saith Master Ducket) in Shamaky, and Ardouil, and Tauris, where I haue seene a man comming from fighting, and in a brauerie bringing in his hand foure or five mens heads, carrying them by the haire of the crowne. For although they shaue their heads commonly twice a week, yet leaue they a tuft of haire vpon their heads about two foot long, whercof, when I enquired the cause, They answered, that thereby they may be the easilier carried vp into heauen when they are dead. In praying they turne to the South, because Mecca lyeth that way from them. When they be on trauell in the way, many of them will as soone as the Sunne riseth, light from their horses, turning themselves to the South, and will lay their gownes before them, with their swords & beads, and so standing vpright doe their holy things, many times in their prayers kneeling downe and kissing their beads, or somewhat else that lieth before them.

When they earnestly affirme a matter, they swear by God, Mahomet, and Mortus Ali, and sometime by all at once, saying, Olla Makumet Ali, and sometime Shaugham basshe, that is, by the Shaughes head. Abas the yong Prince of Persia, charged with imputation of treason, after other Purgatory speeches, swate by the Creator that spread out the ayre; that founded the earth vpon the deepes; that adorned the heauen with Starres; that powred abroad the water; that made the fire; and briefly, of nothing brought forth all things: by the head of Ali, and by the Religion of their Prophet Mahomet, that he was cleare. If any Christian will become a Bosarman, or one of their superstition, they giue him many gifts: the Governour of the Town appointeth him a horse and one to ride before him on another horse, bearing a sword in his hand, and the Bosarman bearing an arrow in his hand, rideth in the Citie cursing his father and mother. The sword signifieth death; if he reuolt againe. Before the Shaugh seemed to fauour our Nation, the people abused them very much, and so hated them, that they would not touch them, reuiling them by the names of Casars and Gawars, that is, Infidels, or Mjsbeleeuers. Afterwards they would kisse their hands, and vse them gently and reuerently. Drunkards and riotous persons they hate; for which cause Richard

Their opinions and rites most what agree with the Turkish and Saracenicall. Their Priests are apparelled like other men: they vse euery morning and after-noon to goe vp to the toppes of their Churches; and tell there a great tale of Mahomet and Mortus Ali. They haue also among them certaine holy men called Setes; accounted therefore holy, because they, or some of their ancestors, haue beene on pilgrimage at Mecca; these must be beleued for this Saint-ship, although they lie neuer so shamefully. These Setes vse to shauē their heads all ouer, sauing on the sides a little above the temples, which they leaue vnshauen, and vse to braid the same as women doe their haire, and weare it as long as it will grow. Iosafa Barbaro at Sammachi lodged in an Hospitall, wherein was a graue vnder a vault of stone, and neere vnto that a man with his beard and haire long; naked, sauing that a little before and behinde he was couered with a skinne, sitting on a peece of a matte on the ground; I (saith he) saluted him, and demanded what he did: he told me he watched his father: I asked who was his father; He, quoth he, that doth good to his neighbour: with this man in this sepulchre I haue liued thirtie yeeres: and will now accompany him after death; and being dead, be buried with him: I haue seene of the world sufficient, and now haue determined to abide thus till death.

Ducker:

Ios. Barb. apud Ramus.

Another I found at Tauris on All-Soules day, in the which they also vsed a commemoration of soules departed, neere to a Sepulchre in a Church-yard; hauing about him many birds, especially Rauens and Crowes: I thought it had beene a dead corpse, but was told it was a liuing Saint, at whose call the birds resorted to him, and he gaue them meat.

Another I saw, when Assambeï was in Armenia, marching into Persia against Signior Iansa, Lord of Persia and Zagatai, vnto the Citie of Herem; who drew his staffe in the dishes wherein they ate, and said certaine words and brake them all: the Sultan demanded what he had said: they which heard him, answered, that he said he should be victorious, and breake his enemies forces, as he had broken those dishes: whereupon he commanded him to be kept till his returne; and finding the euent according, he vsed him honorably. When the Sultan rode thorow the fields, he was set on a Mule and his hands bound before him, because hee was sometime accustomed to doe some dangerous folly: at his feet there attended on him many of their religious persons, called Darusise. These mad trickes he vsed according to the course of the Moone, sometimes in two or three daies not eating any thing, busied in such fooleries, that they were faine to binde him: He had great allowance for his expenses.

