TO HIS MOST EXCELLENT MAIESTIE,

Charles

BY THE GRACE OF GOD, KING OF Great Brittaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c.

YOur Maiesties goodneſſe hath inuited this boldnes, in accepting my late Voluminous Twinnes of Pilgrimes; then alſo vouchſafing to aske of this my Pilgrimage; whether it were there annexed, and wherefore it was not (a ſufficient prouocation to This Edition and Dedication;) that I mention not Your Pietie, which cannot denie hereditarie reſpect, where your Royall Father (of euer bleſſed memorie, the King of learned and Learnings kings) manifeſted ſo much fauour, as to make it Ordinarie of his Bed chamber; where vpon occaſion of thoſe later Volumes then preſented, he queſtioned the difference, and profeſſed freely that he had read this worke ſeuen times, giuing thereof a preſent teſtimonie in his learned diſcourſe and cenſure. the Pilgrimes, which he made his Nightly taske, till God called him by fatall sickneſſe to a better Pilgrimage and of a more enduring Kingdome; euen the laſt day in which that Sunne yeelded his preſent rayes to this Citie, ſending an Honourable meſſenger with a fauourable meſſage of his gentle approbation and incouragement. Such a teſtimonie is a King of Teſtimonies, and no leſſe reward to the Author, then commendation of the VVorke to his worthy Heire, and to all Engliſh Readers. Once; it hath produced this my preſent aduenture on your Maieſtie, being otherwiſe ambitious, that as my ſelfe, ſo all mine may there acknowledge ſubiection and reference. I might adde alſo that ſome Additions here inſerted, had more fitly beene ranked in thoſe Pilgrime-files, which in more ſpeciall proprietie attended your Royall ſtanderd. And although theſe times ſeeme more to ſauour of Armes then to fauour Arts (inter arma ſilent Muſæ) yet Our Muſe is not of the ſofter ſocke, but more Maſculine, an armed Pallas, not bred in Poeticall myſterie, but borne a reall Hiſtorie, containing actions, factions, fractions of Religions and States through the whole VVorld of Place and Time; not nicer effeminate fictions of idle-buſie fanciſull braines.

Howeuer, may it pleaſe your Maieſtie to accept his well-intended indeuours, who hath borrowed of thouſands to furniſh this one VVorke of and to the VVorld, and to admit the Pilgrimes heartie acclamation of ioy, ioy, to Your happie Inauguration, with prayers that the vertuous goodneſſe of King IAMES may be ſucceeded and exceeded in the greatneſſe and vertues of Great Britaines Great Charles. AMEN.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD, GEORGE BY THE DIVINE PROVIDENCE, LORD Archbishop of CANTERBVRIE, Primate of all ENGLAND and Metropolitane, one of his Maiesties most Honourable Priuie Councell.

ABoue thirteene yeeres are passed since first your Graces auspicious name graced the Frontispice of this Pilgrimage, which promising the World and her Religions in foure Parts, hath (onely and that foure times) performed One. And as a late Queene ambitious of Souereigntie to all her Sonnes, found the Mathematicians which had foretold it, true, but her hopes false, that falling out by fatall succession in one Kingdom which shee had expected and indeuoured in diuers: so hath this our First-borne with successiue improuements beene so often the sole heire and successor to himselfe. Now the Fourth time doth this Pilgrimage glory in your Graces benediction, and although my trauelling braine hath not beene deliuered of those promised promised Pilgrimages, yet hath it by a strange superfætation procreated & lately presented to kisse your Graces hand, foure twins of Pilgrimes, which did not indeede formally pay the former debt, yet presumed to yeeld that which should bee as vsefull to the World in the knowledge of her remoter parts. These issues exhausting their Parents procreatiue powers, his hastned age expects & exacts Rest for the rest; and now for This, hauing been often quarelled for forcing men by frequent Additions in later Editions to renew their purchase of Purchas his renewed Pilgrimage, though he durst not bestow a Childs portion on it, yet would he not send it forth without a Fathers blessing. The Three Treatises annexed had found fitter place with my Pilgrimes, had they then comne to my hands: but their rarities merit a place, yea a welcome, in what place soeuer.

For the Author, if his reiterated paines; if his here borrowing of aboue thirteene hundred Authors of one or other kind, in I know not how many hundreths of their Epistles, Treatises and Relations; if his weekly redoubled cares of the Pulpit, daily and howerly of a weak body and not strong family; if the Argument it selfe being of Religions (though irreligious) to a most Reuerend and religious Prelate; if the worlds approbation pressing it to so often view and censure; if None of these, if All of them may not excuse so often resumed presumption on your Grace, yet is he forced by necessarie dutie, and the sum of all duties. Thankefulnes. Yea this I am sure will be full excuse, if not commendation, of that which I haue foure times obtruded, the testimonie of our late deceassed Soueraine of happie memorie (the King of literature also) King IAMES, who shewing me it by him in his Bed-chamber, said, that he had read it seuen times: Whereto if I should adde his iudicious questions of diuers particulars therein, his ready and milde satisfaction, his ample commendation, copious discourse, piercing wit, admirable memory, gentle affabilitie, I might seeme to some emulous carpers to magnifie my self, in relating that truth which rather indeede doth illustrate to all posteritie his worth then my worthinesse, God and Gods greatest Vicegerents, delighting rather to shew Grace then to admit Plea of Merit. It pleased sed his Maiestie to enquire further of the different scope of my Pilgrimage, & my then presented Pilgrims, which here also for the Readers sake I think fit to answer; that These Brethren holding much resemblance in name, nature and feature, yet differ both in the obiect and subiect: This being mine own in matter (though borrowed) and in forme of words and method: Whereas my Pilgrims are the Authors themselues, acting their owne parts in their owne words, onely furnished by me with such necessaries as that stage further required, and ordered according to my rules; here is a Pilgrimage to the Temples of the Worlds Citie, religionis ergo, with obuious and occasionall view of other things; there is a full Voyage, and in a method of Voyages, the whole Citie of the World, propounded together with the Temples; here the soule and some accessories, there the body and soule of the remoter World, with (ὁ τῦ κόσμε κοσμός) her rarer furniture; this from the eare, that from the eye, this briefer notes, that the Text it selfe. How euer, such was his Maiesties fauour as to adde for my further encouragement, his promise to heare at large all those Pilgrims, which was nightly also performed, vntill his fatall sickenesse called him to enioy a nightlesse day in the heauenly Kingdome.

Euen the last day on which this Citie saw him, it pleased him with gracious approbation of the former, to impose another taske on me, by an Honourable messenger, with promise of reward, which had almost in a dangerous sickenesse buried me, and was buried (with those hopes) in his Maiesties graue; whose Funerals this Citie hath beene forced euer since to solemnise, with armies of Mourners pressed by Pestilence, to attend & follow His Corps with their owne: And if some liuing remaines of him had not shined in his Sonne King CHARLES, in that Sun-set, what a Chaos of darkenesse had befalne vs, which lost that day, and yet saw no night? And long may your Grace shine as a Starre of greatest magnitude, attending neere our happy Charles-waine, and euer may that Royall Race bee the Load-starre of our Church and State vnder the Sunne of righteousnesse, euen so long as Bootes shall attend on that bright constellation.

May it please your Grace to pardon this talkatiue boldnesse, and to permit mee also to mention your late fauour, and seconding that Royall testimonie, when notwithstanding the dreadfull infection, your gracious affection admitted free communication with me, intended a free and bountifull Collation on me, and extended so large a collaudation to those my Pilgrimes; neither by their voluminous prolixitie deterred from reading them; nor then deterring my suspended scrupulous thoughts by your iudicious seueritie, but with ingenuous sinceritie yeelding a testimonie so able and ample, that though I blush to record it, yet I now repent not of so vast vndertakings, which such iudgement deemeth so profitable, that the studious in this kind of literature neede goe no further: which was the scope of those voluminous Collections, to coniure as it were all Trauelling spirits into that one Pilgrime-centre, *and at once to make the World Eye-witnesse to it selfe. To the Reader.

AND now, READER, The PILGRIME comes vnto thee the fourth time, with whom hee dares be somewhat bolder. Being, I know not by what naturall inclination, addicted to the studie of Historie, my heart would sometimes obiect a selfe-loue, in following my priuate delights in that kinde. At last I resolued to turne the pleasures of my studies into studious paines, that others might againe, by delightfull studie, turne my paines into their pleasure. I heere bring Religion from Paradise to the Ark, and thence follow her round about the World, and (for her sake) obserue the World it selfe, with the seueral Countries and Peoples therin; the chiefe Empires and States: their priuate and publique Customes; their manifold chances and changes; also the wonderfull and most remarkeable effects of Nature; Euents of Diuine and Humane Prouidence, Rarities of Art; and whatsoeuer I finde by Relations of Historians, as I passe, most worthie the writing. Religion is my more proper aime, and therefore I insist longer on the description of whatsoeuer I finde belonging thereto; declaring the Religion of the first Men the corrupting of it before and after the Floud; the Iewish obseruations; the Idols, Idolatries, Temples, Priests, Feasts, Fasts, Opinions, Sects, Orders, and sacred Customes of the Heathens; with the Alterations and Successions that haue therein happened, from the beginning of the World hitherto.

This Worke I diuide into foure parts. This first exhibiteth the Relations and Theologicall discouerie of ASIA, AFRICA, and AMERICA: The second when God will, shall doe the same for EVROPE: The third and fourth, in a second visitation, shall obserue such things in the same places as I holde most remarkeable in the Christian and Ecclesiasticall Historie, and that according to the same Method; which is squared in the Whole by order of Place, going still out of one Countrie into the next; in each particular part and seuerall Countrie, by the order of Time, deducing our Relations, so farre as we haue Others foot-prints to guide vs, (though not exactly naming the day and yeere, and determining questions in Chronologicall controuersies, yet in some conuenient sort) from the ancient times, and by degrees descending to the present.

If thou demandest what profit may be hereof; I answere, that heere Students of all sorts may finde matter fitting their studies: The naturall Philosophers may obserue the different constitution and commixtion of the Elements, their diuers working in diuers places, the varietie of heauenly influence, of the yeerely seasons, of the Creatures in the Aire, Water, Earth: They which delight in State-affaires, may obserue the varietie of States and Kingdomes, with their differing Lawes, Polities, and Customes, their Beginnings and Endings. The Diuine, besides the former, may heere contemplate the workes of God, not in Creation alone, but in his Iustice and Prouidence, pursuing sinne euery where with such dreadfull plagues; both bodily, in rooting vp and pulling downe the mightiest Empires; and especially in spirituall Iudgements, giuing vp so great a part of the World

World vnto the efficacie of Errour in ſtrong deluſions, that hauing forſaken the Fountaine of liuing waters, they ſhould dig vnto themſelues theſe broken Pits that can hold no water; deuout in their ſuperſtitions, and ſuperſtitious in their deuotions; agreeing all in this, that there ſhould bee a Religion, diſagreeing from each other, and the TRVTH, in the practice thereof.

Likewiſe our Miniſters may be incited vnto all godly labours in their function of preaching the Goſpel, ſeeing otherwiſe, for outward and bodily ceremonies, the Turkes and Iewes (in their manifold deuotions in their Oratories euery day) and other Heathen would conuince vs of idleneſſe. And let mee haue leaue to ſpeake it for the glory of God, and the good of our Church; I cannot finde any Prieſts in all this my Pilgrimage, of whom wee haue any exact Hiſtory, but take more bodily paines in their deuotions, than is performed by not-preaching Miniſters, eſpecially in Countrie-villages, where on the weeke dayes they cannot haue occaſion, or company, for publique prayers: & therfore if they read only the Seruice on holy dayes, and neuer ſtudie for more (which I would it were not the idle practiſe of ſome) euen the Heathen ſhall riſe vp in iudgement againſt them. I ſubſcribe with hand and practice to our Liturgie, but not to ſuch Lethargie: whoſe darkeneſſe is ſo much the more intollerable, in this Sun-ſhine of the Goſpell, wherein wee haue a gracious King, ſo diligent a frequenter of Sermons; and Reuerend Biſhops (notwithſtanding other their weighty Eccleſiaſticall employments yet) diligent Preachers.

The ſtudious of Geographie may ſomewhat be helped in that kinde: not that we intend an exact Geographie, in mentioning euery Citie with the degrees of Longitude and Latitude, but yet limiting euery Countrie in his true ſituation and bounds; and performing happily more then ſome, which take vpon them the title of Geographers, as their chiefe profeſſion: and more then any, which I know hath done in our language.

He which admireth and almoſt adoreth the Capuchine, Ieſuite, or other Romaniſts, for ſelfe-inflicted whippings, faſtings, watchings, vowes of obedience, pouertie, and ſingle life, and their not ſparing their limmes, and liues for their will-worſhips, may ſee, in all theſe, the Romaniſts equalled by Heathens, if not out-ſtripped, euen by the reports of the Ieſuites and other their Catholiques. Bodily exerciſe profiteth little, but Godlineſſe is profitable vnto all, and hath the promiſe of this life and that which is to come. 1. Tim. 4. 8.

Here alſo the Reader may ſee moſt of their Popiſh Rites, deriued out of Chaldean, Egyptian, and other Fountaines of Paganiſme, as in the later taske we ſhall haue more occaſion to ſhew. Heere euery Engliſh man may ſee cauſe to praiſe God continually for the light of his truth, communicated to vs: whereas it is (in compariſon) but a ſmall part of the World, that ſoundeth the ſacred name of Ieſus; and of thoſe that profeſſe it, how infinit are the ſects and ſuperſtitions? God hath ſhewed his Word vnto our IACOB (THE DEFENDER OF HIS FAITH) his Statutes and his Iudgements vnto this ISRAEL of Great Brittaine. Hee hath not dealt ſo with euery Nation, neither haue the Heathen, nor ſcarcely, if ſcarcely, any other Chriſtian Nation, ſo much knowledge of his iudgements. And yet how ſeditious are ſome? how prophane are others? how vnthankfull the moſt? That beaſtly Sinne of Drunkenneſſe, that biting Sinne of Vſurie, that Deuilliſh Sinne of Swaggering, ruffling in deformitie of clothes, like monſtrous Chimæras, and barking out a multiformitie of oathes, like helliſh Cerberi, as if men could not be Gallants, vnleſſe they turned Deuils. Theſe are the paiments wee returne vnto the Lord, in ſtead of prayers for, and loyaltie to his Maieſtie; peaceableneſſe and charitie to each others; modeſtie and ſobrietie in our ſelues.

For the forme, I haue ſought in ſome places, with varietie of phraſe, in all, with varietie of matter, to draw thee along with mee in this tedious Pilgrimage. Some names are written diuerſly, according to the differing Copies which I followed, which thy diſcretion will eaſily conceiue. I doe not in euery queſtion ſet downe my my cenſure; ſometimes, becauſe it were more then needes; ſometimes becauſe of the difficultie. I mention Authors ſometimes of meane quality, for the meaneſt haue ſence to obſerue that which themſelues ſee, more certainly then the contemplations and Theorie of the more learned. I would alſo acknowledge the labour of the meaneſt. I haue laboured to reduce Relations to their firſt Authors, ſetting their names to their Allegations: the want whereof hath much troubled mee, whilſt the moſt leaue out their Authors, as if their owne aſſertion were ſufficient authoritie in things borrowed. I haue (to my great paines) contracted and Epitomized whole Volumes (and ſome very large) into one Chapter; a thing vſuall through theſe Relations. Where I haue found plentifull diſcourſe for Religion (my chiefe aime) I am ſhorter in other Relations; and where I haue had leſſe helpes for that diſcouerie, I inſiſt more on the wonders of Nature, and diſcoueries by Sea and Land, with other remarkeable accidents. Theſe Rarities of Nature I haue ſometimes ſuted in a differing phraſe and figure of ſpeech; not that I affect a fantaſticall ſingularitie; but that theſe Diuine workes might appeare in Robes, if not fitting their Maieſtie, yet ſuch as our Word-Robe did willingly without any great affectation or ſtudie, affoord: not without example of the Scripture, which vſeth to bring in the mute Creatures, ſpeaking and performing (as it were) other perſonall offices; nor without this effect to make the Reader ſtay a while with obſeruation and wonder; beſides that, variety of it ſelfe is delightſome.

If any miſlike the fulneſſe in ſome places, and the barrenneſſe of words in others; let them conſider, we handle a World, where are Mountaines and Vallies, fertile habitations, and ſandy deſarts: and others ſteps, whom I follow, hold me ſometimes in a narrower way, which elſewhere take more libertie. I touch here and there a Controuerſie; both for illuſtration of Hiſtorie; and in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, to ſhew my affectation to the Truth.

Now if any man thinke, that it were better theſe rotten bones of the paſſed, and ſtinking bodies of the Preſent ſuperſtitions were buried, then thus raked out of their graues; beſides that which hath beene ſaid, I anſwere, That I haue ſufficient example in the Scriptures, which were written for our learning to the ends of the World, and yet depaint vnto vs the vgly face of Idolatry in ſo many Countries of the Heathens, with the Apoſtaſies, Sects, and Hereſies of the Iewes, as in our firſt and ſecond booke is ſhewed: and the Ancient Fathers alſo, Iuſtin, Tertullian, Clemens, Irenæus, Origen, and more fully, Euſebius, Epiphanius, Philaſtrius and Auguſtine, haue gone before vs in their large Catalogues of Hereſies and falſe Opinions.

I appeale vnto any indifferent Reader (for ſome not Readers, nor indifferent, I reſpect not, whoſe Authoritie, perhaps, would be but indifferent, if they muſt firſt win it by being Authors of ſo big, I dare not ſay, ſo great volumes) if there be any, either Idolatries, or other impieties, in this worke of mine expreſſed beyond theirs which heere out of the Scriptures are mentioned; Stewes in the Temple, humane Sacrifices to Moloch, Tamuz his mourning, Sodomites, Inceſts, with other fleſhly, worldly, beaſtly, Deuilliſh monſters of iniquitie, obtruded vnder Religions Sacred Mantle, amongſt the Amorites, Egyptians and Iewes, before the comming of Chriſt: or greater darkeneſſe and more helliſh then when the Light it ſelfe was made manifeſt, and the Darkneſſe comprehended it not: Herods butcheries, Iudas his treacherie, the blaſphemies of the Scribes, Prieſts, and Phariſes, and the crucifying of the Sonne of God, by men, for men: or ſince, if as ſtinking, loathſome, monſtrous abuſes haue not beene offered to the Chriſtian Name in worſe impoſtures and pollutions, by the Nicholaitans, and other incarnat Deuils, recorded by thoſe Fathers and other Eccleſiaſticall Authors, then any of thoſe heere in this booke obſerued: to which, if that which Epiphanius hath written of the Gnoſtikes alone, fully and particularly, be conſidered, all theſe Ethnike and Mahumetan ſuperſtitions would comparatiuely be iuſtified: So true is that olde ſaying, Corruptio optimi peſſima; and of the Truth it ſelfe, Sodom and her daughters not comparable to Ieruſalem with hers; and of the iuſteſt Iudge, that it ſhall bee eaſier at the day of Iudgement for Thoſe then Theſe. And what indeede doth more ſet forth the glory of Gods grace, then in pardoning; his power, then in reforming; his juſtice, then in giuing men vp to ſuch deluſions? Are not theſe the Trophees and glorious victories of THE CROSSE OF CHRIST, that hath ſubuerted the Temples, Oracles, Sacrifices, and Seruices of the Deuill? And maiſt not thou ſee herein, what Man is, and thou thy ſelfe maiſt bee, if God leaue thee to thy ſelfe? Read therefore, with prayſes vnto GOD, the Father of thy light; and prayers for theſe Heathens, that GOD may bring them out of the ſnare of the Deuill, & that Chriſt may be his ſaluation to the ends of the World. And let me alſo obtaine thy prayers in this my Pilgrimage, to be therein directed, to the glorie of GOD, and good of my Countrie. Euen ſo LORD IESVS.

THE CATALOGVE OF THE AVTHORS.

I Haue heere mustered in thy view, Courteous Reader, those Authors which from mine owne sight, I haue mentioned in this Work. Some of them, I confesse are of no great note, and some are noted for notorious Counterfeits: but all are of some vse, and meete to bee heere placed, that they may haue their due: Some of thankfulnesse for their worthy and great industry (wherein those deserue a place, though otherwise obscure, who by their Nauigations and Discoueries haue made the World knowne to it selfe.) Others, that they may be knowne to be lyes and meere Changelings. In this, and all kinds, Sacred, Profane, Learned, Vnlearned, Ancient, Moderne, Good, and Bad; I haue toyled my selfe to benefit thee. Many more might be added, which are cited in this Worke. But because I haue borrowed them on others credit, and not seene them my selfe (and Many for other causes) I haue not here mentioned them. The Letter F. signifies that wee haue a Fragment of the said Authour, and Pf. brands him for a Counterfeit. The Sacred Authours, or Scribes rather, to the Holy Ghost, are Transcendents, and quite beyond this Predicament. We haue also omitted the Apocrypha: besides those which haue escaped vs in the Collection.

RELATIONS OF THE WORLD, AND THE RELIGIONS OBSERVED IN ALL AGES AND PLACES DISCOVERED, FROM THE CREATION VNTO THIS PRESENT.

Of the first beginnings of the World, and Religions: and of the Regions and Religions of BABYLONIA, ASSYRIA, SYRIA, PHŒNICIA, and PALESTINA.

THE FIRST BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Of GOD, one in Nature, * three in Persons, the FATHER, SONNE, and HOLY GHOST.

THE [a] Poets were wont to lay the Foundations and First Beginnings of their Poeticall Fabrikes, with invocation of their gods and Muses: although those workes were sutable to such worke-men, who according to their names were Makers, of those both Poems and gods. I, as farre short of their learning, as beyond them in the scope of my desires, would so farre imitate their manner, in this matter which I intend; that although I enuy not to some their foolish claime of that Poeticall (not Propheticall) inheritance, to make my Maker: and my matter as in a Historie (not a Poeme) must be made to my hands: Yet in a Historie of Religion, which hath or should haue GOD to be the Alpha and Omega; the Efficient, from whom; the End, to whom it proceedeth: the Matter of whom, the Forme by whom and whose direction, it entreateth; I could not but make a Religion to begin this discourse of Religion at him; this being the way, which all men take, to come to him. First therefore, I beseech him, that is the First and Last, the Eternall Father, in the name of his Beloued and Onely Sonne, by the light of his Holy and All-seeing Spirit, to guide mee in this Perambulation of the World, so to take view of the Times, Places, and Customes therein, as may testifie my religious bond to him, whose I am, and whom I serue: and the seruice I owe vnto his Church, if at least this my Mite may be seruiceable to the least of the least therein; that as he is in himselfe the Beginning and Ending, so he would be, in some measure, of this Worke the Author and Finisher; that in the beholding this Mappe of so infinitely diuersified Superstitions, we may be more thankefull for, and more zealous of, that true and onely Religion, which Christ by his Bloud hath procured, by his Word reuealed, by his Spirit sealed, and will reward eternally in the Heauens. And hereto let all Christian Readers say with me Amen, to him which is * Amen, that Witnesse faithfull and true, that forsaking all the by-wayes which this Labyrinth exhibiteth, we may receiue his Witnesse as faithfull and true Disciples, that follow the Lambe whithersoeuer hee goeth, and will not heare the voice of strangers.

In the next place, I hold it not vnfit briefly to expresse somewhat of him, which indeed and throughly can neuer be expressed. For the wisest of the Prophets hath said of him and to him, that the [a] Heauens and Heauens of Heauens, are not able to containe him: and the chiefe, or at least he which was not inferiour to the chiefe of the Apostles, as rauished with such a height, and swallowed in such a depth, cryed, [c] O Altitudo, O the deepnesse of the riches, both of the wisdome and knowledge of God! how vnsearchable are his iudgements, and his wayes past finding out? As for my selfe, I may most fitly borrow the words of AGVR, [d] Surely I am more foolish than any man, and haue not the vnderstanding of a man in me: For I haue not learned wisdome, nor attayned to the knowledge of holy things. Yea, indeed, Who hath ascended vp to Heauen, and descended? Who hath gathered the Winde in his fist? Who hath bound the Waters in a Garment? Who hath established all the ends of the World? What is his name, and what is his Sonnes name, if thou canst tell? Tell this Mysterie, we cannot. And yet so farre as he hath told vs by his Word and Workes, we may. Of the one the next words testifie: Euery word of God is pure: Of the other elsewhere, [e] The Heauens declare the glory of [f] God: and, The inuisible things of him, that is, his eternall Power and God-head, are seene by the Creation of the World being considered in his workes. [g] God hath not (therefore) left himselfe without witnesse, who besides the testimonie of Nature, written in our hearts, hath added those of the Scripture and of the Creature, that this three-fold Cord might not be easily broken, and by the mouth of two or three Witnesses, we might learne plainly that he is, and in some measure what hee is.

That there is a GOD: Heauen and Earth, Angels and Deuils, Man and Beast, Reason and Sense, Greeke and Barbarian, Science in the most, in the rest conscience (as a thousand Witnesses) all that wee see, and which wee see not, say and proclaime, that all may see, and in manner palpably feele his present Deitie; in [h] whom wee liue, moue, and haue our beeing. [i] This is a common notion, and impression, sealed vp in the minde of euery man: a remnant of integritie after the fall of Adam, a substance or blessing in the dead Elme, sparkles of fire raked vp vnder the ashes, which cannot dye whiles the soule liueth. What a one hee is; is not so deeply ingrauen in Nature, whose Owlish eyes are dazeled with the brightnesse of this light: But when here we might renue the question: What is his name, and what is his Sonnes name? hee himselfe answereth in Scripture by attributing to himselfe such names, whereby we may know him as the Creator from all Creatures, as the true GOD from all false gods: and so farre as is meete and necessary to our saluation. Hee then that dwelleth in light inaccessible, whom no man hath seene, nor can see [k] as he is, in this our infancie, hath manifested himselfe vnto vs, [l] as through a Glasse darkely, that wee may with Moses haue some glancing [m] view of his hinder parts.

These Names and diuine Attributes I meane, not with large explications here to expresse, as not so fitting my abilitie or purpose, and being by others [n] learnedly done already: Yet, to say a little, where the tongues of Men and Angels cannot say enough; the Scripture attributeth, or He in Scripture attributeth to Himselfe, Names, in regard both of Author and Obiect, Diuine; sometimes (as they terme it) in the [o] concret; sometimes in the [p] abstract; the the first signifying his Perfect subsistence; the other his Supersubsisting perfection; those more fitted to our capacitie; these to his diuinitie: who eternally and essentially is, whatsoeuer hee is said to be, or in himselfe to haue. And, as lines infinitely differing in their Circumference, are one in the Centre; and the Sunne-beames dispersed through the World, are in the Sunne but one; and the same neither beames nor lines, but farre more excellent in that indiuisible and most perfect Vnitie: so, and more then so, all perfections of the creatures, are in the Creator more defecated and perfect; yea, one perfection and superexcellent Excellencie; and this [q] one himselfe, euery way infinite and incomprehensible; nothing beeing in him either by participation, or as a qualitie, or as a naturall facultie, or as a mutable passion, or in such sort simply, as we (whose vnderstandings are limited in their finite bounds, and for that cause receiuing in a finite measure, conceiuing in a finite manner) doe or can comprehend. Who can take vp the Ocean in a spoone? and yet these are both finite, and hold neerer proportion then the great Creator, and the greatest of creatures. Yet is this glimpse of this bright shining Sunne

Sunne comfortable thorow this chinke and Key-hole of our bodily prison, and euen the taste of these Delicacies, more then sweet and delectable.

Some of these names are attributed to him in regard of his beeing [r] in it selfe considered, as Iehouah, Iah, Eheie: and some in regard of the persons which all haue that one beeing, and euery of which haue all that being, which [s] in it selfe is individually one: and their seuerall manners of hauing it, is that which is called their personall proprietie and incommunicable. Such a name (say some) is Elohim [t] applyed to the Father, Sonne, and Holy-Ghost, in signification Mightie, in forme plurall. Some of these names are such as are communicated to creatures also, but with this difference, that those which in the creature are borrowed, imperfect, accidentall; are in him Nature, Perfection, Substance. Some are absolutely considered as hee is GOD blessed for euer; some relatiuely with respect vnto his creatures. Some againe [u] are negatiuely spoken, others affirmatiuely: some properly, others by a figure. But this is indeed a thorny way, [x] of which we may say with Augustine, Nothing is missed more dangerously, nothing sought more laboriously, nothing found more profitably. Euen the Angelicall Seraphins had their [y] sixe wings, whereof two serued to execute their prompt obedience; two couered their feet, because of mans weakenesse not able to comprehend their glorie; and yet they themselues thus glorious, with two other wings couered their face, as not able to endure the brightnesse of a greater glorie. Let vs then be wise, but to [z] sobrietie. Let vs goe to the Lambe to vnclaspe this sealed Booke. For in him all the treasures of wisedome and knowledge are hid. Let vs so know as we may be knowne, and so * comprehend as we may rather bee comprehended. Let vs feare, loue, beleeue, and serue him: and then GOD will [a] teach the humble his way, and [b] They which will doe his will, shall know of his doctrine. This is our way to eternall life, thus to know him, and whom he hath sent, Iesus Christ: if namely we so learne [c] Christ, as the Truth is in Iesus, if we [d] become fooles that we may be wise, and putting off the old man, be renued in the spirit of our minds, and put on the new man which after GOD is shapen in righteousnesse and true holinesse. Otherwise, we [e] know nothing as we ought to know; otherwise, we know nothing more, nor so much as the Deuils know: [f] The feare of the Lord is the beginning of this wisedome. And for this cause hath he called himselfe, and proclaimed those his Names, [g] IEHOVA, Iehoua, strong, mercifull, and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in goodnesse and truth, &c. and the like in other places; not that we may know to know, (a foolish curiositie) but that hauing such light, we may beleeue and walke in the light, that we may be children of the light. Iehoua (if we may so name it) the most essentiall (and after the Iewish tradition, ineffable) [h] name of GOD, is not therefore onely reuealed vnto vs, that we may know him in himselfe and of himselfe to bee [i] Yesterday, to day, and the same [k] for euer, which is, which was, which is to come: but also as the Creator, of whom, in whom, and for whom are all things: and as the Redeemer, which is knowne by his Name Iehoua (as himselfe [l] interpreteth it) by giuing a reall being, and accomplishment to his promises. In which one name (as in others of like signification) is expressed the Simplicitie, Immutabilitie, Infinitenesse, Blessednesse, Eternitie, Life, Perfection, and other Attributes of GOD. When he calleth himselfe Strong, therein is declared his almighty power, whether we vnderstand it actually in producing and preseruing all things in Heauen and earth; or absolutely, whereby he is able to doe euen those things, which in his wisedome he doth not; whereby he is able to doe all things which either [m] in themselues (as implying contradiction) or with him (as imperfections) are not impossible, both those kinds not excluding, but concluding the power of GOD, which because he is Almightie, [n] cannot lie or denie himselfe.

What should I speake of his Wisedome, whereby all things are open in his sight, both himselfe, and his creatures, past, present, or to come, and that not as past or future, but in one, eternall, perfect, certaine, immediate, act of knowledge, which in regard of second causes are necessary or contingent, or in effect but meerely possible, and neuer actually subsisting? Truth is in him as a roote, from whence it is first in the being: next in the vnderstanding; thirdly, in the writing or saying of the creature. True he is in himselfe, in his workes ordinary, and extraordinary, and in his Word reuealed by the Prophets and Apostles. What should I adde of his goodnesse, grace, loue, Mercie, Iustice, and other his Attributes and names not yet mentioned? as Adonai, which signifieth the dominion of GOD due to him, by Creation, by purchase, by mutuall couenant: Saddai, which signifieth his All-sufficiencie, and others. Yea in one Chapter [o] Petrus Galatinus rehearseth threescore and twelue names of GOD out of the Rabbines workes, multiplyed and diuersified in tenne sorts, which make in all seuen hundred and twenty names. To dilate of these at large would aske so many large Commentaries, and yet euen then should we still find this GOD incomprehensible; of whom we may, in respect of our capacitie, rather say what he is not, then what he is; whose goodnesse is not to bee distinguished by qualitie, or his greatnesse discerned by quantitie, or his eternitie measured by time, or his presence bounded by place: [p] of whom all things are to bee conceiued, [q] beyond whatsoeuer we can conceiue.

The Persons which communicate in this Diuine Nature, are three [r]: This is their owne witnesse of themselues; There are three which beare record in Heauen, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, and these three are one. This mystery was manifested in the [s] baptisme of Christ, and in our Baptisme in the name of the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghost. The Angels vnto this glorious Trinitie [t] sing their Holy, Holy, Holy: the Scripture it selfe applying that which there may be interpreted of the Father, both to the Sonne, *Ioh.*12.41. and to the Spirit, Act. 28.25. These with other places doe also signifie their personall distinction. The Creation was not onely the Fathers worke, but also of the other Persons, as appeareth by that Nowne plurall, ioyned to a Verbe singular, in the first word of Moses, and other like plurall appellations, *Es.*44.24. and *Es.*54.5. 2.*Sam.*7.23. and many such places. The Apostles apply the couenant, worship, and workes of GOD mentioned in the Old Testament, To the Sonne, and Holy Ghost in the New, neither can the one be the Sonne, or the other the Spirit of GOD, naturally and in proper manner of speech, but they must also subsist in the same Nature with the Father, which being infinite, spirituall, immutable, can be but one, which must wholly, or not at all, be communicated. In a word, the equalitie, the names, the properties, the works, the worship peculiar to GOD, are applyed to the Sonne and Holy Ghost, equally with the Father. Which they that list, may learne in such as especially treat of this subiect: where this mysterie of the Trinitie is auerred against all Heretikes, Iewes, and Infidels: Yea, by some [u] also, out of their owne authentike Authors, whether they receiue Scriptures, Rabbins, Philosophers, or any other. I intend onely to anoint the doore-posts of this house with this Discourse, that I may make a fitter entry thereinto, leauing the fuller handling of this mysterie, to such as purposely frame their whole Edifice with large Common-places hereof; which yet alway must be more certainely receiued by Faith, then conceiued by reason: according to that of IVSTIN MARTYR, Vnitas in Trinitate intelligitur, & Trinitas in Vnitate noscitur: id vero quomodo fiat, nec alios scrutari velim, nec ipse mihi possum [x] satisfacere. Thinke of [y] one, a threefold light will dazell thee; distinguish into three, and an infinite Vnitie will swallow thee. Vnus, & si dici debet, Vnissimus, saith [z] Bernard.

Hauing thus with trembling hand written of that dreadfull Mysterie of the Trinitie, of which we may say, Cum dicitur, Non dicitur: It is not told with telling, nor can be described by description; The next to be considered are the Works of GOD, which are either inward and immanent, or outward and transient. The inward are eternall and vnchangeable, indeed no other but himselfe, although accounted and called workes, in regard of their effects in the World, and of our conceiuing. For [a] all the proprieties of GOD are infinite, as they are immanent in himselfe, yet in their transitiue and forren effects are stinted and limitted to the modell and state of the Creature, wherein the same effects are wrought. Such an immanent worke we conceiue, and name that [b] Decree of GOD touching the Creation of the World, with his prouident disposing all and euery part thereof, according to the Counsel of his own will, and especially touching the reasonable creatures, Angels and Men, in respect of their eternall state in Saluation or Damnation. The outward works of GOD are, in regard of Nature, Creation and Prouidence: in regard of Grace, Redemption and Saluation, in the fulnesse of time performed by our Emanuel, GOD manifested in the flesh, true GOD and perfect Man, in the Vnitie of one Person, without [c] confusion, conuersion, or separation. [d] This is verie GOD and life eternall, IESVS CHRIST, the Sonne of GOD, our Lord, which was conceiued by the HOLY GHOST, borne of the Virgin MARY, suffered vnder Pontius Pilate, who was crucified, dead and buried; descended into Hell: rose againe the third day; he ascended into Heauen; where he sitteth at the right hand of GOD the Father Almightie, from whence he shall come to iudge the quicke and dead. And to such as are sonnes, [e] GOD doth

CHAP. II.

Of the creation of the World.

THey which would without danger behold the Eclipse of the Sunne, vse not to fixe their eyes directly vpon that bright eye of the World, (although by this case darkned) but in water behold the same with more ease and lesse perill. How much fitter is it likewise for our tender eyes in beholding the light of that Light, [a] The Father of lights, [b] in whom is no darkenesse, to diuert our eyes from that brightnesse of glory, and behold him (as wee can) in his workes? The first of which in execution, was the creation of the World, plainly described by Moses, in the booke of Genesis, both for the Author, matter, manner, and other circumstances; Reason it selfe thus farre subscribing, as appeareth in her Schollers, (the most of the Heathens and Philosophers in all ages) That this World was made by a greater then the World. In proving this, or illustrating the other, a large field of discourse might be ministred: neither doe I know any thing, wherein a man may more improue the reuenewes of his learning, or make greater shew with a little, decking and pruning himselfe, like Æsops Iay, or Horace his Chough, with borrowed feathers; than in this matter of the Creation, written of (after their manner) by so many, Iewes, Ethnickes, Heretikes, and Orthodoxe Christians. For my part it shall be sufficient to write a little, setting downe so much of the substance of this subiect, as may make more plaine way, and easier introduction, into our ensuing History: leauing such as are more studious of this knowledge, to those which haue purposely handled this argument, with Commentaries vpon Moses Text: of which, besides many moderne Writers (some of which haue almost oppressed the Presse with their huge Volumes) there are diuers of the Primitiue, middle, and decayed times of the Church: a cloud indeed of Authors, both for their number, and the varietie of their opinions, the most of them couering, rather then discouering that Truth (which can bee but one) and more to beleeued in their confuting others, then proving their owne assertions. Their store through this disagreeing is become a sore, and burthen, whiles we must consult with many, and dare promise to our selues no surer footing: yet cleauing as fast as we can to the letter, implering the assistance of the Creators Spirit, let vs draw as neere as we may to the sense of Moses words, the beginning whereof is, [c] In the beginning GOD created the Heauen and the Earth. Wherein (to omit the endlesse and diuers interpretations of others, obtruding allegoricall, anagogicall, mysticall senses on the letter) is expressed the Author of this worke to be GOD, Elohim; which word, as is said, is of the plurall number, insinuating the holy Trinitie; the Father as the Fountaine of all goodnesse, the Sonne as the Wisdome of the Father, the holy Ghost as the power of the Father and the Sonne, concurring in this worke. The action is creating or making of [d] nothing, to which is required a power supernaturall and infinite. The Time was the [e] beginning of time, when as before there had neither been Time, nor any other Creature.

The worke is called Heauen and Earth; which [f] some interpret all this bodily world heere propounded in the summe, and after distinguished in parcells, according to the sixe dayes seuerall workes. Some vnderstand thereby the [g] First matter; which others [h] apply only to the word Earth, expounding Heauen to be that, which is called Empyreum, including also the spirituall and super-celestiall inhabitants. Againe, others, whom I willingly follow, [i] extend the word Heauen to a larger ſignification, therein comprehending thoſe three Heauens, which the Scriptures mention: (one whereof is this lower, where the birds of the Heauen doe flye, reaching from the Earth to the Sphere of the Moone: the ſecond, the viſible Planets and fixed Starres, with the firſt Moueable: the third, called the Heauen of Heauens, the third Heauen and Paradiſe of GOD) together with all the Hoſt of them. By Earth, they vnderſtand this Globe, conſiſting of Sea and Land, with all the creatures therein. The firſt Verſe they hold to be a generall propoſition of the Creation of all Creatures, [k] viſible and inuiſible, perfected in [l] ſixe dayes; as many places of Scripture teſtifie: which as concerning the viſible, Moſes handleth after particularly, largely, and plainly, contenting himſelfe with briefe mention of thoſe inuiſible creatures, both [m] good and [n] bad, as occaſion is offered in the following parts of his Hiſtorie. In the preſent, [o] he omitteth the particular deſcription of their Creation, leſt ſome (as Iewes and Heretikes haue done) ſhould take occaſion to attribute the Creation to Angels, as aſſiſtants: or ſhould, by the excellencie of that Nature, depainted in due colours, be carryed to worſhipping of Angels: a ſuperſtition which men haue embraced, towards the viſible creatures, farre in ſeriour both to Angels and themſelues.

Moſes proceedeth therefore to the deſcription of the firſt matter, and the creatures thereof framed and formed. For touching thoſe inuiſible creatures, both the Angels and their heauenly habitation, howſoeuer they are circumſcribed, and haue their proper and moſt perfect ſubſtance, yet according to the interpretation of Diuine, [p] their nature differeth from that of other creatures, celeſtiall or terreſtriall, as not being made of that firſt matter, whereof theſe conſiſt. Let vs therefore labour rather to be like the Angels in grace, that we may be like vnto them in glory, than prie too curiouſly into their [q] Nature (to our vnderſtandings in manner ſupernaturall) and endeauour more, in heeding the way which leadeth to that Heauen of the Bleſſed, than buſie our wits too buſily in deſcrying or deſcribing it. Onely thus much wee may obſerue thereof, that it is beyond all reach of our obſeruation: in regard of ſubſtance not ſubiect to corruption, alteration, paſſion, motion: in quantitie, [r] many dwelling places, moſt ſpacious and ample; in quality, a Paradiſe, faire, ſhining, delightſome, wherein no euill can be preſent or imminent; no good thing abſent; a meere tranſcendent, which eye hath not ſeene, nor eare heard, nor the heart of man can conceiue. Where the [s] Tabernacle of GOD ſhall be with men, and he dwell with them, and ſhall be [t] all in all vnto them; where the pure in heart ſhall ſee him, and euen our bodily eyes ſhall behold that moſt glorious of creatures, the Sunne of righteouſneſſe, and Sonne of GOD, Chriſt Ieſus.

Embracing theſe things with Hope, let vs returne to Moſes his deſcription of the ſenſible World: who ſheweth, that that Heauen and Earth, which now wee ſee, were in the beginning, or firſt degree of their being, an Earth without forme and void, a darkned depth and waters: a matter of no matter, and a forme without forme; a rude and indigeſted Chaos, or confuſion of matters, rather to be [u] beleeued than comprehended of vs. This is the ſecond naturall beginning. For, after the expreſſing of the matter, followeth that which Philoſophers call a ſecond naturall Principle, [x] Priuation, the want of that forme, of which this matter was capable, which is accidentally a naturall principle, required in regard of generation, not of conſtitution, heere deſcribed by that part next vs, Earth, which was without forme, as is ſaid, and void. This was the internall conſtitution: the externall was, darkneſſe vpon the face of the deepe. [y] Which Deepe compriſeth both the Earth before mentioned, and the viſible Heauens alſo, called a Depth, as to our capacitie infinite, and pliant to the Almightie hand of the Creator: called alſo Waters, [z] not becauſe it was perfect waters, which was yet confuſed, but becauſe of a certaine reſemblance, not only in the vniformity thereof, but alſo of that want of ſtability, whereby it could not abide together, but as the Spirit of GOD moued vpon theſe waters, to ſuſtaine them; and [*] as the Hen ſitteth on her egges to cheriſh and quicken, as Hierome interpreteth the word, ſo to maintaine, and by his mightie power to bring the ſame into this naturall order. Heere therefore is the third beginning or Principle in Nature, That forme, which the Spirit of God, the third perſon in Trinitie, (not ayre or wind, as [*] ſome conceiue, being things which yet were not themſelues formed) by that action framed it vnto, and after more particularly effected.

This interpretation of the Spirit mouing vpon the Waters, agreeth with that opinion which ſome attribute to the Stoikes. That all things are procreated and gouerned by one Spirit, Which Democritus called the ſoule of the world, Hermes and Zoroaſter, and Apollo Delphicus call [a] Fire, the maker, quickner, and preſeruer of all things; and Virgill moſt elegantly and diuinely ſingeth, ſeeming to paraphraſe on Moſes words:

Principio cœlum, ac terras, campoſq; liquentes,
Lucentemq; globum Lunæ, Titaniaq; aſtra
Spiritus intus alit, totamq; infuſa per artus
Mens agitat molem, & magno ſe corpore miſcet.

[a] Patricius numbreth the linkes of this chaine, in this order: *Calor qui in terra, aqua, miſtis eſt, ab aereo pendet, hic à cœleſti, is à ſole & aſtris: hic vero ab Empyreo: Empyreus à luminis calore: hic ab animario: hic ab intelligentiali: hic à vitali primario: hic quaq; à primario eſſentiali: hic itidem ab ideali, qui in Deo habitat & à Deo patre eſt deriuatus. Heauen first, and Earth, and Watrie plaines, Bright Moone, of Starres those twinckling traines,
The Spirit inly cherisheth,
Loues, moues, great body nourisheth;
Through all infus'd this All containes.

The first creature which receiued naturall forme was the light, of which GOD said, Let there be light; a lightsome and delightsome subiect of our Discourse, especially hauing lately passed such a confused and darke Chaos. But here (I know not how) that which then lightned the deformed matter of the vnformed World, hath hidden it selfe: some [c] interpreting this of the Sunne, which they will haue then created; some [d] of an immateriall qualitie, after receiued into the Sunne and Starres; some [e] of a cloud formed of the waters, circularly moued, and successiuely lightning either Hemisphere, of which afterwards the Sunne was compact; from which they [f] differ not much, which thinke it the matter of the Sunne, then more diffused and imperfect, as the waters also were earthie, and the Earth fluible, till GOD by a second worke perfected and parted them. And (to let passe them which apply it to Angels or men) others [g] vnderstand it of the fiery Element, the essentiall property of which is to enlighten. Yet are we not here passed all difficulties, whiles some [h] (perhaps not vniustly) would perswade the world that Fire, as it is ordinarily in schooles vnderstood of a sublunary element, is with worse then Promethean theft stolne out of Heauen where it is visible, & imprisoned in this their Elementarie World: whereas Anaxagoras, Thales, Anaximenes, Empedocles, Heraclitus, Plato, Parmenides, Orpheus, Hermes, Zoroaster, Philo, and others; the fathers of the Chaldean, Ægyptian, Iewish, and Grecian Learning, account the [i] Heauens and heauenly bodies to be Ethereall fire, to which our sense also will easily subscribe. And Patricius affirmeth that Ocellus Lucanus, one of Pythagoras his Schollers, was first Author of that former opinion, from whom Aristotle borrowed it, if it bee not stealth rather, whiles hee concealeth his name. Diuers [k] late Philosophers also seeme to haue conspired to burne vp that fiery Element, or rather to aduance it aboue this sublunary Region into the Æthereal Throne. Let the Philosophers determine this when they doe other doubts: in meane while let vs, if you please, vnderstand this Light of the Fire, whether Æthereall or Elementarie, or both, or neither, as in diuers respects it may bee. For neither was this Light then (as it seemeth) locally separated from that confused masse, and by expansion (which was the second dayes Worke) eleuated into her naturall place: and after that; it possessed the Sunne, Moone and Starres, saith our sense, which thence receiueth Light, and there in the Æthereall Region seeth new Starres and superlunarie Comets, compact of Ætherall substance (as the most diligent [l] Obseruers haue recorded) both procreated and perishing: so that that which before was neither Æthereall nor Elementarie, whiles there was neither Æther nor Element perfected, after became Æthereall-Elementarie, as beeing happily the matter of the Sunne and Starres of old, and of these later [m] appearances; and also filling the Æthereall World in the higher and lower Regions thereof, both aboue and beneath the Moone, with the Light here mentioned, and that vigorous heat, which as an affect or an effect thereof, procreateth, recreateth and conserueth the creatures of this inferiour World. No maruell, if the Philosophers are still dazeled and darkened in this light, not yet agreeing whether it bee a substance or qualitie, corporeall or incorporeall; when the Father of Lights himselfe thus conuinceth vs of darkenesse; Where is the way [n] (saith he) where light dwelleth? And, By what way is the light parted? And if we cannot conceiue that which is so euidently seene, and without which nothing is seene and euident: how inaccessible is that Light, wherein the Light of this light dwelleth? Euen this light is more then admirable; [o] life of the Earth, ornament of the Heauens, beautie and ſmile of the World, eye to our Eyes, ioy of our Hearts: moſt common, pure and perfect of viſible creatures; firſt borne of this World, and endowed with a double portion of earthly and heauenly Inheritance, ſhining in both; which contayneth, ſuſtayneth, gathereth ſeuereth, purgeth, perfecteth, renueth, and preſerueth all things; repelling dread, expelling ſorrow, p Shaking the wicked out of the Earth, and lifting vp the hearts of the godly to looke for a greater and more glorious light; greateſt inſtrument of Nature, reſemblance of Grace, Type of Glorie, and bright Glaſſe of the Creators brightneſſe.

This Light GOD made by his Word, not vttered with ſound of ſyllables, nor that which in the beginning (and therefore before the beginning) was with GOD, and was GOD: but by his powerfull q effecting (calling things that were not, as though they were) and by his calling or willing cauſing them to be, thereby r ſignifying his will as plainly, and effecting it as eaſily as a word is to a man. That vncreated ſupereſſentiall light, the eternall Trinitie, commanded this light to bee, and approued it as good, both in it ſelfe and to the future Creatures: and ſeparated the ſame from darkneſſe (which ſeemes a s meere priuation and abſence of light) diſpoſing them to ſucceed each other in the Hemiſphere; which by what motion or reuolution it was effected the three firſt dayes, who can determine? Fond it is to reaſon, a facto ad fieri, from the preſent order of conſtitution, to the Principles of that inſtitution of the Creatures, whiles they were yet in making, as Simplicius, and other Philoſophers (may I terme them, or Atheiſts?) haue abſurdly done in this and other parts of the Creation. And this was the firſt dayes Worke.

THE SECOND DAYES WORKE.

IN the ſecond, GOD ſaid, Let there bee a Firmament. The word Rakiah tranſlated Firmament, ſignifieth t expanſum or expanſionem, a ſtretching out; deſigning that vaſt and wide ſpace, wherein are the watery clouds here mentioned, and thoſe lights which follow in the fourteenth Verſe, by him placed in expanſo: howſoeuer ſome u vnderſtand it only of the Ayre. The ſepararing the waters vnder this Firmament from the waters aboue the Firmament, ſome x interprete of waters aboue the Heauens, to refreſh their exceeding heat, or of I know not what Chryſtaline Heauen: ſome of ſpirituall ſubſtances, whom Baſil confuteth; Origen (after his wont) Allegorically. Moſt probable it ſeemeth, that Moſes intendeth the ſeparation of thoſe waters here below, in their Elementarie Seat, from thoſe aboue vs in the clouds; to which Dauid alluding, ſaith: Hee y hath ſtretched out the Heauens like a Curten, and laid the beames of his Chambers in the waters. This ſeparating of the waters is cauſed in the Ayrie Region, by the Æthereall, in which thoſe forces are placed, which thus exhale and captiuate theſe waters. That matter before endued with lightning qualitie, was now in this ſecond day (as it ſeemeth) attenuated & extended aboue and beyond that myrie heape of Earthy waters; and both the Æther and Aire formed of the z ſame firſt matter, and not of a fift Eſſence, which ſome haue deuiſed to eſtabliſh the Heauens Eternitie, both Twins of the Philoſophers braines. And wherein doe not theſe differ from each other touching the Celeſtiall Nature, Roundneſſe, Motion, Number, Meaſure, and other difficulties, moſt of which are by ſome a denyed? Diuerſitie of motions cauſed the Ancients to b number eight Orbes; Ptolemie on that ground numbred nine; Alphonſus and Tebitius ten; Copernicus finding another motion, reuiued the opinion of Ariſtarchus Samius, of the Earths mouing, &c. Others which therein diſſent from him, yet in reſpect of that fourth motion haue added an eleuenth Orbe, which the Diuines make vp euen twelue by their Empyreall immoueable Heauen. And many deny this aſſertion of Orbes, ſuppoſing them to haue beene ſuppoſed rather for c inſtructions ſake then for any reall being. THE THIRD DAYES WORKE.

AND thus were the Æthereall and Ayrie parts of the World formed: in the Third Day followeth the perfecting of the two loweſt Elements, Water and Earth, which as yet were confuſed, vntill that mightie Word of GOD did thus both diuorce and marry them, compounding of them both this one Globe, which he called, Dry Land and Seas. I call it a Globe with the Scriptures, [k] and the beſt Philoſophers, [l] for which reſpect Numa built the Temple of Veſta round. Neither yet is it abſolutely round and a perfect Spheare, but σφαροειδὴς rather, [m] Strabo affirmeth, hauing (ſaith [n] Scaliger) ὑποχὰς καὶ ἐξοχάς, depreſſed Vallies, extended Plaines, ſwelling Hillockes, high-mounting Mountaines, long courſes of Riuers, and other varieties of Nature and Art, which all in ſo huge a maſſe rather beautifie the roundneſſe, then take it away. The Eclipſe of the Moone later ſeene [o] in the Eaſt then in the Weſt, the round ſhaddow of the Earth, which darkeneth it, the riſing of the Sunne and Starres, ſooner in the [p] Eaſt then Weſt, the vnequall eleuation of the Pole, and the Northerne Conſtellations appearing to vs, the Southerne continually depreſſed: all theſe obſeruing due proportions, according to the difference of places and Countries; yea, the compaſſing of the Earth by many Mariners, argue the round compaſſe thereof, againſt Patritius [q] his difformitie, or that deformitie which other [r] Philoſophers haue aſcribed thereto. The equalitie or inequalitie of dayes according to the neereneſſe or farreneſſe from the Equinoctiall, holding proportion as well by Sea as Land (as doth alſo the eleuation of the Pole) and not being longer where [s] a quarter of the World is Sea, then if it were all Earth, doe confute the pretended difformititie by Hils, Dales, Waters, compared [t] with the Diameter of this Globe, is not ſo much as the inequalitie in an Apple, or a carued Bowle, or quilted Ball, which yet we call round. And this diuerſitie ſerueth not onely for ornament, but for more largeneſſe of Habitation, varietie of Ayre and Earth, and for pleaſure and profit. Thus doth this Globe ſwell out to our vſe, for which it enlargeth it ſelfe: and ſeemeth large to vs, being in reſpect of the Vniuerſe leſſe then little. How much thereof is couered with waters? How much not at all diſcouered? How much deſart & deſolate? And how many millions are they, which ſhare the reſt of this little among them? And yet how many thouſands glorie of the greatneſſe of their poſſeſſions? All this Globe is demonſtrable [u] to be but a point, and in compariſon nothing, to that wide wide Canopie of Heauen; a mans poſſeſſion but a point, and as nothing to the Earth; a man of poſſeſſions, but a point, and in a manner, nothing to his poſſeſſions; and (as Socrates [x] ſaid ſometimes to Alcibiades) few can ſhew their Lands in an vniuerſall Map, where a whole Region occupieth a ſmall roome: and yet how couetous, how proud is duſt and aſhes of duſt and earth, notwithſtanding the little we haue while we liue, and that leſſe which ſhall haue and poſſeſſe vs in a Priſon of three Cubits being dead? Well did one [y] compare this our groſſer and droſſier World to an Ant-hill, and men the Inhabitants to ſo many Piſmires, in the varietie of their diuerſified ſtudies, toyling and turmoyling themſelues therein. Scipio ſeemed aſhamed of the Romane [z] Empire, as ſeeming but a point of the Earth, which it ſelfe was but a point. And yet how readie are many to ſell Heauen for Earth? That largeneſſe and continuance beyond all names of time and place, for this momentany poſſeſſion of almoſt nothing, although they haue Hell and Deuill and all in the bargaine? Let this morall obſeruation entertaine our Reader, perhaps tyred in theſe rigid Diſputes: and now let vs returne to the naturall diſpoſition and conſtitution of this Globe, in which the Earth was couered with varietie of Plants and Fruits, which had beene before couered with ſlimy waters.

God commanded, and the Waters which yet oppreſſed, and by their effuſion and confuſion did tyrannize, rather then orderly ſubdue, and gouerne this inferiour myrie maſſe, were partly receiued into competent channels, and there alſo gathered on ſwelling heapes, where, though they menace a returne of the old Chaos, both by their noyſe and waues, yet hath GOD ſtabliſhed his Commandement vpon it, and ſet barres and doores, and ſaid, Hitherto ſhalt thou come and no further, and here ſhall it ſtay thy proud waues. Otherwiſe, The Deepes which then couered it as a Garment, would now ſtand aboue the Mountaines. At his rebuke they flee, who with fetters of ſand (to ſhew his power in weakneſſe, with a Miracle in Nature) chaineth vp this inraged Tyrant, that the Creatures might haue a meet place of Habitation. Thus did not only the dry Land appeare, but by the ſame hand was enriched with Herbes and Trees, enabled in their mortall condition, to remayne immortall in their kinde. And here beginneth Moſes to declare the Creation of compound bodies; hitherto buſied in the Elements.

THE FOVRTH DAYES WORKE.

NOw when ehe Lord had made both Plants, Trees, and Light, without the influence, yea, before the being of the Sunne, Moone, or Starres, he now framed thoſe fiery Balls, and glorious Lights, whereby the Heauens are beautified, the Ayre enlightned, the Seas ruled, and the Earth made fruitfull. Thus he did the fourth day, * after thoſe other things created, leſt ſome fooliſh Naturaliſt ſhould binde his mightie hand in Natures bands, ſeeing theſe Lights now become the chiefe Officers in Natures Court. That ſhining before diſperſed, was vnited in theſe bodies, whether by refraction of thoſe former beames, by theſe ſolid Globes, or by gathering that fiery ſubſtance into them, or by both, or by other meanes, I leaue to others coniectures. [a] Many are the Dreames of Philoſophers, ſome eſteeming them Fire; ſome Earth, others Clouds, and others Stones, fired: Heraclides, and the Pythagoreans deemed each ſtarre a World. They are commonly holden Round, ſimple, lucide bodies, the moſt compact and condenſate [b] parts of their Orbs, or of that Æthereall Region, of, and in which they are: bright flames, not of this our fire which deuoureth and conſumeth (for the whole Ocean would not ſerue the Sunne alone for a Draught, nor the Earth with all her ſtore for a Breake-faſt) but quickning and nouriſhing. Let vs a little conſider of their Greatneſſe, Swiftneſſe, Number, Influence.

For the firſt, Ptolomey meaſured the Sunnes greatneſſe 166 ¾. times as much as the whole Terreſtriall Globe: Copernicus, whom Scaliger [c] calleth (Alterum aui noſtri Ptolomeum) 162. Tycho Brahe [d] 140. The Moone is holden by Ptolomeus 39. times leſſe then the Earth, by Copernicus 43. by Tycho 42. Albategnius and Alfraganus haue added their opinions of the reſt, therefore diuiding them into ſixe rankes or formes of differing magnitudes: wherein as they ſomewhat differ from each other, ſo much more from Tycho Brahe, that Learned Dane, whoſe coſts and [e] paines, in this Science are admirable. But Salomon (wiſer then they all) had fore-told, [f] that the Heauens in height, and the Earth in deepneſſe, and the Kings heart, none can ſearch out: that is, exactly and abſolutely, as [illegible]gareth in the differing opinions, both of the Earths [g] Circuit and Diameter, and of the A[illegible]tude of the Heauens, and conſequently of the quantitie of the Starres, which muſt preſuppoſe the former. They agree not in the order of the Planets, nor how many Semi-diameters of the Earth the Heauen is eleuated, which after Ptolomeys Hypotheſes are 20000. after Tychos reckoning 14000. Hence it is, that the quantitie and the ſwiftneſſe [h] is much more after the former, then after this later opinion, which doth better ſalue the incredibleneſſe thereof, then fayning a Giant-like labour (as Ramus [i] calleth it) of the Earths continuall rolling.

The number [k] of Starres, ſome haue reckoned 1600. others 1022. and Tycho Brahe more. The Iewes out of their Cabaliſts reckon 290160. Galileus his Glaſſe hath made them innumerable, in deſcrying infinite numbers, otherwiſe not viſible to vs, and eſpecially the Galaxia full of them. Yea, God himſelfe propounds it to Abraham, [l] (whom Ioſephus cals a great Aſtronomer) as a thing impoſſible to number them. It is his owne Royall Prerogatiue, [m] He counteth the number of the Starres, and bringeth out their Armies by number, and calleth them all by their names. The end why GOD placed them in the Firmament, Moſes expreſſeth, To ſeparate the Day from the Night, and to be for ſignes and for ſeaſons, and for dayes, and for yeares, and for lights in the Firmament of the Heauen, to giue light vpon the Earth. Their influence and effects are in Scripture [n] mentioned: neither can any iuſtly deny the ſame in the Elements and Elementary bodies: the Stoicall Fate, the Chaldean, Iewiſh, and Arabian Fancies, are now diſclaymed euen by thoſe [o] Learned, which maintayne in our dayes Iudiciall Aſtrologie, or commend the ſame. Neither can it agree with Chriſtian Religion, to ſubiect the will of Man to any externall naturall force, nor with reaſon in matters contingent, and caſuall to make them naturall Arbiters: nor will I eaſily beleeue that particular euents can be fore-told from generall cauſes, eſpecially in the affaires and fortunes of men. Where the numbers, ſubſtances, faculties, actions of theſe ſtars are weakly or not at al known vnto vs (as hath beene ſhewed) it is like as to ſay, how many and what kind of Chickens a Hen will hatch, when wee ſee not all, nor ſcarce know any of the Egges vnder her. The like ſwiftneſſe might compaſſe the Earth 1884. times vnder the Line in an houres ſpace. Hee to ſalue this incredibilitie, deuiſeth a motion both of the Earth, and of the Starres, one from the Eaſt, the other from the Weſt.

* A Iew at Rome asked a Philoſopher, the reaſon, why the Sunne ſhined euery Wedneſday: The Philoſopher obſeruing it true, but not aſſigning a cauſe, the Iew ſaid, It was, becauſe the Sunne thus honored in his Birth-day. Iſaac Leuita.

swiftnesse of the Heauens Wheele, p which euen in the moment of obseruing, is past obseruing; the vanitie of our Oracle-Almanacks, which commonly speake doubtfully or falsely of the weather; the infiniteneſſe almoſt of cauſes concurring, which are diuerſly qualified, the weakneſſe of thoſe q foundations, on which this Art is grounded; the force of hereditarie qualities deſcended from Parents, of cuſtome and education in forming mens manners; the diſagreements of the Aſtrologers among themſelues, the new from the old, and all from the Truth, as Experience in all ages hath ſhewed: And laſtly, the prohibition of the ſame by Scripture, Fathers, Councels, Lawes; yea, the learnedeſt of the Chaldeans, and other Aſtronomers themſelues, (as Euſebius r reciteth of Bardanes, and Rob. Moſes ben Maimon hauing read all the Arabians workes hereof, anſwereth the Iewiſh Aſtrologers) are ſtrong arguments againſt the Starre-gazers predictions. But let Picus Mirandula his twelue Bookes againſt Aſtrologie, and Ioſeph Scaligers Preface before Manilius be well weighed of ſuch as dote on; or doubt of this Genethliacall ridiculous vanitie, if not ſ impious villany, as thoſe Authors and others t prooue it, not by the errors of ſome Chiefetaines and Champions onely, but of the Arte it ſelfe, and the whole Senate of Iewiſh, Saracenical, and Chriſtian Aſtrologers together, hatching a lye. The ſignes and conſtellations which Aſtronomers obſerue in and on each ſide the Zodiakes, would be too prolixe in this diſcourſe already tedious: as likewiſe thoſe alterations which ſome haue obſerued in ſome ſtarres.

But thoſe two great Lights, (the two eyes of the Heauens) the greater light to rule the day, and the leſſe to rule the night, (which is called great, u not ſo much for the quantitie wherein it is leſſe then many ſtarres, as for the operation and ſeeming to the ſenſe) doe command mine eyes to take more ſpeciall view of their beauties. How willing could I be (like Phaton) to mount the Chariot of the Sunne x which commeth forth as a Bridegroome out of his Chamber, and reioyceth like a mightie man to runne his race; King of Starres enthronized in the mids of the Planets, heart of the World, eye of the Heauens, brighteſt gemme of this goodly Ring, father of dayes, yeeres, ſeaſons, meteors; Lord of light, fountaine of heate, which ſeeth all things, and by whom all things ſee, which lendeth light to the ſtarres, and life to the World; high Steward of Natures Kingdome, and liuelieſt viſible y Image of the liuing inuiſible God.

And dazled with this greater light, I would reflect mine eyes to that reflexion of this light in the ſober, ſiluer countenance of the ſilent Moone; which (whether it haue any natiue ſhining, though weake, as Zanchius and Bartholinus hold; or whether it bee an æthereall earth z with Mountaines and Vallies, and other not elementary Elements, compact of the dregs of the æthereal parts; or whatſoeuer elſe reaſon, fancie, or phrenſie haue imagined thereof) is Queene of the Night, attended with the continuall dances of twinckling ſtarres, Mother of Moneths, Lady of Seas and a moyſture, conſtant image of the Worlds inconſtancie, which it neuer ſeeth twice with the ſame face; and trueſt modell of humane frailtie, ſhining with a borrowed light, and eclipſed with euery interpoſition of the earth. But I am not Endymion, nor ſo much in Lunaes fauour, as to be lulled aſleepe in her lap, there to learne theſe myſteries of Nature, and the ſecrets of that happy marriage between theſe celeſtial twinnes. And it is high time for me to deſcend from theſe meaſures of time; the lampes of the World, and to behold the neerer works of GOD before our feet in the ayre and waters, which GOD on the fift day created. But the principall rarities to be obſerued in theſe creatures, we ſhall diſperſe in our ſcattered diſcourſes through this Worke, as occaſion ſhall bee offered; as likewiſe touching the beaſts both Wilde and Tame, and the creeping things created the ſixth day. Thus was the Ayre, Water, and Earth, furniſhed with their proper inhabitants.

witnesses both of reason and authority, That this World had a Beginning, and that the Builder and Maker thereof, was GOD. For doth not Nature both within and without vs, in the admirable frame of this lesse or that greater World, in the Notions of the one, and the Motions of the other, in the wise and mighty order and ordering of both, lead men vnto a higher and more excellent [d] Nature, which, of his [e] goodnesse, we call GOD? When we behold the whole World, or any part of it, in the Elements such agreement, in such disagreement: in the Heauenly motions such constancie, in such varietie: in these compound bodies, Being, Liuing, Sense, Reason; as diuers degrees, diuersly communicated to so many formes and rankes of Creatures: We can no more ascribe these things to chance, than a Printers Case of Letters could by chance fall into the right Composition of the Bible which he Printeth; or of Homers Iliads (to vse [f] Tullies similitude:) neither can any ascribe the Creation to the Creature, with better reason, then if by some shipwracke, being cast on a desolate Iland, and finding houses, but seeing no people therein, he could esteeme the Birds, or Beasts, (all the Ilanders he seeth) to be the framers of these buildings: But thou mayest thinke it eternall; Thou mayest as well thinke it to be GOD, Infinite, Vnchangeable, in the whole and in all the parts. Doth not the Land by seasons, the Sea by ebbing and flowing, the Aire by succeeding changes, the Heauens by motions, all measured by Time, proclaime that they had a beginning of Time? Are not Motion and Time as neere Twinnes, as Time and Eternitie are implacable enemies? Nay, how canst thou force thy mind to conceiue an Eternitie in these things, which canst not conceiue Eternitie? which canst not but conceiue some beginning, and first terme or point, from whence the motion of this Wheele began? And yet how should we know this first turning of the Worlds wheele, whose hearts within vs mooue, be we vnwitting or vnwilling, the beginning whereof thou canst not know, and yet canst not but know that it had a beginning, and together with thy body shall haue an ending? How little a while is it, that the best [g] Stories in euery Nation, shew the cradle and child-hood thereof? Their later receiued Letters, Arts, Ciuilitie? But what then, say they, did GOD before he made the World? I answer, that thou shouldest rather thinke Diuinely of Man, then Humanely of GOD, and bring thy selfe to be fashioned after his Image, then frame him after thine. This foolish question some answer according to the foolishnesse thereof, saying; He made Hell for such curious Inquisitors. [h] Aliud est videre, aliud ridere, saith Augustine. Libentius responderim nescio quod nescio. Quæ tempora fuissent, quæ abs te condita non essent? Nec tu tempora tempore præcedis. Sed celsitudine semper præsentis æternitatis, &c. [i] Before all things were, GOD onely was, and he vnto himselfe was in stead of the World, Place, Time, and all things, hauing all goodnesse in himselfe: the holy Trinitie [k] delighting and reioycing together. To communicate therefore (not to encrease, or receiue) his goodlinesse, he created the World, [l] quem Græci [m] κόσμον (saith Plinie) nomine ornamenti appellant, nos à perfecta absolutaq; elegantia Mundum. But for this matter, it is also of the wisest and most learned in all Ages confessed, as their testimonies alleadged by Iustin Martyr, Lactantius, and other Ancients, and especially by [n] Philip Morney, doe plainely manifest. To him therefore, to Viues, and others, which haue vndertaken this taske, by reason, and by humane authoritie, to conuince the gaine-sayers of our faith, let such resort, as would be more fully resolued in these curious doubts. As for all such [o] strange and phantasticall or phreneticall opinions of Heretikes, or Philosophers, which haue otherwise related of this mysterie of the Creation, then Moses, they need not confuting, and for relating these opinions we shall find fitter place afterwards. I will here adde this saying of Viues, to such vnnaturall Naturalists, as vpon slight and seeming naturall reasons, call these things into question. [p] Quàm stultum est, de mundi creatione ex legibus huius Naturæ statuere, cùm creatio illa naturam anteceſſerit? Tum enim natura est condita quando & mundus, nec aliud est natura quam quod Deus iussit, alioqui minister esset Deus naturæ, non Dominus. Hence was Aristotles Eternitie, Plinies Deitie ascribed to the World, Democritus, Leucippus, and Epicurus, their Atomi, the Stoikes Æterna materia, PLATO's Deus, exemplar & materia, as [q] Ambrose teareth them, or as [r] others, vnum or bonum, Mens & Anima, (a Trinitie without perfect Vnitie) the Manichees two beginnings, and an endlesse world of errors about the Worlds beginning, because they measured all by Naturall axiomes. [s] Orpheus, as Theophilus the Chronographer cited by Cedrenus, alleadgeth him, hath his Trinitie of Αἰθὴρ χάος & νὺξ ζοφερὰ, & ΜΗΤΙΣ, ΦΩΣ, ΖΩΟΔΟΤΗΡ: to which he ascribeth the Worlds Creation: but the Poets dreames are infinite, which might make and marre their Poetical Worlds at pleasure.

CHAP. III.

Of Man, considered in his first state wherein hee was created: and of Paradise, the place of his habitation.

HItherto we haue spoken of the framing of this mightie Fabrike, the Creation of the visible World, leauing that Inuisible to the Spirituall Inhabitants, which there [a] alway behold the face of the Heauenly Father, as not daring to pry too farre into such Mysteries, aduancing our selues in those things which wee neuer saw. [b] Rashly puft vp with a fleshly minde. This whereof we treat they need not, as finding all sufficience in their All-sufficient Creator: The inferiour Creatures (which hitherto haue beene described) know it not, but content [c] themselues with themselues, in enioying their naturall being, mouing, sense. Onely man, in regard of his body, needeth it, and by the reasonable power of his soule can discerne and vse it. Man therefore was last created, as the end of the rest, [d] an Epitome and Mappe of the World, a compendious little other World, consisting of a visible and inuisible, heauenly and earthly, mortall and immortall Nature, the knot and bond of bodily and spirituall, superiour and inferiour substances, resembling both the [e] worke and the worke-man: the last in execution, but first in intention, to whom all these Creatures should serue, as meanes and prouocations of his seruice to his and their Creator.

Man may be considered, in regard of this life, or of that which is to come: of this life, in respect of Nature or Grace: and this Nature also sustayneth a two-fold consideration, of integritie and corruption; For [f] GOD made man righteous, but they sought to themselues many inuentions. His first puritie in his Creation, his fall from thence by sinne, his endeuour to recouer his former innocency by future glory, eyther in the by-wayes of Superstition, which Nature (a blind guide) leadeth him into, through so many false Religions; or by the true, new, and liuing way, which GOD alone can set him, and doth conduct him in, is the subiect of our tedious taske; the first two more briefly propounded: the two last historically and largely related.

In that first state, his Author and Maker was Iehoua Elohim, GOD in the pluralitie of Persons, and vnitie of Essence; the Father, by the Sonne, in the power of the Spirit: whereunto he did not only vse his powerfull Word as before, saying; Let there be Man, but a consultation, Let vs make Man: not that he needed counsaile, but [g] that hee in this Creature did shew his counsell and wisdome most apparantly. The Father, as first in order, speaketh vnto the Sonne and Holy Ghost, and the Sonne and Holy Ghost in an vnspeakeable manner speake and decree with the Father; and [h] the whole Trinitie consult and agree together, to make Man: which [i] for Mans instruction, is by Moses vttered after the manner of Men. The manner of his working was also in this Creature, singular; both in regard of his body, which, as a Potter his Clay, he wrought and framed of the dust into this goodly shape; and of his soule, which he immediately breathed into his nostrils.

Thus hath Man cause to glorie in his Creators care, in himselfe to bee humbled, hauing a body framed, not of solid Earth, but of the dust (the baasest and lightest part of the baasest and grossest Element, [k] So vaine a thing is man) his soule of nothing, lighter then vanitie, in the infusion created, and in the Creation infused, to be the dweller [l] in this house of clay, and habitation of dust, yea, not a house, but a [m] Tabernacle continually in dissolution. Such is the Maker and matter of Man. The forme was his conformitie to GOD, after whose Image he was made. Christ only is in full resemblance, The [n] Image of the inuisible GOD, the brightnesse of his glory, & the ingraued forme of his Person. Man was not this Image, but made ad imaginem, According to this Image, resembling his Author, but with imperfection, in that perfection of human Nature.

This Image of GOD appeared in the soule properly; secondly, in the body (not as the [p] Anthropomorphite Heretikes, and [q] Popish Image-makers imagine, but) as the instrument of the soule, and lastly, in the whole Person. The soule in regard of the spirituall and immortall substance, resembleth him which is a Spirit, and euerlasting, [r] which seeth all things, remayning it selfe vnseene, and hauing a nature in manner incomprehensible, comprehendeth the natures of other things: to which some adde the resemblance of the holy Trinitie, in this, that one soule hath those three essentiall faculties of Vnderstanding, Will, and Memory, or (as others) of Vegetation, Sense, and Reason. In regard of gifts and naturall endowments, the soule in the vnderstanding part receiued a Diuine Impression, and Character, in that knowledge, whereby shee measureth the Heauens, [s] bringeth them to the Earth, lifteth vp the Earth to the Heauen, mounteth aboue the Heauens to behold the Angels, pierceth the Center of the Earth in darkneſſe, to diſcerne the infernall Regions and Legions, beneath and aboue them all, ſearcheth into the Diuine Nature: whereby, [t] Adam was, without ſtudy, the greateſt Philoſopher, (who at firſt ſight knew the nature of the beaſts, the originall of the VVoman) and the greateſt Diuine (except the ſecond Adam) that euer the Earth bare. The will alſo, in free choice of the beſt things, in [u] righteous diſpoſition towards man, and true holineſſe towards GOD, was conformed to his will; for whoſe wils ſake it is, and was created. The body cannot ſo liuely expreſſe the vertue of him that made it, but as it could, in that perfect conſtitution, ([x] ſo fearefully and wonderfully made [y]) and as the Organ of the ſoule, whoſe weapon it was to righteouſneſſe, had ſome ſhadow therefo. The whole Man in his naturall Nobility beyond, and Princely Dominion o- uer the other Creatures (that we mention not the hope of future bleſſedneſſe) ſhewet h after what Image Man was created, and to what he ſhould be renued. The end whereunto GOD made Man, is GOD himſelfe, who hath [z] made all things for himſelfe: the ſubordinate end was Mans endleſſe happineſſe, the way whereunto is religious obedience.

Moſes addeth, [a] He created them Male and Female, thereby to ſhew, that the Woman in Oeconomicall reſpect is [b] the Image and glory of the Man, beeing created for the Man, and of the Man, but in relation to GOD, or the World, She, as a Creature, was alſo framed after the ſame Image. As for that monſtrous conceit of the Rabbins, that the firſt man was an Hermaphrodite, it deſerueth not confutation or mention. The order of the Womans Creation is plainly related. GOD [c] finding not a meete helpe for Adam, in his ſleepe tooke one of his ribs, whereof he built the Woman. This in a Myſtery ſignified that deadly ſleepe of the heauenly Adam on the Croſſe, whoſe ſtripes were our healing, whoſe death was our life, and out of whoſe bleeding ſide was by Diuine diſpenſation framed his Spouſe the Church. This may be part of the ſenſe, or an application thereof, [d] as ſome ſay, to this Myſtery; or the ſignification rather of the [e] thing it ſelfe here declared, then of the words, which properly and plainly ſet downe the Hiſtorie of a thing done, after the litterall ſenſe to bee expounded.

According to this ſenſe Moſes expreſſeth the Creation, the making and marrying of the Woman. The Maker was GOD, the matter a Rib of Adam, the forme a building, the end to be a meete helpe. The Man was made of Duſt, the Woman of the Man, to bee one fleſh with the Man, and of a Rib, to be a helpe and ſupporter of him in his calling, which requi- reth ſtrength: neyther could any bone be more eaſily ſpared in the whole body, which hath not ſuch variety of any other kind: nor could any place more deſigne the Woman her due place; not of the head, that ſhe ſhould not arrogate rule; not of the feet, that the husband ſhould not reckon her as his ſlaue, but in a meane betweene both, and that neere the heart, in which they ſhould (as in all Diuine and Humane Lawes elſe) bee faſt ioyned. The building of this body of the Woman, was in regard of the Progeny, which was in that larger roome to haue the firſt dwelling. The ſoule of the Woman is to be conceiued [f] as the ſoule of the Man before mentioned, immediately infuſed and created by GOD, herein equall to Man.

Being thus made, ſhe is marryed by GOD himſelfe vnto Adam, who brought her vnto him, to ſhew the ſacred authority of Marriage, and of Parents in Marriage: A mutuall conſent and gratulation followeth betweene the parties, leſt any ſhould tyrannically abuſe his fatherly power. And thus are two made one fleſh; in regard of one originall, equall right, mutuall conſent, and bodily coniunction. And thus were this goodly couple glorious in nakedneſſe, not ſo much in the ornaments of beautie, which made them to each other amiable, as of Maieſtie which made them to other creatures dreadfull: the Image of GOD, clothing that nakedneſſe, which in vs [g] appeareth filthy, in the moſt coſtly clothing. GOD further bleſſed them both with the power of multiplication in their owne kind, and dominion ouer other kinds; and gaue them for food, [h] euery herbe bearing ſeed which is vpon all the earth, and euery tree wherein is the fruit of a tree bearing ſeed. He doth (as it were) ſet them in poſſeſſion of the Creatures, which by a Charter of free gift he had conueyed to them, to hold of him as Lord Paramount.

But leſt any ſhould thinke this but a niggardly and vnequall gift, whereas ſince the Floud more hath beene added, and that in a more vnworthineſſe through mans ſinne: let him conſider, that ſince the Fall [i] the Earth is accurſed, whereby many things are hurtfull to mans nature, and in thoſe which are wholſome, there is not ſuch variety of kinds, ſuch plentie in each variety, ſuch eaſe in getting our plenty, or ſuch quality in what is gotten, in the degree of goodneſſe and ſweetneſſe to the taſte and nouriſhment: which, had they remayned in this ſickly and elder Age of the World, we ſhould not need to enuie Cleopatra's vanitie, or Heliogabilus his ſuperfluitie and curioſitie. And had not Man ſinned, [k] there ſhould not haue needed the death of beaſts to nouriſh his life, which without ſuch ſtay ſhould haue beene immortall: the vſe whereof was after granted, rather to ſupply neceſſitie when the Floud had weakened the Earth, then to miniſter a greater abundance then before it had; and leaſt of all to ſatisfie the greedie and curious appetites of more then beaſtly men. Liberall and bountifull was GODS allowance, which yet as man abused in eating the forbidden fruit, so whether any sinfull man did transgresse by eating the flesh of beasts, as iniquity increased, it is vncertaine. And yet it is likely, that when the Earth was [l] filled with cruelty, as men escaped not beastly butcherie, so beasts escaped not butcherly inhumanitie; and men that stay not now for commission to eate mans flesh, would then much lesse aske leaue to feed on beasts. Then did the godly Patriarchs liue many hundred yeares [m] without such food, whereas now we reach not to one with this helpe, that I speake not of those, which by abuse hereof are as cruell to themselues (in shortning their dayes by surfets) as to the Creatures, making their bellies to become Warrens, Fish-pooles, Shambles, and what not, saue what they should bee? Had not Man beene Deuillish in sinning, hee had not beene beastly in feeding, nay, the beasts had abhorred that which now they practise, both against their Lord, and their fellow-seruants. [n] The Wolfe should haue dwelt with the Lambe, the Leopard should haue lyen with the Kid, and the Calfe, and the Lyon, and the fat Beast together, and a little Childe might leade them. And this in the time of the Floud appeared, when all of them kept the peace with each other, and dutifull allegeance to their Prince in that great Family and little moueable World, Noahs Arke.

The place [o] of Adams dwelling is expressed by MOSES; And the Lord GOD planted a Garden East-ward in Eden, and there he put the man whom hee had made, Genes. 2. 8. Maruell it is to see the confusion which sinne bringeth, which appeareth not onely in the bodie, soule, dyet, and other Prerogatiues of our first Parents; but in this place also, then a place of pleasure, a Paradise and Garden of delights: after, a place prohibited, and kept by the blade of a Sword shaken: now the place cannot bee found in Earth, but is become a common place in mens braines, to macerate and vexe them in the curious search hereof. Some doe conuert this History into an Allegory, as did the Manichees and the Originists, confuted by Methodius, as [p] Epiphanius witnesseth. [q] Hierome in Dan. 10. saith, that seeking for shadowes in the truth, they ouer-turne the Truth it selfe. Vmbras & imagines in veritate quærentes, ipsam conantur euertere veritatem, vt flumina, & arbores, & Paradisum putent Allegoriæ legibus se debere subruere. Such Mysticall, Mist-all, and Misse-all Interpreters are our Familists in these times, by vnseasonable and vnreasonable Allegories, raysing mysts ouer the Scripture-sense, which thereby they misse and cannot find. [r] Augustine relateth three opinions, that Allegoricall, which he confuteth: the literall, and that which followeth both the one and the other, as himselfe doth. The [s] Hermians and Selencians are said to denie, that there was any such place: and the naked Adamites accounted their Church to be Paradise. Others are as prodigall & ascribe hereunto all the Earth, which was a Paradise, till sinne brought in a Curse. Thus holdeth [t] Wolfgangus Wissenburg, Goropius also & Vadianus are of like minde, That mans exile was but the alteration of their happy condition, that the fiery sword was the fiery Zone, A great while it went for currant, that it was a pleasant Region, by a long tract of Sea and Land, separated from our habitable World, and lifted vp to the Circle of the Moone, whereby it was out of the reach of Noahs floud, as [u] truly perhaps as Patricius and others haue found another World in the Moone, with men and beasts therein, of greater stature and longer life then here with vs. Thus hath [x] Petrus Comestor, and Strabus, and many Trauellers in old times haue trauelled with this conceit of their Fooles Paradise, and brought forth a lie, as appeareth by their Legends. [y] That Saint Brandon sayled thither from Ireland, is as true as that he met Iudas in the way, released from his paines, (as he was alway from Saturday to Sunday Euen-song:) or that they made fire on a fish (supposing it to bee an Iland) as that Legend telleth. It should seeme the Man in the Moone called him, and shewed him the way to this Paradise, or that [z] Dinias, which (according to the Relations of Antonius Diogenes) trauelling beyond Thule, went so farre North that hee came to the Moone, which seemed a shining Earth, where he saw many strange sights, as credible as the former: or else great Lucifer himselfe, who (as a later Traueller [a] reporteth) hath lately bequeathed a Lieutenancie to Ignatius and his Colony of Iesuites in the New Hell, in that New-found-World of the Moone; the care of the foundation whereof he committeth to that Iebusiticall societie. But let vs descend from this Lunaticke Paradise.

Others place it Eastward, in the highest top of the Earth, where the foure Riuers, mentioned by Moses, haue their originall, whence they runne, and are swallowed vp of the Earth, and after rising in diuers places of the World, are knowne by the names of Nilus, Ganges, Tigris, Euphrates. [b] Hugo de S. Victore and Adrichomius are of this opinion; yea, the great Cardinall [c] Caietane and Bellarmine place Henoch and Elias in Earthly Paradise, yet liuing there vntill the time of Antichrist, which wood he cannot see (beeing in the middest of it) for Trees. But the discouery of the World by Trauellers, and description thereof by Geographers, will not suffer vs to follow them (to the want of which Art, I meane Geographie, such fantasies may be imputed) whereby also is confuted the opinion of them which place it vnder the Equinoctiall Circle, as Durandus and Bonauentura.

[d] Others account so much to Paradise as those foure Riuers doe water, euen the chiefe part of Afrike and Asia: and some confine it in streighter limits of Syria, Arabia and Mesopotamia, as if Adam had been so couetous as his Posteritie, or so laborious as to husband so large Countries. The false interpretation of those Riuers to bee Nilus, Ganges, &c. was the cause of this errour; the [e] Septuagint translating in stead of Sichor (which is Nilus) Gihon the name of one of these streames.

e In Esa. 23.3. & Ier. 2.18.

Moses as it were of purpose by an exact Chorography and delineation of the situation, doth meete with those errours, and with other the like, which I doe not here relate. Neither is their opinion to be followed, which drowne all altogether in the Deluge, seeing that after that time Moses wrote this. Franciscus Iunius in his readings on Genesis [f] hath largely and learnedly handled this matter, and added a Map also of Heden in which it stood, and the course of the Riuers with the Countries adiacent. In him the Reader may find satisfaction. He sheweth out of Curtius, Plinie, and Solinus, the miraculous fertilitie of that part of Babylonia, which Ptolomy calleth Auranitis, or Audanitis, easily declined from Heden, the name giuen by Moses, mentioned after Moses time, 2. Reg. 19. 12. and Esay 37. 12.

For the foure Riuers he sheweth them out of Ptolomy, Strabo, Plinie, Dion, Marcellinus, &c. to be so many diuisions of Euphrates, whereof Baharsares, or Neharsares is Gihon, that which passeth through Babylon, is for the excellencie peculiarly called Perath or Euphrates; Nehar-malca, or Basilius, Pishon; Tigris, & Chiddekel. For the fiery sword he obserueth out of Plinie, lib. 2. c. 106. a certaine miracle of Nature in Babylonia, where the ground is seen burning continually about the quantitie of an Acre. But this place will not serue to dispute this point. If those Riuers doe not now remaine, or haue altered either channell or names, it is no new thing in so old a a continuance of the World. It is more then probable, that herein these parts Paradise was, although now deformed by the Floud, and by Time consumed, and become a Stage of Barbarisme.

g Tygris is both the greater Riuer, and a smaller, which runneth out of Euphrates into Tygris which is here meant.

Neither hath the place alone been such a pitched field of Opinions, but the fruit also which Moses expresseth to be the instrument and occasion of Adams ruine, hath set some mens teeth on edge, who tell vs what it is, as if they had lately tasted of it, a certaine signe indeede, and fruit of that once vnlawfull tasting. [h] Goropius a man addicted to opinions, which I know not whether he did hold more strangely or strongly, though he enlargeth Paradise ouer the World, yet he maketh Adam an Indian (maruell he placeth him not in Dutchland, for that was his language, if Becanus be to be beleeued.) About the Riuer Aceſines, bebetwixt Indus and Ganges (saith he) groweth that admirable Figge-tree, which he at large describeth out of Plinie, Theophrastus, and Strabo, whose branches spreading from the bodie, doe bend themselues downewards to the earth, where they take hold, and with new rooting multiply themselues, like a maze or wood. One told [i] Clusius that hee himselfe hath beene one of eight hundred or a thousand men, which had hidden themselues vnder one of these trees, adding, that some of them were able to couer three thousand men.

Strange is this tree, and Becanus is with conceit hereof rauished into the pleasures of Paradise. This tree [k] Linschoten describeth, growing about Goa, and (to bring vs out of Goropius Paradise) saith, that it hath no fruit worth the eating: but a small kind like Oliues, which is food onely for birds. He telleth vs [l] of another Indian Figge-tree, growing rather like a Reed then a Tree, a mans height, a spanne thicke, the leaues a fathome long, and three spans broad: The Arabians and Indians suppose this to be that dismall fruit. The cause of this opinion Paludanus in his Annotations vpon Linschoten, ascribeth to the pleasantnesse of the smel and taste. Being cut in the middle, it hath certaine veines like a Crosse, whereon the Christians in Syria make many speculations. Yea the same Author telleth of a hill in the Ile of Seilan, called Adams hill, where they shew his foot-print, to proue that hee liued there: of which reade our discourse of that Iland. [m] Boskhier in his Ara cœli, citeth out of Moses Barcepha, That wheate was the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill; and so doe the Saracens hold: so curious and vaine is blind Reason without a guide. And the Cabilists (saith [n] Ricius) say, that Eues sinne was nothing but the wringing out of grapes to her husband; which yet he interpreteth allegorically.

But I thinke I haue wearied the Reader, with leading him thus vp and downe in Paradise; small fruit, I confesse, is in this fruit, and as little pleasure in this Paradise, but that varietie happily may please some, though it be to others tedious. And for a conclusion, it is (I think) worth the noting, that M. Cartwright an eye-witnesse, [o] by the counsell of the Nestorian Patriarke at Mosull or Niniuie, visited the Ile of Eden, still so called, and by them holden a part of Paradise, ten miles in circuit, and sometime walled: which if it be not part of that Garden-plot mentioned by Moses, yet it seemes is part of that Countrey sometime called Eden, in the East part whereof Paradise was planted, and not farre (according to Iunius Map) from that happy vnhappy place.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the Word Religion, and of the Religion of our first Parents before the Fall.

HAuing thus made way to our Historie of Religions, the first (and therefore best) Religion, is in the first place to be declared. Onely somewhat may be not vnfitly spoken before of the word. Religion in it selfe is naturall, written in the hearts of all men, which will (as here we shew) rather be of a false then no Religion: but the name whereby it is so called, is by birth a forreiner, by common vse made a free-denizon among vs, descended from the Romanes, which by their Swords made way for their Words, the Authors both of the thing it selfe, and of the appellation, to a great part of this Westerne world. But as the Latines haue accustomed themselues to multiplicity and varietie of Rites, so haue they varied not a little about the Parents, (as I may say) of this child (as the Grecians sometimes about Homers birth-place) some giuing one Etymologie & deriuation of the word, and some another, that there needeth some Herald to shew the true petigree, or some Grammarian Dictator to cease the strife.

[a] Seruius Sulpitius (as Macrobius citeth him) calleth that Religion, which for some holinesse is remooued and separated from vs, quasi relictam à relinquendo dictam. Seruius deserueth to be relinquished, and his opinion remooued and separated euen with an Anathema, if hee would remooue and separate Religion from vs, which is the life of our life, the way to our happinesse. The like is added of Ceremonia à carendo dicta, a iust name and reason of the most of the present Romish ceremonies, whose want were their best company. Massurius Sabinus

b A. Gellius hath the like words. Religio, with Tully is Cultus deorum, the worship of the gods, hereby distinguisht from Superstition, because they were, saith he, called Superstitious, that spent whole dayes in prayer and sacrifices, that their children might be Superstites, suruiuors after them: or rather as Lactantius, * Qui superstitem memoriam defunctorum colunt, aut qui parentibus suis superstites celebrant imagines eorum domi, tanquam Deos penates. But they which diligently vied and perused the things pertaining to diuine worship, & tanquam relegerent, were called Religious. Religiosi ex relegendo tanquam ex elegendo elegentes, intelligendo intelligentes. * Saint Augustine better acquainted with Religion then Cicero, commeth neerer to the name and nature thereof, deriuing it c à religendo, of choosing againe. Hunc eligentes, vel potius religentes, amiseramus enim negligentes, vnde & religio dicta perhibetur. This word Religens is cited by Nigidius Figulus in Aulus Gellius; Religentem esse oportet, Religiosum nefas: Religiosus being taken in bad sense for Superstitiosus. The same Father elsewhere, in his booke de vera Religione d acknowledgeth another originall of the word, which Lactantius before him had obserued, à religando, of fastning, as beeing the bond betweene vs and GOD. Ad Deum tendentes, saith Augustine, & ei vni religantes animas nostras, vnde religio dicta creditur. Religet ergo nos Religio vni omnipotenti Deo. Lactantius his words are; Diximus nomen religionis à vinculo pietatis esse deductum, quòd hominem sibi Deus religauerit & pietate constrinxerit, quia seruire nos ei vt Domino & obsequi vt patri, necesse est. Melius ergo (quàm Cicero*) id nomen Lucretius interpretatus est, quia ait se religionum nodo exoluere.* And according to this Etymologie is that which M. Camden saith, * Religion in old English was called Ean-fastnesse, as the one and onely Assurance and fast Anchor-hold of our soules health.

* Remains of a greater worke.

* This is the effect of sinne and irreligion, that the name and practise of Religion is thus diuersified, else had there beene as one GOD, soone religion, and one language, wherein to giue it with iust reason, a proper name. For till men did relinquere, relinquish their first innocencie, and the Author, of whom, and in whom they held it, they needed not religere, to make a second choice, or seeke reconciliation, nor thus relegere, with such paines and vexation of spirit to enquire and practise those things which might religare, bind them surer and faster vnto God: and in these respects for seuerall causes, Religion might seeme to be deriued from all those fountaines. Thus much of the word, whereby the nature of Religion is in part declared, but more fully by the description thereof.

* De vocabulo Religionis vide Lil. Gyrald. hist. d. synt. 1. Suarez de Relig. li. 1. & Stuckium de sacris & sacrificijs Gentium, qui Etymon dat etiam nominum, Cultus, Ceremonia, Pietas, &c. Grec. Latin. Heb huc pertinentium.

h Augustine, quæ superioris cuiusdam naturæ, quam diuinam vocant, curam ceremoniamq; affert. Religion is here described generally (whether false or truely) professing the inward obseruation, and ceremoniall outward worship of that which is esteemed a higher and diuine nature. The true Religion is the true rule and right way of seruing GOD. Or to speake as the case now standeth with vs: i True Religion is the right way of reconciling and reuniting man to GOD, that hee may be saued. This true way hee alone can shew vs, who is the Way and the Truth; neither can we see this Sunne, except he first see vs, and giue vs both eyes to see, and light also whereby to discerne him.

But to come to Adam, the subiect of our present discourse: His religion before his fall, was not to reunite him to GOD, from whom he had not been separated, but to vnite him faster, and daily to knit him neerer in the experience of that which nature had ingrafted in him. For what else was his Religion, but a pure streame of * Originall Righteousnesse, flowing from that Image of GOD, whereunto he was created? Whereby his mind was enlightened to know the onely very GOD, and his heart was engrauen, not with the Letter, but the life and power of the Law, louing and prooving that good and acceptable and perfect will of GOD. The whole man was conformable, and endeauoured this holy practise, the body being plyant and flexible to the rule of the Soule, the Soule to the Spirit, the Spirit to the Father of Spirits, and God of all Flesh, which no lesse accepted of this obedience, and delighted (as the Father in his Child) in this new modell of himselfe. How happy was that blessed familiarity with God, societie of Angels, subiection of Creatures, enuied onely of the Deuills, because this was so good, and they so wicked? Nature was his Schoolmaster, or if you will rather, GODS Vsher, that taught him (without learning) all the rules of Diuine Learning, of Politicall, Oeconomicall, and Morall wisedome.

* Iustitiæ originalis. Rom. 12. 2.

The whole Law was perfectly written in the fleshie Tables of his heart, besides the especiall command concerning the trees in the middest of the Garden, the one being an vniuersall and euerlasting rule of righteousnesse, the other by speciall authority appointed, as the manifestation of GODS diuine prerogatiue in commanding, and a triall of mans integritie in obeying. For the first part hereof, since it was so blurred in our hearts, it was renued by the voyce and finger of God on mount Sinai, giuen then immediately by GOD himselfe, as GOD ouer all; whereas the other parts of the Law, containing the Ceremoniall and Politicall ordinances, were immediately giuen by the Ministerie of Moses, as to that particular Nation.

Neither know I any that make doubt of this whole Law naturally and originally communicated: saue onely, that some make question of the Sabbath. Howbeit, I must confesse that I see nothing in that Commandement of the Decalogue prescribed, but is Naturall and Moral: for, both the Rest is so farre Morall, as the outward acts of Diuine worship cannot be performed without suspending for a while our bodily labours: although Rest, as a figure, bee Iewish, and in it selfe is either a fruit of wearinesse or idlenesse. And that the seuenth dayes obseruation is naturall (I meane the obseruing of one day of seauen in euery weeke) appeareth both by the first order established in Nature, when GOD blessed and sanctified the seuenth day; [k] the streame of Interpreters, especially the later, running and ioyning in this interpretation, (the Elder beeing somewhat more then enough busied in Allegories:) by the reason in the Commandement, drawne from Gods example and Sanctification in the Creation: by the obseruation of a Sabbath, before this promulgation of the Law, Exod. 16. and by the diuision of the dayes into weekes, [l] both then and before by Noah, *Gen.*8.10.12. by the necessitie of a Sabbath, as well before the Law in the dayes of the Patriarkes, as in the times of Dauid or Salomon: by the perfection of the number of seuen in the [m] Scriptures; by the generall consent of all, that it is Morall to set apart some time to the Lord of times, and an orderly set time to the God of order, which men might generally agree on for their publike deuotions: which the Patriarkes practised in their Sacrifices and Assemblies: the Heathens blindly, as other things in their Feasts. Thus saith Philo [n]: This is a feast day, not of one Citie or Region, but of the whole world, and may be properly called the generall birth-day of the world: And Clemens Alexandrinus sheweth out of Plato, Homer, Hesiod, Callimachus and Solon, that the seuenth day was not sacred alone to the Hebrewes, but to the Greekes also: and how mysticall was the number of seuen, not onely among the Iewes, but also among the Heathens, both Philosophers and Poets? as Philo, [o] Macrobius, and others haue related.

Hereunto agreeth the iudgement of Aquinas, [p] Præceptum de sanctificatione Sabbathi ponitur inter præcepta Decalogi, in quantum est præceptum morale, non in quantum est ceremoniale. The Precept of sanctifying the Sabbath, is set amongst the Precepts of the Decalogue, as it is a morall, not as a ceremoniall Precept. It hath pleased him, [q] saith M. Hooker, as of the rest, so of Times to exact some parts by way of perpetuall homage, neuer to bee dispensed withall, nor remitted. The Morall law requiring therefore a seuenth part throughout the age of the whole world to bee that way employed, although with vs the day bee changed, in regard of a new reuolution begun by our Sauiour Christ, yet the same proportion of time continueth which was before, because in reference to the benefite of Creation, and now much more of renouation thereunto added by him, which was Prince of the world to come, wee are bound to account the sanctification of one day in seauen, a dutie which Gods immutable Law doth exact for euer. Thus farre Hooker.

This indeed in the Sabbath was Iewish and Ceremoniall, to obserue onely that last and seuenth day of the weeke, and that as a figure, and lastly, with those appointed Ceremonies, and that manner of obseruation. Thus saith Aquinas, [r] Habere aliquod tempus deputatum ad vacandum diuinis, cadit sub præcepto morali. Sed in quantum, &c. To haue some set time for the seruice of God is morall: but so farre this Precept is ceremoniall, as in it is determined a speciall time, in signe of the Creation of the World. Likewise it is ceremoniall, according to the Allegoricall signification; in as much as it was a signe of the Rest of Christ in the graue, which was the seuenth day. And likewise according to the morall signification, as it signifieth a ceasing from euery act of sinne, and the Rest of the mind in God. Likewise according to the Anagogicall signification, as it prefigureth the Rest of the fruition of God, which shall be in our Countrey.

To these obseruations of Thomas, we may adde that strictnesse of the obseruation, That they might not kindle a fire on the Sabbath, and such like. And howsoeuer some testimonies of the Fathers be alledged against this truth, and to proue that the Sabbath was born at Mount Sinai, as of [s] Tertullian, Iustin Martyr, Eusebius, Cyprian, Augustine, which deny the Sabbatizing of the Patriarkes before that time, and account it typicall: Why may not we interpret them of that Sabbath of the [t] Iewes, which we haue thus distinguished from the Morall Sabbath, by those former notes of difference? Broughton in his Concent alleadgeth the Concent of Rabbins, as of Ramban on *Gen.*26. and Aben Ezra vpon *Exod.*10. That the Fathers obserued the Sabbath before Moses. And Moses himselfe no sooner commeth to a seuenth day, but he sheweth that [u] God rested, blessed, sanctified the same.

It resteth therefore, that a time of rest from bodily labour was sanctified vnto spirituall deuotions from the beginning of the world, and that a seuenth dayes rest began, not with the Mosaicall Ceremonies in the Wildernesse (as some men will haue it) but with Adam in Paradise. That which is morall (say some) is eternall, and must not giue place; I answer, That the Commandements are eternall, but yet subordinate. There is a [x] first of all the Commandements, and there is a second like to this, like in qualitie, not in equalitie: and in euery Commandement the Soule of obedience (which is the obedience of the soule) taketh place of that body of obedience, which is performed by the body. Mercie is preferred before sacrifice, and charitie before outward worship: Paul y staieth his preaching to heale Eutychus: Christ patronizeth z his Disciples, plucking the eares of Corne; and affirmeth, That the Sabbath was made for Man, and not Man for the Sabbath. Although therefore both rest and workes of the Sabbath giue place to such duties, which the present occasion presenteth, as more weightie and necessary to that time, yet doth it not follow, that the Sabbath is not morall, no more then the Commandement of Almes is not morall, because (as a Barnard obserueth) the prohibitiue Commandement of stealing is of greater force, and more bindeth. And in a word, the Negatiue Precepts are of more force, and b more vniuersally bind then the affirmatiue. A man must hate his Father and Mother for Christs sake, and breake the Sabbaths rest for his Neighbour in cases of necessitie. And therefore such scrupulous c fancies, as some obtrude vnder the name of the Sabbath, esteeming it a greater sinne to violate this holy Rest, then to commit Murther, cannot be defended.

Pardon this long Discourse, whereunto the longer Discourses of others haue brought me. But now me thinkes I heare thee say, And what is all this to Adams integrity? Doubtlesse, Adam had his particular calling, to till the ground: his generall calling also, to serue GOD; which as he was spiritually to performe in all things, so being a body, he was to haue time and place set apart for the bodily performance thereof. And what example could hee better follow, then of his Lord and Creator? But some obiect, This is to slacken him running, rather then to incite and prouoke him; to bind, and not to loose him; cannot be a spurre, but a bridle to his deuotion. But they should consider, that we doe not tie Adam to the seuenth day onely; but to the seuenth especially, wherein to performe set, publique, and solemne worship. Neither did Daniel, that prayed thrice a day, or Dauid, in his seuen times, or Saint Paul, in his iniunction of praying continually, conceiue that the Sabbath would hinder men, and not rather further them in these workes. Neither was Adams state so excellent, as that he needed no helps: which wofull experience in his fall hath taught. God gaue him power to liue, yea with euerlasting life: and should not Adam therefore haue eaten, yea and haue had conuenient times for food and sleep, and other naturall necessities? How much more in this perfect, yet flexible and variable condition of his Soule, did he need meanes of establishment, although euen in his outward calling, he did not forget, nor was forgotten? Which outward workes, though they were not irkesome and tedious, as sinne hath made them to vs, yet did they detaine his body, and somewhat distract his mind, from that full and entire seruice which the Sabbath might exact of him. Neither doe they shew any strong reason for their opinion, which hold the sanctification of the Sabbath, Genes. 2. to be set downe by way of anticipation, or as a preparatiue to the Iewish Sabbath, ordained d 2453. yeares after.

If any shall aske, Why the same seuenth day is not still obserued of Christians; I answer, This was figuratiue, and is abolished; but a seuenth day still remaineth. Lex naturalis est, coniunctam habens ceremonialem designationem diei (saith Iunius.) The Law is naturall, hauing adioyned thereto the ceremoniall appointment of the day. But why is this day now called the Lords day? I answer, euen therefore because it is the Lords day, not changed by the Churches Constitution Meere, as some seeme to hold: except by the Churches authority they meane Christ and his Apostles: nor descended to vs by Tradition, as the Papists maintaine, seeing the Scriptures, Act. 20. 7. 1. Cor. 16. 21. Apoc. 1. 10. mention the name and celebration by the constant practise of the Apostles: yea, Christ himselfe as he rose on that day, so did he vsually appeare on that day to his Apostles before his Ascension. Christ therefore and his Apostles are our Authors of this change. And the Church * euer since hath constantly obserued it. The Fathers teach, yea the Papists themselues acknowledge this truth. So Bellarmine de Cultu Sanct. l. 3. c. 11. saith, Ius diuinum requirebat, vt vnus dies Hebdomade dicaretur cultui diuino: non autem conueniebat vt seruaretur Sabbathum: itaque ab Apostolis in diem Dominicum versum e est. It was in the Primitiue Church called the Lords day, the day of Bread and f of Light, because of the Sacraments of the Supper and Baptisme, therein administred, called Bread and Light. And how it may be ascribed to Tradition, g Bellarmine, the great Patron of Traditions, sheweth out of Iustin Martyr, who saith, Christus hac illis (Apostolis & Discipulis) tradidit, Iustin in fine 2. Apolog. He there also reporteth, That they had their Ecclesiasticall Assemblies euery Lords day. The Rhemists, h which ascribe it to Tradition in Annot. Matth. 15. acknowledge the institution thereof, in Annot. 1. Cor. 16. 2. Ignatius i may be allowed Arbiter in this question of the Sabbath, who thus writeth to the Magnesians: Non Sabbatisemus, Let vs not obserue the Sabbath after the Iewish manner, as delighting in ease; For he that worketh not, let him not eate: but let euery one of vs keepe the Sabbath spiritually, not eating meat dressed the day before, and walking set paces, &c. But let euery Christian celebrate the Lords day, consecrated to the Lords resurrection, as the Queene and Princesse of all dayes.

Now for the particular Commandement, which was giuen him as an especiall proofe of his obedience, in a thing otherwise not vnlawfull, it was the forbidding him to eate of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge. For in the middest of the Garden GOD had planted two Trees, which some call * Sacraments, and were, by GODS Ordinance, signes vnto him: one of life, if he obeyed; the other of death, by disobedience. Not as the Iewes thought, and Iulian scoffed, That the Tree had power to giue sharpenesse of wit. And although some thinke signes needlesse to so excellent a creature; yet beeing mutable, subiect to temptation, and each way flexible to vertue or vice, according as he vsed his naturall power of free-will; I see not why they should deny GOD that libertie to impose, or man that necessitie to need such monitories, and (as it were) Sacramentall instructions. For what might these Trees haue furthered him in carefulnesse, if he had considered life and death, not so much in these Trees, as in his free-wil, and obeying or disobeying his Creator.

* Erat ei in lignis cæteris alimentum, in illo autem, Sacramentum. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. lib. 8. cap. 4.

These Trees, in regard of their signification, and euent, are called the Tree of Life, and the Tree of Knowledge of good and euill: which was not euill or hurtfull in it selfe, but was a visible rule, whereby good and euill should be knowne, and that by reason of the Commandement annexed, which he might by this Precept see to be grounded in obeying or disobeying the authority of the Law-giuer. An easie rule, and yet too easily broken. For when as God did hereby challenge his own Soueraignty, by imposing so easie a fine, which might haue forbidden all but one (as contrariwise he allowed) and fore-signified the danger, that he might continue his goodnesse to man, continuing in obedience; yet did man herein shew his contempt, in reiecting so easie a yoake, and so light a burthen. I will not reason whether these two Trees may properly be called Sacraments: of which (say some) the one was but for the bodily life, and better neuer to haue touched the other: this we know, that in eating of this he lost both bodily and spirituall life, which the name and institution thereof forewarned, and should haue preuented: otherwise, in eating of the other, immortalitie had been sealed both in soule and body, to him and his for euer. Strange it seemeth, that he should need no monitorie signes to preuent that, which, euen with these helps added, he did not eschew.

CHAP. V.

Of the Fall of Man: and of Originall Sinne.

HItherto we haue beheld the Creation of the World, and of our first Parents, the liuely Images of the Creator and the Creature; whom we haue somewhat leisurely viewed in a naked Maiesty, delighting themselues in the enamelled walkes of their delightfull Garden. The Riuers whereof ranne to present their best offices to their new Lords, from which they were forced by the backer streames, greedy of the sight and place which they could not hold: The Trees stouped to behold them, offering their shady mantle, and varietie of fruits, as their naturall tribute: each creature in a silent gladnesse reioyced in them, and they enioyed all mutuall comforts in the Creator, the Creatures, and in themselues. A blessed Payre, who enioyed all they desired, whiles their desire was worth the enioying: Lords of all, and of more then all, Content, which might in all they saw, see their Makers bounty; and beyond all they could see, might see themselues comprehended, where they could not comprehend, of that infinite Greatnesse and goodnesse, which they could not but loue, reuerence, admire and adore. This was then their Religion, to acknowledge with thankefulnesse, to be thankefull in obedience, to obey with cherefulnesse, the Author of all this good: to the performance whereof, they found no outward, no inward impediment; Sickenesse, Perturbation and Death (the deformed issue of Sinne) not yet being entered into the World.

* It is by all affirmed, that the fall was very soon after the Creation, as appeareth by circumstances of the narration, by Satans malice, the womans virginitie, and many hold, it was the very day of their Creation. Bibliand. Broughtons Concent, Præter antiquos August. Iren. Chrysost. &c. And Genebrard is exactly curious for the day & houre, if you will receiue him. Sexto die diluculo treatus fuit: hora tertia Euæ copulatus: hora sexta tentatus: hora nona eiectus è Paradiso, in agrum Hebron, vnà cum Eua exul pellitur, vbi & sepelitur, Genes. Cl. 1. c. n.