One of those holy men there was, which went naked like to the beasts, preaching their faith: and hauing obtained great reputation, hee caused himselfe to be immured in a wall fortie daies, there to abide without any sustenance: but when this time was expired, and some wondered, one more nose-wise then the rest, smelled the sent of flesh: the Sultan hearing it, committed him and his disciple to the Cadilasher, who by torments caused them to confesse the coufinage; for, thorow a hole which was made in the wall by a caue, he had broth conueied to him, and therefore they were both put to death: In the yeere 1478. Chozamirech an Armenian, being in his shop in Tauris, an Azi or Saint of theirs came to him, and willed him to deny his Christian faith: he answered him courteously, and praied him not to trouble him: but when he persisted, he offered him mony; the Saint would not haue the mony, but importuned his first sute: Chozamirech said he would not deny his Christian faith: whereupon the other plucked a sword out of a mans scabard which stood by, and with a wound which he gaue the Armenian in the head, killed him, and ranne away. But the Armenians sonne complaining to the Sultan, procured his apprehension at Meren, two daies iourney from Tauris: and, being brought before him, hee with a knife killed him with his owne hands, and caused him to be cast on a dung-hill for the dogges to eat; saying, Is this the way to encrease the faith of Mahomet? But when some of the more zealous people went to one Daruscaffun, which was in guarding of the sepulchre of Assambeï the former Sultan, and (as it were) Prior of the Hospitall, and requesting of him, obtained ned the bodie to burie it: the Sultan hearing it, sent for him, and said to him, Darest thou countermand my commands? Away and kill him; which was suddenly dispatched. He further to be reuenged of the people, committed the Towne to the sacke, which for the space of three or foure houres was done. And then he forbad further spoile, and fined the Towne in a great summe of gold. Lastly, he caused the Armenians sonne to come before him, and with many kinde words comforted him. This long historie I haue inserted, to shew the extremitie of blinde zeale, and religious furie in the secular and votaries of these Persians, if iustice should not withstand their rage.

Before is mentioned the commemoration of their dead, which is thus performed ouer their sepulchres. Thither resort great multitudes of men and women, old and yong, which sit on heapes with their Priests, and with their candles lighted: the Priests either reade or pray in their language; and after cause to be brought somewhat to eat in the place: the place containeth betweene foure and fise miles: the pathes which leade thither are full of poore people, which begge almes, some of whom offer to say some praier for their benefactors. The sepulchres haue stones vpon them ingraued with the names of the buried parties: and some haue a Chappell of stone thereon.

Ios. Barb.

At Merdin hee saw a naked man, which came and sate by him, and pulling forth a booke, read thereon, and after drew neere and asked him; whence hee was; hee answered, a stranger: I also am a stranger, saith he, of this world, and so are we all; and therefore I haue left it, with purpose to goe thus vnto mine end; with many words besides touching meekenesse, and the deniall of the world. He said, I haue seene a great part thereof, and finde nothing therein that contents me, and therefore haue determined to abandon it altogether. To this Merdin a man cannot passe, but by a way made of stone, continuing a mile: at the head thereof is a gate and way to the Towne; and within the Towne is another hill with a like way of fise hundred pases in height. There is an Hospitall for entertainment of all strangers, made by Ziangirboi, the brother of Vsancaflan: and if they be of better sort, they are entertained with carpets spread for them, worth an hundred ducats a peece: and victuals for all commers.

We might heere take further view of their stately Temples, their great and populous Cities, and other things worthy obseruation, if that our Turkish History had not related the like also among them, especially touching the persons and places religious. For the rest I referre the Reader to other Authors. The wonders of Nature in these parts are: neere Bachu, a fountaine of oile continually running, and fetched into the farthest parts of Persia: and another neere Shamaky, of Tarsie, whereof wee had good vse and prooffe in our ship. Heereabouts you shall haue in the fields, neere to any Village in the night, two or three hundred Foxes howling. Kine they haue like ours, and another sort great boned and leane, as hard-fauoured as those which Pharaoh dreamed of. In Persia groweth great abundance of Bombasin cotton: this groweth on a certaine tree or brier, not past the height of a maus waste, with a slender stalke like to a brier or carnation Iuly-flower, with very many branches, bearing on euery branch a fruit or cod round, which when it commeth to the bignesse of a wall-nut, openeth and sheweth forth the cotton, which groweth still like a fleece of wooll, to the bignesse of a mans fist, and then being loose is gathered: the seeds are flat, and blacke, as bigge as pease, which they sow in their fields and plowed ground in great abundance. The present King Abas (more, as it seemeth, in policie, to secure himselfe of factions, and against the Turke, then conscience) is a great persecutor of that sect of Mab, which followeth the interpretation of Vssen and Omar. This hee labours to extirpate and make odious: hauing in vse, once a yeere with great solemnitie to burne publikely (as maine heretikes) the images of Vssen and Omar. Then doth hee cause his great men publikely, in scorne of their institution, to goe with a flagon of wine, carried by a foot-man, and at euery village, or where they see any assembly of people, to drinke: which himselfe also vseth, not for loue of the wine, but to scandalize the contrary religion. Yet are there of the greatest, exceeding precise Turkes, if they durst shew it.

Sir Ant. Sker.

In a letter of John Ward, written in Tauris, May 14. 1605 this King is blamed for making slaues of poore Armenians, and forcing many to Mahumetisme, pulling downe Churches, and vling more rigour then the Turke.

I Ward to M. Haywood.

I had thought I had ended this Chapter and our Persian Expedition; but our good friends the Iesuites would needs entertaine your wearie eies; with reading an exploit of theirs, related by^b one, sometimes their fellow Catholike, now (I hope) our fellow Christian. For the credit of this honest and loyall (if their honest returne not with a non est, and loyall with a lie-all) societie, was a French pamphlet by them dispersed (a little before the Powder treason) amongst their Catholike friends in England, reporting the miraculous conversion of the King of Persia by one Campion a Iesuite an Englishman, that had expelled a Deuill out of a possessed partie; and commanded the Deuill at his departure to giue a signe thereof, by striking downe the top of a steeple. Which being effected, the Kings conuersion followed, together with many of the Nobilitie, to the Roman faith; libertie also being granted to preach it openly, and to build Churches and Monasteries thro' out the kingdome. This was beleued in England, especially by a friend of our Authors, vnto whom that pamphlet was sent, who requested him to say Masse in thanksgiuing to God for so great a benefit. But in the end, that Iesuite who sent the Pamphlet, gaue out, that it was but a thing deuised by French Hugonets, to disgrace their societie. Gracious societie! that can sometime cure their lies with a distinction of pie fraudes,^c sometime couer them with a robe of the new fashion; Equiuocation: sometimes can expose their bastards at other mens doores, to shield themselues from shame with laying the blame on others; and haue a mint in their pragmaticall heads of such supersubtle inuentions: what are they now disgraced, and that by Hugonets? Euē as truly as the Parliament-houise should haue bene blowne vp by Puritans^d (this also was the Ignatians deuce) or like to that newes of the late Queenē, e whose Ambassadors were at Rome for the Popes Absolution: or that of Bezoes recantation, and Geneuaes submission to the Pope: Blessed Ignatius, (let me also inuocate, or let him deigne to reade in that all-seeing glasse^f this poore supplication) inuise some better spirit, or some cleanlier and more wittie conueiance at least, into thy new progenie, lest the Protestants grosser wits sent, see, feele the palpableness, and impute the Iesuicall courses to that Author which said, he would goe out and be a lying spirit in the mouth of all Achabs Prophets, which, ^h when he speaketh a lie, speaketh of his owne, because he is a lier, and the father thereof. Hitherto wee tooke Ignatius for their father, but now we finde a new, of whom they borrow Bankruptly shifts, befeeming onely the Merchants of Babylon; disgracing humanitie, defacing dignitie, worthily irraunged amongst the poore pollicies of the Hospitall of the desperate. Since also, Ianssonius in his Mercurius Gallobelgicus hath told vs newes of the Kings grant to build a Temple and Monasterie for Christians, himselfe, as he saith, much enclining to that religion: whereupon many haue bene baptized, and not a few through the power of holy-water, * haue bene cured. The King hath further sent to the Georgians to vnite them to the Romish Church: and the Armenians also by an embassage to Rome haue protested all obedience to that Sea, as they before had done in the Couent of S. Augustine, which is in the chiefe Citie of Persia. Hee setteth downe the copie of King Abas his letter to the Pope, wherein hee requesteth him to send a Prelate to gouerne at Tres Ecclesia, where the chiefe of the Armenian Christians vsed to reside. The like he writeth in another letter to the King of Spaine: which, if it be so, argueth rather his policie, to obtaine good will and helpe of the Christians against the Turke, then any loue to Christian religion.

CHAP. X.

Of the Scythians, Sarmatians, and Seres, and of their Religion.

Vnder the name of Scythia, is contained a very great part of the world: It was diuided into Scythia Europea, and Asiatica. Pliny^a saith, that this name reacheth vnto the Sarmatians and Germans, and to those farthest Nations, which were vnknowne to other men. And Strabo in his first booke saith, that all knowne regions towards the North were called Scythians or Nomades: and in his eleuenth booke he affirmeth, that that the Greekes called all those Northerne Nations, Scythians, and Celto-scythians. Those beyond the Adriatique and Pontike Seas, and the Riuer Ister or Danubius, were called Hyperborei, Sauromatæ, and Arimaspi: those beyond the Caspian Sea, Sacæ and Massagetæ. Some ^b will haue this name to be giuen them ἰπὸ τοῦ οὐλοῦ, which signifieth to be angry: Others of their Shooting, ^c called still of some of those Nations, and in some other languages, Schieten, of which our word Shoot is deriued: Mela in his third booke and fifth chapter, calleth them all Sagæ: and in the fragment which beareth the name of ^d Cato de Originibus, is mentioned Scythia Saga: this word Saga, Berosus ^e interpreteth a Priest: saying, that Noah left to the Scythian Armenians his rituall books, which only Priests, and that only among Priests, might reade, who were therefore called Saga, as Noah himselfe had beene. These peopled the countries from Armenia to the Bætrians, all which place was called Scythia Saga: ouer which Sabastius reigning in the time of Iupiter Belus, Araxa with his sonne Scythia possessed all from Armenia Westward, to Sarmatia in Europe. The Grecians fable Hercules to be the father of these Nations, begetting ^f Scythes on a monster, whose vpper halfe resembled a Woman, the nether part a Viper. It were an endlesse and boundlesse worke, to seeke and set out the true and proper beginnings and bounds of this so large a Tract of the world, called Scythia: the particular Nations of them would be but harsh to recite out of Pliny, Mela, Strabo, and others: the multitude whereof he that will may finde in ^g Ortelius his Theſaurus collected together. The Sannatæ, or Sauomatæ, are sometime made one peculiar people of the Scythians: and sometimes the names are confounded, Sarmatia also being diuided into Europæa and Asiatica, whereof the one is interpreted by ^h Olinerus, Polonia, by Ortelius, Russia, and the other Tartaria.