In this plight did Satan (that old Serpent) see, disdaine and enuy them. It was not enough for him, and the deuillish crue of his damned associates, for their late rebellion, to be banished Heauen, but the inferiour world must be filled with his venome, working that malice on the Creatures here, which he could not there so easily wrecke on their Creator. And because Man was here GODS Deputy and Lieutenant, as a petty God on the Earth, hee chooseth him as the fittest subiect, in whose ruine to despite his Maker. To this end he vseth not a Lion-like force, which then had been bootlesse, but a Serpentine sleight, vsing that subtill creature as the meetest instrument to his Labyrinthian proiects. Whereas by inward temptation he could not so easily preuaile, by insinuating himselfe into their minds, he windes himselfe into this winding Beast, disposing the Serpents tongue to speake to the Woman (the weaker Vessell) singled from her husband, and by questioning doth first vndermine her. The * Woman

(whether ſhe had not yet experience of the Nature of the Creatures, or did admire ſo ſtrange an accident, and would ſatisfie her curious mind in the further tryall) entertained diſcourſe, and was preſently ſnared. For though ſhe held her to the Commandement, yet the threatning annexed, ſhe did ſomewhat mince and extenuate. What ſhe ſeemed to leſſen, he feared not to annihilate, and wholly diſanull, propounding not onely impunity, but aduantage, That they ſhould be as Gods, in the enriching of their minds with further knowledge. This hee perſwadeth by the equiuocating in the name of the Tree (the firſt equiuocation we read of, [a] otherwhere plainely tearmed a lye) charging GOD with falſhood and malignitie.

[a] Ioh.8.44. The firſt ſinne of our firſt Parents.

Thus he that abode not in the Truth himſelfe, but was a Man-ſlayer from the beginning, and the Father of Lying, which he no where elſe borrowed, but had of his owne, perſwaded her by his great ſubtiltie, firſt to doubt of GODS Truth in his Word (the firſt particular ſinne that euer-mans heart entertained; for the other were but occaſions and inducements; diſobedience and vnthankefulneſſe are more generall) after that, ſhe vnlawfully luſted after this new knowledge, bewitched with the pleaſantneſſe of the fruit to the taſte and ſight, ſhee tooke, and did eate, and gaue to her husband likewiſe. The higheſt power of the ſoule is firſt entrapped, the luſting and ſenſible faculties follow after, iuſtly plagued by a correſpondent inward rebellion, that the ſenſe now raleth the appetite; and this the reaſon in our corrupt eſtate, which hence proceeded.

Thus [b] vnbeleefe brought forth vnthankefulneſſe. vnthankefulneſſe, pride; from thence ambition and all that rabble of contempt of Gods Truth; beleeuing the Deuils lies, abuſe of the Creatures to wanton luſt, Sacrilegious vſurping that which GOD had reſerued, ſcandalous prouocation of her huſband, with the murther bodily and ghoſtly of him, her ſelfe, and their whole poſteritie for euer; and whereas, yet they had done little ſeruice to GOD, they offered almoſt their firſt fruits to the Deuill, hauing [c] Free-will to haue reſiſted if they would. No maruell then if ſuch a combination of ſo many ſinnes in one, wrung from the iuſtice of GOD, ſuch a multitude of iudgements on them and theirs, in the defacing that goodly and glorious Image of GOD; ſubiecting (inſtead thereof) the Bodie to Sickeneſſe, Colde, Heate, Nakedneſſe, Hunger, Thirſt, Stripes, Wounds, Death; the Minde to Ignorance, Doubtings, Vanitie, Phancies, Phrenzies; the Will to Vnſtaiedneſſe, Paſſion, Perturbations; the Whole Man is made a ſlaue to Sinne within him, to the Deuill without; whence he muſt expect Wages ſuitable to his Worke, Death; Spirituall, Naturall, and Eternall: an infinite puniſhment, for offending an infinite Maieſty.

[b] Aug. Enchir. cap 45. Fooliſh and wicked is their conceit, that meaſure this ſinne by the fruit (a Nut or Apple) that was eaten: as Pope Iulius, That ſaid hee might bee as well angry for his Peacocke as God (whoſe Vicar he was) for an Apple. Bal de vit. Pont.

[c] Poſſe ſi vellent ſed non velle vt poſſent.

Thus had they put out their light to obſcure darkeneſſe: and if they were not preſently caſt into vtter darkeneſſe, it was GODS mercy (not their merit) which ſuſpended the firſt and naturall death, to preuent that ſecond and eternall. But ſpiritually the were euen already dead in ſinnes, as appeared by the accuſations of their conſcience whereof Moſes ſaith, [d] The eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked. Conſcience, before Vertues keeper, was now become Hels Harbenger, then flaſhing lightnings in the face of their minds, to ſhew, that their nakednes did now appeare filthy in GODS ſight: Lightnings indeed, which could only lighten to terrifie, not enlighten with inſtruction and comfort: Which ſparke remaineth after the fire of Gods Image extinct, by the mercifull prouidence of GOD, in ſome [e] to bee a bridle of Nature, leaſt they ſhould runne into all exceſſe of vilanie, and not leaue a face of the world in the world, and to be to others, by diſpoſition and working of a higher and ſupernaturall Light, a preparatiue to, and a preſeruatiue in that light of Life. So much the greater is their ſinne, that ſeeke to flaſh out theſe flaſhings: and whereas they cannot reade the booke of Scripture, and will not reade the booke of the Creature, labour to extinguiſh alſo this Light of Nature, that with ſeared conſciences, they may more freely in darkeneſſe commit the workes of darkeneſſe. And euen this did Adam ſeeke, if GOD had not brought him out of his Owles neaſt. For what could a Fig-leafe hide from GOD? and did they thinke the innocent Trees would conſpire with them to conceale Traytors? Was there any darkeneſſe which was not Light to him? Or could Breeches and Trees couer their Soules, which receiued the firſt and worſt nakedneſſe; till which, Nakedneſſe to the body, was a Clothing of Beauty, a Liuery of Bountie, an Enſigne of Maieſty? Such [f] brokenpits ſeeke they that forſake the Fountaine of liuing Waters.

And yet when GOD commeth into Iudgement, and [g] makes the winds to vſher him vnto his priuate Seſſions in Paradiſe; to thoſe ſhiftleſſe ſhifts they added worſe, impiouſly accuſing GOD, vncharitably charging one another, to put from themſelues that blame, which thus claue faſter to them. A medicine worſe then the diſeaſe, or a diſeaſe inſtead of a medicine, is hypocriſie, that will not ſee her owne ſickeneſſe, and ſeekes rather to couer, then to cure; to couer by charging others, then recouer by diſcharging and diſcouering it ſelfe; as if [h] equitie pretended were not in quitie doubled. GOD proceedeth to ſentence, a ſentence worthy of GOD, ſhewing at once his infinite iuſtice in the puniſhment of ſinne, and no leſſe infinite mercie, to prouide an infinite price to redeeme vs; by his infinite power bringing good out of euill, euill, and by his manifold Wisedome taking that wise one in his craftinesse, who in the destruction of Man, had sought GOD'S dishonour. So good is it that euill should be, when this Soueraigne goodnesse purposeth to effect his good will by wicked instruments, out * of their darkenesse, producing his owne maruellous light: as appeared in this worke of Sathan an aduersary, intended to his despite; in, and by the promised Seede, disposed to his glory. [i] The Serpent hath a bodily curse in his future bodily difficulties, which still continue, for his instrumentall and bodily imployment.

The [k] old Serpent and spirituall Enemie, hath a spirituall and eternall curse, the breaking of his head by that Seede of the Woman, that should once lead Captiuitie captiue. Our Parents are cursed, yet so, as their curse is turned into a blessing; all things working to the best: In sorrow shal be the Womans conceptions, but recompenced with the ioy which followeth (and is as it were, the Mid-wife in their trauell) because of [l] fruit borne into the World; and more then recompenced, in that they are [m] saued by bearing of children, if they continue in the faith, and liue in holinesse with modestie. Adam is set to labour, not as before, with delight, but with paine and difficultie; the Earth also being cursed for his sake: yet by this narrow way, by this crosse-way, he is guided to Heauen; the hope whereof was giuen him before Paradise was taken from him. So true is it, that in iudgement he remembreth mercy, if we can learne to liue by faith, and not by sight.

This, that Moses telleth of the fall of Man, Experience doth in manner proclaime through the World, in the manifold effects thereof, which we daily see. For whereas the World was made for Man, as before is shewed, who alone, in regard of his bodily and spirituall nature, can need and vse it, no creature in the world is in his kind so imperfect as man. Hee that was before as an earthly God, is now become an incarnate Deuill, and for aspiring to be like his Lord, was made a seruant of his [n] seruants; the noblest part in him becomming a base Officer to degrade him, Reason it selfe deiected at the feet of Sense, to be a slaue, and a very Bawd to sensuall pleasures, a very Broker for dung-hill profits. And what is this but to metamorphose man into a beast? vnlesse that some in a lower degree, liuing onely to liue, suffocated [o] with eating, drinking, sleeping, are degenerated into plants? And if he descend not lower, to become torpide and liuelesse, yet doth he participate the imperfections of those things, and that without their perfections, as if with an imperfect retrograde hee would returne into his first elements, or in a perfected imperfection, to his first nothing. What stone so hard as mans heart is relentlesse, remorselesse to his best good? What dust more subiect to the wind, or water more flexible, then hee to temptation and sinne? But those things remaine in their nature, or naturall place: Man is a fuming smoke, a passing shadow. And yet if wee could stay at our Elements, it were somewhat better; but wee are seruants and drudges beneath all names of baseneſse, vnbowelling the Earth, and our selues in the earth, for a little hardened earth, that neuer had the dignitie to see, no not to be seen of the Sunne. We seeme to rule the Skie, Winds, and Seas; indeed we aduenture our liues to their mercy, and not three fingers thickneſse doth separate vs from death, that we may bring home an idle discourse, or somewhat, almost lesse then nothing, that we call a Iewell. Once, we inuert Nature, subuert others, peruert our selues, for those things which sometimes kill the body, and alway (except a power, with whom all things are possible, preuent) the Soule: And yet, [p] Thou Foole, this night may they fetch away thy Soule; and whose then shall these things bee? And whose then, and where then, shalt thou be? Thou gainest faire to loose thy selfe, to be taken with thy taking, to bee thus bad to others, that thou mayest be worse to thy selfe: and when-as (like an Asse) thou hast been laden all the dayes of thy life with those things, which euen in hauing thou wantedst, now to be more intollerably burthened, now to be in Hell, which will neuer bee satisfied in thee, whose Character was before engrauen in thy vnsatiable heart. Tell me not then of the reasonable power of our soules, whereby we resemble GOD, seeing that reason may tell thee and me, that by abusing it [q] we are like, and [r] are of our Father the Deuill. That erected countenance to be still groueling in, and poring on the Earth; that immortall soule to mind onely such things as haue not the imperfect priuiledge to be mortall; those high excellencies to bee abused to mischiefe, blaspheming, denying, forswearing GOD and all for the basest of the basest creatures! Well might this deluge of corruption mooue that [s] Cynick, in a throng of men to make search for a Man, this Man which is now left vs, beeing but the ruines, the carkasse of himselfe. Well might the Greekes call this body of ours, σῶμα * quasi σῆμα, the Sepulchre of the soule; the Latines Corpus, where by reason of mans fall from his first estate, the first syllable is falne off, Cor, the heart is gone, we are Vecordes, Socordes, onely pus remaines, corruption and filthinesse; and doe not wee call it body, because both die, the soule also hereby infected, and that both deaths, internall and externall? The Spirit, the better part of man, is spirit indeed, a puffe and vaine blast of emptinesse, animus is ἄνεμος, a winde that passeth, that passeth the wind in vanitie. But what needes all this? Why are we fallen into so long and tedious discourse of our fall? Euen because some are fallen further, beyond all sense and feeling of their their fall, and beleeued not that man was euer any other creature, then now they see; that if their goodnesse cannot, yet their wickednesse might teach them, that so perfect a World should not haue beene framed for so imperfect a wretch, now onely perfect in imperfection. Our fall must teach vs to rise, our straying to returne, our degeneration a regeneration. And therefore was not that Image of GOD wholly done out, but some remainder continued to the Posteritie, to conuince them of miserie in themselues, that so denying themselues, they might take vp their Crosse, and follow the second Adam vnto a durable happinesse.

But how (may some aske, as [t] the Pelagian did) came this misery to vs? Non peccat ille qui genuit, non peccat ille qui condidit, per quas igitur rimas inter tot præsidia innocentiæ fingis peccatum ingressum? Doth it agree with diuine Iustice, that if the Fathers haue eaten sowre Grapes, the Children-teeth should be set on edge? I answere, We are Heires of our Father, we need not seeke some secret cranie, we see an open gate, [u] by one man sinne entred into the World, and death by sinne. A little leaue let vs borrow to cleere this difficultie. Sinne is [x] a transgression of the Law, or a defect of conformitie to the Law, (ἡ τῆς ἀνομίας ἕξις ἡ ἀνομία) and cannot properly be said to haue an efficient, but a deficient cause, being in it owne nature and subsistence, ὄντως μὴ ὄν. The [y] Schoole-men say, in sinne are two things to bee considered, the substance and the qualitie, essence and priuation, the act and defect, whereof that they call the Materiall, this the Formall part of sinne, beeing nothing else but a deformitie, irregularitie and vnlawfulnesse in our naturall condition and conditions, as easily to be distinguished, though not to be diuided, from the action, as lamenesse from the working hand, or iarring in an Instrument, both from the Instrument and sound. The Sinner is termed nequam, [z] as nequicquam naught, as not ought. Not that sinne is simply nothing, Non negatiuè, sed priuatiuè Nihil; nor is it a meere and pure priuation, but to bee considered with that subiect, wherein, and whereof it is such a distortion and destruction: the want of this consideration draue the Manichees to their Hereticall opinion of two beings and beginnings. Sinne was first seene in the Deuill, who voluntarily strayed from the right way, and as hee abode not in the Truth himselfe, so hee beguiled our first Parents, from whom, by the Conduit of Nature, it is conueyed to vs. I speake of Originall sinne, which is our inheritance; for actuall sinnes are our owne purchase and improuement, and yet bought with that stocke which our Parents left vs: Our first Parents are to bee considered, not as singular persons onely, whereby they defiled themselues, but as the roote of Mankind, which had receiued Originall Righteousnesse, to keepe or to lose to them and theirs, as a perpetuall inheritance. As in the Bodie Politike, the Act of the Prince is reputed the Act of the whole; the consent of a Burgesse in Parliament bindeth the whole Citie which he representeth: and [a] as in the naturall Bodie, the whole bodie is lyable to the guilt of that fact which the head or hand hath committed: as a root to his branches, a Fountaine to his streames, doth conuey the goodnesse or badnesse which it selfe hath receiued: So stands it betwixt vs and Adam our naturall Prince, the Burgesse of the World, the Head of this humane Bodie and Generation, the Root and Fountaine of our Humanitie. When hee sinned, hee lost to himselfe and vs that Image of GOD, or that part of the Image of GOD, which he had receiued for himselfe and vs; not the substance, nor the faculties of bodie or soule, but the conformitie in that substance and faculties to the will of GOD, in [b] righteousnesse and holinesse of truth.

Not so much therefore are wee here to consider the ordinary course of Nature, wherein [c] the soule that sinneth, it shall dye: as the Ordinance of GOD, who appointed the first Adam, the Wel-spring of Nature, which he receiued incorrupted; the second, of Grace; that as men, we all by Generation, are of the first, and with the first, [d] one old man, in whom we all sinned; of, and with the second Adam we are all one new man in the Lord, euen one bodie; one Spirit, one Seed, one Christ, in whom, and with whom, wee, as members of that Head, obeyed the Precepts, and suffered the curse of the Law. [f] Other sinnes of Adam are not our naturall, but his personall, because he could be no longer a publike person, then while he had somewhat to saue or lose for vs; all being alreadie forfeited in this first sinne. The Authour then of Originall Sinne, is the Propagator of our Nature: his actuall sinne is originally ours, the Guilt being deriued by imputation, the Corruption by naturall generation. First, that Person corrupted Nature; after, Nature, infected our Persons. The matter of this Originall corruption, in regard of the subiect, is All and euery man, and All and euery part of all and euery man, subiect to all sinne, that if all be not as bad as any, and the best as the worst, it must be ascribed to GODS restrayning, or renewing, not vnto vnequall degrees in this originall staine. In regard of the Obiect, the matter of it is the want of originall Righteousnesse, and a contrary inclination to Euill, [g] The imaginations of our hearts being onely euill continually. No Grapes can grow on these Thornes. The forme of this corruption is the deformitie of our corrupted Nature, not by infusion or imitation, but by default default of that first instrument, by which this Nature descendeth. It is the roote of actuall sinnes: and whereas they, as fruits, are transient, this still remayneth, vntill Christ by his death destroyeth this death in vs.

But here ariseth another difficulty; How this sinne can bee deriued by Generation, seeing it is truely beleeued, that God is [h] Father of Spirits, the [i] Former of our Soules, which doth by infusion create, and by Creation infuse them: corruptible Elements, beeing vnable to procreate an incorruptible substance, or generation to produce incorruption. Neither standeth it with reason, that he which communicateth not the substance, should communicate the accidents; or with Iustice, that an innocent Soule should necessarily be stayned by inuoluntary infusion into a pollured bodie.

I answere hereunto, That although the Soule be not traducted (as they terme it) and by Generation conferred; yet is it coupled to the body in that manner and order which GOD had appointed for the coniunction thereof, though man had not sinned? Neither was it the Soule alone in Adam, or the body alone, but the Person, consisting of both, which sinned: Neither can we be partakers of Natures sinne, till we be partakers of humane Nature, which is not, till the Soule and Body bee vnited. Wee are not so much therefore to looke to the concupiscence, and lust of the Parents in generation, as [k] Lumbard teacheth vs, but to the Person; which, [l] Scotus saith, is filia Adæ, & debitrix iustitiæ originalis. And although the Soule be not in the seed, yet it is communicated to the Body (saith Aquinas) by a dispositiue or preparatiue power of the Seed, which disposeth and prepareth the Body to the receiuing of the Soule, where it is receiued (after the [m] generall rule) according to the measure and nature of that which receiueth. The Father is then a perfect Father, not because he begetteth the Soule, but because he begetteth the Person, or at least all whatsoeuer in the Person is begotten: and though he doth not beget the substance thereof; yet, as it is [n] such a subsistence, he may be said to procreate it, because his generation worketh towards the Vnion of the Soule and Body; which Vnion is made by the Spirits, Animall and Vitall. And [o] these Spirits are procreated by the Seed, and consist of a middle nature, as it were betwixt bodily and spirituall: so that the production of the Soule, and incorporating thereof, may be counted in the middle way betweene Creation and Generation. And therefore this originall corruption did not reach to Christ Iesus, although hee were true Man, because hee was the Seed of the Woman, and did not descend of Adam by generation (per seminalem rationem, tanquam à principio actiuo, saith Aquinas) but was miraculously framed in the wombe, and of the substance of the Virgin, by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Thus haue I presumed to offer my crude and rude Meditations to the wiser World, about the deriuation of Originall sinne, which it selfe is the cause why we can no better see it, as darkenesse hideth it selfe. But the whole Citie of Mankind being herewith set on fire, it behoueth euery one to be more carefull to quench it, then ouer-curiously to enquire how it came: It is sufficient, that nothing descended hereby to vs by corruption, or was made ours by imputation, which is not fully cured by Christ: who is [p] made vnto vs (both by imputation of his actiue and passiue obedience, and by reall infusion of his Spirit) Wisdome, Righteousnesse, Sanctification, and Redemption; if wee haue faith to receiue it, and Charitie to expresse it: an absolute renewer and perfecter of the Image of God, beyond what wee had in our first Parents lost.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Reliques of the Diuine Image after the Fall, whereby naturally men addict themselues vnto some Religion: and what was the Religion of the World before the Floud.

THis sinne of our first Parents, whereby they were almost no sooner made then marr'd (being as some suppose, formed and deformed in one day; so interpreting the Psalme, * That he lodged not one night in honour, but became as the beasts that [a] perish. This sinne (I say) did not wholly depriue vs of the Image of GOD, whereunto wee were created. A remainder and stumpe thereof continued, like to the stumpe of [b] Dagon, whose head and hands were cut off by his fall; or like the stumpe of [c] Nabuchodonosors Tree, whose rootes were left in the Earth, bound with a band of Iron and Brasse among the grasse of the field. So was mans head and hands fallen off before the Arke, that his Wisdome remayning was foolishnesse with God; not sufficient to one good thought, not able either to will or to doe that which might pleaſe GOD. And though the ſtumpe remained (the ſubſtance and the faculties of Body and Soule) yet was this ſtumpe left in the earth, faſt bound with yron and braſſe, his earthly mind captiued and chained with worldly vanities and deuilliſh villainies. Or to vſe Lumbards compariſon, [d] he was like the man fallen [e] among theeues, wounded and ſpoyled: wounded in his naturall parts, ſpoyled and robbed of the gifts of Grace, which GOD by eſpeciall grace added to his Nature, in that firſt beautifying of this his Image.

In the ſtate of Creation, Man was made able [f] to commit no ſinne; in the ſtate of Corruption he cannot but ſinne: vntill a third ſtate of grace doe free him; not from the being, but from the raigning and imputation of ſinne, whereby he is prepared to a fourth ſtate of glory, wherein ſhall be no poſſibilitie of ſinning, or neceſſitie of ſtriuing againſt ſinne. And how ſoeuer in this corrupt ſtate of Nature, in our ſpirituall actions, which meerely concerne the Kingdome of Heauen, we cannot but ſinne, yet hath not God left himſelfe without witneſſe, euen in this darkeneſſe to conuince vs of ſinne. Such are thoſe notions, ſowne by Natures hand in euery of our hearts: according to which euidence, Conſcience as a Witneſſe, Patron, or Iudge within vs, [g] accuſeth, excuſeth, condemneth, or abſolueth; that hereby GOD may bee [h] iuſtified, and all the World inexcuſably ſinnefull; and that hereby alſo a way may be left in GODS infinite mercy for Mans recouery. His intent was [i] not to deſtroy vs vtterly, (as iuſtly he might, and as it befell the rebellious Angels) but by this puniſhment to recall vs to ſubiection; not to breake vs to pieces in his wrath, but by wrath to reclaime vs to mercy.

Thus Nature ſuggeſteth, Reaſon conuinceth, and is conuinced. That there is a GOD: that that GOD hath created the World (as we before haue ſhewed) and that for Man; that Man, to whom all things ſerue, is to ſerue GOD, who hath ſubiected them to him. Doth not Nature teach the Sonne to honour his Father, and the Seruant his Lord? [k] If he then bee our Father, where is his honour? if our Lord, where is his feare? Nature inferreth, Reaſon vrgeth this, and from that ground of Reaſon doth Scripture reaſon, the nature whereof in our nature is written. Euen by Reaſons Principles we learne, That ſo perfect a hand, as made all theſe inferiour things in ſuch perfection, would not haue been ſo imperfect in the perfecteſt of them all, ſo to haue left him in the Creation, as wee now ſee him in Corruption. The [l] Philoſophers ſaw, Man was a little World, for whom the greater was made, who himſelfe was made for more then the World: and that he, for whom ſo durable and ſubſtantiall a thing was made, muſt needs be made for another then this fraile and wretched life; that is, for the euerlaſting life with him, that is the Euerlaſting. And that is the foundation of all Religion. For what elſe is Religion, but the Schoole, wherein we learne Mans dutie towards GOD, and the way to be linked moſt ſtraitly to him? And what are all the Exerciſes of Religion, but acknowledgements of the Godhead, of the Creation of the World, of the prouident order therein, and ordering thereof, of the Soules immortalitie, of Mans fall and imperfection, of our Soueraigne and ſupreame good to be ſought out of our ſelues? Of all which, Nature and Reaſon are witneſſes, not to the learned alone, whoſe teſtimonies in this kind may eaſily be produced, but euen to the Vulgar and rudeſt Idiots; yea, whereas neither Art, nor Induſtry, nor ciuill Society hath bound men as men together, yet the grounds of theſe things haue bound them as men, by the meere bond of humane Nature, to GOD, in ſome or other Religion.

GOD, Man, and Religion, are neceſſarily linked, as a Father, a Sonne, and Obedience, as a Lender, a Debter, and a Bond. The Wit no ſooner conceiueth that there is a GOD, but the Will inferreth that he ought to be worſhipped. What Philoſophers, or what Politicians euer taught the Eaſterne and Weſterne Iſlands, diſcouered in this laſt Age of the World, this neceſſitie of Religion? And yet (as followeth in this Hiſtory to bee ſhewed) they which neuer wore clothes on their bodies, neuer furniſhed their mindes with Arts, neuer knewe any Law (beſides Reaſon growne almoſt lawleſſe) or Magiſtrate, but their Fathers: which, when they ſaw other men, could not tell whether they were [m] heauenly Wights, or earthly Monſters, theſe yet wearied themſelues in Superſtitions; ſhewing it eaſier to put off our ſelues, then to put the Principles of Religion out of our ſelues. Yea, among all the Leſſons which Nature hath taught, this is the deepleſt indented: not Arts, not Policie, nay, not Rayment, not Food, not Life it ſelfe eſteemed ſo deare, and that naturally, to men, as their Religion. Hereof let this Hiſtorie enſuing be witneſſe, which will ſhew the Reader, euery where, in manner, ouer the World, this naturall zeale of that which they eſteeme Religion, beyond all things elſe eſteemed moſt naturall.

Some in the guilty conſcience of their owne irreligion (as Æſops Foxe, that beeing by caſualtie depriued of his tayle, ſought to perſwade all Foxes to cut off theirs, as vnprofitable burthens) would tell vs that which they [n] cannot tell to themſelues, which they dare not tell, but (as they dare) whiſper, That Religion is but a continued Cuſtome, or a wiſer Policie to hold men in awe. But where had Cuſtome this beginning? And what is Cuſtome, but an vniformemanner, and continuance of outward Rites? Whereas Religion it ſelfe is in the heart, heart, and produceth those outward ceremoniall effects thereof. In one Country men obserue one habite of attire, another in another: So likewise of dyet: and yet is it naturall to bee clothed, more naturall to eate, but naturall most of all, as is said, to obserue some kind of Religion.

The Grecians [o] burned their dead Parents, the Indians intombed them in their own bowels: Darius could not by great summes procure the Grecians to the Indian, or these to the Grecian custome: yet was that which mooued both, and began either Custome, one and the same principle of pietie and religious dutie, how soeuer diuerslly expressed. Yea, euen the most lasciuious, cruell, beastly, and Deuilish obseruations, were grounded vpon this one principle, That GOD must bee serued: which seruice they measured by their owne crooked Rules, euery where disagreeing, and yet meeting in one Center, The necessitie of Religion.

As for Policie, although it is before answered; yet this may be added, That whereas men with all threatnings, promises, punishments, rewards, can scarce establish their politicall Ordinances; Religion insinuateth and establisheth it selfe: yea, taketh naturally such rooting, that all politicall Lawes and tortures cannot plucke it vp. How many Martyrs [p] hath Religion, yea, superstition yeelded? but who will lay downe his life to seale some Politicians authority? And so farre is it that Religion should be grounded on Policie, that Policie borroweth helpe of Religion. Thus did Numa father his Romane Lawes on Ægeria, and other Law-giuers on other supposed Deities, which had been a foolish argument, [q] and vnreasonable manner of reasoning, to perswade one obscurity by a greater, had not Nature before taught them religious awe to God, of which they made vse to this ciuill obedience of their lawes; supposed to spring from a Diuine Fountaine. Yea, the falshoods and varietie of religions are euidences of this Truth; seeing men will rather worship a [r] Beast, Stocke, or the baiest Creature, then professe no Religion at all. The [s] Philosophers also that are accused of Atheisme, for the most part, did not deny Religion simply, but that irreligious Religion of the Greekes in idolatrous superstition, Socrates rather swearing by a Dog, or an Oke, then acknowledging such gods. It is manifest then, that the Image of GOD was by the Fall depraued, but not vtterly extinct; among other sparkes this also being raked vp in the ruines of our decayed Nature; some science of the God-head, some conscience of Religion: although the true Religion can bee but one, and that which GOD himselfe teacheth, as the onely true way to himselfe; all other Religions being but strayings from him, whereby men wander in the darke, and in labyrinths of error: like men drowning, that get hold on euery twig, or the foolish fish that leapeth out of the frying-pan into the fire.

Thus GOD left a sparke of that light couered vnder the ashes of it selfe; which himselfe vouchsafed to kindle into a flame, neuer since, neuer after to be extinguished. And although that rule of Diuine Iustice had denounced [t] morte morieris, to die, and againe to die a first and second death, yet vnasked, yea, by cauilling excuses further prouoked, hee by the promised seed erected him to the hope of a first and second resurrection; a life of Grace first, and after of Glory. The Sonne of God is promised to be made the seede of the Woman: the substantiall [u] Image of the inuisible GOD, to be made after the Image and similitude of a Man, to reforme and transforme him againe into the former Image and similitude of GOD; and whereas GOD had made man before after his owne Image, and lost him; he now promiseth to make himselfe after Mans Image to recouer him: euen that he, which in the [x] forme of GOD thought it not robbery (for it was Nature) to bee equall with GOD, should bee made nothing to make vs something, should not spare himselfe that hee might spare vs, should become partaker of our Nature, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone, that hee might make vs [y] partakers of the Diuine Nature, flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone. This was that Seede of the Woman, that hath broken the Serpents head, which by death hath ouercome death, and him that had the power of Death, the Deuill: who submitted himselfe to a death in it selfe bitter, before men shamefull, and of GOD accursed, that hee might bring vs to a life peaceable, glorious, and blessed, beyond what eye hath seene, or heart can conceiue.

This promise of this Seed, slaine from the beginning of the World, was the seed of all true Religion, the soule of Faith, the life of Hope, the well-spring of Charitie. True it is that all receiued not this promise alike: for a seed of the Serpent was fore-signified also, which should bruise the heele of the Womans seede. And this in the first seed and generation of Man soon appeared: Caine and Abel were hereof liuely examples. It appeareth that GOD had taught Adam how hee would bee worshipped, as it were ordering and ordaining him the first Priest of the World, which function he fulfilled both in instructing his Wife and Children, in prayer with and for them, and in the rites of Sacrificing. His children accordingly [z] in processe of time, brought and offered their Sacrifices.

As concerning Sacrifices, some hold opinion (according to their owne practice) that [a] Nature might teach Adam this way of seruing GOD; as if Nature were as well able to finde the way, as to know that she is out of the way; and were as well seene in the particular maner, as in the generall necessitie of Religion. We cannot see the Sunne without the Sunne, nor come to GOD, but by GOD, to whom [b] Obedience is better then Sacrifice, and to hearken, better then the fat of Rams. ABEL, saith the Scripture, [c] offered by faith, without which faith it is impossible to please GOD: but faith hath necessary relation [d] to the Word of GOD, who otherwise will be [e] weary of our solemnities, and asketh, Who hath required them at our hands. These sacrifices also, besides that they were acknowledgements of their thankefulnesse, and reall confessions of their sinne and death, due to them therefore, did lead them by the hand to Christ that Lambe of GOD, that should take away the sinnes of the World, figured by these slaine beasts, confirming their faith in the promise, and their hope of the accomplishment: of which Nature could not once haue dreamed, which hath rather [f] the impression of some confused notions, that wee haue lost the way, and ought to seeke it, then either light to discerne it, or wisedome to guide vs in it.

Of sacrificing, there were from the Beginning two kinds, one called [g] Gifts, or Oblations of things without life: the other Victims (so our Rhemists [h] haue taught vs to English the word Victima) slaine Sacrifices of Birds and Beasts. Againe, they were propitiatory, consecratorie, Eucharisticall, and so forth, whose kinds and rites Moses hath in his Bookes, especially in Leuiticus, so plainely declared, that I should but powre water into the Sea, or light a candle to the Sunne, to dilate much of them: these being the same in signification with the Leuiticall, and little (if little) differing in the manner of doing. Caine brought his [i] offering, being an Husbandman, of the fruit of the ground. Abel a Shepheard, of the fattest of his Sheepe: God respected ABEL and his offering, (the tree first, and then the fruit: the worker, and then the worke) which he signified either by voice, or by [k] fire from Heauen, according to Theodotions translation, [l] as in the Sacrifices of Aaron, Gedeon, Manoah, Dauid, Salomon, Elias: or by some other meanes, both comfortable to Abel, and enuied of Caine, who therefore slew him; thus in this member bruising the heele of that blessed seed, as a type of that which the Head himselfe should after sustaine.

Here is the first Apostasie after that first Euangelicall promise, and the first diuision of Religion, Caine being the first builder of the [m] Earthly Citie, not that which hee called after the name of his Sonne, [n] Henoch, but of that spirituall City of the Wicked, the seed of the Serpent, which he founded in his Brothers bloud: euen as that later Compendium thereof, which called her selfe Caput mundi, the head of the World (and indeed [o] the World is vsually in Scripture applyed to that seed of the Serpent, as it is opposite to the seed of the Woman) was by Romulus her first Founder, by like example of Fratricide in the murther of Remus, dedicated (as it were) to the future mysterie of iniquitie, the seat of the Beast, and of the Whore, (by whose authoritie, Christ himselfe was slaine) drunken after with the blood of his Saints: and still breathing blood and slaughter, to euery Abel that will not communicate in her spirituall whoredomes: that will not with her offer the fruits of the ground (the Sacrifice of Caine) which neither came from heauen, nor can guide to Heauen, being earthly, sensuall, deuillish.

Caine was for this his fact conuented by that All-seeing Iustice, who both by open sentence and inward terrors accused and accursed him, continuing his life, euen for the same cause that other Murtherers loose it, that he might liue an example (which then in that vnpeopled World by his death he could not haue been) to the future generation; branded [p] also by the Lord with some sensible marke, to exempt him, and terrifie others from that bloudy cruelties: this mercy being mixed with this iudgement, a longer time of repentance. GOD before cursed [q] the earth for Adam, he now [r] cursed CAINE from the earth, to be a runnagate, and wanderer thereon. For how could he, that had so forsaken God, but be forsaken of the Earth, and of himselfe? the [s] stable and mercifull earth, which before had opened her mouth to receiue his Brothers bloud, shrinking, and (as it were) grudging to support such wicked feet, and by denying him her strength, forcing him to his manifold shifts, and shiftlesse remouing. Wretched man, alwayes bleeding his brothers bloud; not daring to looke vp to Heauen, fearing to looke downe to Hell; the World without him threatning a miserable life, his Body branded to contempt and shame till his death, his soule become a stage of Anguish, Feare, Horrour, and other Furies the Harbingers of Hell: not able to suffer (which yet he cannot but suffer) the guilt of passed wickednesse gnawing him, the waight of present misery pressing him, the dread of a death, and a death attending him: restlesse in himselfe, hated of the World, despairing of reliefe from God: a liuely Map of the deadly and damnable state of sinne and sinners, (without Christ) [t] dead whiles they liue, mouing sepulchres, the Deuils captiues, hels heires, exiled from heauen, and vagabonds on the earth, euen on that which they call their owne land.

Caine, more vexed with the punishment, then at the fault of his sinne, departed from the presence of the Lord, which is meant either of his iudiciall conuenting him, or [u] in regard of the visible visible societie of the Church, cradled yet in his Fathers household, where God did especially shew his present prouidence, protection and grace, who otherwise filleth the Heauen and Earth, of whom & in whom they are: from hence, as Adam before out of Paradise, so Cain was, as it were, excommunicated, expelled, & out-lawed, and dwelt in the Land of Nod, which [x] some take to be appellatiuely spoken, as if his miserie had giuen name of Mooning vnto the place where he dwelled, or roamed rather: [y] Iosephus saith, hee built Naida, applying it to a proper place, which was either Eastward from Eden, or Eastward towards Eden from Canaan, where Adam is supposed to haue dwelt, and after with his Wife to haue beene buried at Hebron. Afterward, his posteritie beeing multiplied (his Wife, Epiphanius out of Leptogenesis calleth Shaue, [z] Comestor calleth her Chalmana, [a] Philo, Themech) he built a Citie which he called by the name of his sonne [b] Henoch, to crosse that curse of his wandering to and fro on the earth, or to arme him against others, which his guilty conscience caused him to feare, or to be a receptacle and store-house of those spoyles, which, Iosephus saith, hee robbed from others by violence, when as the earth was barren to him. Philo (if we may so entitle that Author which hath written of the Antiquities of the Bible) ascribeth vnto him other Cities, Mauli, Leed, Tehe, Iesca, Celet, Iebbat, adding that hee liued 730. yeeres. These things may bee probable, although that Author be otherwise fabulous, considering that men did ordinarily liue many hundred yeeres in those times, and were also exceeding fruitfull, especially after that Polygamy was embraced of that Family. And [c] if that in Abrahams posterity, the seed of Iacob in lesse then three hundred yeares was multiplyed to so [d] great a people, it is like that the Cainites [e] were no lesse populous, liuing in more freedome. Hee first (saith Iosephus) found out weights and measures, and assigned proprieties in possessions of Land, before common as the ayre and light, and was Author to lewd persons, of a lewd and vngodly life. Probable it is that the Citie was called Henoch, because the Curse suffered not the father to stay in a place, but to leaue a hasty inheritance to his Son to finish and rule it. Iabal and Iubal and Tubalcain, were inuenters of Arts: the first to dwell in Tents and keepe Cattell; the second of Musicall instruments: the third of working in Mettals, and making of Armour, which some thinke to be Vulcan, by the neerenesse of name and occupation. His [f] Sister Naamah is accounted by some Rabbines, the first inuenter of making Linnen and Woollen, and of vocall Musique; yea, they make her the wife of Noah also.

Thus let vs leaue this Family multiplying in numbers, in Sciences, in wickednesse, sauouring nothing diuine, or at least nothing but humane in their Diuinitie (therefore called the sonnes of men [g]) and let vs looke backe to Adam, who in this wicked fruit of his body, might read continual Lectures of repentance for the sinne of his soule. Adam begat a child in his own likenesse, [h] that is, not in that likenesse of God, wherein he was created, but like vnto himselfe, both in humane nature, & natural corruption, his name he called Seth, of whose posteritie the whole world was by Noah re-peopled. Vnto Seth was born Enosh. Then began men, saith MOSES to call vpon the name of the Lord. This some interpret of the beginning of Idolatry, that men began to profane the name of the Lord: some to call the name of the Lord, that is, after Rabbi Salomo, to apply the name of God to Images, Stars and Men: But the more likely opinion is, that when Adam had obtained a more holy posteritie, which was now multiplyed in diuers families, [k] Religion which before had been a priuate In-mate in Adams household, was now brought into publike exercise, whereof Prayer hath alwaies been accounted a principall part, and God himselfe in both Testaments calleth his house a house of Prayer; the calues of the lips, and the ejaculations of the heart being the body and soule of Diuine worship, whereof Sacrifices were in a manner but the apparel, fashioned to that infancy of the Church. Of the names of [l] the posteritie of Adam, and his hundred yeeres mourning for Abel; of Seth his remooving after Adams death to a mountaine neere Paradise, and such other things, more sauouring of fabulous vanity in the false-named [m] Methodius, Philo, and others that follow them, I list not to write. And wel might Genebrard haue spared his paines in searching for the antiquitie of Popery in this first Age of the World. Easily may we grant a Church then, truely Catholike, in the Posteritie of Seth, instructed partly by Reuelations, partly by Traditions, concerning the Creation, the fall, the good and euill Angels, the promised Seed, the Vnitie and Trinitie, punishments and repentance for sinne, publike and priuate Deuotions, and other like Articles gathered out of Moses: but for the Rabble of Rabbinicall Dreames which hee addeth hereunto, we had need of the implicite faith of some simple credulous Catholike to receiue them: as namely, Purgatory resembled in the fiery Sword at the entrance of Paradise; Free-will grounded on that which GOD speaketh to CAINE, Thou shalt rule ouer him (the preroga-

CHAP. VII.

Of the cauſe and comming of the Floud.

THus wee haue ſeene in part the fulfilling of the Propheſie of the Seed of the Woman, and of that other of the Serpent, in the Poſteritie of Caine and Seth. The Family of Caine is firſt reckoned, and their forwardneſſe in humane Arts, [a] as the children of this World are wiſer in their generation, in the things of this life, which they almoſt onely attend, then the children of light. As for the [b] Iewiſh Dreames, that Lamech was blind, and by the direction of Tubalcaine his ſonne guiding his hand ſlew Caine, ſuppoſing it had beene a wilde beaſt, which when he knew, ſo inraged him, that he killed his ſonne alſo, they that liſt may follow.

Moſes reckoneth the Generations according to the firſt-borne in the Poſteritie of Seth, as enioying the Principalitie and Prieſt-hood, that ſo the promiſed Seed of the Woman (after ſuch a World of yeares comming into the World) might iuſtifie the ſtableneſſe of GODS promiſes, his Lineall Deſcent from Adam with a due Chronologie, beeing declared. After Seth, Enoſh, Kenan, Mehalaleel, Iared was Henoch the ſeuenth from ADAM, who walked with God, whom God tooke away that he ſhould not ſee death. This before the Law, and Helias in the Law, are Witneſſes of the Reſurrection; being miraculouſly taken from the Earth into Heauen, not by death, but by ſupernaturall changing of their bodies. That bee ſhould bee ſtill in [c] an Earthly Paradiſe, and that hee and Elias ſhould come and preach againſt Antichriſt, and of him be ſlaine, is a Popiſh Dreame; the Scripture [d] ſaying, that HENOCH was taken away that he ſhould not ſee death; of Elias, that he is [e] alreadie come in the perſon of Iohn Baptiſt: the Spirit and power, or ſpirituall power of walking with GOD, reforming Religion, and conuerting ſoules, beeing communicated to many of thoſe Miniſters which haue lien ſlaine in the ſtreets of that great Citie.

This his Aſſumption is [f] ſuppoſed to be viſibly done. Hee was a Prophet, and Iude doth in his Epiſtle cite a teſtimonie of his, [g] which eyther by [h] Tradition went from hand to hand, as it ſeemeth the whole Word of GOD was deliuered before the dayes of Moſes; GOD by Viſions and Dreames appearing vnto the Patriarkes; or elſe it was written and ſince is loſt. Some hold it was penned by ſome Iew vnder the name of Enoch. [i] Auguſtine thinketh that the Booke entituled Enoch was forged in his name, as other Writings vnder the names of Prophets and Apoſtles: and therefore calleth it Apocrypha (as [k] Hierome doth alſo) [l] Chryſoſtome and Theophilact account Moſes the firſt Pen-man of Holy Scripture. monie be true, who affirmeth that Adam hauing prohpecied two vniuerſall deſtructions, one by fire, another by water, his Poſteritie erected two Pillars, one of bricke, another of ſtone, in both which they writ their inuentions of Aſtronomie; that of ſtone was reported to remaine in his time. Howſoeuer, it is more then apparant, that the Booke bearing Enochs name, is very fabulous, which, becauſe the Tales therein profeſſe antiquity (although they were later dreames) I thought it not vnfit to borrow out of [p] Scaliger ſomewhat of that which he hath inſerted in his Notes vpon Euſebius, the Greeke Copie being, as the Phraſe teſtifieth, tranſlated out of Hebrew, which had beene the worke of ſome Iew: the Antiquity appeareth, in that [q] Tertullian citeth it. Theſe tooke them Wiues, and three Generation were borne vnto them: the firſt were great Gyants; the Gyants begat the Naphelim, to whom were borne Eliud; and they taught them and their Wiues Sorceries and Inchantments. Ezael taught firſt to make Swords and Weapons for Warre, and how to worke in Metals. He taught to make Womens Ornaments, and how to looke faire, and iewelling. And they beguiled the Saints; and much ſinne was committed on the Earth. Other of them taught the vertues of Roots, Aſtrologie, Diuinations, &c. After theſe things the Gyants beganne to eate the fleſh of men, and men were diminiſhed: and the remnant cryed to Heauen, becauſe of their wickedneſſe, that they might come in remembrance before him. And the foure great Archangels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel hearing it, looked downe on the Earth from the holy places of Heauen: and beholding much bloud-ſhed on the Earth, and all vngodlineſſe and tranſgreſſion committed therein, ſaid one to another, That the Spirits and Soules of men complaine, ſaying, That yee ſhould preſent our Prayer to the Higheſt, and our deſtruction. And the foure Archangels entring, ſaid to the Lord, Thou art GOD of GODS and Lord of Lords, &c. Thou ſeeſt what Ezael hath done, hee hath taught Myſteries, and reuealed to the World the things in Heauen, &c. Then the Higheſt ſaid, The Holy one, The Great one ſpake and ſent Uriel to the ſonne of Lamech, ſaying, Goe to Noe, tell him of the end approching, and a floud ſhall deſtroy the Earth, &c. To Raphael hee ſaid, Goe Raphael, and binde Ezael hand and foot, and caſt him into darkeneſſe, and open the Wilderneſſe in the Deſart of Dodoel, and there caſt him, and lay vpon him ſharpe ſtones to the Day of Iudgement, &c. And to Gabriel, he ſaid, Goe, Gabriel, to the Gyants, and deſtroy the ſonnes of the Watch-men from the ſonnes of men, ſet them one againſt another in warre and deſtruction. To Michael, he ſaid, Goe, Michael, binde Semixa and the others with him that haue mixed themſelues with the daughters of men (vntill ſeuentie Generations) to the hils of the Earth; vntill the day of their iudgement, till the iudgement of the World bee finiſhed, and then they ſhall bee brought into [t] the confuſion of fire, and vnto tryall, and vnto the Priſon of the ending of the World, and whoſoeuer ſhall be condemned and deſtroyed, from hence-forth ſhall be caſt together with them till the finiſhing of their Generation, &c. And the Gyants which were begotten of the Spirits and fleſh, they ſhall call them euill Spirits on the Earth, becauſe their dwelling is on the Earth. The Spirits that depart out of their bodies ſhall bee euill Spirits, becauſe they were engendred of the Watch-men and men.

Such were Og and Goliah after the floud. Yea, ſuch haue beene in all Ages: which (to omit other Ethnike Authors) f Auguſtine affirmeth, that at Vtica hee ſaw a mans tooth as great as an hundred of the ordinary ſiſe. Viues on that place, ſaith he ſaw one as bigge as a mans fiſt. Nicephorus telleth of two men in the time of Theodoſius, the one not ſo admirable for his height, which was fiue Cubits and an hand, as the other for his ſmalneſſe, like to a Partrich in bigneſſe, yet wittie and learned. Our Hiſtories of g Arthur, little Iohn, Curcy Earle of Vlſter, and one in our times, 1581. ſeene in London, doe ſhew ſome ſuch here and there, now and then in the World, which Goropius in his Gigantomachia, affirmeth of his owne ſight: and euen whole Families of theſe monſtrous men are found at this day in America, both neere to Virginia, as h Captaine Smith reporteth; and eſpecially about the Straits of Magellan, i neere which he found Gyants, and in the ſame Straits were ſuch ſeene of the k Hollanders ten foot in height, whereas yet other Families were but of the ordinary greatneſſe. How ſoeuer the bodies of theſe men before the Floud were compoſed, certaine their minds were diſpoſed to all monſtrous inhumanitie, which haſtened their deſtruction. This made GOD to repent that he made man vpon the Earth, not that there was any change or repentance in him, but becauſe a change for want of repentance happened to them. In long ſufferance he gaue them an hundred and twentie yeares ſpace, in which Noah might be a Preacher of righteouſneſſe; yea, the Arke it ſelfe, which Noah that while was prouiding, might preach to them repentance, that their teares might haue quenched his wrath, and preuented temporall rall drowning and eternall burning. Adam liued till Henochs time, a witnesse and Preacher of the promise he himselfe had receiued. Henoch himselfe is made, not a verball but a reall Preacher, whiles his sonne Methuselash, and his Nephew Lamech the father of Noah liued: that GOD might haue witnesses to conuert some and conuince others. But whiles the World becommeth worse and worse, [n] (Ætas parentum peior auis tulit Hos nequiores, mox daturos Progeniem vitiosiorem) a deluge of sinne first, and a deluge of iudgement after, drowned the World.

n Horat. Carm.

For the circumstances of the Floud, Moses hath more plainly related them, then that I should here expresse them. Noah with his three sonnes and their wiues entred the Arke at GODS appointment, to which by diuine instinct resorted both birds and beasts; of the cleane seuen, and of the vncleane two in euery kind. If any maruell at this distinction of cleane and vncleane in these times, supposing that GOD first in the Wilderneſse made this partition-wall: it is answered, that GOD before this had appointed Sacrifices of beasts, which might make the difference; for which cause also there was a seuenth of euery such creature, reserued for Sacrifice after Noahs going out. Besides, GOD had now purposed to adde the flesh of beasts vnto mans dyet, for which those, called by the Israelites cleane, were most fit, and most in vse: and in that respect more of such kinds were reserued, as more necessary for mans vse in food, clothing, and some of them also for labour. Otherwise no creature is vncleane in it selfe, the Hoofe and Cudde being by Nature (GODS Hand-maid) and not by their owne vice, such as made this distinction. And after the floud GOD made no Law of difference, vntill the time of Moses, although each Countrey hath obserued their owne peculiar custome in this food, some lothing that which others esteeme daintie, not for Religion, but for naturall and ciuill causes. As at this day to the Tartars, Horse-flesh is royall fare; to the Arabians, Camels; to some Americans, Serpents, and other flesh to others, which our appetite more then our faith, our stomacke more then our soule, abhorreth.

Concerning the Arke, diuers doubts haue beene moued, through curiositie and vnbeliefe of some, who by diuine Iustice were in a manner depriued of sense and reason, hauing before through Deuillish wickednesse lost their conscience and Religion. Thus [o] Apelles one of Marcions Disciples, could not finde the Arke (after Moses dimension) to bee capable of foure Elephants in so small a quantitie; Celsus contrary to him (yet agreeing in a foolish impietie and impious folly) thought so great a vessell was too great for mans handy-worke. Thus, like Samsons Foxes, their heads are diuers wayes, but they are tyed together by the tayles, agreeing in disagreeing both from Moses and themselues.

But might not reason teach Celsus, that the direction of GOD might teach a man in an hundred and twentie yeares space to frame so mighty a Fabricke? doth not sense and experience shew buildings not much lesse both on the Sea and on the Land? And what Arithmeticke or Geometry, nay, what wit or common sense had Apelles in his Assertion? The Arke was too little (forsooth) for so many creatures and their prouision for a yeare. Wee need not seeke for shifts from helpe of the Geometricall Cubite knowne to Moses in his Egyptian Learning, of three, sixe, or nine foot to the Cubite: as Origen and [p] Hugo doe: nor of the sacred Cubite, imagined twice as much as the common: nor of the larger stature and Cubites of men in those youthfull times and age of the World. The length hereof three hundred Cubites, and the breadth fiftie, doe make of square measure by common Rules of Art, fifteene thousand Cubites. Three floores or roomes were therein of that quantitie, each containing ten foot in height. As for the beasts; a floore of fifteene thousand Cubits might yeeld fifty Cubits square to three hundred seuerall kinds, many more then are knowne by relation of the most Writers, Aristotle, Plinie, Gesner, &c. which scarce reckon halfe that number, and but fortie kinds or thereabouts that would take vp any great [q] roome. The height might yeeld commodious roomes for the fowles on Perches: and all this might one roome or floore affoord. Iudge then whether two other roomes of equall bigneſse, might not be sufficient for all other necessary employments? Besides, the roofe is not to bee thought vnproportionable, fitted for so long and tempestuous stormes, and therefore not vnfitted with roome for diuers necessaries. And if any accuse me for adding this of the roofe to Moses description, I say, that so it is translated by [r] some, Et in cubiti longitudinem consummato eius tectum superne, vnderstanding those words not of the window (as many doe) but of the roofe it selfe, which else is no where described, which should ouer-hang the Arke a Cubite breadth to defend it the safer from raines; as in our houses the eues and slope roofes are commodious both for roome within, and against the weather without. But if any would entertaine longer dispute about this, he may (among others that haue handled this question) resort vnto [s] Goropius Becanus his Gigantomachia, whom in this point I would rather follow, then in many other his Beceselanical Paradoxes.

were opened, and the windowes of Heauen: the two ſtore-houſes of waters which GOD had ſeparated in the Creation, beeing in a manner confounded againe, the Seas breaking their ſandie barres, and breaking vp by ſecret vnderminings the priuie pores and paſſages in the Earth: the Cloudes conſpiring with the Waters, and renuing their firſt league and naturall amitie, to the confuſion of Nature and the World. The heauenly lights hid their faces from beholding it, and clothed themſelues with blacke, as bewayling the Worlds Funerall; the Ayre is turned into a Sea, the Sea poſſeſſeth the Ayrie Region, the Earth is now no Earth, but a myrie lumpe, and all that huger World is contracted into a briefe Epitome, and ſmall abridgement in the Arke, euen there but a few inches diſtant from death. Thus do all [t] Creatures deteſt Sinne, which hath made them ſubiect to Vanitie; thus would the Elements waſh themſelues cleane from it, and the committers thereof: but the Arke preuaileth ouer the preuailing waters: a figure of the Church, the remnant of the elder, and Seminarie of the new World.

This drowning of the World hath not beene quite drowned in the World, but beſides Moſes, many other Writers haue mentioned it: the time thereof being referred to that which in each Nation was accounted moſt ancient; as among the Thebans to Ogiges; in Theſſalia, to Deucalion; among the Americans (although [u] Mercator thinke, that the Floud drowned not thoſe parts, becauſe they were not yet peopled, and becauſe the beaſts there are moſt-what differing kinds from theſe in our World) the people haue retayned the tradition hereof: Mnaſeas among the Phœnicians, Beroſus a Caldæan, Hieronimus Ægyptius, Nicolaus of Damaſcus, the Poets Greeke and Latine, adding Fables to the Truth (which without ſome ground of truth they could not haue added) all mention the Floud; howſoeuer confounding the leſſe and later with this firſt and vniuerſall.

I might adde the teſtimonies of Eupolemus, Molon, Abidenus, Alexander Polyhiſtor, out of Euſebius, Ioſephus, and others. Lucian in his Dea Syria, telleth the opinion of the Hierapolitans, but a little corrupted from Moſes Narration, that Countrey wherein Noah liued moſt likely retayning firmer memorie of this Miracle: ſo plainly doth he attribute to his Deucalion the Arke, the reſort and ſafe-gard of the Lions, Bores, Serpents and Beaſts: the repairing of the World after this drowning thereof, which he aſcribeth to periurie, crueltie, and other abominations of the former people. That Beroſus which we now haue, is not ſo much as the ghoſt, or carkaſſe, and ſcarce a few bones of the carkaſſe of that famous Caldæan Author, mentioned by the Ancients, but the Dreames of Annius (no new thing in this laſt Age) coined for the moſt part in his name. Some fragments of Beroſus wee haued cited in other Authours that conuince this Baſtard.

Among others, ſomewhat of the Floud hath eſcaped drowning: his teſtimonie whereof ſet downe in Polyhiſtor and Abidenus, is in [x] Euſebius. He affirmeth, that Saturne gaue warning to Siſuthrus of this Deluge, and willed him to prepare a great Veſſell or Ship, wherein to put conuenient food, and to ſaue himſelfe and his kindred and acquaintance; which hee builded of length fiue furlongs, of breadth two. After the retyring of the waters, hee ſent out a Bird which returned: after a few dayes he ſent her forth againe, which returned with her feet bemired; and being ſent the third time, came no more: with other things to like purpoſe, which Polyhiſtor there, and Abidenus citeth out of Beroſus. Plutarch hath alſo written of this Doue, ſent by Deucalion out of the Arke, which returning was a ſigne of tempeſt, and flying forth of faire weather.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the re-peopling of the World: and of the diuiſion of Tongues and Nations.

[a] NOW GOD remembred Noah, ſaith Moſes; not that GOD can forget, but that hee declared his Diuine Power, whereby Noah might know hee was not forgotten. Then did the [b] Heauens remember their wonted influence in the Elements: then did the Elements remember their naturall order: GOD made a winde to paſſe in Commiſſion, and, as a common Vmpire, to end their vnnaturall ſtrife, forcing the Waters into their ancient precincts aboue and beneath the Firmament. ([c] Ambroſe interpreteth this Winde of the HOLY GHOST. Rupertus of the Sunne. hand of [b] God.) Then did the Earth remember first inheritance, beeing freed from the tyrannicall inuasion and vsurpation of the Waters. And what could then forget or be forgotten, when GOD remembred NOAH and all that was with him in the Arke.

And in the seuenth [c] Moneth, the seuenteenth day of the moneth, the Arke rested vpon the Mountaines of Ararat. This fell out in the yeere from the Creation 1656. The [d] Septuagint, and the Fathers that followed them, reckon farre otherwise: which errour of theirs differing from the Hebrew verity, Augustine [e] ascribes to the first Coppiers of that Translation: others to their own set purpose, that they might contend with other Nations in the challenge of Antiquitie: for that cause, and least the often halfing of ages should trouble the faithlesse, saith Master Broughton, they faine Cainan, betwixt Arphaxad and Selah: in which account if [g] Luke in his Genealogie had followed them, it is to be ascribed to them which would correct Luke by their corrupt translation of the Septuagint, for [h] some Copies of the Gospel haue wanted it. The place is commonly thought to be Armenia. The Sybilline Oracles (if at least we may so call those eight bookes in Greeke verse, translated into Latine by Castalion) doe place [i] Ararat in Phrygia, and say, it is the Hill whence the Riuer Marsyas issueth. But Scaliger censureth our Sybils to be counterfeit, inuented with zeale to vp-hold the Truth by falshood; in which our later Legendaries haue followed them.

[k] Goropius after his wont paradoxicall, holdeth it to be the Hill Paropanisus, or Paropamisus, a part of the Hill Taurus (vnproperly ascribed to Caucasus, which riseth betweene the Euxine and Hircan Sea) supposed the highest part of the Earth, called now [l] Naugracot. Hee imagined, that the place first inhabited after the Floud was Margiana, whence those Colonies passed that with Nimrod built Babylon. His reason is, because [m] they went from the East to the Plaine of Shinar, whereas Armenia beareth somewhat Westward from thence. As though that iourney had been presently after the Floud, which was an hundred yeares after: in which space it is likely they followed the Mountainous Countries Eastward a long time, and from Assyria Adiabena, turned backe into that fertile Plaine, where pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse, set them on worke against God. I hold it not meet, that a fewe coniectures should counterpoize the generall consent of all Ages. Iosephus saith, the place in Armenia was called Apobaterion, of this their going forth of the Arke: and alleadgeth Berosus testimonie, that a part of this Arke was then said to remaine in the Cordyæan (or Gordyæan) Hils, the pitch whereof some scraping away, wore the same for Amulets. And out of Nich. Damascenus lib. 96. There is (saith he) aboue the Region of the Minyæ, a great Hil in Armenia, by name Baris, wherein, they say, many saued themselues in the time of the Floud, and one, brought in an Arke, there stayed (the remnants of the wood thereof continuing there long time after) which happily was he that Moses the Iewish Law-giuer writ of. This mountaine or mountainous Region the Caldean Paraphrast calleth [n] Kardu; Curtius, Cordæi montes; Ptolomæus, Gordiæi: the people are called Cardyæi, or Gordyæi. In this Tract (saith Epiphan.) there is one high Mountaine called Lubar, which signifieth the descending place (Lubar in the Armenian and Egyptian language signifying the same that ἀποβατήριον before mentioned) and the word Baris before cited out of Damascenus seemeth to be corruptly written for Lubaris.

The Armenians through all ages haue (as it seemeth) reserued the memorie hereof: and euen [o] in our daies there standeth an Abbey of Saint Gregories Monkes neere to this Hill, which was able to receiue [p] Shaugh Thamas, and a great part of his Armie. These Monkes, if any list to beleeue them, say, that there remaineth yet some part of the Arke, kept by Angels: which if any seeke to ascend, carrie them backe as farre in the night, as they haue climed in the day. Cartwright, an eye-witnesse, saith, that this Hill is alwaies couered with snow; at the foote thereof issue a thousand Springs; there are adioyning three hundred Villages of the Armenians. He saith also that there are seene many ruinous foundations, supposed to be the workes of this first people, that a long time durst not aduenture into the lower Countryes, for feare of an other floud. [q] Abidenus saith, that the Ship or Arke was still in Armenia (in his time) and that the people vsed the wood thereof against many diseases with maruellous effect.

After that Noah had obtained his deliuerance, and was now gone out of the Arke; his first care was [r] Religion: and therefore he [s] hee built an Altar to the Lord, and tooke of euery cleane beast, and of euery cleane fowle, and offered burnt offerings vpon the Altar: And the Lord smelled a sauour of rest, and renued the auncient blessings and promises to Noah and his posteritie. The liuing creatures were also permitted to their food, and submitted to their rule, by whom they had in the Arke escaped drowning. Onely the bloud was prohibited to them, as a ceremoniall obseruation to instruct them in lenitie and hatred of crueltie: the politicall Ordinance being annexed touching the bloud of man, against man or beast that should shead the same. This difference being [t] alleadged of the life of Man and Beast, that the life of the Beast is his bloud, the life of Man is in his bloud. Not that the bloud which we see shed is the life life of the beast: for that is properly Cruor, not Sanguis, that is, the matter, whose forme was the life or vitall spirit, which being separated from the body, is seuered also from the forme or life. And the life of Beasts hath no other forme, but that which is vnited with the bloud, as the life of trees is the sappe of trees; their bloud being (as it were) their soule. But [u] the life of man is in his bloud, hauing his seate therein, liuing when it is by death separated from the bloud; meane while the Spirits being the purest part of the bloud, as conduits conueying life to the bodily members, and as firme bands of a middle nature, between the body and soule, vniting them together; which bands and carriages being broken by effusion of bloud, the soule subsisteth a spirituall substance without the body, not subiect to substantiall corruption or mortalitie.

God did also make a couenant for Man with the beasts of the field, infusing into the Nature of all things, a dread and feare of man, whereby they feare the power, the snares, and sleights of man; and therefore flee, or else submit themselues, not by that willing instinct, as to Adam in innocencie, but rather with a seruile feare. And although by hunger, or prouocation, or feare of their owne danger, they sometimes rebell, yet otherwise there remaines some impression of this naturall decree in them, as experience in all places hath shewed. Euen the Lyon, King of Forrests and sauage Creatures, doth not easily giue on-set but on such occasions: yea, the Moores meeting with this Beast, doe rate and brawle at him; this magnanimous beast passing by with a leering countenance, expressing a mixt passion of dread and disdaine, fearing the voice of one, that feareth not the weapons of many, and which himselfe, by the terrour of his voice, maketh the beasts to tremble. Hereunto the Lord addeth the Raine-bow, a newe Sacrament, to seale his mercifull Couenant with the Earth, not to drowne the same any more; which yet at last shall be burnt with fire, so to purge the Heauens and Earth of that [x] vanitie, whereto mans sinne hath subiected them. And thus much doe [y] some reade in the colours of the [z] Rainebow, of a watersh and fiery mixture, as a continued signe of the double destruction of the World; the first outward as alreadie past, the other inward as yet to come. Well, indeed, may this Bow be called the [a] Child of Wonder, both for the naturall constitution, and diuine ordinance: not that there was before no such [b] Creature, but that then this vse of the creature was ordained. The reflexion or refraction of the Sunne-beames in a watery cloud, the brightnesse from the Sunne, and the cloud meeting together, the varietie of colours proceeding from the varietie of matter; the fumish and dryer part of the cloud yeelding a purplish, the waterie a greenish Sea-colour, &c. borrowing the roundnesse from th Sunne halfe Eclipsed by the shadow of the Earth, are accounted the naturall causes of this wonder of Nature; sometime also by reason of abundance of matter, the same being doubled, one Bow within the other, their colours placed contrary, for that the one is the Image (by reflection) of the other. Neither is it to be thought, that there was no Raine-bow before the floud, any more then that there was no water, bread, or wine, before the institution of our Christian Sacraments, which name and dignitie, not Nature, but Vse, by the appointment of the God of Nature and Grace, doth giue vnto them. For not in the cloudes alone is this Bow to be seen, but as further witnesse of the naturall causes and constitution thereof, the same effect may bee shewed by concurrence of like causes in the Waters and Rockes where Riuers haue their fals; yea, on the buildings of men: as I my selfe haue seen a perfect Raine-bow by the reflection of the Sun-beames on a boorded wall of a Water-mil, the boordes thereof being very wet with the fall of the water, and opposite to the Sunne.

To shew directly which Nations descended of each of these three, were a hard taske: and now after this confusion of Nations by warres, leagues, and otherwise, impossible. But for the first beginnings of Nations, before that Colonies were by violence of Conquerours, or by themselues, in their exceeding multiplying, voluntarily translated from one place to another, they are by Moses faithfully related, although the confusion of Languages and of Peoples do make the matter hard and harsh to vs. Yet the Names of Nations in the Greeke stories do in great part agree with the names of these first Patriarkes, as [f] M. Broughton hath shewed, by laying downe the names of Noahs house, which, vnvowelled, may admit sundry pronouncings, setting against them such names as Heathen Authors haue mentioned. Out of him, and Arias Montanus his Phaleg, and others, what I thought likeliest, I haue here inserted.

Of Iauans childrens, Elisha founded the Æoles, called also Æliseі: of Tarshish came the Cilicians, whose Mother-citie was Tarsus, Pauls birth-place. Montanus thinketh that Tharsis was Carthage in Africa, which the Poeni after possessed: some referre the Venetians to Tharsis also. Of Iobab, Arias Montanus coniecture th Parias in the West Indies to haue come, but with little probabilitie which I can see. And of the most before named we haue probable coniectures, not certaine proofes, as appeareth by the difference of opinions of Authours concerning them. Neither may we thinke that Moses intended so much a Geographicall Historie of all the Nations of the World, many of which were not, long after this time, planted or peopled; but of the first Fathers, who peopled the places by degrees, as they increased in multitude which were neerest that Armenian Centre: and especially hee relateth and dilateth of them, whom it most concerned the Israelites to know, as the Cananites, whose bounds and Nations are exactly described. I could adde much touching the seuerall Nations descending of these three Brethren, and the bounds of their Habitations, in which Africanus sometime tooke profitable paines, and Eusebius out of him, although both be in this part lost: somewhat hath beene barbarously translated into Latine by an vnknowne Authour, for the Solœcismes, tedious; for the substance of History profitable to the Reader: and therefore by Scaliger in his Edition of Eusebius communicated to the World. But the vncertaintie [n] maketh me vnwilling to proceed in this Argument further.

Of this vncertaintie no greater cause can bee alleaged, then the diuision and confusion of Tongues, the Historie whereof Moses declareth. For whereas God had giuen to Man two Priuiledges and principall Prerogatiues, whereof other creatures are no way capable, his inward [o] Reason, and abilitie to vtter the same by Speech: this benefit of God in Nature was turned into a Conspiracie against God and Nature. They said one to another, [p] Come, let vs make Bricke for stone, and slime had they in stead of morter. Also they said, Let vs build vs a Citie and Tower, whose top may reach vnto the Heauen, that we may get vs a name, lest we be scattered vpon the whole Earth. This was their vaine arrogance and presumption, that when their guiltie consciences threatned a dissipation and scattering by diuine Iustice: they would thus hearten and harden themselues against GOD and Man: in stead of thankefulnesse to GOD, and honouring his Name, they would winne themselues a name and honour: in stead of preuenting punishment by Repentance, they would in this Gyant-like fighting against GOD preuent future iudgements. But euen that, by which they intended to keepe them from scattering, was the true and first cause of their scattering. So doth GOD scatter the counsels of his Enemies, and taketh the wise in their craftinesse. Babel, or confusion, is alway the Attendant of Pride. Sibylla alleaged by [q] Iosephus (for the Sibyls which wee haue in Greeke Verse, translated by Castalion into Latine, are but counterfeits, if [r] Scaliger iudge rightly, Pseudosibyllina oracula, quæ Christiani gentibus obijciebant, quum tamen è Christianorum officina prodijssent, &c. but that more ancient Sibyll) testifieth of this confusion of Tongues in these words. When all men before vsed one speech, they erected a high Tower, as if they would ascend to Heauen: but the Gods by Tempests ouerthrew their Tower, and gaue to each of them seuerall Languages, whereof the Citie was named Babylon: According to that of Moses, [s] Therefore the name of it was called Babel, because the Lord did there confound the Language of all the Earth. From thence then did the Lord scatter them vpon all the Earth. The Atheists and Naturalists dreame the World to eternall, and conceiue that all men could not be of one; because of this diuersitie of Languages. If such had beene at Hierusalem, and heard the Apostles (not the experteſt men in their owne vulgar) speake all Languages: they might then haue seene the like power in a contrarie effect to this of Babylon. Mans sinne caused this, Gods mercie that: the one came from Babylon, the other from Hierusalem, that old Hierusalem giuing a taste and earnest of that, which the new Ierusalem shall once fully accomplish, when all shall be made new, all shall become one, and God shall be all in all. It appeareth that these Builders lost the vnderstanding of their owne speech, and were endued with other Languages, whereto their Vnderstandings and Tongues were framed, in stead of that former.

What his former Language was, hath beene doubted, either of ignorance, or of curiositie and selfe-loue. Theodoret [t] esteemeth Syrian the first Language, and that Hebrew beganne with Moses, taught him by GOD as a sacred Language. [u] Ioseph Scaliger affirmeth, that the Syrian Maronites attribute greater Antiquitie to the ancient Syrian, then to the Hebrew, which is all one, saith he, as if one should contend, that the Italian Idiome were ancienter then the Latine. Hee concludeth, that the Bible was written in the most ancient Language, which at first was pure in Assyria, but by Merchandize and Warres corrupted. For Assyria, sayth he, was first inhabited both before and after the Floud: and from thence were Colonies sent into Syria and Phœnicea, which held their Language pure, by reason few Strangers had recourse to them till after the time of the first Temple, as appeareth by the Coynes of the Tyrians and Sidonians, which are digged out and found daily. x PSAMMETICHVS King of Egypt, causèd two Children to bee closely brought vp by a Shepheard, who should at times put Goates to them to giue them sucke, without euer hearing humane voyce. After two yeares they vttered the word Bec, Bec, which was the voyce that they had heard of their Nurses the Goates; but not so interpreted by Psammetichus; for hee inquiring in what Language Bec was significant, and hearing that the Phrygians so called Bread, ascribed to them the prioritie of all Nations and Languages. Melabdm Echebar, the great y Mogor (as the Iesuites Epistles declare) made the like tryall of thirtie Children, whom hee causèd, without hearing of man, to be brought vp, setting Guards to obserue the Nurses that they should not speake to them: purposing to bee of that Religion whereto they should addict themselues. But neither could z they euer speake, or would he euer addict himselfe to one certaine Religion. a Goropius by a few Dutch Etymologies grew into conceit, and would haue the World beleeue him, that Dutch was the first Language; which if it were, wee English should raigne with them as a Colonie of that Dutch Citie, a streame from that Fountaine, by Commerce and Conquests since manifoldly mixed. But his euidence is too weake, his authoritie too new.

The b common and more receiued opinion is, that the Hebrew was the first, confirmed also by Vniuersalitie, Antiquitie, and consent of the Christian Fathers and Learned men, grounding themselues vpon this Reason, That all the names mentioned in Scripture before the Diuision, are in that Language onely significant: besides, it is not like, that Shem conspired with these Babylonians, and therefore not partaker of their punishment. Now it is very probable and almost manifest, that hee was c the same which after is called Melchisedech, King of Salem; betwixt whom and Abraham, in that familiaritie, it is not likely, that there was much dissonance in Language. Hee is also called the Father of all the Sonnes of Heber, by a peculiar proprietie, although hee had other Sonnes, because the puritie of Religion and Language remayned in Hebers Posteritie. And why should Heber call his Sonne Peleg (Diuision) but of this Diuision which then happened? The Nation and Language of Israel borrow their name (Hebrew) of him. And if it had happened to himselfe, why should hee more then others, haue so named his Sonne?

WE haue all this time beene viewing one Nation which alone was knowne in the Earth, vntill confusion of Language caused diuision of Lands; and haue taken notice of the Heads and Authours of those Peoples and Nations, that from that time were scattered ouer the World, and after setled in their proper Habitations. We haue not followed the opinion of some, both of the * Ancients, and later Writers, in defining the number of Nations and Languages through the World, reckoned by them seuentie two. For who seeth not, that Moses in that tenth of Genesis is most carefull to describe the Posteritie and bounds of Canaan, which GOD had giuen to Israel, which it were absurd to thinke in so small a Territorie to bee of so many (that is, eleuen) seuerall Languages? And how many Nations were founded after that by Abrahams Posteritie (not to mention so many other Fountaines of Peoples) by the sonnes of Hagar, and Ketura, and Esau the Sonne of Isaac? Neyther could the World so suddenly bee peopled: and of that, which then was peopled, Moses writing a Historie of and for the Church, so farre mentioneth the Affaires and Nations of the World, as it was meete for the Church (and especially that Church of the Israelites) to know, according as it was likely they should haue then, or after, more or lesse to doe with them. [a] Africanus hath reckoned the seuentie two by name. But how easie were it in these dayes to set downe seuentie two more, of differing Nations, both in Region and Language; and how little of the World was then knowne, shall presently bee shewed. Besides it may bee a question, whether diuers of those, there mentioned, did not speake the same Language (as in Chaldæa, Syria, and Canaan) [b] with some diuersitie of Dialect, a little more then in our Northerne, Westerne, and Southerne English: Which may appeare, both by the Pilgrimages of the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, in those parts (which had needed new Interpreters, by that rule, in euery two or three dayes trauell, except themselues had beene almost miraculously skilfull in Languages) and by the Chaldæan and Syrian Monuments and Bookes, which some obserue to come nigh to the Hebrew. [c] Doctor Willet reproueth Philoes opinion, That the Chalde and Hebrew was all one, because Daniel, an Hebrew, was set to learne the Chalde: or that the Syrian and Chalde, according to Mercerus opinion, was the same; yet grants, that in the first times the Syrian and Chalde little differed. [d] Scaliger (a fit man to speake of Languages, who could speake so many) saith, as before is obserued, That in Assyria was the first, both Man and Language, euen the same which thence passed with their Colonies into Syria and Canaan, where it remayned pure, euen then when in Assyria it selfe it was corrupted by entercourse of strangers. Abraham spake this corrupted Syrian, which tooke place only in the Tracts of Euphrates, at the first: but after, both he and his Posteritie vsed the Language of Canaan; so that Laban, whose Kindred, Countrey and Language was the same with [e] Abrahams, yet spake another and differing Language from that of Iacob, one calling that Galed, which the other calleth Iegarsahadutha. Thus it appeareth by him, that the ancient Syrian, Assyrian and Chaldæan, were first that which is now called Hebrew, because the Hebrewes obserued and retayned it, and onely haue left Bookes to vs written therein, (whom the Cananites called Hebrewes, as [f] Scaliger and Montanus affirme, because Abraham had passed ouer the Riuer Euphrates vnto them) but after degenerated first in the parts neere Euphrates, where it was first spoken: and when the Tyrians and Sidonians had the Empire of the Sea, by reason of their Traffique, it proued impure there also, howsoeuer in the time of Elisa or Dido, the Phœnician or Punicke, which shee carryed into Africa, was pure Hebrew, as were also their Letters. The later Carthaginian Letters were read from the left hand to the right, as the Latine and Greeke, but those from the right hand; yet not the same which now are called Hebrew (but ought rather to bee called Iewish, as brought by them from their Babylonish Captiuitie) but the Canaan or Phœnician Letters, which the Samaritans still vse, and wherein Moses had innouated nothing, as some will haue him, neyther in the Letters, nor in the Language, but vsed them as they were long before his times. Warres and Traffique could not but further alter those Languages in continuance of time: which appeared most after the Captiuitie, when the Iewes spake not Hebrew, but Syrian, and that also in likelihood more and more by time altered. Perhaps it was with these three Languages, as with the Frankes [g] Language, when they first seated themselues in Gallia, and that which is now called [h] French; or the Saxon and the present English: for there were no lesse mutations and transmutations, by times and Warres; in those parts then in these. It seemeth therefore probable, that at the first diuision of Languages, they that most disagreed, did furthest separate themselues, and they that spake eyther the same, or neere in likenesse to the same speech, obserued the same Neighbour-hood of Nation, as of speech; which, the names and words of the Phœnician, Syrian, Persian, Arabian and Egyptian Languages testifie. The diuision of Tongues was about an hundred yeares after the Floud, Anno no Mundi, a thousand seuen hundred fiftie seuen, as Caluisius and Buntingus account.

Now that wee haue spoken of the first Authours of the principall and first Nations, let vs suruey the Lands and Inheritance, which GOD gaue vnto them, which was the habitable Earth. This Earth, together with the Waters, make one Globe and huge Ball, resting on it selfe, supported by the Almightie hand of GOD, to the roundnesse whereof, the high Mountaines in comparison of the whole, can bee small impediments, and are but [i] as a few motes of dust sticking to a Ball. Possidonius, Eratosthenes, Hipparchus, Plinie, Ptolomey, and others, skilfull in Geographie, haue endeauoured by Art to finde out the true quantitie hereof: and although there appeare difference in their summes, yet that is imputed rather to the diuersitie of their furlongs, which some reckoned longer then others, then to their differing opinions. But neuer had they so certaine intelligence of the quantitie of the Earth, as in our time, by the Nauigations of [k] Spaniards, [l] English, and [m] Dutch, round about the same, is giuen vs; Art and Experience consulting, and conspiring together, to perfect the Science of Geographie. For whereas the Ancients deuided the World into three parts, [n] Asia, Africa and Europe, and yet neuer knew the East and North parts of Asia, nor the South of Africa, nor the most Northerly parts of Europe: not onely these three are by Land and Sea farre more fully discouered, but also [o] three other parts, no lesse (if not much greater) then the former, are added to them; namely, America, Mexicana, and America Peruuiana, and Terra Australis, or the Land lying toward the South Pole. As for the seuenth part, which some reckon vnder the North Pole, because we haue no relation but [p] from a Magician, a Fryer of Oxford, called Nicholas de Linna, which might with as good conscience lye to vs, as by Art-Magicke take view of those Parts (otherwise it is not certainly knowne, whether it be ioyning to Asia, or whether it bee Land or Sea) I therefore leaue it out in this diuision.

Europe is diuided [q] from Africke by the Mediterranean Sea; from Asia by the Egean and Euxine, Mæotis, Tanais, and a Line from the Fountaines thereof North-wards: on the North and West parts washed with the Ocean; which running by the Staights of Gibralter, floweth along the Coasts of Africke, to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence passeth all alongst on the East-side thereof into the Arabian Gulfe, where, by a Necke of Land, it is encountred: This Necke, the Mediterranean, and Ocean, doe limit the bounds of Africa: The rest of the old World is Asia. America, Mexicana, or North, and the South called Peruuiana, are seuered by the narrow straights of Dariene, in other places compassed by the Sea: The South Continent is very little knowne, and contayneth the rest of the World; not bounded in the former limits. But in their particular places wee shall heare of each of them more fully.

It cannot be without some great worke of GOD, thus in the olde and decrepit Age of the World, to let it haue more perfect knowledge of it selfe; which wee hope, and pray, may be for the further enlargement of the Kingdome of CHRIST IESVS, and propagation of his Gospell. And as in former times, in those then discouered parts, the Iewes were scattered, some violently, some willingly, through ASIA, AFRICA, and EVROPE, to vsher the Gospell into those parts, and make way for that which the most of themselues reiected: who knoweth, whether in the secret Dispensation of Diuine Prouidence, (which is a co-worker in euery worke, able euen out of euill to bring good) the Donations of Popes, the Nauigations of Papists, the preaching of Fryers and Iesuites may be fore-runners of a further and truer manifestation of the Gospell, to the new-found Nations? for euen alreadie it is one good step of an Atheist and Infidell to become a Proselyte, although with some soyle: and againe, the Iesuites there cannot play the Statesmen as in these parts, yea [r] (themselues in their Relations being witnesses) they rather take Euangelical courses of those, which heere they count Heretikes, and by laying open mens sinne through the full, and Diuine Iustice, onely by CHRIST satisfied, doe beate downe Infidelitie with diligent Catechising: although vpon that golden foundation they build afterward their owne Hay and Stubble, with their racke of Confession, and rabble of Ceremonies, and (the most dangerous to new Conuerts) an exchanged Polytheisme in worshipping of Saints, Images, and the Host. But if GOD shall once shew mercy to Spaine, to make them truly Catholike, and, as a diuine Inquisitor, condemne that Deuillish Inquisition to perpetuall exile, how great a window may by that meanes be opened vnto this new World for their conuersion and reformation? And why may not the English Expedition and Plantation in Virginia, and the Nauigations of other Protestants, helpe this way, if men respected not their owne pride, ambition, and couetousnesse, more then the Truth and Glory of GOD? But hee that by Fishers conuerted the olde World, and turned the Wisedome of the World into foolishnesse, subdued Scepters by preaching the Crosse, yea, by suffering it in himselfe and in his members, is able of those stones to rayse vp Children to Abraham, and that by the

But to returne to our parts of the World, whence this Meditation hath with-drawne me. The ancient [f] Geographers were ignorant of a great part of that three-fold diuiſion: as appeareth by their owne Writings. The vſe of the Load-ſtone, found out by Iohn Goia of Melfi, an Italian (or as [t] Bellonius obſerueth, by one Flauius, but Albertus Magnus was the firſt that writ of the Nature of it) was a great and neceſſary helpe to further Diſcoueries, eſpecially after that Henrie ſonne of Iohn the firſt, King of Portugall, [u] beganne to make Voyages of Diſcouerie vpon the Coaſt of Africa, and Iohn the ſecond ſeconded that Enterpriſe, and vſed the helpe of Mathematicians, Roderigo and Ioſeph his Phyſicians, and Martin Bohemus, by whom the Aſtrolabe was applyed to the Art of Nauigation, and benefit of the Mariner, before vſed only in Aſtronomie. This Iohn alſo ſent men of purpoſe into Arabia, and Æthiopia, and other Countries of the Eaſt, to learne further knowledge thereof. From theſe beginnings, daily increaſing, hath Nauigation (firſt in Portugall, and by degrees in other Europæan Nations) by the helpe of Aſtronomicall Rules growne to her preſent perfection, and by it, Geographie. And if the longitude of places might as eaſily be found out as the latitude, which our Countriman Maſter Linton made [x] promiſe of, wee ſhould yet grow to better knowledge in thoſe Sciences, and of the World by them. Moreouer, as the Expedition of Alexander, and thoſe flouriſhing Monarchies in Aſia, brought ſome knowledge thereof to the Ancients: So the Hiſtories of later times, but eſpecially the great Trauels by Land of Marcus Paulus, Odoricus, Will. de Rubruquis, Ioannes de Plano Carpini, our Countriman Mandeuile, and others, before this skill of Nauigation, haue giuen much light to the knowledge of the In-land Countries of Aſia, which wee are firſt to ſpeake of.

As for the Circles, the Æquinoctiall, which parteth the Globe in the middeſt, the Trobickes of Cancer and Capricorne in twentie three degrees and a halfe from either ſide of the Æquinoctiall, the Arctike and Antarctike Circles in twentie three degrees and a halfe from the North and South Poles, or not much differing (which are vſually ſet in Maps with red or double lines, for diſtinction:) The Meridians, which are Circles paſſing ouer our heads, in what part of the World ſoeuer we be, and alſo through both the Poles: the Horizon, which diuideth the vpper halfe of the World which we ſee, from the nether halfe which wee ſee not: the Parallels [y] of Latitude from the Æquinoctiall towards either Pole: The Climes or Climates, which are the ſpaces of two Parallels: Alſo the tearmes of Poles, which are two, the Arctike, and the Antarctike; and the Axletree of the World (a right line imagined to paſſe from the one to the other, through the Centre of the Earth;) the Degrees, containing ſixtie miles (or after Conclius de Indais, ſixtie eight thouſand ninetie fiue paces and an halfe, and after other Authors otherwiſe, according as they haue differed in opinion touching the meaſure of the Earth, or touching the furlongs, miles, and degrees, which they vſed in their computation; the variety whereof both auncient and moderne among the Greekes, Romans, Arabians, Italians, Spaniards, and others, Maſter Hues our Countriman hath ſtudiouſly collected into ninetie, of which degrees euery fourth part of the world is diuided, & amount in the whole to three hundred ſixtie. Alſo the Geographicall tearmes of Litus, Fretum, Inſula, Sinus, Continens, Promontorium, Iſthmus, that is, Shores, ſtraits, Ilands, Bayes, Continent, Capes of Headlands, Neckes of Land, and ſuch like: All theſe (I ſay) and other things of like nature, needfull to this kind of knowledge, the ſtudious ſhall find in thoſe Authors which teach the Principles of Aſtronomy and Geography, with the vſe of Globes or Mappes, as Maſter BVNDEVILE, Maſter HVES and [z] others.

My intent is not to teach Geography, but to beſtow on the ſtudious of Geographie, a Hiſtory of the World, ſo to giue him fleſh vnto his bones, and vſe vnto his Theorie or Speculation, whereby both that skill may be confirmed, and a further and more excellent obtained. Geographie without Hiſtorie ſeemeth a Carkaſſe without life and motion: [a] Hiſtory without Geographie mooueth, but in moouing wandreth as a Vagrant, without certaine habitation. And whereas Time and Place are Twinnes and vnſeparable companions, in the chiefe Hiſtories to ſet downe the true time of chiefe Accidents, will adde much light to both; a great taske in one Conntry: but to take vp the whole World on my ſhoulders, which haue not the ſtrength either of Atlas or Hercules to beare it; and in the whole to obſerue the deſcription of Places, order of times, and the Hiſtory of Actions and Accidents, eſpecially Religions, (olli robur

And how can I but often slip, that make a perambulation ouer the World, that see with others eyes, that tell of matters past so many ages before I had a Beeing? Yet such is the necessitie of such a History, either thus, or not at all. But as neere as I can, I purpose to follow the best euidence, and to propound the Truth: my fault (where it is worst) shall be rather mendacia dicere, then mentiri, and yet the Talesman shall bee set by the Tale, the Authors name annexed to his Historie, to shield me from that imputation.

And first we must begin with ASIA, to which the first place is due, as being the place of the first Men, first Religion, first Cities, Empires, Arts: where the most things mentioned in Scripture, were done; the place where Paradise was seated; the Arke rested; the Law was giuen; and whence the Gospell proceeded: the place which did beare Him in his flesh, that by his Word beareth vp all things.

It is greater then Europe and Africa: yea, the Islands thereof are larger, if they were put together, then all Europe. It is compassed with the Easterne, Indian, and Scythian Oceans, on three parts: on the West it hath the Arabian Gulfe, that Necke of Land which diuided it from Africa, the Mediterranean, Aegean, Pontike Seas, the Lake Mæotis, Tanais, with an imagined line from thence to the Bay of S. Nicholas. make it yet larger, and make Nilus to diuide it from Africa, but with leſſe reaſon. Taurus diuideth it in the middeſt: On the North ſide is that which is called Aſia interior: on the South is Aſia exterior. More vnequall is that diuiſion into Aſia the greater and the leſſe, this beeing leſſe indeed, then that it ſhould ſuſtaine a member in that diuiſion. Io. Barrius diuideth it into nine parts, Ortelius into fiue, Maginus into ſeuen, which are theſe, Firſt, That part of Tartaria, betwixt Muſcouia, the Northerne Ocean, the Riuer Ob, and the Lake Kytai, and a line thence drawne to the Caſpian Sea, and that Iſthmus which is betwixt that and the Pontike Sea: ſecondly, the great Chams Countrey, from thence to the Eaſterne Sea, betwixt the frozen Sea and the Caſpian: thirdly, That which is ſubiect to the Turke, all from Sarmatia and Tartaria Southwards, betweene Tygris and the Mediterranean Sea: fourthly, The Perſian Kingdome, betweene the Turke, Tartar, India, and the Red Sea: fiftly, India, within and beyond Ganges, from Indus to Cantan: ſixtly, The Kingdome of China: ſeuenthly, The Iſlands. Theſe diuiſions are not ſo exact as may be wiſhed, becauſe of that variety & vncertainty in thoſe Kingdomes. Many things doth Aſia yeeld, not elſewhere to be had; Myrrhe, Frankincenſe, Cinamon, Cloues, Nutmegs, Mace, Pepper, Muske, and other like, beſides the chiefeſt Iewels. It hath alſo Minerals of all ſorts: It nouriſheth Elephants, Camels, and many other Beaſts, Serpents, Fowles, wilde and tame, as in the enſuing Diſcourſe, in their due places, ſhall appeare; yet doth it not nouriſh ſuch monſtrous ſhapes of men, as fabulous Antiquitie fained. It brought foorth that Monſter of Irreligion, Mahumet; whoſe Sect, in diuerſe Sects, it foſtereth, with long continuance of manifold Superſtitions. It hath now thoſe great Empires of the Turke, Perſian, Mogore, Cathayan, Chinois; it had ſometimes the Parthian, and before that, the Perſian, Median, Aſſyrian, Scythian: and firſt (as it ſeemeth) before them all, the Babylonian Empire vnder Nimrod, which is therefore in the next place to be ſpoken of.

CHAP. X.

Of Babylonia: the originall of Idolatrie; and the Chaldæans Antiquities before the Floud, as BEROSVS hath reported them.

CONfuſion cauſed diuiſion of Nations, Regions and Religions. Of this Confuſion (whereof is alreadie ſpoken) the Citie, and thereof this Countrey tooke the name. [a] Plinie maketh it a part of Syria, which hee extendeth from hence to Cilicia. [b] Strabo addeth, as farre as the Pontike Sea. But is vſually reckoned an entire Countrey of it ſelfe, which [c] Ptolomey doth thus bound. On the North it hath Meſopotamia, on the Weſt Arabia Deſerta; Suſiana on the Eaſt; on the South, part of Arabia, and the Perſian Gulfe. Luke maketh Babylonia [d] a part of Meſopotamia: Ptolomey more ſtrictly diuideth them: whereunto alſo agreeth the interpretation [e] of the Land of Shinar, that it was the lower part of Meſopotamia, containing Chaldæa and Babylon, lying vnder the Mount Sangara. In this Countrey was built the firſt City which we read of after the Floud, by the vngratefull World, mooued thereunto (as ſome thinke) by Nimrod, the ſonne of Cuſh, nephew of Cham. For as Caines poſteritie before the Floud, were called the ſonnes of Men, as more ſauouring the things of men then of God: more induſtrious in humane inuentions, then religious deuotions: ſo by Noahs curſe it may appeare, and by the Nations that deſcended of him, that Cham was the firſt Author, after the Floud, of irreligion. Neither is it likely, that he which derided his old Father, whom Age, Holineſſe, Fatherhood, Benefits, and thrice greateſt Function of Monarchy, Prieſthood and Prophecie, ſhould haue taught him to reuerence; That he (I ſay) which at once could breake all theſe bonds and chaines of Nature and Humanitie, would be held with any bonds of Religion; or could haue an eye of Faith to ſee him which is inuiſible, hauing put out his eyes of Reaſon and Ciuilitie. Had hee feared God, had he reuerenced man, had hee made but profeſſion of theſe things in ſome hypocriticall ſhew, hee could not ſo eaſily haue ſitten downe at eaſe in that Chaire of Scorning, whence we read not that euer hee roſe by repentance. From this Cham came Nimrod, [f] The mightie hunter before the Lord; not of innocent beaſts, but of men, compelling them to his ſubiection, although Noah and Sem were yet aliue, with many other Patriarches.

As for Noah, the fabling Heathen, it is like, deified him. The Beroſus of fabling Annius, calleth him Father of the gods, Heauen, Chaos, the Soule of the World. Ianus his double face might ſeeme to haue ariſen hence, of Noahs experience of both Ages, before and after the Floud. The fable of [g] Saturnus cutting off his Fathers priuities, might take beginning of that act, act, for which Cham was cursed. Sem is supposed to be that Melchisedech King of Salem, the figure of the Lord, and the propagator of true Religion; although euen in his posteritie it failed, in which Abrahams Father, as witnesseth [h] Ioshua, serued other gods. Iaphets pietie causeth vs to perswade our selues good things of him, Cham and his posteritie we see the authors of ruine. Philo [i] and Methodius (so are the two bookes called, but falsly) tell, That in these daies they began to diuine by Starres, and to sacrifice their children by Fire; which Element Nimrod compelled men to worship: and that to leaue a name to posteritie, they engraued their names in the brickes wherewith Babel was builded. Abraham refusing to communicate with them (and good cause, for [k] he was not yet borne) was cast into their Brick-kill, and came out (long after from his Mothers wombe) without harme. Nahor, Lot, and other his fellowes, nine in number, saued themselues by flight. [l] Others adde, that Aram, Abrams, brother, was done to death for refusing to worship the Fire. Qui Bauium non odit, amet tua carmina Mani.

To come to truer and more certaine reports, Moses saith, That the beginning of Nimrods Kingdome was Babel and Erech, [m] and Acad and Calne, which three, some interpret Edessa, Nisibis, Callinisum. And whereas commonly it is translated in the next words, Out of that Land came Ashur, and built Niniueh: Tremellius and Iunius read it, Out of this Land, hee (Nimrod) went into Ashur, or Assyria, and built Niniue and Rehoboth, Calah, and Resen. But [n] most vsually this is vnderstood of Ashur, the sonne of Sem, who disclayming Nimrods tyrannie, built Niniue, which after became the chiefe City of the Assyrian Empire, to which Babylon it selfe was subiected not long after. Xenophon de Æquinocis (if his authority be current) saith, That the eldest of the cheife families were called Saturni, their Fathers had to name Cœlum, their wiues Rhea: and out of a piller, erected by Semiramis to Ninus, alleageth this inscription, My Father was Iupiter Belus, my Grandfather Saturnus Babylonicus, my great Grandfather Saturnus Æthiops, who was sonne of Saturnus Ægyptius, to whom Cœlus, Phœnix Ogyges was Father. Ogyges is interpreted Noah, therefore called Phœnix, because of his habitation (as is thought) in Phœnicia, not farre from whence, in Ierusalem Sem raigned. Saturnus Ægyptius, may be the name of Cham, of whose name Egypt is in Scripture tearmed the [o] land of Cham. Saturnus Æthiops is Cush; Nimrod, Babylonicus, the father of Belus, who begat Ninus. But this cannot be altogether true: For Niniue hath greater antiquitie then Nimrods Nephew (howsoeuer the Greeke Histories ascribe this to Ninus, and Babylon to his wife Semiramis) except we say, that by them these two Cities formerly built, were enlarged and erected to that magnificence, which with the growth of the Assyrian Empire they after obtained.

Eusebius [p] in the first booke of his Chronicle attributeth the originall of Idolatry to Serug, the Father of Nahor. Beda [q] saith, In the daies of Phaleg Temples were built, and the Princes of Nations adored for gods. The same hath [r] Isidore, Epiphanius [s] referreth it to Serug; and addeth, That they had not grauen Images of Wood or Metall, but pictures of men; and Thara the Father of Abraham, was the first Author of Images. The like hath Suidas. Hugo de S. Victore saith, Nimrod brought men to idolatrie, and caused them to worship the fire, because of the fiery nature and operation of the Sun, which errour the Chaldeans afterwards followed. These times, till Abram, they called Scythismus. The reason of their Idolatrie, [t] Eusebius alleageth, That they thus kept remembrance of their Warriours, Rulers, and such as had atchieued noblest enterprises, and worthiest exploits in their life time. Their posteritie ignorant of that their scope (which was, to obserue their memorials which had been Authors of good things, and because they were their forefathers) worshipped them as heauenly Deities, and sacrificed to them. Of their [u] God-making or Canonization, this was the manner: In their sacred Bookes or Kallenders they ordained, That their names should bee written after their death, and a Feast should be solemnized according to the same time, saying, That their soules were gone to the Isles of the blessed, and that they were no longer condemned or burned with fire. These things lasted to the dayes of Thara; who (saith Suidas) was an Image-maker, and propounded his Images (made of diuers matter) as gods to be worshipped: but Abram broke his Fathers Images. From Saruch the Author, and this Practice, Idolatry passed to other Nations: Suidas addeth specially into Greece; for they worshipped Hellen, a Gyant of the posterity of Iapheth, a partner in the building of the Tower.

Not vnlike to this, we reade the causes of Idolatry in the booke of [x] Wisdome (supposed to be written by Philo, but because the substance is Salomons, professing and bearing his name) which of all the Apochrypha-Scripture sustaineth least exception, attaineth highest commendation: When a Father mourned grieuously for his sonne that was taken away suddenly, he made an Image for him that was once dead, whom now he worshippeth as a God, and ordained to his seruants Ceremonies and Sacrifices. A second cause hee alleageth, viz. The tyrannie of men, whose Images they made and honoured, that they might by all meanes flatter him that was absent, as though hee had beene beene present. A third reason followeth; The ambitious skill of the workeman, that through the beauty of the worke, the multitude beeing allured, tooke him for a God, which a little before was honoured but as a man. The like affirmeth [y] Hierome, Cyprian, and Polydore de inuentoribus; [z] LACTANTIVS (as before is shewed) maketh that the Etymologie of the word Superstitio, Quia superstitem memoriam defunctorum colebant, aut quia parentibus suis superstites celebrabant imagines eorum domi, tanquam deos penates; either because they honoured with such worship the suruiuing memory of their dead Ancestors; or because suruiuing and out-liuing their Ancestors, they celebrated their Images in their houses, as houshold gods. Such Authors of new Rites and Deifiers of [a] dead men they called Superstitious: but those which followed the publikely-receiued and ancient Deities, were called Religious, according to that Verse of Virgil. Vana superstitio veterumq; ignara deorum. But by this rule (saith Lactantius) wee shall find all Superstitious which worship false gods, and them only religious which worship the one and true GOD. The same [*] Lactantius saith, That Noah cast off his sonne Cham for his wickednesse, and expelled him. Hee abode in that part of the Earth which now is called Arabia, called (saith he) of his name Canaan, and his Posteritie Canaanites. This was the first people which was ignorant of GOD, because their Founder and Prince receiued not of his Father the worship of GOD. But first of all other, the Egyptians began to behold and adore the heauenly bodies: and because they were not couered with houses for the temperature of the Ayre, and that Region is not subiect to clouds, they obserued the Motions and Ecclipses of the Starres, and whiles they often viewed them more curiously, fel to worship them. After that, they inuented the monstrous shapes of beasts, which they worshipped. Other men scattered through the World, admiring the Elements, the Heauen, Sunne, Land, Sea, without any Images and Temples worshipped them, and sacrificed to them sub dio, til in processe of time they erected Temples and Images to their most puissant Kings; & ordained vnto them Sacrifices & Incense so wandering from the knowledge of the true GOD, they became Gentiles. Thus farre Lactantius. And it is not vnlike that they performed this to their Kings, eyther [b] in flatterie, or feare of their power, or because of the benefits which they receiued from them, this beeing (saith [c] Plinie) the most ancient kinde of thankefulnesse, to reckon their Benefactours among the gods. To which accordeth [*] Cicero in the Examples of Hercules, Castor, Pollux, Æsculapius, Liber, Romulus. And thus the Moores deified their Kings, and the Romanes their deceased Emperours.

The first that is named to haue set vp Images, and worship to the dead, was [d] Ninus, who when his Father [e] Belus was dead, made an Image to him, and gaue priuiledge of Sanctuary to all Offenders that resorted to this Image: whereupon, mooued with a graceless gratefulnesse, they performed thereunto diuine honours. And this example was practised after by others. And thus of Bel or Belus beganne this Imagerie, and for this cause (saith [f] Lyra) they called their Idols Bel, Baal, Beel-zebub, according to the diuersitie of Languages. [g] Cyrillus calleth him Arbelus, and saith, that before the Floud was no Idolatrie amongst men, but it had beginning after in Babylon, in which, Arbelus (next after whom raigned Ninus) was worshipped. Tertullian [h] out of the Booke of Enoch, before mentioned, is of opinion, That Idolatrie was before the Floud. Thus to continue the memorie of mortall men, and in admiration of the immortall heauenly Lights, together with the tyrannie of Princes, and policies of the Priests, beganne this worshipping of the creature, with the contempt of the Creator: which how they increased by the Mysteries of their Philosophers, the fabling of their Poets, the ambition of Potentates, the Superstition of the vulgar, the gainfull colluſion of their Priests, the cunning of Artificers, and aboue all, the malice of the Deuils, worshipped in those Idols, there giuing answeres and Oracles, and receiuing Sacrifices; the [i] Histories of all Nations are ample Witnesses. And this Romane Babylon, now Tyrant of the West, is the heire of elder Babylon (sometimes Ladie of the East) in these deuotions, that then and still Babylon might bee the mother of Whoredomes and all Abominations. To which aptly agree the Parallels of Babylon and Rome in [k] Orosius, the Empire of the one ceasing, when the other beganne first to haue a being; which hee further prosecuteth in many particulars.

But before we prosecute these Babylonian affaires after the Floud, it shall not be amisse to shew here the Chaldæan Fables of Antiquities before the Floud, out of Berosus a Chaldæan Priest, which liued in the time of Alexander. Polyhistor [l] citeth out of Berosus his first Booke this report of himselfe; and Tatianus [m] saith he was the Priest of Belus, and wrote his Chaldæan Storie to Antiochus, the third after Seleucus, in three Bookes. His name signifieth the Sonne of Osee.

Alorus raigned the space of ten Sari (Sarus with them is three thousand six hundred yeares) Alasparus three Sari; Amelus thirteene Sari; Amenus twelue; Metalarus eighteene;

Daorus tenne; Ædorachus eighteene; Amphis tenne; Otiartes eight; Xixuthrus eighteene: in his time, as is said before, the Floud happened. The whole space is an hundred and twentie Sari, which amounteth to foure hundred thirtie two thousand yeares. This I thought not vnfit (although incredible) to report from Berosus, both because my scope is to declare as well false as true Religions (it being not Theologicall but Historicall, or rather Historically Theologicall) and because the Ancients, Cicero, Lactantius, Augustine, haue mentioned this monstrous Computation of the Chaldæan Kalender, which yet they racke higher to foure hundred threescore and ten thousand yeeres. Here you haue the particulars out of Apollodorus and Abidenus, which both borrowed them of Berosus. [n] Polyhistor addeth, that there came one out of the Red Sea, called Oannes and Annedotus a Monster (other-where like a fish, his head, feet and hands like a man, as saith Photius, but Al. Polyhistor ascribeth two heads, one of a fish, and the other of a man) the Image whereof was vnto his times reserued. This Monster liued without meate, and taught them the knowledge of Letters and all Arts, buildings of Cities, foundations of Temples, enacting of Lawes, Geometry and Husbandry, and all necessaries to mans life. Afterwards he returned to the Sea; and after him appeared other such Monsters. Foure of them came out of the Sea, saith Abidenus, when Daos (whom Apollodorus calleth Daorus) raigned; their names were Euedochus, Eneugamus, Enaboulus, Anementus. Pentabiblus (it seemeth) was then their chiefe Citie. That Oannes the first did write of the first beginning: That all was darkenesse and water, in which liued monstrous creatures, hauing two formes; men with two wings, and some with foure; with one body two heads, one of a man, and another of a woman, with the priuities of both Sexes: others with hornes and legs like Goats; some with Horse feet; some like Centaures, the former part Men, the after part Horses; Buls also headed like Men and Dogges, with foure bodies, &c. with many monstrous mixtures and confusions of creatures, whose Images were kept in the Temple of Belus. Ouer all these ruled a woman, named Omorka, which signifieth the Sea, and by like signification of Letters, the Moone. Then came Belus and cut her in twaine, and made the one halfe of her Land, the other Heauen, and the creatures therein appeared. This Belus made men and beasts the Sunne, Moone, and Planets: these things reporteth Berosus in his first Booke; in the second he telleth of Kings (before mentioned) which raigned till the Floud: After the Floud also the same Polyhistor out of him sheweth, That Sisuthrus hauing by Saturnes warning before, built an Arke (as is before said) and laid vp all Monuments of Antiquitie in Sipparis a Citie dedicated to the Sunne, and now with all his World of Creatures escaped the Floud, going out of the Arke did sacrifice to the gods, and was neuer seene more. But they heard a voyce out of the Ayre, giuing them this Precept, To bee Religious. His Wife, Daughter and Ship-master were partakers with him of this honour, Hee said vnto them, the Countrey where they now were was Armenia, and hee would come againe to Babylon, and that it was ordayned, that from Sipparis they should receiue Letters, and communicate the same to men: which they accordingly did. For hauing sacrificed to the gods: they went to Babylon and digged out the * Letters, Writings, or Bookes, and building many Cities, and founding Temples, did againe repayre Babylon. Thus farre out of Alexander Polyhistor, a large Fragment of the true Berosus.

*Of the Citie and Countrey of Babylon: * their sumptuous Walls, Temples, and Images.*

* The former Map of Paradise doth describe the Topography of the Countrey of Babylonia.

LEauing these Antiquities, rotten with Age, let vs come to take better view of this stately Citie. [a] Herodotus, [b] Philostratus, [c] Plinie, and [d] Solinus report concerning the compasse of Babylon, That the walls contayned foure hundred and eightie furlongs, situate in a large Plaine, foure square, inuironed with a broad and deepe Ditch full of water. [e] Diodorus saith, That there were but so many furlongs as are dayes in the yeare, so that euery day a furlong of the wall was built, and thirtie hundred thousand Work-men imployed therein. [f] Strabo ascribeth to the compasse three hundred and eightie furlongs: and [g] Curtius, three hundred fiftie eight, (ninetie furlongs thereof inhabited, the rest allotted to Tylth and Husbandry.) Concerning the thicknesse of the walls, or the height, they also disagree. The first Authors affirme the height two hundred Cubites, the thicknesse [h] fiftie. They which say least, cut off halfe that summe. Well might [i] Aristotle esteeme it a Countrey rather then a Citie, being of such greatnesse, that some part of it was taken three dayes before the other other heard of it. [k] Lyranus out of Hierome vpon Esay affirmeth, that the foure squares thereof contayned sixteene miles a piece, wherein euery man had his Vineyard and Garden according to his degree, wherewith to mayntaine his Family in time of siege. The Fortresse or Tower thereof he saith was that which had beene built by the Sonnes of Noah. And not without cause was it reckoned among the [l] Wonders of the World. It had a hundred Brazen gates, and two hundred and fiftie Towers. It was indeed a Mother of Wonders: so many Miracles of Art accompanyed the same, the workes partly of Semiramis, partly of Nabuchodonosor; which I would desire the Reader to stay his hastie pace, and take notice of. Euery where I shall not, I cannot, be so tedious in these kinds of Relations. [m] Diodor. thus addeth of Semiramis; shee built also a bridge of fiue furlongs. The walles were made of Bricke and Asphaltum, and slimy kind of Pitch which that Countrey yeeldeth. Shee built two Palaces, which might serue both for ornament and defence; one in the West, which inuironed sixtie furlongs; with high Bricke walles: within that a lesse, and within that also a lesse circuit, which contayneth the Tower. These were wrought sumptuously with Images of beasts, and therein also was game and hunting of beasts: this had three gates. The other in the East, on the other side the Riuer, contayned but thirtie furlongs. In the lower Countrey of Babylonia she made a great square Lake contayning two hundred furlongs; the walls whereof were of Bricke, and that pitchie Morter; the depth thirtie fiue foot. In the middest of the Citie she erected a Temple to Iupiter Belus (saith Herodotus) with Brazen gates (now in his time remayning) foure square: each square contayning two * furlongs, in the middest whereof is a solid Tower, of the height and thicknesse of a furlong: vpon this another, and so one higher then another, eight in number. In the highest Tower is a Chappell, and therein a faire bed couered, and a Table of Gold, without any Image. Neyther, as the Chaldæan Priests affirme, doth any abide here in the night, but one woman, whom this God shall appoint. They say, the God himselfe there lyeth. In regard of this exceeding height, Diodorus affirmes, that the Chaldæans did thereon make their obseruations of the Starres. Hee also addeth, that Semiramis placed in the top three golden statues; one of Iupiter fortie foot long, weighing a thousand Babylonian Talents, till his time remayning; another of Ops, weighing as much, sitting in a golden Throne, and at her feet two Lions, and iust by huge Serpents of siluer, each of thirtie Talents: the third Image was of Iuno standing, in weight eight hundred Talents. Her right hand held the head of a Serpent, her left, a Scepter of stone. To all these was common, one Table of gold, forty foot long, in breadth twelue, in weight fiftie Talents. There were also two standing cups of thirty Talents, and two vessels for Perfume of like value: three other vessels of gold, whereof one dedicated to Iupiter, weighed twelue hundred Babylonian Talents: (euery Babylonian Talent is said to containe seuen thousand Drachmæ Atticæ, sixtie three pounds, nine ounces and a halfe, and halfe a quarter Troy weight.) All these the Persian Kings tooke away. Without the Temple, by Herodotus testimonie, was a golden Altar, and another huge one besides, for their solemne Sacrifices, the other beeing not to bee polluted with bloud, except of sucking things. In that greater Chaldæans burnt yeerely in their sacrifices a hundred thousand talents of Libanotus. One statue of gold twelue cubits high, Darius affecting spared; but Xerxes both tooke it, and slew the Priest that forbad him.

I might here also tell of those Pensile gardens, borne vp on arches, foure square, each sqnare containing foure hundred foot: filled on the roofe with earth, wherein grew great trees and other plants. The entrance was (as it were) a hill: the arches were builded one vpon another in conuenient height, still increasing as they ascended: the highest which bare the walls, were fiftie cubits high, and twelue in breadth: There were within these Arches, Innes. There was also a conueyance of water to the watering thereof. This Garden was made long after Semiramis time by [n] a King, which herein seemed to lord it ouer the Elements, and countermaund Nature, being himselfe the seruant of his wiues appetite, who in this lowly valley wherein Babylon stood, would faine haue some representation of her owne hilly and mountainous countrey of Media.

This King was Nabuchodonosor, as witnesseth [o] Berosus in Iosephus, who hauing conquered Egypt, Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, inriched the Temple of Belus with the spoyles, and added a new Citie to the old, without the same. And prouiding that the enemie might not after turne the course of the Riuer, and approach to the Citie, he compassed the inner Citie with three Wals, and the vtter Citie with as many, these of bricke, those also with bitumen, or pitchie slime of that Countrie, adding thereunto stately gates. And neere his fathers Palace he built another more sumptuous: and this hee did in fifteene dayes. Therein hee raysed stone-works like vnto mountaines, and planted the same with all manner of trees. Hee made also a pensile Garden. Many more things (saith Iosephus) doth Berosus adde, and blameth the Greeke writers for ascribing the building of Babylon to Semiramis an Assyrian.

This fragment of Berosus cited by Iosephus, doth well serue vs to cleare both the holy and prophane Historie. In the one, Daniel [p] induceth Nabuchodonosor walking in his royall Palace in Babel, with words answerable to his pride. Is not this great Babel that I haue builded for the house of the Kingdome, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my maiestie? His words (euen in the speaking) were written in the Booke of GOD, and an enditement thereof framed in the highest Court; where he was adiudged presently the losse of Reason, which he had thus abused, Till hee knew that the most High bare rule ouer the Kingdome of men, giuing the same to whomsoeuer hee will. Well might he say, he had built it, inregard of this new Citie and Palace, with other miracles thereof: with more truth then some Expositors, which accuse him herein of a lie, for arrogating that which Semiramis did. His wife also, for whose loue he did this, was (as [q] Scaliger thinketh) Nitocris, mentioned by Herodotus; who also coniectureth that shee was the Daughter of Aliattes, that Daniel intendeth her, Dan. 5. 10. that shee administred the Kingdome in the time of her husbands madnesse, and in the times also of Euilmerodach and Balsasar: a woman no whit inferiour to Semiramis; that it may be said, Semiramis began Babylon, and Nitocris finished and perfected it, finishing and perfecting those workes which Nabuchodonosor her husband before the time of his madnesse had begunne.

And for Semiramis, prophane histories [r] generally make her the founder of this Citie, and among others [s] Annius his Berosus, who (contrary to this fragment of the true Berosus in Iosephus) saith, that Semiramis made Babylon of a towne a great Citie, that shee might be rather esteemed the builder thereof, then enlarger. Nimrod had before built the Tower, but not finished it, and did not [t] found the Citie, which hee had designed and set out, and Belus his sonne had [u] erected those designed foundations, rather of the Towne then the Citie Babylon. Moses testifieth that at the first building, they were (by confusion of language) forced to cease their worke, leauing a name of their shame, in stead of that renowne and name, which they had promised to themselues. It may be that Semiramis did amplifie this: and happily so did other Assyrian and Babylonian kings, as Augustine and Abidenus affirme. Hanc quidem putant condidisse Babylona, quam quidem potuit instaurare. Likewise Abidenus saith, that the wals being by inundation fallen, were built againe by Nabuchodonosor, and agreeth in other things with Berosus. But the Græcians are children, in comparison of ancient Historie, and little of this matter can we affirme on their testimonie; their first Historian Herodotus liuing long after this age, in the time of the Persian Monarchie. Howsoeuer; Nabuchodonosor is hee which (by diuine and humane testimonie) there established that golden head of the Image, the seat of the Babylonian Monarchie, raising it to that high top of worldly excellence. Yea Daniel speaketh of one more sumptuous Image, then any mentioned by Herodotus and Diodorus, set vp by this King threescore [x] cubits high, and six broad, enioyning a Catholicke and vniuersall idolatrie thereunto, which the three Saints Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego refused, and in a fierie triall were found both Martyrs and Confessors. [y] Lyranus, Hugo Cardinalis, Pererius, Pintus, Pellicanus, thinke that Nabuchodonosor set vp this Image for himselfe, requiring diuine honour to be giuen vnto it, as Caligula since amongst the Romans; but by his expostulation, Will yee not serue my god? and the like answere of those three men: We will not serue thy gods, it seemeth to haue beene consecrated to Bel, or some other Babylonian Deitie. Which because it was erected in the plaine of Dura (this is thought to bee Dera in Susiana, mentioned by Ptolomey) [z] Daniel might haue good occasion of absence from thence, whose office was to [a] sit in the gate of the King, at Babylon.

[b] Strabo out of Megasthenes (whom Annius hath set out as truly as he hath done Berosus, saue that he lisped in the name, and called him Metasthenes) sayth of this King, whom hee nameth Nabacodrosor, more esteemed of the Chaldæans then Hercules, that he came in his expeditions as farre as the Pillars of Hercules (the straights of Gibraltar) and as far as Tearcon the Æthiopian, and that he conducted an army out of Iberia into Thracia and Pontus. This Tearcon is he whom the Scripture calleth Tirhaka, which warred against Senacherib.

* But to returne to our pensile Gardens, which Diodorus and Curtius attribute to a Syrian King (which was no other but this Conquerour of Syria, [d] Nabuchodonosor) and both they and Strabo doe at large describe and account among the worlds wonders, as were also the Bridge and the Walls of the Citie. And no lesse wonderfull was that Obeliske, or Needle: a square stone made spire-fashion, cut by Semiramis out of the mountaines of Armenia, one hundred and fiftie foot long, and foure and twentie thicke, on many Waines brought to the Riuer, thence to Babylon, and there erected. Plinie testifieth, that the Temple of Belus stil remaineth in his dayes: and that Belus was inuentor of Astronomie.

This Temple was the same with the Sepulchre of Belus, which Strabo sayth, was rased by Xerxes:

Xerxes; yet not ſo, but that Alexander would haue repaired it; but in regard that it asked ſo much labour and time (for onely the clenſing of the earth required ten thouſand men two moneths worke) he was not able to finiſh that which he had begunne. In the deſcription he ſaith leſſe then Herodotus, that it was a Pyramis, or ſpire-worke, a furlong, or ſix hundred foot in height, and each of the foure ſquares containing as much. Arrianus [e] affirmeth that Alexander had the ſame purpoſe of other Temples alſo. The Temples, ſayth he, which Xerxes had querthrowne, he commanded to be repayred, and among them the Temple of Belus, whom the Babylonians with ſingular Religion worſhip. [f] At his returne homewards Belus in thankefulneſſe (it ſeemeth) ſent his Chaldæan Prieſts to meete him, and forbid him to enter the Citie, as he loued his life, whoſe Oracle Alexander contemning, there ended his dayes. The cauſe why he liſtned not to them, is thought a miſtruſt, that he conceiued of the Chaldæans. For whereas Xerxes, at his returne out of Greece, had razed this and all other ſacred places of the Babylonians: Alexander minding the repaire hereof, hauing already remoued the rubbiſh, thought with his whole Armie to atchieue this enterpriſe. But the reuenue which the Kings of Aſſyria had left for the maintenance of this Temple ſacrifices, after the ouerthrow thereof, was ſhared among the Chaldæans; which they by this attempt were like to loſe, and therefore were willing to want his preſence.

This Temple ſome ſuppoſe to be that Tower of Babel, mentioned by Moſes, Gen. 11. and ſuppoſed ſtill in part to remaine. For about ſeuen or eight miles from Bagdat, as men paſſe from Felugia a Towne on Euphrates, whereon old Babylon ſtood, to this new Citie on Tygris (a worke of eighteene houres, and about forty miles ſpace) there is ſeene a ruinous ſhape of a ſhapeleſſe heape and building, in circuit leſſe then a mile (ſome ſay, but a quarter of a mile) about the height of the ſtone-worke of Pauls ſteeple in London: the bricks being ſixe inches thicke, eight broad, and a foot long (as maſter Allen meaſured) with Mats of Canes laied betwixt them, yet remayning as ſound, as if they had beene laid within a yeeres ſpace. Thus maſter Eldred, and maſter Fitch, maſter Cartwright alſo, and my friend maſter Allen, by teſtimony of their owne eyes, haue reported. But I can ſcarce thinke it to be that Tower or Temple, becauſe Authors place it in the middeſt of old Babylon, and neere Euphrates. Whereas this is neerer Tygris: Iſidore affirmeth, that firſt after the floud, Nimrod the Giant founded Babylon, which Semiramis the Aſſyrian Queene enlarged, and made the wall with Bricke and Bitumen. The height of the Tower was fiue thouſand one hundred ſeuenty foure paces, [g] Verſtegan addeth, the paſſage to mount vp was verie wide and great, winding about on the out-ſide: the middle and inward part for the more ſtrength being all maſſie: and by Cart, Camels, Dromedaries, Horſes and Aſſes, the carriages were borne and drawne vp: and by the way were many Lodgings and Hoſteries both for man and beaſt; yea fields alſo for graine and paſture; if yee can beleeue it. But it is now, as wee ſee, come to confuſion. Alſo there are yet beyond Tygris ſome ruines of a Temple, which is called the Temple of Bel, with high yron gates, as is reported.

Mentioned alſo by Sir, Ant. Sherley in his trauels into Perſia.

Dominicus Niger [h] hath theſe words: Seleucia in proceſſe of time hath changed her ſtate and her ſite. For it was on the weſterne banke of Tygris, which a Cut from Euphrates flowed into; in which place are now ſeene the ruines thereof, where the ſhepheards haue erected them cottages: and on the Eaſterne banke haue the Barbarians built the Citie, and called it Bachdad, right ouer-againſt the old. If this be true, vaine is the conceit of credulous Trauellers, which ſuppoſe thoſe ruines to be the monuments of Babylons buriall, and confound againſt this later world, with the reports of Babels Tower.

The Bitumen of ſlimie pitch which they vſed in ſtead of Morter in their building is as Dominicus Niger out of Trogus reporteth, common in thoſe parts. Herodotus telleth, that eight dayes iourney from Babylon, was another Citie, named Is, with a ſmall rill of the ſame name, which runneth into Euphrates, carrying thither (as tribute) much of this ſlimie matter. Niger mentioneth one place, where, out of a clift or opening of the earth, proceedeth ſuch a ſtinke, that it killeth the Birds which flie ouer it. And at this day, two dayes iourney from Bagdat [i] at a place called Ait, is a mouth continually throwing forth boyling pitch, therefore by the Moores called Hel-mouth, which runneth into a great field, almoſt full thereof: and herewith they pitch their boates. The water, as my friend maſter Allen (who liued in Bagdat diuers moneths) told me, is warme, and accounted medicinable, for which cauſe he hath drunke largely thereof: the liquid pitch floateth on the top of the water, like clouted Creame, to vſe his owne phraſe.

blade: and yet so their barrener land yeeldeth fiftie, their best an hundred increase. Tygris and Euphrates ouerflow it, but bring not fatnesse to the soyle, as Nilus in Egypt, but rather cleanse that superfluous fatnesse which naturally it hath.

The soyle is of a rosennie clay, sayth master Allen, and would still retaine in likelyhood his ancient fertility, if it were watered with like diligent husbandrie: In digging, it yeeldeth corrupt waters, sauouring of that pitchie slime. In the Citie anciently, it seemeth that in euery Garden of any Citizen of sort, were rils made out of the Riuer. The ruines from the Tower aforesaid to Bagdat (which some call Babylon) and beyond on the other side of the Riuer, containe twentie two miles, yet to be seene: which happily are the ruines, not of old Babylon, so much as of the Neighbour townes here built Seleucia, Vologesocerta, and Ctesiphon: which I rather thinke, because they reach beyond Tygris as well as on this side.

To returne to the religious places in Babylon: Celius Rhodiginus tels, that in the Temple of Apollo, was found a golden chest of great antiquitie, which being broken by some accident, thence issued a pestilent vapour, that infected not those alone which were present, but the neighbouring Nations, as farre as Parthia. Ammianus Marcellinus [m] hath the like Historie of the Image of Apollo Chomeus at Seleucia, which was brought to Rome, and there placed by the Priests in the Temple of Apollo Palatinus: and when as a certaine hole which the Chaldæan Wise-men had by Art stopped, through the couetousnesse of certaine Souldiers breaking in thither for spoyle, was broken vp, the world was thence poysoned with a contagion, from Persia, as farre as France. [n] Philostratus reporteth (but who will beleeue his reports?) of Apollonius, that he saw at Babylon such stately Palaces, as scarce agree with the state of Babylon, in the time of Apollonius, which was while Domician raigned; amongst other things, hee saw Galleries full of Greeke Images, as of Orpheus, Andromeda, &c. He came also into a Gallerie, the roofe whereof was made bowing like the heauens, and couered with Saphire, so to resemble Heauen, and the Images of their gods, made of gold, were there set. From the roofe there hanged foure birds of gold, representing the goddesse of Reuenge, which they called the tongues of the gods, I know not by what art or mysterie, admonishing the King not to exalt himselfe.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Priests, Sacrifices, religious Rites, and customes of the Babylonians.

THe Chaldeans (saith [a] Diodorus) were of reputation in Babylon, as the Priests in Egypt; Chaldæan, being a name sometime applyed to the whole Nation; sometime appropriated to the Priests, who spent their whole time in religious Seruices, and in Astrologie. Many of them by diuination foretold things to come, as wee haue shewed before in the Historie of Alexander; and the booke of Daniel witnesseth this their profession. By their auguries, or diuination by birds, by sacrifices and enchantments, they were accounted to doe good or harme to mankind. They were most expert in their sacred Rites, in the knowledge whereof they were brought vp from their child-hood; and continued in that course of learning all their liues, the child being instructed in his Fathers science. They professed the interpretation of dreames, and prodigious accidents in Nature. Their opinions were, That the world is eternall, without beginning and end: the order and furniture of all was done by diuine prouidence: all heauenly things were perfected, not by chance, of their owne accord, but by the determinate and firme decree of the gods. By long obseruation, searching the course and nature of the starres, they foretold things to come. But the greatest power they attributed to the fiue Planets, and especially to Saturne. They call them Mercuries, because when others are fixed, these haue their proper motion and shew future things, as the Interpreters of the gods, by their rising, setting and colour. Vnder their course they giue the title of gods [b] to thirty other starres, the one halfe, aboue; the other, vnder the earth, beholding all accidents. And in tenne dayes one of the higher is sent to the lower, as an Angell, or Messenger of the Starres, and one from them to the higher: And this course they take eternally.

They hold twelue principall gods, each of which hath his peculiar moneth, and his signe in the Zodiake; by which the Sunne, and Moone, and fiue Planets haue their motion. These Planets they esteeme to conferre much good or euill in the generation of men, and by their nature and aspect, things to come may be foreknown. Many things they foretold to Alexander, Nicanor, Antigonus, Seleucus, and to priuate men, beyond the reach of men. They number foure and twenty conſtellations without the Zodiake, twelue towards the North, and as many towards the South. Theſe Northernly are ſeene, which they attribute to the liuing: thoſe Southernly are hidden, and preſent (they thinke) to the dead, which they hold the Iudges of all. Concerning the ſite, motion, and Eclipſe of the Moone, they hold as the Greekes; but of the Sunnes Eclipſe they haue diuers opinions, and dares not vtter their opinion thereof, nor foretell the time. The earth they conceiued to bee hollow like a boate. R. Moſes Ben Maimon out of a booke intituled de Agricultura Ægyptiorum, attributeth like things vnto them: that they beleeued the Starres were gods, and that the Sunne was the chiefe God, and next to him the Moone: that the Sunne ruleth the ſuperiour and inferiour world. And concerning Abraham, that he was borne in a land which worſhipped the fire, which when he reproued, and his Countrimen obiected the operations of the Sunne, hee anſwered that the Sun was as the Axe in the hand of the Carpenter. But at laſt the King caſt Abraham into priſon, and when as there hee ſtill continued the ſame diſputes and opinions, the King fearing hurt to his people, baniſhed him into the vtmoſt bounds of Chanaan, hauing firſt ſpoyled him of all his good. This contradicteth the Hiſtorie of Moſes, and of the old and new Teſtament, which commend Abrahams faith, in voluntary forſaking of his country at the commaund of GOD, and not by compulſion of man, although it reacheth not to the former [c] abſurbitie, which aſcribeth this to the time of Nimrod. And whether Abraham was an Idolater before that his calling, is handled [d] elſe where. But to returne to our Rabbine (highly [e] admired by a moſt admired Author) he ſaith, that hence Abraham grew renowmed through the the World, all Nations honoring his memory, except ſome Heathens, as the Parthians on the left hand, and Indians on the right, which were remainders of the Chaldæans, and called Zabij. Theſe Zabij, Scaliger alſo ſayth were Chaldæans, ſo called a vento Apeliote, as one might ſay, Eaſtern-men, or Eaſterlings: and addeth, that the Booke ſo often cited by [f] Rambam, concerning their Religion, Rites, and Cuſtomes, is yet extant in the hands of the Arabian Muhamedans. Out of this booke our Rabbie reciteth their opinions: that Adam was borne of man and woman, as other men; and that hee was a Prophet of the Moone, and by preaching perſwaded men to worſhip the Moone, and that hee compoſed bookes of husbandry: that Noe alſo was a husband-man, and beleeued not in Idols. For which the Zabij put him in priſon, and becauſe he worſhipped the Creator. Seth alſo contradicted Adam in his Lunarie worſhip. They tell alſo that Adam went out [g] of the Land of promiſe, which is towards India, and entred into Babylon, whither hee carried with him a tree ſtill growing with branches and leaues, and a tree of ſtones, and leaues of a tree which would not burne, vnder the ſhadow of which tree he ſaid ten thouſand men might be couered, the height whereof was as the ſtature of a man. Adam alſo had affirmed in his booke of a tree in India, the boughes whereof being caſt on the ground, would ſtir like Serpents; and of another, which had a root ſhaped like a man, endued with a kind of ſounding voyce differing from ſpeech; and of a certaine hearbe which being folded vp in a mans clothes, would make him walke inuiſible, and the ſmoke of the ſame, being fired, would cauſe thunders: another tree they worſhipped which abode in Niniuie twelue yeeres, and contended with the Mandrake for vſurping her roome, whereby it came to paſſe that the Prieſt or Prophet, which had vſed to propheſie, with the ſpirit of that tree, ceaſed a long time from propheſying, and at laſt the tree ſpake to him, and bade him write the ſute betweene her and the Mandrake, whether of them were the more honourable. Theſe fooleries, ſaith he, they attributed to Adam, that ſo they might proue the eternitie of the world, and Deitie of the Stars. Theſe Zabij made them for this cauſe Images of gold to the Sunne, of ſiluer to the Moone, and built them Temples, ſaying, that the power of the Planets was infuſed into thoſe Images, whence they ſpake vnto men and taught things profitable. The ſame they affirmed of thoſe trees which they apropriated to each of them with peculiar worſhips, rites, and hallowings, whereby that tree receiued a power to ſpeake with men in their ſleepes. From hence ſprang magicall diuinations, auguries, necromancie, and the like. They offered to their chiefe god a Beetle, and ſeuen Mice, and ſeuen Fowles.

g Theſe fables were ſome rubbiſh of Paradiſe, the trees and Serpent therein, &c. In his Epiſtle to the Marſilian Iewes, he writeth of Bookes which mention Iambaſor, Tzareth, Roani, and ſay they were before Adam, and that Sombaſcher was Adams maſter: and of the Indians, which ſay they haue Cities 100000. yeeres old, &c.

The greateſt of their bookes is that of the Ægyptian ſeruice, tranſlated into Arabike by a Moore called Enennaxia, which containeth in it many ridiculous things; and yet theſe were the famous wiſe-men of Babylon in thoſe daies. In the ſaid booke is reported of a certaine Idolatrous Prophet named Tamut, who preaching to a certaine King this worſhip of the ſeuen Planets, and twelue Signes, was by him done to a grieuous death. And in the night of his death, all the Images from the ends of the world came and aſſembled together at the great golden Image in the Temple at Babylon, which was ſacred to the Sunne, and hanged betweene the heauen and the earth, which then proſtrated it ſelfe in the midſt of the Temple with all the Images round about, ſhewing to them, all which had befallen Tamut. All the Images therefore wept all night, and in the morning fled away each to his owne Temple.

And

And hence grew that custome yearely in the beginning of the moneth Tamut, to renew that mourning for Tamut. Other bookes of theirs are mentioned by him, one called Deizamechameche, a booke of Images, a booke of Candles, of the degrees of Heauen, and others falsly ascribed to Aristotle, and one to Alformor, and one to Isaac, and one, of their Feasts, Offrings, Prayers, and other things pertaining to their Law, and some written against their opinions, all done into Arabike. In these are set downe the Rites of their Temples and Images of stone or mettall, and applying of Spirits to them, and their Sacrifices, and kinds of meates. They name their holy places sumptuously built, the Temples of Intelligible formes; and set Images on high mountaines, and honour trees, and attribute the increase of men and fruites to the Starres. Their Priests preached that the Earth could not bee Tilled, according to the will of the gods, except they serued the Sunne and Starres, which being offended, would diminish their fruites, and make their Countries desolate. They haue written also in the former bookes, that the Planet Iupiter is angrie with the Deserts and drie places, whence it commeth that they want water and trees, and that Deuils haunt them. They honoured Husband-men, and fulfilling the will of the Starres, in tilling the ground: they honoured Kine and Oxen for their labours therein, saying that they ought not to be slaine. In their festiuals they vsed Songs, and all Musicall instruments, affirming that their Idols were pleased with these things, promising to the doers long life, health, plentie of fruits, raines, trees, freedome from losses, and the like. Hence it is, saith R. Moses, that the Law of Moses forbiddeth these rites, and threatneth the contrarie plagues to such as shall obserue them. Tehy had certaine hallowed beasts in their Temples wherein their Images were, before which they bowed themselues and burned incense. These opinions of the Zabij, were holden also by the Aramites, Chanaanites, and Ægyptians.

R. Mos. l. 3. 31 & 33.

Cap. 38.

They had their magicall obseruations in gathering certaine hearbs, or in the vse of certaine metals, or liuing creatures, and that in a set certaine time, with their set rites, as of leaping, clapping the hands, hopping, crying, laughing, &c. in the most of which women were actors; as when they would haue raine, ten Virgins clothed in hallowed garments of red colour, danced a procession, turning about their faces and shoulders, and stretching their fingers towards the Sunne: and to preuent harme by haile, foure Women lay on their backes naked, lifting vp their feete, speaking certaine words. And all Magicall practices, they made to depend of the Starres, saying, that such a Starre was pleased with such an incense, such a Plant, such a metall, such words, or workes, and thereby would be as it were hired to such or such effects, as to driue away Serpents, and Scorpions, to slay wormes in nuts, to make the leaues fall, and the like. Their Priests vsed shauings of the head and beard, and linsey wolsey garments, and made a signe in their hand with some kind of metals. The Booke of Centir prescribeth a woman to stand armed before the starre of Mars, and a man clothed in womans attire painted, before the starre of Venus to prouoke lust. The worshippers of the fire made men beleeue that they which would not cause their children to passe through the fire, should lose them, and easily perswaded them thereunto as a thing easie, saith the Rabine, for they did not burne them (although herein both diuine and humane testimonies make me beleeue the contrarie.) From hence, saith hee, descended the customes, obserued by women, in holding and mouing their children ouer the fire or smoke.

Moloch and Saturnes sacrifices of humane bodies. See Cap. 18.

They had their diuersities of Processions; and when they hallowed a tree to an Image, one part of the fruit thereof was offered, and the other eaten in the house of the Idoll: the like they did with the first fruits of euery tree; making men beleeue that otherwise the tree would become vnprofitable. They had their magicall enchantments in the planting or grafting of trees, with obseruations of the starres, incenses, words: but this most Diabolicall, that in the houre when one kinde was to be ingrafted into another, the science which was to bee ingrafted, should bee holden in the hand of some beautifull woman, and that some man should then carnally, but vnnaturally, haue knowledge of her, the woman in that instant putting the science into the tree. They vsed also to make circles when they planted or sowed, and went about the same, some fiue times, because of the fiue planets, some seuen, in regard of the Sunne and Moone, added to that number. For this cause the Iew not vnprobably thinketh that mixtures in garments, seedes, and the like, were forbidden by the Law of Moses, with other rites any way resembling these.

Aversa Veneris.

They further worshipped Deuils, beleeuing that they appeared to men in the formes of Goates, and therefore called their Deuils Kids, and held it vnlawfull to sheare or to eate their kids: but especially they abhorred the killing of Kine, but performed much worship to them, as they also doe in India to this day. They sacrificed Lyons, Beares, and wilde Beasts, as is mentioned in the Booke Zeuzit. They held bloud in much abomination, accounting it a great pollution, and yet did eat it, because (they said) it was the food of Deuils, and they which did eat it, should haue communion with them: and that they would come to such and reueale vnto them things to come. Some, whose nicer stomackes could not indure to eate it, receiued the same, when they killed a beast, [h] in a Vessell or in a ditch, and did eate the flesh of that Sacrifice, being placed about that bloud, thinking that the Deuils did eate the bloud, and that thus by this as it were eating at the same table, was entertained betwixt them and the Deulls mutuall familiaritie and societie. They beleeued also that in their sleepes, the Deuils came and reuealed secrets vnto them. Concerning a menstruous woman their custome was, that shee should sit alone in a house, and that the places where shee set her feet should be burned; whosoeuer talked with her was vncleane, yea if he but stood in the wind of her, the wind from her did pollute him. Likewise these Zabians thought, whatsoeuer went from their bodies was vncleane, as nailes, haire, bloud; and therefore Barbers and Surgeons were holden polluted: and after cutting off their haire, vsed much washing for expiation. But it needeth some expiation that I insist so long in these narrations, and haue need of some Barber or Surgeon to ease me of superfluities, if that can be superfluous which fitteth so to our proiect, and in the iudgement of the learnedst of the Iewish Rabbines in many ages, seemed the cause of so many prohibitions in Moses his Law, lest they should conforme, themselues in religious obseruances to these superstitious Zabians.

h Idem citat P. Ric. in explic. præcept. neg. 220. ex R. Mos. Gerundens.

But let vs now returne to Diodorus, who affirmeth that the Chaldæans numbred fortie three thousand yeeres, vntill the comming of Alexander, since first they had begunne their obseruations of the Starres. These yeeres Xenophon de æquinoctis interpreteth of moneths; for so (sayth he) the Chaldæans reckoned their antiquities; in other things they kept their computation according to the Sunne. But of their fabulous antiquities wee haue heard before: where wee haue also touched, that one beginning of Idolatrie did arise of this curious and superstitious Starre-gazing, especially in the Countries of Ægypt, where not at all vsually; and in Chaldæa, where diuers moneths [i] together, they haue neither raines nor cloudes.

Strabo diuideth the Chaldæans into sects, Orcheni, Borsippeni, and others, diuersly opinionate of the same things. Borsippa was a Citie sacred to Diana and Apollo. Plinie [k] addeth the Hippareni. Daniel [l] reckoneth vp foure kind of Wise-men among the Chaldæans: the first are called Chartummim, which were Enchanters; Ashaphim, Astrologers; Mecashpim, Sorcerers or Iuglers, deluders of sense; and Chasdim, Chaldæans, which, howsoeuer it were a generall name of that Nation, yet was it appropriated vnto a certaine sect and profession of learning among them which seemed to excell the rest, and were their Priests, Philosophers, and Mathematicians, as you haue heard. In the seuen and twentieth verse of the same chapter are mentioned also Cachimim, Wisards, which by coniectures and casting of lots did ghesse of things to come: and Gazrin, of the word gazar, to cut; these opened, and diuined by the entrals of sacrifices. The vanitie of their diuinations appeareth in that Prophet, howsoeuer they haue beene renowned therefore among the Heathens: as in the foretelling of Alexanders death, and before that, when * Darius had changed his Scaberd into the Greeke fashion, the ruine of that Empire by the Greeks. When Faustina [m] the Empresse, wife to M. Antonius, had fallen in loue with a Fencer or sword-player, and being sicke confessed the same to her husband, the Chaldæans were sent for, who gaue counsell to kill the Fencer, and that shee should wash her selfe in his bloud, and then accompanie with her Husband: which was done and Commodus begotten, who in qualities resembled that Fencer vpon this occasion (as the people reported) though others esteemed him a Bastard. Plutarch [n] sheweth how vainely the Romans depended on their predictions. Thus Iuvenal reproues them:

Many Edicts were after made against them. Otho Heurnius [o] laboureth to bring the Grecian Philosophie from the Chaldæans: yea Aristotle himselfe, as hee had receiued the Persian and Indian Philosophie by tradition of Pythagoras and Democritus, and the Ægyptian and Iewish learning from Plato, so was hee instructed (sayth hee) in the Babylonian sciences by Callisthenes. attained thereunto by their owne induſtrie, without borrowing of the Chaldæans. Peucer deemeth [r] them too Philoſophicall, the peruerters of Religion into Theoricall ſpeculations of Nature, and confuteth their fiue kinds of prognoſticating. But their eſtimation could not haue beene ſuch in Daniels time, if they had not beene very learned: and somewhat was added, as wee may well coniecture, to their learning by him, who by Nabuchodonoſor was [f] ſet ouer them. For beſides the gifts wherewith hee was enriched, and the ciuill authoritie wherewith he was dignified, he was exalted alſo to this Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction ouer the Schooles of the Wiſe-men, (as after Iunius and Oſiander, *D. In which his Superintendentſhip, ſayth our Author [u], ſuch laudable ſciences as might ſafely be learned, he promoted and furthered; ſuch corruption and ſuperſtitions as were practiſed among them, he corrected and reformed: but ſuch abuſes as could not be taken away, hee forbare, and kept himſelfe free from them. And here haue we a teſtimonie of their Hierarchie, which Nature taught theſe and all people, contrarie to the Noueltie of Paritie. The Chaldæan opinion concerning iudiciall Aſtrologie, was not receiued of all the Chaldæans, as Strabo reporteth. And Bardeſanes Syrus, the beſt learned of the Chaldæans (it is Euſebius [b] teſtimonie) doth at large confute that opinion (which yet many Wiſards, carkaſſes of Chriſtians ſtill follow.) He affirmeth that in thoſe things which a man hath common with a beaſt, eating, ſleepe, nouriſhment, age, &c. a man is ordered by Nature, as the beaſts are. But man hauing alſo a reaſonable ſoule, and freedome of will, is not ſubiect to that naturall ſeruitude; which at large hee prooueth by the diuers cuſtomes of men, both in diuers, and in the ſame countries, in diet, gouernment, and Religion; as the Reader, willing to reade ſo worthie a diſcourſe, may find related at large in Euſebius.

Alexander Polyhiſt. [c] out of Eupolemus, telleth that in the tenth generation after the floud, in Camyrine a Citie of Babylonia, which other call Vr, Abram was borne, which excelled all in knowledge, and was the inuentor of Aſtrologie among the Chaldæans. Hee by diuine precept went into Phœnicia, and taught the Phœnicians the courſe of the Sunne and Moone: and when the Armenians, warring vpon the Phœnicians, had taken his brothers ſonne priſoner, hee by a band of his ſeruants recouered him, and freely diſmiſſed the captiues, which he had taken. Hee after liued with the Prieſts at Heliopolis in Egypt, and taught them Aſtrologie; confeſſing that he had receiued that Art by ſucceſſion from Enoch. Hee added that Belus raigned the ſecond in Babylon, and was called Saturne, the father of a ſecond Belus, and Canaan; which Canaan was the father of the Phœnicians and the Æthiopians, brother of Mizraim the Author of the Egyptians: with many other things not much differing from the Diuine Hiſtorie.

Aſtronomie in all likelihood was knowne to Abraham, to whom the heauenly ſtarres might be Remembrancers of that promiſe, ſo ſhall thy ſeed bee: his countrie alſo, where it was practiſed, might therein further him, and the excellencie of the ſcience in it ſelfe. But this ſtar-gazing deſtinie, Iudiciall, Coniecturall, Genethliacall Aſtrologie, Reaſon and experience, GOD and Man haue condemned. Vr ſignifieth light, which agreeth to the Fire, the Chaldæans deitie, [d] which the Perſians and Chaldæans fained to haue receiued from heauen, and kept euer burning; as the Veſtals in Rome. They held Water and Fire to be the beginning of all things. They made a chalenge of their fiery god [e], to contend with any other gods of the godleſſe Heathen: an Egyptian encountred and ouercame them thus: he cauſed his Canopus to be made full of holes ſtopped with waxe, and hollow in the middle, which hee filled with water: and the Chaldæans putting their fire vnder, the waxe melting, opened a quiuer of watrie arrowes, that cooled the heat of their deuouring god, and and deuoured him. They had yet a more fooliſh god, euen an [f] Onyon which they worſhipped. They obſerued diuers wicked Sciences of diuining, by Fire, Aire, Water, Earth, conſulting with the dead, and with wicked ſpirits, —— Chaldæa vocatis Imperat arte dijs, ſayth Claudian.

The Chaldæans inuocate their Belus, to doe miracles alſo, ſayth hee, inuocating a dumbe Idoll to giue ſpeech vnto another, which himſelfe wanteth. But aboue all, one Beaſtly rite was in vſe among them. The women, ſayth hee, [i] ſit in the wayes girded with [k] cords of ruſhes, and burne ſtraw: and if one of them be drawne away, and lie with any ſuch as come by, ſhee caſteth her neighbour in the teeth, becauſe ſhee was not ſo worthily reputed, nor her cord broken. Thus was their glorie their ſhame. [l] Herodotus will yeeld vs a Commentarie on this place. The Babylonians haue an abominable law (ſayth he) that all their women once in their life doe ſit at the Temple of Venus to haue familiaritie with ſtrangers: the richer ſort comming in chariots, richly furniſhed and attended to this vngodly purpoſe. Their manner of ſitting is, crowned on their Temples with garlands, their retiring places diſtinguiſhed with cords, by which the ſtranger may haue acceſſe to which of them hee liketh beſt. And thus doe theſe Votaries of Venus ſit, holding it religion to bee irreligious, none of them euer returning home, till ſome gueſt haue caſt money into her lap, whom it is not lawfull for her to refuſe, but to accept of him and his price, whatſoeuer he be, and follow him aſide from the Temple, where hee defileth her. At the giuing of the money hee vſeth theſe words, Tanti tibi deam Mylittam imploro, that is, at this price, or for ſo much, I implore vnto thee the goddeſſe Mylitta (ſo the Aſſyrians call Venus [m]) and this money is conſecrated to a ſacred vſe. After this, with the goddeſſe good leaue, ſhee may returne home, although for no great price againe (ſaith our Author) to be hired. By this meanes the faireſt are quickly diſpatched, the reſt endure a reſtleſſe and irkeſome penance, ſometime a yeere, two, or three, before they can be diſcharged of their honeſtie and the law together, and hence might ariſe that former ambitious vpbraiding in Baruch.

Among their many Idols, [n] Bel bare the bell, not here alone, but in all the countries of Aſſyria, and adioyning thereto; as appeareth in the Hiſtorie of the Bible: where Bel or Baal is ſo often mentioned, as the Idoll of ſo many Nations and the ſinne of the apoſtaticall Synagogue. They [o] built vnto him high places: or elſe in ſtead thereof vſed the roofes of their houſes to his worſhip: they built him houſes, they made him Images, erected Altars, planted Groues, bended to him the knee, and kiſſed him in token of ſubiection, vſed perfume and incenſe, obſerued to him holy dayes, cut and lanced themſelues in his ſeruice, with other extaticall furies, and religious frenſies, with ornaments of gold and iewels, inuocations and immolations, yea of their owne children; he had alſo his peculiar prophets and prieſts. Theſe and ſuch like doth the Scripture mention of this Babylonian Idoll, whoſe contagion infected the Eaſt with a Catholike Idolatrie that could plead Antiquitie, Vniuerſalitie, and Conſent, by euidence of Scripture-hiſtorie (which later Babylon cannot doe) and yet was but Catholike and generall errour.

Bel was, ſayth Plinie [p], Inuentor ſideralis ſcientiæ, the inuentor of Aſtrologie, which (Heurnius addeth) hee defiled with impure Magicke, as did his daughter Semiramis, who warred vpon Zoroaſter, in enuie of his greater learning: Bels magicke appeared in his ſepulchre, which Xerxes opening, found a veſſell of glaſſe, and therein a carkaſſe ſwimming in oyle, which reached not to the brim by a hand-breadth. In a little pillar iuſt by was engrauen, that he ſhould dearely repent it, which opening the ſepulchre, did not fill vp the veſſell: this Xerxes aſſayed to doe in vaine, and therefore departed very heauie, finding in his Grecian Expedition the truth of Bels prophecie. The like is ſaid to happen, when Darius in hope of treaſure [q] opened the ſepulchre of Semiramis, hee found a chiſt, which being opened, a venimous peſtilence iſſued, that conſumed the third part of men.

the name Bel or Baal to be a generall name, agreeing to all the gods of the Gentiles, according to the signification of the word, to wit, a Lord. [t] It was a name generall to their Idols, when it was put alone, but particular with some addition, as Bel-zebub, Baal-zephon. There were so many Baals in Syria, sayth [u] Drusius, as there were Regions, and almost as many as Cities. The Moabites had their Chamos, the Ammonites Moloch, the Sydonians Astarte, in Gaza Maruan, in Hamath Asima, &c. all called Baal in like sort as the Europæans varied the names of Iupiter: as Iupiter Capitolinus, Iupiter Ammon, Stygius, Olympius, and the rest, many gods and many lords, sayth Saint Paul [x], yet in the Easterne Dialect wee may reade many Baalim, and in the Westerne many Ioues, the Greeke Ιαὼ, Ιαὺ πατὴρ, Ιωὺ, and the Latine Iouis the ancient nominatiue, Iouis pater, Iouispiter, and by contraction Iupiter; (not as Tully, Lactantius and others, quasi iuuans pater) being all deriued, that wee may note this by the way, of that ineffable name which wee pronounce Iehoua. And had they not intended the true God, when they vsed Baal or Ioue absolutely without addition, neither [y] had the Lord prohibited thou shalt call mee no more Baali, that is, my Lord; nor Paul applied that speech of Aratus, Τοῦ γὰρ καὶ γένος ἐσμὲν. Wee are his generation, hauing foure verses before begunne his booke with ἐκ Διὸς ἀρχώμεθα, vnto the true God. Seruius is [z] Author, that Belus the father of Dido descended of that ancient BELVS the first King of the Assyrians, which people worshipped Saturne and Iuno, which were after worshipped in Africa, whereupon the Punikes called GOD, Bal, (from whence came those names, Hannibal, Adherbal, and such like) whom the Assyrians in some respect call Bel, and Saturne, and the Sunne. This opinion that in Bel they worshipped the Sunne, is followed by Tremellius and Iunius in their notes on Esaias, Chap. 46. 1. because the Assyrians, Persians, and Babylonians, accounted the Sunne the greatest God, and worshipped the Fire as a particle thereof: To him the Iewes, with this borrowed forreine Idolatrie, dedicated Horses and Chariots, which [a] Iosias abolished, together with the Altars on the roofe of Ahas his house, & the high places, where their god might see their deuotions. Hierom, on that place of Esay sayth, that Bel was Saturn, which Suidas confirmeth. Augustine [b] relateth the vsuall opinion (on those words, Iud. 2. They serued Baal and Astaroth) that Baal in those parts was the name of Iupiter, and Astarte of Iuno, and produceth the Punicke language, in which Baalsamen signifieth the Lord of Heauen; and for Astaroth (which he readeth Astartibus) he sayth it is in the plurall number, in regard of the multitude of Iunoes Images, each bearing the name of Iuno. This also is exemplified in the blessed Virgin by Ribera, sometime called our Ladie of Loretto, sometime our Ladie of Monteferato, &c. according to the diuersitie of places, wherein they worship, not Marie the Virgin, but their owne Idols; the daughters of their whorish mother Babylon. For the Tyrians, Sydonians, Philistims, and other Syrian, and Assyrian Nations, the Scripture brandeth them with this Bel or Baal-Idolatrie: in hatred of which name, the Iewes called the Prince of Deuils, as the Acaronites did their principall Idols, by the name of Beelzebub.

Thus the Greekes and Latines hath confounded the Assyrian and Tyrian Bel, which by Iosephus [c] Scaliger, (who not vnworthily is called [d] the Dictator of knowledge, and great Prince of learnings state) are distinguished and made two: the one (sayth he) is written בל and the later בעל and reproued Hierome for making Belus, the father of Ninus, and the Virgilian Belus to be one. But in his notes on the fragments of Berosus and other ancient Authors, he sayth, the Tyrians and Sydonians called him בעל which the Greekes made Belus: and so Mr Selden also is of opinion, that these names בל and בעל differ onely according to the proprietie of the language, and not indeed: for the Grammarians obserue, that the Chaldee words often lose that middle letter. Elias in his Thesbi obserueth, that Baal signifieth the act of generation, which may well agree with those beastly Baal-rites before mentioned. Baal is read in the fœminine gender Tob. 1. 5. Rom. 11. 4. In Photius is [e] mentioned, that the Phœnicians and Syrians called Saturne ΗΛ, and ΒΗΛ, EL, and Bel, and Bolathes. Lilius Giraldus [f] out of Seruius affirmeth that ΗΛ, in the Assyrian language signifieth the Sunne, from whence the Greeke ἥλιος is deriued: some attribute this to the Phœnician tongue, in which Hal signifieth GOD. The Assyrians named Saturne and the Sunne, Hel. The Indians called that Hercules, which Tully de Nat. Deor. numbreth the first Belus. But we find no end of these Labyrinths.

D. Willet in his Comment vpon [g] Daniel hath these words: The Chaldeans had fiue Idols, three gods and two goddesses. Their first god was Bel, a name contracted of Behel, which commeth of Bahal, which signifieth a Lord: to whom was built that Temple before mentioned. The second was the Sunne, which they called Rarb, that is, a King; because he is chiefe among the Planets: and the Persians call him Mithra, as Iustinus Martyr sayth, Dialog. in Triphon. The Priests of this Idoll were called Racsaphantæ, Obseruers of the Sunne. Their third god was Nego, the Fire; so called of the brightnesse: this was carried about among among them: the Priests were called Ortophantæ. Their first goddesse was Shacha, which was the Earth, worshipped also of the Romans, vnder the name of Tellus and Opis: of the Syrians called Dorcetha. In the honour of this goddesse, they vsed to keepe a feast fiue dayes together in Babylon; during which time, the Masters were vnder the dominion of their seruants: one of which was vsually set ouer the rest, and royally clothed, and was called Sogan, that is, great Prince (our Lords of Mis-rule seeme to deriue their pedigree from hence.) This festiuall time was called Shache, whereof Babylon was called Sheshach, of keeping this Feast, *Ierem.*25.27. and 51.41. Their other goddesse was Mulitta, which was Venus, whose Priests were called Natitæ, or Natophantæ. But the chiefest of their Idols was Bel. Hee also interpreteth [h] those words, *Dan.*1.4. Whom they might teach the learning and tongue of the Chaldæans, of Schooles wherein youth was brought vp in good letters, to bee after employed in the State. So among the Egyptians they had the like vse, where Moses was taught the learning of the Egyptians. Among the Israelites eight and fortie Cities were appointed for the Leuites, which were as the common Schooles and Vniuersities for the whole Kingdome; Samuel and Elizeus had their Schooles and Colledges of Prophets; yea, the rude Indians had their Gymnosophistes; and the Romans had their Colledges of Augures. This Bel or Baal Idolatrie passed out of Asia into Europe, euen as farre as these parts of Britaine. For the Celtæ and Britanni worshipped Abellio, Belenus, or Belinus, as appeareth by inscriptions in Lipsius and Scaliger; and our famous Antiquarie Mr Camden mentioneth an Altar in Cumberland, inscribed Deo sancto Belatucadro. And on the Coynes of Cunobelinus, the Brittish King, was stamped Apollo, or Belenus (which in heathen mysteries are the same with the Sunne) playing on a Harpe: and the name Cunobelinus makes euidently to our purpose. Heliogabalus is another Syrian idolatrous title for the Sunne, as appeareth by an inscription Soli Alagabalo; for so also is that name written. Neither is Gabalus from any other deriuation, the name of the Romane Emperour, Priest of that god, whose name he vsurped, deriued from the Hebrew Ahgol-Baal, that is, the Round or Circular Lord, either in respect of the Sunnes Circular bodie and iourney, or of that round stone which the Syrians conceited (as the Troians of their Palladium, and the Ephesians of their Diana, to haue diuinely descended.) Such stones (as Mr Selden in relation of those things obserueth) were the Bætelia, or Betuli, of the Ancients dedicated to diuers deities, somewhat of fashion like fire, round and sharpe vpwards, the beginning of which Betuli, some deriue from Iacobs stone at Bethel.

In the seuenteenth Chapter of the second Booke of Kings, is mentioned Succoth Benoth an Idoll of the Babylonians. Beda interpreteth it the Tabernacles of Benoth, and so the word Succoth vsed, Amos 5.25. is by Saint Stephen, Act. 7.43. interpreted. And so doth the [i] Glosse on that part of the Kings interprete; where Lyra, [k] according to the signification of the words (a Tabernacle of wings) relateth out of Rab. Sal. that this Idoll was made like to a Hen brooding her chickens: which Idols the Babylonians framed in worship of that constellation, called by the vulgar, the Hen and chickens, and of the learned Pleiades; as others did to the Sunne, others to the Moone. Some [l] applie it to the mysterie of their Idoll, (which Christ the Trueth, truly sayth of himselfe) protecting his worshippers, as a Hen her chickens. My learned friend, Mr Selden hath gathered by the signification of Succoth Benoth (the Tabernacles of the daughters) that thereby is meant the Temple of Venus, Mylitta or Vrania, where the daughters of the Babylonians sate, as before is said, to performe their filthie deuotions; yea, by an easie deduction hee deriueth the name of Venus from this Benoth: B and u, easily exchanged, the moderne Iewes pronounce ס like o Venos; Suidas also calls her Binos. And in Africa was a Citie called Sicca Venerea, a name transported by the Punikes from this Siccuth, or Succoth Benoth, where was a Temple of like nature, in which the women purchased their marriage-money by prostituting their bodies. It seemeth the Idolatrous Priests carried the Tabernacle of their Idoll on their shoulder, in apish imitation of the true Priests and Leuites: for so Amos sayth, [m] Yee carried Succoth, or Sicchuth your King, Chiun your Images, which Drusius [n] interpreteth Moloch and Hercules.

In the fourteenth Chapter of Daniel (as the Latines read) is a large historie both of Bel, a dead statue, and of a liuing Dragon which the Babylonians worshipped. The Priests of Bel were seuentie, besides their wiues and children, whose fraud and cozenage Daniel detected, making it manifest by their foot-steps in the ashes, which hee had strewed in the Temple, that they were the deuourers of that huge portion of fortie sheepe, twelue measures of meale, and sixe great pots of wine, daily consecrated for Bels breake-fast. He after slew the Dragon also; for which the Babylonians forced the King to lodge him sixe dayes among the Lions. For the present Saracenicall Religion, now obserued in these parts, our third booke shall largely relate thereof. Concerning other Babylonian customes: Herodotus. l. 2. telleth of three families in Babylon which liued on fish. It may bee the Carthusians of our Westerne Babylon are of their of-spring: for whose sparing, their fellowes may eate the more flesh, with which those of old, and these later, may not (forsooth) pollute themselues. t Curtius telleth generally, that for fleshly vices, the Babylonians were most corrupt. They prostituted their wiues and daughters to their guests for rewards. They were addicted to excessiue banquetting, and drunkennesse. In the beginning of their feasts, their women were modestly attired; by degrees they stripped themselues of their clothes, beginning with the vppermost, till nothing was left to couer their shame, or forbid their shamelesnesse. And not their Curtizans alone, but their Matrons, (yea, in token of ciuility) did thus prostitute themselues to those flames of lusts which haue come from hell, and carrie thither. Heere was Alexander, manly and victorious armie made effeminate, vnfit after to haue encountred with a strong enemy. u Some ascribe the loose liues of the Babylonians, to a law of Xerxes, who to chastise them for a rebellion, enacted that they should no longer weare armes, but addict themselues to Musicke, riot, and such like.

The Chaldean, and Assyrian Chronicle, or Computation of Times, with their manifold alterations of Religions, and Gouernment in those parts, vntill our time.

WE haue before a shewed the prodigious Chronologie of the Chaldæans, reckoning the raignes of their Kings before the floud, 432000. yeeres. They tell also after the floud of diuers Dynasties or gouernements in this Country of Babylon.

a Cap. 10.

First, b the c Chaldæans, Euechoos raigned 6. yeeres, Chomusbolos 7. Poros 35. Nechubes 43. Abios 48. Oniballos 40. Zinziros 45.

The space of these two Dynasties is reckoned foure hundred and fortie yeares. Thus Scaliger relateth: but in my mind, as the former was beyond all possibility of truth (which they tell of before the floud) so this hath no great likelyhood, at least for so long space before Belus, with whom the most histories beginne their relations, and Scaliger his e third Dynastie, of one and fortie Kings in this order.

f The Median Dynastie.

The fourth Dynastie was [f] of the Medes, begun by Arbaces, who depriued Sardanapalus; he raigned 28 yeeres, his sonne Mandauces 50. Sosarmus 30. Artycas 50. (In the 19. yeere of this King Nabonassar, the Babylonian rebelled, and began a new Dynastie in Babylonia. And in the 43. yeere of his raigne Salmanassar captiued the ten Tribes) Arbianes or Cardiceas 22. Arsæos or Deioces 40. Artynes called also Phraortes 22. Astibaras or Cyaxares 40. Apandas alias Astiages 40. In all 322. yeeres.

g The Persian Dynastie.

The fifth [g] Dynastie was of the Persians, begun by Cyrus, which ouerthrew Astyages, and raigned 30. yeeres; His sonne Cambyses 8. the Magi 7. moneths, Darius sonne of Hystaspes 36. yeeres, Xerxes 20. Artabanus 7. moneths, Artaxerxes Longimanus 40. Xerxes 2. moneths, Sogdianus 7. moneths, Darius Nothus 19. yeeres, Artaxerxes Mnemon 40. yeeres, Artaxerxes Ochus 26. Arses 4. Darius 6. In all, 231. yeeres.

h The Macedonian Dynastie.

The sixth [h] Dynastie was of the Macedonians, the first of which was Alexander, who after the conqueſt of Darius raigned 6. yeeres, Antigonus 12. Seleucus Nicator 32. Antigonus Soter 19. Antigonus Theos 15. (In the 12. yeere of his raigne, Arsaces the Persian rebelled) Seleucus Callinicus 20. Seleucus Ceraunus 3. Antiochus Magnus 36. Seleucus Philopater 12. Antiochus Epiphanes 11. Antiochus Eupator 2. Demetrius Soter 12. Alexander Bala 10. Demetrius Nicanor 3. Antiochus Sidetes 9. Demetrius D.F. 4. Antiochus Gripus 12. Antiochus Cyzicenus 18. Philippus 2. In all 237. And from the beginning of the first Dynastie 2633. These I haue heere inserted out of Scaliger, rather to shew the continued succeſſion of the Easterne Empire, then with any intent to perswade, that all these were Kings, and ruled the Country of Babylonia. For after Arsaces rebelled, the Parthians dispoſſeſſed the Syrian Kings, of these parts, and before, the Babylonians often rebelled; as in the time of the Persians, when Zopyrus by a strange stratagem, recited by Iustin and others, restored them to Darius: but especially in the times of the Medes, whose Dynastie was much disquieted: sometime the Scythians (sayth [i] Orosius) and sometimes the Chaldæans, and sometimes the Medes preuayling. Sometimes also (as the Scripture witnesseth) the Assyrians renewed their ancient power. Yea in the time of the Assyrian Dynastie, the Chaldæans are said to warre (in the raigne of Panyas) against the Phœnicians, which argueth that they were then free.

i Oros. 1. 6. 19.

The Scripture and other Histories speake of Phul, Teglath-Phalasar, Iareb, Sargon, Salmanasar, Senacherib, Asar-haddon: which were great and mighty, not onely strong enough to defend themselues against the Medes, but to inuade forren Nations, yea did translate people from one Kingdome to another, and [k] seated the captiues of Israel in the Cities of the Medes, and sent Babylonian Colonies to Samaria; which they could not doe, if they had not commanded both Assyria, and Media, with Babylonia.

k 2. Reg. 17. 24.

Nabonassar rebelled, as is said, against Artycæ, and began the Chaldæan Dynastie, from whom, for this restitution of liberty, the Chaldæans began their Astronomicall computations: hee raigned 14. yeeres, Nassyus 2. Chinzerus and Porus 5. Dilulaus 5. Mardokempadus 12. [l] He sent Ambassadors to Hezekiah. Arkeanos 5. Interregnum 12. Belithus 3. Aporonadicus 6. Herigebalus 1. Nesnoemondacus 4. Interregnum 17. Iearaedin 13. Saosduchinus 9. Kiniladacus 14. Nabopollasarus 29. (In the seuenteenth yeere of his raigne, hee sent his sonne Nabuchodonosor in Syria with an Armie.) Nabuchodonosor 30. Euilmerodach 6. Neregasolarus 5. Nabonidus 17. This was a Mede by linage (not as some [m] say King of the Medes,) sonne of Xerxes a Mede, but borne at Babylon, and by conspiracie raised to the kingdome: not inuading Babylon with Cyrus, but raigning in Babylon, till Cyrus depriued him. Megasthenes cals him a Mede, and the Scripture Darius Medus. Cyrus came against him in the nineteenth yeere of his raigne, and eleuen yeeres before the seuenty of the Captiuity were ended; in which space Cyrus had enough to doe to besiege and conquer Babylon, and Borsippa where Darius was. From the beginning of Nabonassar to the end of Cyrus are 217. yeeres. From thence to the Asiatike Empire of the Macedonians 201. From thence to the rebellion of Arsaces the Parthian, of whom the Parthian Kings were called Arsacidæ, 79. And the Dynastie of the Parthians

The Saracens succeeded, whose names and times you may see in our • Saracenicall relation. After the Saracens, raigned the Tartars; and since, sometime one family, sometime another, among the Persians, till Solyman dispossessed the Sophian of the Babylonian dominion; vnder which Turkish seruitude it groneth till our daies.

I dare not take vpon me to be vmpire and decider of those many alterations among Chronologers: but haue simply followed Scaliger, whose very name is able to shield me from contempt, if not to yeeld mee commendation. Let others that haue more lust and leasure traverse these matters at their pleasure: my intent is, most of all, the Historie of Religions; and the successions and alterations of States, I haue lightly touched: but precisely to determine in what yeere of the world euery King beganne his raigne, and to dispute the same with all opponents, would bee somewhat tedious to the Reader: to me (perhaps in these varieties of opinions) impossible. Leauing therefore the more studious to the Chronologers, let vs take a little reuiew of some principall occurrents in the former Catalogue.

Africanus begins the Assyrian Monarchie at Belus, and not, as the most, with Ninus: That Belus some thinke to bee the same with Nimrod, whom Ninus, as wee said before, consecrated. Semiramis is [p] reported to bee the first that caused Eunuchs to bee made. Ninias which succeeded, left not like monuments of his great exploites, as his Predecessors before him. Buntingus thinkes him to bee that Amraphel King of Shinar, mentioned Genes. 14. and that Arioch King of Elasser was his sonne. Howeuer, it breedes much difficulty, to reconcile the ancient Historie of the Babylonian and Assyrian great and long continued Empire, with the Kingdomes and Kings in that Chapter by Moses mentioned. Eupolemus, as before is cited out of Eusebius, saith that those Kings were Armenians; Diodorus Tarsensis, as Pererius affirmeth, reckons them Persians; Iosephus, Assyrians. Pererius himselfe thinkes them vassals, and tributaries to the Assyrian: Genebrard suspects the Historie of the Assyrian greatnesse: and truely, not altogether vniustly: neyther doe wee reade in all the Historie of Moses and Iosua, of any Kings in those parts, for ought can be gathered, yeelding subiection to Babylon. And the Sodomite and his neighbours had beene the tributaries of Chedarlaomer King of Elam, and not of Amraphel King of Shinar; vnlesse we say, that violent things are not permanent, and the yoake imposed before by the Assyrians, was now in Ninias dayes reiected: Semiramis being weakened with her Indian expedition; and Ninias by killing her, giuing occasion or discontent to her followers, the men of warre, which might hereupon (contemning this effeminate King, who had suffered his mother to possesse the Scepter so long) fall to sharing for themselues, and erect petty Kingdomes. Arius (happily) restored the Empyre thus decayed, if it be true that Buntingus writeth, that he was a great Warriour, therefore called Arius and Mars, and, as the god of warre, inuocated by the Assyrians. When Teutamos raigned, [q] Diodor. lib. 3 testifieth that Priamus, then besieged by Agamemnon, as vassall and tributary to the Assyrians, sent to him for ayde, who sent to his succour Memnon, with twenty thousand souldiers.

q Diodor. Sic. lib. 3. cap. 7.

But to descend vnto times neerer both vs and the truth, and to view the ruine of that great estate: we reade in the same Author, and in [r] others, that Arbaces (whom Iustin calleth Arbactus; Orosius Arbastus) was by Sardanapalus made Captaine of the Armie, which was yeerely sent to Nina, or Niniue, where a conspiracy was contracted betweene him and Belesus a Chaldæan Priest, Captaine of the Babylonians, who by his Chaldæan skill in diuination, had foretold Arbaces this destined Empire, and was promised for his share the Babylonian principality. Thus the Medes, Babylonians, and Arabians, enterprising rebellion, assembled to the number of foure hundred thousand, whom Sardanapalus ouerthrew in battel twice; but being stil animated by [s] Belesus predictions, which (said he) the gods by the Stars fore-signified; and by corrupting of the Bactrian Armie, sent to succor the King & adioyning themselues to the enemy, they at the third battell ouerthrew the forces of Sardanapalus, led by Salamenus his wiues brother. The King fled into Niniue, trusting to a propheste, That the Citie should neuer bee taken, till the Riuer were enemie to it. After two yeeres siege, by extreme raines, the Riuer swelling, ouerflowed part of the Citie, and cast downe twenty furlongs

Whereupon despayring, (as seeming to see GOD and man against him) he which before had chambered himselfe with women, and accustomed himselfe to the distaffe, in a womans both heart and habite; now in a manly resolution (if it may not more fitly be called a Feminine Dissolution, which thus runneth from that danger which it should encounter) gathered his treasures together, and erecting a frame in his Palace, there burnt them, himselfe, his wiues and Eunuches together. The Ashes, vnder pretence of a Vow thereof made to Belus, Belesus obtained of Arbaces the new Conquerour and Monarch, to carry to Babylon. But the coozenage being knowne, and Belesus condemned for the treasures, which with the ashes hee had conueyed, Arbaces both gaue them, and forgaue him; adding the præfecture of the Babylonians, according to promise. [t] Some say that Belesus, whom they call Phul Beloch, shared the Empire with him, Arbaces raigning ouer the Medes and Persians, the other ouer Niniue, and Babylonia: following herein the forged Metasthenes, who (as Annius maketh him to say) out of the Susian Librarie penned his Historie, hauing before fabled a Catalogue out of Berosus of the ancient Kings, contrary to that which out of the fragments of the true Berosus before is deliuered.

The Babylonian Empire renewed by Nabonassar, continued till Cyrus, of which times we haue little record but in the Scripture, as neyther of those Assyrian Kings, which before had captiued Israel, and inuaded Iuda. Senacherib is famous, euen in the Ethnike history, although they had not the full truth. For thus Harodotus [z] telleth, that Senacherib King of the Arabians & Assyrians warred on Egypt, where Sethon (before Vulcans Priest) then raigned: who being forsaken of his Souldiers, betooke him to his deuotion, amiddest the which hee fell asleepe. And the god appearing, promised ayde, which hee performed, sending an Armie of Mice, into the Armie of Senacherib, which did eate his Souldiers quiuers, and the leathers of their shields, and armour, insomuch, that the very next day they all fled. In witnesse whereof, the Image of the King, made of stone, standeth in the Temple of Vulcan, holding a Mouse in his hand, vttering these words, Hee that looketh on mee, let him bee Religious. This Historie the Ægyptians, in vanity and ambition, had thus peruerted and arrogated to themselues.

[b] He beganne his raigne Anno Mundi 3354. and in the yeere 3360. destroyed Ierusalem. In the yeere 3386. Euilmerodach his sonne succeeded him, whom Neriglossoorus (as Scaliger [c] affirmeth) slew, thereby to aduance his owne sonne the Nephew of Nabuchodonosor, called Laborosoarchadus, to the Scepter; which himselfe swaied as Protector in the minoritie of his sonne. This Nabonidus, sayth he, is Darius Medus, and Laborosoarchadus is that Baltasar mentioned by Daniel, after Scaligers interpretation of the Prophet out of Berosus and Megasthenes. D. Willet holdeth otherwise, Com. in Dan.6.

It is a world to see how the Catholickes (so they call themselues) sweat in finding out that Nabuchodonosor mentioned in Iudith 1. Pintus would make it a common name to the Babylonian Kings, as Pharao to the Egyptians: Pererius will haue two of the name; others will haue him to be Cyrus; others, Cambyses, Artaxerxes, Ochus; Once, Babel is a Mother of confusion to her children, and makes them babble, while they will Canonize Apocrypha-Scriptures.

Cyrus ended the Babylonian Monarchie, and hauing wonne Babylon, and taken Darius Medus at Borsippa, he gaue him his life, and the gouernment of Carmania. An. Mund. 3409. As Nabuchodonosor had by Edict proclaimed the GOD of Daniel, so Cyrus ended the captiuitie of his people; giuing libertie to such as would, to returne. But many Iewes abode there still, and thence sent their yeerely offerings to the Temple. In the time of Artabanus the Parthian (when Caligula tyrannized at Rome) [d] Asimaus and Anilaus, brethren of the Iewish Nation, grew mightie, and haughtie withall, forgetting GOD and themselues, which caused the Babylonians to conspire against them, and (after the death of the brethren, with thousands of their partakers) and slew in Seleucia fiftie thousand of the Iewish Nation. Neerda and Nibisis were then much peopled by the Iewes. And thus Religion partly held the ancient course, partly was mixed (according to the custome of Conquests) with the Persian, Macedonian, Parthian, besides the Iewish and Syrian, vntill the Apostles preached here the Christian veritie. About the same time, Helena and her sonne Izates King of Adiabena (which is in these parts of Assyria) became Iewish Proselytes.

d Ioseph. Antiq. l.18.c.12.

Seleucia [e] built by Seleucus (as it were the marriage-Chamber of Euphrates and Tygris, which there meete and mixe their waters; Nature being by mans industrie forced to yeeld to the match as Plinie sayth, for that purpose) emptied Babylon of her Inhabitants, and inherited her name also, with her people. It was from Babylon ninetie miles, or, as some reade it, fortie, inhabited with sixe hundred thousand Citizens. To spoile the spoiler, the Parthians built Ctesiphon three miles from thence, and failing of their purpose, Vologesus built another Towne by, called Vologesocerta. Yet did Babylon it selfe remaine (but not it selfe) in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus, and after.

e Seleucia was built by Seleucus Nicator on a channel, digged out of Euphrates into Tygris. Plin. l.6. cap.26.

Ortelius thinketh that Bagdat was called Babylon (as Seleucia before had beene) because it stood neere to the place where Babylon had stood. For that old Babylon in [f] Pausanias time, had nothing left standing but the Temple of Bel, and the walls; sometimes, sayth he, the greatest Citie that euer the Sunne saw.

f Pausanias Arcad. lib.8.

In Ieromes time, [g] within those walls were kept beasts for the Kings game. It was after inhabited with many thousands of Iewes, and was laid euen with the ground, as Ios. Scaliger [h] affirmeth in the yeere, after the Iewish account 4797. and after the Christian, 1037. Master Fox hath a little [i] lengthned the date and fate thereof, shewing that Almaricus King of Ierusalem rased and ruined it, and that it was neuer after inhabited Ann. 1170. But in Beniamin Tudelensis his dayes, which seemeth to be somewhat before Almaricus, this Citie was vtterly subuerted, as in his Itinerarie is related, in these words: One dayes iourney from Gehiagan anciently called Resen, is old Babel, containing thritie miles space, now vtterly ruined, in which the ruines of Nabuchodonosors palace are yet seene, not accessible for diuers hurtfull kinds of Serpents and Dragons there breeding. There now [k] remaineth nothing but the small part of that great Tower, either of ornament, or of greatnesse, or of place inhabited.

Before that time was Bagdet built by Bugiafar, as [l] Barrius calleth him, or after [m] Scaliger, Abugephar Elmantzur, who beganne to reigne in the one hundred thirtie and sixe, and died in the one hundred fiftie and eight yeere of their Aegeira. Scaliger and [n] Lydyate agree of this place (which in their Emendations of Time disagree so eagerly) that it was Seleucia, or built in the place, and of the ruines thereof: an opinion not so improbable, as theirs altogether which thinke the present Bagded to be the old Babylon. The storie of this Bagded or Baldach, and her Chalifs, ye may reade in [o] our Saracenicall Historie. Authors [p] agree, that Haalon the Tartar sacked it, about the yeere one thousand two hundred and threescore, Mustratzem being then Chalipha, the foure and fiftieth, and last of those Saracenicall Popes. Hee found a miserable death, where others with miserableness seeke a blessed life, being shut vp and starued amidst those Treasures, whereof he had store, which niggardise forbade him to disburse in his owne defence.

knowledge, in accepting the royall ensignes of that new conquered state at the hands of their Calipha: a ceremonie which the Soldans in Egypt and Persia vsed, more for forme then necessitie; this Assyrian and that Egyptian Caliph hauing but gesture and vesture, the Soldans themselues enioying both bodie and soule of this authoritie.

In the yeere one thousand one hundred fiftie nine, the Riuer Tygris ouer-flowed Bagded, and desolated many Cities. Barrius [q] affirmeth out of the Arabian and Persian Tarigh, which he saith he had seene, that Bagded was built by the counsell of an Astrologer, a Gentile named Nobach, and hath for ascendent Sagittarius; was finished in foure yeeres, and cost eighteene millions of gold. These studies of Astrologie did there flourish. One Richardus [r] a Frier Preacher sayth, That here was a Vniuersitie, the Students whereof were maintained at publique charge, of which number himselfe was one. That Caliph that founded it, for the preuenting of sects, banished Philosophie out of these Schooles, and accounted him a bad Saracen which was a good Philosopher. The reason whereof grew from some, which, in reading Aristotle and Plato, relinquished Mahomet.

Marco Palo [s] or Paulus the Venetian saith, that they studied here in his time, the Law of Mahomet, Necromancie, Geomancie, Phisiognomie, Physicke, and Astronomie: And that it was then a great Staple of the Indian Commodities. This was within few yeeres after the Tartar had wonne it. He addeth, that there were many Christians in these parts; and that in the yeere one thousand two hundred twentie and fiue, in derision of the Gospell, the Caliph commanding by a day that the Christians should remoue a mountaine in testimonie of their faith, according to the words of Christ, or else to abide the perill: this was effected by a Shoomaker, and the day in remembrance thereof yeerely solemnized with fasting the Euen.

The Iewes goe still to visite the Denne which is there shewed, as the place of Daniels imprisonment, with his terrible Gaolers, or fellow-prisoners, as Master Allen told me.

A certaine Merchant (the Discourse of whose voyage [t] Ramusius hath published) speaketh of [u] Orpha, a towne in the way from Byr to Babylon, wherein the people foolishly suppose, that Abraham offered Isaac: at which time (say they) there sprang a fountaine which watereth their Countrey, and driueth their Mils. Here was a Christian Temple called Saint Abraham, after turned into a Mahumetane Moschee, and now called Abrahams Well, into which if any enter so many times (they haue a set number) with deuotion, hee is freed of any feuer: The fishes which are many, haue taken Sanctuarie in these waters, and none dare take them, but hold them holy. Sixe miles from hence is a Well holden in like sacred account, which cureth Leprosies. Nisibis, Carræ, and [x] Edessa, were chiefe Cities of Mesopotamia: at Edessa reigned Abagarus, betwixt whom and our Sauiour passed (if we may beleeue it) those Epistles yet extant.

At Carrhæ [y] there was a Temple of the Moone, in which, they which sacrificed to the goddesse Luna, were subiect to the gouernment of their wiues: they which sacrificed to the god Lunus, were accounted their wiues Masters. As for this difference of sexe, ancient Idolatrie scarce obserued it. For wee reade of the god Venus, which the Cyprians (sayth Macrobius) accounted both male and female: and so doth Trismegistus mystically say of God himselfe. So is Baal in the Scripture sometimes masculine, sometimes feminine. Hee sayth, that the Babylonians allowed marriages of parents and children. [z] Case is two dayes iourney from Bagdet, [a] religious for the buriall of Hali and his sonnes, Hassan and Ossain: whereunto is resort of Pilgrims from Persia, whose Kings were wont here to bee crowned. But this Citie Curio [b] calleth Cusa, assigneth it to Arabia, and sayth that of this accident it was called Massadale, or the house of Ali, slaine here by Muaui his Competitor.

Mesopotamia is now called Diarbech. The [c] chiefe Cities in it are Orfa, of seuen miles compasse, famous, say some, for the death of Crassus. Caramit [d] the mother Citie of the Countrey, of twelue miles compasse. Mosul and Merdin, of which in the next Chapter. Betweene Orpha and Caramit, was the Paradise of Aladeules, where hee had a fortresse destroyed by Selim. This [e] his Paradise was like to that which you shall finde in our Persian [f] Historie. Men by a potion brought into a sleepe, were brought into this supposed Paradise, where at their waking they were presented with all sensuall pleasures of musicke, damosels, dainties, &c. which (hauing had some taste of another sleepie drinke) after came againe to themselues. And then did Aladeules tell them, That he could bring whom hee pleased to Paradise, the place where they had beene: and if they would commit such murders, or haughtie attempts, it should bee theirs. A dangerous deuice. Zelim the Turke destroyed the place.

CHAP. XIIII.

Of Niniue and other neighbouring Nations.

WE haue hitherto ſpoken of Babylonia, but ſo, as in regard of the Empire, and ſome other occurrents, neceſſitie now and then compelled vs to make excurſions into ſome other parts of Aſſyria, Meſopotamia, &c. And I know not how, this Babylon cauſeth confuſion in that Sea of affaires, and in regard of the diuiſion of the pennes (as ſometimes of tongues) of ſuch as haue written thereof. Hard it is to diſtinguiſh betweene the Aſſyrian and Babylonian Empire, one while vnited, another while diuided, as each partie could moſt preuaile: and no leſſe hard to reconcile the Ethnike and Diuine Hiſtorie touching the ſame. Ptolemey [a] ſtraitneth Aſſyria on the North, with part of Armenia neere the hill Niphates; on the Weſt with Meſopotamia; on the South with Suſiana, and Media on the Eaſt. But her large Empire hath enlarged the name of Syria, and of Aſſyria (which names the Greekes did not well diſtinguiſh) to many Countries in that part of Aſia. The Scripture deriueth Syria from Aram, and Aſſyria from Aſhur. Both were in their times flouriſhing, and mention is made from Abrahams time, both of the warres and kingdomes in thoſe parts: yea before, from Aſhur and Nimrod, as alreadie is ſhewed.

Meſopotamia is ſo called, and in the Scripture Aram or Syria of the waters, becauſe it is ſituate betweene Euphrates and Tygris: the countries Babylonia, and Armenia, confining the ſame on the North and South. Whereas therefore wee haue in our former Babylonian relation diſcourſed of Aſſyria, extending the name after a larger reckoning: here wee conſider it more properly. Euphrates is a Riuer very ſwift; for they which goe to Bagdet, buy their boats at Birra, which ſerue them but one voyage, and ſell them at Felugia for ſeuen or eight which coſt fiftie, becauſe they cannot returne. But Tygris is ſwifter; the Armenians bring victuals downe the ſame to Bagdet, on rafts made of Goats skinnes, blowne full of wind, and boords laid vpon them, on which they lade their goods; which being diſcharged, they open the skinnes and carrie them backe on Camels. Dionyſius and Strabo tell of this Riuer, that it paſſeth through the Lake Thonitis without mixture of waters by reaſon of this ſwiftneſſe, which alſo giueth it the name; for the Medes call an Arrow Tygris. Lucan ſayth it paſſeth a great way vnder ground, and wearie of that burthenſome iourney, riſeth againe as out of a new fountaine.

The chiefe Citie in theſe parts was Niniue, called in Ionas, [b] A great and excellent Citie of three dayes iourney. It had (I borrow the words of our reuerend Dioceſan) an [c] ancient teſtimonie long before in the Booke of [d] Geneſis. For thus Moſes writeth, That Aſhur came from the land of Shinar, and built Niniueh and Rehoboth, and Calah, and Reſin. At length he ſingleth out Niniue from the reſt, and ſetteth a ſpeciall marke of preeminence vpon it, This is a great Citie: which honour, by the iudgement of the moſt learned (though ſtanding in the laſt place) belongeth to the firſt of the foure Cities, namely, to Niniue. Others [e] imagined (but their coniecture is without ground) that the foure Cities were cloſed vp within the ſame walls, and made but one, of an vſuall bigneſſe.

Some aſcribe the building of Niniue to Ninus the ſonne of Belus: of whom it tooke the name, to be called either Ninus, as wee reade in Plinie; or after the manner of the Hebrewes, Niniue. They conceiue it thus, That when Nimrod had built Babylon, Ninus diſdaining his gouernment, went into the fields of Aſhur, and there erected a Citie after his owne name, betweene the riuers Lycus and Tygris. Others ſuppoſe that the affinitie betwixt theſe names. Ninus and Niniueh deceiued profane Writers touching the Author thereof, and that it tooke to name Niniueh, becauſe it was beautifull or pleaſant. Others hold opinion that Aſhur and Ninus are but one and the ſame perſon. And laſtly, to conclude, the iudgement of ſome learned, is, that neither Aſhur nor Ninus; but Nimrod himſelfe was the founder of it. But by the confeſſion of all, both ſacred and Gentile Hiſtories, the Citie was very ſpacious, hauing foure hundred and foureſcore furlongs in circuit, when Babylon had fewer almoſt (as ſome report) by an hundred: and as afterwards it grew in wealth and magnificence, ſo (they write) it was much more enlarged. Raphael Volaterranus affirmeth, That it was eight yeeres in building, and not by fewer at once then tenne thouſand workemen. There was no Citie ſince, by the eſtimation of Diodorus Siculus, that had had like compaſſe of ground or ſtatelineſſe of walls; the height whereof was not leſſe then an hundred foot; the breadth ſufficiently capable to haue receiued three Carts on a row: and they were furniſhed and adorned beſides with fifteene hundred Turrets. Diodorus [f] telleth out of Cteſias, that Ninus, after he had ſubdued the Egyptians, Phœnicians, Syrians, Cilicians, Phrygians, and others, as farre as Tanais, and the Hyrcanians, Parthians, Perſians, and other their neighbours, he built this Citie. After that, hee led an armie againſt the Bactrians of ſeuenteene hundred thouſand footmen, and two hundred thouſand horſe; in which Expedition he tooke Semiramis from her husband Menon, who therefore (impatient of loue and griefe) hanged himſelfe. Hee had by her a ſonne of his owne name, and then died, leauing the Empire to his wife. His Sepulchre was nine furlongs in height (each of which is ſixe hundred feete) and ten in breadth. The credite of this Hiſtorie I leaue to the Author, ſcarce ſeeming to agree with Moſes narration of the building of Niniue, any more then Semiramis building of Babylon. Some write, That [g] Semiramis abuſing her husbands loue, obtained of him the ſwaying of the Empire for the ſpace of fiue dayes; in which ſhee depriued him of his life, and ſucceeded in his eſtate.

But leſt the name of this Citie call vs backe againe too much to thoſe Aſſyrian Relations, before dilated, as much as concerneth our purpoſe; let vs ſee what can be ſaid of their Religion here. Of this wee find little, but as before is ſhewed of the Babylonians.

Niſroch was the Idoll, in whoſe Temple Senacherib was ſlaine by his owne ſonnes. But what this Niſroch was, I cannot find. Certaine it is, that hee which had vpbraided confidence in the true GOD, finds his Idoll, euen in the place and time of his worſhip, his Traytor; and he which had blaſphemed the GOD of heauen, finds Heauen and Earth, and his owne Bowels, againſt him. Venus Urania [h] is reckoned among the Aſſyrian deuotions, and Adad was their chiefe god, which they interpret One, (and Macrobius, the Sunne, which, as before is ſaid, they worſhipped, and may well agree with that Latine Etymologie, Sol quaſi ſolus) and Atargatis, the Earth. Belus alſo was here worſhipped, as witneſſe Dion, Euſebius, and Cyrillus. Lucian [i] ſayth, That the Aſſyrians ſacrificed to a Doue; the touching of which Fowle required much ceremonie for expiation: Whereto accordeth the fable, that Semiramis [k] was turned into a Doue.

Ionas was ſent to preach to the great Citie of Niniue, as ſome [n] thinke, in the dayes of Sardanapalus his next Predeceſſor. Broughton (with ſome other) thinketh in the dayes of Pul, or Phul-aſſur. Their repentance ſtaid that iudgement. Nahum after denounced the like iudgement, which accordingly came to paſſe. Phraortes King of the Medes (mentioned in the former chapter) beſieged it. His ſonne Cyaxares ſucceeded in the kingdome, and in this ſiege. After that, the Scythians inuaded Media, and held it eight and twentie yeeres, according to the Prophecie of Ieremie 49.34. and in the ſame Expedition obtained Niniue. But Cyaxares after preuailed againſt the Scythians, and Aſtyages his Sonne ouer-turned and deſtroyed Niniue, that it ſhould no more bee a receptacle or encouragement to the Aſſyrians, to rebell againſt the Medes. Nahum threatned [o] opening of the gates of the Riuer, and deſtruction to the Temple, as Tremellius readeth it, noting thereon the caſting downe of the Forts on Tygris, and amongſt them the Temple of Belus there erected; out of whoſe notes on the firſt Chapter of Nahum, I inſerted the former Relation. Herodotus in the Hiſtorie hereof ſayth, That Phraortes there periſhed in the ſiege, with moſt part of his armie. Cyaxares, to reuenge his Fathers death, renewed the ſiege, but was not able to hold his owne againſt the Scythians, vntill, after eight and twentie yeeres, that the Scythians had enioyed the Empire of Aſia (vnder pretence of feaſting being entertained in a banquet) the moſt of them, in their drunkenneſſe, were ſlaine by the Medes: and ſo the Scythians loſing what before they had gotten, Cyaxares recouered the Empire, and deſtroyed Niniue. Strabo h placeth it beyond the Riuer in Mesopotamia) is by i Plinie accounted in Cœlosyria, called also Bambyce, and, of the Syrians themselues, Magog; and by Ptolemie named among the Syrian Cities of the diuision Cirristica, 71. 15 Longit. and 56. 15. Latit. And Lucian who himselfe was there; (k he calleth himselfe an Assyrian, and was borne at Samosata in Commagena) placeth it on this side the Riuer. Plinie and Strabo (deceyued in the name) mention the worship of Atargatis (called of the Greekes Derceto) in this place: Athenagoras in his Apologie for the Christians, hath these words: Semiramis the daughter of Derceto, a leacherous and bloudy woman, was worshipped by the name of the Syrian goddesse: but Lucian (other-where a scoffer, here an Historian) at large describeth it, making this difference betweene This and That, Atargatis was halfe a fish; but the Syrian goddesse wholly resembled a woman.

There was another Hierapolis in Phrygia, wherein was a famous Temple of Apollo, with a Caue or Vault vnder it, deadly to al entrers but the Priests yea, to the birds also which flew ouer it. Damas. in vita Isidor. ap. Phot. 242.

The City he thinketh to haue receiued the name Hierapolis (Holy City) of these holy things here obserued; in which respect it giueth place to none other place in Syria: hauing a stately Temple, enriched with gifts, statues, and (as they esteemed them) miracles. Arabia, Phœnicia, Babylonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Assyria, brought her presents, and celebrated her solemne Feasts.

This Temple was (in the Syrians opinion) first founded by Deucalion, whose Historie you would thinke Lucian had learned of the Hebrewes, not of the Syrians, or Greekes; so liuely doth hee expresse the Infidelity and cruelty of the old world; the manner of the floud; the Arke wherein, with himselfe, his wife and children, he saued also all other creatures that liued on the earth, which came to him by couples, by dispensation of Iupiter. Hereunto these Hierapolitans adde, That in their Territorie was made a great Clift, which swallowed vp those waters: which Clift (but then verie little) was shewed to our Author: to whom also they reported, That in memorie hereof, Deucalion instituted that Rite, which to his time continued; That twice euerie yeere, not the Priests only, but many out of all Syria, Arabia, and beyond Euphrates, went to the Sea, and from thence brought water, which they powred downe in the Temple, that he had built ouer that Clift vnto Iuno, all which water was receyued into the same.

Some ascribe the building of this Temple to Semiramis, in honour of her mother Derceto: others to Attes, for the worship of Rhea: which Attes was a Lydian, and was Author of the Superstitions of Rhea, to the Phrygians, Lydians, and Samothracians: but the opinion most probable was, that Dionysius or Bacchus was founder of it; two substantiall witnesses, besides others, affirming the same, namely two, Phalli or Priapi (huge Images of the priuie part of a man) erected at the entrie of the Temple, with an inscription, That Bacchus had consecrated them to Iuno. That ancient foundation being consumed by time, this later Temple was erected by Queene Stratonice, who being in a dreame enioyned this office of Iuno, and for neglecting the same, punished with sickneſse, vowed vpon her recouery to performe it. The King ioyned in Commission with her, as Generall of his Armie, and ouer-seer of these holy works, a beautifull young man, named Combabus, who fearing what might happen, gelded himselfe, and closing those his dismembred members (first for their preseruation embalmed) in a boxe sealed, as some great treasure, he committed to the Kings fidelitie, to be safely reserued to his vse. Which his practice saued his life accordingly, being after produced to cleare him of adulterie with Stratonice, which had beene laid to his charge by his enuious accusers, and by the jealous King greedily apprehended. In memorie whereof, a brazen statue of Combabus was set vp in this Temple, and both then (whether to solace Combabus, or by inspiration of Iuno) and yeerely euer after, many in this Temple gelded themselues, and put off together the nature and habit of men, attyring themselues like women. These man-women Priests were called Galli.

The Temple was built in the middest of the Citie, compassed with a double wall; the Porch looking Northwards, almost an hundred fadome high; where stood those Priapi aforesaid, about the height of three hundred fadome; vp to one of these, one ascendeth twice a yeere, and abideth in the top thereof seuen dayes. He carrieth with him a long chaine which hee letteth downe, and thereby draweth vp to him such things as hee needeth. Many offer gold, and siluer, and brasse, and one appointed receiued their names, which hee sheweth to him aboue, and he maketh his praiers for euery of them, sounding, while hee praieth, a little Bell. The temple within shineth with gold, and the Roofe is wholly of this metall. it yeeldeth so fragrant a smell; that the garments of those, which come thither, retaine this sent long after.

There is also another inner Roome or Quire, whereinto the chiefe of the Priests onely haue entrance; yet is it open without any dore. In this Sanctuary are the Images of the gods; Iupiter, supported with Bulls, but Iuno sitteth vpon Lyons, holding in one hand a Scepter, and in the other a Distaffe, in some thing or other resembling diuers other goddesses, by the gyptians, Indians, Armenians, Babylonians, Æthiopians, and Medes, adorned with many Iewels: and among the reſt, ſhee hath on her head a ſtone called the Lampe, of the effect, yeelding light in the night ſeaſon, as if all the Temple were hanged with Lamps. This ſtatue goeth twice a yeere to the Sea, for the water before mentioned: neyther of the Syrians is called by any name, but onely the Image, not expreſſing of whom.

In the Temple is the Image of Apollo cloathed with a beard, (contrarie to the cuſtome of the Greekes) and in a farre more glorious manner giuing forth Oracles: for it moueth it ſelfe; which, the Prieſts eſpying, lift it vp aloft (otherwiſe it ſweateth and moueth it ſelfe forward neuertheleſſe) and being thus ſupported, it turneth it ſelfe and them about, and leapeth from one place to another. Then doth the chiefe of the Prieſts, make ſupplication and requeſt for all things: which if it miſliketh, it goeth backwards: if it approueth, it carrieth them forwards: and without theſe Oracles they enterpriſe nothing neither priuate nor ſacred: and Lucian ſaith, he ſaw it leauing the Prieſts (the ſupporters) and mouing it ſelfe aboue in the ayre. Here are alſo the ſtatues of Atlas, Mercurie and Lucina, and without a great brazen Altar, and many brazen Images of Kings and Prieſts, and many others recorded in Poets and Hiſtories. Among others ſtandeth the Image of Semiramis, pointing to the Temple with her finger, which (they ſay) is the ſigne of her repentance, who hauing giuen commandement to the Syrians to worſhip no other god but her ſelfe, was by plagues (ſent from heauen) driuen to reuoke that former Edict, and thus ſeemeth to acknowledge and point out another Deitie. There were alſo places incloſed, wherein were kept and fed ſacred Oxen, Horſes, Eagles, Beares, Lyons.

The Prieſts were in number aboue three hundred, ſome for killing Sacrifices: ſome for offerings; ſome miniſtring fire to others at the Altar; their garment all white; their head couered; and euery yeere was choſen a new High-Prieſt, which alone was clothed with purple, and a golden head-tire. A great multitude there was beſides of Muſicians, Galli, and Propheticall women: they ſacrificed twice a day, whereat they all aſſembled. To Iupiter they vſe neyther ſong nor inſtrument, in ſacrifice; as they doe to Iuno.

Not farre hence was a Lake of two hundreth fadome depth, wherein were preſerued ſacred Fiſhes, and in the middeſt thereof an Altar of ſtone, crowned alwaies with Garlands, and burning with odours. They haue a great feaſt, which they call the going downe to the Lake, when all their Idols deſcend thither.

Their greateſt and moſt ſolemne Feaſt was obſerued in the Spring, which they called the fire: they ſolemnized it in this ſort. They felled great trees; and laide them in the Church-yard (as you may terme it) and bringeth thither the Goates, Sheepe, and other beaſts, they hanged them on theſe trees; together with them, fowles and garments, and workes of gold and ſiluer, which being ſet in due order, they carrie the Images of the gods about the trees, and then ſet all on fire. They reſort to this Feaſt out of Syria, and the coaſts adioyning, and bring hither their Idols with them; and great multitudes reſorting to the ſacrifices, the Galli, and thoſe other ſacred wights beate and wound each other. Others play on inſtruments, and others rauiſhed by diuine furie, propheſie: and then doe the Galli enter into their orders: for the furie rauiſheth many of the beholders. Whatſoeuer young man commeth prepared to this purpoſe, hurling off his garments, with a great voyce, he goeth into the middeſt, and drawing his ſword, geldeth * himſelfe; and runneth thorow the Citie, carrying in his hands, that which he would no longer carry on his body. And into whatſoeuer houſe he caſteth the ſame, he receiueth from thence his womaniſh habite and attire. When any of them die, his fellowes carrying him in to the uburbes, couer him and his horſe with ſtones, and may not enter into the Temple in ſeuen dayes after: nor after the ſight of any other carkaſſe, in one day, but none of that family where one hath died, in thirty dayes; and then alſo with a ſhauen head. Swine they hold for vncleane beaſts. And the [m] Doue they eſteeme ſo ſacred, that if one touch one againſt his will, hee is that day vncleane. This cauſeth Doues in thoſe parts to multiply exceedingly: neyther doe they touch Fiſhes: This becauſe of [n] Derceto, halfe a woman, halfe a fiſh; that, for Semiramis which was metamorphoſed into a Doue, [o] Iulius Hyginus hath this fable, that an egge of maruellous greatneſſe fell out of heauen into Euphrates, which the fiſhes rolled to land; on the ſame did Doues ſit, and hatched thereout Venus, who was after called the Syrian goddeſſe, at whoſe

Many are the ceremonies alſo to be performed of the religious Pilgrims or Votaries that viſit this holy City: for before hee ſetteth forth, hee cutteth off the hayre of his head and browes, he ſacrificeth a ſheepe, and ſpreading the fleece on the ground, hee kneeleth downe on it, and layeth vpon his head the head and feet of the beaſt, and prayeth to bee accepted: the reſt hee ſpendeth in the banquet. Then doth he crowne himſelfe, and his fellow Pilgrims, and after ſets forward on his pilgrimage, vſing for his drinke and waſhing cold water, and ſleepeth alwayes on the ground till his returne home. In this Citie were appointed publike Hoſtes, for diuers Cities diuers, called Doctors, becauſe they expounded theſe myſteries: They haue alſo one manner of ſacrificing, to hurle downe the beaſts deſtined hereunto, from the top of the porch, which die of the fall. They haue a like rite to put their children in a Sacke, and carrie them downe, branded firſt on the necke or palme of the hand: and hence it was, that all the Aſſyrians were branded. The young men alſo conſecrated their haire from their Natiuitie, which being cut in the Temple, was there preſerued in ſome boxe of gold or ſiluer, with the inſcription of the owners name thereon. And this did I (ſaith Lucian in my youth: and my hayre and name remaine in the Temple ſtill. Of Atergatis, ſee more in the Chapter of Phœnicea. After which hee obſerued a little Needle, ſuppoſed to haue a power of fore-ſignifying danger: and becauſe ſoone after he had it, he found out a conſpiracie intended againſt him, he ſacrificed thereto three times a day. Plutarch [r] calleth the Syrians an effeminate Nation prone to teares: and ſaith, that ſome of them after the death of their friends haue hidden themſelues in Caues, from the ſight of the Sunne many dayes.

Rimmon the Idoll of the Syrians, and his Temple is mentioned, 2. King. 5. 18. But I haue litle certainetie to ſay of him.

Some reckon among the Syrian Deities, Fortune, conceyuing the mention thereof, Gen. 30. 11. by Leah at Zilpa's trauel: the word bagad which ſhee vſeth, is vſually in our tranſlations and Tremellius, a troupe commeth: but in the vulgar Latine, fœliciter, in Vatablus, auſpicato, in Pagnine & Montanus, venit proſperitas. The Ebrew and Greeke Interpreters vnderſtand it of an ominous and well-wiſhing preſage; yea, ſome Comments (I know not whether Planet-like) expreſſe the Planet Iupiter, called Mazal tob, whoſe influence helpeth in the opinion of Aſtrologers, as Munſter noteth, to generation of children, according to the Rabines liberality, which will not haue ſo much as the meaneſt hearbe on the earth, to want correſpondence and intercourſe with ſome or other ſtarre in heauen. Mazal ſignifies a ſtarre; hence their ſuperſtition mentioned to Mazaloth, 2. Reg. 23. And the Iewiſh Aſtronomers calls the Zodiake the circle of Mazaloth, which name alſo their Cabaliſts aſcribe to an order of Angels. Many things could I here annexe out of a learned worke, written by Maſter Selden of the Inner Temple, de DIS Syris, (which according to his, and the wont of all ſuch as Nature hath made ingenious, and ingenuous arts truely liberall) hee hath imparted to me, and now alſo to the world, a rich magazine and treaſury of manifold learning, Diuine and Humane, in multiplicity of tongues, arts, and reading, out of which I haue borrowed in this and diuers parts of this worke, no meane nor few Iewels to adorne my booke, and enrich the Reader. This Teſtimony I here once for all publiſh of that booke, newly in the time of this Impreſſion publiſhed. Of himſelfe, wee want not publike proofe of his due in that, which hee hath giuen to the world; and the world in her more ſolid and lucid parts, cannot but reflect againe vpon the Giuer, TITLES OF HONOR, a man whoſe worth I confeſſe, I rather admire then meaſure with my poore pittances of praiſe; which in this Gad or Fortune of the Syrians wanteth not his Bagad, fœliciter, or venit proſperitas, happily and proſperouſly obſeruing many things to this purpoſe, out of the Chaldee Paraphraſe, the Hebrew Rabbins, the Greeke Septuagint, the Latines, Cabaliſts, Aſtrologians and others; which (being ſomwhat beyond our common Reader) I forbeare to write, leſt the contrary to Leahs wiſh be wiſhed to me. Certaine it is that Labans daughters had not quite loſt all their Syrian ſuperſtition, as appeares by Rachels ſtealing her fathers Theraphim, [s] Idols which (Kimchi and Aben Ezra thinke) were made according to Aſtrological ſuperſtition, capable of celeſtiall influence and prediction, therefore ſtolne (as they conceiue) that her father ſhould not conſult with them touching their way in this flight. Frier Bacon. That Dea Syria before mentioned, was worshipped in the times of the Roman Empire: here also in this Iland, as appeares by an inscription, which Sir Robert Cotton hath DEAE SYRIAE, and diuers altar-stones inscribed DEABVS MATRIBVS, mentioned by Master Camden; which are thought to be the same with the Syrian goddesse, whose image was iust the same with that of Berecynthia, or the mother of the gods, interpreted also the Earth, and Heauen: For it is no vnusuall thing with superstition, cœlo terram miscere, to make a hellish confusion of all things: Yea, the Astaroth before mentioned, are thought to be the same with Syria Dea, and these Deæ matres. This Astarte is also accounted Iuno, and the Moone (as her Bull-head with hornes in stead of a crowne, wherewith they paint her, argue) and Minerua and Venus, Io, and Lucina, and Mylitta, or Alytta, and Mitra, and Astroarche, and Cœlestis, or Vrania the Queene of Heauen, and all things, and nothing; for an Idoll is indeed nothing in the world: but the very beeing thereof is but the distracted, vaine, various, imagination, fancie, and phrensie of the Idolater. This is also the cause of ascribing difference or communitie of sexe to their Deities, as this Astarte, sometimes fœminine, sometimes masculine, as Venus likewise in some of the Greeke and Latine Poets, and the Egyptians mysterie of the Moone or Isis, with both sexes, as hath beene alreadie touched. Ier.44.18. 1.Cor.8.4.

Antiochia built by Seleucus, (to whom, in honour of his memorie, in mount Casius they obserued sacred solemnities, as to a demi-God) some times the seat royall of the Syrian Kings, third Citie of the Roman Empire, third seat of the Christian Patriarchs, and first, where that melodious name of Christian was heard, is now the Sepulchre (sayth Boterus) of it selfe, or (as Niger) a greater wildernesse, wherein it selfe is the least part of it selfe, being left but a small Village (sayth [t] another) in the middest of its owne walles. t Cartwright.

About fiue miles from Antiochia, was that faire and sacred Daphne, which Ortelius in his Theater hath presented to the Spectators, with a peculiar description, and of which the elder Authors [u] haue plentifully written. It was ten miles about: a place euery way enuironed with many stately Cypresses, besides other trees, which suffered not the Sunne to kisse their mother (Earth) whose lap was according to the diuersitie of the season replenished with varietie of flowers, her breasts flowing with streames of watery nourishment: A spring there was, deriuing (as men supposed) her water from the Castalian fountaines, to which, ancient (superstition and therefore superstitious Antiquitie) attributed a diuine facultie with like name and force to that at Delphos. This also was furthered by the Legend of Daphne, [x] recorded by the Poets, beleeued (and what will not Superstition beleeue, but the trueth?) by the credulous multitude: who was said to haue fled from Apollo, and here turned into a tree. But thus could not Apollo be turned from his loue, which he continued both to the Tree and place. This was Lettice sutable to the lips of vaine youth. There needed no other lecture of sensualitie to them, then this Legend, especially in this schoole, where euery place might be a place of argument (vnder pretence of reason and religion) to shut true Religion, and reason out of the place, especially with schollers greedie of this conclusion. Here you might haue heard the whisking winds in a murmuring accent breathing this lustfull Oratorie: the Enamelled floore did offer her more then officious curtesie (a soft, sweet, and inlayed bed) to lie on; the ayre with temperature, seemed to further Intemperance. The eye of the day, and watchmen of the night, were prohibited by the Cypresse roofe, with their vnwelcome light, to testifie those workes of darknesse, which those guiltie boughs couered from discouering: Once, the concurring obiects of each sense, did in silence speake and perswade to sensuall pleasure, insomuch that by a generall Decree, Temperance aud Temperate men were hence exiled, and scarce would the vulgar allow him the name of a man, which here would be transformed into a beast, or would presume, without a Curtezan, to tread on this holy ground. Needs must they goe whom the deuill driueth: such god, such religion.

Here were erected sumptuous buildings: the Temple of Apollo Daphnæus, with a stately Image therein; the worke (as was thought) of Seleucus: also Dianas Chappell and Sanctuarie. Iulius Capitolinus writeth, that Verus a voluptuous Emperour spent foure Summers here, and wintered in Laodicea and Antioch. Seuerus (more truly answering his name) did to death certaine Tribunes, by whose negligence the Souldiers here were suffered to riot. Iul.Capit.Verus.

riot. The Oracles added renowne to the place, which were deliuered out of these Daphnaan waters by a certaine wind or breath. Adrian the Emperour is reported to haue hence receiued the faculty of Diuining, by dipping a Cypresse leafe in the Fountaine. Iulian resorted hither often for that purpose. But his elder brother Gallus, (whom Constantius had called to be Cæsar, and after, sayth Ammianus, for his outrages executed,) had in the time of his abode at Antioch, remoued the bones of Babylas their Bishop, and other holy Martyrs his companions in suffering, to this place, where also he built a Church. Now when as Iulian in his Persian expedition had sent others to visite all the other Oracles in the Roman Empire, himselfe here consulted with Apollo, (an Apostata Emperour with an Apostata Angell) about the successe of those warres. But all his sacrifices obtained no other answere, then that he could not answere, by the countermand of a more diuine power there liuing in those dead bones. Hereupon Iulian command the Christians to remoue those ill neighbours; which they did (sayth Theodoret,) with a solemne procession, singing the Psalmes, and dancing with the heart, of Dauid, making this the burthen and foot of each verse, Confounded bee all they that worship grauen Images: wherewith, Iulian enraged, persecuted the Christians. Euagrius affirmeth, that hee built a Temple in honour of Babylas: how truely, I know not. But the true God confounded both the Idoll and Idolater, shortly after, calling the one to giue account of his ill employed stewardship; vncertaine whether by diuine or humane hand: and for the other, his Temple was consumed with fire from aboue, together with the Image, one pillar whereof remained in Chrysostomes dayes. The Pagans attributed this fire to the Christians: and no maruell: for what did not that fire of blind Idolatrie (kindled with zeale) attribute to the innocent Christians? herein testifying that it came from hell, and must to hell againe, by that hellish Character and impression, of so great fire, and as great darkenesse. Such is Hell, and such is ignorant Zeale: a fire, but no light. Apollo's Priest by no torments could be forced to confesse any author thereof: and the officers of the Temple affirmed it was fire from heauen, which certaine Countrey-people confirmed by their owne sight. Iulian, to satisfie his rage, caused some Temples of the Christians to be burned. Nicephorus [z] telleth of the continuance of this Daphnæan groue, honoured with buildings and spectacles, by Mammianus and Chosroes. Apollo's Image was made of wood, couered ouer with gold. Theodosius forbad the cutting of any of those Cypresses.

Zeale without knowledge resembled to hell.

Orontes [a] is a Riuer which ariseth in Cœlesyria, and payeth tribute to all the three brethren: it visiteth Pluto's Palace, running with a long tract vnder the Earth, and then heauing vp his head, maketh his gladsom homage to Iupiter; and after his custome payed to the Antiochians, in fine powreth himselfe into the lappe of Neptune, entring the Sea neere to Seleucia. It [b] was called Typhon, vntill Orontes, building a bridge ouer it, caused it to be called by his name. They had here a tale of Typhon, a huge Dragon, which diuided the earth, as hee went seeking to hide himselfe, and perished by the stroke of a thunderbolt. Thus did he indent a passage for this Riuer. Not farre hence was a sacred Caue, called Nymphœum: also Mount Casius, and Anticasius, and Heraclia; and nigh thereto the Temple of Minerua. In Laodicea was this goddesse honoured, to whom they offered [c] in yeerely sacrifice, in old time a maid, after that in stead thereof a Hart.

I may here mention also that, which Tacitus [d] reporteth of the Mount Carmel (as hee placeth it) betwixt Iudea and Syria, where they worshipped a god of that name with Ethnicke rites. They had not any Temple or Statue to this god, an Altar onely and Reuerence was here seene. Vespasian did in this place offer sacrifice, where Basilides the Priest viewing the entrals, foretold him of his good successe. Damascius in the life of Isidorus, mentioneth a Syrian goddesse, named Babia, of whom infants newly borne, were by the Syrians, especially at Damascus, called also Babia: perhaps they were esteemed vnder her tutelage; and our English word, Babes, may hence borrow the originall.

Of the Syrian Kings, and alteration in Gouernment, and Religion, in those Countries.

SYRIA quickly grew into Peoples and Kingdomes; although Time hath long since deuoured both them and their memories. Of Menon the husband of Semiramis (mentioned by Diodorus) is spoken before. Adadezer was in Dauids time, [a] King of Aram Zoba, which some take for Chobal in Syria, some for Sophene in Armenia, and some for the Nubei: whatsoeuer they were, Dauid made them tributarie, Anno mundi 2903. Benhadad, Hazael, and others, the Scripture also mentioneth: but certaine succession, we find not recorded of these Syrian Kings, till the time of Alexander, which conquering all from Macedonia, to India, by his inexpected death, left his huge Empire to bee shared among his chiefe followers. Seleucus, the sonne of Antiochus, a Macedonian, first master of the Elephants; then Tribune; after that Deputie of the Babylonians, at last obtained the Kingdome of Asia, Anno Mundi 3638. of whom Appianus thus writeth: The first King of Syria after Alexander, was Seleucus, called Nicator, because he was of very great stature; and as a wild bull had in a sacrifice of Alexander broken loose, hee held him with both his hands. Hee built sixteene Cities, called by the name Antiochia, of his father Antiochus: and sixe Laodicea's, in memorie of his mother Laodice: nine Seleucia's of his owne name: three Apamea's, and one Stratonicea, after the names of his two wiues. He prospered in his warres, tooke Babylon, subdued the Bactrians; pierced to the Indians, which had slaine Alexanders Gouernours (placed amongst them) after Alexanders death. He slew Lysimachus, and seuen Moneths after was circumuented and slaine of Ptolomei, (whose sister Lysimachus had married) being seuentie three yeeres old.

a Nic. Damascenus speaketh of this warre. Adad (sayth Scaliger in his notes on that Fragment) was the common name of all the Syrian Kings: Hie. om. sayth Benhadad. Appian. Alex. de bellis Syriacis.

To him succeeded his sonne Antiochus, sur-named Soter. Anno 3667. who had obtayned Stratonice his mother in law, of his father (moued thereunto by his sonnes violent loue, and his Physicians subtile perswasion.) His sonne Antiochus Theos was (contrarie to his name) poysoned by his wife: whose sonnes Seleucus, Callinicus and Antiochus succeeded: and after them Antiochus Magnus, the sonne of Callinicus, who much enlarged his Empire, adding thereto Babylonia, Egypt, and Iudea: but inuading Græcia, prouoked the Romans against him, with whom he compounded on base and meane conditions: Hee did yet comfort himselfe for his losse among his friends, saying, that he was [b] beholding to the Romans, that eased him of so weightie a burthen, and lessened his cares of gouernment: (for they had cooped him in a corner of his Kingdome beyond Taurus.) After this, hee was slaine: exhibiting in himselfe a true example of the worlds falshood, that playeth with Scepters, and vyeth Diadems, vsing men like Counters or Figures, in numbring and casting accounts, where the same, with a little difference of place, is a pound, shilling, or penie, one, ten, or an hundred. And yet as earthly happinesse herein comes short of heauen, that it is neuer meere and vnmixed, but hath some sowre sauce to rellish it: so falleth it as farre short of hell, that not onely hope, but the most miserable hap, hath some glimpse of comfort.

But to come to our Historie. Antiochus his sonne, sur-named Epiphanes, and after, Epimanes for his furious insolence, (who beganne his raigne Anno mundi 3774.) was first sent to Rome in hostage, for securitie of his fathers faith: and after that Seleucus his brother (which sent [c] Heliodorus to rob the Temple at Ierusalem) had a while warmed the Throne, succeeded in the Syrian Kingdome. Of him and his tyrannie Daniel had long before propheſied in the interpretation of Nabuchodonosors Image, [d] whose legs are interpreted to be this Syrian, and the Egyptian kingdomes, [e] both heauie and hard neighbours to the Church in Iudea, lying betwixt them: but more especially in his [f] Visions in the seuenth Chapter. Where, after other things, he fore-telleth of the ten hornes, [g] which are the eight Kings afore-named, and two Egyptian Ptolemies, Euergetes, and Philopater, in their times preuayling in Syria, and infesting Iudea. And the last shall subdue three Kings, which were Ptolemie of Egypt, driuen out of Syria, Seleucus his brother, and Demetrius, to whom, after Seleucus, the right of the Scepter belonged. His policie, and blasphemie, and tyrannie, are also by Daniel plainely fore-signified, and in their euent as fully in the Historie of the Machabees related. There you may reade his wicked life, and wretched death: He tooke Ierusalem [h] Anno mundi 3781. and slew foureſcore thousand people, robbed the Temple of eighteene teene hundred talents, and of the holy Veſſels, polluted the Temple; forbade the Sacrifice, named it the Temlpe of Iupiter Olympius; forced men by tortures from their religion; with other execrable outrages, which would require a iuſt volume to deſcribe.

i Ath.l.5.c.4. As he was thus madde and raging againſt the true Religion: ſo i Athenæus ſheweth his vanitie in his owne, whoſe pompous ſolemnitie at the Daphnean Feaſt hee thus relateth. Antiochus, in emulation to Paulus Æmilius, proclaimed this ſolemne feſtiuitie in the Cities of Greece, and performed it at Daphne. Firſt, paſſed in order fiue thouſand men, armed after the Roman manner: next followed fiue thouſand Myſians, and three thouſand Cilicians, with Crownes of gold: of Thracians three thouſand, of Galatians fiue thouſand, of whom, ſome had ſhields of ſiluer. Twentie thouſand Macedonians, and fiue thouſand with ſhields of braſſe: after theſe, two hundred and fortie couples of champions which ſhould fight in ſingle combate. There followed one thouſand Piſæan horſe-men, and three thouſand of the Citie, the moſt whereof had Crownes and Vials of gold, other trappings of ſiluer: Next came the band, called Socia, nothing inferiour in pompe or number: then a thouſand extraordinarie, and another thouſand in the band called Agema. Laſtly, the barded horſes fifteene hundred, all theſe in purple veſtures, which many had embroidered, or emboſſed with gold: Chariots drawne with ſixe horſes, one hundred and fortie drawne by foure; one drawne by Elephants, attended with ſix and thirtie other. The reſt of the pompe is incredible and tedious: eight hundred youths with golden crownes: a thouſand fat oxen, and three hundred perſons to attend the ſacrifices: eight hundred Elephants teeth. There were alſo the Images of all the gods, and Heroes that can be reckoned, ſome gilded, ſome clothed with golden veſtures, their fabulous hiſtories being with great pompe annexed. After all theſe, the Images of Day, Night, Earth, Heauen, Morning, and Noone. Then came a thouſand Boyes, each hauing a piece of plate of a thouſand drams: ſixe hundred with veſſels of gold: eightie women were carried in chaires footed with gold, and fiue hundred in others, footed with ſiluer, very ſumptuouſly attired: two hundred of them out of baſons of gold ſtrewed odours. Theſe ſpectacles laſted thirtie dayes. A thouſand (and ſometimes twelue hundred.) Halls or dining roomes, were furniſhed for bankets, the King himſelfe affecting too officious familiaritie therein, viſiting the tables of the baſer people, yea, and that as a baſe Minſtrell with muſicke; not of the beſt inſtruments, but ſuch as the poorer ſort vſed for want of better, as learned Caſaubonus hath on that place of Athenæus obſerued. So baſe is the Pride of Ambition, tempering a confuſed diſtemper; according (in a ſtrange harmonie) the harſheſt diſcord of proud-aſpiring, and deiected baſeneſſe; where a baſe and ſeruile mind begetteth pride, and pride produceth a ſeruil baſeneſſe, a changeling which the doting World fathereth on Humility.

Of the death of this Antiochus, the former and ſecond bookes of Machabees ſeeme to diſagree: and, which is more ſtrange, the ſecond booke in the firſt chapter ſaith, k hee and his company were deſtroyed in the Temple of Nanæa in Perſia: and in the ninth chapter ſaith that in Media, at Ecbatana, hee was ſmitten with an vncouth diſeaſe, and a fall from his Chariot, whereof he died. Some l that would haue this hiſtory Canonicall, apply it to two Antiochi, as Lyra, and Rupertus, and after them Canus: but Bellarmine m ſeeing that they will not agree with the times of any other, but Epiphanes, proueth himſelfe Epimanes, and runneth mad with loue of that Trent-Minion: affirming, that in the Temple of Nanæa he fell but eſcaped (as n the King of Sodome is ſaid to fall, when Lot was captiued, and yet was not ſlaine) and after periſhed, as in the after part of the hiſtorie is expreſſed; whereas, it is there ſaid, that they ſhut the dores on him, and cut him and his fellowes in pieces, and made them ſhorter by the heads: who yet after this (forſooth) could goe into Media, and there haue a fall from his Chariot. They muſt haue no delicate ſtomacks, that wil be Ieſuits, any thing muſt down when they will vp, eſpecially, if Trent or the Vatican command, though manifeſt reaſon and ſenſe (that I ſay not Religion) countermand. I enuie not the red Hat with theſe labels. Wel fare that modeſtie of the Author o that confeſſeth his weakeneſſe: but Anathema to their Anathema's that enact p contradictions to be Canonicall.

held the Syrian Dominion, vntill Selim the great Turke subdued it to the Ottoman Empire, vnder which it still groneth. Of these things this our History will acquaint you in the proper reports of these Nations.