Goropius ⁱ in his Becceselana admiring his owne language, coniectureth that while Nimrod and his company fell to Babel, or after our pronounciation, Babble at Babel, others, namely, the Cymbrians, or posteritie of Gomer, staid still in Margiana, a countrey fruitfull of Vines; whither hee imagineth Noah descended out of the Arke, and there abode after the Flood. These hee supposeth, being not at Babel, retained their old and first vniuersall language. But Margiana growing too little for their multiplied numbers, they were forced to send out Colonies. And thus the Saxons, Tectosages, Sauromatæ, Gætes or Gothes, the Danes, Galles, and other Scythian Nations, the true posteritie of Gomer, and keepers of the first language, as he by Dutch Etymologies gathereth, peopled both Scythia and Sarmatia in Asia and Europe together with all Germanie, France, England, Norway, Denmarke, and some parts of Asia Minor. He that will be further informed of his Reasons, let him reade his Saxonica Gotodanica, and other Treatises of his Becceselianian Antiquities.

^k Ptolemeus distinguisheth Scythia from Sarmatia: he confineth Sarmatia Europæa with the Sarmatian Ocean, and the land vnknowne on the North: with Vistula on the West: the Easterne border is Tanais: from whence vnto the Hircanian sea Eastward, is Sarmatia Asiatica, on the North abutting on the vnknowne parts of the earth, on the South with the Euxine sea, and a line drawne right from thence to the Caspian sea. Scythia is by ^l him placed to the East of Sarmatia, diuided by the hill Imaus, extending vnto the region called Serica, hauing on the North vnknowne places; on the South, the Sacæ, Sogdiana, Margiana and India. But our purpose is to take them heere in their more generall sense, vnderstanding all the North parts of Asia, now Tartaria Asiatica, (for of Europe, sauing wherein the Europæan Scythians agree with the Asian, we are not now to speake:) And of these, first to consider their ancient Scythian rites, and in the next place their later Tartarian appellation and religion.

^m Iustinus out of Trogus relateth the arguments vsed of the Egyptians and Scythians, each seeking to challenge to themselves, to be the ancientest of Nations: in which quarrell the Scythians preuailed. Their manners and customes he thus reporteth. They haue no limitation of lands, nor tillage, nor house, but alwaies wander thorow places not inhabited, feeding their herds and flockes. They carry their wiues and children with them on carts, which also being covered with hides, they vse for houses. No offence is more hainous amongst them then theft: gold and siluer they as much contemne, as others desire. Milke and hony is their food; their cloathes, skins of beast, for the vse of wooll they know not. They have three times fought the Empire of Asia, neuer conquered of others: They chased Darius the Persian King out of their coasts: they slew Cyrus with all his armie: they ouerthrew Zopyron a Captaine of Alexander the Great with all his forces. They onely heard of, neuer felt the Roman armes, and themselues founded the Parthian Empire.

That which credulous and fabulous antiquitie hath reported, of the monstrous peoples inhabiting the Northernly and vnknowne parts of Scythia, is not heere to be recited, the countries being at this time discouered, and knowne to haue no such men, as either by nature are balde and flat nosed, with huge chins; or haue but one eye, where there are also Gryphons keepers of their treasures, or men with Goats feet: or other monsters of men, which ⁿ Pliny, Herodotus and others, haue rather mentioned then beleued; Mandeuil and Munster following them in like relations. Next to these both in place and credit, we may reckon the Hyperboreans, of whom the Delians report that they sent to Delos virgins with sacrifice to Lucina, bound vp in wheat-straw: through so many Nations inhabiting betweenc. Of the Issedones is reported, that when one dieth, his kindred bring thither beasts, which they kill, and cut, and dresse, and eat together with the flesh of the dead man, whose skull also they keepe and gilde, vsing it as an idoll, to which they performe yearely ceremonies: these exequies doth the sonne there performe to his dead father. Generally of the Scythian religion thus. Of the gods, they worship first Vesta, whom they call in their language Tabiti: next of all Iupiter, in their speech Papaeus, and the Earth supposing her to be the wife of Iupiter, and call her Apia. In the next place they worship Apollo and Venus, by the names of Octosyrus, and Ar-timpasa, and Mars and Hercules. Some of them sacrifice also to Neptune, or Thamimasades. Images, Altars and Temples, they thinke ought not to be made, except to Mars. Their manner of sacrificing is generally this: The sacrifice is presented with the forefeet bound, the Sacrificer at his backe hauing laid aside his holy vestment, woundeth the same, and while it falleth, calls vpon that god to whom he sacrificeth; and then putteth a halter about the necke, and stranglenth it, without kindling any fire, or vowing, or other ceremonie, and slayeth it; the flesh plucked from the bones, he casteth into a great Caldron, the bones he vseth for sewell to seeth the same (for wood the Countrie doth not yeeld:) And if they haue not any such vessell, they put all the flesh with water into the paunch, and so the beast doth seeth it selfe. After it is boyled, he which sacrificed offereth the libaments, or offerings of the flesh and inwards: their sacrifices are, besides other beasts, especially of horses.