Aleppo is now chiefe Citie of Syria; but Damascus both in elder and later times hath born the greatest name, being the head of Aram, as [t] Esay affirmeth; called of Iulian, the Citie of Iupiter, and eye of the whole East, Holy and Great, called also [u] the Trophee of Iupiter, because he there had conquered the Titans. It is interpreted drinking bloud, by [x] Hierom, who telleth (from the Hebrewes tradition) that in this field Kain slew his brother; [y] Chytreus expoundeth it saccus sanguinis, [z] Wolphius deriueth it of two words, signifying bloud, and to spoyle: which in the times of Hazael and Benhadad, and of Resin it performed: but neuer so much, as when the Saracens made it the sinke of bloud and spoyle, which they executed on the Christians: [a] and Noradine, Saladine, and the Turkes; fitting themselues and this Citie to the name, before the Ægyptian Sultans, and Ottoman Turkes, were Lords of it. Stephanus ascribeth the name to one Ascus a Giant, which cast Dionysius there into the Riuer: Or because Damascus, the sonne of Mercury comming hither out of Arcadia built it: or because Dionysius there fleid off the skin of Damascus, which had cut vp his Vines.

The Turkes now call it Leunclauius, and Chytreus testifie, Scham, and so is the whole Region called in the Arabian Chronicle, whose extract you may find [b] in our Saracenicall history.

The Armies of Dauid, Ahab, Teglath Phalasar preuayled much against it. The Babylonians subuerted it: After that, the Ptolomeys repayred it: Pompei wanneit, Paul hallowed it: The Saracens (as is sayd) polluted it. The Christians in vaine besieged it, in the yeere one thousand one hundred forty and seuen. [c] Haalon the Tartar, one thousand two hundred threescore and two, obtayned it, and about one thousand foure hundred, Tamerlane besieged it; and as he had done at Aleppo, filling the ditch with the bodies of captiues, and slain carkasses, cast wood and earth vpon them, and at last forced it and the Castle. Hee spared the Citie for the Temples sake, which had fortie Porches in the circuite, and (within) nine thousand Lampes, of Gold and Siluer. But the Ægyptians by a wile possessing it, he againe engirt it, and recouered it. Hee commanded Mahomet the Pope or Chalife, and his priests, which came to meete him, to repayre to the Temple, which they did with thirteene thousand Citizens, where he burnt them all: and for monument of his victory, left three Towers erected of skuls of dead men. The Ægyptians regained and held it till Selim the Turke dispossessed them 1517.

Now in thus many alterations of State, who doubteth of diuersity in Religions in Syria? First, the true Religion in the times of Noah, and the first Patriarkes. Next, those superstitions of Rimmon, and the rest before related, in the Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian and Roman gouernments: After which long night, the Sunne of Righteousnesse shone vnto the Syrians, and made a more absolute Conquest then all the former, not by Legions and Armies, but by a handfull of Fishermen, (manifesting his Power in their weakenesse) the Reason of Men, and Malice of Deuils, not being able to withstand their Euangelicall weapons, which [d] were mighty through GOD to cast downe holdes, and bring into captiuity euery thought to the obedience of CHRIST, insomuch, that hence the [e] Christian World receyued first that name. And, how sweet would thy name remaine, O Syrian Antiochia, euen now in thy latest fates, which first was christned with the name Christian, hadst thou not out-liued thy Christianity, or rather, (after the soule departed) remained the carkasse of thy selfe; which ceasing to be Christian, hast long since ceased to bee, had not the Diuine hand reserued a few bones of thy carkasse to testifie this his iustice to the world! And what harmonie could haue beene more gratefull to the Gentiles eares, then thy memorie (Damascus) where the Doctor of the Gentiles was first taught himselfe, and made a Teacher of others? But in thee was the Chayre of Pestilence, the Throne of Sathan, the sincke of Mahumetan impietie to the rest of the world, infecting with thy contagion, and subduing with thy force more Nations, then euer Paul by preaching conuerted. Syria, first in the first and principall Priuiledges of Mankind, embracing in her rich armes (if some bee right Surueiours) the promised Possession (the Seale of a further and better inheritance) was with the first subdued to Saracene seruitude: vnder their Caliph, vnder the Turkes, vnder the Christians from the West, vnder the Tartars from the East, vnder the Mamalukes from the South, and from the North the Ottoman, by new successions and vicissitudes of miseries and mischiefes, become a common Stage of bloud and slaughter. And in all these later changes of State, and chaunces of Warre. Religion was the life that quickned those deathes, and whetted those murdering swords: no crueltie or sacriledge against GOD, or man, so irreligious, and inhumane, but Religion was pretended to be the cause, and bare the Standard to destruction; a new Religion alway erected with a new Conqueror.

PHœnicia is the Sea coast a of Syria, after Plinie, or that coast or tract bordering on the Sea from Orthosa (now Tortosa) to Pelusium. This Sea coast (saith Andreas Masius) b was of the Greekes called Phœnicia, and of the Hebrewes peculiarly stiled Chanaan, and the Inhabitants Chananites. So the Spies tell Moses, the c Chananites dwell by the Sea. The woman in the Gospell which Matthew calleth a Canaanite, is by Marke named a Syrophœnicean: and the Septuagint in this place, for the Kings of Chanaan read the Kings of Phœnicea. And in the Scripture it is appellatiuely vsed for a d Merchant, because the Phœnicians or Chanaanites were famous for Merchandize, as appeareth both by diuine and prophane testimonie. Most properly the Northerly part is Chanaan Phœnicia, the Southern Palestina, although it is sometime extended, as wee haue said euen to Egypt. Dionysius (which maketh the Phœnicians the first Mariners, Merchants, and Astronomers) placeth Gaza and Ioppe in Phœnicia. Sachoniatho a e Phœnician, supposed to haue lived before the Troian warre, wrote in his owne language, the History of his Nation, which Philo Biblius lius translated into Greeke. This Philo in the beginning of his worke sayth, That his Author, Sachoniatho, as he was generally learned, so especially he searched out those things which Taautus, called of the Ægyptians Thoyth, of the Greekes Mercurie, the first Inuenter of letters, had written: hee also blamed those, that by Allegories and Tropologies peruert and obscure the Historie of their gods: affirming plainely, That the ancient Phœnicians, Ægyptians, and others adored those men for gods, that had beene the Authors of good things to men, applying to them also the names of those Naturall gods, the Sunne, Moone, &c. so making some gods mortall, some immortall. According to this Taautus therefore, the first beginnings of all things were a darke disordered Chaos, and the spirit of the darke ayre. Hence proceeded Moth, which we may interprete Mire, from whence issued the seedes and generation of all creatures in the Earth and Heauen; the plants first, and from them the reasonable Creatures called Thophasunin, that is, the beholders of Heauen, formed in the shape of an Egge. From Moth also came the Sunne, Moone, and Starres. The Sunne by his heate separating these new-formed Creatures, their conflict in the ayre produced Thunder, which noyse awaked, and caused to leape out of their earth, this slimie generation; after of the Winde Colpia and Baau (which signifieth Night) were borne men, named [f] Age and Firstborne; Age, taught men to liue of the fruites of trees: of these came Kind and Generation, who being troubled with heate, lifted vp their hands to the Sunne, which they tooke for a god, calling him Beelsamen (which signifieth the Lord of Heauen) whom the Greekes cal Iupiter. Kind begate Light, Flame, Fire. This last by rubbing of stickes together found out fire: From these descended in succeeding generations those Giants, that left their names to the hils where they dwelt, Cassius and Libanus, that contended against their brother Vson, who first aduentured the sea in the bodies of trees burned (in which manner the Indians, euen yet, make their canoas or boats) and he erected two Statues to the Wind and the Fire, whom hee adored with the bloud of beasts.

These first men after their death had Statues consecrated to them by posteritie, and yeerly solemnities. To these succeeded others, Hunter and Fisher, which had two Sonnes, one of which was named Chusor a great Magician: From these descended Amynus and Magus, Authors of Sheepe-cotes and flockes, or heards of Cattell. These were the Titans, Inuenters of Arts, hunting, fishing, building, yron-works, tents and such like. To Misor, one of these was borne Taautus, first Author of Letters. At that time was borne Elius, and Beruth his wife, which dwelt in Biblos, the Parents of Calus and Terra (his wife and sister) who deified with rites and ceremonies their father Elius being torne of wilde beasts. To these were borne Saturne, Batilus, Dagon, and Atlas.

But Calus taking other wiues, there arose a great quarrell betwixt him and his former, ayded herein by her sonnes; of whom Saturne the eldest, created Mercurie his Scribe, by whose Magicall Arts, and by those weapons (first by him, and Minerua the daughter of Saturne deuised) Calus was ouerthrowne: who, after two and thirty yeeres warre betwixt them, was taken by his sonne, and depriued of his genitories.

Saturne had issue (besides his daughters Minerua and Proserpina, Amor, Cupido, Saturne Iupiter, Belus and Apollo, of his Sisters, Astarte, Rhea, Dione. Then also were borne Typho, Nereus, Pontus, the Father of Neptune. Saturne suspecting his brother Atlas, buried him in the ground, and cast vp an high hill ouer him: where, not long after, was a Temple erected to him. Dagon was inuenter of Tillage; and therefore called [g] Iupiter of the Plough. But Saturne becomming a great Conquerour, bestowed Egypt on Taautus or Mercurie, who first made a mysterie of their Theologie, as the Sonne of one Thalon, the Phœnician Priest, first did among the Phœnicians; applying allegoricall interpretations thereof to Nature; and instituting Rites to posterity. This allegoricall Theologie of Taautus was interpreted by Surmobolus and Thurro. It followeth in the Historie, That it was then a custome in great calamities, for the Prince to appease the angry Damon with his best beloued sonne, and thus (in the time of a perillous warre) was Leiud [h] the Sonne of Saturne, by a Nymph, named Anobreth, cloathed in royall apparrell, offered on an Altar erected for that purpose. This was practised long after by the King of Moab, [i] who being besieged by three Kings of Israel, Iuda, and Idumæa, sacrificed his eldest sonne: which yet some interprete of the eldest sonne of the King of Idumæa. Taautus ascribed Diuinitie to the Serpent, as being of a most fierie and spirituall nature, mouing it selfe swiftly, and in many formes, without helpe of feet, and a creature which renueth her age. [k] The Phœnicians and Ægyptians followed him herein, they calling it a happy Spirit of God, these, Eneth; and framed thereto the head of a Hawke of which in his place wee haue spoken. And thus farre haue wee beene indebted to [l] Eusebius.

In the time of those warres betwixt Saturne and Calus was borne Hercules: to whom was a Temple of great Antiquity at Tyre. To Hercules were also celebrated games at Tyrus

The Sydonians also worshipped Astarte, in a stately and ancient Temple to her builded: whom [o] some interprete Luna, [p] some Venus, and one of her Priests, to [q] Lucian, Europa. She was worshipped of the Punickes (a Phœnician colony) by that name of Iuno. But Philo Byblienſis saith it was Venus, which may bee all one: for Herodotus saith, Vrania (which was also Iuno) was Venus; and Luna also after Lucian. And so it appeareth by her hornie head wherewith Philo saith, shee was painted: the Arabians called her Alilat, the Chaldæans Militta. The same is called also Beltis, or Baaltis, and Beliſama in an old Inscription, that is, Iuno Olympia, or Queene of Heauen; Shee ware on her head in stead of a Crowne a Bulles-head: whereby what else could be meant but the Moone, Queene of the night? as the Sunne Baalſamen is King of Heauen or Lord of the day. But the manifold names giuen to the same Deities brought in confusion, and a numberlesse Polytheisme: nor can wee well distinguish betwixt Minerua, Iuno, Venus, Luna, and other names of their mystie mysteries. Shee is called also Astroarche, Iuno, Lucina, Ilithyia, which hath her mid-wife-mysteries, borrowed together with the name from the Iewish Lilith, (of which we shall after speake) as the name Alilat also is. The Syrian goddesse before related, and the Persian Mithra) which some deriue of Mader, that is in the Persian also, a mother) is no other but this Astarte Vrania, or as Tertullian cals her Cœlestis, or what other name before mentioned you please to giue her: which I know not how mystically, is also called Cybele, Berecynthia, and (with a confused mixture of Heauen and Earth) THE EARTH. Astaroth a word plurall is exemplified in the European Iunones, mentioned in Inscriptions, and in those altars in Master Camden, and Master Selden, inscribed DEABVS MATRIBVS, diuers of which haue beene found in this Iland, intended by them (as were also the Beli) which made vowes, DIS SYRIS.

Lucian sayth, that he saw also at Biblos the Temple of Venus Biblia: wherein are celebrated the yeerely rites of Adonis, (who they say, was slaine in their Countrie) with beatings and wofull lamentings; after which, they performe Obsequies vnto him, and the next day they affirme him to be aliue, and shaue their heads. And such women as will not bee shauen, must prostitute their bodies for one day vnto strangers, and the mony hence accrewing, is sacred to Venus. Some affirme that this ridiculous lamentation is made, not for Adonis, but Osiris; in witnesse whereof, a head made of Paper once a yeere in seuen dayes space comming swimming from Egypt to Byblos, and that without any humane direction: Of which Lucian reporteth himselfe an eye-witnesse. This is called the mourning for Thamuz, which Iunius interpreteth Osiris, whence the fourth moneth (commonly their Harueſt) is called Tamuz. For Isis which instituted these rites, was their Ceres. Hierom interpreteth it Adonis; but it seemeth the difference is more in the name then the Idoll or rites. Women were the chiefe lamenters, if not the onely, as Ezechiel testifieth, and the proneneſſe of that sexe to teares, and to superstitious deuotion also, (which they seeme to acknowledge, whose praying stile is, pro deuoto fœmineo ſexu) likewise Ethnike Authors are witnesses. Plutarch sayth, the women kept the Adonia, or feast of Adonis, euery where through the Citie, setting forth Images, obseruing exequies and lamentation. Ammianus reported of this festiuall solemnized at Antiochia, at the same time when Iulian entred the Citie, then filled with howlings and lamentings: and elsewhere compareth the women which lamented the death of their young Prince, to the women which obserued the rites of Venus in the feasts of Adonis. Iulius Firmicus affirmeth, that in most Cities of the East Adonis is mourned for, as the husband of Venus, and both the smiter, and the wound is shewed to the standers by. For, Mars changed into the shape of a Bore, wounded him for the loue of Venus. Hee addeth, that on a certaine night, they lay an Image in a bed, and number a set bead-roll of lamentations: which being ended, light is brought in, and then the Priest anointeth the chappes of the Mourners, whispering these words, Truſt in God for wee haue ſaluation or deliuerance, from our griefes. And so with ioy they take the Idoll out of the Sepulchre. Was not this mourning, thinke wee, sport to the Deuill? especially when this Adonia was applyed vnto the buriall and resurrection of Christ, the Pageant whereof followeth the Good-Friday, and Lenten fast of the Papists. Yet is this worse then the former, not onely because Corruptio optimi peſſima, the best things by abusing are made worst; but also because the treason of Iudas and Peters deniall is proposed in action to the peoples laughter, & inter tot eachinos & ineptias ſolus Chriſtus eſt ſerius & ſeuerus, saith L. Viues, complayning of this great wickednesse of the Priests (magno ſcelere atque impietate Sacerd.) but here and elsewhere often, when he telleth tales out of Schoole, the good mans tongue is shortned, and their Index purgeth out that wherewith hee seeketh to purge their leauen. But let vs backe from Rome to Biblos: Hereby runneth the Riuer Adonis also, which once a yeere becommeth red and bloudie:

Plutarch. Nicias Am. Marce. l. 22. & li. 19. his wounding in his ripe age, sayth hee, signified the cutting off the ripe corne.

bloudie: which alteration of the colour of the water, is the warning to that their Mourning for Adonis, who at that time they say is wounded in Libanus: whereas that redneſſe ariſeth indeed of the winds, which, at that time blowing violently, doe with their force carry downe alongſt the ſtreame a great quantity of that red Earth or Minium of Libanus, whereby it paſſeth. This conſtancy of the wind might yet ſeeme as maruellous as the other, if diuers parts of the world did not yeeld vs inſtance of the like. In Libanus alſo was an ancient Temple dedicated to Venus by Cyniras.

Aſtarte or Aſtaroth was worſhipped in the formes of ſheepe,* not of the Sydonians only, but of the Philiſtims [f] alſo, in whoſe Temple they hanged the armour of Saul. And wiſe Salomon was brought by doting on women, to a worſe dotage of Idolatrie [t] with this Sydonian Idoll among others. And not then firſt did the Iſraelities commit that fault, but from their firſt neighbour-hood with them, preſently after the dayes of Ioſhua. [u] This Sidon, the ancient Metropolis of the Phœnicians (now called Saito) in likelihood was built by Sidon, eldeſt Sonne of Canaan, [x] and fell to the lot of Aſher, whence it is called Great Sidon. It was famous [y] for the firſt Glaſſe-ſhops, and deſtroyed by Ochus the Perſian. This faire mother yeelded the world a Daughter farre fairer; namely, Tyrus, now called Sur, (whoſe glory is ſufficiently blazed by the Prophets, Eſay, and Ezechiel) being ſituate in an Iland ſeuen hundred paces from the ſhore, to which Alexander in his ſiege vnited it; whom it held out eight moneths (as it had done Nabuchodonoſor thirteene yeeres, which long ſiege is mentioned in *Ezec.*26.7) in nothing more famous, then for helping Salomon vnder Hiram their King, [z] to build the Temple, a hundred fiftie fiue yeeres before the building of Carthage. This Hiram ([a] Ioſephus reports it out of Dius a Phœnician Hiſtoriographer) inlarged the Citie, and compaſſed within the ſame the Temple of Iupiter Olympius, and (as he addeth out of Menander Epheſius) therein placed a golden Pillar: he pulled downe the old Temples and built new, and dedicated the Temples of Hercules and Aſtarte. Ithobalus, Aſtartes prieſt, ſlew Phelles the King, and vſurped the Crowne. He was great Grandfather to Pygmalion the brother of Dido, Founder of Carthage.

The Phœnicians, famous for Marchandiſe and Marinerſhip, ſailed from the red Sea round about Afrike, and returning by Hercules pillars, arriued againe in Ægypt the third yeere after, reporting (that which Herodotus [b] doubted of, and to vs makes the Storie more credible) that they ſailed to the South-ward of the Sunne: They were ſent by Pharaoh Neco. Cadmus a Phœnician was the firſt Author of Letters alſo to the Greekes. At Tyrus was the fiſhing for purple: not farre off was Arad, a populous Towne, ſeated on a rocke in the ſea, like Venice.

Alongſt the ſhore is Ptolemais, neere which runneth the Riuer Belæus, and nigh to it the ſepulchre of Memnon, hauing hard by it, the ſpace of an hundred cubites, [c] yeelding a glaſſie ſand: and how great a quantitie ſoeuer is by ſhips carried thence, is ſupplied by the Winds, which miniſter new ſands to be by the nature of the place changed into glaſſe. That would ſeeme ſtrange, if this were not yet ſtranger, that this new glaſſe, if it bee caſt vpon the brinkes of this place, receiueth the former nature of ſand againe.

Belus and Hercules Tyrius, and the Sunne, called of them Heliogabalus, were Phœnician Deities. When Alexander the great imployed the greateſt of his force and cunning to winne Tyrus, and to plucke it out of the armes of Neptune, a faſter friend vnto her then euer Hercules, or Heliogabalus had beene; one of the Tyrians dreamed, that Apollo (ſo the Greekes call Heliogabalus) meant to forſake the Citie, who was therefore preuented with a golden chaine, wherewith hee was tied to the Image of Hercules (whom ſuperſtition honoured as their moſt aſſured Patrone) from which golden thraldome Alexander freed him in the conqueſt of the Citie. Glorious Alexander, ſhall I admire thy greatneſſe, to become a Patron and Freer of the gods? or rather the blindneſſe and vanitie of Superſtition, which acknowledgeth ſuch Patrones of freedome, whom friends can binde, or enemies free; ſo making ſomewhat more colourable Alexanders ambition of Deity, to whom his Fortunes had made former Deities indebted for libertie. [d] Druſius is of opinion that diuers of theſe Phœnician Idols were deriued from names vſed in the Scriptures, ſo interpreting the words in 1. Mac. 3.48. Taautus of the Phœnicians, and the Ægyptian Thoth from Thobu, and Baau from Bobu, Bel from Baal, as Beelſamen; alſo Aſtarte, Aſthoreth, from the ſtore of ſacrifices offered to her. [e] Euſebius relateth other Phœnician abominations, both bloudie and beaſtly: the one in yeerely ſacrifice of the deareſt pledges of Nature to Saturne: the other in that Temple of Venus, built in the moſt ſecret retreit of Libanus, where Sodome (burned with fire from aboue, and drowned in dead ſea) ſeemed to reuiue: ſuch was their practice of impure luſts, intemperately vſing the Naturall ſexe, and vnnaturally abuſing their owne: worſe in this then the Sodomites, that theſe intended ſenſualitie; they pretended Religion. Conſtantine raſed theſe ſuburbs of Hell, and deſtroyed both the cuſtomes, ſtatues, and temple it selfe. f Augustine saith, That the Phœnicians prostituted their daughters to Venus, before they married them. Of Melcanthor, Vsor, and other their gods (sometimes men) I forbeare to speake. Alexander g ab Alexandro, affirmeth, That the priest of the Sunne in Phœnicia, was attired with a long sleeued garment, hanging downe to the feete, and a golden Crowne.

Wee may adde to these Phœnician superstitions, their mysticall interpretation by h Macrobius. Hee expoundeth Venus and Adonis, to signifie the Earth and the Sunne. The wild Boare which wounded Adonis, is the Winter, which for the absence of her Louer maketh the Earth to put on her mourning weedes (at whose approach she after putteth on her new apparell, saith i our Englisn Arcadian Oracle;) This was shadowed in a certaine Image in Mount Libanus, pourtrayed in mourning habite. And to this sense he applyeth the Ægyptian rites of Osiris and Isis, and of Orus, which is Apollo or the Sunne, and likewise the Phrygian mysteries of Atinis, and the mother of the gods. Hee saith that they abstained from Swines flesh.

The Philistims and all that Sea-coast, by k Strabo and Plinie, and Dionysius (as is said) are reckoned to the Phœnician. Their originall is attributed to Misraim, whose posteritie the l Casluhim and Caphtorim chased the Avims, which formerly had inhabited Palestina, and by dint of sword purchased their Countrie. They had fiue principall Cities, Ascalon, Accaron, Azotus, Gath, Gaza. Of their sheepish Astarte yee heard euen now, and of their Legend of Dagon. Their Superstitions the Scripture often m mentioneth. What this Dagon was (saith n Martyr) is not well knowne. But by the deriuation of his name (which signifieth a fish) it seemeth hee was a Sea-god. For such Sea-deities had the Greekes and Latines, as Neptune, Leucothea, Tryton: aboue his belly hee was of humane shape, beneath like a fish. Such is Idolatrie, diuine it will not bee, it cannot content it selfe with humane, but proueth monstrous; in the vglie and deformed Image, exhibiting the character of the true Author of this falshood. When Cicero o saith, the Syrians worshipped a fish; it may be construed of this Dagon. Happily (saith p Martyr) they intended Neptune, or I know not what Deuill. q Tremellius thinketh Triton. That which in the tenth Chapter is spoken of that Monster Oannes fitly agrees to this Dagon: yea and all the legend of Atargatis and Derceto: for wee need not repeat how little constant they are in the sexes of their r gods, which they made male, female, or Hermaphrodites at pleasure. This may wee see and say, when men are giuen ouer to themselues, when they become beasts, monsters, deuills: yea worse then such, for while they worship such, they professe themselues (as Clients and Votaries) to be worse and baser then their Deities. Drusius deriueth not this Dagon of Dag a fish; but of Dagon, which signifieth Wheat, whereof Eusebius saith, Dagon inuento frumento & aratro vocatus est, ζεὺς ἀρότριος; & Philo Biblius, Dagon, ὃς ἐστι σῖτος: that is, is called Wheat or Bread-corne. But Scaliger f blameth Philo for that interpretation, and agreeth to that fish deitie: for Dagon (saith hee) is one, and Dagan another. He addeth that they worshipped gods in the likenesse of stones, which they called Batul or Baitul, whence came the fable of the stone giuen to Saturne in stead of his children, to be deuoured. This (as wee haue said) seemeth borrowed from Iacobs anointing the stone at Bethel. Saturne had many names, Il, Israel, Melcom. The Tyrians worshipped his starre; Amos 5.26. not the planet Saturne, but Luicfer. They had their purifications in the midst of their gardens to Adad, of which is spoken before.

When the Philistims had placed the captiued Arke in Dagons Temple, hee fell on his face before the Arke: But they placing him againe in his roome, with a second fall, his head and hands were cut off vpon the threshold: The stumpe (or as Tremellius and Vatablus read it) Dagon, or that part of him which resembled a fish, remained. And, therefore the Priests of DAGON, and all that come into DAGONS house, tread not on the threshold of DAGON. Thus true Religion, the more opposed, the more it flourished: the prison-house of her captiuitie is the throne of her Empire: blind superstition, the more it is detected, the more enraged, addeth new deuotion, to encrease (not caring to amend) the former.

Dercetos or Dagons Image Lucian t saith he saw in Phœnicia, not vnlike to that which is reported of the Mermayde, the vpper halfe like a woman, the other like a fish: (therefore of Plinie called u Portigiosa;) in reuerence of whom the Phœnicians were said to abstaine from fish. Authors doe also call this Idoll Atergatis: and x Athenæus reporteth, That the Countrey-law of the Syrians depriued them of fish: and that Gatis (a Syrian Queene) prohibited the eating of fish Ater Gatis, that is, without Gatis, without her licence, and therefore was called Atergatis, as a fore-staller of the fish to her owne delicate tooth. Mopsus a Lydian, after drowned her in the lake of Ascalon, where this fish-deuourer was of fishes deuoured. They yet esteemed her a goddesse, and offered vnto her fishes of gold and siluer: and the Priests all day long set before her true Fishes rosted and sodden, which after themselues selues did eate; and it is not to be doubted but the metall-mawes of those Ostriges could also digest the other.

Diodorus Siculus [y] telleth, That hard by a lake full of fish, neere vnto Ascalon was a Temple dedicated to this Fish-woman: her Storie followeth, That shee yeelding to the lust of a young man, had by that copulation Semiramis, whom (now too late repenting of her follie) shee exposed on the rockes, where shee was nourished by Birds: of which Birds (called in their language Semiramis) shee receiued that name. The Shepheards after espying this hospitalitie of the Birds, found the childe, and presented her to Simma the Kings Shepheard, who brought her vp as his owne daughter. The mother (not able to swallow her shame and griefe) cast her selfe into the lake to bee swallowed of the water, but there by a new Metamorphosis, was turned into a Fish, and hallowed for a goddesse; and (for company) the fishes of that lake, and the Birds of that Rocke were canonized also in this deifying deuotion.

In Ascalon was a Temple of Apollo: and Herod Father of Antipater, [z] Grandfather to Herod the Great, hence called Ascalonita, was seruant to Apollo's Priest. At Accaron was worshipped Baalzebub, that is, the Lord of Flies,* either of contempt of his idolatrie, so called; or rather of the multitude of Flies, which attended the multitude of his sacrifices, where from the sacrifices of the Temple at Ierusalem, as some say, were wholly free: or for that hee was their Larder-god (as the Romane Hercules) to driue away flies: or for that [a] forme of a Flie, in which he was worshipped, as Nazianzene against Iulian reporteth. He was called Swinthius, and as some say, Myiodes, and Myiagrus, howsoeuer one of these names commeth from Mice, and the other from Flies: such mouse-eaten, flie-blowne diuinity did they professe. Nec Musçam quærent deum Accaron, saith Nazianzene, of this Baal or Beelzebub. The Arcadians [b] sacrificed and prayed to Myiagrus, and by that meanes were freed from danger by Flies. Plinie [c] reporteth, that at the Olympian games, they sacrificed a Bull to Myiodes; which done, clouds of Flies departed out of that territorie. And in another place [d] he sheweth that the Cyrenians sacrificed to the god Achor (haply the god Accaron here mentioned) when the multitude of Flies caused a pestilence, all which Flies thereupon presently dyed. The Iewes [e] in detestation of this Idoll tearmed him Beelzebul, that is, dung-hill, or dung-Iupiter. Yea Scaliger saith, [f] the name Beelzebub was in disgrace also, and that the Tyrians and Sydonians did not so call him; Baal or Belus, being a common surname to their gods, which they distinguished with some addition, as Iupiter was named Beelsamen Lord of Heauen: but the Hebrewes (and not the Phœnicians) in contempt called him Beelzebub or fly-Lord. This was Iupiter Olympius. So Iuno was intituled [g] Regia or Heauenly. Shee was painted at Carthage sitting on a Lyon with a Thunderbolt in her right hand, in her left a Scepter. But for Beelzebub, he was there Æsculapius or Physicke-god, as appeareth by Ahaziah [k] who sent to consult with him in his sicknesse. And perhaps for this cause the blaspheming Pharisies, rather applyed the name of this then any other Idoll to our blessed Sauiour, [h] whom they saw indeed to performe miraculous cures, which superstition had conceiued of Baalzebub: and if any thing were done by that Idoll, it could by no other cause bee effected but by the Deuill, as tending (like the popish miracles) to the confirmation of Idolatrie.

What the deuill had at Beelzebubs shrine to this end performed, blinded with rage and malice, they imputed to the miracles of Christ, which, in regard of the Efficient, were more excellent then could be Satans impostures, as countermaunding him and all his proiects: for the matter, were meerely supernaturall; in the Forme were acted by his will, signified by his naked word: and for the end (which is [i] the onely touch-stone for vs to trie all miracles) were to seale no other truth then was contained (for substance) in the Law and the Prophets, which hee came not to destroy, but to fulfill. If an Angell from heauen, yea with heauenly miracles, (if it were possible) should preach vnto vs otherwise, Paul biddeth vs to hold him accurst: and curst be that deuill of Hell, that vnder colour of miracles (one of Antichrists ensignes) [k] hath taught the Wolrd to worship the [l] Lipsian, [m] Lauretan, and I know not what other Ladies: not that Virgin, on Earth holy, in Heauen glorious; but their Idol-conceits, and idol-blockes of her. Our Lord hath taught vs plainly in Matthew, to serue God only, without sophisticall distinctions.

As for the Heathenish and Popish, and all those other packets of miracles, which we receiue by the Iesuits annuall relations from the East and West Indies; I esteeme them with Doctor Hall (a hall of Elegance) That they are either falsly reported, or falsely done, or falsely miraculous, or falsely ascribed to Heauen. But I know not how (pardon it Reader) I am transported to Hale, Zichem, and Loretto, from our Phœnician ports. The name of Beelzebub hath beene occasion of this parenthesis. But the power of Beelzebub (I feare) hath induced Bellarmine [n] to fall downe, and thus to worship him, for his purple aduancement. For amongst the Notes of the Church, he hath reckoned for one, this of miracles, maius ipsa miraculum, a greater

The Phœnicians are accounted firſt Authors of Arithmeticke and Aſtronomie; as alſo of the Art of Nauigation (Prima ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus, ſaith Tibullus) and obſerued the North-ſtarre to that Sea-skill. The Sydonians are reputed firſt authors of Weights and Measures. q Herodotus affirmeth, that the Phœnicians, which came with Cadmus into Greece, taught the Græcians both other Sciences, and alſo Letters r which before that time they knew not. Theſe letters after changed their ſound and forme, being by the Ionicks principally learned, who called them Phœnician, and called their Skinnes or Parchments biblos (haply of Biblos in Phœnicia.) Hee ſaw the Cadmean letters engrauen in a Temple at Thebes, much like the Ionike, then the onely Greeke letters, out of certaine old inſcriptions, much reſembling the preſent Latine Letters; and the auncienter Phœnician (I may ſay with him, the auncienteſt) vſed by the Canaanites and Hebrewes of old, and by the Samaritanes at this day: For thoſe which the Iewes now vſe, he affirmeth to be new, corrupted from the Syrian, and theſe from the Samaritan. His learned diſcourſe thereof were worthy the reading, but here would be too prolixe.

Of the Phœnician Kings here might be inserted a large Historie; but I feare tediousnesse. Their Catalogue is thus in Scaligers [x] Canons; first Abibalus, two yeeres; Hierom the sonne of Abibalus 38. yeeres; Leazaros, 7. Abdestartus, 9. the Nurces sonne 12. Astarus Dalæastri F. 12. Aserymus, 9. Pheles, 8. moneths; Ithobaal, the Priest of Astarte, 32. yeers; Badezorus, 6. Margenus 9. Pygmalion, 47. In his time Dido fled into Libya. A long time after this raigned another Itobalus, 19. yeeres; Baal, 10. and then Iudges ruled: Ecnibalus, 2. moneths; Helbes, 10. moneths; Abbarus, the high Priest, 11. moneths; Balator, 1. yeere; Mytgonus and Gerestratus, 6. Merbal (sent from Babylon) 4. Hierom his brother, 20. Thus much out of the Phœnician Antiquities: the rest of their Historie is for substance, the same with the Syrian before handled.

Ioppe [y] (saith Mela and Plinie) was built before the Floud; and Cepheus raigned there, witnesse certaine ancient Altars, there obserued religiously, and bearing titles of him and his brother Phineus. They shew monstrous bones, the Reliques of the Whale, from which Perseus freed Andromeda. Mount Casius had in it the Temple of Iupiter Casius, and Pompeys tombe. Albertus Aquensis relating the exploits of the Westerne Christians in that inuasion of Godfrie of Buillon, saith that in the parts of Tyre and Sidon they were stung with a kind of Serpent called Tarenta, which caused them with intollerable burning, swelling, and thirst to perish. The remedies are strange, the touch of some Chiestaines, in the armie vpon the wound, or this, vt vir percussus coiret cum muliere, cum viro mulier.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of Palestina, and the first inhabitants thereof, the Sodomites, Idumeans, Moabites, Ammonites, and Canaanites, with others.

PHœnicia is stretched by some (as you may reade) euen to Ægypt, all alongst that Sea-coast, and in that respect partly, and partly because they obserued some neerenesse in Religion, I haue adioyned the Philistims to the Phœnicians: howbeit, others doe confine Phœnicia betwixt the Riuer Valania and Mount Carmel. Thus hath [a] Brocard written, and after him Maginus; who doe reckon vnto Palæstina, Galilæa, Samaria, Iudæa, and Idumæa, leauing out Phœnicia, bounded as aforesaid, to make a part of Syria by it selfe. Of this Region I purpose to make larger discourse in the next Chapter; here intending to rake out of their dust the ancient Nations which inhabited this Land, before the Israelites were Lords thereof. The Sodomites sometimes inhabited a pleasant and fertile valley, watered by Iordan, which Moses compareth [b] to the garden of the Lord, and the Land of Ægypt, for pleasure and plenty. To the Sodomites I reckon also those other Cities partakers of the same both fertilitie and vengeance, Gomorrha, Adma, Zeboim, and little Zoar, saued at the request of Lot. Their Kings and their Warres are mentioned, Gen. 14. Their wickednesse in many places of Scripture; which Ezechiel [c] reduceth to these foure heads, Pride, Gluttonie, Idlenesse, and Crueltie or hard-heartednesse. Their Iudgement both Moses and others, and the place it selfe doe record. Their Religion was an irreligion, and prophane contempt of God and man. Europe (I would I could not say England) can now yeeld the like: sauing that in our subtile, and more warie age, Policie, hauing eaten vp Religion, hath with the bloud thereof dyed her cheekes, and would seeme more shamefac't then those former Sodomites. Thus did [d] Esay speake to the Princes of Sodome (in his time) and the people of Gomorrha, in respect of that their wickednesse, which suruiued them, and hath fructified vnto vs, among whom yet the Lord of Hoasts (as with them) hath reserued a small remnant from this worse plague then Sodoms brimstone, a Reprobate sense. The difference betwixt ours and them is, that they were more open, ours more close, both in like height, but not in like weight of wickednesse; our darkenesse excelling theirs both in the sinne, and in the punishment, in as much as a greater light hath shined, which we with-hold in vnrighteousnesse. And if you will haue the maine character of difference betwixt these and those; the one are beastly Men, the other are Deuils in the flesh.

f 2.Pet.2.6 geance of eternall fire. This f is written for our learning, on whom the ends of the world are come, their ashes being made an example vnto them that should after liue vngodly. Let not any obiect the Preacher here, and require the Historian, seeing that Historie builds no castles in the ayre, but preacheth both ciuill and diuine knowledge by examples of the passed, vnto the present Ages. And why should not I preach this, which, not me calling alone, but the very place it selfe exacteth? Discite iustitiam moniti, is the quintessence of all Historie.

They being dead, yet speake, and the place of their buriall, is a place to our memorie, being turned into a Sea (but a Dead Sea g) which couereth their sinnes, that it may discouer ours; which, as astonished at their vnnaturalnesse, hath forgotten her owne nature. It drowneth the Earth, which it should haue made (as whilome it did) fertile: it staies it selfe with wonder and indignation, and falling in a dead swowne, sincketh downe with horrour, not wakened, not mooued with the windes blustering; refusing the light of the Sunne, the lappe of the Ocean, the Commerce of strangers, or familiarity of her owne; and (as it happeneth in deepe passions, the colour goeth and commeth, changing three times euery day: it gaspeth foorth from her dying entrailes a stincking and noysome ayre, to the neere dwellers pestiferous, sometimes voyding (as it were excrements) both lighter ashes, and grosse Asphaltum: The neighbour fruits participate of this death, promising to the eye toothsome and wholesome foode, performing only smoake and ashes. And thus hath our GOD shewed himselfe a consuming fire, the LORD of anger, to whom vengeance belongeth; all Creatures mustering themselues in his sight, and saying, at his first call to execution, Loe, we are heere. That which I haue said of these miracles, still liuing in this dead-Sea, is confirmed by testimonie of many h Authors. Brocard telleth of those Trees with ashes growing vnder Engaddi, by this Sea; and a vapour, rising out of the Sea, which blasteth the neighbour-fruits; and the i slimie pits on the brinkes of the Sea, which hee saw. Neither strangers nor her owne haue accesse there, where Fishes (the naturall inhabitants of the Waters) and Water-fowles (the most vsuall ghests) haue no entertainment; and men, or other heauie bodies cannot sinke. Vespasian prooued this experiment, by casting in some bound, vnskilfull of swimming, whom the waters (surfetted with swallowing her owne) spewed vp againe. This is mentioned by Aristotle k also, who saith that the saltnesse there of is the cause why neyther man nor beast (though bound) can sinke in it, nor any fish liue therein; which yet in the salt-sea wee see no otherwise. The Philosopher could see no further then reason, nor all that neither: but Moses guideth vs beyond Philosophie to diuine vengeance, which thus subuerted Nature, when men became vnnaturall. The Lake, Iosephus saith, is fiue hundred and fourescore furlongs in length, (Plinie hath an hundred myles) the breadth, betweene sixe and fiue and twentie myles. Strabo telleth of thirteene Cities still, whereof Sodome was chiefe, of threescore furlongs compasse; whereof some were consumed by fire, or swallowed by Earth-quakes and sulphurous Waters, the rest forsaken: some Remainders (as bones of those carkasses) then in his time continuing. l Vertomannus saith, That there are the ruines of three Cities on the tops of three Hils: and that the Earth is without water, and barren, and (a greater miracle) hath a kinde of bloody mixture, somewhat like red waxe, the depth of three or foure cubites. The ruines of the Cities are there seene still. Georgius Cedrenus in his Greeke Historie written aboue fiue hundred and fiftie yeeres since, writeth, that hee had seene this dead-Sea, and reckoneth thereof these maruells: That it produceth no quicke Creature; that dead carkasses sinke therein; a liuing man can scarcely diue vnder water; lamps burning swimme, but being put out, they sinke; there are fountaines of Bitumen; allume also and salt, but bitter and shining. Where any fruit is found, nothing is found but smoake. The water thereof is holesome to such as vse it, but differing from other waters in contrarie accidents. Not long after his time Fulcherius Carnotensis (in the beginning of the Westerne kingdome in these parts) testifieth the vntolerable saltnesse of this sea from his owne taste: And that neere the same is a hill, which in diuers places thereof is likewise salt, shining therewith like ice, and hard as stone: and ghesseth that the saltnesse of this sea proceedeth partly from that cause, partly from the intercourse which vnder the earth it holdeth with the greater sea. Compassing this lake on the South side, we came to a Village which they say is Segor, abounding with Dates, where the Inhabitants were blacke. And there (saith he) did I see apples on the trees, which when I opened, I found blacke and dustie within. * The like is read *Sap.*10.7. Of whose wickednesse euen to this day, the waste Land that smoketh is a testimony, and plants bearing fruits that neuer came to ripenesse, and a standing pillar of Salt, is a monument of an vnbeleeuing soule. They left behind them to the World, a memoriall of their foolishnesse, &c. And Moses, *Deut.*32.32. their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the vine of Gomorrah, their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter, &c. Which allegorie must haue his foundation in the naturall disposition of those places and fruits. The water is blackiſh, and at ſometimes preſents terrible ſhapes; perhaps of bituminous matter congealed. There growes neither buſh nor tree neere to Sodome by many miles: and in his iourney thither they paſſed ſuch ſands, that their Mulets could not beare them, and lighting they waded therein ſometimes to the middle, and ſometimes ouer head and eares, the Arabs alſo at the ſame time moleſting them with arrowes ſhot from places of more ſecure footing.

Idumæa lieth Southward from Iudæa: it had name of Edom, the ſir-name of Eſau, ſonne of Iſaak. The hiſtorie of this people, and the Horites, whom the children of Eſau expelled, ſucceeding in their inheritance, is related by [m] Moſes. It was ſubdued by Dauid, according to the prophecie, The elder ſhall ſerue the younger. They rebelled vnder Ioram, the ſonne of Iehoſaphat; as Iſaak had alſo propheſied. From that time they continued bitter enemies to the people of GOD, [n] till Hircanus, the ſonne of Simon compelled them to accept both the Iewiſh Dominion and Religion: after which they were reckoned amongſt the Iewes. Of the Idumæans, were the Amalekites, [o] deſtroyed by Saul. They were South from Iuda. [p] Eliphaz the Themanite, it ſeemeth, was of Eſau his generation, and of the right Religion. The Idumæans, Moabites, and Ammonites, are by ſome placed in Arabia, of which I will not contend: I here mention them, as both borderers and ſubiects to the Iſraelites; of which wee reade much in the Scripture; little elſe-where that maketh to our purpoſe. South from Amalek was Kedar, a Countrey abounding with flockes of Sheepe and Goates. But I may not now dwell in the Tents of Kedar, till I come to the Iſmaelites.

On [q] the Eaſt-ſide of the Lake of Sodome, is that Region which the Moabites (ſo often in Scripture mentioned) ſometimes inhabited: and before them the Emims, which were Giants, tall as the Anakims, Deut. 2. 10. The Moabites were the poſteritie of Lot, by inceſt with his daughter. [r] Moab had on the Eaſt the Mountaines of Horeb; on the Weſt the ſalt Sea, and part of Iordan; Arnon on the South, and the North border ſtretched from Iabbok to the Mountaines of Piſga. That part of their Countrey, betweene Iabbok and Arnon, Sihon King of the Amorites had taken from them, and loſt againe to the Iſraelites. Balac their King fearing to loſe the reſt, ſent for Balaam the Wizard to curſe the Iſraelites; who yet, by Diuine power, was forced to bleſſe them. Yet the luſtre of Balacs promiſes ſo dazeled his eyes, that [ſ] hee taught Balac to put a ſtumbling blocke before the Iſraelites, and by ſending amongſt them their women to draw them to carnall and ſpirituall whoredome; ſo to prouoke the wrath of GODS iealouſie againſt them. But the zeale of Phineas ſtayed it; and Balaam, in his returne homeward to his Countrey of Meſopotamia, was ſlaine by the Iſraelites among the Madianites, partakers with the Moabites in Balaams idolatrous proiect. Theſe Madianites deſcended of Abraham, [t] by Keturah, and dwelt in a part of Arabia, neere to the Moabites, on the Eaſt. Some of them dwelt neere to Mount Sinai, Exod. 2. 15. and in the Deſart, on the Eaſt ſide of the Red Sea. Their mightie Armie was miraculouſly deſtroyed by [u] the Sword of the LORD, and Gedeon. The Moabites were ſubiected to Iſrael by Dauid, and ſo continued to the Kings of Samaria, till, that State being rent, they freed themſelues. It ſeemeth they worſhipped the Sunne: as the names Kirchereſeth, Beth-Baalmeon, and Balacs high places doe ſhew, and wee haue obſerued before in the worſhip of Bel and Baal. Chemoſh was another Idoll of theirs, to which Salomon built an high place. Pehor alſo, and Baal-pehor, and the reſt, whoſe Rites are now rotten, and the memorie worne out. This his name, it ſeemes, was borrowed of the hill Peor, mentioned by Moſes, Where it is likely he had his Altars and Temple. [x] Origen ſaith, the name Baal-peor ſignifieth filthineſſe, but what filthineſſe hee knew not: Salomon Iarchi writeth, that they offered to him ordure, placing before his mouth the likeneſſe of that place which Nature hath made for egeſtion. Saint Ierome [y] thought him to bee the ſame with Priapus, and worſhipped of the women ob Obſcœni magnitudinem. And ſo Iſidore. Moſes mentions Beth-peor, whereby it appeares hee had a Temple. Dauid aſcribeth to his worſhip the eating of the ſacrifices of the dead: ſuch it is like as the Heathen offered in memorie of the dead. The [b] Ammonites (their brethren in the euill both of Lot their father, and their owne) inhabited Northward from Moab; on the East were the hills Acrabim; on the West the Amorite; the hills Luith, Basan, &c. made it a valley. Their chiefe Citie was Rabbath, after called Philadelphia. These Ammonites had beene troublesome to the Israelites, in the times of [c] Iephte and of [d] Saul. And after, Dauid in iust reuenge, for violating the Law of Nations, destroyed them. Moloch, or Melchon, was their Idoll, which is supposed [e] to be Saturne, whose bloudie butcherly sacrifices are before spoken of. The word signifieth a King: as Mithra signifies a Lord: and it is like, that these Easterne Nations intended, (as the Phœnicians also in their Adad) that One and Great GOD, Rex deorum: although as to the King of visible creatures, these mysteries were applied to the Sunne likewise. Certaine it is that these Moloch-sacrifices passed hence into Afrike, as there shall bee obserued.

f Lyra in Leu. 18.

It was a hollow Image (saith [f] Lyra) of Copper, in forme of a man. In the hollow concauitie was made a fire, with which the Idoll being heated, they put a child into his armes, and the Priests made such a noise with their Timbrels, that the cries of the child might not moue the parents to compassion, but they should rather thinke the childs soule receiued of the god into rest and peace: others [g] adde, That this Moloch had seuen Roomes, Chambers, or Ambries therein; one for Meale; a second for Turtles; a third for Sheepe; the fourth receiued a Ramme; the fift a Calfe; the sixt an Oxe: if a man would offer sonne or daughter, the seuenth was readie for that crueltie. Some interprete Moloch and Remphan, Act. 7. to bee the Sunne and Moone. The Talmudists [h] would perswade men that they did not burne their children in this Moloch-sacrifice, but onely the father tooke his children and moued them to and fro thorow the fire, none otherwise then at this time on Saint Iohn Baptists day, when the Sunne passeth thorow Cancer, children vse to leape thorow bone-fires. But both Scripture and Heathen Authors write otherwise. Moloch is also [i] called Baal.

There was a valley neere Hierusalem (sometime possessed by the sonne of [k] Hinnom) where the Hebrewes built a notorious high place to Moloch: it was on the East and South part of the Citie. It was also called Topheth, or Tymbrell, of that Tymbrell-rite, which those Corribantes and bloudie Priests did vse; or else for the spaciousnesse of it. [l] Ieremie prophecieth, That it should be called the Valley of slaughter, because of the iudgements for the idolatrous high places in it. Vpon the pollution hereof, by slaughter and burials, it grew so execrable, that Hell inherited the same name, called Gehenna, of this place: first, of the lownesse, being a Valley: secondly, for the Fire, which heere the children, there the wicked, sustaine: thirdly, because all the filth was cast out of the Citie hither, it seemed they held some resemblance. The Ammonites also were (as Montanus affirmeth) [m] circumcised.

Canaan was the sonne of Cham, Father of many Nations, as [n] Moses declareth, Sidon and Heth, Iebusi, Emori, Girgashai, Hivi, Arki, Sini, Aruadi, Zemari, Hamathi; the most of which were expelled their Countrey, slaine or made tributarie by the Israelites. Their border was from Sidon to Gaza West, and on the East side from Sodome to Lasha or Callyrrhoe. [o] Arrias Montanus is of opinion, that according to the number of the twelue Tribes of Israel, so were the people of Canaan: and therefore to those eleuen before rehearsed, he addeth their Father Canaan, who left his name to them all; and where he liued, retained a part to himselfe, betweene the Philistims and Amorites. Of those his sonnes, Sidon, the eldest, inhabited the Sea-coast: and Eastward from him Heth, vnto the hill Gilboa: of him came the Hittites. Iebus went further, on the right-hand: Emor inhabited the midland Countrey Westward from the Iebusites. The Girgashite dwelt aboue the Hittite, next to Iordan, and the lake Chinereth (so called, because it resembleth the forme of a Harpe) after called Gennezareth. The Heuite or Hiuite inhabited betweene the Amorite and the Philistim. The Arkite possessed the rootes of Libanus. The Sinite dwelt beyond the Hittite, Eastward, neerer to Iordan. Aruadi enioyed the Countrey next to the Wildernesse of Cades. Zemari obtained the Hills, called of him Semaraim. OF THE HEBREVV NATION, AND RELIGION, FROM THE BEGINNING THEREOF TO OVR TIMES.

THE SECOND BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

The Preface of this Booke: and a Description of the Region of Palæstina, since called Iudæa, and now, Terra Sancta.

IN the former Booke we haue traced the foot-steps of Religion, following Her in Her wanderings from the Truth, and Her selfe through diuers Nations, till we came into this Land, sometime flowing with Milke and Hony; whose first inhabitants we last tooke view of. The Hebrewes were, by the Soueraign Lord of all, made heires of their labours, and possessed both their place and wealth: Houses and Cities which they builded not, Vineyards which they planted not; and which is more, these were a type vnto them of the true and heauenly Countrey, which not by their merits, but by the meere mercy of the Promiser, they should enioy. These did GOD choose of all the Kindreds of the Earth, to make vnto himselfe [a] a Kingdome of Priests, a holy Nation, and his chiefe treasure aboue all people, though all the Earth be his: He made them the Keepers [b] of his Oracles, bestowing on them [c] the Adoption, and the Glorie, and the Couenants, and the giuing of the Law, and the Seruice of God, and the Promises: of whom were the Fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh Christ came, who is God ouer all, blessed for euer, Amen. These things were not onely communicated, but appropriated to them: [d] He shewed his Word vnto IACOB, his Statutes and his Iudgements vnto ISRAEL: He dealt not so with any Nation, neither had the Heathen knowledge of his Lawes: hee was their prerogatiue, and they his peculiar: [e] In Iewrie was GOD knowne, his Name was great in Israel: In Salem was his Tabernacle, and his dwelling in Sion. And Christ himselfe ratified it, acknowledging himselfe [f] sent to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, [g] a Minister of the Circumcision, and said to the Cananite woman which besought him for her daughter, It is not good to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to Dogs. Such, in spirituall reputation before GOD were all people, excluded (as vncleane Dogs) out of his heauenly Ierusalem, till this [h] partition wall was taken downe, and they which had beene farre off, were made neere by the bloud of Christ, who abrogated through his flesh that hatred, and made of twaine (Iewes and Gentiles) one new man in himselfe. So that the Gentiles (the name of all the World, excepting this people) which had beene without Christ, and aliants from the Common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the Couenants of promise, had no hope, and were without GOD in the world; were now no more strangers and forreiners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of GOD; built vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Iesus Christ himselfe being the chiefe corner stone. Let it not bee tedious to heare of this, which the Angels reioyced to learne, [i] a Mysterie which from the beginning of the world had beene hid in GOD: and vnto Principalities and Powers in heauenly places, was made knowne by the Church. But the Word (whereby we haue fellowship in this mysterie) came out of Sion, and the preaching began at Ierusalem. This (and not Rome) by the confession of Espenseus, a learned Papist [k], was Emporium fidei Christianæ, & Ecclesiæ Mater: The Mart of Christian faith, and Mother of the Church. [l] Yea, it was necessarie that the Word of GOD should first be spoken vnto them, which they by incredulitie put from themselues, and gaue place to the Gentiles. [m] The fall of them became the riches of the World, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles, as a Glaſſe, wherein we may behold the bountifulneſſe and ſeueritie of GOD, and in both the deepneſſe of the riches of the wiſedome and knowledge of GOD, whoſe Iudgements are vnſearchable, and his wayes paſt finding out. I may fitly compare them to Gideons Fleece, [n] which receiued the dew, when all the Earth beſides was drie, and after, it was drie vpon the Fleece onely, when the dew couered all the ground. Sometimes they alone receiued all thoſe Dewes, Showers, Riuers, Seas of ſauing Bountie, and all the world beſides was a parched wilderneſſe. Now, [o] he turneth the fruitfull Land into barrenneſſe, for the wickedneſſe of the Inhabitants; but that Wilderneſſe he turneth into Pooles of water, and the drie Land into water-ſprings. Hee hath [p] called them his people which were not his people, and her beloued which was not beloued; and where it was ſaid, Yee are not my people, there they are now called the children of the liuing GOD. Thus hath hee [q] ſhut vp all vnder vnbeliefe, that he might haue mercy vpon all, that his free election might appeare (not of works, leſt any ſhould boaſt themſelues, but) of grace. Behold therefore, all Atheiſts, and wonder! The Iewes branded with iudgement, wander ouer the World, the contempt of Nations, the skum of People, the hiſſing, deriſion, and indignation of men, for refuſing Him whom they expect, denying Him whom they challenge, hating Him whoſe Name is in life and death vnto them, the ſweeteſt tune, and moſt melodious harmonie; ſtill wayting for, and glorying in that Meſſias, whom (vnknowne) they crucified and ſlue: and ſtill purſue with the deadlieſt hatred in all his followers: GOD they pleaſe not, and are contrarie to all men. Yet ſuch is GODS manifold wiſedome in his deepeſt Iudgements, that his enemies ſhall fight for him, euen againſt themſelues: the Midianites [r] ſhall ſheathe their ſwords, which they haue drawne out againſt GOD, in their owne bowels, and Chriſtian Truth ſhall preuaile, and let our [ſ] enemies themſelues be iudges. Out of their premiſſes, which they maintayne, as earneſtly as thou (O Atheiſt) ſecurely derideſt, which they will ſeale with that which thou makeſt thy heauen, thy GOD; we will and doe conclude, againſt thee and them, that, in which, with which, for which we will liue and die. Let the old Teſtament yeeld the Propoſition in propheſie, and the new Teſtament aſſume in Hiſtorie, and euen be thou the Iudge, if that Reaſon, which thou haſt as a man, and peruerteſt as a Deuill, will not by force of their ſcriptures, which they preferre before their liues, neceſſarily in the concluſion, demonſtrate the Chriſtian Truth. Neither (I appeale vnto our common Reaſon) canſt thou more wonder at vs for beleeuing, things in thy ſeeming incredible, abſurd, and impoſſible, then at them (vpon ſuch grounds which with vs they hold) not [t] beleeuing.

For what beleeue we, but, for the maine and chiefe points of our Faith, are as plainly in their Euangelicall Prophets, as in our Propherticall Euangeliſts? All the Hiſtorie of Chriſt, in a more diuine way, ſeemeth rather told then foretold, a Hiſtorie, not a Propheſie; as is eaſie by conference of both to ſhew, and thou, if thou beeſt not idle, or wilfully malicious, mayeſt finde. That then which thou ſeeſt come vpon them, a ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and eares that they ſhould not heare; which yet haue the light of the firſt Scriptures (had they not a veile ouer their hearts) the ſame ſee in thy ſelfe, that when greater light doth offer it ſelfe, willingly ſhutteſt thine eyes, as though there could be no light, becauſe thou liueſt in, and loueſt thy darkneſſe. It is the ſame hand that giueth vp both thee and them, [u] becauſe yee will not beleeue the Truth to be ſaued, to ſtrong deluſions, that yee might beleeue lyes, and be damned. To me, and all Chriſtians, let the Iewes bee both reall and verball teachers of the Truth, which they let fall, and we take vp; the one, in their Oracles of ſacred Writ; the other, in their exemplarie iudgement. And to them, Let (O thou Lord of all, heare and grant it) let all Chriſtians be that which Moſes propheſied, [x] a prouocation to emulation, not of enuie and hatred, which hitherto hath beene in theſe, amongſt all the Chriſtian enemies, the moſt implacable and deſpitefull, but of imitation, that as [y] their caſting away hath beene the reconciling of the World, their receiuing may be life from the dead, which Paul ſeemeth plainly to fore-ſignifie.

t The Iew is a witnes againſt the Atheiſt, that we faine not thoſe propheſies of Chriſt, ſeeing the Iew holds the propheſies dearer then his bloud, and yet hateth Chriſtianitie more deadly then the Atheiſt. Peior perſecutor in Chriſtianos quàm Ethnicus, ait Hieron. in Abd. 1.

a Moſes ſubdued the Kingdomes of the Amorites on the one ſide, Ioſhua the reſt on the other ſide of Iordan.

b Rom. 11. 1. & 2.

This Countrey was firſt [z] called the Land of Canaan, after that the Poſteritie of Canaan, the ſonne of Cham, had poſſeſſed it. [a] Moſes and Ioſhua conquered it to the Poſteritie of Iacob, of whom it was called the Land of Iſrael: after the diuiſion of the ten Tribes, from the houſe of Dauid, by Ieroboam, in the time of Rehoboam the ſonne of Salomon, the name of Iſrael was more particularly appropriated to thoſe ten rebellious Tribes, and the other two were knowne by the name of the Kingdome of Iuda. Yet Iſrael remayned in a generall ſenſe, the name of them all, eſpecially in the new Teſtament. Paul of the Tribe of Beniamin, [b] calleth himſelfe an Iſraelite: and all Iſrael, ſaith he in that Chapter, ſhall be ſaued.

After

After the Babylonian [c] captiuitie they were called Iewes, of the chiefe and royall Tribe, and their Countrey Iudæa: It was also called Palæstina of the Philistims, which inhabited the Sea-coast. And after, in the times of the Christians, it was generally called the Holy Land, Phœnicia also being vnder that name comprehended. It is situated betweene the Mediterranean Sea, and the Arabian Mountaynes; Ptolemey [d] calleth it Palæstina Syriæ, and Iudæa, abutting it on the North with Syria, on the East and South with Arabia Petræa, on the West with part of Egypt, and the Sea. Adrichomius, who hath bestowed a large Volume on this subiect, which he calleth the Theater of the holy Land, on the East confineth it with Syria and Arabia; on the South, the Desart Pharan and Egypt; on the North, Mount Libanus; on the West, the Sea. Maginus, placeth a part of Phœnicia on the North; on the North-east, Libanus; on the South, and part of the East, Arabia; on the West, part of the Mediterranean Sea. It is extended from the South to the North, from the one and thirtieth degree, to the three and thirtieth, and somewhat more. Others set it downe in other words; but these and they agree for the most part in substance. It is commonly holden [e] to bee an hundred and sixtie Italian miles in length, from Dan to Berseebee, and sixtie in bredth. An exact diuision thereof into twelue shires or shares, Ioshua setteth downe at large, with their Bounds and Cities, from the thirteenth Chapter of that Booke, to the one and twentieth, as they were by lot and diuine dispensation allotted to the twelue Tribes, the posteritie of Iacobs twelue sonnes; onely Ephraim and Manasses, the sonnes of Ioseph, constituted two Tribes, and therefore had the double portion, descending of Iacobs eldest sonne, by Rachel his first intended wife: and Leui had no portion, but was scattered in Israel, to keepe Israel from scattering, and to vnite them in one Religion to one GOD, who disposed that curse into a blessing. Reuben, Gad, and halfe the Tribe of Manasses, had their portion on the East side of Iordan: the other halfe of Manasses, with Simeon, Iuda, Beniamin, Ephraim, Naphthali, Aser, Dan, Izachar, Zabulon, had their portions assigned betwixt Iordan and the westerne Sea. They which would be fully acquainted with their seuerall diuisions, may finde in Ioshua himselfe to satisfie them, and in the Commentaries which Andreas Masius, and others, haue written on that Scripture. Laicstaine, More, Stella, Adrichomius, and Arias Montanus, haue in Maps presented them to the eye.

And firſt let me dip my Pen in Iordan. This, ſaith Plinie, [h] is a pleaſant Riuer, and as far as the ſituation of places will permit, ambitious; prodigally imparting it ſelfe to the Inhabitants, and (as it were vnwilling) paſſeth to that curſed Lake Aſphaltites, of which at laſt it is drunke vp, loſing his laudable waters, mixed with thoſe peſtilent. As ſoone therefore as the Valleyes giue opportunitie, it ſpreadeth it ſelfe into a Lake, called Geneſara, ſixteene miles long, and ſixe broad, enuironed with pleaſant Townes; Iulias and Hippo on the Eaſt; on the South, Tarichea; and Tiberias on the Weſt, made wholeſome with his hot waters. The Fountaynes of this Riuer are two, called [i] Ior and Dan, which compounding their Streames, doe alſo compound their Names, as Tame and Iſis with vs bring forth (happy Parents) our Tames or Thamiſis. [k] Here was the Citie Dan, ſo called of the Danites, before Laiſh, Iud. 18. 29. and Leſhem, Ioſ. 19. 47. But before this time, both the Riuer had the ſame name, Iordan, and the place it ſelfe at the foote of Libanus, whence the Fountayne ſpringeth, was called Dan, *Gen.*14.14. when Moſes wrote; except wee beleeue Maſius, that the Pentateuch and other Scriptures, were by Ezra after the captiuitie, digeſted into that forme with thoſe names, which we now haue. Here was after built Cæſarea Paneadis, called afterward of Philip the Tetrach, Cæſarea Philippi; and after that by Agrippa, Neronia. This ioyning of Ior and Dan, is the beginning of the apparant ſtreame: but the true [l] and firſt conception of it is in Phiale, one hundred and twentie furlongs from Cæſarea, a Fountayne of vnſearchable depth, which yet (like ſome miſerable Churle) alwayes contayneth the waters in it ſelfe, till ſinking, and as it were buried in the earth, thoſe treaſures being by Natures ſtealth conueyed vnder ground vnto Dan, or Paneas, who is liberall of that Vſurers wealth (for into that Phiale, powre as much as you will, it neuer increaſeth or decreaſeth) and thence it becommeth a Riuer. Philip the Tetrach of Trachonitis, by caſting chaffe therein, which was paid him againe at Dan, firſt found out this vnder-earth paſſage. The Saracens call that Phiale, in this reſpect [m] Medan, that is, the waters of Dan. Before it maketh the Lake of Genezareth, it maketh another called Samachonitis. This is eſpecially filled, when the ſnowes on Libanus are melted, which cauſeth [n] Iordan then to ſwell, and ouer-flow his bankes, in the firſt moneth, yeerly (and made the miracle in Ioſhua's [o] paſſage thorow it the more miraculous) but in Summer, it is almoſt dried vp: and by reaſon of that matter which therein groweth, is a harbor for wild beaſts. It is called the waters of Meron, halfe way betweene Cæſarea Philippi, where the marriage betweene Ior and Dan is ſolemnized, and the Lake of Genezareth. Elias, and after his aſſumption, his cloke diuided theſe ſtreames; Naamans leproſie was here clenſed; and a greater Leproſie then Naamans is daily clenſed in the Church by the lauer of Regeneration, firſt ſanctified to that vſe in this ſtreame, where the holy Trinitie [p] did firſt yeeld it ſelfe in ſenſible apparition to the world, thereby to conſecrate that Baptiſme, whereby wee are conſecrated to this bleſſed Trinitie, the Father, Sonne and Holy Ghoſt. In which reſpect [q] Pilgrims, in memorie thereof, doe ſtill waſh themſelues in this riuer, ſpotting themſelues further (I feare) by this waſhing, with ſome myre of ſuperſtition.

I cannot blame this ſacred ſtreame, if it ſeeme loth, as Plinie ſayth, to leaue ſo fertile a Countrey, and lingreth as long as it may in [r] lakes by the way, not only for that ſalt Sea, or helliſh Lake, which ſhutteth vp his guiltleſſe waues in perpetuall impriſonment, but alſo for thoſe pleaſures in the paſſage, the fruits of the earth, without exaction freely yeelded, as Roſes, Sage, Rue, &c. of the trees, in Oliues, Figs, Pomegranates, Dates, and Vines (which laſt the Mahumetan ſuperſtition doth not cheriſh, and the Weſterne Chriſtians did ſo huſband, that one Vine [s] by their arte & induſtrie, yeelded three vintages in Auguſt, Septemb. other wonders are told by ancient and later Writers, too long heere to relate. Bellonius y will doe it for mee, if any list to reade his Obseruation. Hee is not of their mind, which thinke there is now no true Balsam in the World (these in Iudæa being perished) but thinketh in Arabia-Fœlix it groweth naturally, from whence some shrubs he saw in z Cairo. But I should be too tedious if I should insist on this Argument; That instance of such a world of people, in such a patch of the world, doth sufficiently declare the fertilitie, when as Dauid a numbred them an eleuen thousand Israelites, and of Iuda, foure hundred seuentie thousand, or as in 2.*Sam.*24.9. fiue hundred thousand which drew Sword; and yet Beniamin and Leui were not reckoned in this number: and in the dayes of Ieroboam, b Abija King of Iuda, brought into the field foure hundred thousand, and Ieroboam eight hundred thousand, and on this part were slaine in one battell fiue hundred thousand all choice men; which Historie cannot bee matched with the like in all Ages and places of the world: that a Countrey, an hundred and sixtie miles long, and not aboue sixtie in bredth, should nourish at once, or lose in a battell such multitudes, not to speake of impotent persons, women and children. But this multitude by ciuill warres and inuasions of enemies decreased, till first the reliques of Israel, and after, the remnant of Iuda were by the Assyrians and Babylonians led captiue, and the Land enioyed her Sabbaths.

For the Kingdome of Israel consisting of ten Tribes, (some reckon Simeon also to Iuda, because of his portion mixed with Iudaes, as Beniamins was adioyning thereto, to whom the Leuites c likewise, and Priests forsaking their Cities, and all the religious Israelites annexed themselues) forsooke d not the house of Dauid onely, but the house of the Lord, and set them vp Calues (Ægyptian superstitions) at Dan and Bethel, and made Priests for their Idolatrous purpose. This their rebellion and apostasie, GOD plagued with ciuill dissention and forren hostilitie, vntill at last, the Assyrians e remoued them altogether, and repeopled those parts with new Colonies. Such is the end of religion, which hath not GOD for the beginning, but is grounded on humane policie, a sandie foundation. Iuda could not take warning, but prouoking GOD by idolatrous courses, at last was carried to Babel, and thence after seuentie yeeres, returned. The historie of these things, so fully related in Scripture, I should but marre in the telling.

c 2.*Chron.*9.14.

After this their returne, the Land was not as before, named after the portions of the seuerall Tribes; but was called by a generall name, f Iudæa, and the people Iewes, because the Tribe of Iuda had before inhabited those parts, or at least the principall of them, dilating themselues further, as they encreased in number and power. But more especially Iudæa was the name of one g third part of the Countrey, by that name distinguished from the other two, Samaria and Galilea, which two last are sometimes referred to Phœnicia.

f Ios. Antiq. 11.5.

g Palestina diuided into 3. parts { Galilæa Samaria Iudæa.

Galilæa was the most Northerly, confining on Libanus and Antilibanus toward the North, Phœnicia Westerly, Cœlosyria on the East, and Samaria, with Arabia, inclosing her Southerly borders; Iordan parteth it in the middest. It was diuided into the higher and lower Galilee: the higher called also Galilee of the Gentiles, contayneth the springs of Iordan, and those Cities which Salomon gaue to Hiram. The lower was also called Galilee of Tiberias, that Citie giuing name both to the Lake and Region: in which Nazareth was famous, and the hill Thabor.

Samaria is seated betwixt Galilee and Iudæa, much lesse then either of them. Iudæa is the most Southerly; betweene the Mediterranean and Dead Seas, Samaria and Idumea. Plinie h maketh Galilæa a part of it, and Peræa another part, separated from the rest by Iordan. The rest he diuideth into ten Toparchies; Ierico, Emaus, Lidda, Ioppe, Acrabatena, Gophnitica, Thamnitica, Bethelene, Tephene, Orine, in which was Ierusalem farre the faireſt of the Cities of the East, not of Iudæa alone: Herodium, with a famous Towne of the same name. Hee addeth vnto these the Region of Decapolis, so called of the number of the Townes, and the Tetrarchies; Trachonitis, Paneas, Abila, Arca, Ampeloessa, Gabe. Those ten Townes of Decapolis, were Cæsarea Philippi, Asor, Cedes Neptalim, Sephet, Corozain, Capharnaum, Bethsaida, Iotapata, Tiberias, and Bethsan, otherwise called Scythopolis, and before Nysa, where Bacchus buried his Nurse. But these are parts of those former parts aboue mentioned; and so may wee say of the rest, sustayning in diuers respects, diuers diuisions, best fitting to the present polities, and little to our purpose.

The ſecond hill was Mount Moriah, which Dauid bought of Arauna, to erect thereon the Temple. The third was the higher Acra, called the Suburbe. Theſe were compaſſed with one wall without, and within diuided with three walls, by which the Citie of Dauid, and Moriah, and the higher Acra, were ſeuered. In the circuit of the walls were nine gates. Hee that deſireth further to reade, or rather to ſee the old Ieruſalem, with her holy Fabriques, let him reſort to Arias Montanus his Antiquitates Iudaicæ, where he both relateth, and in figures preſenteth theſe things. Epiſtle hath theſe words: Ipſa Metropolis tua prius Iebus, poſtea Salem, tertio Hieroſolyma, & nunc Ælia; As if it were called Iebus, before it had the name of Salem, which is not ſo probable. Yea, Ierome himſelfe in his 126. Epiſtle confutes Ioſephus, and the vulgar opinion that Salem was Ieruſalem: and ſayth, that Salem was a Towne neere to Scythopolis which remayned to his time, where alſo were ſtill ſhewed the ruines of Melchiſedeks Palace, the monument of her ancient and antiquate ſplendor. The like Saint Ambroſe in his Commentarie on Hebr. 7. The Kings thereof were anciently called Melchi-zedek, or Adoni-zedek, that is, Kings or Lords of Iuſtice, or of Zedek, which ſome will haue the firſt name thereof, and Salem the ſecond; this ſignifieth Peace. Righteouſneſſe [l] indeed and peace did here kiſſe each other, when the [m] Lord our righteouſneſſe here preached peace, and was made our peace and righteouſneſſe, the true Melchizedek, whoſe Kingdome [n] is righteouſneſſe, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghoſt. It was after called Ieruſalem by addition of the word Iereth, as ſome thinke, to the former name Salem. For ſo it is ſaid of Abraham, [o] when GOD tried his obedience in here offering his ſonne, hee called the place Ichoua iereh, the Lord will prouide, from which and Salem by compoſition ariſeth this name, ſo fitting both the Citie and myſterie. Ioſephus [p] ſayth, it was firſt called Solyma, and by Melchiſedech named Hieroſolyma, of a Temple by him there built, as if Ieȝȣ had beene the language of Ieruſalem: elſewhere [q] he attributeth it to Dauid, from an Hebrew deriuation, which and other like Etimologies haue cauſed Maſius [r] to pronounce him ignorant of the Hebrew, and educated onely in the Greeke, as Scaliger ſomewhere affirmeth of Philo his companion in Nation, learning, and in that Grecian eloquence wherein they neuer had companions, neither of their owne, nor ſcarſe of any other Nation. The Iebuſites after poſſeſſed (and of them ſome deriue the name Ieruſalem, quaſi Iebuſſalem) till Dauid expelled them: who had before raigned in Hebron (called Cariatharbe, the Citie of foure men, ſay ſome, becauſe of Adam, Abraham, Iſaac and Iacob, their both dwelling and buriall there; yet Adam, others ſay, was buried in mount Caluarie, with other ſpeculations curious, and vncertaine.) Hee tranſlated the higheſt ſeat both of ſpirituall and temporall Regiment to Ieruſalem, where he raigned after, three and thirtie yeeres, to whom ſucceeded Salomon, and the reſt in order. It then contayned in circuit fiftie furlongs, compaſſed with a great ditch threeſcore foot deepe, and two hundred and fiftie broad. Nabuchodonoſor deſtroyed it, Nehemias re-edified it, three and thirtie furlongs in circuit: The Machabees, Herod, and others, added to her excellence, till Titus beſieged and tooke it; in which ſiege are ſaid to haue periſhed eleuen hundred thouſand people; and being now a Sepulchre of dead carkaſſes, was made a ſpectacle of diuine vengeance, for murthering the Lord of Life. But thoſe ſtruggling ſpirits, and ſmall remnants of life, which remayned in this forlorne carkaſſe of the ſometime Ieruſalem, breathed a new rebellion, in the time of Adrian, and thereby breathed her laſt, as before is ſaid. Bernard de Breidenbach ſayth, he neuer ſaw any place which had a fairer proſpect then Ieruſalem, preſenting to the eye Arabia, the Plaine of Iericho, and the dead Sea. But what doe wee now in Ælia or the now Ieruſalem: whoſe rarities the iournals of many [s] teſtifie. Concerning the former, The Hiſtorie of this Citie the Scripture hath recorded; and where Diuine Hiſtorie endeth, Ioſephus and Hegeſippus (that I ſpeake not of late Writers) haue largely ſupplied, eſpecially concerning her lateſt fates, and as I may terme it, in her funerall Sermon. [t] Strabo, Iuſtine, and others, haue written of this people, but not ſincerely. But the fountaines are cleere enough to acquaint vs with their true originall, which commeth next to bee conſidered.

CHAP. II.

Of the Hebrew Patriarchs, and their Religion before the Law: also of their Law and Politie.

§. I.

Of the Patriarchs, and Religion before the Law.

THE name of Hebrewes some deriue from Abraham, as if they were called Hebræi, quasi Abrahæi. Arias Montanus [a] telleth vs that this name of Hebrewes was not appropriate to any familie, but common to all such, as hauing passed ouer the Riuer Euphrates, fixed their Tents and abode betweene that Riuer and the great Sea. Hee gathereth this from the Hebrew word [b], which signifieth to passe ouer. Such an one first of all was Heber, seeking a life answerable to his name: whose example (sayth hee) Thare imitated: and after, Abram for his twofold transmigration from Chaldæa, and from Haran, deserued that name, and left it to his posteritie. But [c] Iosephus, [d] Augustine and others, more fitly (in my mind) of Heber the fourth from Shem, the sonne of Noah, with whose familie, as wee haue sayd, continued the ancient Language of the world, called of his name, Hebrew: his sonne Peleg or Phaleg, bearing the name of that diuision, which at the time of his birth the rest of the world in their Languages sustained. This Peleg was grand-father to Serug, whom some affirme to haue beene the first maker of Idols, which were afterwards worshipped by Nahor his sonne, and Thare his Nephew, the father of Abram, who preached openly that there was but [e] one God, Creator, and Gouernour of all things; and by this doctrine prouoking the Chaldæans against him, warned by Oracle, departed towards Canaan.

Bellarmine [f] so eagerly swalloweth this opinion, that he taxeth Caluine of heresie, for attributing to Abraham the contrarie; namely, that Abraham, before GOD called him out of Vr, was an Idolater: an opinion so much more probable then the other, as hauing better authoritie. For Iosh ua [g] obiecteth to the Israelites their fore-fathers Idolatrie, and nameth Abraham amongst them. And Genebrard [h] doth so interprete it; & Masius [i] in his Commentaries on that place, both zealous and learned Papists: yea, Lindanus [k] specifieth the Idolatrie, and calleth him a worshipper of Vesta. [l] Suidas sayth, that Abraham by the obseruation of the Creatures in his studie of Astronomie, lifted vp his mind aboue the starres, and by the glorie, and order of them, learned the knowledge of GOD, neuer ceasing that diuine search, till GOD appeared to him. Which opinion may reconcile both the former: that first he was, and after ceased to be, an Idolater, before God appeared in vision to him. He alledgeth Philo for his Author, that at fourteene yeeres Abraham reproued Thara for seducing men vnto Idolatrie (moued by his priuate lucre) with Images: and seeing the Heauen sometime cleare, sometime cloudie, he gathered, that that could not bee GOD. The like hee concluded of the Sunne and Moone, by their Eclipses (for his father had taught him Astronomie.) At last, GOD appeared, and bade him leaue his Countrey. Whereupon hee tooke his Fathers Images, who (as before is said) was an Image-maker, and partly broke, partly burnt them, and then departed. Suidas further thinketh him the first inuenter of Letters, of the Hebrew tongue, and of the interpretation of dreames; which I leaue to the Authors credit. But for the fault of Abraham before his calling, and other blemishes after, in him and the rest of the Patriarchs; what [m] doe they else, but in abounding of mans sinne, set out the superabounding grace of GOD? and are profitable, as learned Morton [n] in his answere of this cauill, hath out of one of their owne [o] obserued against them, what he had obserued out of Augustine, to these foure purposes: Faith, Instruction, Feare, and Hope: the Faith of the Historie which flattereth, or concealeth the faults of none: Instruction to vertue, by seeing others faults taxed: Feare, for what shall Shrubs doe, if Cedars fall? and Hope, that wee imitate their repentance, by seeing their pardon.

But to returne to our Historie. Many of the Ethnike histories mention him: Berosus commendeth him for his iustice, and skill in Astronomie. Nic. Damascenus sayth, that hee raigned at Damascus, and that in his time, his house continued in Damascus, and was still called by his name: Hecatæus wrote a booke of him, and Alexander Polyhistor telleth, that hee was borne in the tenth generation after the floud in Camarine (or Vrien) a Citie of Babylon. Iosephus [p] addeth, that when famine draue him into Ægypt [q], hee disputed with the the Prieſts, and moſt learned Ægyptians, in queſtions of Diuinitie; and in their diuided Sects, hauing confuted one by another, he communicated to them the truth, both in this, and in Arithmeticke and Aſtronomie, whereof before the Ægyptians were ignorant. Abram (ſayth Maſter Broughton in his Conſent) was borne ſixtie yeeres later then the common account; as appeareth [r] by computation of Terahs age, who died at two hundred and fiue yeeres, and after his death, [f] Abram went from Charan into Canaan, the threeſcore and fifteenth yeere of his owne life; and therefore was borne in the hundred and thirtieth, and not in the ſeuentieth yeere of his father, in the three hundred fiftie and two yeere after the Floud; whereas the common opinion reckoneth the two hundred ninetie and two. To Abram GOD had giuen commandement, ſaying: Goe from thy Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and from thy Fathers houſe into the Land which I ſhall ſhew thee, and I will make of thee a great Nation, &c.

His Hiſtorie is fully related by Moſes, and his progenie alſo; whereof Iſmael his Sonne by Agar, and other his ſonnes which he had by Ketura his ſecond wife, he ſent to inhabite the Eaſt Countrey (Arabia) in his life time; but Iſaac was made his Heire, both temporall and ſpirituall: to whom Iacob ſucceeded in the promiſed bleſſing: who with his ſonnes and familie went downe into Ægypt, where his poſteritie multiplied exceedingly, and were called ſometimes Ebrewes, of their ancient pedegree; ſometime Iſraelites, of the name Iſrael, giuen to Iacob by the Angell, Gen. 32.28. Their whole Hiſtorie ſo largely and plainely in holy Writ recorded, I feare to make [t] Mine, by euill reciting: Thoſe Fountaines are more open to all, then that any ſhould neede ours, or others Brookes, mixed with ſome myrie earth (at leaſt) in the paſſage: (and my intent is to bee largeſt in relation of thoſe things which are not in the Scriptures; onely touching thoſe things briefly for order ſake.) Their Religion, meane while, was the beſt amongſt the beſt, though ſtayned in ſome, as Rachel, which ſtale her father Labans Idols; and Iacob was forced to reforme his Familie in this reſpect; and after in Ægypt they were corrupted with the Ægyptian ſuperſtition, as [u] Ezechiel proteſts againſt them. The manner of Diuine worſhip was not ſo ſtraitly limited, as afterwards to perſons and places. By Reuelation and Tradition they receiued the religious worſhip, wherein they inſtructed their poſteritie: vntill that in their extremeſt thraldome GOD ſent Moſes and Aaron to deliuer them: vnder whoſe conduct they paſſed through the Sea and Wilderneſſe to the brinkes of Iordan, receiuing in the [x] way that Law, which as a Tutor or Schoole-maſter, was in that their nonage to traine them vp, vntill that full and ripe age, when [y] GOD ſent his Sonne made of a woman, made vnder the Law, that hee might redeeme them that were vnder the Law, that wee might receiue the adoption of Sonnes.

§. II.

Of the Law of MOSES, the twelue Tribes, and of Proſelytes.

OF this Law, although Moſes hath giuen vs an abſolute relation in Scripture, whereof he was the firſt Pen-man (of that at leaſt which remayneth vnto vs) yet if wee ſhall out of him, bring them into their order, and ranke them vnder their ſeuerall heads, as Sigonius [a] and others haue done; it ſhall not be, I thinke, ouertedious to the Reader. The Law is diuided vſually, into the [b] Morall, Ceremoniall, and Iudiciall, as parts of the ſame: the firſt deliuered on the Mount Sinai, by the dreadfull voice of the Almightie God, and by the finger of God, written after in Tables of ſtone, called Ten words, ſummarily abridged into two Commandements, by the Law-giuer himſelfe; [c] The firſt and great Commandement enioyning the loue of GOD; the ſecond, of our NEIGHBOVRS; that God, who himſelfe is Charitie, impoſing nothing but the louely yoke of Loue and Charitie vnto his ſeruants. This Law is eternall, written firſt in the hearts of our firſt Parents, which being defaced, it was written againe in the ſtonie Tables of the Law, where it was but a killing letter, till Grace and Truth by IESVS CHRIST indited and indented it in the fleſhy Tables of the Goſpell, as [d] Chriſts new Commandement written in renewed hearts, and ſhall for euer be then grauen in thoſe ſpirituall Tables, when wee that here are [e] Naturall men, ſhall riſe againe Spirituall men; and ſhall be the Law of that holy Citie, the new Ieruſalem; this being then perfected, when [f] Faith, and Hope, and this World ſhall bee finiſhed. The other parts Ceremoniall and Iudiciall, were (for the particulars) proper vnto that Nation, the one reſpecting the manner of Diuine ſeruice, the other of ciuill Gouernment: not giuen (as the other) immediatly to the Iſraelites by GOD himſelfe, but communicated in the Mount to Moſes, that hee might acquaint the people withall. death of Christ these died, and had their consumption with his consummatum est, the Iudicials remayning euer since dead, the ceremonies deadly: only they were as it were for their more honourable funerall after that their death, detayned some time aboue ground: and those ceremonies which before Christ were necessarie, in the times of the Apostles, till the Iewish Church might be instructed, became indifferent, but since meerely vnlawfull; neither can it now but be sacrilegious to violate the sepulchres of the dead.

This Nation was diuided, as is said alreadie, into Tribes, according to the number of Iacobs sonnes, amongst whom Leui had no portion (but the Lord was their portion, they seruing at the Altar, and liuing of the Altar) but eight and fortie Cities with their suburbs assigned for their habitation, amongst other Tribes, that being so dispersed, they might disperse also, and preach the Law to the rest: and were reckoned [g] to that Tribe with which they dwelled: and whereas others might not marrie [h], for feare of alienation of their inheritances, into another Tribe, this of Leui either had, or tooke libertie herein, as *Iudg.*19. and 2. Chron. 22. Ioiada married the Kings sister; and thus Elizabeth, wife of Zacharie the Priest, might be Cousin to Marie the Mother of our Lord. The number of twelue remayned yet entire, in reckoning of these Tribes, because Ioseph had a double portion, and his sonnes, Ephraim and Manasses, made two Tribes. Neither were they alone reckoned Israelites, that naturally descended from some one of these twelue sonnes of Israel, but such also of other Nations as embraced their Ceremonies and Religion; being for distinction sake called Proselytes. The Hebrew [i] word which is interpreted a Proselyte, signifieth extracted, or drawne forth, because they esteemed such, drawne forth of Hell: whom yet they made the children of Hell, more then themselues, in burthening their consciences, not onely with those Ceremonies whereunto the Law and their Tradition tyed them, but with diuers others also. The name Proselite, as Drusius affirmeth, [k] is either taken largely for any stranger, or strictly for a conuert to their Religion. A Proselyte was made with obseruation of three things, Circumcision, Baptisme or Washing, and Oblation. The first was a signe of the Couenant, in which they were receiued: the second as a badge of their cleanesse; (for all the Gentiles were vncleane) the third, for the atonement with GOD. This was while the Temple stood, and now is not in force: but whether Baptisme be still vsed, I know not. Hee ought to be circumcised in the presence of three. And if by nature [l] or accident he were before circumcised, and wanted that fore-skin, yet did they cut him there, and made him bleede notwithstanding: and when his wound was whole, then before three witnesses was hee baptised, in which ceremonie they couered the whole body with water. This manner of baptising they vsed also in reconciling and receiuing penitents, which had giuen scandall by notorious offences, in token of repentance, & newnesse of life, hauing first before this washing testified their humiliation by fasting and prayer. Of this washing they were so scrupulous, that [m] Clemens Alexandrinus testifieth, they were often washed in their beds. A woman Proselite was admitted by Baptisme onely, and the offering of two Turtles, or two Pigeons. Serarius sayth, Baptisme and Circumcision are still required: the like is written by P. Ricius and [n] Munster, who adde, that when any desireth to become a Proselyte, they propound to him the hardest things of the Law, with the promises of future happinesse, as of the Sabbath, not eating fat, &c. with some penances that hee should not after say, had I wist; and they would seeme to bee willing by these meanes, to driue them from their Religion, as being corrupted by such new commers; but Christ affirmeth otherwise.

Of the Hebrew Politie and ciuill Gouernement.

THe gouernement of this people was, as [o] Betramus thinketh, (before Iethro's aduice had brought in those Gouernours of thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens) vnder seuentie Elders, according to the number of persons, which descended with [p] Iacob into Egypt: and that the seuentie assigned after to Moses for assistants in the gouernement, were continued in their former office with further ratification and encrease of gifts, and not newly instituted. Yea this number, hee sayth, gouerned in Egypt, howsoeuer Pharaohs tyrannie did afterward much eclipse their authoritie, and were by Moses and Aaron assembled together, *Exod.*4.29. So that the thirteene Tribes consisted of seuerall Families, according to the number of the chiefe heads thereof mentioned by [q] Moses, to which the thirteene Princes of the thirteene Tribes being annexed, made vp the number. His reasons let such as will, learne of himselfe.

The gouernement in that time of Moſes was mixt the Monarchy being in Moſes, but qualified with an Ariſtocratie in theſe ſeuenty, and the other Officers before mentioned; a Democratie alſo appeared in the Aſſemblies ſo often mentioned. In lighter matters the Chiliarchs, Centurions, Quinquagenarij, and Decurions iudged: in more weighty, the ſeuenty. Thus it continued in Ioſhua's time, till they had conquered and inhabited Cities. And then each Citie had their Senate or Councell of the Chiliarchs, and other Officers before named, proportionable to the greatneſſe thereof. [r] Ioſephus numbreth ſeuen Elders, and two Leuites in euery City, which ſeemeth more to agree with his time then this former. Euen in Bethlehem the leaſt of the thouſands of Iuda, Boaz [ſ] aſſembled ten Elders about the matter of Ruth. It ſeemeth that they had Leuites aſſiſting in the iudgements and Tribunals, as men learned in the Law: and ſo we reade of the times of Dauid and Iehoſhaphat. But I had rather ſend my Reader for theſe things to the Scriptures, and to the labors of Betramus and Sigonius: from all which it is alſo apparant, that the State was after Moſes and Ioſhua, managed by Iudges of diuers Tribes, not by Election nor inheritance ſucceeding in that Office, but by appointment of God, till they deſired a king, whereas before God was their king, and by his Law partly, partly by Oracle ruled the State, being, as ſome thinke, an Ariſtocraty. There were alſo in the times of theſe Iudges, Princes of each Tribe, and the heads of Families: There was alſo a gouernement in each City by the Elders or Senate, exerciſed in the Gates thereof, as before is obſerued. They had accordingly their Councels or Aſſemblies, either of the whole Nation, or of a whole Tribe, or of ſome one Citie.

The kingdome of Iſrael, after it was diuided from the houſe of Dauid, continued the like forme of gouernement, as is moſt probable. After the Captiuity, it appeareth by the Hiſtories of Hezra and Nehemiah, that the chiefe ſway was vnder the Lieutenant or Deputie of the Perſian king, according to commiſſion from him. Other Offices happily receiued ſome alteration in regard of their numbers and eſtate, weaker and leſſe then in thoſe former times of proſperity, ſo that what Ioſephus hath written of ſeuen Elders in each City, and thoſe things which in the Talmud are written of their Politie, had now firſt (as ſome [t] thinke) their beginning. Concerning this, becauſe it is not ſo common, let me haue leaue for a larger diſcourſe out of the Talmudical Sanhedrin, which thus recordeth. [u] Matters which concerne goods are determined by three; criminall caſes by a Councell of three and twenty. But ſuch things as belong to a whole Tribe, a falſe Prophet, or the high Prieſt, by the great Councell at Ieruſalem of ſeuenty and one. The high Prieſt iudgeth and is iudged: he ſitteth at Funerals on a little Seare, all the multitude ſitting on the ground. The king iudgeth not and is not iudged, giueth teſtimony againſt none, nor none againſt him. Hee maketh Warres, but not without conſent of the Sanhedrin: he may not haue aboue eighteene wiues: he ought to haue the booke of the Law written, and hanging about his necke. In ciuill cauſes, each of the Litigants chooſeth a Iudge or Arbitrator [x], and both theſe thus choſen chooſe a third. Of this Office are vncapable, Dicers, Vſurers, and ſuch as practiſe diſhoneſt courſes for gaine: They alſo which are of neere kindred to the parties, may neither be Iudges nor Witneſſes. Their Companions or Aduerſaries may giue teſtimony, but not iudgement. Women and Seruants might not be witneſſes, Ioſ. Antiq 4.7. Nor a Thiefe, Robber, Vſuret, Publican, Child, or keeper of Doues. Ph. Ferdinand. This laſt Ricius doth not mention, but addeth a Gentile, Foole, Deafe, Blinde. The ancienteſt witneſſe is firſt examined: and that from his owne ſight, or the debters mouth, or elſe it is nothing. Thirtie daies after ſentence giuen, the Defendant may alleage what hee can for himſelfe. The odde number is the caſting voice. In criminall cauſes decided by three and twenty, one odde voice abſolueth, but there muſt be aboue twelue of the three & twenty to condemne; and when ſentence is giuen, nothing may be alleaged further for accuſation, which for abſolution is lawfull. And he which hath ſpoken for the accuſed, may not after ſpeake againſt him. Ciuill cauſes are examined in the day, and ſentenced in the night; but criminall [y] only by day: and ſentence of condemnation may not be pronounced the ſame day, and therefore on holy-dayes Eeuens examinations are forbidden. Proſelytes and Baſtards may determine ciuill cauſes: Prieſts and Leuits with other Iſraelites, are required in criminall. Theſe Iudges ſate in a ſemicircle, [z] hauing one Scribe or Regiſter on the right hand, & another on the left: In the Seſſion-houſe were preſent beſides, three orders of Students which ſate on the ground according to their degree, out of which the number of the Senators were ſupplied when neede was, ſo that one of the firſt order being made Senator, another was choſen out of the ſecond order into his place, and out of the third in the roome of the ſecond, and out of the people into that third Order. The witneſſes muſt teſtifie only from their own ſight, and that exactly, what [a] ſeuenth yeere of the Iubilee, what yeere of that ſeuenth, what moneth, what day of the moneth, and weeke, and in what houre and place hee ſaw it. to saue or lose an Israelite, is asmuch as to preserue or destroy the frame of the World; if one witnesse be ignorant of any of those circumstances, or contradicteth another, his testimony is vaine. None of the Students which sit by may be suffered to accuse, if they can say any thing in defence of the partie they may. If they cannot finde sufficient to absolue him that day, the Senators or Iudges scanne that matter seriously, two or three together all night, vsing a spare diet. If twelue condemne, and the rest cleere him, they adde to the number of Iudges till they make vp seuenty and one to make further search. When sentence is pronounced, the condemned person is carried away, and brought againe foure or fiue times, to see whether hee or any other can say any thing for his purgation. And if nothing bee alleaged sufficient to reuerse the sentence, he is led to execution, [b] the Cryer going before him and proclayming the crime and sentence and accusers, that if any can then say any thing in his behalfe, he may speake. When he commeth within ten cubits of the place of execution, he is admonished to confesse his fault, and so hee shall haue part in the life to come: and if he know not the forme of confession, it is enough for him to say; Let death be vnto me the remission of all my sinnes. Being within foure cubits, he is stripped naked all but his priuities: if it bee a woman, shee is led forth in her cloathes. The stoning place was built twice the height of a man, from whence by one of the witnesses he was cast downe head-long, the ground beneath being set with flints; and if he died not with the fall, another of the witnesses smote him neere the heart with a flint, which if it did not finish his death, the whole multitude cast stones at him. They might not condemne aboue one in one day, to death. He which was stoned, if he were a man, was presently hanged on a Gibbet, and after taken downe and buried with other persons which had before suffered in like manner. When the flesh was there consumed, his bare bones might bee laid in his owne, or his fathers Sepulcher. After this, his friends and kinsemen went to the Iudges and witnesses, and saluting them, acknowledged the iustice of their fact. Besides this punishment of stoning, [c] they punished with the fire, sword, or strangling. The manner of burning was, to put the condemned person in dung vp to the arme-holes, and one executioner on one side, and another on the other, graned him with a linnen cloth about his neck, pulling the same till they forced him to gape, and then a bar or rod of burning metall was thrust downe into his body. The sword was vsed in beheading. Strangling was done with a course piece of linnen, pulled close about his neck, till he were dead. It would be too long to shewe what faults were appropriated to each of these kindes of execution. If a man had deserued two of them, he was to be punished with the most seuere. In some cases of homicide, the guilty person was put in a little-ease prison, where he was forced alway to stand, and was fed onely with Barly till his belly rotted, and his bowels fell out. Any one might presently slay him which had stolne any of the holy Vessels, or blasphemed the name Iehoua. The Priest which exercised his function, while he was polluted, was not brought to iudgement; but other Priests, chosen to that purpose, led him out of the holy place and knocked out his braines. From the Sanhedrin was no appeale: They were also called Mehokekim, that is, Scribes or Law-giuers, because whatsoeuer they deliuered or writ was receiued for a Law.

Their Colledge, saith Galatinus [d], (who from their fayling prooueth that the Messias is come) represented that Scepter, by the holy Ghost in Iacob promised to Iuda: and therefore not only vnder the Kings and Iudges did exercise iudgement, but also when there was no King or Iudge in Israel. Of their qualitie it is thus written. They appointed none [e] (said R. Iohanan) but men of wisedome, stature, and of goodly presence, and of old age, and cunning in exorcismes, and vnderstanding the seuenty Tongues, that they might not need interpreters. Their Stature and comlinesse, Rabbi Selomoh saith, was required to acquire them reuerence; and skill in enchantment, to conuince such Wizards. There were required the whole number of seuenty and one, in determining the going to Warre, in adding to a Citie, or the reuenues of the Temple, or in conuenting the ordinarie Iudges of the Tribes; To constitute one of this number, they vsed imposition of hands (R. Iudas saith) of fiue. A Wolfe, Lyon, Beare, Leopard, and Serpent, were to be slaine by the three and twentie.

The great Colledge called Sanhedre ghedola, consisted of seuenty and one, the lesse of three and twenty. That odde number aboue seuenty, was to supply the roome of Moses, which was ouer those first seuenty. Hereby Galatinus gathereth, that in the Councell that condemned Christ, there was the whole number of seuenty and one, which is true; if Herod had not before disanulled that society. The greater Sanhedrin ordained the lesse; for those seuenty ordained all the Sessions of Iudges, which in other Cities and Places ruled the people: and to this Court of the seuenty in Ierusalem they were all subiect. The place where they sate was called Gazith, that is, Carued, whereof this Court had the name (as c He which was stoned for Blasphemy, was hanged til Sun set, and then his gibbet and he buried together. The stone which they vsed in his death, was also buried, likewise the Sword which they vsed in beheading, and the linnen cloth vsed in strangling, were buried. *Druf. præt. l. 4. p. 139. the Starre-chamber with vs.) Other Courts or houses of Iudgement, they had diuers, of the three and twenty. One [f] of them sate in the Gate of the Mountaine of the Temple: another in the Gate of the Court: others in euery Citie. And when there was a controuersie, it was first brought to that Citie or Towne, and so to the rest, if occasion required (in order) to that in the Gate of the Mount, after to that in the Court-gate, and last to the Gazith Consistory, in which they sate from Morning till Night. On Sabbaths and solemne dayes they sate on the Wall.

f Three Courts of Iudgesin Ierusalem,

But when Herod obtained the Scepter, he slew Hercanus and his sonne Antigonus, which had beene King and Priest, and also all of the seede Royall, and burnt the Genealogies of their Kings: And further to establish his Throne in blood, hee killed the Scribes and Doctors of the Law, and caused all the Sanhedrin to be done to death. Becausse the Rabbanan (they are the words of the Talmud) had said according to Deut. 17. From among thy brethren thou shalt set a King ouer thee: He slew the Rabbanan or Masters, reseruing only Baba, the sonne of Bota, whose eyes hee after put out. And therefore the Sanhedrin perished: for, as is said, fiue, or at least after R. Ismal, three were necessary to the ordination by the imposition of hands. But there were by Herods permission, other Iudges instituted to be vnder the King, like the former Colledge, but had no authority of sentence in waighty and criminall causes: and therefore they said to Pilate, It is not lawfull for vs to put any man to death, [g] as some thinke. But others maintaine the contrary. Betramus taketh a middle course, that the Iewes might examine and condemne, but then were to present the condemned party to the Roman Magistrate for execution: except in the cause of stoning, wherein they tooke more libertie, as in the Acts of the Apostles, by Stephen and Paules example appeareth. After their false sentence pronounced against Christ, they were expelled from the Consistory Gazith, fortie yeeres before the destruction of the Temple: and afterwards, by the commaundement of the Romanes, were all slaine. They being expelled Gazith, held their Consistory at Hamith, another place in Ierusalem; but, saith R. Abdimi, with the place they lost their power in criminall Iudgements, which might not bee giuen but in Gazith. So do the Rabbines interpret the words, Deut. 17.10. According to the words which they of that place shew thee, thou shalt doe. They had inferior punishments with the whippe for smaller offences: In which the Law had stinted them at forty stripes, and they abated one of that number for feare of exceeding: as [h] Paul saith, Hee had fiue times receiued forty stripes saue one. The [i] whippe was of Calues leather, as Drusius affirmeth. Betramus saith, that they had in each City seuen Iudges in money matters, whereof three were principall, two Leuites, and one of the rest, from whence the number is said to be but three. They had also ten Aediles, Taskers or Iudges of the Market, one of which was of the Priestly Stocke. They had in Ierusalem an vnder-Prouost, or [k] Captaine of the Temple. In other Cities of their dispersion, they had Synagogues and Magistrates, as at Alexandria, Antiochia, Sardis and other Cities, where they had obtained priuiledges and immunities.

That which is spoken of their threefold Consistory, consisting eyther of 3. or 23. or 71. Buxtorfius thus relateth, that that of 3. was appointed in such habitations, which had vnder the number of 120. House-holders, and that it behooued alwaies two of the three to agree in their sentence. The other of twenty three was in greater Townes or Cities, and dealt in greater matters: the former in money matters, this in criminall, and in the Gates of the City, and was called the Iesse Synedrium. The greater was at Ierusalem, where the wisest was chosen to bee President of the Councell, as successour to Moses, Caput Curiæ (so they called him and Nasi) the wisest of the other 70. was adioyned as his Colleague, called Ab-beth-din, The Father of the Consistory. These two sate alone, somewhat separate from the rest which made a halfe circle, so that these two might see them all. The manifold mutations of their State by the Babylonians, Persians, Macedonians, Egyptians, Syrians, Romans, and ciuil wars amongst themselues, did both then change the face of Gouernement, and haue made it now to vs obscure and vncertaine.

Of the Iewish Excommunications.

NOW concerning the Iewish Excommunications, Drusius [a] hath obserued, that the Iewes had three kinds and degrees of Excommunications. Niddui, Herem, Samatha: the first signifieth a Remouing; the second, Anathema; the third, the same which the Apostle calleth Maran-atha. by the first they are made ἀποσυναγώγους (of which is an example, Gen. 4.4.) excommunicated from the Ecclesiasticall Assemblies. Hee which which was thus Excommunicated was called: Menudde, and the denouncers Menuddim. There were foure and twenty causes for the which it was inflicted. If any died therein without repentance, they iudged him worthy of stoning, and therfore stoned his coffin: whereof they c giue example in one Eleazer the sonne of Henoch. They might enter the Temple when they were excommunicated; but that they might enter the Synagogue is vnlikely. This they vrge, d Salomon made two doores in the Temple; one for mourners and excommunicates, the other for the newly married: At this, if any entred, the Israelites which came on the Sabbaths, and sate betwixt those doores, said; He whose name dwelleth in this house, glad thee with children; If any entred at the other doore with his vpper lippe couered, they knew that he was a mourner, and said; He which dwelleth in this house, reioyce and comfort thee: If his lippe were not couered, they knew that hee was Menudde, Excommunicate, and said; He which dwelleth in this house, put into thy heart to heare the words of thy fellowes, &c. When the Temple was destroyed, they decreed that the Bridegroomes and Mourners should enter the Synagogue, and the men which saw them reioyced with the one, and sate on the ground with the other. If they did not amend, they were excommunicated with a greater curse, or Anathema: And if they persisted obstinate, they did Samatize them. The word Anathema is sometimes taken generally, but heere for a particular kinde. Maran-atha signifieth, The Lord commeth; and so doth Sem-atha. For by Sem, and more emphatically, Hassem, they vsed to signifie the name, meaning that Tetragrammaton, and ineffable name of God, now commonly pronounced e Iehouah. It may also be compounded of Sama, after the Chaldee forme; or of Sam and mitha, which signifieth; There is death. Some Authors ascribe this to the institution of Henoch: which they gather out of Iudg. 14.

CHAP. III.

Of the Religious places of the Israelites: their Tabernacle, Temples, Synagogues.

IN the discouery of their antient Religion, it seemeth fittest to discourse first of Places; secondly, of Times; Thirdly, of Rites; Fourthly, of Persons consecrated to Religion. And first of the first. Neither were the first men, a nor first Hebrews very Religious in this point of dedicating Places to Religion; as appeareth in Histories both holy and Prophane: And if for some vision, made vnto them in some places, they did for a time hallow the same with Altars and Sacrifices: yet neither were they alway, or only thus esteemed. But Hee, Whose is the Earth, and all that therein is, did by his Law appoint, as it were, a place of his residence amongst these, whom he had chosen for his owne people, And commanded them to erect a Tabernacle in the wildernesse, fitting that their peregrination. Afterward Salomon built him an house in Ierusalem: which therefore is called the holy Citie, and the Citie of the great King.

The TABERNACLE (a moueable Temple that might be taken asunder, and ioyned together againe) was, by Gods commandement, erected in the wildernesse, in the same manner, and of the same matter, which God had both commanded and shewed to Moses in the Mount; the matter and forme whereof, with all that thereunto appertained; the Arke; the Candlestick, the Altar, &c. In the booke of Exodus are liuely declared. It was after (as we reade in the booke of b Ioshua) with great solemnitie carried miraculously thorow Iordan, by the Leuites deputed to that seruice: And, after their conquest of the Countrey, c placed in Shilo, a Citie of Ephraim. There did Ioshua diuide the Land to her new Conquerors; there were their solemne Assemblies for State and religion. In the time of Heli they remoued the Arke from the Tabernacle into the Armie, which they had gathered against the Philistims, of whom the Arke was taken. The Tabernacle in the time of Saul, was carried to Nob; and, in the time of Dauid, to Gibeon, where Salomon offered a thousand burnt offerings. The Philistims forced by Diuine iudgements, sent backe the Arke, receiued by the Bethsamites, curious to their cost; It was after placed in Kiriath-Iarim, in the house of Aminadab, next of Obed-Edom, and then by Dauid in the place, which hee had fitted for the same in Ierusalem: Whence it was remoued into the Temple, which Salomon had built; where it was till the time of the deportation: in which time d it was (saith the Author of the second booke of the Maccabees) hidden by Ieremie the Prophet. holden to the Councell of Trent for his credit: the Iewes themselues in that point, not beleeuing him; who affirme, that the second Temple came short of the former, by the want of the fire from Heauen, of the Arke, of the Vrim and Thummim, of the spirit of Prophets, and the glory of God betweene the Cherubims.

c R. Samuel in lib. Sanhedrim. Hierosol cap. Elluhen haggel. Pet. Galatin l. 4. Genebrard. in Chron.

The TEMPLE was built on Mount Moriah by Salomon, according to the patterne, which he had receiued of Dauid: to which worke he had gathered a greater masse of wealth, then easily we shall reade of in the Persian, Greeke, Romane, or any other Christian, Turkish, or Heathen Empire; namely, one hundred thousand talents of Golde, ten hundred thousand talents of siluer, and afterward three thousand Talents of Gold, and seuen thousand Talents of Siluer: to which was added, by the offerings of the Princes, ten thousand talents of siluer, and more then fiue thousand talents of Gold, besides Iewels, and brasse, and iron, without weight, with Cedars and stones without number. The Gold amounteth after the common computation of the common talent, at sixe thousand crownes, to six hundred forty eight millions of crownes, and vpward: the siluer to about the same summe. But that which by vs is vnderualued (accounting to the talent but six thousand crownes, as some doe) Master Brerewood in his learned worke de ponderibus & precijs &c. raiseth to a higher summe; estimating the talent at foure thousand fiue hundred pounds; so that the hundred thousand talents of Gold, which Dauid had prouided for that worke, amount to foure hundred and fifty millions of our pounds: and his million of siluer talents (each of which is three hundred seuenty fiue pound) to three hundred seuenty fiue millions: besides thirteene millions and fiue hundred thousand pounds in gold, and two millions sixe hundred twenty fiue thousand pounds in siluer, afterwards by Dauid offered to the same purpose: and by his Princes twenty two millions fiue hundred thousand seuen thousand and fiue hundred pounds in gold; and three millions seuen hundred and fifty thousand pounds in siluer: * That I speake not all other prouisions of iewels, metals and timber, and the rest. Now all that Cyrus got by the * conquest of an Asia, is valued but at one hundred twenty fiue millions, if wee summe his fiue hundred thousand talents, after the Ægyptian account, which is a great deale more then Alexander found in the Persian Treasury (so much renowned) both at Susis and Persopolis, which (as Strabo hath numbred) were but thirty two millions, and seuen hundred and fifty thousand pounds. That summe of Dauid, I confesse, had often troubled mee, nor could I euer finde satisfaction in that doubt. But in my opinion, Master Brerewoods coniecture is probable, that the Hebrew word in that place doth not signifie a Talent; or that the word Talent doth not alway signifie the same summe in Scripture: euen as amongst other Nations it also varied, and sometimes was vsed for a small summe, as hee sheweth out of Homer, Pollux and others. Howsoeuer therefore, I will not so vilifie this Talent here, as to esteeme it with some * but a shekel; yet I would take it (as the notation of the word may inferre) but for some massie piece of metall.

* The summe of all was eight hundred sixty and seuen millions, three hundred eighty two thousand fiue hundred pounds.

i Vid Drus. Prat. praz. 150. Seder Olam. Rabba & S. O. Zuta reckon otherwise, with a greater absurditie, ascribing to Cyrus three yeeres, to Assuerus (who they thinke, succeeded) foureteene: and then Darius, &c

This beautifull frame I should deforme with my description, if (after a double narration of all the parts, forme, and contents thereof in the History of the Bible) I should recite the particulars. This Temple, fleeced by some, repaired by others, continued in variety of state, till the sacking and ruine of it, together with the City, by Nebuchodonosor. And after their reture, by the edict of Cyrus, and other the Persian Kings, it was rebuilded (but farre inferiour in glory) in the space, as the Iewes say, h vnto Christ, of six and forty yeeres: after others it was longer in hand, by reason of impediments from their cauilling, and malicious neighbours. But this error (if we vnderstand them of the building of Zorobabel) proceeded from the Iewish ignorance of the Persian i Chronologie, which knew no other Persian Darius but one, attributing to Cyrus one and thirty yeeres, to Cambyses nine, to the Magi seuen moneths: and in the sixth yeere of Darius which followed (as they accounted) was the Temple finished: all which amount to six and forty. They confound Darius Nothus (to whose times the most and best of our moderne Chronographers, Scaliger, Iunius, Caluisius, Liuely, and others referre this rebuilding of the Temple) with that former Darius the sonne of Histaspes, and from that second yeere of Darius Nothus, wherein the Edict was made for the Temple, doth k Scaliger beginne the reckoning of Daniels seuenty weekes and a halfe (as he interpreteth) accounting from thence to the destruction of this Temple, foure hundred fourescore and thirteene yeeres and a halfe. This second Temple hauing receiued accesse of magnificence in succession of times, was spoyled and polluted vnder Antiochus, who dedicated the same to Iupiter Olympius; but being freed and dedicated anew by Maccabæus, it recouered great part of the former beautie; till, as l Iosephus saith, and his abbreuiator Iosippus, it was pulled downe by Herod, and built anew. Herein both that allegation of the Iewes of six and forty yeeres, is against this assertion of Iosephus, and the History also of m Hegesippus, who reporteth, that he onely compassed the circuit about the Temple with a wall, and beautified the same with costly buildings, erected from the foundatiō the Porches about the Sanctuary quary, and fortified it with the Castle Antonia: but some account this Hegesippus a counterfeit.