Their Temples to Mars they builde on this manner. They heape together bundles of twigges three furlongs in length and breadth, and aboue on them is made a square plaine, three sides thereof are vpright, the fourth is made slope, and bending-wise, thereby to get vp: thither they bring euery yeare an hundred and fiftie waines of twigges to supplie the waste of them. Vnderneath this worke is erected an old iron sword, and this is their Image of Mars, to which they offer yearely sacrifices, both of other cattell and of horses: and more to this blade then to other gods. Of their captiues they offer one of an hundred, but after another manner. For after they haue offered wine on their heads, they kill them by a certaine vessel, and after lifting them vpon that their heape or Temple, they embrew the Sword-god with the bloud. This they doe aboue: beneath in the Temple they cut off all the right shoulders of the slaine men, and hurle them vp in the aire together with the hands; wheresoeuer the hand shall fall, there it lieth, and the dead bodie apart. When they haue performed all their solemnities they depart. Swine are so odious to them, that they will haue none of them nourished in their Countrey.

There are among them Diuiners, whose rites are these. They bring great bundles of willow twigges, which they lay on the ground, and vntie, and laying them afunder one by one, diuine. Some of them practise diuination with the leaues of the Teil-tree, which they fold and vnfold in their hands. The King, when at any time he falleth sick, sendeth for three choyce men of those Diuiners; who for the most part name some man vnto him, which hath forsworne himselfe, hauing sworne by the Kings Throne an oath vsed of the Scythians: presently the man is brought forth, who, if he deniecth what their art hath accused him of, the King sendeth for twice the number of Diuiners: and if they by new practise of their art finde him guiltie, his head is cut off, and the first Diuiners share his goods: but if they shall absolue him, more Diuiners are sent for; and if the most of them doe absolue him, then those three first are thus done to death. They lade a waine with twigges, and binding the Diuiners hand and foot, and stopping their mouthes, cast them into the waines, and set all on fire, burning oxen, waine, and men together, vnlesse some of the oxen by the burning of their harness escape. This punishment inflict they on their false Prophets. They make their leagues with other Nations in this sort. They powre wine into a great bowle, mixing therewith the blood of them which ioyne in league, cutting some part of the bodie with a knife or sword; and then dip in that bowle or mazer a sword, arrowes, an axe, a dart, and after curse themselves with many words, last of all drinking the wine. Nicephorus * Gregoras relateth the Scythian Customes and Expeditions, and their contempt of gold and ignorance of the vse of it. These on the one side, and the Christians on the other, forced the Turkes, which were also a kind of Scythians, to settle themselves as they could, in the parts of Mesopotamia, Chaldaea, & Assyria, where they left their own, and learned the rites and customes of the Mahumetans. Their Kings are buried amongst the Gerrbi, with many ceremonies carrying the dead bodie through all the Countries ouer which hee raigned, which cut and shauel themselves; and with him is buried his best beloued Paramour, his Cup-bearer, Cooke, Master of his horse, Waiter, Messenger, Horses, and the first fruits of all other things, and also golden Cups: and then cast on earth, making a very great hill.

When the yeare is gone about, they take fiftie of his principall attendants, which are not slaues, but free-borne Scythians, and strangle them with so many horses of the best, and fasten the dead men on the dead horses with much solemnitie. But to relate all the particulars hereof, and their burials also of priuate men (whose dead bodies are carried about fortie dayes, from one friend to another, entertained euery where with feasts, &c.) would be too tedious. He that would haue a sight of these things, let him resort to Thomaso Porcacchi his Funerali Antichi, where these things are not only discoursed in words, but described in artificiall pictures.

The Scythians so farre hate forren Rites and Religions, that Anacharsis, a Scythian Philosopher, hauing trauelled through a great part of the world, and vowed to the mother of the gods, if he returned home in safetie, that he would sacrifice to her with such Rites as he had seene obserued in Cyzicus: in the performance of his vow, was slaine by King Saulius.