Chrysostome[n] more probably vnderstands those words of the Iewes, Forty and six yeeres was this Temple a building, of the Herodian Temple: and herein [o] Scaliger, Hospinian, and the great Cardinall Baronius follow him: accounting exclusiuely from the eighteenth yeere of Herods raigne, which Funccius reckoneth An. M. 3947. to the yeere 3992. in which John baptized, and Christ vttered these words: in all which they coniecture that somewhat was still a doing about the new building thereof, although the principall part thereof, was performed and finished by Herod, in eight yeeres. This they gathered by Iosephus, his owne Testimony, that the building continued till the time of Nero, and in another place, where he affirmeth that the East porch, which Luke calls [p] Salomons Porch, was still remaining of the ancient building; in the dayes of Nero. For thus hee saith in the last booke of his Antiquities, speaking of the times of Albinus, fourescore and three yeeres after Herod began this worke, as Scaliger reckoneth. Now the building of the Temple was finished. The people therefore seeing eighteene hundred worke-men, which had before been wont to liue by that building, idle, and vnwilling that the money should be laid vp, lest it might become a prey to the Romans: carefull also to prouide for the worke-men: perswaded the [q] King to re-edefie the East Porch, which closed vp the outside of the Temple, hanging ouer a deepe and narrow valley, borne vp by a wall of foure hundred cubits height, and the length of euery stone was twenty cubits, the thicknes six; the worke of King Salomon which first built the Temple. But the King, to whom Claudius Cæsar had committed the building of the Temple, seeing that it required much time, great expence, &c. refused. Thus it is apparant, that all the Temple was not demolished till the finall destruction thereof vnder Titus. Neither doe the Iewes in the Talmud speake of any third Temple: Nor can the Prophecy of [r] Haggeus be fulfilled; That the glory of the second Temple, should exceede the glory of the former; if Christ (of whose comming it is interpreted) had not by his presence, preaching, and miracles, not only supplied the defects (before mentioned) but made it surmount the other in effects of Maiesty and glory. And the zeale vnto this Testimony, not the meanest which the Christian veritie [s] vrgeth against the Iewish Incredulitie and Apostasie (which is necessarily demonstrated and euinced, whilest yet they continue their vaine hopes of a Messias, so many Ages after the desolation of that Temple whereof Aggee prophecied) hath caused me to vse so many words in this matter. But to satisfie the fancies of great men, their great workes are commonly made greater: For howsoeuer it was very great in it selfe, that Herod should haue, eight yeeres together, many worke-men at worke (which Iosephus numbreth for some part of the time ten thousand and a thousand Priests) yet sustaining, no doubt, some intermission after his time, either wholly, or in part, it could not be so great as to haue accomplished it wholly from the foundation, wherein Salomon spent seuen yeeres: and besides, what any of the naturall Israelites performed in this worke, hee imployed an hundred three and fifty thousand and six hundred worke-men of the Strangers, or Forrainers found in the Countrey. And whereas the second Temple was but halfe the height of the former, perhaps it is true, that (according to Iosephus) he perfected it to that height of an hundred and twenty Cubits, whereof twenty cubits sanke downe in the settling of the foundations. If any yet will rather thinke this Temple the worke of Herod, then Zorobabel, as a thing which Iosephus by his owne eyes might obserue; Scaliger doth neuertheless salue that prophecy of Aggee. by distinction of the Building, and of the [t] Continuall Sacrifice: Saying, that if it had beene ten times reedified, yet the continuall Sacrifice continuing, causeth that there is no interruption, and that it should still be called but one Temple. It was builded by Herod of white stones, fiue and twenty cubits long, eight thick, and twelue broad. He that would further reade the particulars, let him haue recourse to Iosephus, in his fifteenth booke of Antiquities. This Temple was burned by Titus, in the sack of the City, the same day that before it had beene fired by the Chaldæans. Adrian the Emperour [u] did after destroy the Reliques thereof, that a stone was not left vpon a stone; and there, in the same place, dedicated another Temple to Iupiter, that former being ouer-whelmed with earth. Iulian gaue leaue to the Iewes to re-edifie the Temple, in despight of Christian Religion, and contributed frankly thereto: but Ammianus Marcell. [x], a Heathen Writer, witnesseth; That fire issued out of the Earth, [y] and burned both worke and worke-men: when as an Earth-quake (which had before, saith [z] Zozomen, killed a great many, in the very attempting of this Worke) could not deterre them from proceeding in their purpose: And Crosses, miraculously fallen on the garments of many, did both teach them to forsake their Iudaisme, and to become Christians.

Chrysostome [a] mentioneth this, and saith, That vnder Adrian the Iewes sought to recouer their liberty, and lost their Countrey. Vnder Constantine they attempted the like, who there-therefore cut off their eares, and branded their bodies for Rebels, as the elder of you (saith hee to his Auditors) doe know. And in our daies, about twenty yeeres since, Julian the Emperour was at great expences, appointed Officers, sent for worke-men from all places, thinking to frustrate Christs Prophecie concerning the Temple, and to bring the Iewes to Idolatrie. But so soone as they had attempted this businesse, and barred the foundation, had drawne foorth the Earth, and were now ready to beginne their building; a fire burst forth from the foundations, and burned many, which caused them to cease. And if you now goe to Ierusalem you may see the foundations naked: hereof we all are witnesses. Neither did this happen vnder Christian Emperours, lest any should impute it to the Christians, but vnder an Ethnick, when Christianitie was persecuted. Thus much in effect, Chrysostome, Gregorie Nazianzen [b] also testifieth the same, affirming that the Earth (as it were taking a vomit from the Diuine hand) spued out the stones, which yet till this day had continued therein, and dispersed them to the great damage of the neighbour-buildings.

b Greg. Naz. Orat. 1. in Iulia.

Other holy places they had, which the Scripture mentioneth as high places, which were high hils, or other open and lofty places, shaded for the most part with Trees: The Prophets enuey against them, and [c] they were commanded to be destroyed, together with the Groues: some yet were permitted, either by extraordinary command for a time, as to Gedeon [d] and to Manoah [e]; or because of the Tabernacle at Gibeon, or of the Arke at Ierusalem. The not reforming this toleration of high places is reckoned as an eclipse of Iehosaphats and Asas glory; which Ezekiah and Iosiah quite remoued and polluted. These high and open places it seemeth were consecrated, as fitting to the celestiall bodies; to which, and to Baal (who is interpreted the Sunne) they vsed for the most part on them to Sacrifice. They had also their Houses and Temples for Baal, in Israel and Iuda; and Dan and Bethel were by Ieroboam dedicated to his Ægyptian Idolatrie: and Gilgal was a place of request in this kinde. Salomon also built Temples or houses for his Idolatrous wiues. And to reckon euery particular in this kind, were a worke endlesse; in the 2. Reg. 17. & 23. and other places enough is of them recorded.

Two other Temples were erected of some reputation: one by Sanballat at Samaria, on Mount Garizin, by licence obtained of Alexander the Great, whose part he followed, rebelling against Darius his true Lord. The occasion was, because Manasses, brother of Iaddi the High Priest had married, contrary to Gods law, Nicaso [f] daughter of Sanballat, and was forced either to leaue his Priestly function or Heathenish bed. Whereupon Sanballat, hauing obtained licence to build that Temple aforesaid, constituted him the High Priest thereof, many other Priests for the like fault, resorting thither to him. But of these Samaritanes wee shall haue fitter occasion to say more, when wee come to handle their Sects.

Ptolemæus Philometor [g] granted licence to Onias (the sonne of the high-Priest Onias, whom Antiochus had slaine, who for the same cause had here shrowded himselfe) to build a Temple, indued hereunto by a false interpretation of the Prophecy of Esay at Leontopolis, in the shire, as I may tearme it, or Nomus of Heliopolis: hauing Priests and Leuites ministring therein, and other things answering in some sort to that of Ierusalem. When the Temple of Ierusalem was burnt by Titus, this Temple was shut vp also by Lupus the Deputie, three hundred and thirty yeeres after it had beene builded: and after by his successor Paulinus vtterly despoyled both of the wealth and the Religion. The Citie was called of Onias, Onion. [h] It had a Tower and an Altar like that of Ierusalem, but in steade of a Candlesticke, a Lampe of gold hanging on a chaine of gold; enriched by the Kings with large reuenues.

Synagogues [i] the Iewes had many, both in Ierusalem, where are said to haue beene foure hundred and fourescore, and all Cities of Iudea, and among the Gentiles where the Iewes were dispersed. When they first began to be builded, is vncertaine. Cornelius Betramus [k] thinketh; That the eight and forty Cities of the Leuites had their fit places for Assemblies, whence Synagogues had beginning. In these Synagogues the Archisynagogi were in place of Leuites and Prophets, sometimes diuers in the same Synagogue, as Sosthenes, and Crispus in that of Corinth, which on festiual daies did performe the publique pryers, and read the Law and the Prophets, expounding the same themselues, or authorising others hereunto; so that they which first were called Prophets, were afterward Scribes and Lawyers, and in the Synagogues Archisynagogi. They had authority also, as it seemeth, of Iurisdiction in punishing offenders. The Cities of the Leuites were as Nurseries of learning, and Vniuersities for the studies of Diuinitie. And in the reformation of Religion by Elias and Elisha, the Schooles of the Prophets were as Colledges, and the sonnes of the Prophets students of Diuinitie, which had a Rector ouer them, as may seeme by 2. King. 6. and other places: where also their gesture in hearing their Lectures appeareth to be sitting; and therefore fore their Schooles or Academies were called Seſſions. In their Synagogues alſo they kept both their Ciuill and Eccleſiaſticall Courts. The word Synagogue [m] is taken both for the Aſſemblies, whether in this place, or out of it, and for the place it ſelfe; hauing a Ciuill as well as a Religious vſe. And theſe Synagogues they haue in the place of their diſperſion vnto this day. The order they obſerued in their Synagogues was this; They diſputed and preached ſitting; the * Elders ſate in Chaires which were ſet in order, of which Chriſt ſaith, They loue the chiefe ſeates in Synagogues; thoſe of meaner ſort ſate in ſeates, and the meaneſt of all on the floore vpon Mats: and not onely one did diſpute or interprete, but others in order, not of the Elders alone, but of the inferiour rankes alſo, if any thing were reuealed to them: which Tradition of theirs, Saint Paul ſaith, hee applied to the Chriſtian Aſſemblies of thoſe times. They vſed to pray in their Synagogues ſtanding [n], as did alſo the Primitiue Chriſtians.

Beſides theſe Temples and Houſes conſecrated to God, Ambition, the Ape of deuotion, founded ſome of other nature. Herod the Great, erected a ſumptuous Temple and Citie in the honour of Cæſar, which ſometime had beene called Stratonis turris, and after Cæſarea. The Temple of Cæſar was conſpicuous to them which ſailed farre off in the Sea, and therein were two Statues, one of Rome, the other of Cæſar. The ſumptuouſneſſe of Herods ambition in this Citie, Temple, Theater, and Amphitheater, &c. Ioſephus amply deſcribeth. [o] He built another Temple at Panium, the fountaine of Iordan in honour of Cæſar; and leſt this ſhould ſtirre vp the peoples hearts againſt him to ſee him thus deuoutely prophane, and prophanely deuout, he remitted to them the third part of the tributes. Hee conſecrated Games, after the like Heatheniſh ſolemnitie, in honour of Cæſar, to be celebrated euery fifth yeere at Cæſarea. He built alſo the Pythian Temple at Rhodes of his owne coſt. Hee gaue yeerely reuenue to the Olympyian Games, for maintenance of the Sacrifices and ſolemnity thereof: Quis in rapacitate auarior? Quis in largitione effuſior? He robbed his owne to enrich (or rather vainely to lauiſh out on) others. He ſpared not the Sepulchers of the dead. For the Sepulchre of Dauid had lent before to Hyrcanus three thouſand talentts of ſiluer; which filled him with hope of the like ſpoyle; and entring it with his choiſe friends, hee found no money but precious clothes; and whiles he in a couetous curioſitie ſearched further, he loſt two of his company, by flame (as fame went) breaking out vpon them. Herevpon he left the place, and, in recompence, in the entry of the Sepulchre, built a monument of white Marble.

He built alſo [p] Sebaſte in the Region of Samaria, wherein hee erected a Temple, and dedicated a Court of three furlongs and a halfe of ground before it, to Cæſar. Thus Cæſar was made a God by him, who would not allow Chriſt a place among men, but, that hee might kill him, ſpared not the infants of Bethleem, no not his owne ſonne amongſt the reſt, as this his god ieaſted of him, [q] ſaying; That hee had rather bee Herods Swine then his Sonne. For his Iewiſh deuotion prohibited him to deale with Swine, but not Religion, not Reaſon, not Nature could protect thoſe Innocents from ſlaughter.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the Iewiſh computation of time, and of their feſtiuall daies.

THE day amongſt the Iewes was (as amongſt vs) Naturall and Artificiall: this from Sunne-riſing to Sunne-ſetting, to which is oppoſed Night, the time of the Sunnes abſence from our Hemiſphere: that comprehended both theſe, called of the Greekes Νυχθήμερον, containing one whole reuolution of the Sunnes motion to the ſame point of the Horizon or Meridian, in twenty foure houres. This Naturall [a] day the Babylonians began at the riſing of the Sunne, the Athenians at the ſetting, the Vmbrians (as the Aſtrologians) at Noone, the Egyptians and Romane Prieſts at Midnight. The Iewes agreed in their reckoning with the Athenians, as did the Galli in [b] Cæſars time, reporting Pluto to be the author of their Nation; and ſome relickes hereof is in our naming of time by a ſeuen-night, and a fort-night; although otherwiſe wee reckon the day betweene two midnights. The moſt naturall computation of this naturall day, is, to follow that order of Nature, wherein darkeneſſe had the prioritie of time, [c] and the euening and the morning were made one day, or the firſt day: which ſaith (ſaith [d] Hoſpinian) the Italian and Bohemian Clockes doe yet obſerue. The day was not diuided of the firſt Hebrewes (before the Babylonian captiuity) into houres, but was diſtinguiſhed by Vigiliæ, or [*] Watches, of which they had foure; the firſt began at euening, the ſecond at mid-night, the third in the morning, the fourth at noone. Neither is there any Hebrew word ſignifying an houre, although ſome interpret the degrees of the Dyall of Ahaz [e] to be houres: ſome (as Tremell.) halfe houres. Afterwards it was diuided into houres, twelue in the night, and as many in the day: not equall as ours, but longer or ſhorter, according to ſo many equall portions of the day or night; ſo that with them the firſt, ſecond, third, fourth, fift, ſixt, ſeuenth, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleuenth, and twelfth houre, was anſwerable with our houres of ſeuen, eight, nine, ten, eleuen, twelue, one, two, three, foure, fiue, and ſixe, if we conſider them in the Equinoctiall; otherwiſe they differed from our equall houres more or leſſe, according to the vnequall lengthening or ſhortning of the daies; but ſo that an eaſie capacitie may conceiue the proportion. Theſe houres ſometimes they reduced into foure, the firſt containing the firſt, ſecond and third, or with vs, the ſeuenth, eighth, and ninth houres: the ſecond; the fourth, fift, and ſixt, or after our reckoning, ten, eleuen, and twelue of the clock, and ſo forwards. This was the Eccleſiaſticall Computation according to the times of Prayers and Sacrifices, imitated ſtill in the Church of Rome in their Canonicall houres. Thus is Marke reconciled to the other Euangeliſts, [f] in relating the time of Chriſts paſſion, the firſt calling it the third houre when they crucified him, or led him to be crucified, whereas Iohn ſaith, That it was [g] about the ſixt houre when Pilate deliuered him. Thus may the parable of the Labourers in the Vine-yard bee vnderſtood, Matth. 20. and other places of Scripture. The night alſo was diuided into foure Watches, each containing three houres accordingly, They had three houres of Prayer, the third, the ſixt, the ninth, as both the Iewiſh and [h] Euangelicall Writers mention: the firſt of which they ſay Abraham inſtituted, the ſecond Iſaac (it began when it was halfe an houre paſt the ſixt houre, and continued till halfe an houre after the ninth: at this houre the Diſciples of the Wiſemen tooke their meate, which before this Prayer taſted nothing) the third began when the former left, and continued till the Euening. And this was obſerued both for their publike and priuate Prayers, although it bee not likely that the whole time was that way ſpent, eſpecially in priuate deuotions; for then their particular callings had beene fruſtrate, and cancelled by this exerciſe of the generall.

Seuen daies were a [i] weeke, whereof the ſeuenth was called the Sabbath; others had no particular name, but were called the firſt day of the weeke, or the firſt day of (or after) the Sabbath, and ſo of the reſt. The Chriſtians called them [k] Feriæ, as the firſt ſecond or third Feria, for Sunday, Munday, Tueſday: the reaſon whereof was, the keeping of Eaſter weeke holy. For that being made in their Calender the firſt weeke of the yeere, and by Law being wholly feriata, freed from working, and ſanctified to holy vſes; therefore the daies alſo of other weekes receiued that name from this firſt weeke. Touching which there is a Law of Conſtantine the great, to keepe both it and the weeke before it alſo ἀργίας, without working, which for the later was by cuſtome obtained, and by a Canon [l] enioyed, to ſpend it wholly in the Church with Pſalmes and Hymnes and ſpirituall Songs. Yea, the antient Chriſtians obſerued a continuall [*] feſtiuall from Eaſter to Whitſuntide, in which they neither kneeled nor faſted.

Their Moneths, as with vs and the Grecians, tooke their name of the Moone, and with them alſo their meaſure, reckoning the order of their daies according to the age of the Moone, and by courſe they contained, one thirty dayes, the next twenty nine, and therefore were conſtrained euery ſecond or third yeere to intercale, or adde, as in a Leape-yeere one moneth of two and twenty daies, and in euery fourth yeere, of three and twenty daies. This they called [m] Veadar, becauſe it followed the twelfth moneth Adar, for the ſupply of ten daies, one and twenty houres, and two hundred and foure ſcruples, which the twelue moneths of the Moone came ſhort of the yeere of the Sunne. And this they were forced to doe for the obſeruation of the Paſſouer, and their other feaſts. [n] Before their Babylonian thraldome, foure onely of theſe moneths were knowne by proper names; the firſt called Ethanim, the ſecond Bul, the ſeuenth, which after was made the firſt, Abib; the eighth Zif: but afterwards the reſt receiued names, which had beene before diſtinguiſhed only by order, and the former names alſo were altred; that being reckoned the firſt moneth of the yeere, in which befell the fifteenth day of the Moone, after the Equinoctiall Vernall, and their names follow, Niſan, Iar, Sinan, Thamuz, Ab, Elul, Thiſchri, Marcheſchuan, Ciſleu, Tebeth, Schebath, Adar. Thus Hoſpinian; but Scaliger and Ar. Montanus in his Daniel, or ninth booke of Iewiſh Antiquities, ſay, That the antient yeere had twelue moneths, as appeareth by the Hiſtorie of Noah: but thoſe moneths had no proper names, but of their order, the firſt, ſecond, third moneth, &c. Thoſe names, which after they were knowne by, were were Chaldean; and ſo Elias in Thesbi. They were all Chaldean or Perſian names, not mentioned in any of the Prophets before the captiuitie, and they alſo name but ſeuen. But in Thargum Hieroſol. they are all expreſſed in their order. The Iaponites, Chinois, and Indians, haue no names yet for their moneths, but name them by their order and number. The Romanes alſo named ſome of their moneths by their order; others after their Emperours, as Iulius and Auguſtus, to which Domitian added, Germanicus for September, his owne name for October. Commodus made an Edict, for the naming of Auguſt Commodus, September Herculeus, October Inuictus, Nouember Exuperatorius, December Amazonius.

The Hebrew yeere before Moſes, began ° at the new Moone next before the Autumnall Equinoctiall, that being ſuppoſed by ſome to be the time wherein the World was firſt created, euery Plant and Tree hauing the fruit and ſeede ripe: and this reckoning of the yeere in ciuill affaires, is obſerued of the Iewes vnto this day: and from hence they began their Iubilee and ſeuenth Sabbaticall yeere, leſt otherwiſe they ſhould haue loſt two yeeres profits, not reaping the fruit of the olde yeere, nor ſowing in the next. Their Eccleſiaſticall or feſtiuall yeere began at the Spring, as wee haue ſaid afore, by the commandement of GOD, at, and in remembrance of their departure out of Egypt at the ſame time, Exod. 12. as with vs wee haue an Eccleſiaſticall yeere moueable, according to the fall of Eaſter, differing from the Ciuill beginning at our Lady, as with others at Chriſtmaſſe, or New-yeeres day.

° Hoſpinian, Ar. Montanus in his Daniel & others, begin the world in Autumne; but our Engliſh yeere doth (as alſo Scaliger did, who in the laſt Edition of Em. T. hath now altred his opinion, and agreeth with the former) ſuppoſe the world was created in the Equinoctial vernall. And of this opinion is R. Iehoſua, Baſil, Ambroſe, Hierome, Auguſtine, Beda, Iſidorus, Damaſcene, and other later Diuines, and Aſtronomers, whoſe reaſons Hoſpinian laboreth to confute & adhuc ſub iudice lis eſt.

P Scaliger thus obſerueth concerning the Iewiſh yeere. The Iewes (ſaith he vſe a double reckoning of their yeere; one after the courſe of the Moone, the other after the Tekupha's, or courſe of the Sunne. *Tekupha anciently was that moment, in which the paſſed yeere ended, and the following began. But the later Iewes diuided the yeere of the Sunne into foure equall parts, each whereof conſiſted of ninety one dayes, ſeuen houres and a halfe. And they diuided the ſaid yeere into twelue equall parts, each containing daies thirty, houres ten, and thirty minutes. They began at the fifteenth of Aprill, moued by the authority of R. Samuel, an antient Criticke, who aſcribed the firſt Tekupha to that moneth which before they began in Autumne: the reaſon was, becauſe at that time Moſes led the Iſraelites out of Ægypt. The moderne Iewes are ſo ſuperſtitious in the obſeruation of their Tekupha's, that they eſteeme it danger of life to alter their reckoning of them. They alſo attribute to each of them his proper Element, as to the Tekupha Tamuz (the Summer Solſtice) the Fire; and he which ſhould drinke or eate in the moment of that Tekupha, they thinke ſhould bee taken with a burning feuer. Tekupha Niſan, is on the fifteenth of Aprill, Tekupha Tamuz, on the fifteenth of Iuly, Tekupha Tiſri, on the foureteenth of October, Tekupha Tebeth, on the fourteenth of Ianuarie. In times paſt they obſerued ſuperſtitiouſly the beginnings of euery moneth, thinking, that then the Sun entred into that Signe which was attributed to that moneth. Now they onely obſerue the foure Tropicall Signes. Such is their folly, as though now the entrance of Aries were not more then fiue and thirty dayes before the Tekupha of Moſes. But their leaden braines know not what Tekupha is, nor why, nor when it was inſtituted. So much Scaliger.

* Tekupha is the fourth part of a yeere. Sic Ionathan Paraph. Chal. Gen. 8. vlt. Sementis in Tekupha Tiſri, meſsis in Tek. Niſan frigus in Tek. Tabeth, æſtus in Tek. Tamuz.

If the new Moone happened after noone, then the moneth and their New-Moone-Feaſt began the next day, and the yeere likewiſe, which began at the New-Moone. They were ſo ſcrupulous concerning the Moone, that Clemens Alexand. out of another Author obiects the worſhip thereof vnto them. They thinke (ſaith * he) that they alone know GOD, not knowing that they worſhip Angels and Arch-angels, and the Moneth, and the Moone; and if the Moone appeare not, they keepe not that Sabbath, which they call The firſt, nor the New-Moone, nor the Vnleauened, nor the Feaſt, nor the great Day. This fabulous q Author cited by Clemens vnderſtood not himſelfe, ſaith Scaliger; for they ſtill obſerue the appearance or firſt ſight of the Moone, not to ordaine the ſolemnitie thereby (which was done by a certaine rule) but to ſanctifie it: and therefore as ſoone as they ſaw the New-Moone, they ſay Good lucke (or a good ſigne) be it to vs and to all Iſrael. The ſame alſo do the Muhamedans obſerue. By the firſt Sabbath he meaneth the New-yeeres day, called a Sabbath, becauſe it was holy-day: by the Feaſt, Pentecoſt; by the great-Day, that of Tabernacles. Although in regard of vſe, ſome daies were more holy then other, yet had euery day appointed r ſacrifices morning and euening.

the yeere of Iubilee. Theſe Feaſts GOD had preſcribed to them, commanding, that in thoſe three principall Feaſts, euery male (as the Iewes interpreted it, that were cleane and ſound, and from twenty yeeres of their age to fiftie) ſhould appeare there where the Tabernacle or Temple was, with their offerings, as one great Pariſh, Deut.16. hereby to retaine an vnitie in diuine worſhip; and a greater ſolemnitie; with increaſe of ioy and charitie; being better confirmed in that Truth, which they here ſaw to be the ſame which at home they had learned, and alſo better ſtrengthened againſt the errors of the Heathen and Idolatrous feaſts of Diuels. To theſe were after added vpon occaſions, by the Church of the Iewes, their foure Feaſts, in memory of their calamities receiued from the Chaldeans, their Feaſt of Lots, of Dedication, and others, as ſhall follow in their order, [f] Leu.23.32. They began to celebrate their Feaſts at Euen: ſo Moſes is commanded, [f] From Euen to Euen ſhall yee celebrate your Sabbath; imitated in the Chriſtian Euen-ſongs, on holy Euens; yet the Chriſtian Sabbath is by ſome ſuppoſed to begin in the morning, becauſe Chriſt did riſe at that time. As for the cauſes of Feaſts, many they are and great: That the time it ſelfe [*] Pſal.118.24. ſhould in the reuolution thereof, be a place of Argument to our dulneſſe; This is the [*] day which the Lord hath made, let vs reioyce and be glad in it. And what elſe is a feſtiuall day, but a witneſſe of times, light of truth, life of memory, miſtreſſe of life? A token of publike thankfulneſſe for greateſt benefits paſſed, a ſpurre to the imitation of our Noble Anceſtrie, the Chriſtian Worthies; a viſible word to the Ethnicke and ignorant, which thus, by what we doe, may learne what we beleeue; a viſible heauen to the ſpirituall man, that in feſtiuall ioyes doth, as it were, open the vayle; and here fides is turned into a vides, whiles in the beſt exerciſes of Grace, he taſteth the firſt fruits of Glory, and with his Te Deums, and Halleluiahs, begins that bleſſed Song of the Lamb; whiles time it ſelfe puts on her feſtiuall attire, and acting the paſſed, admoniſh the preſent ages, teacheth by example, quickneth our Faith, ſtrengthneth hope, inciteth charitie, and in this glimpſe and dawning, is the day-ſtarre to that Sunne of Eternitie, when time ſhall be no longer, but the Feaſt ſhall laſt for euerlaſting. Theſe the true cauſes of feſtiuall Times.

CHAP. V.

Of the Feſtiuall dayes inſtituted by God in the Law.

AS they were enioyned to offer a Lambe in the morning, and another in the Euening euery day, with other Prayers, Prayſes, and Rites: ſo had the SABBATH a double honour in that kinde, and was wholly ſequeſtred and ſanctified to religious duties. Which howſoeuer it was ceremoniall, in regard of that ſeuenth day deſigned, of the Rites therein preſcribed, of that rigid and ſtrait obſeruation exacted of the particular workes prohibited, and of the deadly penaltie annexed; yet are we to thinke, that the Eternall Lord, who hath all times in his hand, had, before this, ſelected ſome time proper to his ſeruice, which in the [a] See l.1.c.4. abrogation of Ceremonies [a] Legall, is in Morall and Chriſtian duety to be obſerued to the end of the World: euen as from the beginning of the World he had ſanctified the ſeuenth day to himſelfe, and in the Morall Law (giuen not by Moſes to the Iewes, but by GOD himſelfe, as to all creotures) is the remembrance of that ſanctification vrged. Friuolous are their reaſons, who would renue the Iewiſh Sabbath amongſt Chriſtians, tying and tyring vs in a more then Iewiſh ſeruitude, to obſerue both the laſt and firſt dayes of the weeke, as ſome haue preached, and of the Æthiopian Churches is practiſed. Neither can I ſubſcribe to thoſe, who are ſo farre from paying two, that they acknowledge not the debt of one vpon diuine right, but onely in Eccleſiaſticall courteſie, and in regard of the Churches meere conſtitution; and haue thereupon obtruded on many other dayes as Religious reſpects or more, then on this (which yet the Apoſtles entituled in name and practice, The Lords day) with the ſame ſpirit whereby they haue equalled traditions to the holy Scriptures.

[b] Tolet. Inſtruct. lib.4. cap.24.25. Thus Cardinal [b] Tolet alowes on the Lords day iourneying, hunting, working, buying, ſelling, Fayres, Fencing, and other priuate and publike workes by him mentioned: and ſaith, a man is tyed to ſanctifie the Sabbath, but not to ſanctifie it well; (a new kinde of diſtinction) the one is in hearing Maſſe, and ceaſing from ſeruile workes; the well-doing it, in ſpirituall contemplations, &c. Another [c] Bellarm. de cultu ſanct. lib.3. cap.10. Cardinall is as faſt as he is looſe, affirming, That other holy daies alſo binde the Conſcience, euen in caſes voide of contempt and ſcandall, as being truely more holy then other daies, and a part of diuine worſhip, and not onely in reſpect of order and politie.

But to returne to our Iewish Sabbath. Plutarch thought, that the Sabbath was deriued of Σαββάζειν, which signifieth to keepe Reuell-rout, as was vsed in their Bacchanals of Σαβάζιος, which is interpreted Bacchus, or the sonne of Bacchus, as Cœlius Rhodiginus [d] sheweth out of Amphithæus and Mnaseas; who is therefore of opinion, That Plutarch thought the Iewes on their Sabbaths worshipped Bacchus, because they did vse on that day to drinke somewhat more largely (a Sabbatizing too much, by too many Christians imitated, which celebrate the same rather as a day of Bacchus, then the Lords day. [e]) Bacchus his Priests were called Sabbi, [f] of this their reuelling and misse-rule. Such wide coniectures we finde in others, whereas the Hebrewes call it Sabbath, of שבת, which signifieth To rest, because of their vacation to Diuine Offices, and not for idleneſse or worse imployments. And for this cause all the festiuall solemnities in the Scripture [g] are stiled with this generall title and appellation, as times of rest from their wonted bodily seruices. Likewise their seuenth yeere was Sabbathicall [h], because of the rest from the labors of Tyllage. In those feasts also, which consisted of many daies solemnitie, the first and last were Sabbaths, [i] in regard of the strictnesse of those daies rest.

Luke [k] hath an obscure place, which hath much troubled Interpreters with the difficulty thereof, Ἐν Σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, our English reades it; The second Sabbath after the first. * Isidore saith, it was so called of the Pascha, and Azyma comming together. Chrysostome thinkes (as Sigonius cytes him) it was when the [l] New-Moone fell on the Sabbath, and made a double Festiuall. Sigonius, when they kept their Passeouer in the second Moneth. * Stella takes it for Manipulus frugum, alledging Iosephus his Author. [m] Ambrose, for the Sabbath next after the first day of the Easter Solemnitie. [n] Hospinian, for the Octaues or last day of the same: * Maldonatus, for the Feast day of Pentecost, which was the second of the chiefe Feasts: But Ioseph Scaliger [o] saith, That the second day of the Feast was called ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ ΤΟΥ ΠΑΣΧΑ, (being the sixteenth day of the Moneth, called Manipulus frugum) and the Sabbaths which fell betwixt that and Pentecost, receiued their denomination in order from the same; Secundo-primum, Secundo-secundum, &c. And hence doth Luke call that first Sabbath which fell after that δευτέρα, or second day of the Feast δευτεροπρώτον. Of this we shall haue occasion to say more when we come to the Samaritans. [p] The name Sabbath is also taken for the [p] whole weeke. But I list not to stand on the diuers significations of the Word.

[r] Iosephus and Plinie tell of a Riuer in Syria, in the kingdome of Agrippa, called Sabbaticus, which on other daies ran full and swift, on the Sabbath rested from his course. Petrus Galatinus [s] alledgeth the ceasing of the Sabbaticall streame, for an argument of the abrogation of the Iewish Sabbath.

The Iewes were superstitiously strict in the obseruation of their Sabbath: Ptolomey without resistance captiuating their Citie, and themselues by this aduantage, as did Pompey afterwards. And in the dayes of Matathias, father of Iudas Maccabeus; a thousand were murthered without resistance, till that by him they were better aduised: Which appeared by the Pharises, that cauelled at the plucking and rubbing of a few eares of Corne, by the hungrie Disciples, and at their Master for healing on that day, though by his Word: which their superstition, the Iew that fell into a Priuie at Maidenbourg. An. 1270. on his Sabbath, and another at Tewksburie, 1220. (and were the one by the Bishop of the place, the other by the Earle of Gloceſter constrained to abide the Christian Sabbath, whence on their owne they would not be freed) testified to the world by a stinking penance, and the later leauing also his stinking superstitious soule behinde to seale his deuotion. They added of their owne, fasting that day till noone, their Sabbath daies iourney, which was (saith Saint Ierome) [t] by the institution of Barachibas, Simeon and Hellis, (Rabbines) not aboue two thousand paces, * or two miles. Thus did this holy ordinance which GOD had instituted for the refreshing of their bodies, the instruction of their Soules, and as a type of eternall happines, vanish into a smoky superstition amongst them. The Sacrifices and accustomed rites of the Sabbath are mentioned, Num. 28 & Leu. 23. & 24. Where we may reade, that the daily burnt-offering, and meate-offering, and drinke-offering, were doubled on the Sabbath, and the Shew-bread renued, &c.

The sanctification of daies and times being a [u] token of that thankefulnesse, and a part of that publike honor which we owe vnto GOD, he did not onely enioyne, by way of perpetuall homage the sanctification of one day in seuen, which GODS immutable Law doth exact for euer, but did require also some other part of time, with as strict exaction, but for lesse continuance; besides, accepting that which being left arbitrarie to the Church, was by it consecrated voluntarily vnto like religious vses. Of the first of these (the Sabbath) we haue spoken: of the Mosaicall Feasts, the New-Moones are next to be considered. The institution hereof we reade, Numb. 28. and the solemne Sacrifice therein appointed; so

This Lambe or Kidde was choſen a male of a yeere old, the tenth day of the Moone, which they kept till the foureteenth day tyed (after their traditions) to the foote of ſome bench or fourme, ſo to miniſter occaſion to their children, of queſtioning about it, to themſelues of Preparation and Meditation, and to eſpie in this meane while, if any default were in the Lambe. It was firſt a priuate Sacrifice, to be performed in euery houſe, after in that place onely, where the Tabernacle or Temple was; they were diſperſed by companies, according to Ioſephus, not fewer then tenne, ſometime twentie in a companie; with Chriſt there were thirteene, and of theſe ſacrifices and companies in time of Ceſtius, were numbred two hundred fiftie ſix thouſand and fiue hundred, ſo that reckoning the leaſt number, there were ten times ſo many, beſides thoſe that by diſeaſes or other manifold lets were not partakers thereof: and in regard of this Feaſt being aſſembled thither through GODS iuſt iudgement, their whole huge multitudes were couped or caged together in the wals of this Citie to deſtruction, vnder Titus.

The bloud of the Lambe they were to receiue in a veſſell, and to ſprinkle the ſame with a bunch of Hyſope on the doore poſts, and to eate it in the night, which was the beginning of the fifteenth day, roaſt with fire, with ſowre hearbes and vnleauened bread; both the head, feete, and purtenance; girded, ſhod, with ſtaues in their hands, in haſte, ſtanding, burning whatſoeuer was left of the ſame. After the eating the Sacramentall Lambe ſtanding, they had other prouiſion which they eate ſitting, [g] or after their manner of lying at Table, in remembrance of their libertie, as appeareth by Iohns leaning on his breſt, and Iudas his ſop at Chriſts ſupper. In the Law it was commanded that they ſhould eate the Paſſeouer ſtanding; which they onely practiſed in the firſt celebration in Ægypt. For ſo the Iewes ſet forth the difference of the Paſchall night from other nights, in their twice waſhing, which on other nights they do but once: in their vnleauened: in their Endiue or ſowre hearbes: And whereas on other nights, they ſit or lie, now they lie onely, in token of their ſecuritie. The waſhing was therfore neceſſarie, leſt they ſhould defile the beds whereon they lay with their duſty feete. In which reſpect the [h] Gentiles alſo vſed to waſh their feete: the Iewes their whole bodie. And the Phariſe maruelled at Chriſt, ὅτι οὐ πρῶτον ἐβαπτίσθη that he was not thus baptized or waſhed before he ſate downe. Some contented themſelues onely with waſhing of the feete; the want of which Office Chriſt obiected to another of his Phariſaicall hoſtes.

But in the Paschall rite a double washing was requisite, because of their double Supper; which in the flourishing state of the Iewes, was also vsed in other their chiefe solemnities of the Pentecost and Tabernacles. In the former they eate their Sacrifices, in the later certaine Prayses were sung, and it was called the supper dimissorie. But this second Paschall Supper differed from that in other solemnities, wherein they vsed iunkets, which in this were forbidden; and instead therof they had Endine and wilde Lettice, mingled with Vinegar, and other things, which now they make as thick as mustard. The Housholder first dipt his vnleauened soppe therein and eate it, and then tooke from vnder the carpet or cloth another, which he brake into as many pieces as he had Communicants in his company, euery piece being as big as an Oliue, which was giuen to each of them in order. When he eate that sop, first he said, Blessed be thou, Lord our God, King of the world, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandements, and hast giuen vs the precept of vnleauened bread.

And when he had eaten, he said (as he distributed to the rest) This is the bread of affliction, which our fore-fathers ate in the land of Ægypt. Euery one which is hungry, come and eate: euery one which hath neede, come and obserue the Passeouer. After the destruction of Ierusalem, they added these words; Now we are here seruants, but hereafter wee shall be in the land of Israel: now we are here seruants, hereafter in the land of Israel free. After this, he tasted of the Cuppe, and deliuered to the next, and he to the third, and so on through the company. This was called the Cup of thankesgiuing, or of singing the Hymne, which he deliuered with these words; Blessed art thou O Lord our GOD King of the world, Creator of the fruite of the Vine. Then did they sing a Hymne and depart; for the Canon forbad them to eate or drinke any thing after the Hymne. These were the Paschall rites in the time of CHRIST, who also vsed that reiterated both washing (saith Scaliger) and Supper, and also the Hymne. They were in the Eeuen of the foureteenth day to purge their houses of leauen, and that throughout the Land, where the Lambe might not be eaten. All the Israelites were inioyned this dutie: And they which by occasion of iourneying or vncleaneneſse, could not now celebrate the Passeouer, were to obserue it the next moneth, Numb.9.

The day after, or second day of this Paschall Feast, they were to bring to the Priest a Gomer of the first-fruits of their Corne, and a Lambe, with other duties for a burnt offering to the LORD: before which time they might not eate of the new yeeres fruites, which at that time in those Countries beganne to ripen, and so to acknowledge GOD the giuer thereof. [i] Philo saith, That each priuate man, which otherwise brought in his Sacrifice to the Priest, Sacrificed or slew this Sacrifice with his owne handes: And elsewhere [k] hee affirmeth the same. Eleazarus, [l] or as other say, the Synedrium, ordayned three hundred and fiftie yeeres before the birth of Christ, that the Passe-ouer should not bee solemnized on the second, fourth, or sixt day of the Weeke: And therefore when it fell on the sixt day, which wee call Fridaie, it was deferred to the seuenth, at the time of Christs Passion, & he with his Disciples ate it the night before, according to the Law of God.

This Eleazarus ordained, that the feast of Lots should not be celebrated on the second, fourth, or seuenth: or Pentecost on the third, fift, or seuenth; Or that of the Tabernacles, on the first, fourth, and sixt: Or the Fast of Expiation, on the first, third, or sixt: Or their New-yeeres day, on the first, fourth, and sixt, which decree is extant in the booke of Gamaliel Pauls Master, which they did superstitiously, to auoide two Sabbaths, (in so strict a rest) together, and carrying boughes on the Sabbath, if that Feast fell thereon, and on other such reasonlesse reasons.

After this sixteenth day of the moneth, or second day of the vnleauened bread, in which first of all, sickle was thrust into the Harueſt, to offer the first fruits thereof vnto GOD, were numbred seuen intire Weekes, and the next day, which was the fiftieth (accounting inclusiuely) was celebrated the feast of PENTECOST, receiuing his name of that reckoning of fiftie: And Schefuoth, that is, of Weekes, because of this reckoning of seuen weekes, it is called also the Feast of the Harueſt of the first fruites: the [m] rites thereof are prescribed, Leuit.23. The institution was in respect of the Law then giuen on Mount Sinai, and a type of that Euangelicall Law, which Christ, hauing ascended vp on high, did write not in Tables of stone, but in fleshly Tables of the heart, when (at the same time) hee gaue the holy Ghost to his Disciples, as a remembrance also of the Author of their Harueſt-fruits, and of their possession of that land where they had seede-time and harueſt, which in the wildernesse they wanted.

As the seuenth day in the weeke, so the seuenth moneth in the yeere, was in a great part festiuall: fittest for that purpose, as the fruits of the Earth being now inned.

The first day of this moneth was, besides the ordinarie Kalends or Festiuall New-Moone [n], the Feast of Trumpets, in respect of that rite then obserued of sounding Trumpets, being their

New-yeeres day, after the ciuill account: the institution is read, Leuit. 23. and Num. 29. Whether, as some of the Rabbines will haue it, for Isaaks deliuerance, that in remembrance of that Ramme, these Rams-horne Trumpets should be sounded, or in regard of the wars, or in respect of that spirituall war-fare which continueth our whole life, or that this was so festiual a moneth, or the beginning of their yeere for ciuill accounts, and for the Sabbaticall and Iubilee yeeres, or for some other cause, let the wiser Reader iudge.

On the tenth day of this moneth was the Feast or Fast of Reconciliation or Expiation, a day of publike penance, fasting and afflicting themselues, described in Leuit. 16. throughout the Chapter, and Chap. 23. wherein is liuely in that type shewed the Office of Iesus Christ, the eternall high-Priest, who hath alone wrought our atonement, entred into the Holy place of Heauen, and laid our sins on the Scape-Goate, bearing them, and satisfying for them in his owne person on the Crosse, and by the sprinckling of his blood sanctified vs for euer to God his Father. Paul, Heb. 9. doth vnfold the misterie of this dayes rites, wherein onely, the high Priest alone might enter into the holy-place, and himselfe alone performe the other Offices of Expiation. The Iewes thought, that this fasting and afflicting themselues, was in respect of their Idolatrie with the golden Calfe, and therefore it seemed, that in Theodorets time they did not afflict themselues, but sported rather in obscure and prophane manner. The Sacrifices are set downe, Num. 29. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Theodoret. qu. 32. in Leuit.

The next Feast was that of Tabernacles; in remembrance that howsoeuer they now dwell in strong Cities, goodly houses, &c. yet their fathers liued in Tents in the wildernesse, where GOD by a cloude in the day time, and fire in the night protected that people. It is expressed Leu. 23. Num. 29. Deut. 16. It was obserued from the fifteenth to the one and twentieth, the first and last of them being (as at the Passeouer) more solemnely festiuall, with abstinence from labor, and a generall Conuocation. They were the first day to take boughes and branches of Trees, and to make therewith Booths, and to dwell in booths seuen daies. This was neglected from the time of Iosuah, till the dayes of Nehemiah, [o] when he and Ezra solemnized this feast seuen dayes with booths on their house-tops, and in their Courts and streetes, with Lectures euery day out of the Law, and a solemne assembly on the eight day. The Hebrews report that they made them bundles of that matter, which they carried, euery day of the seuen, vp and downe in the morning before they might eate, whereupon it was called the Feast of Palmes or Willowes. The seuenth day, saith Paulus Fagius, [p] they compassed the Altar with these boughes seuen times, in remembrance of the fall of Iericho. Andrew Osiander affirmeth [q] that they vsed this carrying about boughes euery day, especially the seuenth, in which they obserued a kinde of Procession or Letanie, singing, Ana Iehoua Hosanna ana Iehoua hatz elicha-na: first reckoning vp a great number of the names of God, then of his attributes: thirdly, of the things which they wish to be saued, then of themselues and other things, interlacing euery particular of these with singing Hosanna, like their Ora pro nobis in the Popish Letanie. Then they altar it in another forme, Pray redeeme the Vine of thy planting, Hosanna, &c. then in another, As thou sauedst the strong in Ægypt, when thou went'st out for their deliuerance, so Hosanna, &c. Then in a longer forme of prayers, with this foote of the song Hosanna: and lastly all rings Hosanna, Hosanna: and hereupon the later Iewes called this feast Hosanna, as also those bundles of boughes: and although that the later Iewes haue now added much, the Iewes of Italie differing from them of Germanie, yet in Christs time the acclamations of Hosanna, when he came riding on an Asse into Ierusalem, testifie some such obseruation then amongst them.

The Sacrifices of euery day are designed Num. 29. The first day, thirteene bullocks, the second, twelue, and euery day one lesse to the seuenth: in all seuentie (as the Rabbines interpret it) according to the number of the seuentie languages of the Nations, which shall be subdued to the Messias; and ninetie eight Lambs, in respect of so many curses in the Law, against the transgressing Israelites.

The eight day was the Feast which they called, Haaziph and Azæreth, that is, Collection, called also the great day of the feast, in the two and twentieth day of this moneth Tisri. In this they were to contribute to the continuall Sacrifices, and publike thanksgiuing was made for the fruites of the Earth, and the first fruites of the latet fruites were offered. Ieroboam [r] in an irreligious policie remoued the feast of Tabernacles from the seuenth moneth to the eight, from Tisri to Marcheshuan.

yeere of Iubilee, *Leu.*25. beginning on the day of Reconciliation: Wherein seruants were freed, debts remitted, possessions, that had beene alienated, returned, the law allowing no further sales, proclaimed with sound of a Trumpet of a Rammes-horne, and therefore called Iobel, which signifieth a Ramme, or Rammes-horne.

Touching this yeere of Iubilee is much controuersie. The ancient Authors account it the fiftieth yeere. Scaliger [f] refuseth their authoritie herein. Many moderne writers hold the same opinion, as [t] Hospinian, [u] Melanchton, Fabritius [x] Paduanus, &c. [y] Caluisius hath at large disputed this question against Crentzhemius and Bucholcerus, by diuers arguments prouing that the Iubilee was but fortie nine yeeres complete, and that the fiftieth yeere was the first onwards of another Iubilee or Sabbath of yeeres: Yet is this space reckoned by fiftie, as Ouid calls the Olympiad, quinquennis Olympias: Aristophanes, [z] and Ausonius, [a] affirming the like: and yet the Olympiad is but foure yeeres complete, and reckoned from the fift to the fift exclusiuely. Otherwise they should haue had two Sabbaticall yeeres together, namely, the fortie ninth being the seuenth yeere, and the next which was the fiftieth yeere. As for the later Writers, they might be deceiued by following the streame, and beguiled by the Popish Iubilee, which Boniface the eight, before called Benedictus (and yet neither was good sayer nor doer) instituted Anno. 1300. to be obserued euery hundreth yeere: and Clement the sixt abridged to the fiftieth; as Auentinus, Trithemius, Crantzius, and others haue written. Whether they were Heathenish in imitating the Ludi seculares, or Iewish, in following the legall Iubilee: Certaine it is, Rome thereby becomes a rich Mart, where the [b] Marchants of the Earth resort from all places of the Earth to buy Heauen: and Babylon [c] the great Citie is cloathed in fine linnen and purple and scarlet, and gilded with gold and precious stone and pearles, with the gaines of her Wares, giuing in exchange [d] the soules of men, washed from their sinnes; A thing more precious to Christ then his most precious blood. But his pretended Vicars haue learned to effect it (the filling of their purse) with greater ease: deuout Pilgrims from all parts visiting Saint Peters staires, whence they goe truely Saint Peters heires ([e] Siluer and gold haue I none) and yet finde their Pardons too cheape to be good. But to returne to our Pilgrimage, and to obserue the obseruation of the Iewish Iubilee; This feast was partly ciuill in regard of the poore, of the inheritances, of the Israelitish Families; specially that of the Messias, and of the computation of times, as amongst the Greekes by Olympiads, and amongst the Romanes by Lustra and indictions: partly also it was mysticall in regard of the Gospell of Christ, preaching libertie and peace to the Conscience, the acceptable yeere of the LORD.

And thus much of those Feasts which GOD himselfe instituted to this Nation; which how the Iewes of later times haue corrupted, and doe now superstitiously obserue, instituting others also of their owne deuisings, shall bee handled in due place. Wee are next to speake of those Feasts, which vpon occasions they imposed vpon themselues before the comming of CHRIST: to which wee will adde a briefe Kalender of all their Fasts and Feasts.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Feasts and Fasts, which the Iewes instituted to themselues: with a Kalender of their Feasts and Fasts through the yeere, as they are now obserued.

THE Prophet Zacharie, in his seuenth and eighth Chapters mentioneth certaine fasting daies, which the Iewes by Ecclesiasticall Iniunction obserued. One in the tenth day of the tenth moneth, becausе, on that day Ierusalem began to bee besieged, 2. Reg. 24. A second Fast was obserued on the ninth day of the fourth moneth, in remembrance that then the Chaldeans entred the Citie,

A third Fast they held on the ninth day of the fift moneth, in respect of the Citie and Temple burned on that day. First, by Nabuchodonosor; Secondly, by Titus on the same day: Which the Iewes doe yet obserue with strict penance, going bare-foote, and sitting on the ground, reading some sad Historie of the Bible, and the Lamentations of Ieremie three times ouer.

Their fourth Fast they celebrated on the third day of the seuenth moneth, in remembrance of Godoliah slaine by Ismael, Iere. 41. 42. 2. Reg. vlt. To these are reckoned the Fast of Easter, in the thirteenth day of Adar, their twelfth Moneth; and on the seuenteenth day of the fourth moneth, in the remembrance of the Tables of the Law broken by Moses: the institution whereof seemeth to be late, seeing the Scripture doth not mention it. In this moneth the Ægyptians kept the Feast or Fast of their Osiris, lamenting for him, which seemeth to be the same that is mentioned, *Ezech.*8. Where women are said to mourne for Tamuz, whom Plutarch calleth Amuz, and from thence deriueth Iupiters title of Ammon. Of him was this fourth moneth called Tamuz.

a Esther.9.21. On the a foureteenth and fifteenth daies of Adar, they kept the feast of Phurim, or Lots, instituted in remembrance of that deliuerance from Haman; by the authoritie of Ioachim the high-Priest, as Functius relateth out of Philo, *An.M.*3463. Antonius Margarita, a christened Iewe, reporteth that on these daies the Iewes reade the Historie of Esther, and so often as Haman is mentioned, they smite on their seates with their fists and hammers, otherwise spending the time of this feast in Bachanall riots and excesse.

b Ioseph.de bello Iud.li.1. c.17. They also had the feast of Wood-carrying, called ξυλοφορία, mentioned by b Iosephus, in which the custome was for euery one to carry Wood to the Temple to maintaine the fire of the Altar.

The Feast of Dedication, otherwise called the feast of Lights, and the institution thereof is largely described, 2.*Maccab.*4. in remembrance of the institution of Diuine worship and Sacrifice in the Temple, which had beene by Antiochus polluted, and sacred to Iupiter Olympius, all the seruices appointed by the Law being abolished. By Iudas Maccabeus, the Temple and Altar, and other holy instruments, were dedicated the same day three yeeres, after their first pollution, called therefore the feast of Lights, as I thinke, saith c Iosephus, because so vnexpected a light shon forth vnto them. But Franciscus Iunius, in his Annotations vpon the Syrian translation of the tenth of Iohn, where this Feast is mentioned, alleageth out of the Talmud, another cause as followeth. When on the fiue and twentith day of Cisleu they entred into the Temple, they found not pure oyle, except in one little vessell, which contained sufficient for the Lamps but one day, of which Oyle they lighted the Lamps in order, which lasted eight daies, till they pressed out of the Oliues cleane Oyle. And therefore the wise-men of that time decreed, that yeerely those eight daies, beginning at the fiue and twentith of Cisleu, should be daies of ioy, and that euery one in the doores of their houses euery euening, during those eigh daies, should light Lamps, for declaration of that miracle, wherein they must not fast nor lament.

Likewise 1.*Mac.*13. is ordained festiuall the three and twentieth day of Iar, for the expiation of the Tower of Ierusalem, by Simon Mac.

On the last day of the feast of Tabernacles, they finish the reading of the Law with much ioy and solemnitie, calling it the feast of the ioy of the Law. The next Sabbath begins their Reading of the first Parasch or Section, which was also read that day they made an end of the last, lest they should seeme weary of it, and glad it were ended. These Paraschs or Sections of the Law (as our Lessons in our Seruice) were ancient, as appeareth Act. 15.21. in number fifty foure, for twice they put together two short ones. When Antiochus burned and prohibited the Law, they reade in stead of Moses, the Prophets: and after Antiochus his death they continued both, as the first and second Lesson with vs. That of the Prophets they called haphtara, that is, a dismissing, because after it the people were dismissed, euen as the name Missa, for like cause was giuen to the Christian holies. They reade Moses not onely on the Sabbaths, but also on Mundaies, and Thursedaies; which by them that would seeme more holy, were fasted also, as *Luc.*18. appeares by the bragges of that supercilious Pharise, I fast twice in the weeke.

Sigonius reckoneth also the feast of Iephta, in the end of the yeere, which yet is not like to haue continued in succeeding ages: and of the fire that we find mentioned in 2.*Mac.*1. and the feast of Iudith, for killing Holofernes: and on the fourteenth day of Adar, for the victorie against Nicanor, *Ios.l.*12. Their later feasts I shall mention, and declare their seueral ceremonies, when wee come to speake of their later times, and of the present Iewish superstition. In the meane time I thinke it not amisse to set downe here out of Scaliger, a view or Kalender of their moneths, with the Feasts and Fasts, as they are obserued therein at this day.

40 ## Of the ancient Oblations, Gifts, and Sacrifices of the Iewes: of their Tithes, and of their Prieſts, and Perſons Eccleſiaſticall, and Religious.

§. I.

Of their Oblations, Gifts, and Sacrifices.

50 ALthough Moſes doth handle this matter of their Rites and Sacrifices, and is herein ſeconded and interpreted by the ſucceeding Prophets, ſo fully, that it may ſeeme a powring of water into the Sea, to ſpeake needeleſſly, or by our Diſcourſe, to obſcure, rather then illuſtrate, that which is ſo largely and plainely there expreſſed; yet becauſe of that ſubiect which we haue in hand, I cannot altogether be ſilent (at leaſt of the kindes and heads) referring the deſirous Reader; for his more perfect ſatisfaction in particulars, to thoſe clearer prophetical fountaines. Their Rites for time and place we haue already deſcribed: The next intended part of this Iewiſh relation ſhall be of their Oblations, which were either Gifts or Sacrifices. Their Sacrifices were ſuch oblations, wherein the thing offered was in whole or 60 part conſumed in diuine worſhip, for the moſt part by fire or ſhedding of blood. Theſe were of eight [a] ſorts. Burnt-offerings, Meate-offerings, Peace-offerings, Sinne-offerings, Treſpaſſe-offerings, the offerings of the Conſecration, Cleanſing, and Expiation. [b] Philo reduceth them to three three: Burnt, Peace, and Sin-offerings, according to the three cauſes of ſacrificing; The worſhip of God, the obtayning of good things, and freedome from euill.

The Burnt-offerings were by fire conſumed, the Rites and manners hereof are expreſſed, Leuiticus 1. the fire was to be perpetuall on the Altar, being that which GOD miraculouſly ſent from heauen to conſume Abihu ſacrifice; for neglecting which, and vſing other, his two ſonnes Nadab and Abihu were ſtricken by a reuenging fire from GOD. The Meate-offering was made of fine flowre, without hony or leuen, and with oyle and incenſe on the Altar, or frying pan, or ouen, or caldron, according to the rites preſcribed, Leuit, 2. partly ſacred to the Lord by fire, the reſt to be the Prieſts. The Peace-offerings are with their proper ceremonies enioyned, Leuit. 3. and 7; the fat and kidnies were to be burned on the Altar (the fat and blood being vniuerſally forbidden them for foode) the breſt and right ſhoulder was the Prieſts: the reſt to the Sacrificer, to be eaten the firſt, or at furtheſt on the ſecond day: or elſe on the third to be burned with fire. The Offering for ſinnes of ignorance, for the Prieſt, Prince, People, or priuate man, is ſet downe, Leuit. 4. and 6. The Sinne-offering, in caſe of contempt, where the ſinne is committed againſt God and man willingly, with the due manner thereof is expreſſed, Leuit. 6. To theſe were adioyned Prayers and Prayſes, with muſicall voyces, and inſtruments, Cymbals, Viols, Harpes, and Trumpets reſounding, For he is good, for his mercy endureth for euer. The ſixt kinde of Sacrifices was proper to the Prieſts at their conſecration, recorded, Leuit 6. 20. The ſeuenth mentioned Sacrifice is of Purification or cleanſing, as of a woman after childe-birth, Leu. 12. or of a Leper, 13. 14. or for vncleane iſſues of men and women, chap. 15. The eight is the ſacrifice of Expiation or Reconciliation, on that feſtiuall or faſting-day before ſpoken of, Leuit. 16. Hereunto may we adde the lights and the daily offerings of incenſe, morning and euening, Exod. 30. on a golden Altar, whereunto the Prieſts only had acceſſe, with ſuch perfume only as is there preſcribed.

The Gifts which we haue reckoned a ſecond ſort of Oblations that were not as the former in whole, or in part conſumed in their offering, but preſerued whole and ſound, were giuen, either according to the Law, or by Vow, or of free will. The Law preſcribed, Firſt fruits and Tithes, and the perſonall halfe ſhekell. The firſt fruits of Man, of beaſts, and of the fruits of the Earth, the law exacteth, Exod. 22. 23. and are aſſigned to the Prieſts, Num. 5. and 18. which, of men and vncleane beaſts, were to be redeemed, of others to be ſacrificed.

§. II.

Of Tithes and their manner of Tithing.

OF Tithes, when we conſider the aſſignement of them to the Tribe of Leui, we muſt ſo farre acknowledge them Leuiticall and Ceremoniall. But conſidering the paying of them to a Prieſt, ſo ſoone as we reade of a Prieſt, in Scripture, and that by the Father of the Faithfull, which the Apoſtle vrgeth againſt Leuiticall Ceremonies, in that Leui himſelfe in Abraham payed them; and his Nephew Iacob vowed the payment thereof, ſo ſoone as God ſhould giue him whereof to pay Tithes: and that God required this dutie of Tithe, Exod. 22. 29. before the Leuites were called to the ſeruice of the Tabernacle; which are not ſo much as named, till Exod. 38. 21. the Scripture alſo ſpeakes of them as anciently due, nor hath it any originall commandement for giuing Tithes to GOD: yea, the law of Nature taught it the Heathens, which paid them to their Idolls: and the firſt times of the Chriſtian Church excepted, wherein there was no ſuch ſettled order for things of this and like nature, Tithes were conſtantly paid to the Church, vntill the Arch-enemie of God and his Church, in his Antichriſtian ſupremacie robbed the Miniſters of that due, which in GODS right they before held, impropriating the liuing of the Altar to them that liued not at the Altar, but yet ordinarily leauing them to the Church, as they then accounted the Church: Some cannot ſo eaſily ſubſcribe to that opinion, perhaps more common then true, which diſanull diuine right for the paying Tithes, as being then a Iewiſh and Leuiticall Ceremonie. But I leaue the Reader to diſcuſſe this matter further, with [a] D. Carleton Mr. Roberts and others, in Treatiſes of that argument, not to ſpeake of the Canoniſts. And let me here mention alſo that little book full of great learning, & ſauoring of great pietie, of S. Henry Spelman Knight, a true Knight of the Temple, that thus engaged himſelfe for the Temples right; that whereas the Temple and Ruines of the Church hath raiſed ſo many Knights and cruell Gentles that haue pill'd and ſpill'd the men and meanes of the Church; the Church in that Order hath found a Champion, a Spelman in name and deede, who out of Godſpel (ſo was the Goſpell and holy writ ſignificantly ſtiled by our Religious Anceſtours) and man-ſpell, that is, the learning of men, in the reaſons and authorities of Fathers, Councels, Doctors in ſeuerall seuerall ages, hath shewed himselfe a Spelman, an Oracle or man of hidden knowledge, as Verstegan interprets and spels this word spell. These shew also another argument (besides this of the Nature and practice of Tithes) almost beyond cauillation, namely, that Tithes are due to Christian Ministers by Vow: Christian Common-weales, and Councels hauing consecrated them to GOD and his Church, wherein our Kings, Parliaments, and Ecclesiasticall Lawes haue added their confirmations: neither is it now time after the Vowes to enquire, and [c] without Diuine dispensation to alter it, without satisfaction sufficient. But leauing this sore too tender to be touched, and yet little touching and mouing some Consciences pretended tender; let vs view the Tithes, as they then were, Iewish. In Leuit. 27. 30. is a declaration of the Lords right, All Tythes are the Lords; and an assignation of the same, Numb. 18.21. Behold, I haue giuen the children of LEVI all the tenth, &c. Saint [d] Hierome reckons foure sorts of Tithes: first, that which the people paid to the Leuites: secondly, that which the Leuites hence paid to the Priests [e]: thirdly, that which they reserued for expence in their solemne Feasts when they went to the Tabernacle or Temple [f]. The fourth was a third yeeres Tenth, which was then laid vp for the Leuite, and the poore amongst them. [g] The practice hereof Nehemiah restored in the reformation of Religion, Nehemiah 10. when the First-fruits and Tenths were brought to the treasurie or chambers of the house of GOD.

g Ios. Scal. diatriba de decimis in Opusc.

[h] Ioseph Scaliger hath written a Treatise of Tithes, the summe wherof is this. Euery thing which was foode for man, and was laide vp for preseruation, if it receiued increase from the Earth, was subiect to offerings, and consequently to first fruits and Tithes. Garden-herbes were not exempted: they tithed Mints and Annise. (But [i] Drusius saith this was of tradition, and not of the Law: for the Law required onely the tenths prouentus tui, of the encrease: vnder which name (saith he) those came not.) Out of these they first paid the first fruites: secondly, [k] Theruma: thirdly, a two fold Tithe, and these all in their due order. The Husbandman might not touch any of his increase before these deductions. First fruits of Corne, Grapes and Oliues were offered in the basket: but the Theruma and Tithe onely of the kindes already dressed and prepared, as wheate fanned, oyle and wine, corne in the eare, and so the rest was called Tabal: after they were made readie, the Theruma was taken [l] from the heape, and giuen to the Priests: this was called the great Theruma, and was not defined by Moses, but the ancient Lawyers determined that it might not be lesse then the fourtieth or fiftieth, or at least the sixtieth part: the first they called the Theruma of a good eye, the second indifferent, the last of an euill eye, and niggardly. When this was taken away for the Priests, the rest of the heape was tithed for the Leuite: [m] this was called the first Tithe [n]; and the tenth part thereof the Leuites [o] gaue to the Priests [*] which was called the Tithe of the Tithe, or the Theruma of the Tithe. For the former Theruma they named the great Theruma, because it was more then this. After this deducted, the Leuites might freely vse the other nine parts of the Tythe (which before they might not) whether in, or out of Ierusalem. The Husband-man or Lay-man, was yet to pay another called the second Tithe, namely, the tenth part of that which remained to him after the first Tithe: and this also was holy, nor might be spent, but before GOD in the Court of the Temple. And therefore it was to be carried to Ierusalem, or if the way were long or tedious, they might be sold, and a fift [p] part was then to be added: with this money they were to buy Wine, Oyle, Sacrifices, and other necessaries at Ierusalem, wherewith the Husband-man and the Leuite were to feast in the Temple. After this second Tithe paid, they might (and not before) vse the rest as lay chattells (to borrow the word of my learned friend Master Selden) Scaliger giues them a Latine name, Pollucta, that is, exposed, viz. to common or prophane vse. For better view hereof: if the husbandman had six thousand measures of wheate, wine or oyle, he must pay a fortith or fiftith or at least a sixtieth part, that is, an hundred in the name of his [q] Theruma. Of the fiue thousand and nine hundred remaining, the first Tithe will deduct fiue hundred fourescore and ten, of which the Leuites must pay to the Priests, fiftie nine; as Tithe of the Tithe. Now out of the fiue thousand three hundred and ten yet remayning, the husband-man is to pay the second Tithe, which come to fiue hundred thirtie and one, and then there remayne to his owne vse, exposed or lay chattels foure thousand seuen hundred seuentie and nine. So that the first and second Tithe were in proportion as nineteene of the hundred, besides the greater Theruma; all these out of the Corne readie fanned: before which also they paid the first fruits in the eare. Further, [r] the husband-man was bound to carry them to Ierusalem, and there to deliuer them to the Treasurers, which were Leuites [s] deputed in diuers offices, to the custodie of these things, as fully appeareth, 2. Chron. 31. And if he did not carry them himselfe, he must send them by his Delegates: touching whom, the Law exacted that they should not be of the Gentiles. (This opinion is reiected by others, & seemes impossible, that the Tithes of so spacious a Countrey, should with much labor, cost, & losse, be carried to Ierusalem, which might with more ease, & conueniencie euery way, be receiued at home in the seueral cities of their tillage, as it is written, Neh. 10.37.) As for the second Tithe, they might redeeme it, with adding a fift part ouer and aboue the price. Tobit is a perfect patterne of this: The first Tithe of all increase (they are his own words) I gaue to the sons of Aaron, who ministred at Ierusalem, the second Tithe I sold, and went and spent it euery yeere at Ierusalem: And the third I gaue vnto them to whom it was meete. The vulgar Latine reades this last, So that he ministred euery third yeere, all his tithing to the Proselites and strangers. And it ought, saith Scaliger, rather to be called the Tithe of the third yeere, then the [t] third Tithe: for this was no other but the first Tithe, so that what was paid in the first and second yeere, and in the fourth and fift of that weeke of yeeres, or seuen yeeres space (the seuenth whereof was alway Sabbaticall, and freed from tillage, first fruits, Theruma and tithing in the name of the first tithe; the same in the third and sixt yeeres were not carried to Ierusalem, but laid vp in the barnes and store-houses of the husband-man, who to vse the words of Moses, [u] was to lay them vp within his Gates: And the Leuite, because he had no part nor inheritance with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherlesse, and the widow, which are within thy gates shall come, and shall eate and be satisfied. Thus Ioseph Scaliger. But others hold it due euerie yeere, but onely of such things as were vsefull for mans meate, as being imployed in Feasts, and no other then that which Scaliger calls the second Tithe, before mentioned. The remainder of the surplusage (to vse the words of Master Mountague) the three feasts ended, serued for those Priests and Leuites, that dwelt at Ierusalem, and had no abiding in the Countrey, and for those that in their courses came vp, and serued at the Temple, for want of which Malachie complayneth, and in Nehemias time, the Leuites fled to their Land, viz. where he had maintenance, by payment of the first Tithe. Euery third yeere, they added a third Tithe, to be distributed to the poore and Leuite, besides the former two for the Leuites, and for Feasts, as Iosephus hath obserued. Thus in all there were foure payments, or Tithes, as is before obserurd out of Saint Hierom. What I haue said of the Tithes of Vegetables, I vnderstand also (though some gainesay) of the Tithes of all they possessed, Luke 18. Mat. 23. euen of Cattell in like payments as the former, as of all other things for mans vse. Scaliger proceedes: The Iewes still in all places of their habitations obserue the seuenth yeere Sabbaticall, and therefore pay not then any first fruits or Theruma; as for Tithes they were not to be, as Scaliger holdeth, paid but at the Temple, which is now destroyed: neither haue they any certaine stocke of Priests or Leuites (howsoeuer many are so named) and therefore being asked of vs, saith Scaliger, if they might repaire the Sanctuarie in Mount Moriah, whether they would offer any Sacrifices; they answeeed, no, because there is now no Priest-hood in Israel. So desperate is their desolation. Now least any deceite might be vsed in tithing, there were officers appointed, which were called [x] Faithfull: these searched the houses suspected of non-payment: that increase whereof the tithing was vncertaine, was called Eamai. From the Dedication of Maccabeus, to the time of Iohn Hyrcanus, all paid their first fruits and Theruma, but fewe their Tithes, because those Faithfull were vnfaithfull, and corrupted with gifts: But then the greater Councell decreed that none should be chosen to that Office, but such as were, as they were called. From thence [y] to the destruction of the Temple they were truely paide. The First fruits, Therumoth and Tithes were not payed all at one time, but each kinde at their owne time, as Wheate in Siuan after Pentecost, Wine in Tisri, Oyle in Tebeth: and so of the rest. Thus farre Scaliger: For my owne part I hold that diuision of Saint Hierome the best: and that of those foure sorts of Tithes, the first is Naturall, Morall, Diuine tribute, equally due, though not alike exacted in all ages, and then Leuiticall onely by speciall designement of GOD, which appointed Leui for a time, to the worke and wages of his Priest. The second payd to the high-Priest by the Leuite, was (as that high Priest-hood it selfe) meerely ceremonial. The Popes couetousnesse reuersing Christianitie, recalling Iudaisme, made it Canonically due to him, which since with vs is made Iudiciall or Statutarie: And whereas Aaron alone, and Leui once receiued, now they must, if not alone, pay perpetuall Tentes, besides ten times as much subsiduarie payments, as temporall men (all things considered) of their abilitie, when the publique neede requires, and that notwithstanding our owne inheritance is so many waies diuerted, peruerted, subuerted. This I speake not as grudging Cæsar his due (for GOD and man loue a cheerefull giuer) but to satisfie the euill eye of them that haue euill will at Sion, and grudge the remaines of the ruines of Leui, willing euery way to further the Priests hindrances. Ceremoniall was the third Tithe, as dependant on the Temple and Feasts. The Fourth Iudiciall, as relieue to the poore of that Iewish state, whether Leuites or Lay-man, in their seuerall habitations. But if any lust to fill themselues with matter of this argument, let them reade what hath beene written by Master Selden, and his Antagonists, [t] Ioseph Antiq. lib. 4.7. calleth it the third Tithe of the third yeere, which, saith he (besides the two yeerely tithes, one to the Leuite, the other for Sacrifices and Feasts) was for the poore, &c. euery third yeere.

§. III.

Of their Personall Offerings, and of their and our Ecclesiasticall Reuenues.

BEsides First-fruits and Tithes, they payed to the Treasurie personall offerings, as *Exod.*30.12. Euery man payed halfe a shekel, [a] which the Hebrewes interpreted to be perpetuall for the maintenance of the Sacrifices; others temporarie, then onely put in practice. As for that collection, 2.King. 21. made by Ioas for the repayring of the Temple, and that after by Nehemiah, Chap. 10. the circumstances shew much difference. This Treasurie, in regard of this Poll-money, grew very rich, as appeared in [b] Crassus robbing the same of ten thousand talents at one time, besides a great beame of gold, which Eleazarus the Treasurer, vpon Crassus his Oath (afterwards violated neuerthelesse) to redeeme the rest, deliuered to him, weighing three hundred Mina, euery Mina being two pounds two ounces, and a quarter Troy. Tully [c] and other Authors mention these Oblations of the Iewes to their Treasurie yeerely. These Gifts and offerings the Law exacted: they performed many other also, either of their free-will, or of Vow, otherwise little differing from the former, Leuitici vltimo. Many other Ceremonies of their meates, garments, fastings Trumpets, and in other cases, I hope I shall haue leaue to omit in this place, and remit him that would further know of them to the Scripture it selfe, hauing pointed out the principall.

But by this is apparant, which Doctor Downam [d] hath obserued, that all these being deliuered them in the Lords Treasurie; without their labour or cost, together with their eight and fortie Cities assigned them, amounting to a farre greater proportion for the maintenance of that small Tribe: then all the Bishoprick, Benefices, Colledge-lands, or whatsoeuer other Ecclesiasticall endowments and profits in this Land, although the prophane Ammonites or hypocriticall Cloysters had neuer conspired to shaue off our [e] beards, and our garments by the Buttocks, not leauing to [f] couer our nakednesse, or their shame. And yet how sicke is Ahab for Naboths Vineyard? And would GOD we had no Iezabels, to play the (too cunning) Physicians in this disease. Let me haue a little leaue to say no more then others (for the substance) in bookes and Sermons haue said alreadie: although those Bellies to whom we speake, haue no eares. The first stroke that wounded vs, and causeth vs still to halt, was from Rome, The mother of abominations and whoredomes. Here, as in the suburbs of Hell, were founded the Churches Ruines: Our Bulls of Bashan (Abbey-lubbers, and Cloysterers) with the leaden hornes of those Romane Bulles, haue pushed downe our Churches (our Chauncels at least) and made them to fall into those [g] Cages of vncleane Byrds, the Popish Monasteries. Of nine thousand two hundred eightie and foure Parishes in England, after [h] Master Camdens account, three thousand eight hundred fortie fiue were (it is properly termed) impropriated. And who knoweth whether those Appropriations did not supplant their Supplanters, and dispropriate them of that which in a iuster proprietie was giuen them in their first foundations, for that three-fold maintainance of themselues, of learning, and of the poore? yea, happily yet (if we obserue the course of Diuine Iustice) we may see many, whose former inheritances haue by the addition of these, as of a contagious garment, beene infected, and haue either died, or beene sicke at the least of this plague. The Arke when it was in Dagons Temple (because imprisoned in an Idoll-Temple) brake Dagons neck: and when it was thence translated to their Cities, they also were filled with diseases. Our Arke hath thus dealt with the Temples, and cannot well brooke the Cities and Lay-hands which imprison, or if they will appropriate it. O that they would once send it home where it should be. How fitly and fully doe those words of Habacuk [i] agree to the houses founded for Religion, by this and like irreligion peruerted, and at last subuerted? out of the Tymber hath answered it; Woe vnto him that buildeth a Towne with blood, and erecteth a Citie by iniquitie. Thus we see, the stones haue cryed out of their walles indeede, and by their demolished heapes may receiue Labans name, Iegar sehadutha, the heape of witnesse, their ruines remayning testimonies of GODS iudgements. A violent streame (saith Master [1] Camden) breaking through all obstacles, hath rushed out vpon the Ecclesiastick state of this Land, and ouerwhelmed, to the worlds wonder, and Englands griefe, the greatest part of the English Clergie, with their most beautifull buildings: and those riches which the Christian pietie of the English had from the time of their first Christianitie consecrated to God, were (as it were) in a moment dispersed, and (if I may so say) prophaned.

And let not our Temporall men pretend inheritances, and humane Lawes in these things of diuine right. For how can Kyrkes (so called as κυριακὰ, that is, the Lords houses, before giuen vp by solemne consecration into diuine possessions with their liuings) become humane, without surrender of the owner, or satisfaction to him? As the word since hath receiued a double aspiration, so the things themselues a doubling and deceiuing alteration, wherby we haue robbed our GOD as in Malachie * he complaines: worse then the heathen, which he there iustifies; and which in that extreme Ægyptian * famine, alienated all Lay possessions, but wanted this Aura sacra fames sacri, left the Priests Lands inuiolated, which yet were very large, as in our Ægyptian Relations shall appeare. Poore Vzzah offered in a good intent (which I also thinke of many which were forward in suppression of Religious houses in the dates of King Henrie, and of other Church lands in King Edwards time) but GOD accepted not such zeale, and he by his vntimely fates left the name to the * place Perez Vzzah vntill this day. Nor did King Henry long enioy that his Ecclesiasticall purchase; or long continue much wealthier by it, but was forced to base monies before his end; that I speake not of the short raigne of King Edward his sonne, that vertuous Prince, whose times rather then his holy hands, caused the desolations of the Chauntrie lands (and how many other vanished away in that cloude?) after the dissolution of the former. And doe not our eyes see (in other respects to the ioy of our eyes, but to him a iudgement) notwithstanding so many wiues, a Perez Henry, a rupture of the kingdome from his loynes, and that iust so many yeeres (as some * haue obserued) after that his attempt, as the golden head of the Babylonian Monarchie continued in that familie after the Temple prophaned and the holy vessels transported; when Belshazzar escaped not, though he could pleade prescription of possession, succession and inheritance as our proprietaries, with a deerer purchase by costly siege, then these things cost the first purchasers after the suppression. I might heere also end with the tragicall ends of those that were forwardest in those enterprises: But I spare their names, and referre the Reader to our Histories, which yeelde to vs examples many of Salomons rule (from Wolsey downwards) that it * is a snare to deuoure that which is sanctified. So suddenly were they caught, so surely were they holden, in this snare; and as their zeale did eate vp Gods house (deuoured that which was sanctified, and got so many houses of God in the Land into Lay possession) so the diuine zeale of Gods House did eate vp them in bloody vntimely morsels. And let the present possessors heare and feare.

Let none traduce me as a troubler of Israel, and a traducer of our Law and State, which haue thus both changed and settled these things. I enueigh against Absoloms conspiracie, and Achitophels deuices, which were the troublers of Israel, and so disturbed the iust heart of righteous Dauid, that on the sudden he a little forgat the exact rule: & commanded, Thou [m] and Ziba diuide the Lands. So (if losers may haue leaue to speake) our Parliament (perhaps with some extasie of ioy, for remouing the sinkes and stinkes of superstition) had in those busie times but negligent consideration of Mephibosheths right; and our Vicar-Mephibosheths, the Clergie then, did not much vrge it; yea, he would still say of these our halting Zibaes, Let them take all [n], rather then we should want our Lord and his Gospell, to come home to vs in peace. And in peace let them rest which were Authors of this peace to vs; and let vs pray that a worse generation of Vipers do not arise, and that the o Canker-worme eate not what the Grashopper hath left, and the Caterpiller the residue of the Canker-worme. I meane those Latron-patrons, and Patron-latrons, whereof these extend to the vtmost, whatsoeuer might, and whatsoeuer colour of right, in exemptions, Customes, Priuiledges and prauileges, whereby euery Iohn-a-stile shall intercept the Churches due, or by a weightier fee, force a composition, or wrangle out some broken Title, or breake the necke of the Case with a Prohibition: the other hauing a trust committed, maketh himselfe a Bawde, and selleth his Church (which cost no meaner price then the blood of Christ) for money. §. IIII.

Of their First-borne, Priests, Leuites, and other Religious Persons.

AFter that we haue spoken of the Times, places and Rites sacred to God, order requireth next to speake of those persons, whose Office and Function it was to procure and manage those Diuine and Religious affaires. And first, amongst the first Hebrewes, we finde no Priest named before Abrahams time, in which Melchisedech was interpreted by the most, to be Shem the sonne of Noah, Father both of this and other Nations: And Master Broughton hath written a whole booke in confirmation hereof. The heads of Families then exercised the Priestly office of teaching, praying, and sacrificing in their owne houshoulds, as we reade of [a] Abraham, [b] Isaac, [c] and Iacob: After that, the first borne of all the Tribes of Israel were consecrated to this businesse, when as God had destroyed the first-borne of Ægypt, [d] and these offered Sacrifices, [e] vntill that the Leuites were chosen in their roome; [f] God turning the Propheticall curse of Iacob, of [g] scattering them in Israel, into a blessing, for the instructing of the Israelites. The cause of this their consecration was, because they, [h] in a zeale of GODS glorie had sanctified their hands to this ministerie in the blood of the neerest of their Idolatrous kindred, that had sinned in adoring the golden Calfe.

f Num. 3. 41.
g Gen. 49. 7.
h Exod. 32. 29.

Now in the third of Numbers, where the first-borne of the Israelites, and the Leuites are numbred, appeareth a difficultie, which most of the Interpreters which I haue Read of that place, haue neglected: namely, that of the Israelitish first-borne there were found, from a moneth-old vpward, two and twenty thousand, two hundred seuentie and three; and of the Leuites, but two and twenty thousand; so that therefore there must be fiue shekels a-piece payed for the redemption of euery of those two hundred seuentie and three in surplusage more then the Leuites; whereas yet in the parcels of the Leuiticall account, are found more of the Leuites then of the Israelites, as appeareth; the family of the Gershonite, containing seuen thousand and fiue hundred; the Kohathites, eight thousand six hundred; and the Family of Merari, six thousand and two hundred, which being added together, amount to two and twentie thousand and three hundred; and therefore are seuen and twentie more then the Israelites. To this [i] Lyra, Dionysius Carthusianus, and Iunius (for the most are wholly silent) answere, that those three hundred ouer and aboue the two and twentie thousand were first-borne themselues, and therefore in right of the former challenge of the first-borne, were the Lords already. And if it seeme as much wonder (which Authors obserue not) that of two and twentie thousand, were but three hundred first-borne; [k] That their exploite of executing their kindred for Idolatrie (before mentioned) in which sinne, the first borne, as Priests, were likeliest to haue followed Aaron, a chiefe man of their Tribe, might answere for me. And that cruell Edict [l] of Pharaoh, and their miraculous fruitfulnesse, may mae it lesse strange, that both in these Leuites there were so few first-borne, and in the other Israelites also, with whom amongst 603550. men from twentie yeeres olde vpwards, there were (though reckoning but from a moneth olde, as is said) but two and twentie thousand two hundred seuentie three, which is little more then one of seuen and twentie, besides that inequalitie of the persons numbred. Likewise as Phil. Ferdinand hath obserued out of Abraham ben Dauid, if a woman first brought forth a female, neither that nor the sonne, if shee had any after, were of these sanctified first-borne. This excursion vpon this occasion, wherein I haue found diuers Interpreters mute, will (I hope) find pardon with the Reader, who happily himselfe may finde some better resolution.

To returne to our Historie; God had before appointed Aaron to be high Priest, and his Sonnes[m] to be Priests, to whom the Leuites were assigned after (as we haue said) as assistants in inferiour offices of the Tabernacle. Aaron, from whom is reckoned the succession of the high Priests, in the same office, had appointed to him eight holy garments, a Brest-plate, an Ephod, a Robe, a broidered coate, a Miter, a Girdle, a Plate of gold, and linnen breeches. Also his sonnes had appointed to them Coates, and Boners, and Girdles, and Breeches: Which their attire is described at large, Exodus 28. Iosephus writeth of the stones there mentioned; That that on the Priests right shoulder shined forth very bright, when GOD was pleased with their Sacrifices, as did also those twelue in the brest-plate, when in the time of Warre GOD would assist them: Which ceased miraculously to shine two hundred yeeres before his time; or as the Talmudists say, from the building of the second Temple.

m Exod. 28. Leuit 24.4.

The consecration of the Priests, and Rites thereof are mentioned, Exodus 29. The conditions required in the high Priest, as that hee should not haue the bodily defects of blindnesse, lamenesse, maymednesse, &c. nor should vncouer his head, and many other such like, are expressed, Leuit. 21. His office was daily to light the Lights at the euening, and to burne incense at Morning and Euening, and once euerie Sabbath to set the Shew-bread before the Lord to Sacrifice, and once a yeere to make reconciliation in the holy-place, &c. This office they executed till the captiuitie, after which they ruled also in the Commonwealth, and the familie of the Maccabees obtayned temporall and spirituall iurisdiction, being both Priests and Kings. But the state being vsurped by others, they also appointed high Priests at their pleasures: and thus were Annas and Caiphas high Priests, although Caiphas alone administred the office, which was abrogated to Annas, the name only remayning: and thus Iosephus saith, that Annas was most happie, who had himselfe beene high Priest, and seene all his sonnes in that office, whereas in the institution, and before the Captiuitie, this office continued ordinarily with their liues: which after they enioyed longer or shorter, at pleasure of the Conqueror.

Next vnto the high Priest, were the Priests lineally descended from Eleazar and Ithamar, the sonnes of Aaron, as in number many, so in their Priestly rayments, Consecration, Condition, and Office, much differing from the former, as appeareth, for their Garments, Leuit. 28. their Consecration 29. their Conditions required in them, Leuit. 10. and 21. and their Office in some things, as Preaching, Praying, Sacrificing, not much vnlike to the former, but in degree, sometime assisting him in these things, sometime alone, and in some things, nothing participating, as in Moses plainely may be seene. These Priestly families, being of the house of Eleazar sixteene, and of Ithamar eight, which Dauid by Lot distributed into foure and twentie orders, according to the number of the heads of families, those foure and twentie men, chiefe of those orders, being to the high Priest, as Aarons sonnes were vnto him in their ministerie, 1. Chron. 24. and tooke turnes by course[n] in performing of the same, as Luke sheweth[o] in the example of Zacharie. Iosephus[p] testifieth the same, and affirmeth, That in each of these rankes were more then fiue thousand men in his time: And in the Historie of his life, saith, that himselfe was of the first of these orders, betwixt which was no small difference, and the heads of these were also called Chiefe Priests[q] in the old and new Testament. * It was by their Lawe forbidden on paine of death to any Priest or Leuite, to intermeddle in anothers Function. But at the three solemne Feasts any of the Priests, which would, were permitted to Minister, and to participate with those whose course it then was: Onely they might not offer the Vowes, or Free-will, or ordinarie Offerings.

n The course lasted from one Sabbath to the next, and so in order, being renued euerie Sabbath: from hence Scaliger gathereth by demonstration that Iohn Bap. was borne about the beginning of Aprill. Of their Academical times, studies, degrees, &c. See Iun. Academia. cap. 4. & 6.

He distributed them according to their families vnto their seuerall functions, twentie foure thousand to the seruice of the Temple: six thousand to be Iudges and Rulers, foure thousand Porters, and foure thousand which praysed the Lord vpon Instruments. The Gibeonites, called after Nethanims, were at hand vnto the Leuites in the meaneſt Offices about the Tabernacle and Temple, *Ioſ.*9.21. and 1.*Chron.*9. aſſigned hereunto firſt by Ioſhua, after by Dauid and the Princes, for the ſeruice of the Leuites, to cut wood, and draw water, for the houſe of God, *Ezra.*8. Beſides theſe Eccleſiaſticall perſons in the ordinarie Miniſterie of the Temple were other, which may no leſſe be counted holy: either in regard of Vow, as the [f] Nazarites for a time: Sampſon is an eſpeciall example hereof; and Iames the Iuſt, brother of our Lord: or elſe they were Prophets by extraordinarie calling, as Samuel, Eſay, Ieremie, and others: to whom God manifeſted his will by dreames, viſions, and reuelations; whoſe ordinarie habite ſeemes to be a rugged hayrie garment, by the example of [t] Elijah, and the falſe [u] Prophets, and of [x] Iohn Baptiſt afterward. And thus much of thoſe perſons, which according to the Law were ſacred to God: it followeth that wee ſhould obſerue their ſuperſtitious deuoting of themſelues, according to their owne deuices and traditions, vnto a ſuppoſed ſeruice of God, in a more ſtrict manner then ordinarie, or ſome-what in opinion and practice differing both from the Law, and the reſt of the Iewiſh people. Of this kinde were many Sects; whereof we are next to ſpeake.

Of the diuers Sects, Opinions, and alterations of Religion, amongſt the Hebrewes.

§. I.

Of their ancient Diuiſions and Idolatries.

IN this matter of Alterations, and altercations amongſt them, about Queſtions and practice of Religion, we are in the firſt place to obſerue their often Apoſtaſies [a] from the truth of the Law to the Idolatrous ſuperſtitions of the neighbouring Nations: as the Reliques of the Ægyptian Idolatrie in the golden Calfe, *Exod.*32. their often murmurings in the deſart, the preſumption of Nadab and Abihu, and after of Aaron and Miriam, the conſpiracie of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, Baalams ſtumbling-blocke, to couple them in Idolatrous ſeruice to Baal-Peor the Idoll of the Moabites: And after their poſſeſſion of the Land, when Ioſhua and the Elders were dead, they ſerued [b] the gods of the people that were round about them, as Baal and Aſhtaroth: Of the Idols and their Rites is before ſpoken. And although Gideon cut downe the groue, and deſtroyed the Altar of Baal, [c] yet he made an Ephod of the earerings of the prey, and put it in Ophrah his Citie, & all Iſrael went a whoring there after it [d]: and after his death, made Paal-berith their God. They ſerued alſo the Gods of Aram, Zidon, Moab, Ammon, [e] and the Philiſtims: Michah [f] an Ephramite made an houſe of Gods, an Ephod, and Teraphim, and conſecrated one of his ſonnes to be his Prieſt; and after ſet a Leuite, Ionathan, in his roome, the occaſion of Apoſtaſie to a great part of the Tribe of Dan, all the while the houſe of God was in Shiloh: beſides, the corruption of ſtate and religion by the [g] Beniamites, and by [h] Hophni and Phinehas the ſons of Eli.

[i] Elias Leuita deſcribeth the forme of ſacring or hallowing their Teraphim in this ſort. They killed a man which was a firſt borne, wreathing his head from his bodie, and embalming the ſame with ſalt and ſpices: and then wrote vpon a plate of gold, the name of an vncleane ſpirit, and putting the ſame vnder the head, ſet it vpon a wall, and burned Candles before it and worſhipped the ſame. R. Abraham [k] ſaith, they were Images of men made to receiue power from aboue, as the Idolaters conceiued of them.

But after the reformation of Religion by Samuel, Dauid, and Salomon (who yet became after an Idolater) befell their greateſt Apoſtaſie, to wit, of the ten Tribes; from God, their King, and Religion, by the our-wiſe policie of Ieroboam, which corrupted and ſubuerted both it and himſelfe. He (leſt thoſe reuolted Iſraelites ſhould, by frequenting Gods appointed worſhip at Ieruſalem, re-acknowledge their former and truer Lord) conſecrated two Egyptian Calues at Bethel and [l] Dan, and made an Houſe of High Places, and Prieſts of the loweſt of the people.

Iudah alſo made them, in the ſame times, High Places, Images, and Groues, on euery high hill, and vnder euerie greene Tree. Yet had the kingdome of Iudah their entercourſes of corruption and reformation, according as they had good or bad Kings; but in Iſrael the Common-wealth and Church receiued, by that ſinne of Ieroboam, an vncureable wound and irrecouerable loſſe, vntill that in Gods iuſt puniſhment, they were carried away by the Aſſyrian Kings into Aſſyria, and into Hala, Habor, and the Cities of the Medes, as 2. King. 17. appeareth, where is recorded a ſummarie collection of theſe and other their Idolatries. Of theſe exiled Iſraelites (if wee beleeue the reports and coniectures of diuers Authors) are deſcended thoſe Tartarians, which ſince ouer-ranne, with their Conqueſts, a greater part of Aſia and Europe, then euer any other Nation, before or ſince: Of which, their Originall and Exploits, wee ſhall in fitter place further diſcourſe. But it is farre more probable, that in, and after the Babyloniſh Captiuitie, the Iſraelites adioyned themſelues in Religion to the other Iewes, at leaſt, the greateſt part of them. And though not many returned with Ezra, yet thoſe parts remayned full of Iewes, hauing their Vniuerſities and ſome kinde of gouernment, till the Saracenicall deluge, and in ſome tolerable condition after, as Beniamin relates, which continued till the time of the Tartars, which had they beene of this Nation, they would haue preferred them; whereas euer ſince their times the eſtate of the Iewes hath beene more contemptible then before. I denie not, that many of them might mixe themſelues with the Nations with whom they liued, and grow into one people with them: and that there might be in diuers places ſome remnants of this Iſraelitiſh diſperſion, as Beniamin reckons ſome, and Trigaut in China, coniectures of others. But this Tale of the Tartars, and that [m] other of the incloſed Iewes, ſeeme but idle dreames, without any good ground of truth or credit.

The other Kingdome of Iudah, although it receiued ſometime ſome breathing and refreſhing vnder her more Vertuous and Religious Kings, yet for the moſt part, groning vnder Tyrannie and Idolatrie, was at laſt a prey to the Babylonians: From which ſeruitude being freed by the Perſian Monarches, vnder varieties of aduerſe and proſperous fortunes, it was afterwards rent and torne by the Macedonians, being made a common Stage for the Armes and Armies of the ſucceſſours of Ptolemey in Ægypt, and Selencus in Aſia, remayning meede vnto the Conquerour, and receiuing no ſmall impreſſions and wounds in Soule as well as Bodie, in Religion as in Politie. But being after deliuered from Macedonean thraldome by the Familie of the Macchabees, the Gouernement, Eccleſiaſticall and Temporall, became theirs, but the mindes of this Iewiſh people was in thoſe times diuided in diuerſitie of Sects and Opinions, of which the Euangelicall and other Hiſtories make mention.

One diuiſion * was of the whole Nation, not ſo much for opinion as for the differing habitation, which brought alſo ſome circumſtances of other differences. The Iewes therefore were generally thus diſtinguiſhed, The Hebrewes which dwelt in Paleſtina, and the ſcattered ſtrangers, [n] as Peter calls them; to wit, the Græcians (theſe two ſorts are mentioned by Luke, Acts 6.1.) and the διασπορὰ Βαϐυλῶνος, or the remainders of the deportation of Babylon, the Metropolis whereof was Babylon, while it remayned, and after Bagded. The Metropolis or head of the [o] διασπορὰ Ἑλλήνων or Ἑλληνιστῶν was Alexandria, where alſo in Beniamin Tudelenſis his time, there was a Synagogue of the Babylonian diſperſion. The Aſian Iewes were moſt of this Babylonian ſort; to theſe Saint Peter wrote from Babylon, which therefore he nameth not in the inſcription. The Helleniſts were ſo called of hellenizing or vſing the Greeke tongue in their Synagogues (in which they had the Scriptures tranſlated) in Ægypt, Greece and Italie. By reaſon of this tranſlation [p] the Hebrews and Helleniſts often diſagreed (for the Hebrewes called it a backward reading, becauſe it is read from the left hand to the right) which ſometime brake forth into open violence. R. Eleazar [q] aſſaulted the Synagogue of the Alexandrians at Ieruſalem, and committed therein much outrage: And Chriſtian Charitie could ſcarce combine them, as Luke mentioneth, Act. 6.1. This Greeke tranſlation was vſed by them throughout Europe: they had it in Hebrew Letters, as Tertullian teſtifieth in the Serapium at Alexandria. Thus Philo and other of theſe learned Helleniſts, were ignorant of the Hebrew. Likewiſe of thoſe Hebrewes, there was ſmall reckoning had of the Galilæans by their ſupercilious and ſuperſtitious brethren of Iudæa, as the Goſpell hath taught vs.

§. II.

Of the Karraim and Babbinists, and of the Hasidai.

THE opinions of the Iewes may be reduced [a] into these two generall heads: the one were such as contented themselues with the Law of God, and were called Karraim, or Koraim, of which sort there are diuers at this day in Constantinople, and other where: The other Rabbinists, Supererogatorie (as Doctor Hall calls them) and Popish Iewes, called Hasidim, professing a more strict holinesse then the Law required. Yet at first these both pleased themselues, and did not by opposition of Science, displease each other, and disagreeing in opinion, they yet in affection agreed. But when these voluntarie seruices beganne to bee drawne in Canons, and of arbitrarie became necessarie, they were rent into sundrie Sects. Of these and their originall, let vs heare Scaliger speake.

There were [b] (saith he) before the times of Hasmonæi, two kinds of Dogmatists, men holding differing opinions, among the Iewes: the one onely accepting the written Law; the other Tradition, or the addition to the Law. Of the former kinde arose the Karraim, of whom came the Sadduces; of the latter, the Pharises. These Pharises were the issue of the Hasidees.

The Hasidees were a Corporation, Guild, or Fraternitie, which voluntarily addicted themselues to the Offices of the Law, 1. Macchabees, chap. 2. verse 42. [c] Their originall was from the times of Ezrah, or Esdras; Haggai and Zacharie, the Prophets, being Authors of this Order. These, in regard of their institution, were called Holy, Hasidin; and in regard of their Combination; Hasidæi. And besides that which the Law enioyned (which is iust debt) they supererogated, and of their owne free accord disbursed vpon the Temple and Sacrifices. They professed not onely to liue according to the prescript of the Law, but if any thing could by interpretations and consequences be drawne thence, they held themselues bound to satisfie it, and when they had done all, to seeme to haue done nothing, but accounted themselues vnprofitable seruants notwithstanding.

Euery one paid a tribute to the reparations of the Temple, from the times of Esdras and Nehemias. [d] The Hasidæans added further (of their owne free-will) to the Sanctuarie, Walles, and Porches, neuer (almost) going from the Temple, which they seemed to hold peculiar to themselues, and by which they vsed to sweare, By this Habitacle, or, By this house: Which the Pharises, their posteritie, also did [e], as likewise they learned of them to build the Sepulchres of the Prophets. They were therefore called Hasidim, either because their Colledge was instituted of the Prophets; or of their holy and religious workes, and the sacred buildings by them eyther repaired, or reared from the foundations. And therefore when wicked Alcimus had killed threescore men of this Corporation or Guild, the people thought their death was propheſied in the [f] Psalme, such reputation was there of their holinesse.

These Hasidæi were not in proper sense a Sect, but a Fraternitie, which euery day assembled in the Temple, and offered in daily Sacrifice a Lambe, which was called, the sin offering of the Hasidim. One day was excepted, the eleuenth of Tisri, in which that Sacrifice was omitted. They offered not themselues (for they were not Priests) but the Priests in their name. Abraham Zacuth [g] saith, That Baba, the son of Buta, daily of his owne accord offered a Ram for a sin-offering, except one day, which was the day after the Expiation. And this was called, the Sacrifice of the Saints for Sin: And he sware, By this Habitacle, that is, the Temple. Of this kinde, or much like thereto, Scaliger [h] thinketh the Rechabites were, which Ieremia [i] mentioneth, whose immediate father he accounteth Ionadab (not him which [k] liued in the daies of Iehu, but another of that name) and that their austere order began but a little before it ended (namely, in the same Prophets time) quickly ending, because of the captiuitie. After the Captiuitie these sonnes of Ionadab, renuing their former obseruations, were called Hasidæi, which went not from the Temple, and obserued the orders aboue mentioned: so Scaliger interpreteth Ieremies Propheſie, that Ionadab should not want one to stand before the Lord, that is, to minister & attend holy duties in the temple, like to Anna the Prophetes [l]. This, saith he, is the true beginning of the Hasidæi, which abstained from wine, as did also the Priests, as long as they ministred in the temple. Thus much Scaliger. As for that which Serarius hath writte against Scaliger and Drusius in this argument, both in his Trihæresium and his Mineruall, or elsewhere, I refer the Reader to himselfe, choosing rather to expresse what I thinke probable then entertainmen with long vnnecessarie disputes. Drusius [m] proueth, that diuers of the Pharises and Essees also were of these Hasidæi, wherby it appeareth, that it was rather a Brotherhood, as Scal. calleth it, then a Sect. He sheweth their Rites and Discipline, out of Iuchasin. [n] They spent 9. houres of the day in praier. They beleeued that a man might sin in thought, & therfore they had care thereof; their will was not without the will of Heauen, that is, of God. Ten things were peculiar to them: Not to lift vp their eyes aboue ten cubits: 2. Not to goe bare-headed: 3. To establish three refections: 4. To dispose their hearts to Prayer: 5.

Not to looke on eyther ſide: ſixtly, To goe about, that they might not bee troubleſome to any companie: Seuenthly, Not to eate at the Tables of great men: eightly, If they had angred any man, quickly to appeaſe him: ninthly, To haue a pleaſant voyce, and to deſcend to the interpretation of the Law: tenthly, to accuſtome themſelues to their Threads and Phylacteries.

Rab (one of his Fraternitie) did not lift vp his eyes aboue foure cubits, Tenne or twentie daies before their death, they were diſeaſed with the Collicke, and ſo all cleare and cleane they departed into the other life.

To returne vnto Scaliger touching the originall of Sects, and to leaue thoſe Hoſidæan obſeruants. As long (ſaith he) as Supererogation onely was vſed, there was no Sect in the people of GOD: But when the precepts thereof were brought into Canons, and committed to wrighting, then aroſe many doubts, diſputations, altercations, growing and ſucceeding daily, from whence ſprang two Sects, differing in opinion; the one admitting onely the Law, the other embracing the interpretations and expoſitions of their Rabbines. The former in proceſſe of time, was diuided into two. For at firſt, the Karraim were only ſuch as obſerued the Law and the Prophets, till the times of Sadok and Boethi, or Baithi, who firſt doubted of the puniſhment of ſinnes, and rewards of good works, from whom ſprang the hereſie of the Sadduces. The Karraim were not before this diuided in Sect from the Haſidim, but onely in thoſe voluntarie Functions and Supererogations, wherein the Law, by Iniunction, ruled the former, and theſe, as is ſaid, ſupererogated. But when Canons and Iniunctions began to bee written, then of theſe Haſidim aroſe Dogmatiſts, which called themſelues Peruſhim, Holy, and Separated both from the other Haſidim, and from the Vulgar; making a neceſſitie of that obſeruation, which before was voluntarie. This ſort was againe diuided into thoſe which retained the name Peruſhim, or Phariſes; and the Eſſens; both receiuing from their Authors the Rules and Precepts of their Sect. After this, the Phariſes were diuided into many kindes: The Iewes reckon ſeuen. The Eſſens alſo were diuided firſt into Cloyſterers, or Collegians, which liued in a common ſocietie; and Eremites, or ſolitarie perſons; and thoſe former into ſuch as married; and others which remained continent.

§ III.

Of the Phariſes.

NOW let vs conſider of theſe more particularly; and firſt of the Phariſes, Druſius [a] deriueth the name from the Syrian, as moſt of the names of the new Teſtament are, and not from the Hebrew; for then it ſhould not bee Phariſes, but Pharuſes: as after the Hebrew, it ſhould rather be Maſias, then Meſſias. The Etymologie ſome fetch from Phares, which ſignifieth Diuiſion, as Epiphanius, and Origen, with others [b]: againſt which Druſius excepteth, becauſe in Phares the laſt Letter is Tſaddi; here it is Schin. Others [c] deriue it from Paraſh, ſignifying to explaine, becauſe they did all things openly, to be ſeene of men: it is not likely: for Hypocriſie loues her works ſhould be ſeene, but not her Humor (then ſhould it be hypocriſie:) ſhe would not be ſeene in her affection to be ſeene: And this name, in this ſenſe would haue beene to their infamie, and not to their reputation, which they moſt aymed at. A third deriuation of this name, is from another ſignification of the ſame Verbe, [*] to expound. But to expound the Law, was more proper to the Scribes; and ſome of the Phariſes were not expoſitors. Howbeit, the moſt probable opinion is, that they were ſo called of Separation; becauſe they were, or would ſeeme to be, ſeparated from others [d]: firſt, in cleanneſſe of life; ſecondly, in dignitie thirdly, in regard of the exquiſiteneſſe of thoſe obſeruations, whereto they were ſeparated; fourthly, in their habit, wherein they were (as our Monkes) diſtinguiſhed from the people; yea, they did abhorre the garments of the people.

Their opinions are gathered by [e] Ioſephus, and others, out of whom Druſius, Serarius, Scaliger and others. They attributed (ſaith Ioſephus) all things to Fate. Abraham Zacuth interpreteth their opinion thus, They beleeue that God knoweth and diſpoſeth all things, and the Stars helpe; yet ſo, as free-will is left in the hand of man. And if a man by his free-will chuſeth the good, God will helpe him [*] in his good way. They ſay; That there is no Hearb in Earth which hath not his proper Planet in Heauen.

The aſcribe immortalitie to the Soule, holding, that iudgement paſſed on it vnder the Earth; and that if it had done euill, it was adiudged to perpetuall priſons; if well, it had eaſie returne vnto life by a [f] tranſmigration, or going into another body. So Zacuth: The good Soules take delight of their good workes; the bad deſcend, and aſcend not. They beleeued leeued that there were both Deuils and good Angels. They conceiued, that he which kept the most of the commandements, although he transgresse in some, is iust before GOD: against which opinion g Burgensis thinketh, that Iames alledged that saying in his Epistle, He that sayleth in one, is guiltie of all. He citeth Rab. Moses for his Pharisaicall opinion; That GOD iudgeth according to the pluralitie or paucitie (to vse his owne words) of merits or demerits. Like stuffe haue I read in S. Francis Legend, of the ballance wherein mens deeds are weighed, and the Deuil lost his prey by the weight of a Chalice, which one had giuen to the Saint; which heauie metall caused the Scale wherein his good deedes were put (before too light) to weigh heauiest. They (the ancienter Pharises) confesse the Resurrection of the fleshe. They call their Traditions the Law giuen by Word, and the vnwritten Law, which they equall to the written, deriuing both from Moses, as more fully else-where shall bee said. These Traditions they called Δευτέρωσις, as both Epiphanius and Hieronymus witnesse: the Teachers thereof Σοφοὶ or Wise-men, and when they lectured, they were wont to say, Οἱ Σοφοὶ Δευτεροῦσι i. The wise-men teach Traditions. Of these Traditions were, concerning the Sabbath, That they might iourney from their place two thousand cubites; (Hierome i accounteth feete, Origen k Elnes) That none might carry any burthen that day, but they interpreted, if one carried on one shoulder, it was a burthen; if on both, it was none; if his shooes had nailes, they were a burthen, otherwise not. Concerning fasting, the Pharise boasteth, Luke 18. 12. I fast twice in the weeke: which they obserued (sayth Theophilact l) on the second and fifth day, Mundaies and Thursdaies. Happily our Wednesdaies and Fridaies succeeded in this Penance, that we might not seeme to be behinde them in dutie, howsoeuer we disagree with them in their time. And yet Mercerus saith, The Iewes fasted the fourth day, Wednesday, because they held that vnluckie, in which children are taken with the Squinancie. Further, the Pharises eate not vnwashed ἐαν μὴ πυγμῇ νίψωνται πυγμὴν, Marke 7. 3. Except they wash with the fist; as Beza transla eth. Scaliger m expoundeth it, not by washing one fist in the other, but composing the fingers into such a frame, that all their ends meete on the top of the thumbe, which for want of another name is called πυγμὴ, a Fist, although it be not properly so. In this forme they hold vp their hands in washing, that the water may slide downe to the elbow, and thence fall to the ground, as the Iewes vse to this day. They washed n when they came from Market, because sinners, & vncleane persons were there, whose touch might pollute them. They washed also Cups and Brasen vessels and Beds, not Chamber-beds to lie on (Drusius o expoundeth) but dining-beds, which they vsed in stead of Tables.

Their Phylacteries or Seruatories, Defensiues (so the word signifieth) in Hebrew r Totaphoth, they vsed as Preseruatiues, or Remembrancers of the Law, and ware them larger then other men. Hierome calls them Pittaciola, resembling to them herein some simple superstitious women, wearing little Gospels, and the wood of the Crosse, and such like, of zeale, not according to knowledge, strayning a Gnat, and swallowing a Cammell. This superstition, then complayned of by Hierome, yet remaineth (saith s Scaliger) among Christians and Mahumetans, which weare about them the Gospell of S. Iohn. Christ condemneth not the Rite, but their ambition, for dilating, not for wearing them, to which all the Iewes were bound, and all the Iewes and Samaritans obserued. Other Oathes are little esteemd. Hence it seemeth came our corporall oathes on a book. an vſuall vow amongſt them, and they would binde it with an Oath, That ſuch or ſuch a man ſhould haue no profit by them. The Oath which they herein vſed as moſt ſolemne, was, By the Gift: for ſo they were inſtructed, [z] That if any ſware by the Altar it was nothing, but if by the Gift, he was a debtor. The Phariſes therefore taught, if any had ſaid to his father, By the Gift thou ſhalt haue no profit by me, then he might in no caſe doe them any good, againſt the Commandement, Honour thy Father, &c. The Iewes vſed to binde their vowes with a curſe, as they which vowed [a] Paules death, vſing yet to ſuppreſſe the curſe it ſelfe, as, [b] If they ſhall enter into my reſt: So theſe, By the gift, if they haue any profit by me, meant, they ſhould haue none. Thus the Talmud (ſaith he) the Booke of their Canon Law, and Schoole-Diuinitie, ſaith; That a man is bound to honor his Father, vnleſſe he vow the contrary. Maſius [c] explaineth it thus; That they did conſecrate (by ſaying Corban) all, where-with they ſhould haue benefited their parents: as if they had ſaid; Let it be Anathema, or deuoted, whatſoeuer it be, with which I may profit thee. And therefore thoſe Rabbines, vnder pretext of Religion, allowed not to ſpend on his parents, that which he had thus vowed to God. Scaliger [d] thus interpreteth the place, as if a ſonne being by his parents admoniſhed of his dutie, ſhould put them off, with this exception, vnleſſe that which I haue offered for thee, free me of this burthen. But let the more curious reade it in himſelfe, and what Maſius, Serarius, and others haue written hereof.

The Phariſes were eſteemed pitifull: The Sadduces more * cruell. [e] They were much addicted to Aſtrologie, and the Mathematikes; whoſe names of the Planets, Epiphanius [f] rehearſeth, as alſo the twelue Signes.

There were [g] ſeuen ſorts of the Phariſes, which the Talmud reckoneth: firſt, Sichemita, which meaſure pietie by honour and profit, as the Sichemites, which for the marriage of Dina endured circumciſion: Secondly, Nacphi, which lifted not his feete from the ground: the third, Kiſai, Draw-blood, which ſmiteth his head to the wall, to cauſe the bloud to come, and alſo ſhutteth his eyes, that he behold not a woman: The fourth, that ſtandeth on his perfection, called Mahchobathi: What is my ſinne? as if there wanted nothing to his Righteouſneſſe: The fift, Meduchia, which goe lowly and ſtooping: The ſixt, The Phariſee of Loue, which obeyeth the Law for loue of vertue or reward: The ſeuenth, the Phariſee of Feare, which is holden in obedience by feare of puniſhment. This they call, Iobs Phariſee, the former Abrahams.