Scyles P also being King of the Scythians, when he brought in forren Rites, and obserued the madde Bacchanal solemnities, which he had seene among the Greekes, lost both his kingdome and life. ¶ They cut off the noses of men, and imprinted pictures in the flesh of women, whom they ouercame: and generally their customes of warre were bloudie: what man soeuer the Scythian first taketh, he drinketh his blood: he offereth to the King all the heads of the men he hath slaine in battell: otherwise he may not share in the spoile: the skinned of their crownes stayed off, they hang at their horse-bridles: their skinned they vse to flay for napkins and other vses, and some, for cloathing. Once a yeare the chiefe men haue a solemnitie amongst them, in which they powre wine into a Mazor, of which none may drinke, which hath not slaine an enemy.

These customes were generall to the Scythians in Europe and Asia (for which cause Scytharum facinora patrare, grew into a prouerbe of immane crueltie, and their Land was iustly called ^u Barbarous): others were more speciall and peculiar to particular Nations Scythian.

Of the Barbarous ^x crueltie of the Scythians, the sea confining was called Euxinus, by the contrary, as the furies were called Ermenides, saith Ammianus, because they sacrificed strangers to Diana, whom they worshipped vnder the name of Orsiloche, and hanged vp their heads on the walls of their Temples. The Ile Leuce, neere to Taurica, was dedicated to Achilles, where none of his deuout worshippers durst abide in the night-time; for none might spend the night on shore without danger of his life. Arrianus in his Perplus (or sailing about) of the Euxine sea, speaketh of this Island, and the deuotions therein performed to Achilles and Patroclus: that certaine birds keepe the Temple, watering and sweeping the same with their wings, & the Goats which feed in the Ile there present themselves for sacrifice, when the price is first paid at the Altar to the contentment of that Deitie, or Diuell, whose illusion (if not others collusion) it must needs bee: But because this Iland adioyneth to Europe, I must forbear these things till another time. He also describeth the Nations, both in Asia and Europe, which about round about that sea, Iornandes bringeth these Scythians bordering from Scanzia (so he calleth that Peninsula, which others name, Babilia, Scandia, Scandinavia, &c. Wherein are the Kingdomes of Sweden, Gothland and Norway) and attributeth to the Goths those warres, which the Egyptians and Persians are said to haue made against the Scythians. Neere to Mæotis King Filimer planted himselfe and his followers; in Dacia, Thracia and Mælia, Zamolxes who was also a great Philosopher. These and the rest were not only a terror to the skirts of Asia, but to the heart of Africa and Europa, in proesse of time sacking Rome, and shaking that Roman Monarchie almost to the ground. Simocatta ^b in his Maurician History giueth the preeminence of Martial valour, amongst the many many Scythian Nations to the Abares. Chaganus the Scythian King, sent Embassadors to Mauricius, with an Epistle, wherein he stileth himselfe Governour of seuen Nations, and Lord of the seuen Climats of the world. He conquered the Abdela or Nephthalites, the Abares (some of which fled to Tangast to the Turkes) and the Ogor-Nation which dwell by the Riuer Til (or Volga) whose ancient Princes were called War, and Chunni. He conquered also the Prince of Colch, in which warre he slew three hundred thousand people, their carcasses lying scattered foure dayes iourney. He subdued also the Turkes at the hill Iear, which is foure hundred miles distant from the golden mountaine: so they call a mountaine in the East, because of the fertility and store of cattell therein: which alwayes the greatest Chagan amongst the Turkes possesseth. For Chagan is not a proper name, but a Princely title, which in those parts and the Countries adioyning is still continued: the Tartars calling their Princes Chan (which ^d some, perhaps falsely, write Cham) and the Persians and Turkes still vying that title. These Turkes vanted themselves neuer subiect to Earth-quake or Pestilence. They cal their Priest Taisan, that is, the sonne of God. Their religion I haue before mentioned. They haue a custome that the males neuer weare gold. This Citie was diuided by a streame, which sometimes separated two disagreeing Nations, no lesse distinguished by their disioyned minds and differing habites, the one wearing blacke, the other red. This Citie, they say, was built by Alexander, when he had overcome the Sogdians and Bactrians. The Kings wiues shining with Jewels, are carried in golden chariots, each drawne with one Bull, the bridles embossed with gold. The Prince (as is said elsewhere) spent the night with seuen hundred women. Fame attributeth another Citie, not farre hence, to Alexander, called Chubdan, The Prince thereof being dead, his wiues in blacke, with shauen heads, continually mourne, and may neuer forsake the Sepulchre. These haue many Elephants, and traffique with the Indians which dwell Northwards, and make Silke. Thus much I thought worth the adding out of Simocatta, for better knowledge both of the Turkish and of the Tartarian Historie, as well as of the Scythian.

The Massageta, ^e famous for the ouerthrow of Cyrus, esteeme the Sunne alone for God, and offer vnto him a horse. They haue one wife to each man, and yet euery one vseth also his neighbours wife openly, hanging meane while liis quier on the waine or cart: The best death, and most happy amongst them, is when they are become old, to be cut in pieces, and to be eaten together with sheepes flesh: if he die naturally, they burie him in the earth, as dying a base and beastly ^f death. Their weapons are of brasse, their furniture of gold; of both which they haue much store, little of iron and siluer: ^g The Bactrians, when they were old or worne with sicknesse, cast their parents to dogges, which they kept for this purpose, and called Buri all dogges. The Bactrian women are pompous, ^h riding in great state, and lie with their seruants, and with strangers. They haue among them Brachmanes; Zoroastres the Bactrian is accounted first author of the Magi, and of liberall Artes: hee liued twentie yeares in a wildernesse with cheete: but others account this another Zoroastres.

Of the Saca, some hold our Saxons to be descended. Dionysius in his Greeke verses giueth them the highest praise for shooting of all other.

The Amazons, of whom is before related, are said ^k to be descended of the Scythians, who vnder the conduct of Plinos and Scolopythus, seled themselues by the Riuer Thermodon, and possessed the field of Themiscyra: But when they continued to spoile the adioynng countries, they were by secret conspiracie of those people destroyed. Their wiues ^l became warriours both in defence and offence, and did great acts vnder their two Quēenes, Marthesia and Lampedo: after, Obera and Antiope the daughters of Marthesia, in the time of Hercules raigned: then Penthesilea, who in the Troian warres was slaine. Yet the reliques of that Nation continued vntill Minthia or Talesfris in Alexanders time; and by degrees ware out altogether. One of their Quēenes instituted the sacrifice to Mars and Diana, called Tauropolium, saith Diodorus ^m, who addeth that they liued not without men, but that they put the men to domestike drudgeries, and exercised the women in the field. Yet doth he no lesse then Strabo make doubt of these Amazonian, or Vnimammian Nation ⁿ: and no lesse of the Hyperborean, which he thus relateth out of Hecatæus, that they dwell in an Iland in the Ocean neere vnto the Pole, in which Latona was borne, and Apollo was most of all worshipped: and that the Ilanders generally are Apolloes Priests, every day chanting Hymnes in his praise: they haue also a huge Grove, and a round Temple dedicated to Apollo to whom their Citie is sacred. These and other things fable they of the Hyperborei, to which Solinus ^o addeth many other, of the clemencie of the ayre, of the innocencie of the men, of their freedom from sicknes, and voluntarie seeking for death in the fulnes of dayes (after they haue made merry, casting themselues from a certaine rocke into the sea) all these pleasures concurring notwithstanding; things contrary both to truth and Nature, except with Goropius ^p we turned soine parts; at least, of this History into an allegory. He yet historically interprēteth, that they which placed the Hyperborei beyond the Arimaspi, these beyond the Issedones, and those also beyond the Scythians, and these againe beyond the Cimmerians, intended the European Scythians, or inhabitants about Maotis, the Liunionians and Muscouites; the Issedones to be in Scandia, and all alongst those frozen or Icie seas, as he proueth by Etimologie of the word: North-east, and Eastwards from these in the continent of Asia he placeth the Arimaspi, and in the continent of America Mexicana he seateth the Hyperbores: They which list may haue recourse to his learned discourses of this argument. Porcacchi ^q telleth of some Scythians, which hanged their dead on trees (as the Colchi of old, and some Tartarians are still reported to doe) esteeming it a disgrace to be buried in the earth. The Taurici buried with their Kings some of their best friends. The Derbices ^r feasted with the flesh of their kinsmen which were seuentie yeares old: the women at that age they strangled, and after buried. The Caspians straitly imprisoned such as attained to that age, and there famished them. Some say they laid them amongst the woods and obserued what became of them; esteeming them (as is said before of the Persians) highly honored, and next to a canonizing, whom the birds stare with their talons. In the next degree of happinesse, whom dogges or wilde beasts preyed on: but beneath all disasters and disaduentures, which could finde neither the one nor the other to become vnto them suchemie: friends. The Tibareni crucifie those old men which they haue best loued. The Herules being sicke or old were placed by their kindred on a pile of wood, and there by another, which was not of that kinne, slaine with a dagger, who being descended, the pile was fired. His wife was forced to hang her selfe, or else to abide perpetuall infamie. But I am loath to burie you in these buriall Rites.