Epiphanius [h] deſcribeth their ſtrict obſeruations. Some (ſaith he) preſcribed to themſelues ten yeeres, or eight or foure yeeres continence. Some lay on plankes, which were onely nine inches broad, that when they ſlept, they might fall to the pauement, ſo to be awakened againe to prayer, and keepe themſelues waking. Others put ſtones vnder them for the ſame end, by pricking to awake them: Others lay on Thornes for that purpoſe. Scaliger [i] reproueth Epiphanius for affirming, that the Phariſes ware womans attire, as not agreeing to their auſteritie, which deſpiſed all beds, beate themſelues againſt walles, and put thornes in the fringes of their garments, to prick them: he thinketh him deceiued by ſome Iewes report; and addeth, that the moderne Iewes haue little or no knowledge of thoſe ancient Phariſes, but as they learne it of the Chriſtians, or of Pſeudo-Gorionides (ſo hee calleth the Hebrew booke, aſcribed to Ioſeph Ben Gorion, whom Druſius eſteemeth, and Scaliger proueth to be a counterfeit, wherein Serarius and Ribera concurre with them.)

The Phariſes in a ſelfe-conceit and ſingularitie, called, all but themſelues, in a diſgracefull ſcorne, [k] Other men: ſo ſaid he, Luke 18. I am not as other men: whereas they accounted themſelues Maſters of others, on whom alſo they bound heauie burthens, in their Rules and Caſes, the breach whereof they iudged Sinne in the people, but yet held not themſelues bound thereto. For example, Euery Iſraelite ought euery day, by their Rule, to ſay ouer the ten Commandements, and that in the firſt Watch, which might not be deferred, for danger of ſinne; and yet amongſt themſelues they eſteemed it lawfull at any houre of the night. But vpon the Proſelytes they impoſed more then on the other Iſraelites, all which they were bound to (in their cenſure) vnder paine of Hell fire; and therefore Chriſt ſaid, They made them two-fold more the children of Hell then themſelues; for they freed themſelues from many of thoſe impoſitions they laid on the Conſciences of others: And theſe Proſelytes the leſſe truſted, and therefore burthened them with more obſeruations.

§. IIII.

Of the Sadducees.

AFter we haue ſpoken of the Phariſees, which loued the firſt roomes (which they haue heere obtained) it followeth to ſpeake next of the Sadducees, [a] who in the New Teſtament are often mentioned. [b] Beda giueth an vniuſt interpretation of their name, ſaying, the Sadducees are interpreted Iuſt. Epiphanius [c] alſo fetcheth their name from Sedec, which ſignifieth Iuſtice. Lyra [d] alleageth a reaſon, becauſe they were ſeuere and rigorous in iudgement, they gaue this name of Iuſt (not iuſtly) to themſelues. Burgenſis [e] otherwiſe; as of Arrius were the Arrians, ſo of one Sadoch (ſaith hee) are the Sadducees called, who was the firſt inuentor of their Hereſie. Serarius deriueth the name from both. The Phariſees were eſteemed more iuſt then they, as appeareth Luke 18.9. They counted themſelues iuſt, and deſpiſed others; Summum ius, ſumma iniuria. Their rigorous Iuſtice, was vniuſt rigour. [f] This Sadoc, or rather Saduc, liued vnder Antigonus Socheus, who ſucceeded to Simeon the iuſt: His fellow Scholler was Baithos, of whom came the Baithoſæans. So ſaith Abraham ben Dauid in his hiſtoricall Cabball: Antigonus ſaid, Bee ye not as ſeruants, which Miniſter to their Prince, on condition to receiue reward. Sadoc and Baithos asked him of this thing: And he anſwered, that they ſhould not put confidence in the reward of this life, but in the world to come. But they denied his words, and ſaid; We neuer heard any thing of the world to come; for they had beene his Diſciples: and they diſſented from him, and went to the Sanctuarie of Mount Garizim, where the Princes were. They vpbraided the Phariſees with their Traditions, ſaying; The Tradition is in the hand of the Phariſees, to vexe themſelues in this World, whereas in the World to come, they haue no reward. Antigonus his words are in the Treatiſe Pirke Aboth. Be yee not ſeruants which miniſter to a Prince, to receiue of him reward: But be yee as ſeruants which miniſter to their Prince, with this condition, that they receiue no reward, and let the feare of God be vpon you. [g] Elias Leuita thus reporteth it: Antigonus Socheus had two Diſciples, Zadok and Baiethos, which leauing their Maſter to follow wicked men, firſt beganne to deny the Lawe, which was giuen by word of mouth, and beleeued nothing but that which was written in the Law: Wherefore they were called, Karraim, that is, Bible-men, or Textuals, and in the Romane Tongue they call them Sadducees. Theſe two are reported alſo to haue forſaken their Maſter Antigonus, and as Apoſtaticall Heretikes, to haue embraced Sanballats new Samaritane Religion at Carizim.

Baithos had a certaine family from Sadoc, otherwiſe held the ſame opinions, as Hillel and Sammai among the Phariſees: ſo theſe were two chiefe Maſters of the Sadducæan Schooles. The Baithucæans miniſtred to Baithos in veſſels of ſiluer and gold. Theſe Sadduces were called Minim, or Minei, that is, Heretikes. They are called Karraim, becauſe they would ſeeme Textuall, and Scripture-men, diſallowing Traditions, [h] of Kara, which ſignifieth the Scripture: which was called Kara, or Cara, of Cara to reade, ſaith Druſius, [i] becauſe of the diligence which ought to be vſed in reading the Scriptures, whereunto men ſhould deſigne (after the Iewiſh precepts) the third part of their life. Abraham Zachuth calls them Epicures. The Scriptures they interpreted after their owne ſenſe, nor regarded they the words of the Wiſe-men; that is, the Phariſees. They were of the ancient Careans, or Karraim, but not of thoſe which now are ſo tearmed; Which as Zachuth confeſſeth, confeſſe the Reſurrection, and Reward. Scaliger [k] affirmeth, by the teſtimonie of Philip Frederike a Chriſtian Iew, who had great familiaritie with theſe Karraim at Conſtantinople, and had beene often preſent at their Synagogue, that they differ nothing from the other Iewes, but in reiecting Traditions, and are farre more honeſt and faithfull then the Rabbanim, of whome they are no leſſe hated for their integritie, then for reiecting Tradition. But in compariſon of the [l] Rabbanim, there are but fewe of the Karraim: And theſe are of the Reliques of the olde Sadducees. Theſe two Sects haue nothing common betweene them, but the Text of the Scripture: They haue a differing account of their New-Moones: the other Iewes reckoning from the Coniunction, theſe Karraim from the time of apparition, as doe the Arabians.

Concerning the Karraim now remayning, it is reported that the other Iewes, and they will not ſpeake one to another: ſo inexpiable hatred doe the other Iewes conceiue againſt them. And Poſtellus ſaith, [m] There are three principall Sects of the Iewes in the Eaſterne parts; Thalmudiſts; Carraim, which reiect thoſe Gloſſes. They are rich, but ſo hated of the reſt, that a great part of their Virgins remaine vnmarried: And if (ſaith the common Iew) it ſhould ſo happen, that a Caraim & a Chriſtian ſhould fall together into the water, with like poſſi-

The third sort is the Samaritan, of which afterward. Buxdorf. [n] saith, that there are of these Caraim also in Poland; and Leo [o] mentioneth some places in Barbarie, where this sort of Iewes doth inhabite; as you may hereafter reade in our sixt booke, and the eleuenth Chapter. First, their difference from the Pharisees was about the future reward, which being denied, they by consequence of that error fell into the rest, to denie the Resurrection: the subsistence spirituall, &c. They cooped vp God in Heauen, without all beholding of euill. They denied Fate, which the Pharisees held. They denied Spirit altogether, saith Lira, [p] for they held God to be corporeall; the soule to die with the bodie: Angels and diuels they denied: Good and Euill they ascribed to a mans free-will [q]. They were inhospitall and cruell; and as cruelly hated of the people. They are charged (the Diuell may be slandered) to denie all Scripture but Moses [r]: But first in Scripture, this opinion of theirs is not mentioned: and Iosephus affirmeth, that they receiued the Scriptures, and reiected Tradition. Neither would the zealous people of the Iewes haue endured them in the Temple, if they had denied their Prophets, for feare of whom they durst not professe otherwise of Iohn Baptist, although hee had left no monument of miracle, or Scripture. Drusius [s] would reconcile this opinion of the Fathers, which, say they, denied all but Moses; and the other, saying, that some of the Sadduces liued in Iudæa, others in Samaria. These later happily, with the Samaritans, denied all saue Moses. Amongst these were the Apostata's, which liued in Sichem, mentioned by Iosephus, Antiq. lib. 11. cap. 8. and Eccles. 50. 27. Iunius thinketh that they fell from the Iewish Religion with Manasses, in the time of Nehemias.

§. V.

Of the Hessees.

OF the [a] Essees, Essens or Hessees, followeth in the next place. Their name Scaliger [b] deriueth of a [c] word which signifieth Rest, or quietnesse and silence: both which well agreed to their institution. He disproueth that opinion of Eusebius, and others, that therein followed him, which thought these Iewish Heretikes were Christian Monkes and Catholikes. Such Catholikes let Baronius, [d] and Bellarmine [f] boast of, as the Authors of their Monkes, for so they would haue them; which you may beleeue as well as before the Floud, Enosh, and after, Elias, Iohn Baptist, the Nazarites, and Rechabites, were Monkish Votaries, as the Cardinall would haue you. As for these Essees, hee makes no small adoe against the Centuries, [g] for vnderstanding Philo of Iewish, and not of Christian Monkes. But the loue to Monkery hath dazeled the eyes of men too much: and euen their Historie (which followeth) will conuince that opinion of falsehood. Besides, Christianity should haue small credit of such associates. Indeed the later Monkes are much like them in superstition and idolatrie, though farre behind in other things. But he that will see this Argument disputed, let him reade Scaliger his Confutation of Serarius the Iesuite. He sheweth also that the Offens, Sampsæans, Messalians, and diuers heresies amongst the Christians, sprang from these Essees: That the Egyptian Essees, of which Philo speaketh, out of whom Eusebius first collected that conceit, and that Philo himselfe, had no skill in the Hebrew, but knew onely the Greeke tongue: that Paulus the Eremite in Thebais, was the first Author of Monasticall liuing. But now to come to our Historie of these men.

These Essees, Hessees, or Essens, are placed by Pliuie on the West of dead Sea [g], a people solitarie, and in the whole world most admirable, without women, without money; a Nation eternall, in which none is borne, the wearinesse of others fortunes being the cause of their fruitfull multiplyings, Philo in that booke which he intituled, that all good men are free, saith, that there were of them aboue foure thousand, called Essai, quasi ὅσιοι, that is, Holy, not sacrificing other creatures, but their mindes vnto God. Some of them are Husband-men, some Artificers, for necessitie, not for abundance: they make no weapons of war, nor meddle with Merchandize. They haue no seruants, but are all both free and mutually seruants to each other. They liue perpetually chaste, sweare not at all, nor lye: esteeming God the giuer of all good, and Author of no euill: Their societie is such; that one garment, one house, one foode, foode, one treasurie, one getting, one spending, one life, is in common to them all; carefully prouiding for their sick, and holding the elder men in place of parents.

Iosephus, who himselfe liued among them, doth more largely describe them. [h] He reporteth that they were by Nation Iewes, auoiding pleasures and riches as sinnes; accounting continence and contentednesse great vertues. They marrie not, but instruct the children of others, respecting them as their kindred, in their manners: not denying the lawfulnesse of marriage, but the honestie of women. He which becommeth one of their fraternitie, must make his goods common. Oyle and neatnesse they shunne, yet weare alwaies a white garment. They haue officers for their common prouision. They haue no one certaine Citie, but in each, many of them haue their houses: to strangers of their owne Sect, they communicate their goods and acquaintance; and therefore carry nothing with them in their iourneyes, but weapons for feare of theeues: and in euery Citie haue of the same Colledge an especiall Officer which prouideth for strangers. The children vnder tuition of Masters are alike prouided for; nor doe they change their rayment till the old be worne; They neither buy nor sell, but mutually communicate. Deuout they are in the seruice of God. For, before the Sunne riseth, they speake of no prophane or worldly matter, but celebrate certaine Prayers, as [i] praying him to rise. Then by their Officers are each appointed to their workes, till the fifth houre, at which time they assemble together, and, being girded with linnen garments, wash themselues with cold water. Then doe they goe into their dining-roome, as into a Temple, where no man of another Sect may be admitted; and there staying with silence, the Pantler sets them bread in order, and the Cooke one vessell of broth. The Priest giueth thankes, as after dinner also. Then laying aside those their holy garments, they plie their worke till the Euening; and then suppe in like manner. There is neuer crying or tumult, they speake in order, and obserue euen without the house a venerable silence. In other things they are subiect to their ouerseer, but at their owne choice may helpe and shew mercy to others. To their kindred they cannot giue without licence. What they say, is certaine: but an Oath they hate no lesse then periurie. They studie the writings of the Ancient, thence collecting such things as may benefite the manners of the minde, or health of the bodie. They which are studious of their Sect, must a yeeres space endure tryall, and then after that probation of their continencie, must bee probationers yet two yeeres longer, and then vpon allowance of their manners, are assumed into their fellowship; making first deepe protestation of Religion towards God, and iustice towards men, to keepe faith to all, but especially to Princes, and if they shall come to rule ouer others, not to abuse their power, not to exceede others in habit, nor to steale, not to keepe any thing secret from them of their owne Sect, or communicate it to another, although vpon perill of life: not to deuise new doctrines: to keepe the bookes of their owne opinions, and the names of the Angels. Offenders they put from their fellowship; and hee which is thus excommunicate, may not receiue foode offered of any other, but, eating grasse and hearbs, is consumed with famine, except they in compassion receiue him againe, in extremitie. They giue no sentence of iudgement, being fewer then an hundred. If ten sit together, one speakes not without consent of the rest. They may not spit in the midst or on the right hand. They will not so much as purge Nature on the Sabbath [k], and on other daies do it very closely, for offending the Diuine light, and couer it with an instrument in the Earth, and that in the most secret places; and are washed after.

They are of foure rankes, according to the time of their profession, and the yonger sort of these are so farre inferiour to the rest, that if one of these do touch them, hee washeth himselfe, as if he had touched a stranger. They liue long: feare not death: nor by any tortures of the Romans, could be compelled to transgresse their lawes; but derided their tormentors rather: beleeuing to receiue their soules againe presently, holding the bodies to be corruptible, and the prisons of the immortall soules: which if they haue beene good, haue a pleasant place assigned them beyond the Ocean, but the euill to be in tempestuous stormie places of punishments. Some of these Essens also foretell things to come. And another sort is of them which allow of marriage, but make a three yeeres tryall first of the woman; and if by a constant purgation they appeare fit for child-bearing, they wed them, not for pleasure but procreation: and therefore after conception, do not accompanie with them. These women when they wash, haue their sacred linnen garments also, as the men. Thus far Iosephus: who in his [l] Antiq. addeth to these, their opinions of Gods prouidence ruling all things; and that they thinke their Ceremonies more holy then those of the Temple, and therefore send thither their gifts, but do not there sacrifice, but by themselues, following the same course of life, which the Plisti [m] do amongst the Dacians.

Some of these Essees liued solitarie, like to Hermites, as is said before. Happily that Banus was of this sort, to whom Iosephus [n] resorted for imitation. He liued in the wildernesse, cloathing a Galilæans, b *Ioseph. de Antiq lib.*18. *cap.*2. *de Bello Iud.lib.*2.cap 7.

THE Gaulonites or Galilæans, a had their b beginning of Iudas (elsewhere hee calleth him Simon) a Galilæan, whose doctrine was, That, Only GOD was to be accounted their Lord and Prince: In other things they agreed with the Pharises: but for their libertie they would rather endure any the most exquisite tortures, together with their kindred and friends, then call any mortall man their Lord. Theudas happily, mentioned, *Act.*5. and that Egyptian, *Act.*21. were of this rebellious and trayterous Sect, and those Sicarij which wore short weapons vnder their garments, therewith murthering men in assemblies. That Egyptian, c Iosephus cals a false Prophet, who vnder pretence of Religion, and name of a Prophet, assembled almost thirtie thousand men to Mount Oliuet, hee was defeated by Fœlix the Gouernour. Such were their Zelotæ in the siege of Ierusalem, vnder the mantle of Religion, all of them harbouring and cloaking Treason and villanie.

d Scribes.

The Scribes d are not a Sect, but a function: of which were two sorts, γραμματεῖς τῆς νόμου, and γραμματεῖς τῆ λαῆ, the one expounders of the Law, the other publike Notaries, or Actuaries, Recorders, Secretarie. Epiphanius maketh difference betwixt the Scribes that were νομοδιδάσκαλοι, Teachers of the Law, and the νομικοι, or Lawyers, which prescribed formes of Law, Law-cases, and taught Ciuill actions. But these are often taken one for the other. Ezra is called a Scribe, whose Pulpit is mentioned, *Nehem.*8. and e Moses Chaire was the Seate of the Scribes, that is, they taught the Law of Moses, which they vsed to do sitting: as Christ also did, *Math.*5.2. Their expositions, Epiphanius f saith, were of foure sorts, one in the name of Moses; the second in the name of their Rabbine Akiba (he is said to haue liued a hundred and twentie yeeres, and to be standard-bearer to Barchozba) the third in Andan or Annan; the fourth after the Assamonæi. But little is to bee said of these Scribes, more then what is before said of the Pharises, this being not a differing Sect, but an Office or Ministerie, wherof the Pharises also were capable, and are for false teaching blamed by our Saiuour, together with the Scribes.

e Rainolds and Hart.

f *Epiph.hær.*15.

g D. Hall Pharis.& Christian.

The Scribes are said in their expositions g to haue beene more textuall, the Pharises more in their Glosses and Traditions: The Scribes had chiefe reputation for learning, the Pharises for holinesse, taking more paines (saith our English Iosephus) to goe to hell. The Scribes professed both disputation and obseruation of many things, saith Arias Montanus, h but not so exact as the Pharises. For the Pharises, though not so learned as the other, thought themselues more holy then them, beeause they obserued not onely those things, which in the common opinion were thought meete, but those things which were least, which the people obserued not, which others had added. This they were ambitious of, as of some great perfection, for there was a threefold state of men. The Doctors, Pharises, and people of the Land. The Prouerbe was, The people of the Land, are the foote-stoole of the Pharises. And this, i The people of the Land is not holy: and they discerne not the Law nor wisedome: yea, saith the booke Musar, hee shall not take the daughter of the people of the Land, because they are abomination, and their wiues are abomination; and of their daughters it is said, Cursed be hee that lyeth with a beast. Thus did these proud Doctors and Pharises treade the way to the Popish Clergie, in contemning the Laytie, as vnworthie of the Law and Scripture, which in an vnknowne tongue was sealed from them, and feasted them at high Feasts with an halfe Sacrament, and in their ordinarie priuate Masse, with none at all. Were not these faire reasons? k The Laytie might (if they had a whole Communion) touch the Cup, and some of them haue beards, and some haue the palsie, and their dignities inferior to the Priestly, &c. The Booke Aboth sheweth how the people of the Lord required this supercilious generation, talking of them, and scoffing at them for their obseruations. When I was of the people of the Land, R. Aquiba there saith, I said, Who will giue me a Disciple of the wise? I would bite him as an Asse; for that insolence, and because they would not suffer themselues to be touched of them. The people were tyed to obserue the precepts mentioned, or by necessitie of consequence drawne out of the Bible. The Pharises (as is said) added their Traditions. The Scribes manner l of teaching was colde and weake, consisting in certaine arguments, which rather afflicted then affected the mindes of the hearers; in certaine nicetie-ties, and ſcrupulous queſtions, and ſometimes inextricable. And therefore the people heard Chriſt, as ſpeaking with authoritie, and not as the Scribes. But to let paſſe theſe Schoole-men, and thoſe Canoniſts, let vs come to their other Sects and ſorts of profeſſions.

§. VII.

Of many other Iewiſh Sects and Hereſies.

THe Hemerobaptiſts [a] are numbred by Epiphanius [b] among the Iewiſh hereſies, which, ſaith hee, in other things differ not from the Scribes and Phariſies; but in their doctrine of the reſurrection, and in infidelitie, are like to the Sadduces: And euerie day in all times of the yeere, they are baptized or waſhed, whence they haue their name. But this cuſtome of daily waſhing, ſaith Scaliger [c] was common to all the antient Iewes, which would ſeeme better then their fellowes, and not only obſerued of the Phariſes Eſſees, and Hemerobaptiſts (if ſuch a Sect may be added.) At this time in Paleſtina, many doe it, not once, but often in the day. The Mahumetans obſerue it. The Iewes (as a [d] Iew hath written) were ſo zealous herein, that they would not eate with him that did eate with vnwaſhed hands: and one of their holy men being inuited by ſuch an hoſt, roſe vp and went his way, alleaging to him, when he would haue recalled him, that he muſt not eate the bread of him which had an euill eye: and beſides his meate was vncleane. The Prieſts, when they kept their courſes in the Temple, abſtained from Wine, and ate not of the Tithes before they had waſhed their whole body. The Phariſes and Eſſees compoſed themſelues to this ſanctitie: the greater part of the Phariſes, and all the Eſſees abſtained from Wine, and both vſed daily waſhings, eſpecially before they ate. And as many Heretikes profeſſing themſelues Chriſtians, retained many things of Iudaiſme; ſo theſe Hemerobaptiſts learned them this daily waſhing. It ſeemeth by him, that theſe were Chriſtian rather then Iewiſh Heretikes.

And ſo were the Nazaræans [e] alſo, which ſome reckon among the Iewiſh Sects, who embraced the Goſpell of Chriſt, but would not relinquiſh their Iudaiſme; vnleſſe wee ſay with Hierome, that whiles they would be both Iewes and Chriſtians, they were neither Iewes nor Chriſtians. Theſe Nazaræans, or Nazoræans, Scaliger affirmeth, were meere Karraim Scripture Iewes, but becauſe of their obſtinacie in the Law, the firſt Councell of the Apoſtles determined againſt them. As for the Nazarites of the old Teſtament, Moſes deſcribeth them and their obſeruations, not to cut their haire, not to drinke wine, ſtrong drinke, &c. Such was Sampſon: But theſe could be no Sect, holding in euery thing the ſame doctrine with the Iewes, and onely, for a time, were bound by vow to theſe Rites. But for thoſe Nazaræans, Epiphanius [f] maketh them a Iewiſh Sect, not without cauſe; if ſuch were their opinions, as he deſcribeth them. Their dwelling was beyond Iordan, in Gilead and Baſhan, as the fame goeth (ſaith he) by Nation Iewes: and by obſeruing many things like to the Iewes. Herein they differed: They did not eate any thing which had life, they offered not ſacrifice: for they counted it vnlawful to Sacrifice, or to eate fleſh. They diſallowed the fiue books of Moſes: they indeed confeſſed Moſes, and the Fathers by him mentioned, and that he had receiued the Law, not this yet, which is written, but another. [g] Philaſtrius ſaith, they accepted the Law and Prophets, but placed all righteouſneſſe in carnall obſeruation: and nouriſhing the haire of their heads, placed therein all their vertue, profeſſing to imitate Sampſon, who was called a Nazarite: from whom the Pagans afterwards named their valiant men Hercules.

Next to theſe doth [h] Epiphanius place the Oſſens [i], dwelling in Ituræa, Moab, and beyond the Salt or Dead Sea: to theſe one Elixai in the time of Traian ioyned himſelfe: hee had a brother named Iexai. Scaliger (here and euery where acute) ſaith, [k] that the Eſſens and Oſſens are the ſame name, as being written with the ſelfe-ſame Hebrew Letters, differing onely in pronunciation, as the Abyſſynes pronounce Ofrael, Chroſtos, for Iſrael, Chriſtus. And the Arabian Elxai, and his brother Iexai, were not proper names, but the appellation of the Sect it ſelfe, as hee proueth. But they agreed not ſo well in profeſſion, as in name, with the Eſſens, for they were but an iſſue of thoſe ancient Eſſens, holding ſome things of theirs, others of their owne: as concerning the Worſhip of Angels, reproued by the Apoſtles, Coloſſ. 2. 21. In which the Eſſens and Oſſens agreed, and other things there mentioned, Touch not, taſte not, handle not: and in worſhipping of the Sunne, whereof they were called Sampſæans, or Sunners, Sun-men, as Epiphanius interpreteth that name. Thoſe things wherein they differed, were brought in by that Innouator, who (of this his Sect) was called Elxai.

He was, ſaith Epiphanius, a Iew, he ordained Salt, and Water, and Earth, and Bread, and Heauen, and the Skie, and the Winde, to be ſworne by in Diuine worſhip. And ſometimes he preſcribed other ſeuen witneſſes; Heauen, and Water, and Spirits, and the holy Angels of Prayer and Oyle, and Salt, and Earth. He hated continencie, and enioyned marriage of neceſſitie. Many imaginations he hath, as receiued by reuelation. He teacheth Hypocriſie, as in time of perſecution to worſhip Idols; ſo as they keepe their Conſcience free: And if they confeſſe any thing with their mouth, but not in their heart. Thus ancient is that Changeling Æquiuocation. He bringeth his Author, one Phineas of the ſtock of the ancienter Phineas, the ſonne of Eleazar, who had worſhipped Diana in Babylon, to ſaue his life. His followers eſteeme him a ſecret vertue or power. Vntill the time of Conſtantine, Marthus and Marthana (two women of his ſtocke) remained in ſucceſſion of his honour, and were worſhipped in that Countrey for gods, becauſe they were of his ſeede. Marthus died a while ſince, but Marthana ſtill liueth: Their ſpittle, and other excrements of their body, thoſe Heretikes eſteemed, and reſerued for Reliques, to the cure of diſeaſes, which yet preuayled nothing. He mentioneth Chriſt, but it is vncertaine whether he meaneth the Lord Ieſus. Hee forbids praying to the Eaſt-ward, and bids turne towards Ieruſalem from all parts. He deteſteth Sacrifices, as neuer offered by the Fathers: He denieth the eating of fleſh among the Iewes, and the Altar, and Fire, as contrarie to God, but water is fitting. He deſcribeth Chriſt after his meaſure, foure and twentie Schæm in length, that is, foure-ſcore and ſixteene miles; and the fourth part thereof in breadth, to wit, ſix Schæni, or foure and twentie miles; beſides the thickneſſe, and other fables. He acknowledgeth a holy Ghoſt, but of the female ſexe, like to Chriſt, ſtanding like a ſtatue aboue the Clouds, and in the midſt of two mountains. He bids none ſhould ſeeke the interpretation, but only ſay theſe things in prayer: (words which he had taken out of the Hebrew tongue, as in part we haue found.) His prayer is this, [l] Abar anid moib nochiel daaſim ani daaſim nochile moib anid abar ſelam. Thus Epiphanius relates it, and thus conſtrues, I cannot ſay expoundeth (although they like our deuout Catholiques, needed no expoſition.) Let the humilitie paſſe from my Fathers, of their condemnation, and conculcation, and labour; the conculcation in condemnation by my Fathers, from the humility paſſed in the Apoſtleſhip of perfection. Thus was Elxai with his followers opinionate: otherwiſe Iewiſh. Epiphanius ſpeakes of his Sect elſe where often, as when he mentioneth the Ebonites, [m] and the Sampſæans: This booke both the Oſſees and Nazoræans, and Ebionites vſed.

The Sampſæans [n] had another booke (they ſaid) of his brothers. They acknowledge one God, and worſhip him, vſing certaine waſhings. Some of them abſtaine from liuing creatures, and they will die for Elxai his poſteritie; which they had in ſuch honour, that if they went abroad, the people would gather vp the duſt of their feete for cures, and their ſpittle, and vſed them for amulets and preſeruatiues. They admit neither the Apoſtles nor Prophets: they worſhip water, eſteeming it as a god, beleeuing that life is from thence.

Scaliger alſo affirmeth, that the [o] Maſſalians (which word Epiphanius interpreth εὐχόμενοι, Such as pray, according to the opinion and practice of thoſe Heretiks) were [*] firſt a Iewiſh Sect, and a ſlip of the Eſſees, and after by marriage with ſome falſe Chriſtians, made ſuch a gally-maufry, as after when we come to ſpeake of the Pſeudochriſtian ſects ſhall (God willing) be related: for of Iewiſh they became Chriſtian Heretiks.

The [p] Herodians [q] otherwiſe agreeing with the reſt, thought Herod to be the Meſſias, moued by Iacobs Prophecy falſely interpreted, that the Scepter ſhould not depart from Iuda til Shilo came. When as therfore they ſaw Herod a ſtranger to poſſeſſe the Kingdom, they interpreted as aforeſaid. Some make queſtion whether this was the name of a ſect, or of Herods ſouldiers. Druſ. [r] obſerueth out of a Cõmenter vpon Perſius, Sat. 5. Herodis venere, &c. Theſe words; Herod raigned among the Iews in the parts of Syria, in the daies of Auguſtus. The Herodians therfore obſerue the birth-day of Herod, as alſo the Sabbaths: in the which day they ſet Lamps burning, and crowned with Violets in the windows. Elſewhere he citeth out of a Lexicon of the Hebrew Law, that they were called Herodians of Herods name, and Dorſians of the place whence they were brought; for by Nation they were Greekes: ſo ſaith the Author of Baal, Aruch, Herod the King brought Greekes out of the deſart, and brought them vp in the habitable land. Scaliger ſaith that they were a corporation or guilde, inſtar earum ſocietatum, quæ vulgo confratriæ vocantur, and beſides their Hereticall opinion that he was the Meſſias, entred into ſocietie for coſts and charges in common, to be beſtowed on ſacrifices and other ſolemnities, wherewith they honoured Herod aliue and dead. Ariae Montanus [s] thinketh that the Herodians were politicians, that little reſpected Religion. They thought the Common-wealth ſhould be eſtabliſhed, and that could not ſtand without Princes, nor could Princes nouriſh themſelues or theirs without money, and therefore propounded that queſtion to our Sauior touching Cæſars tribute. Others thinke they made hotchpotch of Iudaiſme and Gentiliſme, as Herod had done; in which it is like his ſucceſſors ſucceeded him. This coniecture is mentioned l Scaliger thinketh they are three ſentences, and not a Prayer.

ned by [t] Beza, who yet rather thinketh that the Herodians were Herods courtiers, moued thereto be the Syrian translation, which hath debeth Hiraudis, Herods domesticals. Thus thinketh [u] Iunius of them also, who saith that when the Pharises could not intrap him in the Law, they sent their disciples to question him of Tribute, hauing before agreed (which vsually they did not) with the Herodians to stand by (vnknowne) as witnesses, if he had answered any thing whereat Cæsar might haue beene offended. And this seemeth most likely: for after Herods death, how could they hold him for Messias?

Another Sect among these of the Circumcision, [x] Eusebius out of Hegesippus nameth the [y] Masbothæi or Masbotheani; for Thebulis (saith Hegesippus) was of their number, which arose out of seuen sects in the Iewish people; which Sects had their beginning Symon, of whom the Symonians; and Cleobius, of whom the Cleobians; Dositheus, of whom the Dositheans; and Gortheus, of whom the Gortheans; and Masbotheus, of whom the Masbotheans. And from the same fountaines issued the Menandrians, Marcionists, Carpocratians, Valentinians, Basilidians, and Saturnilians. And a little after, There were diuers Sects amongst the Israelites, Essees, Galilæans, Hemerobaptists, Masbotheans, Samaritans, Sadducees, Pharises.

He there nameth (and little else haue we but their names, euen the name also of the wicked shall rot) diuers other Sects, if they may beare that name: as the Genites [a] or Genists, which stood vpon their stock and kindred: the reason Breidenbachius alledgeth, because in the Babylonish captiuitie or after, they married not strange wiues, and therefore boast themselues of the puritie of Abrahams seede. The [b] Merissæans or Merists, which were (as the name importeth) sprinklers of their holy-water, Breidenbach saith, they made a diuision of the Scriptures, and receiued only some part of them: The Morbonei, he addeth, Sabbatise in euery thing. The [c] Helienians, of Hellenius, [d] The Cleobians and [e] Theobulians we can but mention. Of the [f] Tubiens as little, saue that they are said to be a Colledge or fellowship: and lesse of [g] Ganæi, and such like, if there be any other names that remayne as the rotten bones of the consumed carkasses of heresies and Heretikes; and either are vnknowne, or degenerated into some or other sect of Pseudo-christians, which require another taske.

The [h] Cœlicolæ were Iewes, [i] but corruptly embracing Christianity, for they were Massalians, which had their houses or places of Prayer abroad in the open ayre, of whom Iuuenal is vnderstood, Nil præter nubes & cœli lumen adorant. So Scaliger Readeth, not numen: and Petronius, Iudæus licet & porcinum nomen adoret, Et cœli summas aduocet auriculas. These also were an off-spring of the Essees: and from these proceeded the Massalians: they being baptized, reuolted to their former Iudaisme, and bearing the name of Christians, retayned the rites of those Cœlicolæ or Heauen-worshippers.

The [k] Cannæi were a deuout society and order, giuen to holinesse of life, and obseruation of the Law; of whom was Simon Kannæus, Mat. 10. called Zelotes, the interpretation of the former, as [l] Beza and [m] Scaliger shew. Suidas calleth them obseruants of the Law, whom Ananus shut in the Temple. Their θρηνῳδοὶ, or [n] Mourners were such as lamented with continuall fasting, praying, and weeping, the destruction of their Citie, * Temple and Nation; as else-where is said, I might adde out of that ancient father Philastrius (whom S. Augustine saith he had seene at Millan with S. Ambrose) diuers other heresies amongst the people of the Iewes before the incarnation of Christ, no fewer then eight and twentie; of which we haue already mentioned the most and principall. Hee addeth the Ophitæ or Serpentines, which worship a Serpent, saying, that he first procured vs the knowledge of good and euill; for which GOD enuied him, and cast him from the first heauen into the second, whence they expect his comming, esteeming him some vertue of GOD, and to be worshipped. Another sort are the Caiani, which commend Cain for fratricide, saying, that Cain was made of the power of the Deuill, Abel of another power, but the greatest power preuailed in Caine to slay Abel. A third sort reckoned by Philastrius are the Sethiani, worshippers of Seth the sonne of Adam, who affirme, that two men being created in the beginning, and the Angells dissenting, the fæminine power preuailed in ° heauen (for with them are males and females gods and goddesses) Eue perceiuing that, brought forth Seth, and placed in him a Spirit of great power, that the aduersaries powers might be destroyed. Of Seth they say, that Christ should come of his stock, yea some of them conceiue him to be the very Christ. The Heliognosti, called also Deuictaci, worshipped the Sunne, which (said they) knew all the things of GOD, and yeelded all necessaries to men. Others there were which worshipped Frogges, thereby thinking to appease Diuine Wrath, which in Pharaohs time brought Frogges vpon the Land of Ægypt. He reckoneth the Accaronites which worshipped a Flie; of which elſe where is ſpoken: as alſo the Thamuzites, of Thamuz, which hee ſaith was the ſonne of a Heathen King, whoſe Image the Iewiſh woman worſhipped with teares and continuall ſacrifices; and that Pharao which ruled Ægypt in Moſes time was of that name. Aſtar alſo and Aſtarot, he ſaith, were Kings of Syria and Ægypt, worſhipped after their deaths. CHAP. IX.

Of the Samaritans.

IT remaineth to ſpeake of the Samaritan Sects. Samaria was the Citie royall of the ten Tribes, after that Omri (who, as other his predeceſſors, had raigned before at Tirzah) had bought the Mountaine Shomron [a] of one Shemer, for two talents of ſiluer, and built thereon this Citie, which he called after the name Shemer, Lord of the Mountaine. In vaine therefore is it to ſeeke the name of the Samaritans from the ſignification of the [b] word (which is keeping) ſeeing they are ſo called of the place, and the place of this their ancient Lord. It remayned the chiefe ſeate of the kingdome, as long as the ſame endured, and namely, till the dayes of Hoſhea their laſt King, in whoſe time [c] Salmanaſar the Aſſyrian carried the Iſraelites thence Eſarhaddon, the ſon of Senacherib, otherwiſe called Oſnappar (thus ſaith [d] Hezra: and therefore Epiphanius was deceiued in aſcribing this act to Nabuchodonoſor in the time of the captiuitie, fortie yeeres before the returne) ſent to inhabite that Region, Colonies from Babel, and from Cuthan, and from Aua, and from Hannah, and from Sepharuaim. Babel is knowne: Cutha and Aua [e] are eſteemed parts of the deſart of Arabia, the other of Syria and Meſopotamia. It ſeemeth that moſt of them were of Cutha, becauſe all of them after paſſed into that name, and were of the Iewes called Cuthæi, as witneſſeth [f] Ioſephus. [*] Elias Leuita giueth the ſame reaſon; and addeth, that a Iew might not ſay Amen to a Samaritans or Cuthans bleſſing. The Cuthi, ſaith he, were the ſubtleſt beggers of all men in the world, and from them, as he thinketh, came thoſe coſining Roging Gipſies or Egyptians, which ſo many ages haue troubled ſo many countries of Europe.

These Heathens ſerued not the Lord, and therefore the Lord ſent Lyons among them, which ſlew them; wherefore they ſent to the King of Aſſyria, who ſent thither one of the captiued Prieſts of Iſrael, to teach them how to worſhip GOD (Epiphanius calleth his name [g] Eſdras.) He dwelt at Bethel; and as ſome conceiue, taught rather that Idolatrous worſhip, whereof Bethel had beene before the Beth-auen, where Ieroboam had placed his golden Calfe, then the true worſhip of the True Iehouah. Howſoeuer, euery Nation (ſaith the Text) made them gods, and put them in the houſes of the high places, which the Samaritans had made. The men of Babel made Succoth Benoth; and the men of Cutha made Nergal; and the men of Hamath, Aſhima; and the Auims, Nibhaz and Tartak; and the Sepharuaims burnt their children in the fire to Adrammelech, and Anammelech their gods. Thus they feared the Lord, and ſerued their gods after the manner of the Nations, and ſo continued: A mungrell Religion, begotten of a baſtard or hæreticall Iudaiſme and wilde Paganiſme. What thoſe gods were it is vncertaine, and interpreters agree not. Of Succoth Benoth, is [h] already ſpoken. Wolphius interpreteth [i] Nergal a wilde Hen, Aſhima a Goate, Nibhaz a Dogge, Tarkak an Aſſe, Adramelech a Mule, Anamelech a Horſe: Thus (ſaith he) the Hebrewes expound them; and hee ſuppoſeth theſe creatures were among them canonized and ſacred: as the Perſians are ſaid to worſhip a Cock; the Proembari of Africa a Dog: other people other creatures. Some are of opinion that Nergal was that continuall fire which theſe Cuthæans after the Perſian manner kept in their Pyræths (places incloſed for that purpoſe) as in our Perſian relations ſhal follow; and Kimchi ſaith that Adramelech had the forme of a Peacock. Anamelech of a Pheaſant. But neither are the trifling RR. too far to be truſted, nor haue we any other good teſtimonie. Thus their Religion continued till after the returne of the Iewes from captiuitie, to whom they would haue beene officious helpers in building of the Temple: which being refuſed they became their enemies, and hindred a building the long time. But the Temple being built, and Religion eſtabliſhed among the Iewes, and their ſtate flouriſhing, [k] Sanballat gaue his Daughter Nicaſo to Manaſſes, the brother of Iaddus the high Prieſt, in the time of Darius the laſt Perſian Monarch. This Nehemiah mentioneth, but deigneth not to name him, him, affirming that he chased him from him, of which some 1 descant whether it were by exile or excommunication, or some other punishment. R. Salomo interpreteth it of exile, Pelican of excommunication. 1 Wolph. in Nehem.

Drusius m hath a discourse out of a Iewish Author, which relateth the forme of that first Anathema and iudiciall curse (not vnmeete here to be mentioned) denounced against the Samaritans for hindring the worke of the Temple. Zorobabel and Ioshua (saith hee) gathered all the Congregation into the Temple of the Lord, and brought three hundred Priests, and three hundred Trumpets, and three hundred Bookes of the Law, and as many children, and sounded. And the Leuites singing and playing on instruments, cursed with all kindes of Anathema's the Chutheans, in the secret of the name Tetragrammaton, and in writing written vpon Tables; and with the Anathema of the house of the higher iudgement, and the Anathema of the house of the lower iudgement, that none of Israel should eate the bread of the Cuthean (whereupon it is said, He which eateth a Samaritans bread, be as he that eateth Swines flesh) and that a Cuthean should not bee a Proselyte in Israel, nor should haue part in the Resurrection of the dead. Thus they writ, and sealed, and sent vnto all Israel which were in Babylonia, which heaped vpon them Anathema vpon Anathema. That, concerning their becomming Proselytes, Drusius doubteth whether it may not bee translated, that a stranger Cuthæan should not abide in Israel: which is more likely. The other had beene more impious: their zeale to make Proselytes of all Nations is knowne. m Drus. de 3. sec. l. 3. c. 2.

To returne to Manasses, Iosephus saith, that the high Priests and the Elders put him from the Altar, who therefore went to Sanballat his Father in law, and told him that he loued his daughter well, but would not for her lose his Priest-hood. Sanballat replied, that if he would retaine his daughter, he would not onely maintayne him in his Priest-hood, but procure him a high-Priests place, and make him Prince of all his Prouince; and would build a Temple like to that of Ierusalem in mount Garizim, which looketh ouer Samaria, higher then the other Hills, and that with the consent of K. Darius. Hereupon Manasses abode with him, and many Priests and Israelites being intangled with like marriages, reuolted to him, and were maintayned by Sanballat. But now Alexander preuailing against Darius, Sanballat (whose Religion was Policie) rebelled, and tooke part with Alexander, and in reward thereof obtayned leaue to build his Temple, whereof Manasses enioyed to him and his successors the Pontificall dignitie. Then was the Circumcision diuided, some (as said the Samaritan woman) n worshipping in this Mountaine, others at Ierusalem. The zeale which the Samaritans had to their Temple, appeared o in the time of Ptolomæus Philometor, when at Alexandria, Sabbæus and Theodosius, with their Samaritans, contended with Andronicus and the Iewes, these challenging to Ierusalem, those to Garizim, the lawful honor of a Temple, both parties swearing by God and the King, to bring proofe of their assertion out of the law; and beseeching the King to do him to death that should not make his part good; and thereupon the Samaritans failing in proofe, were adiudged to punishment. n Ioh. 4. 20. o Ios. Antiq. li. 13. c. 6.

The Samaritans in the prosperitie of the Iewes professed themselues their kinsmen and allies: in aduersitie disclaymed them, and their God also, as appeareth p in their Epistle to Antiochus, that figure of Antichrist, and persecuter of the Iewish Religion, in which they call themselues Sidonians dwelling in Sichem, and say, that moued by ancient superstition, they had embraced the Feast of the Sabbath, and building a Temple of a nameless Deity, had offered therein solemne Sacrifices: whereas therefore their originall was Sidonian, and not Iewish; pleased him to enact that their Temple might beare name of Iupiter Græcanicus, and they might liue after the Greekish Rites. These things Antiochus easily granted. This Sichem is called Sichar, Io. 4. 5. It was after that called Neapolis, and lastly (of the Colonie which Vespasian or Domitian placed there) Flauia Cæsarea. Of that Colonie was (it is Scaligers testimony, Animal. Euseb. pag. 201.) Iustin Martyr, omnium Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum qui hodie extant, vetustissimus; which occasioned Epiphanius his error, that of a Samaritan he became a Christian; whereas he was neuer a Samaritan in Religion, but only of this Samaritan Colonie. In this were in the age of Beniamin * one hundred Samaritans: the words of Beniamin are worthy the inserting. I came, saith he, to Samaria, in which the Palace of Ahab is yet to be knowne: a place very delectable, with Springs, Riuers, Gardens, &c. and hath not one Iew inhabiting. Two leagues from hence is Nables, somtime called Sichem, in mount Ephraim, where are no Iews. The Citie is situate betweene the hils of Garizim and Heball; there are about a hundred Cuthæans, which obserue only the law of Moses. They are called Samaritans: they haue Priests of the posterity of Aaron which resteth in peace, who marry not with any other but the men or women of their owne stock, and are there commonly called Aaronites; they sacrifice and burne their offerings in a Synagogue which they haue on Mount Garizim, citing out of the law, Thou shalt giue a blessing vpon the Mount Gerizim: this, say they, is the house of the Sanctuarie, and on the Paschall and other solemnities, they Sacrifice on an p Antiq. l. 12. c. 7. * *Itin. Altar in Mount Garizim made of ſtones, taken by the Iſraelites out of Iordan. They boaſt themſelues to be of the Tribe of Ephraim. With them is the Sepulchre of Ioſeph. He addeth (which Scaliger ſaith, is a ſlender) that they want three Letters, He, Cheth, Ain : whereas they reade the Pentateuch in ſo many and the ſame Letters, in which Moſes wrote them, as Poſtel and Scaliger affirme, and thoſe which the Iewes vſe, are later counterfeits: the example whereof Scaliger hath giuen vs in their Computation, in the laſt Edition of his Emendation: yea, they are now alſo further from Idolatrie then the Iewes themſelues, howſoeuer in their Talmud and elſe where, they brand them with falſe and odious imputations. Beniamin alſo teſtifieth, that they abſtaine from pollution by the dead, or bones, the ſlaine and the Sepulchres. And euery day when they goe into the Synagogue, they put off their vſuall clothes, and hauing waſhed their bodies with water, put on other clothes, ſacred only to this purpoſe. Beniamin found of theſe Cuthæans two hundred in Cæſarea: at Benibera or new Aſcalon three hundred, and at Damaſcus foure hundred.

Hircanus by force tooke both Sichem and Garizim. Two hundred yeeres after the foundation of this Temple, as teſtifieth Ioſephus, [q] hapned this deſolation thereof. The zeale yet continued as appeareth by many teſtimonies of Scripture. The Iewes medled not with the Samaritanes, which made [r] the woman wonder that Chriſt asked drinke of a Samaritan. Another time the Samaritans would not receiue him, becauſe his [ſ] behauiour was as though he would goe to Ieruſalem, for which fact of theirs the ſonnes of thunder would haue brought lightning from heauen vpon them. And the Iewiſh deſpite could not obiect worſe in their moſt venemous ſlander, then, [t] Thou art a Samaritan. This Ieruſalem-iourney through the Samaritans countrey cauſed bloudie warres and ſlaughter betwixt the Galilæans [u] and them, in the time of Cumanus, to the deſtruction of many. And before that in the daies of Pilate, a coſining Prophet abuſed their zeale, bidding them to aſſemble in mount Garizim, [x] with promiſe there to ſhew them the ſacred veſſels, which, ſaid he, Moſes had there hidden. Whereupon they ſeditiouſly aſſembling, and beſieging Tirabatha, Pilate came vpon them with his forces, and cut them in peeces.

Their opinions (beſides thoſe aforeſaid) were, [y] that onely the fiue bookes of Moſes were Canonicall Scripture, the reſt they receiued not. They acknowledge not the Reſurrection, nor the Trinitie : and in zeale of one GOD, abandon all Idolatries, which it ſeemeth was receiued of them after the building of the Temple, and mixture with the Apoſtate Iewes: the Scripture teſtifying otherwiſe of their former deuotions. They waſh themſelues with Vrine, when they come from any ſtranger, being (forſooth) polluted. And if they haue touched one of another Nation, they diue themſelues garments and all, in water. Such a prophanation is the touch of one of another faith. They haue a dead corps in abomination preſently.

The Samaritan, [z] if he meeteth a Iew, Chriſtian, or Mahumetan, he ſaith vnto them, Touch me not. Scaliger out of the Arabian Geographer, [a] telleth of an Iland ſtill inhabited with theſe Samaritans, in the red Sea, which appeareth by their cuſtome, when any comes on ſhore, forbidding to touch them. This arrogant ſuperſtition remaineth with them.

The Samaritan Chronicle is cited by Euſebius, Chron. græc. l. 1. [b] Scaliger ſaith, hee had a copie of their great Chronicle, tranſlated out of Hebrew into Arabian, but in Samaritan Letters: It differeth ſomewhat from the Hebrew account. The Iewes confound [c] the Samaritans and Sadducees, as if they were but one Sect. The difference hath appeared, for the Sadducees accept all the Bible; the Samaritans, Moſes only. The Sadducees denyed the ſoules immortalitie and reward. The Samaritans in their Chronicle acknowledge both a place of reward and puniſhment after this life. But whether they beleeue the Reſurrection or no, he doubteth. The Sadducees denie Spirits, Angels, Diuels; the Samaritans confeſſe them. The Samaritans alſo vſe ſtill thoſe ancient Letters called Phœnician, which the Hebrewes vſed before the captiuitie, which whoſo liſteth to view, let him ſee their Characters, and Scaligers large notes thereon in his Annotations vpon Euſebius Chronicle, and a briefe of their Chronicle and Kalender therein written in his Emendation, as before is ſaid; Which they beginne very Religiouſly after their manner. In the name of Iah the GOD of Iſrael. There is none like to Iah our GOD. One Iehoua, GOD of GODS, LORD of LORDS, a great GOD, ſtrong and terrible. There is none like to the GOD Ieſchurun, the GOD of ABRAHAM, ISAAC, IACOB, IOSEPH, and our Lord MOSES, ELEAZAR, and PHINEAS. He confirme vnto you the bleſsing of our Lord MOSES. IEHOVA, GOD of our Fathers, adde vnto you, as many as yee are, a thouſand times and bleſſe you. This inſcription the great Synagogue of Garizim alwaies vſe, when they write to other Samaritan-Synagogues, the Kalender of the yeere following. They are very ignorant of Antiquities, and know none other but that they came thither with Moſes out of Ægypt: neither can they tell any thing of the old Kings, or defection of the ten Tribes vnder Ieroboam. lightly touch the names of Samson, Samuel, Dauid, and others, in their Chronicle, which they call the booke of Ioshue. Ptolemæus Lagi conueyed Colonies of them into the Cities of Ægypt, the Reliques whereof are those Samaritans which haue a Synagogue in the great Citie Cairo: And those also in the Iland before mentioned. In respect of the Mount Garizim, the seate and Sanctuarie of their holies, the Samaritans call themselues men which belong to the blessed Hill: and still, euery yeere they in Ægypt receiue from the great Synode of Garizim, the type of the yeere following, two of which Scaliger had seene, and hath expressed one of them.

The Samaritans were diuided also into diuers sects, as Epiphanius * rehearseth: One whereof were called d Dositheans; if it be lawfull to reckon them Samaritans, which acknowledged (as Epiphanius acknowledgeth of them) the Resurrection of the dead. They abstaine from such things as haue life: some of them from marriage, after they haue beene before married, and some continue in Virginitie. They obserue circumcision and the Sabbath; and they touch no man, but hold euery man in abomination. Report goeth also of their fasting and exercises.

They had name of Dositheus: who being a Iew, and hauing well profited in their Law, but not receiuing promotion sutable to his ambition, reuolted to the Samaritans, and hatched this sect amongst them. And when afterwards in a singularitie he had gone aside into a Caue, and there mewed vp himselfe, and persisted in hypocrisie and fasting, he there died (as the fame goeth) through his wilfull want of bread and water. After a few daies, some resorting to him, found his dead body crawling with wormes, and compassed with flies. Of this name Dositheus there were diuers. e Two of them liued after the comming of Christ. One a Iew, sonne of R. Iannai, the other a Samaritan, which endeuoured to perswade his Countrimen, that he was the Christ which Moses had prophecied of, as f Origen reporteth, and saith: of him are the Dositheans named. Another is mentioned in g Iohasin, who liued in the time of Christ, the Disciple of Sammai. And before these was another Dosthai, the sonne also of Iannai, of whom it is said in h Ilmednu, that Senacherib sent R. Dostha. to Samaria, to teach the Samaritans the Law. This seemeth to be he, whom before out of Epiphanius wee haue called Esdras, the first founder of the Samaritan heresie. And so Tertullian i saith of him; Dositheus the Samaritan, was the first that reiected the Prophets, as not hauing spoken by the holy Ghost. The like testimonie Hierome giueth of him. His colleague and companion is said to be one Sebua, the supposed author of the Sebuæans. In Ilmedenu k he is called Sebaia, or Sebuia. l Dositheus also taught, that how and in what position of body he was in the Sabbath morning, in the same he ought to continue all that day, without change of gesture or place: that if he did sit, he should sit in the same place all day long; and so of lying or other habit of body. The Author of this Dosithean Sect (properly so called) liued as Scaliger m thinketh, about or at the destruction of the Temple, and could not be that first Dustai or Dosthai.

The Sebuæans, n you haue heard, in Drusius opinion, haue their name of Sebuia, the companion of Dosthai, sent by Senacherib, or rather by Esarhaddon; which if it be so, it seemeth this Sect is ancient, haply nothing differing from the other Samaritans. Epiphanius maketh a difference, • but the cause he alledgeth, was the Iewes refusall of their helpe at Ierusalem, which was common to all the Samaritans. The difference he alledgeth, is the transposing of their solemnities (for that quarrell betwixt them and the Iewes) from the Iewish times, so that they kept their Passe-ouer in August (which they made the beginning of their yeere) Pentecost in Autumne, and that of Tabernacles, when the Iewes kept their Passe-ouer: neither might they sacrifice in Garizim, obseruing such differing solemnities. * Scaliger (whom I shame not thus often to name, in relation of these things too intricate for mine owne, or for common wits to finde) both in his Treatise against Serarius cap. 1. and 21. and in his Canons Isagog. lib. 3. dissenteth from Epiphanius, saying, that they dissented not from the other Samaritans, but that the name was a common name, which the Iewes ascribed to the Samaritans: It signifieth ἑβδομαδίται, Weekers: Which name they gaue them, because that euerie weeke betweene the Passe-ouer and Pentecost, they obserued that day of the weeke, in which the computation of the fiftie daies beganne, with as great solemnitie as the feast of Pentecost it selfe. This day, from which the reckoning beganne, was called δευτέρα the second, because it was the next day after the Azyma or Feast day. But the Samaritans reckoned the second after the Sabbath, and so in all that space of fiftie dayes, kept the first day of the weeke, that is, Sunday, holy. Thus they kept seuen Pentecosts in a yeere. And perhaps (he but coniecture th) as they had these imaginarie Pentecosts, so they might at other times of the yeere haue such imaginarie solemnities of other Feasts. From that word δευτέρα, the second day, and next to the Feast of vnleauened bread, the Sabbaths, saith Scaliger in the same place, were called in order, the first δευτεροπρώτου σάββατον, the second Sab-

Sabbath after that day, δευτεροπρώτου, and so the rest: and thus hee expoundeth those words of Luke cap.6. v.1. Secundo primum Sabbatum, that is, the first Sabbath after that δευτέρα, or first day of the fiftie, which beganne to be reckoned the next day after Easter till Pentecost. A place hitherto very obscure. Epiphanius doth number for Samaritan Sects; The Essens, [p] of which is before shewed that they were Iewes, and otherwise hereticall and Idolatrous in respect of their morning deuotions to the Sun, for which it seemeth they might not (certaine they did not) communicate with other Iewes in the Temple and Sacrifices. These pertaine not to this place; as not Samaritans. A fourth Samaritan Sect he accounteth the Gortheni, [q] which differed from the rest, at least from the Sebuians, in keeping their solemnities, Paschal, Pentecost, and of Tabernacles at the Iewish times, and obserued but one day holy: as likewise the fasting day. The Iewes still obserue the Sabbaticall yeere, and so do the Samaritans also, but not at the same time; for that which is the fourth of the seuen with the Iewes, is the Sabbaticall of the Samaritans.

CHAP. X.

The miserable destruction and dispersion of the Iewes, from the time of the desolation of their Citie and Temple to this day.

§. I.

Of the Destruction of the Iewes vnder TITVS.

THE curse threatned vnto this superstitious and Rebellious Nation, [a] madnesse, blindnesse, astonishment of heart, to grope at noone-daies, as the blinde groopeth in darkenesse, to be a wonder, a prouerbe, and a common talke among all people, among which they should be scattered from one end of the World to the other, is this day fulfilled in our eyes, both in respect of their Politie and Religion, GOD'S iust iudgement, sealing that their owne imprecation, [b] His blood be on vs, and on our children, and pursuing them in all places of their dispersion through the reuolutions of so many ages. Odious are they, not to the Christians alone, but to the Heathen people that know not GOD: [c] nor will the Turke receiue a Iew into the fellowship of their Mahumetane superstition, except he hath passed first from his Iudaisme through the purgation of a Christian profession, vnto that their no lesse ridiculous and miserable deuotion. [d] God they please not (saith Paul) and are contrarie vnto all men. This their wretchednesse, although it seemed to beginne, when Herod a stranger seized their state, yet was that infinitely more then recompenced, when their Messiah, so long before prophecied and expected, came among his owne, but his owne receiued him not: yea, they crucified the Lord of Glorie. But euen then also did not the long-suffering GOD reiect them, Christ prayed for them, the Apostles preached to them remission of this and all their sinnes, till that (as Paul chargeth them) they [e] putting these things from them, and iudging themselues vnworthie of eternall life, GOD remoued this golden Candlestick from amongst them to the Gentiles, and let out his Vineyard to other husband-men. Famine, sword, and pestilence at once assayled them (And what shall not assayle, what will not preuaile against the enemies of GOD?) Ierusalem, sometimes the glorie of the Earth, the type of Heauen, The Citie of the great King, and Mother-citie of the Iewish kingdome, from this incomparable height, receiued as irrecouerable a fall, besieged and sacked by Titus, and yet more violently tortured with inward conuulsions, and ciuill gripes, then by outward disease, or forraine hostilitie. Iosephus and Iosippus [f] haue handled the same at large, both which can acquaint the English Reader with the particulars. Besides many thousands by Vespasian and the Romans slaine in other places of Iudæa, Ierusalem the holy Citie was made a prison, slaughter-house, and graue of her owne people. First had diuine mercie [g] by Oracle remoued the Christians to Pella out of the danger, that without any impediment the floud-gates of vengeance might be set wide open for Desolations black-guard to enter. Here might you see the strong walls shaking and falling, with the pushes of the yron Ramme; there the Romans bathing their swords in Iewish entrales; here the seditious Captaines disagreeing in mutuall quarrels, written in blood; there agreeing in robbing and burning the Citie, and in slaughter of the Citizens: here hunger

Euery where the Eye is entertained with differing ſpectacles of diuerſified Deaths, the Eare with cries of the inſulting Souldier, of the famiſhed children, of men and women, euen now feeling the tormenting or murthering hand of the ſeditious: the Sent receiueth infectious plague and contagiou from thoſe humane bodies, with inhumanitie butchered, whom no humanitie buried: the Taſte is left a meere and idle facultie, ſaue that it alway taſteth the more diſtaſtfull poyſon of not-taſting and emptineſſe: what then did they feele, or what did they not feele? where all ſenſes ſeemed to bee reſerued that they might haue ſenſe of puniſhment? Where all outward, inward, publike, priuate, bodily, ghoſtly, plagues were ſo ready executioners of the Diuine ſentence. The continuall ſacrifice firſt ceaſed for want of Prieſts of the laſt courſe, to whom in order it had deſcended; after, for want of a Temple, before polluted with Ethnick ſacrifices, and murthers of the Prieſts and Souldiers, and laſtly ruined the ſacred veſſels thereof being carried to Rome for ornaments of the Temple of Peace, which Veſpaſian had there [h] erected.

Eleuen hundred thouſands are numbred of them which periſhed in this deſtruction: The remnant that eſcaped the Roman Sword, for the moſt part, periſhed after in Warres, or killed themſelues, or were reſerued eyther for ſolemnitie of triumph, or (if they were vnder ſeuenteene yeeres of age) ſold vnto perpetuall ſlauerie, [i] ninetie ſeuen thouſand of theſe Iewiſh ſlaues were numbred: Galatinus [k] accounteth two hundred thouſand. And that the hand of GOD might be the more manifeſt, they which at their Paſſe-ouer feaſt had crucified the Sonne of GOD, are at the ſame time gathered together in Ieruſalem, as to a common priſon-houſe of that whole Nation: and they, which had bought Chriſt of the Traytor Iudas for thirtie peeces of ſiluer, were ſold thirtie of them for one peece. Thus were theſe men forſaken of GOD, that had forſaken GOD made man, who for man had vouchſafed to crie to GOD, Why haſt thou forſaken mee? Their owne Talmud relates how GOD had before forſaken their holies, in theſe words. Fortie yeeres before the deſolation of the Temple, the lot no more aſcended on the right hand, nor did the peece of ſcarlet grow white, nor the euening Lampe burne, and the doores of the Temple opened of themſelues. The time is the paſſion of Chriſt, when the vaile of the Temple was rent; which is here called a ſelfe-opening of the doores. The Lot is that Leuit. 16.8. which was caſt for the two Goates, that on the right hand was ſacrificed, the other was ſent into the Wilderneſſe, and a peece of ſcarlet put betweene his Hornes at the doore of the Temple, which if it looked white, they reioyced, as hauing their ſinnes pardoned, according to that Eſ. 1.18. their ſcarlet ſins ſhould be as white as ſnow. Theſe ſignes ceaſing, argued a ceaſing of that Ceremoniall Religion, which then died when Chriſt died: although for the more honorable funerall they were not quite buried ſo ſoone, till the Apoſtles had preached, and by miracles confirmed the Goſpell, and GODS Iuſtice had made the Temple it ſelfe (ſometimes the throne, now) the Sepulchre of thoſe ceremonies, buried in the ruines of that holy Citie and Temple, not thence to be raked or reuiued by any without Antichriſtian Sacriledge. But let vs ſee what followed amongſt the Iewes which reiected Chriſt the Truth, body and ſubſtance of their typicall Ceremonies.

Of the Deſtruction of the Iewes vnder ADRIAN.

Galatinus tels vs of two falſe Prophets, whom comming in their owne name, they receiued for their Meſſias, hauing before refuſed IESVS that came in his Fathers name: both theſe were called Ben or Barchoſba, that is, the ſonne of lying. The one, not long after the Paſſion of CHRIST (if the Iewes bee not the ſonnes of lying which write it) the other in the time of Adrian. Rabbi Akiba (famous for his wiſedome, for his twentie foure thouſand Diſciples, and for his long life) receiued both in their ſucceeding ages: and interpreted to the firſt, that place of [a] Haggai, I will ſhake the heauens, &c. But afterward the ſlew him as the Talmud witneſſeth, which alſo affirmeth [b] that Titus enioyned the Iewes, which he ſuffered to remaine, that from thence they ſhould no more obſerue Sabbaths, nor abſtaine from menſtruous women.

Fortie eight yeeres after the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, the Iewes made the Citie [*] Bitter to be their chiefe Citie, and rebelled by the perſwaſion of Benecochab (ſo he called himſelfe) that is, the ſonne of the Starre. Of him Hierome teſtifieth, that he had a iuggling tricke to kindle

After three yeeres and six moneths, the Citie was taken, and [e] this their Messias slaine, together with such multitudes, that the blood reached to the horses mouthes, and carried downe great streames with the streame thereof, running to the Sea foure miles from Bitter. And Adrian had a Vine-yard eighteene miles square, which he hedged with those slaine carkasses, as high as a man can reach (a reacher I thinke.) There were two Riuers [f] in the Region of Ierico, and the third part of them by estimation of the Wise-men was the blood of the slaine: and seuen yeeres together did the people of the Gentiles fatten and hearten their Vines, only with the blood of the Iewes. Adrian slue also at Alexandria in Egypt, seuen hundred thousand Iewes.

Dion Niceus [g] (a more credible Author) affirmeth, that Adrian sent Seuerus against the Iewes, who in regard of their multitudes would not trie it with their ioynt forces in set battell, but taking his occasions and best oportunitie, proceeded more slowly and more surely: tooke fiftie of their fortified Castles, rased nine hundred and fourescore of their best Townes, slue at sundry times, fiue hundred and eightie thousand of their men, besides innumerable multitudes, which perished of famine, sickneſse, and fire, these gleanings being greater then the other Harueſt. Salomons Sepulchre, by falling downe had fore-signified this their downe-fall: And Hyæna's and Wolues prodigiously entring their Cities, seemed to howle their Funerall obsequies. All Iudæa was left almost desolate. [h] Eusebius out of Ariston Pellæus addeth, that Adrian prohibited the Iewes by an Edict to come neere to Ierusalem, or once from any high place to looke towards the same, or the Region adioyning. Neuer did Nabuchodonosor [i] or Titus so afflict the Iewes as Adrian did. Salmanticenſis saith, there was a Decree made at Rome, that no Iewe should euer enter Cyprus, where the Rebellion beganne, and that Adrian destroyed twice as many Iewes, as had come out of Egypt with Moses. Wee haue alreadie shewed how hee destroyed this Citie, and built a new (the present Ierusalem) called of his owne name Ælia. Hee made Swine ouer the Gates of this new Citie, which Images were most faithfull Porters to prohibite the Iewes (faithfully superstitious in their faithlesse superstitions) to enter. And at hee had erected a Temple to Iupiter, in, or neere the place where the Temple had stood, so (to afflict the Christians also) hee built another Temple of Iupiter in Golgatha, and of Venus at Bethleem, which continued till the time of Constantine. The Christian Iewes gayned by this losse: For when as they might not come to Ierusalem, they afterwards relinquished their wonted Iewish Ceremonies. This was the end of Barchosba. And such is the end of all which fight against GOD and their Soueraigne; their Arrowes which they shoote against the Cloudes, fall downe vpon themselues: Hee proues a falling Star, which being but a grosser elementarie exhalation, is eleuated by his owne aspiring course (not to the firmament) but to some higher Region of the ayre, where it shineth with the fire which burnes it, and moueth with some short glance, till with selfe-ruine it returneth (whence it had beginning) to the Earth.

Thus haue we seene the Iewes banished their countrie (about the yeere 135.) agreeing to which their miserable estate was that order of Men, mentioned by [k] Scaliger, called Mourners, Heraclitus his Heires, which spent their time in weeping, and intended nothing but Lamentation for the Desolation of their Sanctuarie. These haue beene among the Iewes (saith he) euer since this destruction, and were once a yeere, on the ninth day of the Moneth Ab, allowed entrance into Ierusalem by Adrians Edict. But then also, saith Saint Hierome, they are forced to pay for it, that they which sometime bought the blood of Christ, now must buy their owne teares. There may you see, saith he, on that day whereon Ierusalem was taken by the Romans, decrepit women, and old ragged men (annis panniſq; obsitos) and many wretched people (but pitied of none) with blubbered cheekes, blacke armes, disheueled hayre, howling and lamenting for the ruines of their Sanctuarie, in their bodies and habite bearing and wearing the markes of Diuine vengeance: Of whom the Souldier exacteth his fee also, for libertie of further weeping. It is written in an ancient Iournall of Burdeaux, [*] that not farre from the Images there is a stone boared thorow, to which the Iewes come yeerely, and anoint it, lamenting grieuously, and renting their garments, and then depart. Beniamin [l] (an Hebrew Author) relateth, that one and twentie dayes iourney from Kupha, through the Wildernesse, he trauelled to the Region of Seba, where dwelled Iewes, called the children of Rechab, or men of Theima, which gaue Tithes to the Disciples of the wise, who continually applied themselues to learning, and to Sermons; alway sitting in the Schoole, and to the humbled Israelites, and deuout persons, which lament Sion, and bewayle Ierusalem. These dwell in Caues, or in ruined houses, fasting all the daies of their life, except on the Sabbaths and Festiuals, beseeching mercy continually at the hands of God, touching the banishment and deportation of Israel: they neuer eate flesh nor drinke wine. The same also do all the Iewes of the Countrey Theima and of Talmaas pray: All which go with rent clothes, and fast fortie dayes for the Iewish captiuitie. And so let them mourne which refuse [m] the glad tidings of great ioy to all people, that vnto vs is borne IESVS a Sauiour, which is Christ the Lord. m Luc. 2. 11.

10 But yet what rockie heart can but mourne with them, and for them, thus made spectacles to the World of bodily and spirituall misery, which both in these times mentioned, and (before) in the time of Traian, and in all ages since, hath pursued them in all places of their habitation, if that name may be giuen to this World-wandring and Vagabond-people? In the time of Traian, [n] Adrians predecessor, the Iewes had rebelled in Egypt, and Cyrene, where they committed much outrage and mischiefe, vnder one Luke their Captaine, against whom the Emperour sent Martius Turbo, who destroyed many thousands of them; and fearing that the Iewes in Mesopotamia would do the like, commanded Lucius Quietus to destroy them vtterly; in recompence of which seruice, executed to his minde, he made him president of Iudæa. Dion [o] saith, That the Captaine of the Iewes was named Andrew, and that 20 they slue many Greekes and Romans, did eate their flesh, gyrt themselues with their guts, were imbrued with their blood, and clothed with their skinnes; many they sawed asunder, from the crowne downewards, many they cast to the Beasts, and many were found to kill one another with mutuall combats, so that two hundred and twentie thousand persons perished by this vnspeakeable crueltie. In Egypt and Cyprus, vnder their Captaine Artemion, they destroyed two hundred and fortie thousand. They were subdued by Traians captaynes, specially by Lucius: And it was made a capitall crime for a Iewe (although forced by tempest) to set foote in Cyprus. Africa was re-peopled (where they had destroyed) with new Colonies. No maruell if the Romans, thus prouoked, both in the time of Traian & Hadrian, destroyed so many thousands of them. Iulian afterward gaue them leaue to return 30 into their Countrie, & re-build their Temple, more for hatred of the Christians, then for loue to their Nation: Whose wickednesse and answerable successe herein, is plainely detected and detested by Gregorie Nazianzene, [p] and other Fathers, as [q] we haue before related. n Eusеb. l.4. c.2. o *Dion. Of other their False Christs and Seducing Prophets.

40 IO adde further of their bodily confusions, and the illusions of their bewitched minds: Nicephorus mentioneth a Pseudo-Moses of the Iewes in the parts of Arabia destroyed by the forces of the Empire, together with his Complices in a like Rebellion. Socrates [a] describeth a further madnesse of theirs (for true is that saying of Saint Paul. That they which will not beleeue the Truth, are giuen ouer to strong delusions to beleeue lies.) In the Ile of Creete was * a false Prophet, that affirmed himselfe to be Moses, which led the Israelites thorow the Red-Sea, and to be sent from Heauen to those Iewes to conduct them thorow the Red-Sea, into the continent of the holy Land. This he perswaded them for the space of a whole yeere, going from Citie to Citie: And at last induced them to leaue their riches to them that would take them, and to follow him; at a day appointed he went afore them vnto a Promontorie of the Sea, and there bid them leape in; 50 which many obaying, perished in the waues, and many more had perished, had not some Christian Merchants and Fishers beene at Land, which saued some, and forbad the rest to follow. The Iewes seeking to be reuenged of this counterfeit Moses, could no where finde him: and therefore thought him to be some Deuill in humane shape, which sought their destruction, and thereupon many of them became Christians. Beniamin Teudelensis reporteth of one in Persia called Dauid Elroi, sometime the Disciple of Hasdai, which was [b] Head of the captiuitie, one learned in the Law and Talmud, in forraine learning, in the Ismaelites tongue and in Magike, who gathered together the Iewes in Hhapthon, and would needes warre on all Nations, and winne Ierusalem, affirming that GOD had sent him therefore, and to free them from the Gentiles. Many beleeued him to bee the Messias. The King of 60 Persia sent for him, imprisoned him in the citie Dabasthan, whence they are not freed during life. But he three dayes after, when the King and his Councel sate to examine and take order for this businesse, came amongst them: And when the King asked who brought him thither, a Socr. l.7. c.37. * Anno 434. b See append. to this Chap.

thither, he said, his owne wisedome and industrie. The King bid lay hold on him, but his seruants answered, they could heare him, but not see him: and away he went, the King following him to a Riuer, ouer which Dauid stretching his hand-kerchiefe, passed ouer, and was then seene of them all, who in vaine pursued him with their boates. This Dauid the same day went ten dayes iourney from thence to Elghamaria, and declared to the Iewes there all which had passed. The Persian sent to the Calipha of Bagded, that he should cause the head of the Captiuitie, to perswade him to other courses, otherwise threatning destruction to all the Iewes in Persia; which Iewes likewise for feare thereof writ to the head of the Captiuitie. He therefore writ to Dauid. We would haue thee to knowe that the time of our deliuerance is not yet come, nor haue we yet seene our signes, and therefore enioyne thee to desist from these attempts: otherwise, be thou cast out from all Israel. But he proceeded neuertheles, till Zinaldin, a Turkish King, subiect to the Persian, corrupted his Father in Law with ten thousand peeces of Gold, who accordingly with a Sword slew him in his bed. And thus ended Dauid, but not his desiges: for the Iewes in Persia were forced by many talents af gold to buy their peace with the King. About the same time Rambam tells of another, which tooke him to bee the Messenger of the Messias, which should direct his way before him, preaching, that the Messias would appeare in the South. To him resorted many Iewes and Arabians, whom hee led alongst the Mountaines, professing to go meete the Messias, who had sent him. Our Brethren in the South countrey, wrote to me a long Letter hereof, declaring the innouations he made in their Prayers, and his preachings amongst them, asking my aduice. And I writ a booke, saith Rambam, for their sakes, touching the signes of the comming of the Messias. This Seducer was taken after a yeeres space, and brought before one of the Kings of the Arabians, which examined him of his courses, who answered that he had so done at the commandement of GOD, in witnesse whereof he bad him cut off his head, and he would rise againe and reuiue: which the King caused to be done, without any such miraculous effect ensuing. The like telleth Isaac Leuita, of one Lemlen, a Iew, in the yeere 1500. as also of R. Dauid, which about the same time was burned for like cause. The Iewes haue Legends (as that of Eldad, translated by Genebrard) of multitudes of Iewes in Æthiopia: whom when wee come thither, we will visit. But alas, it is small comfort, being burned in the fire, to make themselues merry with smoke.

Of their miseries sustained in all places of their abode, all histories make mention. And yet their superstition is more lamentable then their dispersion, as also their pertinacie and stubborneesse in their superstition. And certainely me thinks, that euen to him that will walke by sight, and not by faith, not obliging his credit to meete authoritie, as the case standeth betwixt vs and the Scriptures, but will be drawne by the cords of Reason onely and Sense, euen to such a one, me thinks, this Historie of the Iewes may be a visible demonstration of the Truth of Christian Religion: Not onely because the truth of the Propheties of [d] Iacob, of [e] Moses, of [f] Esay, and other the Prophets is fulfilled in them, and because Gods iustice still exacteth the punishment of the betraying and murthering that iust one; but especially in this, that the bitterest enemies, cruellest persecutors, and wilfullest Haters that euer were of the Christian truth, are dispersed into so many parts of the World, as witnesses of the same Truth; holding and maintayning to death the Scriptures of Moses, and the Prophets; then which, euen Reason being Iudge (as is said before) we will not desire sounder and fuller proofes of our profession. Neither is our Gospell wherein we differ from them, any other then the fulfilling of their Law: and Christ came not to destroy the Law, but to fulfill the same, the same truth being deliuered in both, veyled in the one, and reuealed in the other. In him the Promises, in him the figures, in him the righteousnesse of the Law, righteousnesse in Doctrine, righteousnesse in practice, righteousnesse of Doing, righteousnesse of Suffering, to satisfie the debt, to merit the inheritance, are the witnesses, that in him they are all, yea, and Amen, haue receiued their perfect being and accomplishment. But [g] the vayle is ouer their hearts, eyes they haue and see not, eares and heare not: They hold out to vs the light of Scripture, themselues walking in darkenes; and reserued to darkenesse; like to a Lampe, Lanthorne, or Candlestick, communicating light to others, whereof themselues are not capable, nor can make any vse.

§. IIII.

Of the Miserable Dispersions of the Iewes.

WE haue shewed how they were vtterly cast out of their countrey: And Italie, and the Empire was filled with Iewish slaues. Nor was this their first dispersion; but as the Assyrians had carried away the other ten Tribes: So the Babylonians carried away the two Tribes remayning, which might haue returned vnder the the Persian Monarchie; but many remained in those Countries till the dissolution of that Iewish state and after. They had there diuers famous Vniuersities, and that at Bagdet endured till the yeere of Christ, one thousand three hundred (so writeth [a] Boterus.) At which time they fleeing the persecutions of the Arabians, dispersed themselues into [b] India, where many are found at this day. These, through continuall conuersing with the Gentiles and Christians, haue small knowledge of the Law, and lesse would haue, but for other Iewes that resort thither out of Egypt. Before that time also, if we beleeue the Ethiopian History, twelue thousand [c] Iewes (of each Tribe a thousand) went with the Queene of Sabaes Sonne, which they say, she had by Salomon, into that Country, and there remaine their posteritie to this day.

Thus is ASIA and AFRIKE fraught with them, but EVROPE much more. Adrian [d] banished fiue hundred thousand into Spayne, where they multiplied infinitely, and founded an Vniuersitie at Corduba, about the yeere of our Lord, one thousand: And at Toledo was a Schoole of twelue thousand Iewes, about the yeere of our Lord, one thousand two hundred thirty and sixe, as writeth [e] Rabbi Mosche Mikkatzi: from hence it seemeth they swarmed into England and France.

Anno * 1096. innumerable numbers of men and women of diuers Nations, according to the zeale of those times, trauelling to Ierusalem, compelled the Iewes in places whereby they passed to be baptized, euery where making terrible massacre and slaughter of such as refused; may of the Iewes also killing themselues in zeale of their Law. At Mentz they slew of them 1014. of both sexes, and fired the greatest part of the Citie. The rest rested not long in their imposed Christianitie, but * willingly renounced that which against their wils they had accepted. Auentinus numbreth 12000. Iewes slaine in Germanie in this irreligious quarrell. Otto Frisingensis attributes these Iewish slaughters to the zealous preaching of Rodolph a Monke, which furie was appeased by the preaching, and authoritie of Saint BERNARD. These Pilgrims (saith Albertus Aquensis which then liued) being a gallimaufry of all Nations, in pretence of this holy quarrell against the Turkes, gaue themselues to all vnholy and filthy courses amongst themselues, and against the Christians, where they passed, may whoores attending and following the Campe, to which they added excesse in dyet, robberies, especially all cruelties against the Iewes, chiefly in the kingdome of Lorraine; thus beginning the rudiments of that war against the enemies of the Faith. First, they destroyed them and their Synagogues in Collen, and taking two hundred of them, flying by night to Nuis, they slue and robbed them all. At Mentz the Iewes committed themselues and theirs to the Bishop Rothard, who bestowed them with their infinite masse of treasure in his owne house, which yet could not protect them from the murthering and spoyling Souldier, who entring by force, slew seuen hundred of them; adding also the like butcherie on their wiues and children. The Iewes hereat Iewishly moued (pardon the want of a fitter word) layd violent hands on each other, and slew their owne children, wiues and brethren, the tender mother eschewing the souldiers cruelty by a greater, in cutting the throate of her owne childe, and with obdurate concision, preuenting the sword of the vncircumcised. Laden with these spoyles, they passed by the way of Hungary, where for some outrages, God punished both those and these with the Hungarian forces. Their miseries here in our Land endured, are by our Authors mentioned, [f] and you shall anon heare a particular discourse thereof by it selfe [g]. Out of France they were thrice banished by three Philips, although in Auinion there still remayne some of them. Being expelled France, they sought habitation in Germany, where Conradus the Emperor admitted them into the countrey of Sueuia: and thence they flowed into other parts, into Bohemia (in the City of Prage, are about fifteene thousand of them) and into Austria, and into Hungaria, whence, for the crucifying of a child, they were banished by king Mathias: as at Trent, for the like fact, and poysoning of Welles, they sustained much trouble in Germany; and many passed to Venice; many also went from thence into Russia (where the people cannot abide to here them named) and Poland, where Cassimere he Great, for loue of an Hebrew Lasse, gaue them many priuiledges. They liue dispersed in the townes and Villages, occupied in handi-crafts and husbandry. They haue great Synagogues in Craconia, Leopolis, and at Trochi, a towne of Lituania: and Master Barkeley, a Marchant of Londou, who hath spent many yeeres in Liuonia, Polonia, and other of those cold countries, told me, That the Iewes farme the Custome of the Kings, and at Samaiden in Cur-land, one of these Iewish Customers beat out the braines of a Polonish Marchant, for deferring to open his packe: but in regard of the peoples hatred, prouision is made, vnder great penalties, for their securitie, and yet many Iewes were there executed by occasion of a murren, procured (as was suspected) by Iewish exorcismes, intending a plague to the men, and not a murren to the beasts, if their working had sorted: but the Iewes said, it was but a pretence to depriue them of their riches.

They were caſt out of Spaine by Ferdinand and Iſabella, in the yeere 1492. It is thought h that there went out of Spaine a hundred and twentie thouſand families of them (beſides Moores) and out of their kingdomes of Naples and Sicill. Hence they paſſed, Anno Domini 1539. into Tuſcane, and the Popes Dominions, whence they were baniſhed by Paul the fourth, and Pius the fifth: and receiued againe by Pius the fourth, and Sixtus the fifth; Rome and Venice hauing great ſtore of them. This is the Popes holineſſe: he that would not willingly endure a Proteſtant in the World; beſides, the Stewes vnder his Holineſſe Noſe, can endure the Græcians, yea, and theſe Iewes, Rome it ſelfe hauing ten thouſand, or i after others reckoning, twentie thouſand of them priuiledged with heir fiue Synagogues, Liturgies, and publike Sermons; and to ſtraine vp their vſurie to eighteene in the hundred: hauing alſo in ſome places (it may be in all) a peculiar Magiſtrate to decide controuerſies, betweene Chriſtians and them, with particular direction to fauour them in their trade. Dulcis odor lucri ex re qualibet. The beaſtly trade of Curtizans, and cruell trade of Iewes is ſuffered for gaine, theſe paying a yeerely rent for the heads they weare, beſides, other meanes to racke and wracke them in their purſes at pleaſure, they being vſed as the ſpunge-like Friers, to ſuck from the meaneſt, to be ſqueezed of the greateſt; inſomuch that the Pope, beſides their certaine tribute, doth ſometimes (as is ſaid) impoſe on them a Subſidie for ten thouſand crownes extraordinarie for ſome ſeruice of State. So well is the rule of Paul obſerued by this Biſhop, not to be a louer of filthy lucre, from filthie Stewes, from filthie Iewes.

Out of Spaine they went into Barbarie, and diuers other countries, and ſome into Portugall: where Iohn the ſecond made them pay eight crownes for a poll, and yet limited them ſhort time of departure. Emanuel his ſucceſſor did the like 1497. except they would become Chriſtians, for which he aſſayed diuers meanes. But not preuayling, he cauſed their children, vnder the age of foure and twentie yeers to be baptized; ſome rather hurling their children into pits, ſome killing themſelues: many for feare were baptized, ſome went into Italie, and abode in Ferrara, Mantua, Venetia, in the name of Maranes, and haue a Synagogue at Piſa. But the greateſt part of them went into the Eaſt to Conſtantinople and Salonichi, in which two Cities there are about an hundred and ſixtie thouſand of them. There are of them in all the chiefe Cities of traffike in the Turkiſh Empire. k Tyberias is wholly inhabited with Iewes, l which Citie Zelim gaue to Gratiola a Iewiſh Matron. In Ieruſalem there are about an hundred houſes of them. There abide not many, becauſe of a ſuperſtitious opinion, That before the Meſſias ſhall come, a great fire from heauen will conſume that Citie and Countrie, to purge it of the abomination committed there, by prophane Nations. At Zante they are ſo hated, that from Maundie Thurſday, vntill Saturday noone, they dare not come abroad: for the people, in a fooliſh zeale, would ſtone them: and ſome refuſe to eate of their meate or bread. The Turkes in their reproach vſe ſuch a kinde of imprecation; If this be not true, would God I might die a Iew. The old Teſtament is read of them in theſe parts in the Hebrew *, but their Kakamin and Cohens, that is, their wiſe-men and Prieſts preach in Spaniſh. Onely at Salonichi (anciently Theſſalonica) in Macedonia, and at Safetta in the Holy Land (two Vniuerſities) they ſpeake Hebrew. They will rather in blaſphemie teſtifie their hatred of Chriſt, then any abilitie to diſpute.

§. V.

Of the Eſtate of the Iewes, and their diſperſed Habitations in the time of Beniamin Tudelenſis.

BENIAMIN TVDELENSIS, a Iew of Nauarre, who hauing trauelled Spaine, France, Italy, Greece, Natolia, Syria, and many other Countries of Aſia, Africke, and Europe (worthily reckoned one of the greateſt Trauellers that euer liued:) at his returne into Spaine aboue foure hundred and fortie yeeres ſince, related what Iewiſh Synagogues he had ſeene in the world (one chiefe end as it ſeemeth, of his trauels) And becauſe it appertayneth to this matter we haue in hand, and the booke (tranſlated out of Hebrew by Arias Montanus) is very rare, I thought meete to adde here a briefe of thoſe things which concerne the Iewes out of the ſame. At Barchinon they found a populous Synagogue, another, but ſmaller, at Gerunda: Narbone was, as it were, Enſigne-bearer of the Law to all the Countries about, where was chiefe, Kalonymus of the ſeede of Dauid, there were three hundred Iewes. Foure leagues thence was the Citie Bidrach, where was an Vniuerſitie ſtored with Diſciples of the wiſe: whereof alſo there were at Mompelier: Lunel was a famous Vniuerſitie, where liued Aſſer the Phariſee, which ſtudied night and day, faſting and perpetually abſtayning from fleſh, with Meſſulam, Ioſeph, Iacob, Aaron, which by the bounty of the Vniuerſitie gaue foode, rayment, and teaching to ſuch as came from far to ſtudy ſtudie there, as long as they ſtayed. There was a Synagogue of three hundred Iewes. At Bothiaquiers fortie, at Nogheres about an hundred, at Arles two hundred, at Maſſilia two Colledges, and three hundred Iewes. At Rome two hundred free from tribute, at Salern ſix hundred. At Beneuent an Vniuerſitie of two hundred. At Taraam two hundred. At Tarentum three hundred. At Ornedo fiue hundred. At Thebes two thouſand. At Corinth three hundred. There were people liuing in the Mountaines, which robbed and ſpoyled all, but dealt more fauourably with the Iewes (whoſe liues they ſpared) then with Chriſtians, whom they not onely robbed, but ſlew alſo. Theſe ſaid they were deſcended of the Iewes: they were called Balachi. At Arimbon were foure hundred, at Seleuca fiue hundred. Conſtantinople would not ſuffer a Iew to dwell in the Citie, nor to ride on horſe-back, except one Solomon the Kings Phyſitian, yea, the people would beate them in the ſtreets. At Pera liued two thouſand Iewes. Two daies ſayling from thence. At Doroſtum was an Vniuerſity of foure hundred, at Rhodes were foure hundred, at Dophros were Iewes, and Cyprian Epicures before mentioned. At Behalgad, were a Sect of Iſmaelites with a peculiar Prophet of their owne. At Tripoli many Iewes and Gentiles had a little before periſhed with an Earth-quake, whereof dyed in all Iſrael twentie thouſand. At Gebal was a place, where the Ammonites had ſomtimes a Temple, and it was an Idoll of ſtone couered with gold, ſitting with two Images of women ſitting by, and an Altar before. There were an hundred and twentie Iewes; At Beeroth fiftie, at Sidon twentie. Here-awayes liued a people called Dogziyn, of whom we ſhall ſpeake more fitly in another place. At Cæſarea were few Iewes, but two hundred Samaritans, at Sebaſte an hundred. This is betweene Garizim, an hill fertile & well watred, and Gebal, an hill ſtony and drie. In the place of the ſometime Sanctuarie at Ieruſalem, was a faire and large Temple, called the Temple of the Lord, built of Ghemar ben Alchetab: there the Chriſtians had no image but reſorted hither only for prayer. Ouer-againſt it is a wall, made of the wals of the Sanctuarie, this they call the Gate of mercy: to this place the Iewes come to pray. The Piliar of Lots wife was then continuing, which was ſaid to grow to the former bignes, if at any time the flocks had diminiſhed it with licking. At [a] Hebron was a great temple: and in a vault ſix Sepulchres, of Abraham and Sara, Iſaac and Rebecca, Iacob and Leah: a Lampe perpetually burning: and in the Caue it ſelfe were tubs full of bones of the ancient Iſraelites. At Benibera or new Aſcalon in the border of Egypt were two hundred Iewes, forty Carraim, and three hundred Samaritans. At Tiberias were fifty Iewes, and the Synagogue of Caleb, ſon of Iephunneh: at [b] Damaſcus were three thouſand. There dwelt the Head of the land of Iſrael, called Eſdras, and his brother Sarſalem, which was ouer the Iudgement, and Ioſeph the fift of the Synedrian, and Matſliah head of the order of Readers: there were two hundred Carraim, and foure hundred Samaritans, amongſt all which was peace, but no intercourſe of marriages, in differing Sects. In Thadmar were foure thouſand Iewes: here and at Baghala were buildings of ſtone, ſo great that it was ſaid to be the worke of Aſmodæus (with as good reaſon as Dinels dike with vs.) At Hamath was an Earth quake in thoſe times, which deſtroyed fifteene thouſand people in one day, and only an hundred and ſeuenty remayned. Haleb in old times called Aram Tezoba, had fifteene hundred Iſraelites. At Petra in the Deſart were two thouſand. At Dakia (ſometime Chalne) ſeuen hundred. Here was a Synagogue built by Eſdras in the returne from Babylon; and another alſo of his building at Charan, two dayes iourney thence, the place where Abraham had dwelt, had no building on it, but was frequented by the Iſraelites, to pray there. At Alchabor were two thouſand Iewes, at Niſibis one thouſand, at Gezir ben Ghamar, a Citie on the bankes of Tigris were foure thouſand. It is foure miles from the place where Noahs Arke reſted, which Arke Ghamar ſon of Alchetab brought from the top of the hill, to the vſe of a Moſchee: neere to which was the Synagogue of Eſdras, whither the Iewes on feſtiual dayes reſorted to Prayer. Two daies iourney thence was [c] Al-Mutſal, ſometime called Aſſur, the beginning of the kingdome of Perſia, retayning her ancient greatnes, ſituate on Tigris, a bridge onely being betweene that and Niniue (now wholly deſtroyed, only Caſtles and ſtreetes remayned in the circuit thereof) at Al-Mutſal were ſeuen thouſand Iewes: and three Synagogues of the three Prophets, Abdias, Ionas, and Nahum. In Rahaban, anciently Rehoboth, were two thouſand. At Karkeſia (on the ſame banke of Euphrates with the former) fiue hundred; at Aliobar, two thouſand; at Hhardan, fifteene thouſand; at Ghukbera, built by Iectronia, tenne thouſand. Two dayes iourney thence is [d] Bagdad of the kingdome of the Calipha, named [e] Amir Almumanim Alghabaſſi Hhaphtſi, the chiefe of the Iſmaelite Sect. Here was a thouſand Iewes, and ten Synedria or Courts, the heads or chiefe whereof (he nameth them) are called Vacantes, becauſe they attended no other function, but the adminiſtring of the ſocietie. They giue iudgement to all Iewes, which reſort vnto them on any day of the weeke but the ſecond, in which they all meet together before Samuel, the head of the Synedrium. But ouer all theſe was Daniel, ſon of Hhaſdai, entituled the Head of the [f] Captiuitie, deſcended from Dauid, whom the Iewes called Our Lord; the Iſmaelites, Sydna ben Dauid, Our L. ſon of Dauid. Hee had great Authoritie ouer all congregations of Iſraelites, warranted to him with the Amirs ſeale, who cauſed that all Iſraelites and Iſmaelites ſhould riſe to him, vnder paine of an hundred ſtripes. When he goeth to ſee the King, it is with very great pompe. This dignitie is bought with a great ſumme of money giuen to the King and Princes at his confirmation; and then is the ſecond Chariot of the King prouided for him. He exerciſeth impoſition of hands on the men of the Synedrium. There were eight and twentie Synagogues in Bagdad, and the Suburbe on the other ſide Tigris. But the Synagogue which pertayned to the head of the Captiuity, was of Marble of diuers colors, adorned with gold & ſiluer, ſpacious: and on the pillers were verſes of the Pſalmes, written in gold. Before the Arke were ten rowes of ſeates, with marble ſteps, in the higheſt whereof ſate the Head of the Captiuitie, with the Iewes of the family of Dauid.

In Gehiagan (ſometime Rezen) two dayes iourney from thence, were fiue thouſand Iſraelites. One dayes iourney from hence was g Babel, now wholly ruinated, in which are yet ſeene the ruines of Nabuchodonoſors Palace, but inacceſſible, by reaſon of diuers kindes of Serpents. Twentie miles from theſe ruines dwell twentie thouſand Iſraelites, which there pray in the Synagogues, the chiefe whereof is that of Daniel, of ſquared ſtones. There were at Hhilah (fiue miles thence) ten thouſand Iewes in foure Synagogues. Foure miles thence it is to the Tower which the Sonnes of Diuiſions built with Brickes, which the Arabians call Lagzar: the length of the foundation is about two miles, the breadth of the wals, two hundred and forty cubits: where it is broadeſt, it is an hundred reedes; and betweene euery ten reedes ſpace, are waies in manner of ſpires continued thorow the whole building, on the top of which one may ſee twentie miles about. Halfe a dayes iourney from hence is Naphahh, where were two hundred Iewes. And three leagues thence, the Synagogue of h Ezechiel neere Euphrates, and in the ſame place ſixtie Towers one againſt another, and a Synagogue betweene euery one. The monument of Ezechiel was built by Iechonias with fiue and thirtie thouſand Iewes. And this is a holy place, whither they reſort from the beginning of the yeere, to the day of Expiation, to pray and keepe feſtiuall. Thither commeth the Head of the Captiuitie, and other chiefe men from Bagdad, and two and twentie miles about they pitch their Tents here and there: and the Arabians keepe then and there a great Faire. At this time they reade on the Expiation day out of a booke which Ezechiel writ: and there is a holy houſe full of bookes ſince the time of the firſt and ſecond Temple, the cuſtome being, that they which die without children, ſhould bequeath their bookes hither. The Iewes in Perſia and Media make vowes to bee performed in this place, to which alſo the Iſmaelites reſort to pray. The Sepulchre of the three Saints, companions of i Daniel, is halfe a dayes iourney from hence, with fayre and great Arches. Three miles thence is Alkotſonath, and in it three hundred Iewes. At Kupha the Sepulchre of Ieconia, and ſeuen thouſand Iewes. One and twentie daies iourney thorow the wildernes is the Region of Seba, now called the Land of Aliman, where dwell Iewes, the children of k Rechab. This Region extended ſixteene daies along the mountaines, ſubiect to no forren Nation, hauing therein foure hundred ſtrong Cities, two hundred Townes, an hundred Caſtles. The Metropolis is Themai. In all thoſe Cities are about three hundred thouſand Iewes. In the Region of Tilmaas an hundred thouſand. Three dayes iourney hence is Chibar, in it fiftie thouſand. Theſe (they ſay) are of the deportation of Ruben, Gad and Manaſſes. From hence twentie fiue dayes iourney is Vira, which is a Riuer running into Eliman, where were three thouſand. And ſeuen iourneys from thence Neaſar, & in it ſeuen thouſand. Fiue daies iourneyes from thence Boſra vpon Tygris, and in it one thouſand. Two dayes iourneyes from thence the Riuer Samura, the beginning of Perſia, with a Towne of the ſame name, wherein, were fifteene hundred. The place is famous by the Sepulchre of Eſdras, who in his returne to Babylon in Embaſſage, here died. There was a Synagogue honoured alſo by the Iſmaelites. In Suſan were ſeuen thouſand Iewes in foureteene Synagogues, before one of which was the Sepulchre of Daniel: about which roſe a controuerſie betweene the inhabitants of the one and other ſide of the Riuer: They which dwelt on that ſide where the Sepulchre was, ſeeming to the other the more fortunate; this cauſed blowes, but was after agreed, that euery yeere it ſhould be remoued by courſe, which was done with ſolemne proceſſion, till l Senigar the Perſian King, thinking it a prophanation to the holy Coffin, cauſed it to be hanged in a cheſt of glaſſe for all men to ſee, and forbad to take fiſh within two miles of that place in the Riuer.

From hence was three dayes iourney to Robad-Bar, where were twentie thouſand Iewes. Two iourneyes from hence was the Riuer Vaanath, where were foure thouſand Iewes. Foure iourneyes further, Malhhaath: here they were not Iſmaelites, nor vnder the Perſian; they had two Colledges of Iſraelites, which acknowledged, neuertheleſſe, the Head of the Captiuitie in Bagdad. At Ghaarian, fiue iourneyes beyond, were fiue and twentie thouſand.

Here began the mountaines of Hhaphthon, wherein were an hundred Synagogues. This is the beginning of Media: they speake Chaldee: and there were amongst them the [m] Disciples of the wise. Ghamaria is vnder the Persian, where Dauid Elroi was. It was ten dayes iourney thence to Hhamdan, chiefe Citie of Media, there were fiftie thousand Iewes in that Region, and the Sepulchre of Mordecai and Esther. Foure iourneyes further was Debarzethaan, neere this Riuer Gozen, in it foure thousand Iewes. Beyond that, seuen iourneyes, Asbahan the chiefe Citie, twelue miles in compasse, and therein fifteene thousand Israelites, ouer whom, and all the Persian Iewes, was Salom by authoritie from the Head of the Captiuitie. Foure iourneyes hence was Siaphaz, called of old Persis, whence the whole Region was named Persia, therein ten thousand. Seuen dayes iourneys thence, Ginah vpon Gozen, a famous Mart; in which were eight thousand. Samarcheneth was the furthest Citie of that Kingdome, fiue iourneyes from Ginah, where were fiftie thousand. Foure iourneyes thence Tubot: and twentie eight further I passed to the mountaines Nisbon, which ouer looke the Riuer Gozen, where were many Israelites; and they say, there dwell the foure Tribes of Dan, Ziabulon, Asser, Naphthali. Their Countrey extendeth twentie dayes iourney, and hath many Cities, free from subiection to any Heathen: They are gouerned of Ioseph Armacala Leuita: they till the ground, and hold warres with the children of Chus, trauelling through the desart thither. They are in league with the Copher Althorech a people that worship the Windes, and liuing in the Wildernesse: they haue neither bread nor wine, but eate raw flesh, eyther new or dried: they haue no * nose but onely two holes. Fifteene yeeres since, they tooke and sacked Rai, a chiefe Citie in Persia; whereupon the King warred against them, and passing through the wildernesse to them, was deceiued by his guide, and his people almost starued, and after forced to flie; with whom passed into Persia Moses one of the Iewes in those parts, which told me (Beniamin our Author) all this. Hence I went to Cheuazthaan vpon the Riuer Tigris; which runneth thence into Hoduor the Indian Sea, hauing in the mouth the Iland Nekrokin a famous Mart, where were fiue hundred Iewes. I sayled ten dayes thence to Kathiphan, where were fiue thousand Israelites. Thence to the Kingdome of Haaulem, a people of Chus which worship the Sunne: Thence after twentie two dayes sayling, I came to the Ile Chenerag, where they worship the fire, where were twentie three thousand Iewes. Fortie dayes sayling from thence was the Kingdome of Sinne, from which to Gingalan was fifteene dayes; there were ten thousand Israelites. Thence I went to Ethiopian India, which they call Baghdaan, in which were high mountaynes, and in them many Israelites, subiect to none, which warred on the Hamaghtani, that is, the Libyans. From thence to Azzan was twentie daies iourney through the wildernesse Sebor, the King whereof was Sultan Alhabas an Ismaelite. Twelue dayes thence is Hhalauan, where were three hundred Iewes; from which they passe in troupes through the desart al-Tsahaca, into Zeuila in the tract of Geena or Ginæa, where they encounter showres of sands. This Region is in the land of Chus, and is called Alhhabas, towards the West. Thirteene dayes iourney from Hhaluan is Kits the beginning of Egypt. And fiue from thence Pium, once Pithon, where were twentie Iewes, and many monuments of our fathers to be seene. Thence to Misraim is foure iourneyes, where were two thousand Iewes in two Synagogues, which differed in their distribution of the Lectures of their Law: the Babylonians finishing it in a yeere, as in Spaine, the Israelites in three. But twice a yeere they assembled together in Prayers, on the feast Lætitiæ Legis, and on the feast Latæ Legis. Nathaneel was chiefe ouer all the Vniuersities (or Synagogues) of Egypt, and appointed Masters, and Æditui. He was familiar with the King Amir Almumanin Eli sonne of Abitalib. At Alexandria were three thousand Israelites. But for his trauels in Egypt, and the Synagogues which there he found, as also backe againe into Sicilia, Germany, Boheme, Prussia, &c. because there are yet knowne Synagogues of them, I surcease relation. And much may I feare I haue too much wearied the Reader in so long a Iewish Pilgrimage; but seeing Authors of best note, Scaliger, Drusius, Lipsius, &c. cite him, and Arias Mont. hath taken the paines to translate him, and his trauels are such ample testimonies of this our present subiect of Iewish dispersions, I haue beene bold to annex these things. If any list not to beleeue such multitudes of Iewes, I will not vrge him; howsoeuer that deluge of Tartars in all those Asian Regions soone after Beniamins dayes, brought a new face of all things in these Easterly parts: as a Iew, and relating these things to Iewes, and by Iewes passing to vs, it is like he reported, and we haue receiued, with the most. For his Geographie, some of his names are easily reconciled to the present, some hardly, which I leaue to the Readers industrie.

§. VI.

Of some Iewes lately found in China, and of their late Accidents in Germany.

Nic. Trigaut. exped. Sinlus. l. 1.

AFter these relations of Beniamin, I thought it not vnfit to insert out of Ricci & Trigautius, Iesuites, lately residing in China, somewhat appertaining to these Iewish affaires. It is but few yeeres since the Iesuites could settle themselues at Paquin, the Royall Citie of China. Thither did a certaine Iew (moued with report of these strangers, hauing an imagination that they were Iewes) resort vnto them. This Iew was borne at Chaifamfu, the mother-Citie of the Prouince Honan, his name was Ngai, his countenance not resembling the Chinois: he neglecting Iudaisme, had addicted himselfe to the China studies, and now came to Paquin to the Examination, in hope of proceeding Doctor. There did he enter the Iesuites house, professing that he was of their Law and Religion. Ricci leades him into the Chappell, where on the Altar stood the Image of the Virgin, Iesus, and Iohn Baptist kneeling; which hee taking to be the Image of Rebecca and her twinnes, did worship vnto them, contrarie (he said) vnto their custome. The Images of the Euangelists he supposed to be so many of Iacobs sonnes. But vpon further questioning, the Iesuite perceiued that he was a professor of the Law of Moses: he confessed himselfe an Israelite, and knew not the name of Iew; so that it seemed, the dispersion of the ten Tribes had pierced thus farre. Seeing the Hebrew Bible, hee knew the Letters, but could not reade them. He told them, that in Caifamfu were ten or twelue Families of Israelites, and a faire Synagogue, which had lately cost them ten thousand Crownes; therein the Pentateuch in rolles which had beene with great veneration preserued fiue or six hundred yeeres. In Hamcheu, the chiefe Citie of Chequian, he affirmed, were many more Families with their Synagogue: many also in other places, but without Synagogues, and by degrees wearing out. His pronunciation of Hebrew names differed from ours, as * Heruſoloim, Moscia for Messia, Ieruſalem. His brother (he said) was skilfull in the Hebrew, which hee in affection to the China preferment had neglected; and therefore was hardly censured by the Ruler of the Synagogue.

* So the Abyssines call Israel, Chrostos.

To this Citie did Ricci send one of his to enquire, who found these reports true, which also copied the beginnings and endings of their bookes, which they compared and found to agree with their owne Pentateuch, sauing that they wanted pricks or points. He writ also in China Characters to the Ruler of their Synagogue, that he had the rest of the bookes of the old Testament, and other bookes of the New, which contained the acts of the Messias being already come. The Ruler doubted, saying, that he would not come till ten thousand yeeres were expired. He also promised, that because he had heard much good of him, if he would come thither, and abstaine from Swines-flesh, they would make him Ruler of their Synagogue. After this, three Iewes came from thence to Paquin, and were almost perswaded to become Christians. These complained, that through ignorance of the Hebrew, their Religion decayed, and that they were likely all of them in a short time to become Saracens or Ethnikes. The old Archisynagogue was now dead, his sonne a young man succeeded in place, but ignorant of their Law. And that their Iewish Religion was indeede languishing, appeared by this, that they both worshipped the Popish Images, and complained, that in their Synagogue and priuate houses they had none. They were offended that they were forbidden the eating of any creature, which themselues had * not killed, which had they obserued in this iourney, had cost them their liues. Their wiues and neighbours esteemed Circumcision of their infants on the eight day a cruell thing, which they could be willing to altar, with acceptation of the Christian Law, nor would much stand about Swines-flesh. They told them of certaine Christians also, or worshippers of the Crosse in China, which with the Iewes and Saracens were all called by the Chinois, Hoei, adding some distinction from their differing Rites, calling the Saracens, Hoei which refused Swines flesh: The Iewes, Hoei which abstaine from the sinew; the Crosse-worshippers, Hoei which abstaine from round-footed beasts, whereas the Iewes, Saracens and Chinois eate the flesh of horses, asses, and the like. This Historie I haue added, to shew how the Iewes haue bin dispersed into the furthest parts, and how time, the deuourer of all things, hath almost eaten them out, or their Religion at least. Somewhat also may be hence conjectured touching the deportation of the ten Tribes, the Hebrew pricks, and moderne Characters, * which I leaue to others discussing. Once, it is by all Historie manifest, that by the inundations of Saracens, Tartars, Turkes, &c. both the Iewish and Christian Religions (sometimes frequent) haue beene by degrees consumed and almost worne out of many parts of Asia.

* See inf. c. 19.

* Some thinke the Hebrew Letters which now we haue, to be inuented by Ezra since the captiuitie.

The late miseries inflicted on the Iewes in Frankfort and Wormes may here be inserted.

In Aug. 1614. at the same time * which they solemnize with fasting for the destruction of Ierusalem, their little Ierusalem (so they call the Iewes streete in Frankfort) was spoiled by the vnruly Citizens, and gaue them a new cause of mourning. The Iewes at first defended themselues, and the Magistrates sought to allay the furie of the people: but at last consented to depart the Citie, one thousand and foure hundred, presently passing downe the Mæne in boates, and the rest following them the next day. It seemed a prodigious and dismall signe vnto them, that the Oxe, which they vse to keepe all the yeere in their Church-yard or buriall place, now being shut vp for the slaughter, brake away from them.

* Merc. Gallob. Arthus & Ianson.

The Mother gaue fatal example to the Daughter: for Frankfort they account the Mother of Israel, which led the way to Wormes in expulsion of the Iewes. This should haue hapned the seuenth of April. 1615. being good Friday, but was deferred till Munday following, when early in the morning they sent word to the Iewes into their streete, that trussing vp their choisest goods, they should within one houre depart, which with much lamentation they did. Neither could the Magistrates preuayle in their defence, so odious had their vsurious exactions of long time beene to the Citizens. Thus the Iewes take their way to the Rhene: And the same day was the roofe of their Synagogue pulled downe, and a Decree made, not to leaue one stone thereof vpon another, six hundred of them presently putting the same in execution. These spared not the monuments and graue-stones, but brake them in peeces, notwithstanding some of them seemed scarce possible to be raised from the Earth. The Iewes hearing this ruine of their Synagogue, which they say (if you beleeue it) had continued one thousand and eight hundred yeeres, rent their garments, and mourned in sackcloth and ashes.

§. VII.

Of the Iewes sometimes liuing in England, collected out of ancient Records, by Master Iohn Selden of the inner Temple.

ALthough I haue had already a long tedious iourney, wearisome to my Reader and my selfe, whilest I haue accompanied these miserable Iewes in their dispersions: yet did I conceiue, this following relation would rather seeme as a welcome recreation, then irkesome progresse; because wee shall containe our selues in our owne Countrie: Wherein I must acknowledge the laborious industrie of our learned Countriman and Antiquarie, Master Selden, who out of ancient Records hath thus traced the foote-prints of this antiquated and out-worne people: mine is but the transcribing and abbreuiating. Of the Iewes first comming to this Land is vncertaine: It seemes that some little notice was taken of them before the Conquest; after which we haue diuers testimonies, and besides others, the Statute de Iudaismo, both before and after, their state and condition was very seruile, as appeareth in legib. Confess. cap. 29. Iudæi & omnia sua Regis sunt, &c. The Iewes and all they had was the Kings. What they suffered in succeeding ages, our common Stories discouer. There was one amongst them which had the office of Presbyteratus omnium Iudæorum totius Angliæ (which I take to be their chiefe Priest-hood in their Synagogues: For if it had signified a meere Lay Eldership, I ghesse I should haue met with it in the pleas of their Excheker) and this lay in the Kings grant, as by King Iohns Charter of it may be seene. In Rot. Chart. 1. Iohan. Reg. ch. 171. memb. 28. Omnibus fidelibus suis, & omnibus & Iudeis & Anglis salutem. Sciatis nos concessisse, & præsenti charta nostra confirmasse Iacobo Iudæo de Londonijs Presbytero Iudæorum Presbyteratum omnium Iudæorum totius Angliæ habend. & tenend. quamdiu vixerit, liberè & honorificè, & quietè & integrè, ita quod nemo ei super hoc molestiam aliquam aut grauamen inferre præsumat. Quare, &c, apud Rothomagum 31. die Iulij Anno Regni nostri primo. Therein is also mention of a former Charter granted by Rich. 1. Certaine Iustices were appointed ad custodiam Iudæorum, before whom pleas twixt them, and others and them, were held, and matters adiudged secundum legem & consuetudinem Iudaismi, as the entry often is. In most Townes of note were two Christians and two Iewes, or one of both sides, appointed as publique Notaries for all their Deeds of contract, and those Notaries had one chest and seuerall keyes for the safe-keeping of such Deeds, and they were called Cyrographarij Christiani & Iudæi arcæ Cyrographicæ Oxoniæ or other such Towne. And hence must you interpret les houches Cyrographes in statuto de Iudaismo. And by these Notaries or Cyrographers the Deeds of the Iewes were tried. These Deeds and such like they called vsually starra, of their Hebrew word shetar, that is, a Deede or contract: as Salomon de Stanford agnouit per starrum suum, and the like. And howeuer land was not subiect to execution for debt, till 13. Ed. 1. yet it seeme by 52. Hen. 3. That for debts of the Iewes, land was

was ſeized by writ for the debtor. Conſtat Iuſtitiarijs & per inſpectionem rotulorum de Scaccario noſtro Iudæorum, quod Aaron, &c. When any man had dealt much with them, and after all diſcharges doubted further ill meaſure by any ſuch Starres or Deeds lying hid, the courſe was to ſend out a proceſſe to the Sheriffe of the County, or Conſtables of the Caſtles of great Townes, to make proclamation on their Sabbaths, Summoning all Iewes of this or that Synagogue to be at their Exchequer to account with ſuch as doubted in that kinde. Thus 52. Hen. 3. præceptum eſt vice-comiti Eſſex quod clamari faceret per ſcholas Iudæorum Colceſtriæ per duo vel tria Sabbata, ſi aliquis Iudæus vel Iudæa aliquod debitum exigere poterit de Rogero filio Petri, &c. that then he or ſhe ſhould come ad computandum. Et Vice-comes mandauit tam literis Latinis quam Ebraicis, quod nullus Iudæus nec Iudæa aliquod debitum exigit de prædicto Rogero. So do all other Sherifes and Conſtables returne in Hebrew and Latine. For in thoſe times both Languages were vſed not only in Deeds of the Iewes, which I haue often ſeene with the Hebrew on the one ſide, and the ſame in Latine on the other, but alſo in Records of Law, as in 43. Hen. 3. in regiſt. Monaſterij de Boxgraue in Suſſex, &c. And as both tongues were vſed, ſo in trialls twixt Chriſtians and them, the venire facias was ſex probos & legales homines, & ſex legales Iudæos, as often appeares. What Oath was giuen them I finde not, but R. Moſes Mikkotxi that liued in the time of Hen. 3. writes in præc. affirmat. 123. that holding the booke of the Pentateuch betweene their Armes, they called to witneſſe the God of Iſrael which is mercifull, &c.

Vpon their conuerſion their goods were confiſcate: which was (it ſeemes) after ſuch time as the Domus Conuerſorum (that which is now the Rolles) was in 17. Hen. 3. built for them, where they might liue ſub quadam honeſta viuendi Regula, & certum haberent in tota vita ſua domicilium, tutum refugium & ſufficiens vitæ ſuſtentamentum, ſine ſeruili labore & fœnoris emolumento, as the words of Mat. Paris are. In 52. Hen. 3. Ioſpin ben Salomon a Iew of Marleborow ſhewes to the Court of the Iuſtices of the Iewes, that one Ioicets his ſiſter was married to one Salon, the ſonne of Lombard of Kirklade, & quod ipſa habuit in arca Cyrograph. Merlebrigie vnum Cyrograph. xxxij. marcarum, which vpon her conuerſion became the Kings, as the Roll ſaith, and quod hoc totum ſit verum, obligat omnia bona ſua, &c. Which all were confiſcate for not proſecuting the ſute. But in the time of E. 1. it was granted, that the houſe ſhould haue one halfe of the goods of the Conuert, and that he himſelfe ſhould haue the other halfe. So placit. 9. Ed. 1. Io. de Sancto Dionyſ. cuſtos domus conuerſorum hath a writ for the moity of the goods of Beleager & Huccoth Ieweſſes of Oxford, late Conuerts, &c. the other halfe allowed to them.

One cruell and (to ſpeake the propereſt phraſe) Iewiſh crime was vſuall amongſt them, euery yeere towards Eaſter, though it were not alwayes knowne (ſee Mat. Paris in 39. H. 3.) to ſteale a young boy, circumciſe him, and after a ſolemne iudgement, making one of their owne Nation a Pilate, to crucifie him out of their diuelliſh malice to Chriſt and Chriſtians. For their circumciſing alone, take this record inter Placita 18. H. 3. Rot. 21. Norff. Benedictus phyſicus appellat Iacobum de Norwico Iudæum, quod cum Odoardius filius ſuus puer ætatis 5. annorum iuit ludendo, &c. that foure yeeres before that, Iames the Iew, had taken his ſonne Ed. as he was playing in the ſtreete, and carrying him to his houſe, circumciſed him, and there detayned him one day and night, till by force of Chriſtians hee recouered him, hauing his circumciſed member then ſwollen, &c. The childe being examined, confeſſed that they tooke and carried him to the houſe of Iames aforeſaid, where, while one held him and couered his eyes, another circumciſed him with a knife; the peece cut off they put in a baſon of ſand (in quodam vacino cum ſabelone, & quæſierunt peciam illam cum paruis ſuffletis) and there they with ſmall puffes of wind out of their mouthes ſought it, and the Iew which firſt found it, was called Iurnepin, and therefore they gaue the ſame name to the childe, calling him Iurnepin. The Archdeacons Officiall came to teſtifie this with a great companie of Prieſts, all in the word of GOD, ſaying as aforeſaid, that they ſaw his members ſwolne: and the Coroners of Norwich with thirtie ſix of the Citizens teſtified as much. Hereupon the Iewes were all put in priſon, and found acceſſories except Moſſy the ſonne of Salomon. Order was taken, that becauſe the caſe was ſtrange, and they had no precedent of the like, it ſhould firſt be enquired of by the Eccleſiaſticall Ordinary, and that he ſhould certifie to the King. The Iewes after procured the boy to be ſeene, and his member was found couered. But this is not repugnant to the former teſtimonie: ſeeing by Chyrurgery, * the skinne may bee drawne forth to an vncircumcifion. In the yeere following of Hen. 3. Mat. Paris reports ſuch a deede of the Iewes of Norwich, and in 24. H. 3. that they circumciſed a Chriſtian childe, and called him Iurnin, and meant to haue crucified him. All the Iewes of the Citie were queſtioned about it: and when they would haue referred themſelues to Lay authoritie, William de Ralegh the Biſhop ſayes, Hæc ad Eccleſiam ſpectant, non ad regalem curiam, cum de circumciſione & de fidei læſione quæſtio ventiletur. Foure Iewes conuicted hereof were drawne drawne at Horses tayles, and hanged on a gibbet. In 39. H. 3. the case of Hugh. Lincolne crucified is in the same Author, and for it eighteene Iewes were at once drawne and hanged. This Hugh is reckoned as a Saint in Chaucers Prioresses tale. By reason of their exactions and vsuries they were all banisht, (their moueables allowed them, but Walsingham sayes, only their expences for passage) in 18. Ed. 1. Math. Westm. numbers them one hundred and sixty thousand, fiue hundred and eleuen. The house of Conuerts in Pat. 51. Ed. 3. memb. 20. is giuen to the Master of the Rolles.

By the Statute Iudaisme they were to weare (euery one being past seuen yeeres olde) a cognisance of yellow vpon their vpper garment, thereby to be knowne (some such distinction had beene generally enioyned in the Councell of Lateran) see the Statute, & cap. de Iud. 6. R. 1. Rog. de Houeden, fol. 424. They were forbidden to build new Synagogues, made subiect to the payment of Tithes, and were to weare on their vpper garment, on the brest two peeces of wollen cloth of another colour plainly to be discerned, each of them two fingers broade, and foure in length, by the Prouinciall Councell of Oxford vnder Stephan Archbishop of Canterbury in 8. Hen. 3.

CHAP. XI.

A Chronologie of the Iewish Historie from the beginning of the World, briefly collected.

THE Floud happened (as Moses reckoneth the Parcels in the Ages of the Patriarchs) in the yeere of the World 1656. which are thus accounted: Adam at the hundred and thirtie yeere begat Seth: Seth at a hundred and fiue begat Enos: Enos at ninetie Kainan: he at seuenty Mahalaleel, who at sixty fiue begat Iared: Iared being one hundred sixtie two yeeres olde, begat Henoch, who at sixtie fiue begat Methuselah; and hee at a hundred eighty seuen begat Lamech, who in his hundred eightie two yeere begat Noah; in the sixe hundreth yeere of whose life the Floud came: Whereof euery Nation almost in the World hath some tradition; howsoeuer as Censorinus citeth out of Varro, from the beginning of the world to that first deluge, is called ἄδηλον, or vnknowne; as from thence to the first Olympiade was μυθικὸν or fabulous; onely that deserueth the title of ἱστορικὸν from the Olympiads forwards, if we regard humane Historie. But the Diuine hath made the former more cleere then the later. Some difference is in what part of the yeere the World was created, which is supposed to be Autumne, because the trees were then in those parts of Eden laden with fruits: and the Iewes still obserue that time. Scaliger also sometime of a contrary opinion, hath now yeelded to this. And the Egyptians in the time of Fermicus held that the world was created in the thirtith part of Libra. The Flood after Scaliger began in the yeere 1657. on Saturday the seuenth of Nouember. 1656.

The second age of the World is reckoned from the Floud to Abraham: Whose birth was after the Floud 292. yeeres: Sem two yeeres after the Floud begat Arpacsad: hee at thirtie fiue yeeres Selah, who in the thirtith yeere begat Heber: Heber at thirtie foure Peleg, who being thirtie yeeres old begat Regu, and he at thirty two Serug, in whose thirtith yeere Nahor was borne, who at nine and twenty begat Terah, who at seuentie yeeres begat Abram. Thus Scaliger, Caluisius, Buntingus, Arias Montanus, Genebrard, Pererius, Adrichomius, Opmeerus, &c. But Iunius, Broughton, Lydyat, Codomannus, &c. adde sixtie yeeres more. For Moses saith, Gen. 11. 32. That Terah died in Charan, aged two hundred and fiue yeeres, and then Abram (as it is in the next Chapter) was seuentie fiue yeeres old; so that Terah when Abram was borne, was a hundred thirty yeeres old. Whereas therefore he is said at seuentie yeeres to beget Abram, Nahor, and Haran, it is to be vnderstood, that he then began to beget: [a] Abram being named first for diuine priuiledge, not because hee was eldest: The like phrase is vsed, Gen. 5. 32. Noah being fiue hundred yeeres old begat Shem, Ham and Iaphet, and yet neither were they all borne at once, nor was Shem the eldest: let the Reader choose whether of these opinions he best liketh.

[a] Anno Mundi 2008. Abram borne.

In the seuentie fiue yeere Abram went out of Charan, hauing receiued the promise; from whence to the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, are numbred 430. yeeres. Rather herein we are to follow Pauls interpretation of Moses then Genebrards, who Gal. 3. 17. accounts those foure hundred and thirtie yeeres mentioned by Moses, Exod. 12. 40. from the promise made to Abraham, and not from the time that Iacob went downe with his familie into Egypt. So that the departure out of Egypt, after Scaligers computation, and some others thers, Perkins, Adrichomius, &c. happened in the yeere of the World 2453. whereto if we adde those sixtie yeeres of Terahs life before mentioned, it amounteth to two thousand fiue hundred and thirteene. And so Broughton reckoneth. Iunius and Lydyat account two thousand fiue hundred and nine. The difference seemes to arise from hence, that one accounteth from Abrams departing out of Vr of the Chaldees; the other from his departure from Haran, after his fathers death about fiue yeeres after. But it were an endlesse worke to reconcile Chronologers in their different computations. Some reckon the fiue and twentieth, [b] Scaliger the fifteenth of Aprill, the day of their departure. And then the Hebrewes began their yeere at the Spring-Equinoctiall, which before they began in Autumne.

b Ios. Scaliger annot. in Euseb.

From this departure, to the building of Salomons Temple, [c] Scaliger reckoneth foure hundred and eightie yeeres, whose first foundations (he saith) were laid the nine and twentieth of May being Wednesday, Anno Mundi 2933. and of the great Iulian Period (which differeth seuen hundred sixtie foure yeeres from the yeere of the World) 3697. In this computation of foure hundred and eightie yeeres, betwixt the departure and foundation of the Temple, many Chronologers agree, Arias Montanus, Adrichomius, Broughton, Perkyns, Lydyat, &c. although some dissent much. The summe ariseth of these parcels. Moses died fortie yeeres after their deliuerance. Ioshua ruled seuenteene; Othoniel fortie; Ehud fourescore; Gideon fortie; Abimelech three; Thola twentie three; Iaer twentie two; Iephte sixe; Ibsan seuen; Elam ten; Abdon eight; Sampson twentie; Heli fortie; Samuel and Saul fortie; Dauid fortie; Salomon in the fourth yeere and second month beganne to build his Temple, after which hee raigned thirtie seuen yeeres.

c Ios. Scaliger. de Em T. lib. 5. & in opusc. p. 131. Lydyat. 2988. Troy was taken by the Græcians A. M. 1767. Scal. E. T. l. 5.

From thence to the destruction of the Temple vnder Zedekias, are accounted foure hundred twentie and seuen. This agrees with [d] Ezekiels account, reckoning a day for a yeere, three hundred and ninety daies or yeeres after the Apostasie of Israel from God, the rebellion against the house of Dauid in the beginning of Rehoboams raigne, by the meanes of Ieroboam; to which if we adde seuen and thirtie yeeres which Salomon raigned after the foundation of the Temple, the summe is foure hundred twentie seuen. The same appeareth thus; Roboam reigned seuenteene yeeres; Abiam three; Asa fortie one; Iehoshaphat twentie fiue; Iehoram eight; Ahaziah one; Athaliah sixe; Ioash fortie; Amazia twentie nine; Azaria or Uzzia fiftie two. Betwixt Amazia and Azaria the kingdome was ruled eleuen yeeres by the States, as some gather out of 2. Reg. 15. 1. (others reckon it not.) Iotham sixteene; Ahaz sixteene; Ezekiah twentie nine; Manasses fiftie fiue; Amon two; Iosias thirtie one; Iehoahaz three moneths; Eliakim or Iehoiakim eleuen yeeres; Ieboiachin three moneths; Zedechiah or Mattaniah eleuen yeeres. The little difference from the former number may be ascribed to the current, and vnfinished yeeres of some of their raignes.

* An. M. 3360. d Ezek 4. 5. Lydy. 3417.

From this time of Sedekias ruine, some begin the reckoning of the seuentie yeeres captiuitie; in which time others comprehend all Sedekias raigne, and account the returne vnder Cyrus to bee fiftie nine yeeres after this desolation; and from thence a hundred and eight to the Edict of Darius Nothus; from which time are numbred two hundred fiftie nine to the Dedication of Iudas Maccabeus; and from thence a hundred sixtie two yeeres to the birth of Christ. So [e] Scaliger.

e Scal. de Em. lib. 7.

It were a worke irkesome to my selfe, and tedious to the Reader, to recite the variable opinions of Chronologers, or to trauerse their arguments about these points.

They which list to see the varietie of opinions of Iewish, Greeke, Latin, old and new Chronologers, may see Genebr. Chron. lib. 1. in fine. Likewise see our fourth booke, cap. 4.

To recite here their high Priests and later Kings, with the time of their pontificalitie and raigne, out of Arias Montanus, I hold not vnfit. First, Iesus returned with Zorobabel, and built the Temple, whose time of Priest-hood, after Scaliger, Iunius, and those that reckon vpon the Edict of Darius Nothus, must needs be very long. To leaue that therfore his sonne Ioacim [f] succeeded in the Priest-hood twentie eight yeeres, besides twentie yeeres with his father. Eliasib held the Priest-hood one and fortie yeeres; Ioiada twentie fiue; Ionathan twentie foure; Ieddoa twentie seuen, till the time of Alexander; Onias twentie seuen, after Philo: but Eusebius saith twentie three; Simon Iustus thirteene; Eleazar twentie, Manasses twentie seuen, Onias thirty nine.

f Ioseph. Antiq. & Car. Sigo. de republ. hebr. l. 5. haue set down the catalogue of high Priests from the first to the last. Iun in 1. Mac. 1. Scal E T. l. 5.

Afterwards the Syrian Kings appointed high-Priests, of whom Iason was Priest three yeeres; Menelaus twelue yeeres, in whose seuenth yeere Iudas Maccabeus began to administer the Common-wealth. Ionathas brother of Iudas ruled eighteene yeeres, Simon his brother was both Priest and Captaine eight yeeres; Ioannes Hircanus his sonne, thirtie one. Whereas they had vsed to date their contracts according to the yeeres from Alexander, as we reade in the bookes of Maccabees: when Simon Hircanus was high Priest, that order was abolished, and another taken, that euery date should be expressed in such or such a yeere of N. high Priest of the great God. But lest the writing being cancelled, should bee neglected, and perhaps the Name of God cast with it on the dung-hil, the wise-men abolished that order on the third of Tisri, which they instituted a holy-day. As for the name of Maccabees, Iu- nius saith, it came from the inscription of those foure letters M. C. B. I. in the banners of those Princes which deliuered the Iewes from the Macedonian thraldome. Scaliger saith, that Iudas onely and properly was so called, but by abuse of speech was not onely giuen to all of that kindred, but to all which suffered in those times persecution for Religion; as the seuen brethren and others. The name Hasmonei began with that Hircanus, Scaliger thinketh, because in the sixty eight Psalme it is by the Iewes interpreted Prince.

Aristobulus sonne of Hircanus, first after the captiuitie called himselfe king, and raigned one yeere: Ioannes Alexander his brother, twentie seuen: after him his wife Alexandra, nine: Hircanus her sonne three moneths: Aristobulus his brother three yeeres. Ierusalem was taken of Pompey, and Hircanus recouered the Priest-hood, which he held two and twentie yeeres: Antigonus by aide of the Parthians possessed Iudæa fiue yeeres, and in his second yeere Herod was proclaimed King by the Romans, who tooke the Citie the fift yeere of Antigonus, and raigned foure and thirtie.

Scaliger [d] ascribeth to Herods kingdome the number after Eusebius account, reckoning from the birth of Abram 1977. he died 2016. Archelaus his son was made by Augustus Tetrarch of Ierusalem 2016. & was banished 2025. Agricola was made king by Caligula 2053. Agrippa his son by Claudius 2060. and died 2116. thirtie yeeres after the destruction of the Temple. The Dynastie of the Herodians lasted 139. yeeres. Thus Scaliger. He attributeth the Natiuitie of Christ to the 3948. yeere of the world.

Here we must leaue the Chronologers contending of the yeere of the world, in which this blessed Natiuitie happened; some adding many more yeeres, some not allowing so many. It is certaine by the Scripture, that he was borne in the one and fortieth, or two and fortieth of Augustus, baptized in the fifteenth of Tiberius, then beginning to be about thirtie yeeres of age: in the thirtie three yeere he was crucified. In the seuentie two, as Baronius, and seuentie one yeere of Christ, as Buntingus and Liuely account, Ierusalem was destroyed by Titus, in the second of Vespasian. Arias Montanus reckoneth this the yeere of the World 3989. and saith, that the Hebrewes reckon it the 3841. which must needes be false. The fault ariseth from the false computation of the Persian and Græcian Monarchies. [e] Iosephus counteth from the time of Herod to the destruction of the Temple, twentie eight high Priests, and a hundred and seuen yeeres. After Scaliger in his Can. Isag. l. 3. this yeere 1612. is the 1614. of Christ, of the World 5461. after the Iewish account of Hillel 5372. of the Armenians 1061. of the Iulian Period 6325. of the Hegira 1021. Anno 4. Olymp. 597. The Dionysian account, which wee vsually follow, was not generally receiued till after the time of Charles the Great.

Of the Iewish Talmud, and the Composition and estimation thereof: also of the Iewish Learned men, their succession, their Cabbalists, Masorites, their Rabbines, Vniuersities, Students, Rabbinicall creations, their Scriptures, and the translations of them.

§. I.

Of the Talmud.

RAbbi Mosche Mikkotzi, [a] in a worke of his, set forth Anno 1236. as Buxdorfius citeth him, [b] saith, that the Written Law which GOD gaue to Moses, and Moses to the Israelites, is obscure and hard, because it speaketh some things contradictorie (which hee seeketh to proue by some places [c] mis-interpreted) and because it is imperfect, and containeth not all things meete to be knowne. For who shall teach vs (saith he) the notes of Birds and Beasts? (a Franciscan might answere him [d] out of the Legend of Saint Francis, the Patron of his Order) who shall teach them the proprietie and nature of points & accents of Letters? Also, what fatte might be eaten, what not? &c. Many such things are defectiue in the Law, and therefore there is neede of some other Exposition of the written Law, whence these things might be learned. This Expoſition (for-ſooth) muſt be their Talmud, the generation of which Viper, touched before, we will here more fully declare.

They ſay, that Moſes on Mount Sinai was not with GOD fortie daies and fortie nights to keepe Geeſe. And GOD could haue written thoſe Tables of the Law in an houre, and ſent him away with them; ſo to haue preuented that Idolatrie with the Golden Calfe. But GOD brought Moſes into a Schoole, [e] and there gaue him the Law in writing firſt, and then in all that long time expounded [f] the ſame, ſhewing the cauſe, manner, meaſure, foundation, and intention thereof in the true ſenſe. This vnwritten and Verball Law did Moſes [g] teach Ioſhua, he the Elders; from theſe it was deriued to the Prophets. After Zacharie and Malachie, the laſt of theſe, it came to the great Sanhedrin, and after them, by Tradion from father to ſonne.

And * Rabbi Bechai ſaith, That Moſes learned the Law written, in the day time; and this Traditionall Law by night: for then he could not ſee to write. Rabbi Moſche Mikkotzi ſheweth the cauſe why God would deliuer the ſame by mouth onely, and not in writing, leſt (I wiſſe) the Gentiles ſhould peruert this, as they did the other which was written. And in the day of Iudgement, when GOD ſhall demand who are the Iſraelites, the Gentiles ſhall make challenge, becauſe of the Law written, but the Iewes onely ſhall be acceped, as hauing this Simani, this verball expoſition. GOD alſo (ſay they) gaue them Chachamim, Wiſe-men, authors of diuers ordinances amongſt them, as to bleſſe GOD at the Sunne-riſing, and Sunne-ſetting: And of Schooles where children ſhould be taught the Law of Moſes in euery Citie, and where the Law of Moſes ſhould be read weekely; and that the Iſraelites ſhould not eate or drinke with the Gentiles, nor what they had dreſſed; after the example of * Daniel, &c.

But when the Temple was deſtroyed, and the Iewes carried away captiues, then aroſe vp Rabbi Iuda Haunaſi, who is called (for his humilitie and godlineſſe) our Great Maſter; to whom GOD procured ſuch fauour in the eyes of Antoninus the Emperour, that hee had authoritie to aſſemble out of all places of the Empire, the moſt learned Iewes, to conſult in this their almoſt deſperate Eſtate, what courſe to take for the preſeruation of the Law amongſt the people. And although this Kabala or Law, giuen by word of mouth, might not bee committed to writing; yet in conſideration and commiſeration of their miſerie, whatſoeuer thereof was remayning in memorie; hee writ in a booke which hee called Miſchna, that is, a [h] Deutronomie, or Law reiterated, contayning ſixe ſummes, diuided into ſixtie leſſe parts or tractates, and theſe into fiue hundred thirtie two Chapters. Thus farre R. Mikkotzi: The contents of the ſixe ſummes and their ſeuerall Tractates, you may ſee in * Buxtorfius.

In this booke were contayned the Traditions and ordinances of the Elders, according to the preſcript whereof, the Iewiſh Synagogue was to bee ordered; and it was receiued and approued of the Iewiſh Synagogue, [i] in the yeere of Chriſt 219. [k] Some yeeres after, Rabbi Iochanan, Rector of the Vniuerſitie of Ieruſalem for the ſpace of eightie yeeres, enlarged that booke, and called it the Talmud of Ieruſalem (being fitted for their vſe which dwelt in the land of Iſrael, as the other for Forreners) which for the difficultie and obſcuritie thereof was not had in ſuch eſtimation as the former, nor is it at this day. After him, Rabbi Aſſe read in the Schooles thoſe Tractates, handling euery yeere two of them; ſo in the ſixtie yeeres of his Rector-ſhip, hee went twice through it all; but finiſhed in writing onely fiue and thirtie Tractates. After him in the yeere [l] 427. Maremar was made Rector, to whom Mar the ſonne of Rabbi Aſſe adioyned himſelfe. Theſe perfected that which Rabbi Aſſe had left vnfiniſhed. And that which they thus added, was called Gemara, or the complement.

Thus the Miſchnaios, and Gemara made vp the whole Talmud [m]. Theſe two ſpent in their labours threeſcore and thirteene yeeres. And ſo in the yeere of our Lord 500. the Talmud was perfected, receiued for authenticall, and called the Babylonian Talmud, according to which the Iewes to this day behaue themſelues in caſes ſpirituall and temporall, accounting it as their ciuill and cannon Law. The Iewes aſcribe the Ieruſalem Talmud to the yeere of the World 4229. the other 4265. This is called the Talmud of Ieruſalem ſaith Serarius) not becauſe it was written there: But was compiled not in the Babylonian Vniuerſitie, but in one of Iſrael, and in the Ieruſalem language, which at that time was very corrupt and confuſed with Greekiſh, Perſian and Roman mixtures. This was both begun and ended by R. Iochanan aforeſaid, betweene the times of the Miſna and Gemara. About the yeere 4860. and 1100. yeeres after Chriſt, R. Iſaac ben Iacob in Spaine writ (ſo it is called) The little Talmud. And in the great and true Thalmud are the additions of R. Barkaphra. Eldad Danius fableth, that it is in Hebrew amongſt his encloſed Iewes. Note alſo, that the name Thalmud or Talmud, is giuen ſometimes to the whole worke, ſometimes and often to the Gemara only, calling it the booke of the Miſna and Talmud.

And this is that Law verball, or deliuered by word of mouth, which is equalled to the other, without which the written law cānot be conceiued or vnderstood: The ioy of the hart (saith o Aben Ezra) and refreshing of the bones; betwixt which and the written Law hee can finde no p difference, but being deliuered to them from their Elders. In one of their bookes, q printed at Cremona 1556. is this sentence. Thinke not that the Law written is the foundation, but rather the Law Traditionall is the right foundation: and according to this Law did God r make couenant with the Israelites; for God foresaw their captiuitie in time to come: and therefore lest the people, among whom they should dwell, should write out and interpret this Law, as they did the other, God would not haue it written. And although in processe of time this Law be now written, yet it is not explained by the Christians, because it is hard, and requireth a sharpe wit. That which is spoken of the Law, is applyed to commend their Talmud: If you can frustrate (saith the Lord) my Couenant with the f day and the night, that is, according to their booke Tanchuma, when you will no longer learne and obserue the Talmud. And in the t Talmud is thus recorded; To studie and reade in the Bible is a vertue, and not a vertue, that is, a small vertue: but to learne their Mischna or Talmud text, is a vertue worthy reward; and to learne by heart Gemara (the complement of the Talmud) is a vertue so great, that none can be greater. The u Wise men (say they) are more excellent then the Prophets; and the wordes of the Scribes more louely then those of the Prophets: and therefore the one forced to confirme them with miracles, the other simply to bee beleeued, as is said, Deut. 17.10. When some of his Schollers visited R. Eliazer in his sickenesse, and said, Rabbi, teach vs the wayes of life, that we may finde euerlasting life: his answer was, Giue honour to your fellow Students, and turne away your Children from the studie of the Bible, and place them betwixt the knees of the wise. Neither can hee (saith the Talmud in other places) haue a quiet conscience, which returnes from the studie of the Talmud to the studie of the Bible. And, Nothing is more excellent then the most holy Talmud. And, it is impossible to stand on the foundation of the written Law, but by the traditionall. And to dissent from his Doctor, is as to dissent from God; to beleeue the words of the wise, is as to beleeue God himselfe. They say, The Law is like to water, the Misna to wine, the Gemara or Talmud to Preserues: the Law like to Salt, the Misna to Pepper, the Talmud to Spices. They blaspheme, that God studies the Bible in the day time, and the sixe orders of the Talmud by night.

Hence it is, that the Rabbins are more exercised in their Talmud, then in the Bible; as on which their Faith is founded more then on the other: and according to this doe they expound the Scripture. And as their Talmud is most certaine, so also is that (whatsoeuer) exposition of their Rabbins, according to the same. Thus saith Rabbi Isaac Abhuhabh, whatsoeuer our Rabbins in their Sermons and mysticall explainations haue spoken, wee are no lesse firmely to beleeue then the Law of Moses. And if any thing therein seeme repugnant to our sense, we must impute it to the weakenesse of our conceit, and not to their words, as for example: it is written in the Talmud, x that a Rabbin once preached, that the time would come, when a woman should euery day bee deliuered of her burthen: according to the saying, Iere. 31. 7. Concepit statimque peperit. One not beleeuing this, the Rabbin answered, that hee spake not of a common woman, but of a Henne, which should euery day lay an egge.

x Tract. de Sabbat. c. 2. p. 30.

Such are their expositions, I know not, whether fitter to be heard of Heraclitus, or Democritus, more lamentable or ridiculous; and yet is it there said, that their wordes are the words of the liuing God, whereof not one shall fall to the ground; and must not bee derided either in word or thought, whether yee respect the persons, or workes of their Rabbins. Therefore in a Dutch booke, printed in Hebrew characters at Cracouia 1597. it is written, that the Iewes are bound to say Amen, not onely to their Prayers, but to all their Sermons and Expositions, according to the Prophet Esay, y Open the gates, the people commeth (schomer amunim) which keepeth righteousnesse, that is (say they) which saying Amen, beleeueth all things which the wise Rabbins haue written. And if any bee so simple, that he cannot vnderstand, yet must hee beleeue.

When two Rabbins (saith their Talmud) maintaine contrary opinions, yet must not men contradict them, because both of them hath his Kabala or Tradition for the same: and this is a rule in their Rabbins, Remember rather the word of the Scribes, than of the Law of Moses. R. Salomon Iarchi vpon Deuteronomie, chap. 17. verse 12. Thou shalt not decline from the word that they shall shew thee, to the right hand, or to the left, hath these words; And when he saith vnto thee, Of the right hand, that it is the left; and, Of the left hand, that it is z the right, thou must beleeue it; how much more if hee saith, The right hand is the right, &c. They haue a storie in their a Legend for the same, That there came a Goi (a Gentile) to Sammai, and asked how many Lawes they had? who answered two, a Written and a Verball.

z A. R. must be beleeued, though he say the right hand is the left.

Hee replyed, the written Law I acknowledge no leſſe then thou; make mee therefore a Iew, and teach me the other. Sammai refuſed; and hee went to Hillel (theſe both liued a little before the time of Chriſt) who admitted and inſtructed him; after hee bad him pronounce the letters in order, Aleph, Beth, Gimel, &c. which he did. The next day he bade him ſay the ſame letters backward, Gimel, Beth, Aleph. The Gentile ſaid, Rabbi, yeſterday you taught me otherwiſe: and yet, ſaid Hillel you beleeue me, and ſo learne of me; which you muſt no leſſe doe in the Traditionall Law, beleeuing all that is therein.

I had almoſt thought in reading of this Hillel, I had heard the Catechizing of ſome Romiſh Conuert, that with an implicite faith (beleeuing and worſhipping hee knowes not what) repentè prodit Catholicus, is foole Catholike in an hower, reſigning himſelfe to whatſoeuer that Church teacheth vpon an Ipſa dixit; or elſe that I had beene reading the life and precepts of b Ignatius Leiola the Ieſuite-founder (ſo like is the ſtory, though the names differ) who practiſed himſelfe, and trayned vp others, Ad ſapientem hanc ſanctamque ſtultitiam cæcæ, vt ipſe appellabat, obedientiæ, ſaith Maffæus in a large Diſcourſe hereof: Pauls Omnia probate was in thoſe dayes; but prudentiam non obedientis, ſed imperantis eſſe reſpondit Ignatius: negabat obedientis nomine dignum haberi oportere, qui legitimo ſuperiori non cum voluntate iudicium quoque ſubmitteret: in ſuperiorum iuſſu examinando eſſe arrogantiam. And thus writeth Ignatius himſelfe: Perit celebris illa Obedientiæ cæcæ ſimplicitas, cùm apud nos ipſos in quæſtionem vocamus recténe præcipiatur an ſecus: perit humilitas, perit in rebus arduis fortitudo, &c. To obey in outward execution, and effecting the command of a Superiour, may proue no vertue of patience, but a cloake of malice, a very imperfect perfection, not worthy the name of vertue, vntill the inward affect bee ioyned to the outward effect: neither is this a whole ſacrifice, except hee not onely will the ſame, but iudge, and bee of the ſame ſentence with his ſuperiour: hee muſt in the perſon of his ſuperiour behold Chriſt, who can neither deceiue nor be deceiued; ready alway to defend, neuer to miſlike his command; yea, whatſoeuer his ſuperiour enioyneth, hee muſt accept as the precept and will of God; and as hee is readie to beleeue the Catholique faith, ſo c to be carryed without further ſearch, with a blind force of the will, deſirous to obey. Thus did Abraham when hee was commanded to offer Iſaac; and therefore thus muſt the Ieſuite doe when an Ignatian Superiour commands, or elſe hee is no Holocauſt for the Loiolan Altar. Euen as a Carkaſſe, ſaith the Ieſuiticall Conſtitution, d which will bee drawne any way, or a Staffe in an old mans hand plyant as he pleaſeth: ſo, and ſo muſt e our waxen Ieſuites bee; Aſſes without vnderſtanding; nay, carkaſſes without life, ſtaues and ſlaues and blockes, guided by their guides, though it bee to cracke the Crownes of Kings. And as his legacie hee bequeathed this a little before his Death to the ſocietie, that they ſhould bee as plyant waxe, as an Image, flexible at pleaſure: yea, though it ſeeme againſt Conſcience, yet muſt a man beleeue his Superiour rather then himſelfe. And if the Pope ſhould bid him croſſe the Sea in the next Boat hee met with, though deſtitute of ſayles, oares, maſt and helme, and without all kind of prouiſion, he would doe it willingly. This hee called Mortification. Others which are not thus blind, haue their ſinnes ſtill remaining, and haue but one foot in Religion. This obedience (ſaith another f of them) is the character imprinted by Diuine, and not humane hand in this ſocietie.

What Diuell of Hell could euer haue taught Murthers and Treaſons to be tollerable, nay commendable, nay meritorious, if his Scholler ſhould not firſt paſſe this Ieſuiticall Retrograde, from a Chriſtian and a Man, with the loſſe of Religion and Reaſon, to become (as theſe Rome-Rabbins terme it) a Carkaſſe indeed, an Image, or a Staffe in the hand of That old one, which (like the Ægyptian Inchanters) hee might make a Serpent at his pleaſure? But let the truth preuaile, and Moſes Rod eate vp theſe Serpent-rods of the Ægyptians. And what more could old Hillel ſay to his Diſciples? Or doth God himſelfe exact? Bernard throughout his ſeauenth Epiſtle, teacheth more ſoundly of the Pope and thoſe religious Superiours; g Nec dico præpoſitorum mandata eſſe à ſubditis iudicanda, vbi nihil iubere deprehenduntur diuinis contrarium inſtitutis. Sed neceſſariam eſſe dico & prudentiam *qua aduertatur, ſi quid aduerſetur, & libertatem qua ingenuè contemnatur. And thus much of their Talmud, the originall and authoritie thereof. More modeſt yet were thoſe Fathers h of Trent, that would aſcribe but equalitie of reuerence, and reſpect to their Traditions with the Sripture. (With equall affection and eſteeme, ſay they, wee receiue and reuerence Traditions, and the bookes of the old and new Teſtament:) which muſt needs acknowledge themſelues beholding holding to them; leſt if they complaine they follow not their Traditionarie Maſters in making ſit lower: and they haue their Anathema as ready as the Rabbins their Zoab; and their Traditions, Canons, and Conſtitutions muſt interpret as well as their Kabala.

And ſome of that hotter ſocietie [i] haue found fiue priuiledges of Tradition aboue Scripture, as being written in the hearts of men by the finger of God, being more ancient, giuing confirmation to the Scripture, not ſubiect to wreſting, and containing all truth: whereas poore Scripture (for no better defending of the Ieſuiticall, Iebuſiticall, Iezabelicall aſſertions) is condemned firſt of her meane originall, as being written but by the Apoſtles (not the finger of God.) Secondly, as a later vpſtart: and thirdly, as receiued vpon the Churches authoritie: and fourthly, a dead letter written in paper or parchment with Inke, ſubiect to wreſting, like a ſheath which admits any blade whether of leade, wood, or braſſe, as well as the true one. And laſtly, not containing all the myſteries of Religion explicitly, as being not therefore giuen to preſcribe an exact forme of Faith, but written by ſome, vpon ſome occaſions, to ſome Churches; and therefore in controuerſies, as of Images, Inuocation of Saints and the like, where Scripture ſeemes to ſpeake for heretikes, wee muſt haue recourſe to the other kind of Scripture written in the heart of the Church, as Interpreter of all Scriptures, Iudge of all opinions, and whatſoeuer elſe foule-mouthed blaſphemie with faire pretext can arrogate to this, or derogate from the other. O that men would therefore hate that Whore which theſe impudent Panders proſtitute thus decked with the ſpoyles of diuine Scriptures, which haue another teſtimonie of themſelues; (and therefore the teſtimonie of God) that [k] All Scripture is giuen by inſpiration of God, and is profitable for Doctrine, for reproofe, for correction, for Inſtruction in righteouſneſſe: yea, and hereunto ſufficient, that the man of God (whoſe men, whoſe emiſſaries are theſe gaine-ſayers?) may bee perfect (throughly perfected) vnto all good workes. But leaue wee Simeon and Leui, brethren in euill together. Yet, before wee leaue their Talmud (though highly eſteemed amongſt them) I thought meet alſo to ſpeake more largely both of that and of their learned Rabbins, out of Petrus Galatinus, Sixtus Senenſis, Paulus Ricius, Rambam, and others that write thereof.

The [l] Traditionall Law they call Tora ſcebealpe, that is, the Law which is in the mouth, or deliuered by word of mouth. Rabbi Moſes Ægyptius telleth the paſſages thereof thus; Ioſhua receiuing it of Moſes, deliuered it to Phineas the ſonne of Eleazar the Prieſt: Phineas to Heli the Prieſt: hee to Samuel the Prophet: Samuel to Dauid: hee to Achias the Prophet, who deliuered the ſame to Elias, the teacher of Eliſha: Eliſha or Eliſæus to Ioiada the Prieſt: this Ioiada to Zacharias: Zacharias to Hoſea, and hee to Amos: Amos to Eſay, of whom Micheas receiued it, and of him Ioel: Nahum from him, and from him againe Habacuck, who taught it Sephanie, the Inſtructer of Ieremie, of whom Baruch the Scribe learned it: Baruch taught it Ezra. Vntill this time the Iewes had none other but the written Scripture.

Now for their Scriptures; they call the ſame Arbaa Veeſrim (that is, the foure and twentie) of the [m] number of the bookes after their computation, all which they reduce to foure parts; The firſt of which they call Tora, the Law, or Humas, the Pentateuch, or fiue bookes: and they call euery booke after the firſt words in the beginning thereof. The ſecond part hath foure bookes; Ioſhua, Iudges, Samuel, and Kings. The third part comprehendeth foure other, which they call the laſt Prophets; Eſay, Ieremie, Ezekiel, and the booke of the twelue ſmaller Prophets. The fourth part is called Chettuuim, and hth eleuen bookes, Paralipomenon or Chronicles, the Pſalmes, the Prouerbes, Iob, Ruth, Eccleſiaſtes, Lamentations, Canticles, Eſter, Daniel, Ezra, which they make one with Nehemia, Eccleſiaſticus, Iudith, and Tobias; and the firſt booke of Maccabees they haue, but reckon not among the foure and twentie. The third and fourth bookes of Ezra I haue not ſeene (ſaith Galatinus) in Hebrew; but ſome of them ſay, that they are lately found at Conſtantinople: but the ſecond of Maccabees, and the Booke of Philo (called the Wiſedome of Salomon) I neuer ſaw but in Greeke, nor thoſe additions to Daniel. But after the Babylonian captiuitie, Ezra writing out the Law, which had beene burned in the deſtruction of the Citie, other Wiſemen writ out the Expoſition of the Law, leſt, if another deſtruction ſhould happen, the ſame might periſh. And from that time, all the Wiſe-men, which are called the men of the Great Synagogue, in their teaching the Law, deliuered the ſame both in word and writing, vntill the Talmud was written. (It was then, ſaith Picus, in ſeuentie bookes, after the number of the ſeuentie Elders.)

Theſe mens authoritie hath the next place to the Prophets. And are in this order mentioned in their Talmud. Ezra deliuered the ſame to Simon the Prieſt, called Iaddus, who was honoured of Alexander. This Simon deliuered this explaination to Antigonus: Antigonus to Ioſephus the ſonne of Iohn, and to Ioſephus the ſonne of Iehezer: They to Nuaus Arbulenſis, and Ioſhua the ſonne of Peratria, whoſe Auditor the Iewes falſly affirme, that Ieſus our blesſed Sauiour [n] was, which liued an hundred and ten yeers after. Thoſe two deliuered the ſame to Iuda the ſon of Tibæus, and Simon the ſonne of Sata. Theſe to Samaia and Abatalion: and they to Hillel and Samæus. Hillel flouriſhed an hundred yeeres before the deſtruction of the ſecond Temple, and had eightie Schollers or Diſciples, all of excellent wit and learning: thirtie of them for their excellence, had the Diuinitie deſcending vpon them as Moſes; and other thirtie obtained that the Sunne ſhould ſtand ſtill for them, as Ioſhua; the reſt were accounted meane. Of theſe, the greateſt was Ionothas ſonne of Vziel, the leaſt Iohn the ſonne of Zacheus, which yet knew the Scripture and Talmud, and all things elſe to the examples of Foxes, and Narrations of Diuels.

Hillel and Samæus deliuered this explaination to this Iohn, and to * Simeon the Iuſt, ſonne of the ſaid Hillel, who after receiued Chriſt in his armes, and propheſied of him in the Temple. Rabbi Moſes proceedeth, and ſaith, that Simeon taught Gamaliel, *Paul*s Maſter; and Gamaliel inſtructed his ſonne Rabban Simeon, who was ſlaine of Hadrian the Emperour, after he had taught his ſonne Iudas, whom the Iewes for his Learning and Holineſſe call Rabbenu Haccados, (that is, our holy Maſter) of which honourable name there had beene another in the time of the Roman Conſuls. Theſe for the moſt part, beſides almoſt infinite others of their hearers, haue left many things written of the explaination of the Law; of which the Talmud was compacted.

Of the vnreaſonable abſurdities and impious blaſphemies of the Talmud, howſoeuer abominable in themſelues, yet let it not be irkeſome to the Reader to ſee ſome mentioned, therein to obſerue the depth of diuine vengeance, which in this blinded Nation wee may heare and feare. For who would thinke it poſſible that any could entertaine in his heart, that which there they haue written of GOD? as, that * before the creation of this world to keepe himſelfe from idleneſſe, hee made and marred many other worlds: that he ſpends three houres euery day in reading the Iewiſh law? that Moſes one day aſcending to Heauen, found him writing accents therein: that GOD euery day maketh deuout prayers: that GOD hath a place a-part, wherein hee afflicteth himſelfe with weeping, for bringing ſo much euill on the Iewes: that euery day hee putteth on their Tephilin and Zizis, and ſo falleth downe and prayeth: that as oft as hee remembreth their miſeries, hee lets fall two teares into the Ocean, and knocks his breſt with both his hands: that the laſt three houres of the day, hee recreateth himſelfe in playing with the Fiſh Leuiathan; which once in his anger he ſlew, and powdred for the feaſt, whereof you ſhall after • heare: that hee created the Element of fire on the Sabbath day: that the RR. one day reaſoning againſt R. Eliezer, becauſe GOD with a voyce from a heauen interpoſed his ſentence for for Eliezer, the other RR. anathematized GOD, who thereat ſmiling, ſaid, My children haue ouer-come me. But I am weary to adde the reſt of their reſtleſſe impieties againſt the Almightie. Neither haue the Creatures eſcaped them: Thus the Talmud telleth, That GOD once whipped Gabriel for a great fault with a whip of fire: that as Adam, before Eue was made, had carnally vſed both Males and Females of other Creatures; So the Rauen [p] which Noe ſent out of the Arke, was iealous of Noah, leſt hee ſhould lye with his Mate; that Iobs ſtorie was fayned: that Dauid ſinned not in his murther and adulterie, and they which thinke hee did ſinne, are Heretikes: that vnnaturall copulation with a mans wife is lawfull; that he is vnworthy the name of a Rabbine, which hateth not his enemie to death; that GOD commanded them by any manner of meanes to ſpoyle the Chriſtians of their goods, and to vſe them as beaſts: yea, they may kill them, and burne their Goſpels, which they entitle, Iniquitie reuealed. Iniquitie reuealed indeed, is the declaration of theſe things: as of their opinion of the * ſoule; if it ſinne in one body, it paſſeth into a ſecond: if there alſo, into third: if it continue ſinning, it is caſt into Hell: the ſoule of Abel paſſed into Seth, and the ſame after into Moſes: the ſoules of the vnlearned ſhall neuer recouer their bodies. Two RR. euery weeke on Friday created two Calues, and then did eate them. Nothing ought to be eaten by euen numbers, but by vneuen, wherewith GOD is pleaſed. Perhaps they had read in Virgil, Numero Deus impare gaudet; but this is common to all Magicians. And what doe I weary you and my ſelfe, anticipating the following diſcourſe, wherein wee ſhall haue further occaſion to relate the like abſurdities? which yet if any deny, they ſay hee denyeth GOD.

n The Talmud blameth Heliſæus for too much ſeueritie to Gehezi, and R. Ioſ ben. Prabeia, for the like toward Ieſus of Nazareth, who had followed this his Maſter to Alexandria, being perſecuted by King Iannai, who returning to Ieruſalem, and commending his Inne; that his Scholler thinking hee had ſpoken of his Hoſteſſe, ſaid, Shee had round eyes. What, Varlet (ſaid the R.) haſt thou ſuch a thought? and preſently commanded him to be proclaimed an Anathema, with the ſound of foure hundred Trumpets, nor would after vpon his repentance admit him, whervpon hee became an Idolater, a Magician, &c. This Iannai was Hircanus, ſonne of Simon, 110. yeeres before our Sauiour, and therefore it was another Ieſus: or elſe this is a malicious deuice of the Talmudiſt, which confuteth it ſelfe with the fooliſh computation of time.

Of the ancient Iewish Authors, and their Kabalists.

AFter the Times of Christ, Philo and Iosephus are famous: and after the Resurrection of Christ, the Iewes were of three sorts; some true beleeuers; others absolute denyers, the third would haue the Christian Religion, and the Iewish Ceremonies to bee conioyned in equall obseruation; against which third sort the first Councell, Act. 15. was summoned.

The moderne Iewes insist principally on the litterall sense of Scripture; the Elder sought out a spirituall and mysticall sense, accounting this a great matter: the literall but small, like to a candle of small value [q], with the light whereof, the other (as a pearle hidden in a darke roome) is found. The Talmudists followed the allegoricall sense; the Cabalists, the Anagogicall.

As concerning this Cabala, in olde times [r] they communicated not that skill to any, but to such as were aged and learned; and therefore nothing thereof, or very little is found written of the Ancient, except of Rabbi Simeon Ben Iohai. But the Doctors of the later Iewes, lest that learning should perish, haue left somewhat thereof in writing, but so obscurely, that few know it, and they which doe, account it a great secret, and hold it in great regard. So saith Elias [s]: in the bookes of the Kabala are contained the secrets of the Law and the Prophets, which man receiued from the mouth of man, vnto our [t] Master Moses (on him be peace) and therefore it is so called, and is diuided into two parts, Speculatiue and Practike. But I am not worthy to explaine this businesse, and by reason of my sinnes haue not learned this wisedome, nor knowne this knowledge of those Saints. The word Cabala signifieth a receiuing, and in that respect may bee supplyed to all their Traditionall receipts; but in vse (which is the Law of speech) it is appropriated to that faculty, which (as [u] Ricius describeth it) by the type of the Mosaicall law insinuateth the secrets of diuine and humane things: and because it is not grounded on reason, nor deliuered by writing, but by the faith of the hearer receiued, it is called Cabala. Or (if you had rather haue it in [x] Reuchlines words) it is a Symbolicall receiuing of diuine Reuelation deliuered, to the wholesome contemplation of GOD, and of the seperated formes; and they which receiue it, are called Cabalici, their Disciples Cabalæi, and they which any way imitate them, Cabalistæ. The Talmudists therefore and the Cabalists are of two faculties, both agreeing in this, that they grow from Tradition, whereunto they giue credite without rendring any reason: herein differing, that the Cabalist, as a super-subtill transcendent, mounteth with all his industrie and intention from this sensible World vnto that other intellectuall: but the [y] grosser Talmudist abideth in this, and if at any time hee considereth of GOD, or the blessed Spirits, yet it is with relation to his workes, and their functions, not in any abstract contemplation, bending his whole study to the explaination of the Law, according to the intent of the Law-giuer, considering what is to bee done, what eschewed; whereas the Cabalists most indeauour themselues to contemplation, leauing the care of publike and priuate affaires to the Talmudists, and reseruing onely to themselues those things which pertaine to the tranquillitie of the minde. As therefore the minde is more excellent then the body, so you must thinke the Cabalist superiour to the Talmudist. For example, In the beginning God created Heauen and Earth, saith Moses: Heauen [z] here, after the Talmudist, is all that part of the World which is aboue the Moone, and all beneath it, Earth: also by Heauen hee vnderstandeth forme, and by Earth, matter; the composition whereof hee effected not by labour of the hand, but by that nine-fold Oracle of his word: for so often is it mentioned, [a] and God said; likewise hee findeth the foure Elements in those words, Darkenesse, Spirit, Waters, drie Land. But the Cabalist frameth to himselfe two Worlds, the Visible and Inuisible; Sensible and Mentall; Materiall and Ideall; Superiour and Inferiour: and accordingly gathereth out of the former words, God created Heauen and Earth, That hee made the highest and lowest things, meaning by the highest the immateriall, by the lowest this materiall; and this is gathered out of the first letter Beth, which in numbring signifieth two, and insinuateth there these two Worlds. Yea, they also finde two Paradises, and two Hells, one in this World, and the other in the other and future, for the body heere, and the soule hereafter. Euen as, saith R. Saadia, the white of the Egge comprehendeth the yolke, so that first intelligible World infoldeth the second: in this are nine Spheres, mooued of the immoueable Empyreon, in that nine orders of Angels, ([b] Ricius reckoneth ten, Hayes, Hakadesch, Offanim, Erelim, Hasmalim, Seraphim, Malachim, Elohim, y The Talmudist also goeth no higher then Moses: the Cabalist beginneth with Adã, for his Tradition: Leo H. d. 3. in Dial. 2. hee playeth the Cabalist also with the Ethnike Theologie, more to the praise of his learning then their Diuinitie.

The Talmudiſts dreame of an earthly Meſſias to free them from this their ſlauerie: the Cabaliſts (if our Cabaliſts haue not ſeene theſe things through ſpectacles) expect a ſpirituall deliuerie from ſinne. Doubtleſſe they deliuer many excellent aſſertions, howſoeuer their collection ſeemeth curious and vncertaine, gathering the ſame on grounds without ground, beyond all Senſe, Reaſon, Scripture, and therefore often leauened with other ſuperfine abſurdities. Buxtorfius in his abbreuiat. Heb. ſaith, that by his abbreuiation גזת they vſe to ſignifie the three parts of the Art Cabalaſtica, Gematria, Notarkon, Temurah. Gematria is that part which by like numbers contained in the letters of diuers words, explaineth one by the other, as Tzemach, Zach. 3.8. hath in the numerall letters 138. and ſo many are in Menachem, a name which they giue to the Meſſias, and therefore by Tremach, they there vnderſtand the Meſſias. So in Gen. 49.10. Shilo ſhall come, containe 358. and ſo doth Meſſiah, which is therefore there meant; and many like examples. Notaricon, is when euery letter in one word ſhall note ſo many other words, and make vp a ſentence. Thus the Maccabees are ſo called of theſe foure letters, which they inſcribed in their banners. m. c. b. i. the firſt letters of ſo many words, Exo. 15.11. Who is like thee amongſt the gods, O Lord? So in Adams name they finde (as the cauſe thereof) words beginning with the ſame letters, ſignifying aſhes, bloud, gall, whence are noted his corruption, loſſe and calamitie: as the Greekes in the ſame name find the the Eaſt, Weſt, North and South, A, ἀνατολή D, δύσις A, ἄρκτος M, μεσημβρία. Temurah, is when one or two words are changed into one or more other by tranſpoſition of letters, or inuerſion of qualitie. So out of the Hebrew words, Pſal. 21.2. The King ſhall reioyce in thy ſtrength, O Lord; they expound the King Meſſias; for this is gathered by tranſpoſition of the letters. So Chrerem, Anathema, is רחם mercy, and רמח, which in the numerall letters hath 248. the iuſt number (in their anatomie) of the members of mans bodie. The gloſſe is, he which is anathematized, if hee repent, ſhall haue for חרם, רחם, that is, mercy; if not, it pierceth his 248. members, and deſtroyes the whole man. Hence came our Anagrammatiſmes and Chronogrammatiſmes, wherein ſome doe ſometimes learnedly triflle, and ſpend their wits fooliſhly. This of all their Caball is true, that it may better ſerue to conuince the Iewes with teſtimonie of their owne, then for an inſtruction to vs, who cannot enforce arguments out of Symbolicall ſenſes. If any be in loue with theſe myſteries, let him reſort to Paulus Ricius his Theoremes, to Iohn Reuchlin, to Iohannes Picus and his Commenter Archangelus, to Abrahams ſuppoſed Booke of the creation, [c] to R. Ioſeph Caſtilienſis his Porta lucis, which Ricius hath alſo tranſlated and epitomized, to Galatinus and others. [d] Commendable is the labour of ſome of theſe, and of many [e] others both conuerted Iewes, which haue ſought to reclaime their peruerſe brethren; and of our owne, as Mornæus, Gregentius, Pomeranus, out of whom, they which pleaſe, may borrow arguments to conuince the Iewiſh incredulitie, and ſtubborneneſſe, and to confound them by their owne teſtimonies, both from theſe elder Writers aboue mentioned, and alſo from the later. So great is the Truth, and mightily it preuaileth, that it extorteth not onely her owne weapons, vſurped and ſtollen by her enemies: but their owne alſo, wherewith they come armed againſt the Truth, and retorteth them on themſelues; as Dauid ſerued the Philiſtims: [f] Who cut off Goliahs head, with Goliahs ſword: as [g] Benaiah, (one of his Worthies) ſlew an Ægyptian, a man of great ſtature fiue cubits long, and in the Ægyptians hand was a ſpeare, like a Weauers beame; and hee went downe to him with a ſtaffe, and plucked the ſpeare out of the Ægyptians hand, and ſlew him with his owne ſpeare. Thus did [h] Dioxippus the Champion (if forrainers delight any) deale with Horratus the Macedonian in a ſet combate; and thus hath our [i] Worthie and Champion come often into the field againſt the Popiſh Giants, armed inwardly with Truth, outwardly with Arguments, wreſted (without wreſting) from his enemies. Hee, in his Latine, and Engliſh workes, hath obſerued the two-fold rule of policie: Diuide and Rule, againſt the Papiſts: Vnite, and Rule, for the Proteſtants, which Breerely would haue brought into the like bryers. But thoſe his troupes are ſhewed not to bee Men, but Apes, like thoſe that held Alexanders Armie in ſuſpence: and like Semiramis Elephants, which were but ſtuffed Oxe-hides, kill-cow-frayes. But Macte virtute eſto (worthy Deane.) Euenſo goe on ſtill, and fight the Lords battels: that thy Sparta (ſo happily vndertaken) ſtill adorne, and ſhew the confuſion of Babels bablers: Diuide that Societie, which now in their laſt age haue hiſſed with their forked venemous Tongues; feared and enuyed at home for their arrogance; no leſſe then hated abroad for their hereſies and treaſons

But how hath that fatall name of Babel confounded mee? Truely, the likeneſſe of theſe Traditionaries, Cabaliſts, muddie Talmudiſts, and Legendaries (as will appeare to an eaſie Obſeruer and Comparer of this enſuing Hiſtorie to their practice) which haue beene muſtered from the Eaſterne and Weſterne [m] Babel, and the like manner of their confuſion, hath almoſt made mee forget the Hiſtorie and my ſelfe, but neuer a whit the Truth. And this will be further manifeſted in the reſt of this Booke, where their Superſtitious Deuotion is related.

m Both Bellar. and Baronius approue, and proue Rome to be Babylon.

As for thoſe Teſtimonies of the Iewes againſt themſelues, beſides the Scriptures (which, in regard of the true ſenſe, the veile ouer their hearts will not ſuffer them to reade, but it is a ſealed Booke vnto them and they left the riches thereof vnto vnto vs, as the [n] Aramites left their Tents, with their Horſes and Treaſure, to the pined Iſraelites.) Their other Authours are ſo plaine and plentifull in the Myſteries of our Religion, as I know not whether it cauſe greater pleaſure to reade their Writings, or aſtoniſhment and wonder at the Nation; ſo ſtricken with madneſſe, and with blindneſſe, and with aſtoniſhment of heart, ſince they haue ſhut their eyes againſt the Sunne of Righteouſneſſe: on whom that threatned plague is come, [o] Thou ſhalt groape at Noone-dayes, as the Blind doth groape in darkneſſe. For out of their Talmud-Authors is plainly deliuered the myſtery of the Trinitie, the Incarnation of the Sonne of GOD, his two Natures, his Birth of a Virgin, his ſpirituall Kingdome, the time of his Comming, the truth of his Propheſies, and power of his Miracles; the Redemption of Mankind by his Death, his Crucifying, Deſcent, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion: and that their Nation was to be reiected, the old Law to ceaſe, New to ſucceed, &c. All which as they agree vnto that ſweet and bleſſed Name and Perſon of Ieſus (which name, and that of Emanuel, is alſo found in their Writings) ſo doe they argue the ſeueritie of GODS Iudgements, when men will not beleeue the Truth, that by the efficacie of errour, they ſhall haue eyes, and ſee not, eares, and heare not (neither ours nor their owne) as Paul, and CHRIST himſelfe often told them. But thoſe particulars, as rather appertayning to Diſputation, then Hiſtorie, (and therefore too much impertinent to our purpoſe) the deſirous Readers may at large find in Morney and Galatinus, not to mention [p] others.

The witneſſe of Ioſephus, being one, whoſe name we often vſe in this Hiſtorie, may iuſtly challenge me, if I ſhould omit him, eſpecially ſeeing hee liued in the very dayes of the Apoſtles, who, as he witneſſeth of Iohn Baptiſt, and of many other things mentioned in the Goſpell, fully agreeing therewith: ſo concerning our Lord and Sauiour, hath this Teſtimonie. [q] In the time of Tiberius, there was one Ieſus a wiſe Man (if at leaſt-wiſe he was to be called a man) who was a worker of great Miracles, and a Teacher of ſuch as loue the Truth and had many followers, as well of Iewes as of Gentiles. This was Chriſt. Neuertheleſſe, being accuſed vnto Pilate, by the chiefe of the Iewes, hee was crucified. But yet for all that, thoſe which had loued Him from the beginning, ceaſed not to continue ſtill. For hee ſhewed himſelfe aliue vnto them three dayes after his Death, as the Prophets had foretold of him, both this and diuers other things: And euen vnto this day doe thoſe continue ſtill, which after his name are called Chriſtians. Thus much Ioſephus. Thus did the Truth force him to confeſſe, whoſe Hiſtorie of the deſtruction of his Nation, what is it but as a Commentary on Ieſus Propheſie thereof, and their fearefull Imprecation, [r] His bloud be vpon vs and our children, ſhewing that the wrath of God was come vpon them to the vtmoſt? From Mount Oliuet, where Ieſus was firſt apprehended, and where laſt thoſe bleſſed feet touched the Earth, (as if there Mercie had left a print of Iuſtice) was Ieruſalem beſieged, and at their Feaſt of Paſſeouer (when they had crucified Chriſt) they were cooped vp, as it were, aſſembled by Diuine Iuſtice from all quarters to deſtruction, together with that their Citie, where they had ſlaine the Lord. withall so wicked is their blasphemie. Forsooth, in Salomons Temple there was [f] (say they) a certayne stone of very rare vertue, wherein Salomon by his singular Wisedome had engrauen the very true Name of GOD, which it was lawfull for euery man to reade, but not to conne by heart; nor to write out. And at the Temple doore were two Lyons tyed at two Chaines, which rored terribly, that the feare thereof made him to forget the name that had committed the same to memorie, and him to burst asunder in the middest, that had put it in writing. But IESVS the Sonne of Mary; say they, regarding neither the Curse annexed to the Prohibition, nor the roaring of the Lyons, writ it out in a Bill, and went his way with it ioyfully. And lest he might be taken with the thing about him, hee had a little opened the skinne of his legge, and put it in there, and afterwards wrought his miracles by the vertue of that name. I should be almost as absurd as they, if I should dispute against it, seeing in this, and most of their brain-sicke Dreames, the very recitation is sufficient refutation.

[f] Vitt. de Carben. lib. 1. c. 13. The Iewes haue a horrible and blasphemous curse directed against our blessed Sauiour: whom they will not call by his name fully pronounced, but abbreuiated with Relation to the Curse. It cannot be denyed, that there haue beene many Rabbines very Learned, as R. Moses Ægyptius, Abben Tibbon, which translated Euclide and other Authours out of Arabicke into Hebrew, and some parts also of Aristotle translated into Hebrew, are accounted his doing, many others of them writ in Philosophie likewise: and for Physicke, who haue beene more famous? But he which will haue notice of the RR. and their workes, let him reade Buxdorfius his Bibliotheca Rabbinica, printed 1613. yet euen the best of them haue much Chaffe, which needs much fanning from the Corne. Many wise Sentences and Prouerbs haue beene by [t] Drusius and others gathered out of some of their workes which would haue beautified this Discourse; as these for a taste. Vowes are the hedge or wall of defence to holinesse; Tithes are the same to Riches: he which increaseth his flesh, encreaseth Wormes, Who is wise? he which learneth of euery one: Who is valiant? hee which brideleth his affections: Who is rich? he which is content with his portion: If I care not for my selfe, who shall care for me? And if I, what am I? and if not now, when? The day is short, and the worke much, and the Labourers slow, and the wages great; and the Housholder calleth vpon vs. But me thinkes you call vpon me to proceed. But of these and such like Sayings, there is a whole Treatise called Pirke Auoth, which is as it were their Medulla Patrum, or Flores Doctorum, gathered by R. Nathan Babylonius, set forth by Fagius, and since by Drusius: yet hauing spoken thus much of their Learned men, I thinke it would to some louers of Learning not be vnsauourie, to adde somewhat of their Vniuersities, degrees of Schooles and the like, in the next Section.

§. III.

Of the Rabbines, the Rites of their Creation, the Iewish Vniuersities, and Students.

AMongst the Iewes all these Titles were of one Root, Rab, Rabrab, Rabba, Rabbi, Rabban, Rabbana, Rabbanan, Ribbi, Ribbun, Ribbon, Ribbona, Ribbuni, Rabbuni, Rabboni, some of which are more vsuall then others, but all of them in generall signification betoken either a Prince or Lord, or a Master, and Doctor. Of the former signification are few Examples in Scripture, in their Thargumim, many; and those commonly with some word annexed, signifying the thing or mayne subiect: of the later the New Testament is full. The Root, from whence these Titles spring, is Rabab, or Rab, which signifieth to multiply: for a Prince multiplyeth his power, a Doctor his Learning, and one such is as many: according to the moderne vse which speaketh to great men, and they of themselues in plurall [u] Pronounes. Of Rab is Rabbim and Rabboth in the plurall number; that vsed for any multitude in other things, this appropriated to signifie Rabbins. Some also of those Titles are Hebrew, some Chaldee or Syriake; some indifferently signifie a Lord or Master, some more especially the one or the other; also in regard of place, one of Babylon was called Rabbi, of Israel Ribbi, of those two famous Vniuersities in Babylonia and Iudæa. In regard of excellence, one of lowest esteeme was stiled Rab; of higher, Rabbi or Ribbi; of of highest, Rabbenu, Rabban and Rabbanan. Yet doe not these rules alway hold: for they haue much altercation amongst themselues, why some are named without any Title, as Hillel, Shamai, and diuers others; and why some more eminent are called Rab or Rabbi, as Rabbi Eliezer, Rabbi Iuda Hakkadosh. R. Hakiba, Rab Asse, Authour of the Gemara, Rab Haai, Rab Baruch; and why the Title of Rabban is appropriated to some few, Rabban Gamaliel, R. Symeon, &c. This is affirmed for currant, that he which hath Disciples, may may bee called Rab or Rabbi; that the younger are not so called by the elder; that they which want Imposition of hands, may not be so called; that the Rulers amongst the people called Nesijm, were in manner onely called Rabban; and for Rabbenu, that is, our Master, it was ascribed to very few, as to Moses first, and after to Hakkadosh, Hillel, Gamaliel, &c. Those Rabbans were only seuen, all of the posterity of Hillel, as Buxtorfius witnesseth: and these were so called, rather because they were Princes or Lords, then Doctors. Buxtorf. de Abbreu. hebreor. dict. רב.

Other Titles besides these were also giuen them, as Chacham, that is, wise, so Hierom. The Doctors of the Iewes are called σοφοὶ; from which Greeke word perhaps came that other Title giuen them, Sopher: so that which Esay hath Sopher, the Apostle interpreteth ποῦ ὁ σοφὸς; They were also called by other Doctorly Titles, as Mascilim, Malphan and Malphana, Moreh (whence commeth the Moderne Title Morenu, that is, our Masters, attributed to their Arch-rabbines) Mar, Abba and Abbothenu, Zekkenim, that is, our Fathers old men, and the like. Es. 33.18. 1. Cor. 1.20.

The RR. were of two sorts: one numbred by a succession of time, another, named of their studies and employments. Of the first kind were the Thanæi, Amoræi, Seboræi, Geonim, Marbithe Thoraz, Chechame Thalmudim. Of the other, the Masorites, Cabbalists, Thalmudists, Medakdekim, Methargemim, and others. For the former ranke, thana signifies to learne, whence those Masters, which followed the times of the last Prophets till the Reigne of Commodus, were called Thanaim. Of these are numbred twelue Generations. R. Abraham Dauidicus reckoneth from Zorobabel to the destruction of the Temple ten, and fiue after. These Thanæi are sometimes reckoned by couples, of which before the destruction of the Temple, one was called Nasi [x] or Prince, the other Ab beth Din, the Father of the Councell: of these Colleagues or paires they reckon fiue, the last of which was Hillel Nasi, and Schamai Ab beth Din. Hillel had thousands of Disciples, but eightie principall, the chiefe of which was Ionathan, Author of the Chaldee Paraphrase. He and his House or Sect held many peculiar Opinions, to which Shamai and his House or Schoole opposed themselues, and maintayned the contrarie. To these succeeded the Amoraim, which were so named, because hain omerim memoroth, They vttered wise Sentences. Of these they account seuen Generations. These continued till about fiue hundred yeeres after Christ. The Seboræi succeeded: so called of Sabar, that is, to bee of opinion: for they made not Canons and Constitutions as the former, but onely shewed their Opinions. Of them were fiue Generations, which ended about A. D. 680. and then followed the Geonim. The word gaon signifieth both proud and magnificent. Of these they number eight Generations, continuing till Anno Dom. 1038. Some of them being of Europe, in France, Germanie, and especially in Spaine, their Easterne Academies then decaying. Of their Chachime Thalmidim afterwards.

The other ranke or classis of RR. hath first the Masorites, of Masor to deliuer, tradere, so called, in respect of their Traditionall Law in a generall sense, and more especially, of their Tradition of reading the Bible, as the Distinctions, Accents and Prickes obserued, prescribe, and that other tradition of Marginall Notes concerning the diuers Readings of the Text. They which committed this Masoreth [y] to writing, beeing before deliuered by word of mouth only, were called Masorites. These Masorites, by Caninius, Genebrard, Galatinus, Bellarmine, and (whom in this part of our Discourse we principally follow) Serarius, that I speake not of Scaliger, Martinius and others, are acknowledged Authors of the Prickes and Accents as they are now in vse (howsoeuer there were some other vsed before) which some ascribe to Ezra, and some to Moses: So doth Sohar Chadasch printed at Cracouia, 1603. which sayth, the Points were deliuered by the secret of the Law in Sinai: And without them, words are as women without clothes, may not come abroad, there is no light in them, &c. These Masorites are holden to haue liued after the Talmud was finished (and therefore to be of the Seboræi Rabbines) and that at Tiberias, where they had many Synagogues and Libraries, sometimes also if Zacuths testimony be true) the Sanhedrin it selfe. Of the Kabbala, and the Kabbalist called Kabbelan and Mekubbal you haue heard a little before: and likewise of the Thalmud and Thalmudist.

Sup. §. preced.

The Medakdekim are the Grammarians, as Dikduk signifies Grammar. R. Iuda is reported to be the first Hammedakdek or Grammarian, before whom was no Dikduk of the holy Tongue: after him R. Ionah, and after him R. Saadias Haggaon: after whom innumerable others, Ioseph, Moses, and Dauid, all Kimchi's, Elias, &c. That which is said of R. Iuda, is to be conceiued of the moderne Prickes and Accents: for before his time R. Ioseph Cæcus, the Amoræi, the Scribes, and Moses himselfe were therein expert.

Thargum signifies an Interpretation, and thence Thurgemana and Mechurgeman an Interpreter, as Dargoman with the Arabs and Turkes at this day. And as the bodie of Scripture was diuided into three parts, the Pentateuch, Hagiographa and Prophets, so haue they they three Thargums, of Onkelos, Ionathas and R. Ioſeph the blind, which liued about Anno Dom. 400. And as the Thalmud, ſo the Thargum is of two Dialects, the Babylonian and of Ieruſalem; of this the Authour is vnknowne: the Babylonian was written, the Pentateuch by Onkelos, the Prophets by Ionathan, the Hagiographa by R. Ioſeph Cæcus. As for the Iewiſh Fables of a Voyce to Ionathan, and of the conſuming with fire from Heauen, any flye that ſhould diſturbe him in his writing, his ſuper-excellence among the moſt excellently learned Schollers of Hillel, &c, and of their many other ſuppoſed Thargums, with other Rabbinicall workes, teſtifying truly of Chriſt, collected and related by Galatinus, and others, I forbeare further recitall. I might heere amongſt their Doctorall Titles reckon the Archiperecitæ mentioned by Iuſtinian; [z] a ſtile giuen to ſuch as were skilfull, either in times, or rather in the Thalmud, as chiefe Maſters and Archrabbines. Of their Sanhedrin is alreadie ſpoken. The name is (if wee receiue Serarius) borrowed of the Greekes, with whom συνέδριοι ſignifies Senators. Theſe may well be reckoned amongſt their learned men. Bahal Midraſch is the Author of a Commentary, or a Preacher, as Darſan alſo. But I haue too long examined Titles.

If in the next place we obſerue the power of the Rabbines, they were had in great reuerence and reſpect: they ſate in loftie and ſtately ſeates, had power to create others Maſters and Doctors, to weare Rings and Hoods, and enioyed other Priuiledges, differing according to the times, places, and differing Eſtates of the Iewes vnder diuers Lords. For as we haue obſerued in this Countrey of England, ſo in other Countries their power was leſſe or more after the will of their Lord: in Babylonia, Egypt, and Spaine ſomewhat, in ſome places nothing. In Iuſtinians time they challenged power of Excommunication, which the Emperour forbad vnder paine of bodily puniſhments, and loſſe of all their goods. The like Eccleſiaſticall cenſure was lately ſought by the Iewes of Frankford, examined by the Emperours Commiſſioners at Mentz.

Now for the Rites of creating the R. in this Doctorall or Rabbinicall Degree. Firſt, there was ſome tryall of his worth. So Lampridius teſtifieth of the Emperour Alexander, that hee nominated thoſe which were to be ſent to gouerne the Prouinces, and to will ſuch as could ſay ought againſt them, to make good proofe thereof, or elſe as Slanderers to loſe their heads, alleaging that if the Iewes and Chriſtians made ſuch tryals of the Prieſts, it was neceſſary in theſe to whom the liues and goods of men were to bee committed. By the Iewiſh Prieſts wee vnderſtand the RR. as the chiefe of them at Wormes is by the vulgar called Juden Biſchoff, receiuing ſome Iuriſdiction vnder the Biſhop. Next after this tryall followed Impoſition of hands, called by them Semicah, which was done by ſome Rabbine whom they ſtiled Somech: neither before this Impoſition might any rightly be termed Rab, Rabbi, Rabban or Gaon. This Rite is ancient, Moſes hauing vſed it to Ioſhua, and the Apoſtles and Chriſtian Biſhops ſtill obſeruing. He was alſo placed in a Chaire which the Hebrewes call Ciſſe, whence come thoſe Phraſes, he ſate in the ſeat of ſuch or ſuch a Rabbine: as of R. Ioſe, [a] the hand being impoſed, he was there (in Babylon) made Gaon, and placed in the Throne Rab Haai. To this ſeemes to allude the ſitting in Moſes Chaire. A fourth Rite was, a ſet forme of words, anciently theſe, Ent ſomech otheca: Thihieh Samuch: that is, I lay hand on thee, be thou bee on whom hand is laid: or, I make thee Maſter, bee thou a Maſter. R. Iuda (whom Adrian the Emperour ſlue) added a fuller forme of words. This Impoſition was publikely done in their Schooles where their Chaire was. This Impoſition of hands (ſome conceiue) might not be done extra terram, but onely in the Land of Iſrael: which how ſoeuer it bee true or falſe, this is certayne that now in their Rabbinicall Creations it is omitted, as the chiefe RR. of Frankford, in their Epiſtle to other Iewes complaine: and therefore they ordayne, tha none in Germany bee eſteemed a Morenu (our Maſter) without the Approbation of their Archrabbines, which keepe an Academie in Germany. None ſhall bee Chaber, which hath receiued Impoſition of Hands out of Germany. None Bachur till the ſecond Yeere after his Marriage, eſpecially if hee dwell in a place where is not an Academie, that tryall may bee had of his Life and Learning. Theſe are three Degrees, Morenu, as a Doctor, Chaber, as a Licentiate, Bachur as a Bachellour [b] in the Chriſtian Vniuerſities. Of the Morenu there is difference, one beeing chiefe, the reſt vnder him; and theſe are made of the RR. and if a Rabbine will bee a Morenu, he muſt be examined vſually of three Morenu: But to become a Rabbine, needs no Examination, their Maſters teſtimonie beeing ſufficient, who is a Morenu, or elſe one choſen by the Congregation to this purpoſe: for one ſimple R. cannot make another. The place is in the Synagogue, the day commonly the Sabbath: at which time and place the Morenu ſtanding before the Arke, or place where the Law is kept, ſpeaking to the Aſſembly, ſaith, that ſuch and ſuch haue now ſpent many yeeres profitably in ſtudie of the Law, and is thought worthy of the honour of a Rabbine or a Morenu: And then cals the partie foorth by

And if he be to trauell into any place farre distant, he carryeth the testimoniall of this Doctor of the Chaire, or Father of the Act, which conferred his degree vpon him. A Chaber is the Colleague or Companion of a Rabbine, but inferiour to him. For as (in Vniuersities there are Regents and Non-Regents, so a Rabbenu or Morenu, as one which actually teacheth, and as it were a Regent) is more then a Rab or Rabbi. Scaliger saith that he was not presently after this his Commencement or Proceeding intituled Master, but Chaber, which had also his Relatiue annexed, as R. Ismael Chaber of R. Eleazar: which was the same with γνώριμος amongst the Greekes, as Speusippus, γνωριμος Platonis: and whiles hee was so called, he neuer sate whiles his Master sate, but was prostrate on the pauement. And when they were both Masters, the younger stood whiles the elder sate and taught, as in the Primitiue Church, the younger Bishop called the Elder Papa. Serarius and he cannot agree about these points. Elias sayth, that the Doctorall Title of Gaon was giuen them for their perfection in the Talmud, for Gaon signifieth sixtie. And so many parts are there of the Misna. These Wisemen in Spaine added Aben to their Titles, as R. Abraham Aben Ezra; his Fathers name was Meir, but Aben the name of the Family. As Paul and Aquila sometimes, so many of those Iewish Masters exercised some Handicraft to sustayne themselues without trouble of others. So was R. Iose a Dresser of Leather, Nahum and Meir Scriueners, Iochanan a Shoomaker, and R. Iuda a Baker.

Next vnto the Masters, it is meet to say somewhat of the Schollers, Thalmidim. If hee were a Boy, he was called Ianik, and Katon (rather for his little Learning then age or stature) a forward Scholler was named Bechir and Bachur, in which time Scaliger affirmes (Serarius denies) that he was called by his Fathers name, his owne not added, as Ben Bethira before, after Imposition R. Iosua ben Bethira. Thalmid chabar is spoken of: Beniamin often mentions in his Iournall, the Disciples of the wise Thalmidim charam: which some thinke to be a name attributed to themselues in modestie, as the name σοφὸς in Greeke turned to Philosophi: but generally all Students are called the Sonnes of the Wise, as sometimes the Sonnes of the Prophets. In Pirke Auoth is this speech of Bagbag: a Boy of fiue yeeres to Mikra, or the Text of Scripture; at ten yeeres to Misna; at thirteene yeeres to the Precepts; at fifteene to the Thalmud or Gemara: As Paul sayth, He was brought vp at the feet of Gamaliel: so it was a Rule in their Pirke Auoth, Teipsum puluerisa in pedum illorum puluere, that the Student should all to bedust himselfe in the dust of his Masters feete, and with assidious diligence attend his Sayings, drinking his words with thirst. That person of whom hee hath learned but one Chapter, or Lesson, or Verse, or word, is to be had in honour. The Student is to be obsequious and seruiceable to his Master. They heard with great silence, sitting or else prostrate on the floore or pauement at the feete of the Doctor: and if at any time they stood, it was a good distance from him, for reuerence sake: yea, the Chaber durst scarce (if scarce) sit while the Rabbine sate. The Disciple (say they) must arise to his Master as farre as he can see him; and if hee doe not stand vp to him, hee is wicked, shortens his life, and forgetteth the Thalmud. They might not reprehend their Masters, nor depart from their Assertions: and when they recited any thing which they had learned of them, they did it in their Masters name, euery way seeking to winne them credit: yea, they called him an Epicure which did sit before his Master, or citing him, did it by his bare name without some honourable Title annexed, as my Lord, or Masters, &c. excluding such out of the World to come. To conclude, this sentence of R. Eleazar ben Shamua, in their Pirke Auoth briefly expresseth these mutuall duties: Let the credit of thy Disciple bee as deare vnto thee as thine owne; and let the honour of thy companion (Chaber) bee as the feare of thy Master, and the feare of thy Master or Rabbin, as the feare of God.

Acts 22. 3.

As for the Iewish [c] Academies, they call them Mekom thorah, the place of the Law, and the holy Congregation of them which are occupied in the Law, and vsually Ieschibah and Methibata of sitting, for there was the Rabbinicall Chaire. It seemes, all the fortie eight Cities of the Leuites were such: and all the Schooles of the Prophets, where the Sonnes, or Scholers of the Prophets abode, as in the dayes of Samuel, Elias, &c. is mentioned. Ierusalem could not but be most eminent. And after the Babylonian Captiuitie, they had two Vniuersities famous, one Nehardea in Babylonia vpon Euphrates, by Iosephus called Nearda, the other Ierusalem, which beeing destroyed with the Citie, it was called the Vniuersitie of Israel, of which the first Rector was R. Iochanan, the second Rabban Gamaliel, the third R. Akiba: and when Adrian had forbidden all Iewes to enter the Land, it is like it was subuerted, yet after renewed, and the Rector thereof R. Iochanan the Author of the Ierosolymitan Thalmud, who dyed, Anno Dom. 279. In meane while two other Vniuersities were famous in Babylonia, one at Sura, and the other at Pombaditha: Betwixt which in processe of of time grew great contentions, factions and remouings to Kamiſin fiue dayes Iourney Eaſtward, and to Neres. That of Sura ſomewhat eclipſed that of Nehardeha, becauſe there for the moſt part reſided the Chiefe of the Iewiſh Captiues. Theſe decayed, and almoſt vaniſhed about Anno Dom. 668. which it ſeemes happened by the fatall alteration of the World in that new Saracenicall Deluge, although many Ages after, the Iewes held vp their head higheſt in theſe parts, as appeares by Beniamins Head of the Captiuitie, reſident in Bagdat before mentioned. But the Iewes now diſperſed, haue through the World erected in places of their abode, ſuch Academies as they could, [d] as ye haue ſeene in Beniamins Relations alreadie; and Rabad mentions ſome in Spaine and Afrike, and ſome yet remayne at Conſtantinople, Cairo, Cracouia in Poland, Prage in Bohemia: and lately the Synagogue of Frankford, which cals it ſelfe the Mother of Iſrael in Germany, conſtituted fiue, viz. Frankfort, Wormes, Fridberg, Fulda, Kinsbirg. Yet [e] theſe three are accounted the ancienteſt Synagogues in Germany, Spire, Wormes, Mentz; and therefore their Matrimoniall Contracts are ſigned with theſe three Letters S. W. M. if they write ſhort, to ſhew that it is according to the ancient cuſtome and conſtitution of Spire, Wormes and Mentz. The Iewes had Schooles whereſoeuer were any ſtore of them, but ten (ſaith Rambam) was a number fit to haue a Synagogue. They call their Schoole beth Midraſch, the houſe of exerciſe, Gymnaſium; the Synagogue Beth ceneſeth, the Congregation houſe. Sometimes theſe are diſtinguiſhed (for in the Synagogue they muſt pray for him that neeſeth, in the Schoole they might not) ſometimes the ſame; and their Synagogues in Germany are now called Schooles. Of theſe are reported foure hundred eightie one in Ieruſalem before the deſtruction. The Ruler thereof was called Archiſynagogus.

As they vſe to giue glorious Titles one to another, according to their ſupercilious Conceits of themſelues, as the glorie of thy Excellence, for the ſecond perſon, Thou, or the glorie of their Excellence, for they, ſo eſpecially their RR. Names are not mentioned without ſmokie fumes of arrogance, as the glorie of our Maſter Doctor, &c. For an inſtance take theſe Titles giuen to the Author of the Talmudicall Lexicon Aruch in the Title thereof. Illuſtris Dominus R. Nathan Iuſtus, benedictæ memoriæ, filius honorificentiſſimi & ſanctiſſimi Doctoris & Rabbini noſtri Iechielis fauſtæ memoriæ, filij honorificētiſſimi magnificentiſſimi & ſanctiſſimi Doctoris & Rabbini noſtri Abrahami fauſtæ memoriæ. So vaſtly ambitious are their hearts, ſo wide gaping mouths in their ſeſquipedalia & decempedalia verba haue theſe Thraſonical Pyrgopolyniceticall Braggadochio's after ſo long captiuitie, and ſo extreme ſeruitude and baſeneſſe: that it may appeare how farre God hath forſaken them, ſo farre from humilitie in this humiliation, that they ſwell euery day into greater vanitie, as the Sunne then greateſt when loweſt, and bladders then biggeſt, when they haue nothing but wind to fill them. Euen their glorious Titles ſo much inſiſted on in this Diſcourſe, then ſeeme to haue had beginning, or at leaſt to be in greateſt vſe, when they were neere the end and Sun-ſet of their glorie, and ſince haue encreaſed to this rabble of Rabbinicall ſtiles here deliuered; and that which in theſe dayes is of greateſt reckoning, the Title Morenu, our Doctor, hath beene hatched (ſaith Buxtorfius) in Germany within theſe two hundred yeeres, and thence paſſed into Italy, in imitation of our Academicall degree of Doctors (ſay ſome) or elſe (as others) it was ordayned to be a ſpeciall Title of honour, with a kind of Iuriſdiction ouer other RR. to preuent their lauiſh looſeneſſe in granting Bils of Diuorce, that this power ſhould bee appropriated to the Morenu. The firſt which enioyed this Title in this proper ſenſe (for in a common it was common before, as in Rambams Moreh Nebuchim appeares) were Maharaſch, and his Scholer Maharil who dyed Anno Dom. 1427.

§. IIII.

Of the Scriptures and their Interpretations.

BEfore we ſhake hands with the Learned Writers of the Iewes, it is not vnmeete in my opinion, heere to meete with ſome queſtion which ſome haue mooued concerning them, and their dealing in and with the Scriptures. For ſince that the Councell of Trent hath decreed, in the yeere 1546. both the diuine authoritie of Scriptures Canonicall, to the Apocrypha-bookes, which the Iewes receiue not, nor euer did; and hath made the vulgar Tranſlation [f] Authenticall in publike Lectures, Diſputations, Preachings and Expoſitions, that none, vnder any pretence whatſoeuer, ſhall preſume to reiect it: it is wonder to ſee how eagerly (that I ſay not impudently) diuers of them haue ſought to ſlander the originall Text: and haue blamed, as Authors thereof, in the New Teſtament, Heretikes; and in the Old, Iewes; couering their malice to vs with pretence of the malice of Heretikes and Iewes, and forgetting the true Rule, That it is a shame to belie the Diuell. Thus haue [a] Canus and Pintus, and Gregorius de Valentia, Sotroboscus, and others, traduced the Iewes in this behalfe; themselues refuted by their owne (which yet by consequent ouerthrow that former Decree) Sixtus Senensis, Ribera, Cardiuall Bellarmine himselfe, Andradius, Andreas, Masius, Arias Montanus, Isaac Leuita, &c. Besides, of ours many, and especially our owne learned Countrimen, Whitaker, Reynolds, Morton, &c.

[b] Bellarmine hath both taught vs the vanitie of their opinion, that hold, That the Scriptures were all lost in the Babylonian Captiuitie, and were by Ezra renewed miraculously (who is rather [i] commended for his industrie in interpreting and obseruing them, and for ordering and compacting them in one Volume, then for such needlesse reuelation, to finde that which was neuer lost: an Author rather, as [k] Hierome hath obserued, of the present Hebrew Letters, then of their ancient Scriptures) and hath also prooued the absurditie of their conceit, that imagine the Hebrew Fountaines corrupted. First, by [l] the Argument of Origen and Hierome, That such corruption must haue beene either before or after Christ: if that; Christ would haue reproued and not commended the Scriptures to their search: if this; how commeth it, that the Testimonies, cited by him and his Apostles, are found now in Moses and the Prophets, as they were then cited? Secondly, out of Augustine, That it is not likely they would put out both their eyes (in depriuing their Scriptures of truth) that they might put out one of ours: nor was it possible that such a generall conspiracie could be made. Thirdly, from their more then reuerent estimation of their Scriptures, for which they would die, if it were possible, an hundreth deaths, and euen still (as Isaac [m] answereth B. Lindan his Scholler) they proclaime a Fast to expiate, if by some accident that Booke but falls to the ground. Fourthly, some places in the Hebrew are more strong against the Iewes then our Translations are, and the Prophesies, which make most against them, remaine there vncorrupted. And lastly, the prouidence of GOD would neuer herein faile his Church, but hath left them, with their bookes, to bee disperssed through the world, to beare witnesse to that Truth which they hate and persecute.

[b] Bellar. de verb. Dei lib. cap. 1.

[m] Isaac Leuita def heb. ver. in Epist. ded.

These are Bellarmines Arguments; which, because they are the Truth, are also ours: and therefore we haue beene bold with the Reader to insert them. Leuita [n] addes, that the Hebrew Texts concerning Christ, are more cleere and perspicuous then in any translation whatsoeuer: who affirmes also of himselfe, that reading the fiftie third Chapter of Esaias 1000. times (by which he was conuerted to the Christian Faith) and comparing it diligently with many translations, he found a hundred times more, touching the mysterie of Christ, in that, then in these. Many Prophesies are in the Hebrew, which make for the Christians, and yet in the 70. are omitted. The Iewes hold it a crime inexpiable to alter any thing therein, which if any (say they) should doe but in one word of ignorance, or malice, it would bring the whole world in danger of perishing. They will not lay their Bible but in a pure place, nor touch it but with pure hands, and are not religious alone, but superstitious also in respect thereto. As for that Emendation or Correction of the Scribes, which Galatinus mentioneth, wherein they haue corrupted the Text, hee proueth it to bee a late dreame of the Talmud, and answereth the Arguments of his fellowes, herein not so Catholike as himselfe.

Now although this may seeme more then enough to conuince that folly, yet it shall not bee impertinent to adde out of Arias Montanus somewhat touching the same, because it openeth another mysterie touching the Hebrew Learning, and the Masoreth. [o] When the Iewes (saith he) returned into their Country after the Captiuitie threescore and ten yeeres in Babylon, it befell them partly by occasion of their long troubles, which did distract their mindes, partly by corruption of their Natiue Tongue, which was growne out of kinde, first into the Chaldee, and afterward into the Syriacke, that they neither knew nor pronounced so well the words of the Scripture, written (as the manner was) without vowels. Whereby it came to passe, that in the writing of them there crept in some fault, either through iniurie of the Times, or by reason of troubles which fell vpon the People, or by negligence of some Scriueners. But this inconuenience was met withall afterward by most learned men, such as Esdras was, and afterward Gamaliel, Iosephus, Eleazar, and other of great name, who prouided by common trauell, with great care and industrie, that the Text of Scripture, and the true reading thereof, should bee preserued most sound and vncorrupt. And from these men, or from their instruction, being receiued and polished by their Schollers in the Ages following, there came, as wee iudge, that most profitable Treasure, which is called Masoreth, that is to say, a Deliuerie, or Traditionall, because it doth deliuer abundantly and faithfully all the diuers Readings that euer were of the Hebrew Bibles. Wherein there appeareth an euident token of the prouidence of GOD, for the preseruation of the sacred Bookes of Scripture whole and sound, that the Maſoreth hath beene kept till our times theſe many hundred yeeres, with ſuch care and diligence, that in ſundry Copies of it, which haue beene written, no difference was euer found. And it hath beene added in all the written Bibles that are in Europe, Africke, or Aſia, each of them agreeing throughly therein withother, euen as it is printed in the Venice Bibles, to the great wonder of them, who read it. Thus farre Montanus: and by this Maſoreth, their Obiection of Caari, and Caaru, in the two and twentieth Pſalme, is anſwered, in that certayne Readings haue the later and truer, as the Maſoreth teſtifieth. Wee haue alreadie ſhewed, That theſe Maſorites inuented [p] the prickes wherewith the Hebrew is now read, to ſupply the lacke of vowels, herein vſing religious care, leſt by inuenting new Letters to that purpoſe, they ſhould haue changed that ancient forme of writing, and ſomewhat impayred the Maieſty thereof. They tell [q] that when a certayne Rabbine had read Zácar for Zécer, he was ſlaine of his Scholler Ioab, for violating Scripture.

[r] Genebrard denying their opinion, that make Ezra or Eſdras Authour of theſe Hebrew prickes and Accents, ſaith, That they were inuented after the times of Honorius the Emperour, in the yeare, after the Temple was deſtroyed, 436. which is (ſayth hee) from Chriſt, 476. in Tyberias a Citie of Galilee; the chiefe Authours were Aaron, Aſeries, and Iames, Sonne of Nephthali, whoſe diſſenting one from another cauſed a diuiſion among the Iewes, the Weſterne Iewes following the former, the Eaſterne, which dwelt in Babylonia, the later.

The Syriake Tongue ſome hold to haue ſprung from the corruption of the Chaldee and Hebrew mixt. The Editions and Tranſlations of the Scriptures, out of the Hebrew into the Greeke, are [s] reckoned nine, beſides that which Clement Alexandrinus ſayth, was before the time of Alexander, whereof Plato and the Philoſophers borrowed not a little. The firſt (already mentioned) of the Seuentie. The ſecond, of Aquila, firſt a Gentile, after a Chriſtian, and now laſt a Iew, in the time of Adrian, whom Serarius thinketh to bee Onkelos, or Ankelos, Author of the Targum. The third, of Theodotian, a Marcioniſt, vnder Commodus. The fourth of Symmachus; firſt a Samaritan, and after that a Iew. Of the fift and ſixt are not knowne the Authors. Of all theſe Origen compounded his Hexapla. The ſeuenth, was the correction rather then a tranſlation. The eight was of Lucian, Prieſt and Martyr. The ninth of Heſychius. But the moſt famous and ancient, which the Spirit of GOD hath by often allegations, in ſome meaſure, confirmed, is that of the Seuentie.

As for that conceit of the Celles, which [t] Iuſtine ſayth, were threeſcore and ten, in which they were diuided, and which [u] Epiphanius placeth by couples, and numbreth ſixe and thirtie Celles, in which, by Miracle, theſe thus diuided did all agree, in words and ſenſe. [x] Hierome derideth the ſame as a Fable, becauſe neither Ariſtæus, which then liued, nor Ioſephus, doe euer mention it. Now whereas Ioſephus mentioneth onely the Law tranſlated by them; Iuſtinus, Irenæus, Clemens, Euſubius, write, That they tranſlated all. And although Ariſtæus name but the Law, yet who knoweth not, that by this generall name they ſometime comprehended all the Scripture, as in the New Teſtament is ſeene? as 1. Cor. 14. 21. and Iohn 10. 34. Genebrard out of the Spanish Breuiarie hath annexed this their Creed-prayer. O GOD and King, which sittest on the Throne of Mercies, forgiuest Iniquities, &c. O GOD which hast taught the thirteene Articles of Faith, remember this day the Couenant of thy thirteene Properties, as thou reuealedst them to Moses in thy Law. 1. Lord, Lord. 2. Strong. 3. Mercifull. 4. Gracious. 5. Long-suffering. 6. And of great goodnesse. 7. And Truth. 8. Which keepest Mercy for thousands. 9. Which takest away the Iniquitie. 10. Transgressions. 11. And sinnes. 12. Which absolu'st not. 13. But rendrest the Iniquitie of the Fathers vpon the Children to the third and fourth Generation: then follow those thirteene Articles in forme of an Hymne, with the Exposition of R. Moses: which also you may reade in the Treatise of Philip Ferdinand a Polonian Christned Iew. And hee which thus beleeueth, sayth Ferdinand, is a Iew, and as a Brother to bee loued; and though hee commit all the sinnes of the World, howsoeuer hee shall bee punished for his sinne, yet shall he haue part in the Kingdome of Heauen, though he be reckoned among the Sinners of Israel. But he which shall ouerturne one of these Precepts, shall bee blotted out of the number of the Saints, and be reckoned an Heretike, Apostata, Epicure, worthy to bee hated of all.

This is the Iewish Faith, in which with much vexation, doubting, and lamentation, they liue and dye; vpon which, their Religion hath beene alway founded: but it was first put in writing, and brought into this Order by R. Moseh bar Maimon, [e] who dyed in the yeere after their reckoning 4964. Anno Dom. 1104. and straite charge was giuen, That the Iewes thenceforth for euer confeſſing it in this Order, ſhould according to the ſame, liue and dye. This their Creed, howſoeuer Charity may conſtrue much of it to a better ſenſe, yet according to their vnderſtanding doth it principally ayme at the ſubuerſion of Chriſtian Religion; as appeareth in a more ſtrait Examination, after their ſenſe of the 2, 3, 4, and 5, the 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Articles: All which make againſt the perſon or the Office of the Sonne of GOD, as they vnderſtand them; denying his God-head, and diſanulling his Office, affirming, as a Iew ſhamed not to profeſſe and vtter vnto M. Buxdorfius, That it needed not that any ſhould ſatisfie for them; for euery Fox muſt yeeld his owne skinne and haires to the flayer. And the Iewiſh Faith, ſaith R. Ioſeph Albu, is founded vpon three foundations: vpon the vnitie of the Diuine Eſſence; vpon the Law of Moſes, and vpon the eternall reward of good workes, and puniſhment of euill, contemning the Paſſion of Chriſt, [f] by whoſe ſtripes we are healed, and on whom GOD hath laid the iniquities of vs all. It is written alſo in their [g] Talmud, that all the Iſraelites haue their portion in the World to come, not all alike, but he ſhall haue a greater part that hath done more good workes, and the wicked and Impenitent ſhall be puniſhed twelue moneths in Hell or Purgatorie, after which time they alſo (and ſome ſooner, if they haue beene leſſe ſinners) ſhall haue their part, but a leſſe then the former: but to them which deny GOD (which become Chriſtians) their fore-skinne groweth againe, and as vncircumciſed, eternally are puniſhed in Hell. And the Sonne of a deceaſed Iew is bound to ſay, for the ſpace of one yeere, [h] a Prayer called Kiddiſch, thereby to redeeme him from Purgatorie, in which reſpect the Father dyeth with ioy. A good woman may doe the like for her Husband. But R. Bechai (who excludeth all other Nations from their part in the Reſurrection, preferring the Iewes in a foure-fold Priuiledge, viz. the Land of Canaan, the Law, the Prophets, and the Reſurrection) reciteth out of the great [i] Talmud, That three ſorts of men ſhall riſe againe at the Day of Iudgement: one of the beſt Iſraelites; a ſecond ſort, of the wicked and worſt; the third of a meane, who haue done as much good as euill. The good ſhall preſently goe into life eternall; the wicked ſhall be caſt into Hell, as in the twelfth of Daniel, and ſhall be for euer in torments of bodie and ſoule. The third and meaner ſort of ſinners ſhall bee tormented for twelue moneths ſpace for their ſinnes in Hell; at the end of which time their bodies ſhall be conſumed, and the wind ſhall ſcatter their aſhes vnder the ſoles of the feet of the Iuſt, &c. and as worthily doe they proue it out of the [k] Prophet: And in that day two parts ſhall be cut off, and dye, and the third ſhall be left therein: and I will bring that third part thorow the fire, and will fine them as ſiluer is fined and will try them as Gold is tryed. And in another place, [l] The Lord killeth, and maketh aliue, bringeth downe to Hell and raiſeth vp; Iuſt as fitly applyed, as 1. Cor. 3. and ſuch like places by our Purgatory Spirits. R. Dauid Kimchi vpon the firſt Pſalme, and Eſay 26. commenteth, That the wicked ſhall not riſe, but in the day of death their ſoule ſhall dye together with their bodie. And Aben Ezra in his Expoſition of Dan. 12. writeth out of R. Higgaon, That many ſhall riſe, and many not riſe, but ſuffer euerlaſting reproch; and expoundeth it thus, That the good Iewes which dye in Exile, ſhall riſe againe when the Meſſias ſhall come, and ſhall liue as long as the Patriarkes before the Floud: and then they ſhall make merrie with the great Fiſh Leuiathan, and the great Bird Ziz, and the great Oxe Behemoth, [m] of which we ſhall ſpeake after. When this is done, they ſhall dye, and at the laſt Day ſhall be rayſed vp againe, and ſhall poſſeſſe eternall Life, where ſhall bee no eating nor drinking, but glory, &c. Iacob [n] deſired to be buried in Canaan, not in Egypt, for three cauſes (ſaith R. Salomon Iarchi) becauſe he foreſaw, That of the [o] Duſt of Egypt ſhall bee made Lice: Secondly, becauſe the Iſraelites which dye out of Canaan, ſhall not riſe againe without much paine of their rolling thorow the deepe and hidden Vaults of the Earth: Thirdly, leſt the Egyptians ſhould make an Idoll of him. For the better vnderſtanding hereof, let vs heare what is ſaid out of the Booke Tanchum (an Expoſition of the Pentateuch) concerning this ſubiect. The Patriarkes (ſayth he) deſired to be buried in Canaan, becauſe they which are there buried, ſhall firſt riſe in the time of the Meſſias. And R. Hananiah ſayth, That they which dye out of Canaan, muſt endure two deaths: and the ſame appeareth, Ier. 20. where it is ſaid, Paſhur ſhould go into Babel, and ſhould there dye, and there be buried. What (quoth R. Simon) ſhall then all the Iuſt periſh, which dye out of Canaan? No, but God will make them [p] Mechillos, that is, deepe Cliſts and Gaues vnder the Earth, by which they may paſſe into the Land of Promiſe; whither when they are come, GOD ſhall inſpire into them the breath of life, that they may riſe againe, as it is written, [q] I will open your Graues, and cauſe you to come out of your Sepulchres, &c. The like is written in their Targum, or Chaldæan Interpretation of the Canticles: When the dead ſhall riſe, Mount Oliuet ſhall cleaue aſunder, and the Iſraelites which haue beene dead ſhall come out of the ſame, and they which haue dyed in ſtrange Lands, comming thither by holes vnder the Earth, ſhall come forth. the wealthieſt and deuouteſt amongſt them goe into the Land of Canaan, that their bodies may there ſleepe, and ſo be freed from this miſerable paſſage vnder ſo many deepe Seas and rough Mountaynes. There be three ſorts of [r] men, ſayth Salmanticenſis in the Booke Iuchaſin, which ſee not the face of Hell; thoſe which are extremely poore, thoſe which are in debt, thoſe which are troubled with the Collicke (the Haſidæi chaſtiſed themſelues tenne or twentie dayes before their death with this paine of the bowels, that ſo they might clenſe all, and goe [f] pure to the other World) ſome adde in this exemption from Hell, or comming to Iudgement, him which had an euill Wife, and ſome alſo Magiſtrates. But in Paulls time, they themſelues did allow (ſaith [t] he) a Reſurrection of the dead, both of the Iuſt and Vniuſt. They did then hold alſo ἀναψύχωσις, in which ſenſe it is likely, the Iewes thought [u] Chriſt to be Elias, or Ieremie, or one of the Prophets: and the Diſciples ſomewhat ſowred with this Leauen, asked of the blind man, [x] whether he had ſinned, vnderſtanding, as it ſeemeth, according to the Iewiſh Errour, when his ſoule had beene in ſome former bodie. And the Cabaliſticall Authors, ſayth [y] Elias Leuita, are of opinion that euery ſoule is three times created, they meane, it rolleth or paſſeth thorow three mens bodies, according to that of [z] Iob, GOD worketh all theſe things with a man thrice. So the ſoule of the firſt man (ſaith hee) rolled it ſelfe into the bodie of Dauid, and ſhall thence returne into the bodie of the Meſſias. So they ſay that the ſoules of Sinners paſſe into the bodies of beaſt; as if a man committeth Sodomie, his ſoule paſſeth into a Hare, becauſe that creature is ſomtimes Male, ſometimes Female: the ſoule of the Adulterer paſſeth into a Camell.

Now to come from their Faith to their Workes: The wiſe Rabbines perſwade the ſilly people, That they are the only Elect people of God, who eaſily can keepe, not the Decalogue, or ten Commandements alone, but the whole Law of Moſes. They diuide the whole Law into ſixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, and them againe into Precepts and Prohibitions: Of the commanding Precepts, they number two hundred fortie and eight; iuſt ſo many as (according to the Rabbines Anatomie) a man hath members in his bodie. Of the prohibiting Commandements, they reckon three hundred threeſcore and fiue, [a] as many as are dayes in the yeere, [b] or (as in the Booke Brandſpiegel) veines in a mans bodie. Therefore if euery member of a man doe euery day performe one of the Precepts, and omit one of the things prohibited, the whole Law of Moſes ſhall be euery yeere, and ſo for euer, fulfilled. Their wiſe Rabbines ſay further, That the men only are to obſerue thoſe ſixe hundred and thirteene Commandements, the women are onely ſubiect to the Prohibitions; yea, of thoſe prohibitorie Mandates, onely to threeſcore and foure are they obliged by ſome, and to ſixe and thirtie of the former; and this becauſe of their other houſhold-buſineſſe, and ſubiection to their Imperious Husbands. Some of their deeply-wiſe Rabbines adde to thoſe ſixe hundred and thirteene, ſeuen other Commandements, making vp the number of ſixe hundred and twentie; iuſt ſo many as are [p] Letters in the Decalogue, and as ariſe of the word Keter, ſignifying a Crowne: for were it not for the Law, God would not haue created the World; and for the obſeruation thereof it yet ſubſiſteth. And they which keepe all the Commandements, doe ſet a Crowne on the head of God, and hee vpon the head of thoſe which crowne him, ſhall ſet ſeuen Crownes, and make them to inherit ſeuen Chambers in Paradiſe, and will keepe them from the ſeuen Infernall Dungeons, becauſe they haue obtayned the ſeuen Heauens, and the ſeuen Earths.

Their Wiſe-men affirme, that euery veine of the bodie of a man doth prouoke him to omit that which is forbidden, and he which doth omit ſuch their vaine veine-warning, hath no good veine in him: euery of his members alſo doe prouoke him to performe thoſe inſſory Inuentions. 1. THou shalt haue no strange Gods in my sight, Exod. 20. The Name of God is forbidden to be communicated to any creature.

2. Thou shalt not violate r mine holy Name. Thou shalt not destroy a Synagogue or Temple bee it neuer so old, nor shalt blot out one of the holy names, wheresoeuer thou findest it written. The Rabbines say, If any doe against any Affirmatiue Precept, and repent, his sinne is forgiuen him: but hee which transgresseth a Negatiue Precept, is not clensed by repentance, but it remaineth to the day of Expiation (which is the day of their solemne Fast and Reconciliation.) But hee which committeth a sinne, whereby he deserueth Death, or Excommunication, is not then purged, but must abide thereunto the diuine chastisements: and hee which violateth the Name of GOD, cannot bee absolued from that sinne but by death.

r Leuit. 22. 32.

5. Thou shalt not s hate thy brother in thy heart. He which is wronged by another, should not hate him, and hold his peace, but reproue him openly; and if hee repent, he ought not to be cruell to him: But if any be often reproued, and will not amend, it is lawfull to hate him. This Christ t confuteth.

12. No u Idoll as to bee adored. If a man haue a thorne in his foot, hee may not bow before an Image to pull it out: and if money fall out of his hand, hee may not there, before an Image, stoope to take it vp, lest he might seeme to adore it, but he must sit downe on the ground to doe it. And if the water of a Fountaine be caused to passe thorow the mouth of an Image, he may not drinke thereat, lest he should seeme to kisse the Image.

45. No y commoditie is to bee raised from Idols. If a tree be planted neere an Image, one may not sit vnder the shadow thereof, nor passe vnder it, if there bee any other way: and if he must passe, it must be running. Things imployed to Idolatry, may be vsed of vs, if the Gentiles haue first prophaned them. It is not lawfull to sell them Waxe or Frankincense, especially at their Candlemasse Feast; nor bookes to vse in their seruice. Our women may not performe a Mid-wiues office to them, nor nurse their children.

65. Thou shalt z doe no worke on the Seuenth day. Nothing that belongeth to the getting of Food or Rayment. It is vnlawfull to walke on the grasse, lest thou pull it vp with thy feet; or to hang any thing on the bough of a tree, lest it breake; or to eate an Apple, plucked on the Sabbath, especially if the tayle or woodden substance, whereby it groweth, be on it; or to mount on a horse, lest he bee galled; or to goe into water, lest thou wipe thy clothes: which holdeth also, if they be moystened with Wine or Oyle (but not in a woman that giueth suck, who may wipe her cloathes, for the more puritie of her prayers) The stopple of a Vessell if it be of Hempe or Flax, may not be thrust in, though it runne, especially if any other Vessell be vnder. To mixe Mustard-seed with wine or water; to lay an Apple to the fire to roast; to wash the bodie, chiefely with hot water; to sweate; to wash the hands; to doe any thing in priuate, which may not bee publikely done: (but some say, it is lawfull priuately to rubbe off the durt with his nayles from his cloathes, which publikely hee may not:) To reade by a Light, except two reade together: To set sayle: (but if thou enter three dayes before, it is not necessarie to goe forth on the Sabbath) to be carryed in a Waggon, though a Gentile driue it: If fire happen on the Sabbath, to carrie any thing out, but thy food, rayment, and necessaries for that day, and that wherein the holy Booke lyeth: to put to pasture Horses or Asses, coupled together: to receiue any good by the Light, or Fire, which a Gentile hath made for the Iew; (otherwise, if he did it for himselfe:) To play on any Instrument; to make a bed; to Number, Measure, Iudge, or Marry, lest they should write any thing: To reade at home, when others are at the Synagogue: To speake of buying and selling (which it seemeth they obserue not:) To visite Field or Garden: To Runne, Leape, or tell Tales, &c. All these on the Sabbath day are vnlawfull. For dangerous diseases it is lawfull to violate the a Sabbath: Such are the three first dayes after a womans trauell, &c. But of this see b also the obseruation of their Sabbath. Of their Expoſition of Scripture, a taſte in Gen. 1. 1.