The Scythians punished no fault more seuerely then theft. They would make themselves drunken with the smoake of hearbes burnt in the fire. They sware by the Kings throne, by their sword, and by the winde ^t. When they had sacked Athens, and piled a heap

East part of the world called Mongol: which had sometimes foure sorts of inhabitants: Yeka-Mongol, that is, the great Mongols; Sumongul, that is, water-Mongols; these called themselves Tartars, of a riuer which runneth thorow their countrey, named Tartar: the third Merkat, the fourth Metrit. These all were alike in perion and language, but diuided amongst themselves into seuerall Prouinces, and vnto seuerall Princes In the land of Yeka-Mongol, was Cingis, who began to be a mightie hunter before the Lord: for he learned to steale men. He raunged into other countreies, taking as many captiues as he could, and ioyned them vnto himselfe. Also he allured the men of his owne countrey vnto him, who followed him as their Ring-leader to doe mischicfe. Then began he to warre vpon the Sumongols or Tartars, and slew their Captaine, and after many conflicts subdued them to himselfe, and brought them all into bondage. Afterward he vsed their helpe against the Merkats, whom also hee vanquished in battell. Proceeding from thence, he fought against the Metrites, and vanquished them also. The Naimani hearing that Cingis was thus exalted, greatly disdayned therat: for they had a great and mightie Emperour, vnto whom all the foresaid Nations payed tribute. Whose sonnes (when he was dead) succeeded him in his Empire. Howbeit, being yong and foolish, they knew not how to gouerne the people, but were diuided, and fell at variance among themselves. These inuaded Cingis his countrey, putting the inhabitants to the sword, but were after ouerthrowne by the Mongols, and eyther slaine or made captiues.

Some fetch the Tartarian pedegree from the ten Tribes of Israel, which Salmanassar carried captiues: and in their Maps^b place hordes of Danites, Nepthalites, &c. in the furthest Northerly and Easterly bounds of Asia; which yet are a great part of the world, not onely from Media (whither those people were conueyed) but from any part of the Assyrian Empire. (The King of Tabor, or Tybur, in these partes, is said to haue come into France, to Francis the French King about the yeare 1540. and was after at Mantua by Charles the Emperour burned, for secret sollicitation of him and other Christian Princes to Iudaisme.) And *Opmeerus*ⁱ reporteth of that their journey passing thorow Euphrates, miraculously staying his streame (to wonder at the vanitie of Writers) when they went into a region called Asarub, which was a yeare and a halfe trauell there to keepe their law; where neuer before had bene any habitation.

M. Paulus^k who with his father and vnckle liued many yeates in the Court of the great Chan, aboue three hundred yeares since, saith that they dwelled at first (if such wandring may be so called) in the North where they had no Lord ouer them, but paid tribute to a great Signor (there called Vncam, and here in these countreies Preslyer Iohn) to whom they paid the tenth of their beasts. But this Vncam, or Preslyer Iohn seeing their numbers euery where multiplying, deuised to disperse them through the world: which the Tartars perceiuing, with ioynt consent forsooke their former habitation, and departed thence far off into the North, denying further tribute vnto Vncam.

After they had there continued a certaine time, they chose to their King about the yeare 1162. one which was called Cingis Can, who ruled them with such modesty and iustice, that they loued and feared him as a god, his fame reducing all the other Tartars in other parts vnder his obedience. He thus strengthened, weary of those deserts, commanded them to arme themselves with bowes, and other weapons, and began to inuade and conquer Cities and Prouinces to his subiection, the principall inhabitants whereof he carried with him, kindly enterdayning them, leauing such discreet Governours in the same, that the people were secured in their persons and goods. When he had thus subdued about nine Prouinces, he sent his Embassador to Vncam, to demand his daughter in marriage: which Vncam with much indignation and many threatnings denying Cingis assembling his forces, marched against him, and by the way enquired of his Astrologers and Diuiners touching his successe. They taking a greene reed, cleft it asunder, placing the parts thereof a good distance one from another, and writ vpon the one the name of Vncam, and Cingis on the other; telling the King, that whiles they were reading their coniuring charmes, these reeds would fight together, and the victorie should remaine with him whose reede got the better: which accordingly came to passe in the fight of the Army: Cingis his reed ouercomming the other, as after Cingis himselfe himselfe did Vncam, whom he slew in the field, and possessed his daughter and state, wherein he continued fixe yeares conquering Cities and Kingdomes, and at last was wounded at a Castle called Thaigin, in the knee, whereof he died, and was buried in Mount Altay.

The next Emperour (after his account) was Cin Can; the third, Baythin Can; the fourth, Allan the brother of Mangu; Esu Can, the fifth; Mongu Can the sixth; the seventh Cublai Can, who not onely inherited what the former had conquered; but in the sixtieth yeare of his raigne subdued in a manner the rest of (those partes of) the world. The word Can signifieth Emperour. Wheresoever these Emperours die, they are buried in Altay afore said; they which carry him killing all they meete within the way, bidding them goe to the other world to serue their Emperour. For this end they also slay the best horses, to serue their dead Lord in another world. When Mangu Can was buried, there were more then ten thousand men slain by the souldiers which conueyed him. In this History of M. Paul, obserue that this catalogue of Emperours is vnfound: for W. de Rubruquis in Bathyes time, was at the Court of Mangu Can, to whom Bathy was subiect. Occoday is left out, and Esu put in. The cause of this error seemeth to be, the giuing of this name Can to the chiefe Dukes, as Bathy, &c. and the want of exact written Chronicles in those times amongst them.