THeir Expoſition of Scripture is ſo abſurd, that wee haue hence a manifeſt argument, that as they denyed the Sonne that Eternall Word and Truth, whoſe written word this is; ſo that Spirit which indited the ſame; the Spirit of Truth, hath put a vayle on their heart, and iuſtly ſuffered the ſpirit of errour to blind their eyes, that ſeeing they ſhould ſee and not vnderſtand. This will appeare generally in our enſuing Diſcourſe; but for a taſte let vs begin with the beginning of Moſes, whereon R. Iacob Baal Hatturim hath left to the world theſe ſmoakie ſpeculations. [a] The Bible beginneth with Beth, the ſecond letter in the Alphabet, and not with Aleph the firſt, becauſe that it is the firſt letter of Beracha, which ſignifieth bleſſing, this of Arour, that is, a curſe. Secondly, Beth ſignifieth two, inſinuating [b] the two-fold Law, written and vnwritten: for Bereſhith hath the letters of Bara ſhetei, firſt, hee made; ſecondly, Lawes; thirdly, Bereſhith (the firſt word of Geneſis) hath as many letters as Aleph be Tiſhrei, that is, the firſt of Tiſhrei or Tiſri, on which the Iewes ſay the world began: fourthly, Bereſhith hath the letters of Baith roſhe, that is, the firſt Temple, which he knew the Iewes would build, and therefore created the world: fiftly, it hath the letters of Iare ſhabbath, that is, to keepe the Sabbath; for God created the world for the Iſraelites which keepe the Sabbath: ſixtly, alſo, of Berith eſh, which ſignifieth the Couenant of fire, to wit, Circumciſion and the Law, another cauſe of the creation: ſeuenthly, likewiſe it hath the letters of Bara ieſh, that is, hee created as many worlds as are in the number Ieſh, (that is, three hundred and ten) that the Saints might [c] reioyce therein. Now if I ſhould follow them from theſe letters and ſpelling, to their myſticall ſententious expoſition of greater parts of the ſentence, you ſhould heare Moſes tell you out of his firſt words that the world was created for the Talmudiſts, for the ſixe hundred and thirteene precepts, becauſe hee loued the Iſraelites more then the other people: Againe, that hee foreſaw the Iſraelites would receiue the Law (but hee is now an Aſſe, ſaith he, which beareth Wine and drinketh water.) There are in the firſt verſe ſeuen words, which ſignifie the ſeuen dayes of the weeke, ſeuenth yeere of reſt, ſeuen times ſeuenth the Iubilee, ſeuen times ſeuen Iubilees, ſeuen Heauens, ſeuen lands of Promiſe, and ſeuen Orbes or Planets; which cauſed Dauid to ſay, I will praiſe thee ſeuen times a day. There are 28. letters in it, which ſhew the 28. times of the World, of which Salomon ſpeaketh, Eccleſ. 3. 1. There are in it ſixe Alephs, and therefore the world ſhall laſt ſixe thouſand yeeres. So in the ſecond verſe, The earth was without forme and voyde, are two Alephs, which ſhew the world ſhould

Their Dreames of Adam.

NOw for the first man, his body (saith R. Osia in the [e] Talmud) was made of the earth of Babylon, his head of the land of Israel, his other members of other parts of the world. So R. Meir thought hee was compact of the earth, gathered out of the whole earth, as it is written, Thine eyes did see my substance: now it is elsewhere written, [f] The eyes of the Lord are ouer all the earth. There are twelue houres of the day, saith R. Aha, in the first whereof the earth of Adam, or earthly matter was gathered: in the second, the trunke of his body fashioned; in the third, his members stretched forth: in the fourth, his soule infused: in the fift, hee stood vpon his feet: in the sixt, hee gaue names to the Creatures: in the seuenth, Eue was giuen him in marriage: in the eighth, they ascended the bed two, and descended foure: in the ninth, hee receiued the Precept, which in the tenth he brake, and therefore was iudged in the eleuenth; and in the twelfth was cast out of Paradise: as it is written, Man continued not one night in honour. The stature of Adam was from one end of the world to the other, and for his transgression, the Creator by laying on his hand lessened him: for before, saith R. Eleazar, with his head he reached (a reacher indeed) the verie firmament. His language was Syriacke or Aramitish, saith R. Iuda, and as Reschlakis addeth, the Creator shewed him all generations, and the wise-men in them. His sinne, after R. Iehuda, was heresie; R. Isaac thinketh the nourishing his fore-skin.

f Psal. 139. 16.

He knew or vsed [g] carnall filthinesse with all the beasts which GOD brought vnto him before Eue was made, as some interpret R. Eleazar, and R. Salomon: but Reuchline laboureth to purge them of that sense: who affirmeth, that hee had an Angell for his Master or Instructor: and when he was exceedingly dejected with remorse of his sinne, GOD sent the Angell Raziel to tell him that there should be one of his progenie which should haue the foure letters of Iehouah in his name, and should expiate originall sinne. And heere was the beginning of their Cabala: and also presently hereupon did hee and Eue build an Altar, and offer sacrifice. The like offices of other Angels they mention [h] to other Patriarchs, and tell that euery three moneths are set new watches of these watchmen, yea euery three houres, yea and euery houre is some change of them. And therefore wee may haue more fauour of them in one houre then another: for they follow the disposition of the starres; so said the Angell Samael (which wrestled with him) vnto Iacob, [i] Let mee goe, for the day breaketh; for his power was in the night. But let me returne to Adam: of whom they further tell [k] that he was an Hermaphrodite, a man-woman, hauing both Sexes and a double bodie, the Female part ioyned at the shoulders, and backe parts to the Male, their countenances turned from each other. This is proued by Moses his words. So GOD created man in his Image, Male and Female created hee them. And he called their name ADAM: yet after this is mention of Adams solitarinesse, and forming of Eue out of his side, that is, cutting the female part from the Male, and so fitting them to generation. Thus doth Leo Hebraus reconcile the Fable of Platoes Androgynus with Moses narration, out of which he thinketh it borrowed. For as hee telleth that Iupiter in the first forming of mankinde, made them such Androgyni, with two bodies of two sexes ioyned in the breast, diuided for their pride, the nauill still remaining as a skarre of the wound then made: so with little difference is this their interpretation of Moses.

WHen a Iewish woman [l] is great with Childe, and neare her time, her chamber is furnished with necessaries; and then some holy and deuout man (if any such may bee had) with Chalke maketh a circular line round in the chamber vpon all the walls, and writeth on the doore, and within and without on euery wall, and about the bed in Hebrew Letters, Adam, Chaua, Chuts, Lilith or (after the Iewish pronuntiation) Lilis, that is, Adam, Eue, away hence Lilis. woman ſhall bee deliuered of a ſonne, GOD may one day giue him a wife like to Eue, and not a ſhrew like Lilis. This word Lilis is read in the [m] Prophet, interpreted a Skritch-Owle: but the Iewes ſeeme to meane by it a diuelliſh Spectrum in womans ſhape, that vſeth to ſlay or carry away Children, which are on the eight day to be Circumciſed. Elias Leuita writeth, that hee hath read, that a hundred and twentie yeeres Adam contained himſelfe from his wife Eue, and in that ſpace there came to him Diuels which conceiued of him, whence were ingendred Diuels and Spirits, Fairies and Goblins; and there were foure mothers or dammes of Diuels, Lilith, Naemah, Ogereth, and Machalath. Thus is it read in Ben Sira, when GOD had made Adam, and ſaw it was not good for him to bee alone, hee made him a woman of the earth, like vnto him, and called her Lilis. Theſe diſagreed for ſuperioritie, not ſuffering [n] Cæſarue priorem, Pompeiuſue parem: Lilis (made of the ſame mould) would not be vnderling, and Adam would not endure her his equall. Lilis ſeeing no hope of agreement, vttered that ſacred word IEHOVA, with the Cabaliſticall interpretation thereof, and preſently did flie into the Ayre. Adam playning his caſe, GOD ſent three Angels after her, viz. Senoi, Senſenoi, Sanmangeleph, either to bring her backe, or to denounce vnto her, That a hundred of her Children ſhould dye in a day. Theſe ouertooke her ouer the troubleſome Sea (where one day the Ægyptians ſhould bee drowned) and did their meſſage to her: ſhee refuſing to obey, they threatned her drowning: but ſhe beſought them to let her alone, becauſe ſhee was created to vexe and kill children on the eight day, if they were men; if women children, on the twentieth day. They neuertheleſſe forcing her to goe, Lilis ſware to them, That whenſoeuer ſhe ſhould finde the name or figure of thoſe Angels, written or painted on Schedule, Parchment, or any thing, ſhee would doe Infants no harme, and that ſhe would not refuſe that puniſhment, to loſe a hundred children in a day. And accordingly a hundred of her children or young Diuels, dyed in a day. And for this cauſe doe they write theſe names on a Scroll of Parchment, and hang them on their Infants neckes. Thus farre Ben Sira.

When this Ieweſſe is in trauell, ſhee muſt not ſend for a Chriſtian Mid-wife, except no Iewiſh can bee gotten: and then the Iewiſh women muſt be very thick about her, for feare of negligence or iniurie. And if ſhe be happily deliuered of a ſonne, there is exceeding ioy through all the houſe, and the father preſently makes feſtiuall prouiſion againſt the Circumciſion on the eight day. In the meane time ten perſons are inuited, neither more nor fewer, which are all paſt thirteene yeeres of age. §. IIII.

Of the Iewiſh manner of Circumciſion.

THE Circumciſer is called Mohel, who muſt bee a Iew, and a Man, and well exerciſed in that facultie: and hee that will performe this office, at the beginning giueth money to ſome poore Iew, to be admitted hereunto in his children, that after his better experience hee may be vſed of the richer. And this Mohel may thence-forwards bee knowne by his thumbes, on which he weareth the nayles long and ſharpe, and narrow-pointed. The circumciſing Inſtruments is of ſtone, glaſſe, yron, or any matter that will cut: commonly ſharpe kniues like Raſors, amongſt the rich Iewes cloſed in ſiluer, and ſet with ſtones. Before the Infant be Circumciſed, he muſt be waſhed and wrapped in clouts, that in the time of the Circumciſion hee may lie cleane: for otherwiſe they might vſe no prayers ouer him. And if in the time of Circumciſion (for paine) he defileth himſelfe, the Mohels muſt ſuſpend his praying, till he be waſhed & laid cleane again. This is performed commonly in the morning, while the child is faſting, to preuent much fluxe of bloud.

In

In the morning therefore of the eight day all things are made readie. First, are two seates placed, or one so framed, that two may sit in the same apart, adorned costly with Carpets, and that either in the Synagogue, or some priuate Parlour: If it bee in the Synagogue, then the seat is placed neere the holy Arke, or Chest, where the Booke of the Law is kept. Then comes the suretie or God-father for the child, and placeth himselfe at the said seat, and neere him the Mohel or Circumciser. Other Iewes follow them, one of which cryeth with a loud voyce, That they should bring presently whatsoeuer is needfull for this businesse. Then come other Children, whereof one bringeth a great Torch, in which are lighted twelue waxe Candles, to represent the twelue Tribes of Israel: after him two other Boyes, carrying cups full of red Wine. After them another carrieth the circumcising knife: another brings a dish with sand; another brings another dish with Oyle; in which are cleane and fine clouts, which after the Mohel applyeth to the wounds of the child. These stand in a ring about the Mohel, the better to marke and learne: and these their Offices are bought with money by those children. Some come thither also with Spices, Cloues, Cinnamon, strong Wine to refresh, if any happen to swoune. These being thus assembled, the God-father sitteth downe vpon one of those two seats: right against him the Mohel placeth himselfe, and sings the [f] song of the Israelites, and others. Then the women bring the child to the doore, all the congregation presently rising vp. The God-father goeth to the doore, taketh the child, sitteth downe on his seat, and cryeth out, Baruch habba, that is, Blessed be hee that commeth; in their Cabalisticall sense, habba, being applyed either to the eight day, which is the day of Circumcision, or the comming of Elias, whom they call the Angell of the Couenant, (so they interpret [t] the Prophet) and say, that Elias commeth with the Infant, and sits downe on that other emptie seat. For when the Israelites were prohibited Circumcision, and Elias complained thus, [u] The children of Israel haue forsaken the Couenant, that is, Circumcision, God promised him, That from thence-forwards hee should be present at Circumcision, to see it rightly performed. And when they make readie that seat for Elias, then they are bound in set words to say, This seat is for the [x] Prophet ELIAS, otherwise (as a vnbidden ghest) he commeth not. This seat remaineth for him three whole dayes together.

Then when the God-father holdeth the child in his lap, the Mohel takes him out of his clouts, and layeth hold on his member, and holding the fore-skinne, putteth backe the top thereof, and rubbeth the fore-skinne, so to make it haue the lesse sense of paine. Then he taketh from the Boy the circumcising-knife, and saith with a loud voyce; Blessed bee thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs with thy Commandements, and giuen vs the Couenant of Circumcision: and whiles he thus speaketh, cuts off the fore-part of the skin, that the head of the yard may bee seene, and presently hurleth it into the [y] Sand-dish, and restoreth his knife to the Boy againe: taketh from another a cup of Red Wine, and drinketh his mouthfull, which hee presently spitteth out on the Infant, and therewith washeth away the bloud; and if he see the child begin to faint, he spitteth out some thereof on his face. Presently he taketh the member of the child in his mouth, and sucketh [z] out the bloud, to make it stay from bleeding the sooner, and spitteth out that bloud so sucked into the other cup full of Wine, or into the dish of Sand. This hee doth at least thrice. After the bloud is stayed, the Mohel with his sharpe-pointed thin nayles rendeth the skinne of the yard, and putteth it backe so farre, that the head thereof is bare. Hee is more painefull to the Infant, with this rending of the remaining skinne, which action is called Priah, then with the former. This being done, hee layeth the clouts (dipped in oyle aforesaid) to the wound, and bindeth them three or foure times about; and then wrappeth vp the Infant againe in his clouts. Then saith the Father of the child; Blessed bee thou, O God our Lord, King of the World, which hast sanctified vs in thy Commandements, and hast commanded vs to succeed into the Couenant of our Father ABRAHAM. To which all the Congregation answerth, As this Infant hath happily succeeded into the Couenant of our Father ABRAHAM; so happily shall hee succeed into the possession of the Law of MOSES, into Marriage also, and other good workes. Then doth the Mohel wash his bloudie mouth and his hands. The God-father riseth with him, and standeth ouer-against him; who taking the other cup of Wine, saith a certaine prayer, and prayeth also ouer the Infant, saying; O our God, God of our Fathers, strengthen and keepe this Infant to his Father and Mother, and make that his name, in the people of Israel, may bee named (heere he first nameth the Child, calling him Isaac) ISAAC, which was the sonne of ABRAHAM, Let his Father reioyce in him that hath come out of his loynes: Let his Mother reioyce in the fruit of her wombe, as it is written; [a] Make glad thy Father and Mother, and her that bare thee to reioyce. And GOD saith by the Prophet, [b] I passed by thee, and saw thee troden in thy bloud, and I said vnto thee, In thy bloud thou shalt liue; yea, I said vnto thee, In thy bloud thou shalt liue. Heere the Mohel puts his finger into the other cup of Wine, wherein hee had spit the bloud, and moysteneth the Childs lippes three times with that wine, hoping, that accor-

If a Childe bee sicke on the eight day, they deferre Circumcision till his recouerie: they hold also the blowing of the North winde necessarie to this action, and therefore thinke that their Fathers forbare circumcision those fortie yeeres in the Wildernesse, because the North winde blew not all that time, lest it should haue blowne away the piller of smoake and fire: and besides, this winde is wholsome for wounds, which else are dangerous. But lest they should stay beyond the eighth day expecting this Northerne breath, their Talmud tels that euery day there blow foure windes, and that the North is mixed with them all, and therefore they may Circumcise euery day. If the Child dye before the eight day, he is circumcised at the graue without any prayers: but a signe is erected in memorie of him, that GOD may haue mercie vpon him, and raise him at the day of the Resurrection. Ten must bee the number (you haue heard) of the inuited ghests, and one or two of these learned Rabbins, who must make a long prayer and Sermon at the table, although others meane while are more busied in tossing the cups of Wine. I was once present (saith [i] Buxdorfius) at one of their Circumcision feasts, and one of their Rabbins preached on *Pro.*3.18. Wisedome is a tree of life; but more woodden or ridiculous stuffe, I neuer heard in all my life. This feast they obserue by example of Abraham, who [k] made a great feast when the childe was weaned: their Kabal peruerts it, when hee was circumcised. [l] The Circumciser abideth sometime with the Mother, lest the bloud should againe issue from the childe. The mother keepeth within, sixe weekes, whether it bee a male or female: all which time her husband must not so much as touch her, or eate meate in the same dish with her.

m The Iewes make small accompt of women, because they are not Circumcised, and because it is written, Pro. 8. O men, I call vnto you, they thinke women are not worthy of life eternall. Yet are they more eagerly zealous of their superstition then the men. *Vitt. Carb. lib.*1. *cap.*15.

Of the Iewish Purification, Redemption, and Education.

WHen the fortie dayes are accomplished, before the wife may accompanie or haue any fellowship with her husband, shee must bee purified in cold water, and put on white and cleane garments. Their washing is with great scrupulositie, in a common watering, or in priuate Cisternes, or Fountaines; which must bee so deepe, that they must stand vp to the necke in water: and if it bee muddie in the bottome, they must haue a square stone to stand on, that their whole feete may stand in cleere water, and that the water may passe betwixt their toes: for the least part not couered with water, would frustrate the whole action: and for this cause they lay aside all their haire-laces, neck-laces, rings: they diue vnder the water, so that no part may bee free from the same. Some Iewesse must stand by for witnesse hereof, which is twelue yeers old and a day at least.

n The redeeming of the first borne.

bids me giue him to thee. Doeſt thou then giue me him, ſaith the Prieſt? He anſwereth, Yea. The Prieſt asketh the Mother, if ſhe euer before had a childe, or abortion? If ſhee anſwere, No: then the Prieſt asketh the Father, Whether the childe or the money be dearer to him? he anſwereth, The childe: then doth the Prieſt take the money, and lay it on the head of the Infant, ſaying: This is a firſt begotten child, which God commanded ſhould be redeemed, and now, ſaith hee to the childe, thou art in my power, but thy parents deſire to redeeme thee; now this money ſhall be giuen to the Prieſt for thy redemption: And if I haue redeemed thee, as is right, thou ſhalt bee redeemed: If not, yet thou being redeemed according to the Law and cuſtome of the Iewes, ſhalt grow vp to the feare of God, to marriage and good workes, Amen. If the father dye before the childe be one and thirtie dayes old, the mother hangeth a ſcroll about his necke, wherein is written: This is the firſt-borne, and not redeemed: and this child when he commeth of age muſt redeeme himſelfe.

The Iewiſh Chachamim, or Wiſe-men, haue left no part of life vnprouided of their ſuperſtitious care: as we haue ſeene concerning the birth and circumciſion of their children, with the Purification of the mother, and Redemption of the firſt-borne. To proceed with them: they enioyne the mother, while ſhe giueth ſucke, to eate wholeſome food of eaſie digeſtion, that the Infant may ſucke good milke; ſo that the heart and ſtomacke be not ſtopped, but may come ſo much more eaſily to obtaine wiſedome and vertue. For God hath great care of children, and hath therefore giuen a woman two breſts, and placed them next her heart; yea, in the dangerous perſecution vnder Pharaoh, Exod. 1. hee [p] cauſed the earth to open it ſelfe, and receiue their Male children, and created therein two ſtones, from one of which the Infant ſucked milke, and from the other honie, till they were growne, and might goe to their Parents: yea, and if you beleeue their Gemara (can you chooſe?) a poore Iew hauing buried his wife, and not able to hire a nurſe for his childe, had his owne breſts miraculouſly filled with milke, and became nurſe himſelfe. Yea, Mardochæus (ſaith their Medraſch) ſucked the breſts of Heſter, and for this cauſe did ſhe, after her exaltation, ſo preferre him. The concluſionis, if ſhe giue groſſe food to her Infants, ſhe ſhall be caſt into hell. She muſt not go naked breſted, nor too long faſting in a morning, nor carrie her Infants, or ſuffer them to goe or be naked, leſt [q] the Sunne hurt them, if it bee in the day, or the Moone in the night: and that they may ſoone learne that the earth is filled with the Maieſtie of diuine glory: and for this cauſe muſt they beware, that they neuer goe bare-headed: for this were a ſigne of impudencie, and ill diſpoſition. And as religiouſly they muſt prouide, that they be alway girded with a girdle: for the girdle diſtinguiſheth betwixt the heart and the priuities; and in his morning prayer, he ſaith, Bleſſed be thou, O God, which girdeſt Iſrael with the girdle of ſtrength: which, if he ſhould not haue a girdle on, would be in vaine. Their Mothers therefore ſow their girdles to their coats: with great care they auoid going bare-foot, eſpecially in Ianuary and February.

[q] Pſal. 121. 6.

When they can ſpeake, they are taught ſentences out of Scripture, and to ſalute their Parents with good-morrow, good-Sabbath, &c. and after ſeuen yeeres they adde the name of God, God giue you good-morrow, &c. but they muſt not name the name of God but in a pure place. Theſe teach them the names of things in the vulgar, and ſome Hebrew names among, that ſo they may not commonly be vnderſtood: for pure Hebrew they cannot ſpeake, except their moſt learned Rabbines onely. Their Children muſt not conuerſe with children of Chriſtians, and their Parents make all things in Chriſtians odious to them, that they may ſeaſon them from their child-hood with hatred of them. When they are ſeuen yeeres old, they learne to write and reade: and when they can reade, they learne to conſtrue the Text of Moſes in their vulgar tongue. When the Mother carrieth him firſt to the ſchoole to the Rabbi, ſhe maketh him cakes ſeaſoned with honie and ſugar, and as this cake, ſo (ſaith ſhe) let the Law be ſweet to thy heart. Speake not vaine trifling words in the ſchoole, but onely the words of God. For if they ſo do, then the glorious Maieſtie of God dwelleth in them, and delighteth it ſelfe with the ayre of their breath. For their breathing is yet holy, not yet polluted with ſinne: neither is hee [r] Bar-mitzuah, bound to obey the Commandements, till he bee thirteene yeeres old.

When he is ten yeers old, and hath now ſome ſmattering in Moſes, he proceedeth to learne the Talmud: at thirteene yeeres, his Father calleth ten Iewes, and teſtifieth in their preſence that this his ſonne is now of iuſt age, and hath beene brought vp in their manners and cuſtomes, their daily manner of praying and bleſſing, and hee will not further ſtand charged with the ſinnes of his Sonne, who is now Bar-mitzuah, and muſt himſelfe beare this burthen.

Then in their preſence hee thanketh God, that he hath diſcharged him from the puniſhment of his ſonne, deſiring, that his ſonne by diuine grace may be long ſafe, and endeuour to good workes. At the fifteenth yeere of their life, they are compelled to learne their Gemara, or the complement of their Talmud, Diſputations, and ſubtill Deciſions about the Text of their their Talmud. And in these they spend the greatest part of their liues, seldome reading any of the Prophets, and some not in the whole space of a long life reading one Prophet through, and therefore know so little of the Messias.

At eighteene yeeres their male children Marrie, according to their Talmud-constitution, and sometimes sooner, to auoyde fornication. Their Maydens may marrie, when [f] are twelue yeeres old and a day. At twentie yeeres they may traffike, buy, sell, and circumuent all they can: for their neighbour in the Law, is (in their sense) such a Iew as you haue heard described. But because these things are ioyned together in one of their sentences or Apophthemes of the R. R. called Pirke Aboth, I thought good to adde the same, as containing a mappe of the Iewes life. A sonne of fiue yeeres to the Bible: a sonne of ten yeeres to the Mischna: a sonne of thirteene yeeres to the Precepts: a sonne of fifteene yeeres to the Thalmud: a sonne of eighteene yeeres to marriage: a sonne of twentie yeeres to follow (the affaires of the world,) a sonne of thirtie yeeres to strength: a sonne of fortie yeeres to wisedome: a sonne of fiftie yeeres to counsell: a sonne of sixtie yeeres to old age: a sonne of seuentie yeeres to gray haires: a sonne of eightie to the height: a sonne of ninetie to the graue: a sonne of one hundred yeeres is as a dead man departed out of the world.

CHAP. XV.

Of their Morning Prayer, with their Fringes, Phylacteries, and other Ceremonies thereof.

§. I.

Of their Behauiour before they goe to the Synagogue.

THe good-wife is to waken her Husband, and the Parents to awaken their Children, when after thirteene yeeres they are subiect to the Iewish Precepts: before their Penticost, they rise before it is light, and after, the nights being shorter, when it is now day. They are to awaken the day, not to tarrie till it awaken them. For their Morning-prayer must bee made whiles the Sunne is rising, and not later: for then is the time of hearing, as they interpret, Lamen. 2.19. And hee which is deuout, ought at that time to bee sad for Ierusalem, and to pray euerie morning for the re-edifying of the Temple and Citie: if in the night-time any sheddeth teares for their long captiuitie, God will heare his prayer, for then the Starres and Planets mourne with him: and if he suffer the teares to trickle downe his cheekes, God will arise and gather them into his bottle: and if any decree be by their enemies enacted against them, with those teares he will blot out the same. Witnesse [a] Dauid, Put my teares in thy bottle, are they not in thy booke? And if any rub his fore-head with his teares, it is good to blot out certaine sinnes that are there written. In there beginning of the night, God causeth all the gates of heauen to be shut, and the Angels stay at them in silence, and sendeth euill spirits into the world, which hurt all they meet: but after mid-night, they are commanded to open the same. This command and call is heard of the Cocks, and therefore they clap their wings and crow, to awaken men: and then the euill spirits lose their power of hurting: and in this respect the Wise-men haue ordained them a thanksgiuing to be said at Cock-crowing: Blessed art thou, O God, Lord of the whole world, who hast giuen vnderstanding to the Cocke.

They must not rise vp in their beds naked, nor put on their shirts sitting, but put their heads and armes into the same as they lye, lest the walls and beames should see their nakednesse. It is a brag of Rabbi Iose, that, in all his life, hee had not herein faulted. But to goe or stand naked in the chamber, were more then piacular: and much more, to make water standing naked before his bed, although it be night. Hee must not put on his garments wrong: nor his left shooe before the right, and yet he must put off the left foot shooe first; When he is clothed, with his head inclined to the earth, and a deuout minde (in remembrance of the destruction of the Temple) hee goeth out of the chamber, with his head, feete, and all couered, because of the holy Schechinam (diuine glorie) ouer his head. Then hee goeth to stoole in some priuie place; for so hath Amos commanded, * Prepare thy selfe (O Israel) to meete thy God: and DAVID; [b] All that is within mee praise his holy name: That is, all within the body emptie and cleane: For else must not God bee named; and therefore his garments must not be spotted and fouled. To restraine nature too long, were a sinne, and would cause the soule to stinke: and (sauing your reuerence) hee must wipe with the left hand, for for with the right he writeth the name of God, and the Angels. And in this place and buſineſſe hee muſt take heed, he thinke not of God or his Word; much leſſe name him, for God will ſhorten the dayes of ſuch a one. R. Sira told his Scholers, that the cauſe of his long life was, that in an impure place hee neuer though of the Word, nor named the name of God. Beſides, hee muſt turne his face, and not his hinder-parts toward the Temple of Ieruſalem. Hee ought not to touch his body with vnwaſhen hands, in regard of the euill ſpirits which reſt thereon till they be waſhed; and if hee ſhould touch his eyes, hee would be blinde; his eares deafe; his noſe dropping, his mouth ſtinking, his hand ſcabbed with theſe vnwaſhed, and therefore venemous hands: and when hee waſheth, he muſt powre water three times on his right hand, and as oft on the left, before one hand may touch the other: hee muſt not bee ſparing in his water, for ſtore of water, ſtore of health: after the hands, the mouth and face muſt bee waſhed, becauſe they were created after the Image of God: and how ſhould the name of God be vttered out of a foule mouth? hee muſt waſh ouer a baſon, not ouer the ground: he muſt drie his face very well, for feare of wheales and wrinkles: and that with a cleane Towel, not with his ſhirt, for this would make them blockiſh and forgetfull. After all this followeth his Brachah, or bleſſing, Bleſſed bee thou, O God, our God, King of the whole world, who haſt commanded vs to waſh our hands. Their hands they muſt alwayes waſh on theſe occaſions: in the morning; at their returne from the ſtoole; from bathing; when they haue cut their nayles; haue ſcratched their naked bodie; hauing pulled off their ſhooes with their hands; haue touched a dead bodie; haue gone amongſt the dead; haue companied with their wiues; or haue killed a louſe; If hee reſpect not waſhing after theſe, if he bee learned, he ſhall forget his learning; if vnlearned he ſhall loſe his ſenſe.

§. II.

Of their Zizis and Tephillim and Holy Veſtments.

b Of the Iewes Arba-canphos, and Zizis: they call this garment Taliſh. vid. El. Thisb. rad. Talith. vid. R. Moſ. M. N. l. 3. c. 33.

THey [b] haue a foure-cornered garment, which ſome put on with the reſt, when they riſe, others then, when they will pray. The foure cornered parts thereof are made of linnen ſilke, tyed together with two winding bands, of ſuch length, that they may draw through their head betwixt them, ſo that theſe two quadrangular pieces may hang downe, one on his breſt, the other on his backe. In euery of thoſe foure corners hangeth a labell, made of white woollen threds, by a little knot, downewards to the ground, and the ſame is foure, or eight, or twelue fingers broad. Theſe labels they call Zizis. Thoſe which are deuout, weare this garment euery day, vnder a long outward coat, in ſuch ſort, that thoſe labels may appeare out a little, ſo that they may alwayes ſee them, as monitories of the Commandements of God. When they put them on, they praiſe God that hath commanded them to weare theſe Zizis. Hee (ſay they) that keepeth duely this Precept [c] of Zizis, doth as much as if hee kept the whole Law: for there are in all fiue knots, compared to the fiue bookes of Moſes: eight threds added to them, make thirteene. And the word Zizis, maketh ſixe hundred, altogether amounting to ſixe hunded and thirteene, the number (as you haue heard) of Gods Commandements. They aſcribe the continencie of Ioſeph in Potiphars houſe; and of Boaz, when Ruth ſlept by him, to the Zizis. May it pleaſe your patience, a ſtorie out of the Talmud. One Rab. Iochanan ſaw a boxe full of Iewels, which one of his Schollers, Bar-Emorai purpoſed to ſteale, but was forbidden by a voyce ſounding out of the ayre, Let it alone, Bar-Emorai, for it belongeth to R. Chaninas wife, which in the other world ſhall put into the ſame violet wooll, to make thred for Zizis, that of them, the iuſt men there may haue their fringed garments ſewed. Once, hee which weareth this garment without intermiſſion, is fortified againſt the Deuill, and alleuill Spirits.

c Num. 15. 38. Fringes and Phylacteries.

d Of their Tephillim.

[d] Beſides this memorable Veſtment, they weare a certaine knot neare their noſe, out of Deut. 6. 8. They ſhall bee frontlets betweene thine eyes. They make it thus: They take a little blacke foure-ſquare calfe-skin, which they fold eight times, that it may haue foure double folds and diſtinct breadths. They put into theſe, diſtinct Scriptures, the ſame being foure-fold of parchment. Theſe Scriptures are taken [e] out of Exod. 13. and Deut. 6. Then take they haires out of a Cow or Calues tayle, and waſh them cleane, and binde them about thoſe writings of Scripture, ſo that any one may ſee, that they are good, by the ends of them appearing out of the skin. This skinne they ſew with cleane and fine ſtrings, taken out of Calues or Kines bodies, or made of Bulls ſinewes, or if ſuch ſtrings cannot bee had, with ſtrings of Calue-skin-parchment. Then doe they ſew a long and blacke thong to that thick hide or skin, and knit a knot about it. This piece of worke they call Tephillim, to put them in minde of often prayer: and tye it ſo about their heads, that the thicke knot, wherein the Scriptures are, may hang betwixt the eyes. After this, they take another foure-cornered skin, which which they fold as the former, and write certaine verſes out of Exodus in parchment, and put it into a little hollowed skinne, and ſew it vpon the thicke-folded skin; to which they adde a long thong, and call it the Tephillim of the hand. This they tye to the bare skin, aboue the elbow of the left arme, that ſo that which is written may bee ouer-againſt the heart, which may hereby be the more enflamed to prayer. That long ſtring is ſo faſtned, that it commeth to the fore-part of the hand, thus fulfilling that Commandement, [f] The words which I command thee this day, ſhall bee on thine heart, and thou ſhalt tye them for a ſigne in thy hand. They tye on firſt this Tephillim of the hand, and then that of the head, and make their brachah or prayer, ſaying; Bleſſed bee thou, O God, our Lord, who haſt ſanctified vs in thy Commandements, and haſt commanded vs to put on Tephillim; looking, while hee ſpeaketh, diligently on the knot on his fore-head. In folding, ſewing, knitting, and tying them, they verie ſubtilly frame the name of God Schaddai: Other their manifold ceremonies about theſe Tephillim, I willingly omit. Their ſanctitie is ſuch, that he which weareth them, muſt be pure within and without: and if hee lets them fall on the ground, all that ſhall ſee them ſo lying, muſt faſt with him one whole day: they muſt not bee hanged vp bare, but in a bagge: nor may they be left in a chamber, where a man and his wife lye together, except in a triple cheſt or bagge. A man muſt not ſleepe while he hath them on, nor may hee breake winde; and if he haue liſt to the ſtoole, he muſt lay them foure ells from the place of his eaſement, or lay them againſt his heart in a double bagge. Their women ſeruants, and ſicke folkes, are free from wearing them. It is ſufficient for women to ſay Amen to their prayers. And all this Moſes learned in Mount Sinai.

§. III.

Of their Schoole or Synagogue, Rites, and their Mattins.

WEE haue beene tedious in furniſhing our Iew to his Mattins; at Sun-riſing is their houre, as you haue heard: but their Rabbins haue inlarged and lengthened that time to about nine of the clocke. Where many of the Iewes liue together, they reſort at a ſet houre to their Synagogue. Thither they muſt goe cheerfully: before their Synagogue they haue an Yron faſtned, to make cleane their ſhooes, according to Salomons counſell, [g] Keepe thy foote when thou goeſt into the houſe of God. He that hath Pantofles, muſt put them off, as it is written, [h] For the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground. At the entrance in at the doore, he pronounceth ſome things out of Dauids Pſalmes: they muſt enter with feare and trembling, conſidering whoſe preſence it is; and for a while ſuſpend their praying for the better attention. And euerie Iew muſt caſt in a halfe-penie at leaſt into the Treaſurie, as it is written; I will ſee thy face in righteouſneſſe, that is, in almes, as they interpret it. In this attention they bow themſelues towards the Arke, in which is the booke of the Law, and ſay, [i] How faire are thy Tents, O IACOB? and thy dwellings, O Iſrael? And [k] I will enter into thy houſe in the multitude of thy mercie, I will bow downe in thy holy Temple in thy feare. And, [l] O Lord, I haue loued the habitation of thy houſe, and the place of the Tabernacle of thy glorie: and diuers other verſes out of the Pſalme. After theſe things they begin to pray, as is contained in their common Prayer-booke; and becauſe theſe prayers are verie many, therefore they runne them ouer; hee that cannot reade, muſt attend and ſay Amen, to all their prayers. Theſe prayers are in Hebrew rimes. Their firſt prayer is, The Lord of the World, which raigned before any thing was created, at that time, when according to his will they were created, was called King, to whom ſhall bee giuen feare and honour. He alway hath beene, is, and ſhall remaine in his beautie for euer. Hee is One, and beſides him there is none other, which may bee compared or aſſociated to him, without beginning and end; with him is rule and ſtrength. He is my GOD and my deliuerer which liueth. He is my Rocke in my need, and time of my trouble, my Banner, my Refuge; my Hereditarie portion, in that day, when I implore his helpe. Into his hands I commend my Spirit. Whether I wake or ſleepe, hee is with me, therefore I will not be afraid.

This done, they ſay then their hundreth [m] benedictions one after another, which are ſhort, and twice a day repeated. Firſt, for the waſhing of their hands, that if hee then forgot it, he might now in the Congregation recite it. Then for the creation of man, and for that hee was made full of holes, whereof, if one ſhould bee ſtopped, he ſhould dye: then a confeſſion of the Reſurrection: then for vnderſtanding giuen to the Cocke (as you haue heard)

It is ſaid, a man ought to couer his head when hee prayeth, becauſe he ſtandeth before God with feare and trembling, and *Cap.*6. he giueth a reaſon why a man is bare, a woman couered, becauſe ſaith he, Eue firſt ſinned.

Then adde they two prayers to be preſerued againſt ſinnes, euill ſpirits, and men, and all euill. After this, humbling themſelues before GOD, they confeſſe their ſinnes, and againe comfort themſelues in the couenant made to Abraham, Wee are thy people, and the children of thy Couenant,&c. O happie wee! how good is our portion? how ſweet is our lot? how faire is our heritage? Oh happie we, who euery morning and euening may ſay, Heare, Iſrael, The Lord our Lord is one God. Gather vs that hope in thee from the foure ends of all the earth, that all the inhabitants of the earth may know that thou art our God,&c. Our Father which art in Heauen, be mercifull vnto vs for thy names ſake, which is called vpon vs: and confirme in vs that which is written, [n] At that time will I bring you, and gather you, and make you for a name and praiſe among all the people of the earth, when I ſhall turne your captiuities, ſaith the Lord.

n *Zephan.*3.20

Then follow two ſhort prayers for the Law giuen them. And then they goe on to the Sacrifices, which, becauſe they cannot execute in action out of the Temple, they redeeme with words, reading the precepts concerning ſacrifices, according to their times, comforting themſelues with the ſaying of HOSE, [o] We will ſacrifice the calues of our lippes. Then repeat they an Hiſtorie of Sacrifice, and a Prayer of the vſe of the Law, and how many wayes it may bee expounded. This done, they (with a ſtill voyce that none can heare) pray for the re-edifying of the Temple, in theſe words; Let thy will bee before thy face, O GOD our Lord, Lord of our Fathers, that the holy houſe of thy Temple may bee reſtored in our dayes, and grant vs thy will in thy Law. After, riſing with great ioy and clamour, they ſing a prayer of prayſe in hope hereof; and ſitting downe againe, they reade a long prayer, gathered heere and there out of the Pſalmes; and ſome whole Pſalmes, and part of 1. *Chron.*30. And laſtly, the laſt words of Obadiah, [p] The Sauiours ſhall aſcend into Mount Sion, to iudge the Mount of Eſau, and the Kingdome ſhall bee the Lords. Which they ſpeake in hope of the deſtruction of the Chriſtians, whom they call Edomites, and of their owne reſtitution. (In ſome of their cloſe writings, which they will not ſuffer to come into the hands of Chriſtians, they ſay that the ſoule of Edom entered into the bodie of Chriſt, and that both hee and wee are no better then Eſau.) They proceed [q] ſinging, And God ſhall bee King ouer all the earth: In that day GOD ſhall bee one, and his name one, as it is written in thy Law, O GOD, Heare, Iſrael, GOD our GOD is one GOD: And theſe words in their next Prayer they repeat, reſounding that laſt word [r] One, by the halfe or whole houre together, looking vp to Heauen: and when they come to the laſt letter thereof, Daleth, d. they all turne their heads to the foure corners and windes of the World, ſignifying that GOD is King of the whole world: hauing in the word, Echad, many ſuperſtitious ſubtilties; that the letter Daleth in regard of his place in the Alphabet, ſignifieth foure; and the word Echad contayneth in numerall letters two hundred fortie and fiue, whereunto adding three hael elohechem emes, God our Lord is true, they make vp the number of two hundred fortie and eight, and ſo many members there are in mans bodie: for euerie member, a prayer ſecures them all. And this verſe thrice recited, ſecureth againſt the ill ſpirit. They [s] eſteeme it a holy prayer, by which miracles may bee wrought, and therefore vſe it morning and euening. They haue another prayer called Schone eſre, that is, eighteene, becauſe it contayneth ſo many thankeſgiuing, which they ſay twice a day, and the chiefe chanter of the Synagogue ſingeth it twice by himſelfe. They thinke by this prayer to obtaine remiſſion of their ſinnes. They muſt pray it ſtanding ſo, that one foot muſt not ſtand more on the ground then the other, like the Angels: [t] And their foote was a right foote. When they come to thoſe words in it, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of hoſts; they leape vp three times aloft. And hee (ſay their Chachamim) which ſpeaketh a word during this prayer, ſhall haue burning coales giuen him to eate after his death. Theſe eighteene thankſgiuings, are for the eighteene bones in the chine or back-bone, which muſt in ſaying hereof be bended.

After this, followeth a prayer against the Iewes reuolted to Christianitie, and against all Christians, saying; These which are blotted out (that is, reuolters) shall haue no more hope, and all vnbeleeuers shall perish in the twinkling of an eye, and all thine enemies which hate thee, O GOD, shall be destroyed, and the proud and presumptuous Kingdome shall quickly be rooted out, broken, layd euen with the ground, and at last shall vtterly perish, and thou shalt make them presently in our dayes obedient to vs. Blessed art thou God, which breakest and subduest them which are rebellious. They call the Turkish Empire the Kingdome of Ismael; the Roman, Edomiticall, proud, &c. They are [u] themselues indeed exceeding proud, impatient, and desirous of reuenge. The Talmud sayth, That the lying spirit in the mouth of Achabs Prophets, which perswaded him to goe and fall at Ramoth Gilead, was none other but the spirit of [x] Naboth, whom hee had before slaine. And [y] Victor Carbonsis, a Christian Iew, testifieth, That there are not vnder heauen a more quarrelsome people, themselues acknowledging the Christians farre meeker then themselues: when they haue this Prouerb, that the modestie of the Christians, the wisedome and industrie of the Heathens, and faith of the Iewes, are the three pillers which sustaine the world.

But to returne to their deuotions: After those other before mentioned, followeth a prayer for the good sort, for Proselytes, reedifying of the Temple, for sending the Messias, and restauration of their Kingdome. In the end they pray GOD to keepe them in peace, and when they come to these words, Hee that makes peace aboue, shall make peace ouer all Israel, Amen: they goe backe three paces, bow themselues downewards, bend their head on the right hand, then on the left: (if some Christian bee there with an Image, they must not bow, but lift vp their heart.) This they doe for honours sake, not to turne their hinder parts on the Arke: and thus they goe (like Crabbes) out of the Synagogue, vsing certaine prayers; not running, but with a slow pace, lest they should seeme glad, that their Mattins were done.

Other their niceties in praying, as laying the right hand on the left ouer the heart; not spetting nor breaking winde vp or downe; not (interrupted by a King) to cease prayer; to shake his bodie this way and that way; not to touch his naked bodie; and to say Amen, with all his heart: for they that say Amen, are worthie to say it in the world to come. And therefore [z] Dauid endeth a Psalme with Amen, Amen: signifying that one is to bee said heere, and the other in the other world: also in a plaine eminent place, purged from all filth, freed from the sight of women, his face to the East, standing, his feet close together, fixing his eyes on the ground, eleuating the heart to heauen, &c. I hold it enough thus to mention.

P. Ric. prec. affirmat. 19.

z Psal. 72. 19.

Their praying to the East must be vnderstood from our Westerne parts, because Ierusalem standeth that way: for otherwise Rambam * sheweth that Abraham prayed in Mount Moriah toward the West; and the Sanctum Sanctorum was in the West, which place also Abraham set forth and determined. And because the Gentiles worshipped the Sunne toward the rising, therefore Abraham worshipped Westward, and appointed the Sanctuarie so to stand. The Talmud saith, Praying to the South bringeth wisdome; toward the North, riches.

* Mor. Neb. l. 3. cap. 64.

I might heere also adde their Letanie and Commemoration of their Saints almost after the Popish fashion. As thus for a taste. Wee haue sinned before thee, haue mercie on vs. O Lord, doe it for thy names sake, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for (Abraham) thy perfect one, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was bound in thy porches, (to wit, in Mount Moriah, where the Temple was afterward builded) and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for him which was heard in the ladder (Iacob) from thy high place, and spare Israel thy people. Lord, doe it for the merit of Ioseph thy holy one, &c. Lord doe it for him which was drawne out of the waters (Moses) and spare, &c. Lord, doe it for (Aaron) the Priest, with Vrim and Thummim. Lord, grant it for him that was zealous for thy name (Phineas.) Lord, doe it for the sweet Singer (Dauid.) Lord, doe it for him which built thine house. They name not any, but expresse him after this sort. And then proceed in like manner, with the titles, attributes, and workes of GOD. Doe it for thy Name, Doe it for thy Goodnesse, for thy Couenant, thy Law, thy Glorie, &c. in seuerall versicles. And then to their Saints in a new passage. Doe it for Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. Doe it for Moses and Aaron, for Dauid and Salomon (as if their combined forces should effect more then single.) Doe it for Ierusalem the holy Citie, for Sion, for the destruction of thy house, for the poore Israelites, for the bare Israelites, for the miserable Israelites, for the Widdowes and Orphans, for the sucking and wained; and if not for our sake, yet for thine owne sake. Then in another forme, Thou which heerest the poore, heare vs; thou which heerest the oppressed, heare vs: Thou which heardest Abraham, &c. With renuing a commemoration of their Saints larger then before: and (after some repeating the diuine titles) in another tune they oppose their Saint and wicked ones together: as Remember not the lye of Achan, but remember Iosua, forgiuing him, and remember Heli and Samuel, and so on in a tedious length.

Of their Ceremonies at home, after their returne, at their Meales and otherwise: and of their Euening Prayer.

Buxdorf c. 67. a Relation of Religion in the West.

THus haue wee seene the Iewish Mattens, which they chant, (sayth [a] another) in a strange wilde hallowing tune, imitating sometimes Trumpets, and one ecchoing to the other, and winding vp by degrees from a soft and silent whispering, to the highest and loudest notes that their voyces will beare, with much varietie of gesture: kneeling they vse none, no more then doe the Græcians: they burne Lampes: but for shew of Deuotion or Eleuation of Spirit, that yet in Iewes could I neuer discerne: for they are reuerend in their Synagogues, as Grammar boyes are at Schoole, when their Master is absent. In summe, their holinesse is the verie outward worke it selfe, being a brainlesse head, and a soulelesse bodie. Meanewhile, the good-wife at home, against her husbands returne, sweepeth the house, that nothing may disturbe his holy cogitations, and layeth him a booke on the Table, either the Pentateuch of Moses, or a booke of Manners, to reade therein the space of an houre, before he goeth out of the house about his businesse. This studie is required of euerie deuout Iew, eyther in his owne house, or else in their Schoole or Synagogue. And being thus come home, they lay vp their Tephillim in a Cheſt, first that of the head, then that of the hand.

g Robin good-fellow, or the spirit of the buttery among the Iewes. Concerning Angels, it is thus writen in the booke Aboth, fol. 83. from the earth to the firmament all is full of troupes and rulers, and below are many hurtfull and accusing creatures, which all haue their abode in the ayre, no place being free, of which some are for peace, some for warre, some prouoke to good, some to euill, to life and death, &c. Drus. lib. 7. tract. They say the Angell Raziel is Gods Secretarie, of which name are two Cabalisticall bookes. Elias Thysb. Samael is the Diuell. Euerie one hath two Angels, one at his right hand, the other at his left. Rambam. M. N. lib. 3. 23.

They account it healthfull also to eate somewhat in the morning, before they goe to worke: for whereas there are threescore and three diseases of the gall, a bit of Bread, or a draught of Wine can cure them all. About eleuen of cloeke his wife hath prepared his dinner pure meates, purely dressed; but if she haue Pullen or Cattell, shee must first feed them. For it is said, [b] I will giue grasse in thy field for thy Cattell, and thou shalt eate and bee satisfied: you see, the Cattell are first mentioned. And to keepe such Domesticall cattell, is good in respect of the disasterous motions of the Planets, which must some way sort to effect. But if they bee studious of almes, and good works, then Saphyra Rabba the great Chancellor (some Angell) according to his office, registreth the same, and commendeth them vnto GOD, saying; Turne away that planetarie misfortune from such a one, for hee hath done these, and these good workes. And then doth it befall some wicked man, or else some of the Cattell. Before they come to the Table, they must make tryall againe in the priuie what they can doe: for it is written, [e] Thou shalt carry out the old, because of the new. Especially let there bee cleane water, wherein the houshold must first wash, then the wife, and lastly the good-man, who presently without touching or speaking ought else, might more purely giue thankes. Hee (sayth R. Iose in the [d] Talmud) that eateth with vnwashen hands, is as hee that lyeth with an Harlot, for it is written: [e] For the strange woman a man commeth to a morsell of bread. They must wash before meat and after, so strictly, that they may not keepe on a Ring on their finger, for feare of some vncleannesse remaining vnder it. I had rather (sayth R. Akiba) dye for thirst, then neglect this washing tradition of the Elders; when hee had onely so much water brought him into prison, as might serue him but to one vse of washing or drinking, at his owne choyse.

On the Table cleanely spred, must bee set a whole loafe well baked, and the salt, and then the housholder or the chiefest Rabbi at Table, taketh the loafe into his hands, and in the cleanest and best baked part thereof, maketh a cut into it, and then setting it downe, and spreading his hands on it, saith, Blessed art thou Lord God, King of the world, who bringest Bread out of the earth: and then breaketh off that piece of bread which hee had cut before, and dipping it into the salt or broath, eateth it, without speaking a word; for if hee speake, he must say ouer his Grace againe: After this, hee taketh the loafe, and cutteth for the rest. Then hee taketh a cup of Wine [f] (if they haue any) with both hands, and with the right hand holdeth it vp a handfull higher then the Table, and looking stedfastly on the cup, saith, Blessed, &c. who hast made the fruit of the Vine. Ouer water they pronounce no blessing: and if there bee not three at least at the Table, each man must blesse for himselfe: If three or more, the rest say, Amen. Salt is religiously set on in remembrance of the Sacrifices. If when they cut, they should cut off the piece of bread, it would offend GOD. Both hands they spread ouer the loafe, in memorie of the ten Commandements, which GOD hath published concerning Wheat, of which bread is made. The bread must bee had in speciall honour, no vessell supported with it, or set vpon it: and a spirit [g] called Nabal giueth attendance, as deputed to obserue such as (through negligence) tread it vnder foote, and to bring them into pouertie: and another man (dogged by this spirit, which sought to bring him to pouertie) eating victuals one day on the grasse in the field, the spirit hoped to effect his purpose: but this deuout Iew, after he had eaten, pared away the grasse, and threw it with the crummes scattered into it, into the Sea for the fishes, and presently heard a voyce, saying; Woe is me foole, who haue attended to punish this man, and cannot haue occasion. They dreame that Elias and euerie mans proper Angell attendeth at Table, to heare what is said, if they talke of the Law; otherwise an ill Angell commeth, and causeth brawles and diseases; and in respect of these spirituall attendants, they cast not their bones beside or behind them. They are curious not to eate flesh and fish together: but first flesh, and then scoure their teeth from the flesh, and eate a bit of bread, and drinke a draught of drinke before they eate the fish. They must not vse the same knife to meats made of milke, which they vsed in eating flesh. Milke must not stand on the table with flesh, nor touch it.

Besides the 23. Psalme set before them in the meale-time, they testifie their deuotion by multitudes of new graces or thankesgiuings, if any better wine or dainties bee set before them, yea, besides the particulers of their cates, euen for euery good sent, as of Oyle, Roses, Spices, &c. and are of opinion, that to vse any thing without thankesgiuing, is to vsurpe and steale it. Let this bee spoken to the shame of many prophane Esaus with vs, that will rather sell Gods blessings for their meat, then seeke them to their meat; although in them the payment of these by tale, and not by weight, is no better then a bead-superstition. They make a religion of leauing some leauings of their bread on the [h] table; but to leaue a knife there were dangerous, euer since that a Iew once in the rehearsing that part of their grace after meat, which concerneth the re-edifying of Ierusalem, in a deepe agonie tooke his knife so left, and thrust into his heart. This their grace is long, containing a commemoration of the benefits vouchsafed their fore-fathers, and a prayer for regranting the same to send Elias and the Messias; and that they may not be brought to begge or borrow of the Christians: and for his blessing vpon all that house, &c. whereunto is answered with a loud voyce, Amen: and they say to themselues: [i] Feare the Lord, yee his Saints, for they that feare him, haue no want: the Lions lacke and suffer hunger, but they which seeke the Lord, shall want nothing that is good: and while this is said, there must not a crumme bee left in their mouthes. The prayers must bee in that place where they haue eaten: or else they shall lose the benefit of buriall: and a certaine deuout Iew in the field, remembring that he had forgotten his grace, returned backe to the house, and there performing his dutie, had miraculously sent vnto him a doue of gold.

h Hee that leaues nothing on the Table, shall not bee prosperous. Sanhed. C. helek.

Then goeth their Chorister out of his Pulpit, and kneeleth downe vpon the steps before the Arke, and falleth downe with his face on his left hand (all the people doing likewise) saying, O mercifull and gracious God, I haue sinned in thy sight, but thou art full of mercy: be mercifull vnto me, and receiue my prayer proceeding from an humble heart. Reproue mee not, O Lord, in thy wrath, nor correct mee in thine anger, and so proceedeth through that whole sixt Psalme, his countenance couered and inclined to the ground. This is done in imitation [m] of Ioshua. Then the Præcentor or chiefe Chorister againe rising vp, saith: And we know not what to doe, but that wee direct our eyes vnto thee. Now should they goe home, and after supper returne to performe their Night-deuotions: but because a full belly would rather be at rest, and might easily forget his dutie, after some pawse and stay, they proceed before they goe to their other taske: and in that time of pawsing betweene their vespers and nocturnes, if there bee any strife betweene any, and reconciliation cannot be made, then hee which cannot reconcile his neighbour, goeth to the common prayer-booke, and shutting it, knocketh thereon with his hand, saying, anikelao, I conclude the businesse; as if he should say, I conclude praying, till mine aduersarie be reconciled to me: vntill which thing be effected, they may not pray further: and so sometimes their prayers are intermitted then and diuers dayes together, if one partie will be stubborne. These prayers are for substance much like the former: as against the Christians, and for their owne restitution by their Messias. They depart out of the Synagogue with repetition of those sentences mentioned in the former Chapter.

Their weekely obseruation of Times, viz. Their Mundayes and Thursdayes, and Sabbath.

§. I. 20

Of their Mundayes and Thursdayes.

a Tract.Rabba Kama.c.7.

HItherto haue wee heard of their prayers euery day obserued. They haue also their times designed to the reading of the Law. In the a Talmud is reported, that Ezra in the Babylonian Captiuitie was Author vnto the Iewes of ten Commandements. First, that on the Sabbath: secondly, on Munday and Thursday, with singular solemnitie, some part of the Law should bee read: thirdly, that Thursday should be Court or Law-day for deciding controuersies: fourthly, that it should bee a day of washing, sweeping, and cleansing in honour 30 of the Sabbath: fiftly, that men should then eate Leekes: the sixt, that women should arise and bake their Bread so earely, that at Sunne rising they might giue a poore man a piece of bread: the seuenth, that they should for modesties sake gird their Linnen to them: the eighth, that in the Bathes they should combe and part their haires verie carefully: the ninth, about selling their commodities to Marchants, and buying womanly ornaments for the honour of their feasts, and pleasing their husbands: the last is, of cleansing after vncleane issues.
b Exod.15.22. Their learned men confirme this institution of Ezra, by authoritie of Scripture, b They went three dayes in the desart, and found no waters. By waters they vnderstand the Law: For so it is said, Esay 55.1. Come yee to the waters: that is, to the Law: and therefore they ought not to let three dayes passe without some solemne reading of the Law. Munday, and Thursday, 40 are chosen to bee the dayes, because on c Thursday Moses went the second time into the c Li.Musar.c.4 Mount, and returned with the two Tables on the Munday, on which day d also the Tem-d Princip.sap. ap.Druſ. ple was destroyed, and the Law burnt.

This their deuotion is as ancient, as that Pharisee, Luke 18. I fast twice in the weeke; that which e the most deuout amongst them doe to this day obserue. Yea, it seemeth the deuouter sort fast foure dayes, saith f another, on Munday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday; the first for Mariners and trauellers by Sea, the next for such as passe thorow desart places, the third for Children which are troubled with the Squinancie: (of this g Elias Lenita testifieth, that after the beginning of the World it first assayled children, and after that, men; so that sometimes when they neezed, their spirit fled away and they dyed, whence 50 came that custome of saluting and praying well to men h in neezing. The strangling of Achitophel, they also interpret of this neezing farewell.) The fourth dayes fast is for Women which are with childe or giue sucke: but the Tuesday and Wednesday in likelyhood were not ordinarie, as the other. Sunday might not bee thus honoured being the Christian Sabbath; and Friday was the preparatiue to their owne. Those two dayes are generally halfe holy-dayes. Assembling earely in their Synagogues, besides their ordinarie prayers they annexe many other. Among others they vse one Prayer called Veburachum, of miraculous effect, as appeared in Vespatians time, who committing three Ships full of Iewes, without Oare or Mariner to the wide Seas, which arriued in three seuerall regions, Louanda, Arlado, Burdeli (worke for Geographers:) Those which arriued in this last port, by tyrannicall Edict of the King, were to be tryed whether they were true Iewes, as Hananias, Misael, 60 and Azarias made proofe of their Religion. Whereupon three dayes being required (as they they said Nebuchadnezzar had granted them) wherein to betake themselues to fasting and prayer: in this time of respite three deuout Iewes, Ioseph, Beniamin and Samuel, inuened each of them a prayer, which they ioyned into one, and continued in praying, the same three dayes, at the end whereof they cast themselues into the fire, and there continued till it was consumed. Hence arose this ordinance euery Munday and Thursday to vse the same prayer, which is this; And hee is mercifull, and pardoning sinne doth not destroy the sinner. Hee often turneth his anger from vs, and doth not kindle all his wrath. Thou, O my God, suffer me not to want thy mercie: let thy gentlenesse and truth keepe mee alwayes. Helpe vs, O God, our God, and gather vs from the Gentiles, &c. for their restitution, as in other their prayers and destruction of their enemies, the Christians. After this they prostrate themselues on their faces (as before) with many other orisons to the like effect.

§. II.

Of their Law-Lectures.

THeir solemne ceremonie of the Law-lecture followeth; In all [i] their Synagogues they haue the fiue bookes of Moses, written in great letters on Parchments of Calues-skins, sowed together in length, which at both ends are fastened to pieces of wood, by which the booke may be lifted and carried. This booke is kept in an Arke or Chest set in some wall of the Synagogue. Before the doores of the Arke is a hanging of Tapestrie, more or lesse precious, according to the qualitie of their Feasts, and for the most part wrought with Bird-worke. The booke is wrapped in a linnen-cloath, wrought with Hebrew words: without that, is hanged about some other cloath of Linnen, Silke, Veluet, or Gold, to which is fastened a plate of Siluer by a chayne of Gold, vpon the which is written, The crowne of the Law, or holinesse of the Lord. Then goeth one about, crying, Who will buy [k] Gelilah etzchaym. This is an office whereby they are authorized to handle those pieces of wood, and to open the booke of the Law. Hee which giueth most for it, hath it: the money is reserued for the poore. The pieces of wood are called etzchaym, tree of life, according to [l] Salomon: Wisedome is a tree of life to them that lay holde thereon. When the [m] chiefe Chanter hath taken out the booke, and goeth with it into the Pulpit, they all sing out of Num. 10. 35. Arise, O Lord, and let thine enemies bee scattered, and let them that hate thee, flye before thee: And out of Esay 2. 3. Many people shall goe and say, Come let vs ascend to the mount of the Lord, to the house of the God of IACOB, and hee shall teach vs his wayes, and wee will walke in his pathes; for the Law shall goe out of Sion, and the Word of the Lord from Ierusalem. When this Precentor layeth the booke on his arme, hee saith, [n] Magnifie the Lord with mee, and let vs exalt his name together: to which all the people answer, [o] Exalt yee the Lord our God, and bow before his foot-stoole, for it is holy: exalt yee the Lord our God, and bow to the mountaine of his holinesse, for Iehouah our God is holy. There, vpon a Table couered with silke, hee layeth downe the booke; and he which hath bought the Office, taketh from it the cloathes wherein it is wrapped. Then these two call some one of the Congregation by his owne and his Fathers name, who commeth foorth and kisseth the booke, not on the bare Parchment (for that were a sinne) but on the cloathes which couer it; and taking it by those pieces of wood, saith aloud, Praise the Lord, &c. Blessed bee thou, O Lord, who hast chosen vs before any other people, and giuen vs thy Law. Blessed bee thou, O God, the Law-giuer. Then the Precentor readeth a Chapter out of the booke; and then hee which was called foorth, with like kissing and blessing returneth. Then another is called foorth, and doth likewise. After him another, who had need bee of strong armes: for hee lifteth vp and carrieth this booke that all may see it, all crying, This is the Law which Moses gaue to the Israelites. This Office is called Hagbahah, and is sold as the former. The women meane-while contend amongst themselues in this Synagogue by some Lattice, to haue a sight of the Law: for the women haue a Synagogue apart seuered with Lattices, so (besides their pretence of modestie) to fulfill the saying of Zacharie, [p] The family of Dauid shall mourne apart, and their wiues apart, &c. If he which carrieth the booke, should stumble or fall, it were ominous, and should portend much euill. These two Officers fold vp the booke as before; and then come all and kisse the same, and then it is carried to his place with singing. After this they end their Prayers as at other times, saying, Lord, leade mee in thy righteousnesse, because of mine enemies, direct thy way before me: And, The Lord keepe my going out and comming in from henceforth for euer. Which they also say when they goe foorth on a iourney or to worke.

Of the Iewiſh Sabbath.

THey prepare q themſelues to the obſeruation of their Sabbath, by diligent prouiſion on the Friday before night of the beſt meates well dreſſed; eſpecially the women prouide them good Cakes. They honour the Sabbath with three bankets: firſt, on the Friday night when their Sabbath beginneth, another on the Sabbath day at noone: the third before ſunne-ſet. r Eate yee it to day, to day is the Sabbath of the Lord, to day yee ſhall not find it (Manna) in the field: do you not ſee To day thrice mentioned, and therefore by Moſes owne ordaining, that Manna muſt ſo often bee eaten on the Sabbath? The richeſt Iewes and moſt learned Rabbins diſdaine not ſome or other office, as chopping of hearbs, kindling the fire, or ſomewhat toward this preparation. The Table remaineth couered all that night and day. They waſh, and if need bee, ſhaue their heads on the Friday, and very religiouſly cut their nayles, beginning with the fourth finger of the left hand, and next with the ſecond, then with the fifth, thence to the third, and laſt to the thumbe, ſtill leaping ouer one: in the right hand they begin with the ſecond finger, and after proceed to the fourth, and ſo forth. Theſe parings if they treade vnderfoot, it is a great ſinne; but hee which burieth them, is a iuſt man, or which burneth them. Now muſt they alſo whet their kniues, and put on their Sabbath-holy-day-rayment, to ſalute Malchah the Queene, ſo they terme the Sabbath. The Clarke goeth about and giueth warning of the Sabbath; and when the Sunne is now ready to ſet, the women light their Sabbath-Lampes in their dining roomes, and ſtretching out their hands toward it, ſay ouer a bleſſing. If they cannot ſee the Sunne, they take warning by the Hennes flying to rooſt. The cauſe why the women now and at other feaſts light the Lampes, is Magiſtrally determined by the s Rabbins, becauſe Eue cauſed her husband to ſinne, yea, with a cudgell belaboured him, and compelled him to eate, which they gather out of his words, t The Woman gaue mee of the tree (to wit, a ſound rib-roſting) and I did eate. Now after they had eaten, the ſunne which before ſhined, as it ſhall doe in the other life, diminiſhed his light, and for dimming that light, ſhee lightens this. And for three cauſes (you ſhall beleeue their u Talmud) women dye in trauell; for forgetting their dough wherewith to make Cakes with Oyle, Exod. 25. for neglecting their termes; and not lighting the Sabbath-Lampes which their Cabaliſts gather out of three letters of the name of Eue or Chauah. Theſe lights are two or more, according to condition of the roome.

They begin their Sabbath thus ſoone, and end it alſo later then the iuſt time, in commiſeration of the Purgatory-ſoules, which begin and end with them this Sabbaths-reſt, being the whole weeke beſides tormented in that fire. Iudas himſelfe, in honour of the Chriſtian Sabbath, from Saturday Eeuen-ſong obtained like priuiledge: witneſſe Saint Brandon in the Legend (can you refuſe him?) who found him cooling himſelfe in the Sea, ſitting vpon a ſtone which hee had ſometime remoued out of a place, where it was needleſſe, into the high-way. (So meritorious euen in Iudas is any the leaſt good worke.) x There did Iudas acquaint Brandon with this Sunday-refreſhing of the helliſh priſoners, and deſired his holy company to ſcarre away the diuels, when they ſhould after Sunday Eeuen-ſong come to fetch him againe, which for that time Brandon granted and performed.

The Iewes will not quite emptie any place of water, that on the Sabbath theſe fierie ſoules may finde where to coole them. Two Angels attend them home from the Synagogue, one good, and the other euill, which if they finde all things well, that is, Iewiſhly prepared for the Sabbaths honor, the good Angell ſaith, It ſhall be ſo the next Sabbath, and the euill Angell (will he, nill he) anſwereth, Amen. If otherwiſe, the good Angell is forced to ſay Amen to the euill Angels denunciation of the contrary. They feaſt it with much ceremonie, pronouncing their bleſſing on the wine: with looking on the Lampe, to repaire that fiftieth part of their eye-ſight, which they ſay in the weeke time ordinarily is waſted: they couer the bread meane-while, that it ſhould not ſee the ſhame thereof, in that the Wine is bleſſed, for the Sabbaths vſe before it. This good cheare on the Sabbath is of ſuch conſequence, that for this cauſe in their y Talmud is reported, that a Butcher in Cyprus, which ſtill reſerued his beſt meates for the Sabbath, grew by Diuine reward ſo rich, that his Table and all his Table-furniture were of gold. You may receiue with like credite the Legend of Ioſeph following, who buying continually the beſt Fiſh, to honour the Sabbath with it, found in the belly of one of theſe Sabbath-fiſhes, a Hat-band of Pearles, worth no leſſe then a Kingdome. The Table remaineth ſpred till the next night. The Lampes muſt not bee put out, nor the light thereof applyed to the killing of fleas, to reading or writing, &c. The good man man must honour that night with more kindnesse to his wife, then on other nights: therefore eate they Leekes before: Therefore also they marry on the Sabbath: and the children then conceiued, must needes be [z] wise and fortunate. If a Iew trauell, and on Friday Eeuening be further from his home, then a Sabbaths-dayes-iourney, he must there abide, be it in the midst of a Wood or Wildernes till the Sabbath be past. They sleepe longer on the Sabbath morning; so with their greater pleasure to honour it. They then vse more prayers in their Synagogues; and reade seuen Lectures of the Law. They now also reade the Prophets. They stay here till noone, and no longer, lest by longer fasting and praying they should breake the Propheticall commandement, [a] Thou shalt call my Sabbath a delight. After dinner also they reade in their Law: for [b] on a time, the Sabbath and the Law put vp their complaints to God for want of a companion and learner, and the Israelites were giuen as a companion to the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath a learner of the Law. But for all this they talke not more busily all the weeke through of Vsurie, buying and selling, then on the Sabbath, and haue their trickes to deceiue God Almighty. Their Eeuen-song they haue soone done, that they might returne, and while the day yet lasteth, make an end of their third banquet, by which they are secured against Hell, and against Gog and Magog: They conclude it with blessings and singings, till it bee late, to prolong the returne of the soules into Hell: for presently after they haue ended, there is proclamation through hell, to recall them to their dungeons. In these Songs they call vpon Elias to come; so iustly are they deluded, who scoffingly imputed vnto [c] Christ the calling of Elias. But their Elias being busie (as he sometime said of Ahabs Baal) and not comming, then they request him to come the next Sabbath. But he (it seemeth) is loth to leaue his place vnder the Tree of life in Paradise: where he standeth (say they) enrolling their good workes in the keeping of the Sabbath. When this their deuotion is done, the women in haste run to draw water, because the Fountaine of Mirriam, *Num.*20. flowing into the Sea of Tiberias, doth from thence emptie it selfe in the end of the Sabbath into all Fountaines, and is very medicinable. After this doe the Iewes make a diuision betweene the Sabbath and the new weeke. The Householder lighteth a great Candle, called, The Candle of Distinction: at whose light he vieweth his walls, [d] blesseth a cup of Wine, and a little siluer boxe full of sweet spices, powreth a little of the Wine on the ground, and applieth the boxe to euery ones nose to smell to, thus to remedie the stinke, which is caused at the new opening of hell for the returne of the soules: or else to keepe them from swowning at the departure of one of their soules. For they are of opinion, that themselues haue a superfluous Sabbatharie soule, which on that day is plentifully sent into them, to inlarge their heart, and to expell care and sorrow. Antonius Margarita affirmeth, that they dreame of three soules in each man, besides the Sabbatharie soule, two of which leaue him in his sleepe; one mounting to Heauen, where it learneth things to come; the other called brutish, contemplating sinne and vanitie. The viewing of their nailes at the candle, is in remembrance of Adams nakednesse, all sauing where the nailes couered his fingers and toes ends. The wine they powre on the ground, to refresh Corah and his complices vnder the ground.

For their Sabbath-workes they are determined Rabbinically: a horse may haue a halter, or a bridle to leade, but not a saddle to lade him: and he that leadeth him, must not let it hang so loose, that it may seeme he rather carrieth it, then leadeth the horse: A Henne may not weare her hose sewed about her legge, but this marke must on friday be taken off. And if any cattell fall into a pit, yet may they not helpe it out on the Sabbath: so spitefully haue their Talmudicall Rabbins endeuoured to make (where they could not finde) a falshood in the [e] wordes of Christ, testifying the contrary: But from the beginning it was not thus. The Iew may not milke his cattell, nor eate of the milke when he hath procured a Christian to milke them, except he first buy it but at his owne price. A Taylor may not weare a needle sticking on his garment. The lame may vse a staffe: the blind may not. Clogges or Pattens to keepe them out of the durt they may not burthen themselues with. It is lawfull to carrie a plaister on their sores, but if it fall [f] off, they may not lay it on againe; nor may they binde vp a wound a new; nor carry money in their purses or garments; nor rubbe their durtie shooes against the ground, though they may wipe it off against a wall; nor wipe their hands, fouled with durt on a Towell, but with a Cowes or Horse-taile they may doe it. If a Flea bite, hee may remoue it, but not kill it; a Lowse hee may. But their Doctors disagree in this lowsie question: for R. Eliezer saith, One may as well kill a Camell. If a Flie [g] light on meate, or a Spider runne thereon, it may not bee remoued: they will let men take their money vpon pawnes, but not deliuer it themselues; as the Franciscan hath his boy to take your almes, which his vow will not suffer his holy fingers to touch. He must take heede of leaping more corne to fowles that day then they shall eate, if it be in an open place, lest it may there

CHAP. XVIII.

The Iewiſh Paſſe-ouer, as they now obſerue it, and other their Feaſts and Faſts.

§. I.

Of their Paſſe-ouer.

Buxdorf. Syn. Iud.

OF the Iewiſh Feaſts, as they were celebrated before the comming of Chriſt, wee haue alreadie ſpoken. In theſe dayes they blindly and ſtubbornly perſiſt in like Obſeruation of times, though with ſome variation of ceremonie. Their Talmud reckoneth foure New-yeeres dayes; one [a] in March, and another in September, whereof wee haue ſpoken. The firſt of Auguſt beginneth their yeere of breeding Cattell, accounting from thence their time of Tything. In Ianuarie the firſt, or, as R. Hillel would haue it, the fifteenth began their new yeere for Trees, in reckoning the time of lawfulneſſe to eate or tythe their fruit. Their moneths and moueable feaſts are guided by the Moone: of which they tell [b] this ſtorie; The Moone, ſay they, expoſtulated with God, becauſe the Sunne ſhined with her, whereas no Kingdome could endure a partner: whereat God being angry, darkened her light, that from the fourth day wherein ſhee was created, till man was made on the ſixth, ſhe ſhined not. Hence it comes to paſſe, that at the change in two dayes ſpace ſhe is neuer ſeene. This is the Rabbinicall cuſtome, if they cannot vntie the knot, they haue (not a cutting-ſword, as Alexander for that Gordian) but ſome leaden Legend or fable Rabbinic-all-ly to determine it. Hieronimus a ſ. Fide (who about two hundred yeeres ſince was the Popes Phyſician, and turned from Iudaiſme to Chriſtianitie) thus relateth it: The Moone, before equall with the Sunne, expoſtulated with God for the reaſon aboue recited, and therefore was commanded to goe leſſen her ſelfe. Shee (like ſome ſhrewiſh Ieweſſe) replyed, ſhe had wrong, and had ſpoken but reaſon: hee to ſatisfie her, ſaid, the Sunne ſhould not ſhine by night, and yet ſhould ſhe appeare in the day. What, ſaith ſhe, is a candle before the Sunne? He then promiſed, that his people Iſrael ſhould obſerue their ſolemne feſtiuals, according to her deſignement. But when all this would not content her, as yeelding himſelfe guiltie, hee enioyned a peculiar meate-offering euery New-Moone, for indulgence of that ſinne. Thus doe they both dreame ridiculouſly, and blaſpheme alſo beyond all names of impietie, in their Talmudicall Tract Holyn. And this they prooue out of Num. 18. as truely, as in another place out of Eſa. 40. that God hauing polluted himſelfe with burying of Moſes, purged himſelfe with fire; the water not being ſufficient thereto.

The [c] richer Iewes prepare thirtie dayes before for their Paſſe-ouer (dentem non mentem) good Wheate for their vnleauened Cakes. The Sabbath before the Paſſe-ouer is ſolemne and ſacred, wherein they haue a Sermon concerning the Paſchall Lambe. Two or three dayes before the Paſſe-ouer, they ſcowre their houſhold implements of Wood and Mettall, with much curioſitie and varietie of Rites. For hee that in this Feaſt vſeth an impure veſſell, is as he that hath layne by an vncleane woman. The night before the Feaſt, the good-man of the houſe with a Waxe Candle, a Diſh, and Wing, beginneth his ſearch for vnleauened bread; and with other men or boyes to helpe him, after their Amen to his bleſſing, with Waxe Candles in their hands, they leaue not a [d] Mouſe-hole vnſearched, and hide that bread which they meane to eate that night, leſt they ſhould finde that, and bee forced to burne it. That which they finde, they curiouſly couer, leſt ſome Mouſe by carrying it, ſhould make them haue new worke: and for this cauſe ſuppe alſo in a corner, with great care that nothing fall to the ground. When hee hath ended his ſearch, Whatſoeuer Leauen (ſaith hee) is vnder mine hands, which I haue not ſeene, let it bee toſſed too

d Thus curious were the Roman women in the rites of Bona Dea, not leauing a Mouſe-hole vnſearched, leſt ſome male Mouſe might marre the ſolemnitie.

and

and fro, like the dust of the earth: In the morning they make their vnleauened Cakes of meale, grownd three dayes at least. The kneading-trough must bee lined with Linnen, least some of the leauened Meale should cleaue thereto, the goodman himselfe must draw the liquor that it is kneaded with, and that at Sunne-setting. The Cakes are made with as much scruple, round, and pricked full of holes in a cold place, &c. to keepe them from leauening. They eate little, and the first-borne nothing, till night, that then they may haue the better Paschall-stomacke. At the Eeuen-song they obserue much-what the same ceremonies, as at the Sabbath. They make at home the faireſt shew of their plate, and riches, and seate themselues on Chaires (as it were) of State, and account now of themselues as great Lords, triumphing ouer their late Ægyptian seruitude; at their returne from the Synagogue, they haue a Dish with three Cakes set before them, representing the high Priest, the Tribe of Leui, and the people of Israel: another Dish hath in it a loine of Lambe or Kidde, with a hard Egge: another containeth a Gallimawfrey of Apples, Nuts, Figges, Almonds, &c. dressed with Wine in Bricke-fashion (with Cinamon strewed on it, in remembrance of the Ægyptian Fornace.) They haue also a Sallet of hearbs, and a Sawcer of Vineger set on the Table. Then sit they downe, and euery one (to the child in the Cradle) hath his cup filled with wine. And here with a carowse after a blessing begins the feast, with a scrupulous vse of these things mentioned: then followeth the supper it selfe, with much riot till midnight, with such cheere as they haue, with diuers ceremonies, cursing their enemies, calling for Elias, praying for the reedifying of the Temple; vsing many Diuine Attributes, as, Mercifull God, Great God, Bountifull God, High God, Faire God, Sweet God, Mightie God, and God of the Iewes, now build thy Temple shortly, very soone, very soone, in our dayes, very soone, very soone. Now build, now build, now build, now build, now build thy Temple quickly: Strong God, liuing God, &c. ouer and ouer with such battologies. This night they thinke themselus secure against men and Diuels; they leaue their doores open all night to entertaine Elias; and one to their solace playeth Elias in a white linnen garment. Each man drinketh foure cups full of the blessed * wine, in regard of foure deliuerances, which the Rabbins finde in Exod. 6. ver. 6, 7. The ceremonies of Moses they are not yet tyed to (forsooth) because they are not in Canaan.

In the morning they visit the Synagogue with their Sabbath-rites. They bring two Bookes out of the Arke, and call forth fiue men (and if this feast be on the Sabbath, seuen) to reade out of the same. Nice are their determinations what workes they may doe on this day, and what not: they may dresse no more meat then is this day eaten: if they beate spice, the morter must lie side-wise, for distinctions sake of the day, &c. fasting and weeping must be auoided; if any farse a Hen, the needle must be threeded the day before, and the threed must be burned, not bitten or broken asunder. In such trifles the Schoole of Schammai licenseth to eate the same day an Egge laide on a festiuall day. Hillel denies it, and betwixt them they haue set the Rabbins by the eares, in this & such profane questions. Their Eeuen-song hath a short dispatch: and then the next day they [f] reiterate the same ceremonies, and that for certaintie, because they doubt of the first day of the moneth, and therefore obserue two. The foure daies following are halfe-holy daies. Some workes may be done in them, & not some, & what they do (to make a difference) must be done otherwise, as writing crooked, &c. & that which cannot without losse be deferred, may now be done. The seuenth day they obserue in more complete holinesse, and the eight too, for the reason before alledged, to be more secure of the true day. After the feast ended, they satisfie with fasting their feasting-riots, and that on two Mundaies and one Thursday: vnto the three and thirtieth day after, they are sad & heauy in remembrance of R. Akiba, of whose Disciples foure & twenty thousand died in that space, and were buried by women in the night, and therefore after Sunne-set, all this while the women lay aside their worke; on the three and thirtie day the men bath them and shaue their beards, and are merrie, because then his Disciples ceased dying.

Of Pentecost.

FRom the second night of their Pisach, they number to their Pentecost [g] fifty dayes inclusiuely, and say, Blessed be thou, &c. which hast sanctified vs by thy precepts, and commanded vs to number the dayes before harueſt, of which this is the first or second, &c. they number the same standing, [h] praying withall for the restitution of Ieruſalem. They let not bloud on the Eeuen of the Pentecost, because of a supposed winde Tabbath, the dayes betweene Easter & Pentecost, in token of ioyfull hope of the resurrection, Iust. Mart. quæſt. 115. Amb. Aug. &c. perhaps in imitation of this Iewish rite, applyed to that mystery.

which ſhould haue ſlaine all the Iſraelites, if they had refuſed next day to accept of the Law. They keepe it two dayes, for the former doubt. They take the Booke twice out of the Arke, and reade there-out the precepts concerning this Feaſts ſacrifices, now that they cannot performe the things. In remembrance of receiuing the Law, they ſtrew the pauement of their houſes, ſtreets and Synagogues with graſſe. They eate meates made of milke and cakes. One Cake they make ſeuen times folded in thickneſſe, in remembrance of the ſeuen Heauens, by which GOD deſcended to Mount Sinai. Now they muſt haue good cheere, becauſe at this time the King married his daughter, that is, the Law vnto them.

THE i Feaſt of Tabernacles is obſerued eight dayes: the two firſt, and two k laſt more ſolemnely: the middle foure are halfe holy. They mutter ouer their prayers with ſuch haſte, that hee is the perfecteſt who ſpeakes moſt with a breath. They make them Tabernacles with boughes of foure kinds l of Trees (more ſcrupulous then the Law) in which they ſup, but doe not lodge. The Præcentor in the Synagogue taketh a bundle of boughes, and bleſſeth and ſhaketh them: for it is written, m The trees ſhall clap their hands, and mooueth them three times to the Eaſt, and as often to the Weſt, and to the North and South, and then vp and downe like a Fencer, and then ſhaketh them againe, as hauing now put the Diuell to flight. Then one taketh out the booke, and layeth it on the Pulpit, which they all with their boughes compaſſe ſeuen times a day during the Feaſt; in hope of like deſtruction to the Chriſtians, as befell Iericho, and then renew the ſhaking of their boughes. The ſeuenth day is moſt ſolemne, called by them Hoſchana rabba, the great Hoſanna; as if one ſhould ſay, n the great feaſt of ſaluation or helpe, becauſe then they pray for the ſaluation of all the people, and for a proſperous new-yeere; and all the prayers of this Feaſt haue in them the words of ſauing, as, O God, ſaue vs, and O God of our ſaluation, and as thou haſt ſaued the Iſraelites, and ſuch like; the prayers are therefore called Hoſannoth. Then they produce ſeuen bookes, and in euery of their ſeuen compaſſings lay vp one againe. This night they know their fortunes by the Moone: for ſtretching out their armes, if they ſee not the ſhadow of their head by Moone-light, they muſt dye that yeere; if a finger wanteth, hee loſeth a friend; if the ſhadow yeeld him not a hand, hee loſeth a ſonne; the want of the left hand portendeth loſſe of a daughter; if no ſhadow, no life ſhall abide with him, for it is written, o Their ſhadow is departed from them. Some Iewes goe yeerely into Spaine to prouide Pome-citrons, and other neceſſaries, for the furniſhing this feaſt; which they ſell in Germany, & other places to the Iewes at exceſſiue prices. They keepe their Tabernacles in all weathers, except a very vehement ſtorme driue them with a heauie countenance into their houſes. Their wiues and ſeruants are not ſo ſtrictly tyed hereto.

They ſay alſo that on that day God fore-ſheweth how much it ſhall rayne all the yeere following: of plenty alſo and dearth, &c. and direct their prayers accordingly.

THE p New-Moones are at this day but halfe feſtiuall to the Iewes, accounting themſelues free to worke, or not in them; but the women keepe it intirely feſtiuall, becauſe they denyed their Eare-rings to the molten Calfe, which after they beſtowed willingly on their Tabernacle. Aben:* Let [r] them bee blotted out of the Booke of the liuing, and not bee written with the Iust. Blotting points you to the Booke of Death: Liuing, that of Life; and not writing with the Iust, is the third Booke of Indifferents. All the workes which a man hath done through the yeere, are this day examined: The good workes are put in one ballance, the bad in the other (what helpe a siluer Chalice or such heauie metall could affoord in this case, you may finde by experience in Saint Francis Legend, who, when the bad deeds of a great man lately dead, out-weighed the good, at a dead lift cast in a siluer Chalice, which the dead partie had sometime bestowed on Franciscan deuotion, and weighed vp the other side, and so the Diuels lost their prey:) GOD (say they) pronounceth sentence of punishment or reward, sometime in this life to bee executed, sometime in the other. In respect hereof, their Rabbines ordaine the moneth before to be spent in penance, and morning and Eeuening to sound a Trumpet of a Rams-horne, as Aue Marie Bell, to warne them of this Iudgement, that they may thinke of their sinnes; and besides, to befoole the Diuell; that with this often sounding being perplexed, hee may not know when this New-yeeres day shall bee, to come into the Court to giue euidence against them. The day before they rise sooner in the morning, to mutter ouer their prayers for remission: and when they haue done in the Synagogue, they goe to the graues in the Church-yard, testifying, that if GOD doe not pardon them, they are like to the dead, and praying, that for the good workes of the Saints (the iust Iewes there buried) hee will pitty them, and there they giue large almes. After noone, they shaue, adorne, and bathe themselues, that they may be pure the next day; (for some Angels, soyled with impuritie heere below, are faine to purge themselues in the fierie brooke Dinor, before they can prayse GOD; how much more they?) and in the water they make confession of their sins; the confession containeth two and twentie words, the number of their Alphabet; and at the pronouncing of euery word, giue a knocke on their brest; and then diue wholly vnder water. The Feast it selfe they begin with a cup of Wine, and New-yeere Salutations: and on their Table haue a Rammes head, in remembrance of [f] That Ramme which was offered in Isaacks stead: and for this cause are their Trumpets of Rams-horne: Fish they eate, to signifie the multiplication of their good workes: they eate sweet fruits of all sorts, and make themselues merry, as assured of forgiuenesse of their sinnes: and after meat, all of all sorts, resort to some bridge to hurle their sinnes into the water: as it is written, [t] Hee shall cast all our sinnes into the bottome of the Sea. And if they there espie any fish, they leape for ioy, these seruing to them as the scape-goate, to carrie away their sinnes. At night they renew their cheere, and end this feast.

Of their Lent, Penance, and Reconciliation Fast.

FRom this day to the tenth [u] day, is a time of Penance or Lent, wherein they fast and pray for the cause aforesaid; and that if they haue beene written in the Booke of Death, yet God seeing their good works, may repent, and write them in the Life-Booke. [x] Thrice a day very earely they confesse three houres before day, and surcease suits at Law, &c. And on the ninth day very earely [y] they resort to the Synagogue; and at their returne, euery male taketh a Cocke, and euery female a Henne; if she be with childe, both: and the housholder, saying out of the hundred and fift Psalme, verses 17,18,19,20,21,22. and out of Iob, chapter 23. verse 23,24,25. swingeth the Cocke three times about his head, euery time saying, This Cocke shall make an exchange for me: he shall dye for mee: and I shall goe into life with all the people of Israel, Amen. He doth it three times for himselfe, for his children, for the strangers that are with him. Then hee killeth him, and cutteth his throat, and hurleth him with all his force to the ground, and roasteth him: signifying, that he himselfe deserueth death, the sword, stoning, and fire: the inwards they hurle on the top of the house, that the Crowes may, with it, carrie away their sinnes. A white Cocke for this purpose is principall; a red Cocke they vse not, for they are full of sinne themselues by Esaias authoritie, [z] If your sinnes were red as scarlet, &c. [a] Antonius Margarita saith,

That this propitiatory creature ſhould bee an Ape, as moſt like to man; but they vſe a Cocke for the names ſake: a man in Hebrew is Gebher, which is the Talmudicall or Babyloniſh name of a Cocke. Thus thoſe that with a Rams horne beguile the Deuill, and with a Cocke beguile GOD, iuſtly beguile themſelues, who refuſe that ſacrifice of Chriſt, in whoſe ſtripes they might be healed. They haue another fable of a Cocke mentioned by [b] Victor Carbenſis, thinking that as often as a Cocke ſtands on one leg, and his combe lookes pale, that GOD is angry: which hapneth, they ſay, euery day, and onely in the day time, and that but the twinckling of an eye. And therefore they praiſe GOD which hath giuen ſuch vnderſtanding to a Cocke.

After the performance of this Cocke-ſacrifice, they goe to the buriall place, vſing like Ceremonies there, as on New-yeers eeuen: and after noone, bathe them likewiſe. After Eeuenſong, he which hath offended others, askes them forgiueneſſe, which if he obtaine not at firſt, then the offender taketh with him three other, and asketh the ſecond and third time: if all this bee in vaine, he taketh ten others and renueth his ſuite; if he obtaine, it is well; if not, GOD will hold him excuſed, and the other partie ſhall be guiltie. [c] If the partie offended be dead, the offender with ten other, goeth to the graue, & there confeſſeth [d] his faults. They confeſſe one to another alſo, and that in a ſecret place of their Synagogue, where each receiueth mutually at his fellowes hand with a leather belt nine and thirty blowes: at each blow the partie beaten beateth himſelfe on the breſt, and ſaith one word of his Confeſſion, taken out of the ſeuentie and eight Pſalme, and eight and thirtieth [e] Verſe, being in the Hebrew thirteene words, which he thrice repeateth: then the ſtriker lyeth downe, and receiueth like penance at the hands of the former, you may iudge with what rigour. This done, they runne home, and make merry with the Cockes and Hens before mentioned, ſupping largely, becauſe of the next dayes faſt, Their Supper muſt be ended before Sunne-ſet: for then begineth their faſt. They put on their cleaneſt rayment, and ouer the ſame, a great and large ſhirt downe to the ſhooes, to teſtifie their puritie. They reſort to their Synagogues with waxe candles (in Germanie they haue for euery man one) and then light them. The women alſo light Candles at home, as on the Sabbath. It is ominous if the Candles burne not cleerely. They ſpread the floore with Carpets, for ſoyling their pureſt cloathes.

Their fiue humiliations at the feaſt of Reconciliation.

Their humiliations at this feaſt are fiue: firſt, foure and twentie, or ſeuen and twentie houres faſt, whereunto children are ſubiect: the Males after twelue yeeres, the Females after eleuen. Secondly, they weare no ſhooes. Thirdly, they muſt not annoint them. Fourthly, nor bathe them, no, not put a finger into the water. Fiftly, nor companie with, no not touch their wiues. Before they begin prayers, thirteene of the principall Rabbies, walking in the Temple, giue licence to all, both good and bad, to pray. And the Præcentor or Reader fetcheth the booke out of the Arke, and openeth it, ſinging a long Prayer, beginning all compacts, vowes, and oathes, &c. inſinuating, that all the vowes, promiſes, oathes, and couenants, which euerie Iew had that yeere broken, bee diſanulled and pardoned: and that, becauſe now all haue power to pray and prayſe GOD. They continue ſinging till late in the night. Some remaine all night [f] in the Synagogue: yea, the deuouter ſome ſtand vpright ſinging and praying without intermiſſion all that feaſt, the ſpace of ſeuen and twentie houres in the ſame place. Thoſe that departed the Synagogue, returne in the morning before day, and there ſtay all that day. Often they proſtrate themſelues with their face couered, at euery word of their Confeſſions knocking their breſt. When it beginneth to bee night, the Prieſt draweth his Talthes (a large cloath made of haires) before his eyes, and pronounceth the bleſſing, Numb. 6. holding his hand towards the people, who meane-while couer their faces with their hands; for they may not looke on the Prieſts hand, becauſe the ſpirit of GOD reſteth thereon. Then hee ſingeth a Prayer ſeuen times together, ſometimes higher, ſometimes lower with his voyce: becauſe that GOD now aſcendeth from them into the ſeuenth Heauen: and they with their ſweet melodie bring him on the way. Then they make a long and ſhrill ſound with their Rams-horne-trumpet: and there followeth preſently a voyce from Heauen, Goe eate thy bread with ioy and gladneſſe, &c. After this they returne home, ſome carrying home their lights, to diſtinguiſh the holy Times (as you haue heard) from the prophane: ſome leaue them in the Synagogue all the yeere, at certaine times lighting them. Some Saint-Iewes prouide to haue a waxe-light continually burning all the yeere long in the Synagogue. In their returne they wiſh to each other a good yeere. For the bookes before mentioned, are now cloſed; nor may they expect any alteration. They ſup largely, and betimes the next morning returne to the Synagogue, leſt Sathan ſhould complaine at ſo ſoone a cooling of their zeale. But the Deuill may bee quiet; for when the Law was giuen, [g] Samael the euill ſpirit complained, that hee had power ouer all people, but the Iſraelites: GOD anſwered; That he ſhould haue power ouer them, if on the Reconciliation-

§. VI.

Of their other Feaſts.

THe Iewes diuide the Law into two and fiftie parts, and reading euery Sabbath one, the laſt falleth on the next day after the Feaſt of Tabernacles, about the three and twentieth day of September. In this [i] day they leape, dance, and make much ioy. They aſſemble in their Synagogue, and take all the bookes of the Law out of the Arke (leauing in it meane-while, that it bee not left emptie, a burning light) they reade the firſt Lecture and the laſt thereof, and leape about the Arke with the Bookes; and they hurle Pearles, Nuts, and ſuch fruits among the youth, which in their ſcrambling ſometimes fall together by the eares, and marre the ſport. On this day they ſell their Synagogue-offices, the Clarke making proclamation: who will giue moſt at the third time, obtayneth firſt the office of lighting the Lights all the yeere, then that of prouiding the Wine, which they vſe to begin the Feaſts with, in reſpect of the poore, which haue no wine to hallow at home. Thirdly, is ſet to ſale the office Gelilah, of folding vp, and vnfolding the Law. Fourthly, Hagbohah, of lifting vp the Law, and carrying it in Proceſſion. Fiftly, the office Etzchaiym, of touching thoſe turned pieces of wood, whereto the Law is faſtened; which the young-men are forward to buy, in hope of holineſſe and longer life. Sixtly, Acheron, to bee called foorth laſt on the feſtiuall dayes, to reade ſomewhat of the Law. Seuenthly, Schetria, to be deputed or ſubſtituted in place of the negligent officer, &c. The money hence ariſing, is for the vſe of the poore, and reparations of their Synagogue; but in theſe ſale-offices, wealth hath more honour then worthineſſe. i The feaſt of the Law finiſhed.

Their feaſt of Dedication, wee cannot ſay much more of, then that which alreadie hath beene ſaid: much niceneſſe herein is obſerued, about the Lights wherewith they ſolemnize this darkeneſſe, which I willingly omit: theſe lights thy vſe in their houſes all the ſpace of theſe eight dayes burning.

Their [k] feaſt of Lots they keepe with all riot two dayes, as with ſome at Shroue-tide: the men diſguiſing themſelues in womens habite; the women in mens: they holde, that hee ſhall be fortunate which then laboureth: women eſpecially then make merry in remembrance of Queene Eſther, and they with their infants are preſent in the night, at the reading of the booke of Eſther, which is all written in a large ſheet of Parchment, and reade from the beginning to the end. In times paſt they had two ſtones, in one of which was written Hamans name, which they beat together, till the name was blotted out, to fulfill that Scripture, The name of the wicked ſhall rot. Curſed bee HAMAN, bleſſed bee MORDECAI, curſed bee ZERES (Hamans wife) bleſſed be ESTHER, curſed bee all Idolaters, bleſſed be ISRAEL. When they come to the place where Hamans ten ſonnes are named, they reade it all in one breath, for in a twinkling of an eye they were all ſlaine. They make great cheere, for ſo did Eſther in feaſting Aſſuerus. In theſe two dayes they doe nothing, but eate, drinke, dance, pipe, ſing, play, &c. The rich are bound to ſend to the poore Iewes double preſents, which muſt not be ſpent but on this ſolemnitie: they quaffe, (it is, ſaith Rabbi Iſaac, Tirna, a good worke) till they finde no difference betweene Arur Haman, and Baruch Mordecai; Curſed bee HAMAN, bleſſed bee MORDECAI; vociferations that day obſerued, and hold it lawfull to drinke till they cannot tell their fiue fingers on the hand. k Hoſpinian. ex M. Lombard.

They [l] obſerue feſtiuall the Equinoctials and Solſtices; and a certaine Rogation day: they vſe the Faſts before mentioned out of Zach.7. with other ſuperſtitions. Some of [m] them faſt alſo, as is ſaid, on Mundayes and Thurſdayes; and ſome on the tenth of March for the death of Miriam: at whoſe departure a certaine Fountaine dryed vp, and the people were left without water: but in this moneth the Rabbins will not allow faſting, becauſe of their deliuerance therein out of Egypt. Some faſt for the death of Samuel, Aprill 28. and for the taking of the Arke, April 10. and at other times for other Prophets. Some faſt on the New-Moones Eeuen: ſome, when they haue had an infortunate dreame; and all that day in which their Father dyed, through their whole life. Their faſting is an abſtinence from all eating and drinking till night. But of theſe faſts and other their ſolemnities, is ſaid before in the abſtract of their Kalender, taken out of Ioſeph Scaliger. day of the moneth following, are holden vnluckie dayes, in which Schoolmaſters may not beate their Schollers, nor any man will ſew at the Law. And for the burning of the Temple in the ninth day of the fifth moneth, they goe bare-foot, reade heauie ſtories, and Ieremiahs Lamentations, and mourne among the graues of the dead, and are ſad all that moneth: from the firſt to the tenth day they eate no fleſh, nor drinke wine, nor bathe, nor marrie, nor cut their hayre; they ſew not at the Law; for Hoſea ſaith, The moneth ſhall deuoure their portion: and they ſhall bee taken, ſaith Ieremie, in their moneth. On the eight day they eate onely Lentils; for they may not eate Peaſe or Beanes, becauſe they haue blacke ſpots like mouthes, which Lentils want, and therefore more fitly repreſent a heauie man, which wanteth his mouth for ſorrow: egges they may eate in the night for their roundneſſe: for ſorrow, as if it were round, rolleth from one to another. They haue their faſts alſo on ſpeciall occaſions, as they tell of one Chone Hammagal, which in a great drought, put himſelfe into a pye made fit for his body, and prayed, ſaying, Lord of the World, the eyes of thy children are vpon mee, as one whom they thinke familiar with thee: I ſweare by thy holy name, that I will not come hence till thou ſhew mercy. And then it rayned preſently: for how could it chooſe? They tell the ſame pye-tale of Moſes likewiſe, and of Habbacuc, expounding that Hab. 2. 1. I will ſtand on my watch, I will ſtand in my Pye. Their manner is, ſaith Victor Carbenſis, to curſe Titus, and ſay, he was of the generation of Agag the Amalechite, and ſuch a blaſphemer as neuer was any, and that for his blaſphemies he was ſtricken with madneſſe.

Their milke veſſels of wood are marked with three cuts, becauſe that ſentence, Thou ſhalt not ſeethe a Kid in his mothers milke, is three times in the Law repeated. Euery Iew carrieth two kniues with him, one for Fleſh; the other for Cheeſe and Fiſh, and theſe alſo are marked with three cuts. And if theſe veſſels ſhould bee [a] intermingled, our Iew might not eate that which is dreſſed therein: yea, the innocent veſſels are broken, if of earth, moſt accurately waſhed, if of wood, and purged in the fire, if they bee of yron. They ſeethe not milke and fleſh at one time, and ouer one fire, ouer againſt each other: nor ſet them together on the Table, but ſeperate them with ſomewhat ſet betweene. One cloath is layde for fleſh, and another for white-meate. Hee which eateth fleſh, or broth thereof, may not eate white-meates an houre after, yea the moſt religious will [b] abſtaine ſixe houres after. Yet may they eate a Henne together with Almond-milke. If any haue not the gift of ſuch abſtinence, very carefully muſt hee clenſe his teeth, and waſh his mouth, and with a piece of drie bread take away the taſte of the fleſh. If any ſuet fall into their white-meates, they may not be eaten, except there bee ſixtie times as much of the meat, as of the ſuet. An Egge may not be poched in a fleſh veſſell: they breake it alſo, and diligently obſerue, that none of that bloudie reſemblance in the top of the egge remaine. If in cutting vp of a Henne they finde egges, they may not eate them till they bee waſhed, and ſoftned in water and ſalt. §. II.

Of their Butcherie.

BVtcherie is with the Iew exalted aboue the liberall Sciences, and muſt bee learned by much bookiſhneſſe and long experience. They haue a booke of ſhamble-conſtitutions, and in harder caſes they aduiſe with ſome learned Rabbi. Neither may any practiſe this Art without licence from the Rabbi, whereby he ſignifieth, that hee had taken examination and proofe of the partie, and found him expert therein both in word and deed, and therefore hath permitted him to kill, and others to eate the meate by him killed: prouided that he diligently reade euery weeke for one yeere, and euery moneth the next yeere, and once a quarter during his life, the Conſtitutions aboueſaid. They haue their eſpeciall kniues for this buſineſſe, great ones for greater Cattell, and ſmall for the ſmaller: the greater haue blunter and broader points: if they haue any rifts in them, they may not vſe them. The greater beaſts feete muſt be bound, in remembrance of Abrahams binding Iſaac, and then with one cut or thruſt hee cutteth the Weſand a ſunder; which done, he lookes on his knife if there bee any rift in it, for that would terrifie the beaſt, and cauſe the bloud to recoile backe to the heart, whereby the beaſt would not be fit for vſe as retaining ſome of the bloud. After this, he hangs vp the beaſt, takes out the inwards, and cutting a hole on both ſides of the heart, thruſteth his hand through the ſame into the body of the beaſt, to ſearch if there be any bloud: and if there be any fault in the beaſt, it is not for their dyet, applying that which the Law ſaith of a Carcaſſe found torne in the fields. They cut the throat of a bird in like manner, if it bee a Fowle which hath quills in the wings, in remembrance of an office performed by the fowles ſometimes, as [a] they ſay, to Rebecca, when ſhe deſcended from her Camell at the ſight of Iſaac: and therefore they let the fowle bleed into a heape of aſhes, and therein couer the bloud. They couer the bloud alſo of other creatures in the ground, becauſe the Earth opened her mouth to drinke in the bloud of ABEL: and becauſe Sathan ſhould not accuſe men of iniuſtice for ſlaying the innocent beaſts, ſeeing ſo much bloud ſhed by them. When they haue killed a great beaſt, they cut out all the veynes and ſinewes (of which ſubiect they haue written ſpeciall Treatiſes) and likewiſe all the Suet: which done, they diue them in water to mollifie them, and waſh them throughly, to rinſe away all the bloud; and then lay them on a boord, that all the water may paſſe from them: after which they ſalt them in a veſſell full of holes, that the ſalt may draine out all whatſoeuer bloudineſſe yet remaining. They eate not the hinder parts in remembrance of Iacobs [d] thigh.

But in Italy they haue inuented a new anatomizing tricke, by taking away the veynes and ſinewes to make them lawfull. Pittie they cannot doe the like for Swine and other forbidden meates: but you ſee they haue ſome trickes to coozen GOD, as before to coozen the Diuell: but the moſt coozenage (ſaue that in the former they coozen themſelues) is to Chriſtians which buy thoſe hinder parts of them, in polluting thoſe meates, before they ſell them, with filth, and with vrine of their Children, adding curſes and imprecations to the eaters. Thus you ſee the Iew-butcher had need be no botcher, but halfe a Phyſitian in anatomizing, and halfe a Rabbine in caſes of conſcience. And who knoweth whether ſo many Iewiſh Phyſicians come not from (and perhaps alſo carrie to) the Shambles?

which he giueth her, saying, Be thou espoused to me according to the law of Moses & Israel. If there be no witnesses, it is nothing, notwithstanding they both confesse it. If one shall affiance a woman to another, he saith, Be thou espoused to N. with this Ring, according to the Law of Moses and Israel. [i] Buxdorfius (to whom I am most beholding in many of these reports) writeth, that when promise hath passed betweene two, many Iewes are called together into a great chamber: where euerie of the youthes holdeth a pot in his hand. Then comes one, and reades the letters of contract, that N. sonne of N. and N. daughter of N. haue promised marriage to each other, each giuing so much in dowrie, which marriage is to be solemnized on such a day: and the partie which faileth in the promises, shall giue the other fifty Florens. This done, they wish ioy to each other: and the Iewlings presently breake their earthen pots, whereby they signifie to the parties prosperitie and abundance. At parting, euery one hath a cup of wine giuen them. Eight dayes after neither partie goeth out of the house: and many youthes come and make merry with the Bridegrome, imitating (they thinke) Sampson herein. Some say, [k] that the man taketh the espoused Bride home to his house, to be both witnesse and keeper of her virginity till the marriage solemnitie. The day before the marriage, the Bride must wash her in that absolute manner [l] before described, certaine women ringing with somewhat when shee goeth in and out of the water, some of them also leaping and dancing. The Bridegrome sends the Bride a wedding girdle embossed with [m] gold, and shee him another with siluer studs. On the wedding day the Bride adornes her selfe in the best Iewish dresse, with her marriage attire, and by women singing their sweetest Epithalamia is conueyed into a chamber, and their placing her on a faire seate, braid her haire into goodle curles, and put a vaile ouer her eyes (in imitation of Rebeccas modestie) singing meane-while, dancing, and expressing the greatest signes of ioy, thinking they therein please God, as being taught by their Rabbines, that God vsed the like curling, singing and dancing, when he presented Eue to Adam; [n] yea, refused not to serue that new couple, and with his owne hands made the canopie vnder which they were to receiue their marriage blessing, the Angels with pipes and trumpets making musike to leade the dance. That which Moses saith [o], God built a woman, The Talmud interpreteth, Hee made curles, and hee brought her to Adam, to wit, with leaping and dancing. When the marriage benediction is to bee solemnized, foure boyes beare a [p] canopie on foure poles into the place appointed, which is some street or garden [q] abroad in the open aire, the people sounding their acclamations, Blessed be he which commeth. The Bride (being led by others) goeth three time about the Bridegrome, as a cocke goeth about a hen, and that forsooth to fulfill that Prophecie, [r] A woman shall compasse a man: hee also must fetch one compasse about her. The people also besprinkle the Bride with wheat, crying out, Increase and multiply, according to that of the Psalmist, [s] He filleth thee with the fat of wheat. In some places they mingle money with the wheat, which the poore Iewes gather vp. The Bride stands on the right hand: for it is written, [t] Thy wife standeth on thy right hand: with her face also to the South, for then she shall be fruitfull. The Rabbi which marrieth them, taketh the end of the Vestment about the Bridegromes necke, (they call it Talles) and puts it on the Brides head, after the example of [u] Boaz and Ruth: and then takes a glasse filled with wine, ouer which hee vttereth the marriage blessing, praysing God, by whose instinct these persons were espoused: and so reacheth the glasse to them, and bids them drinke. This glasse, if she bee a Virgin, hath but a narrow mouth, at Wormes they vse an earthen pot. Now the Rabbi receiuing a Ring of pure gold, without any [x] Iewell in it, sheweth it to some witnesses, asking them if it bee good, and worth the money it cost, and then puts it on the Brides finger, and with a loud voice pronounceth the spousall letters. After this he takes another glasse of wine, and blesseth God that the Bridegrome and Bride haue accepted of each other, and giues it them to taste. This done, the Bridegrome breaketh the former glasse against the wall or ground, in remembrance of the destruction of Ierusalem: in which respect, in some places they put ashes on the Bridegromes head. He weareth for this cause a black-hood on his head like a mourner: and the bride likewise weareth a black cloth, fit to terrifie children with the deformitie. Thus do they mixe mirth and mourning, as Dauid warneth, Reioyce vnto him in trembling. This ended, they sit downe at table, and then must the Bridegrome make trial of his brest in singing a long prayer: others in the meane time call to make ready the hens. Then is there a hen and an egge set before the Bride: of that the Bridegrome carueth her a piece, and then presently all the company, men and women, teare the hen amongst them like hungrie hounds, snatching out of each others hands and mouthes, all to glad the new married couple. The egge is not sodde, but in another scene of mirth, one casteth it in the face of another, of some Christian especially, if any bee present at the nuptials. In the same is a mysterie included for the Bride, that she shall haue as easie trauell in child-birth, as the hen layeth her egges. After this they fall to their cheere, and dances; one one they call the Mitzuah or commandment-dance, as if GOD had enioyned it. The chiefe ghest takes the Bridegroome by the hand, another him, and so on through the companie: likewise the chiefe woman takes the Bride, another her, and so one another: then doe they dance in a long row with a tumultuous noyse, and so end the nuptiall sports. Among all their other blessings, the Bridegrome is to say one, Vbi perspexerit sanguinem virgineum, to vse the words of Genebrard, who expresseth it, being borrowed from some words of the Canticles, fleshly abused by such application.

The Marriage commonly lasteth eight dayes: and on the Sabbath they dance the lustiest of all, doing the Sabbath herein a singular honour, because that also is called a Bride. It is prohibited to bid any vncircumcised ghest to this banquet: for [x] Salomon saith, The stranger doth not intermeddle with his ioy. Yea, the good Angels seeing such there, will depart; and the euill will come and raise strifes and contentions. For they thinke no [y] place emptie from the earth to the skie, but all full of good or bad Angels flying or standing in the same. §. IIII.

Of Coniugall Duties.

LEt it not grieue you to heare somewhat of the Duties betwixt man and wife. The Husband oweth ten things to the Wife: [a] three according to the Law; her nourishment, her cloathing, and her time; namely, of due beneuolence to bee performed: and seuen things according to the words of the Scribes: The first whereof is the foundation of dowrie, viz. two hundred denarij, if she bee a virgin, otherwise an hundred. The other concerne the condition of the dowrie. The woman which rendereth not her husband his due, is rebellious and refractarie; and hee is bidden to expell her without a dowrie. The conditions of the dowrie were: first, to cure her in sickenesse: secondly, to redeeme her being captiue: thirdly, to burie her being dead: fourthly, to nourish her out of his owne goods, and that she dwell in his house in her widdow-hood: fifthly, to keepe her daughters till marriage: sixtly, that her sonnes inherit. They appoint not onely loue, but honour to the wife (as Peter also enioyneth to this weaker vessell) which honour, they say, is in meate and drinke, and goodly garments, for which hee shall (this was a womans friend) haue fauour with God. The Author of Arbaa Turim, addeth, That a man should loue his wife as his owne bodie, and honour her aboue his bodie, and keepe her as one of his members. For the wife is the other halfe of man, and a man without a wife, is but halfe a man. And let him take heed of striking his wife, said [b] another, or to bee virulent in termes against her. For, for her teares (how pittifully easie are they to some?) his punishment is neere. And howsoeuer since the destruction of the Temple, the doore of Prayers hath beene shut, yet the doore of teares hath not beene shut, as saith Dauid, Bee not thou silent at my teares. And should not a man honour his wife? Yes, saith [c] R. Hanina, for a man hath no blessing but for his wife, as it is written, Hee blessed Abraham for her. Let a man cloath himselfe (I would not haue women heare it) beneath his abilitie, his children according to his abilitie, and his wife aboue his abilitie. Let the wife honour her husband as her father, and feare to displease him, and let him spare her in his anger, remembring that shee was taken out of his ribbes. But for the wiues choyse, A man ought, saith [d] one, to sell all that hee hath and buy a wife, the daughter of a wise Disciple: if he finde not such an one, let him take a daughter of the Great men of his time: if not such, the daughter of a Synagogue-Ruler; in that defect, let him take the daughter of one which gathereth Almes: if not, then of a Schoole-master, and not the daughter of the people of the Land, of whom the Scripture saith, [e] Cursed bee he that lyeth with a Beast.

They say that a man ought [f] not to lodge in the same chamber, no not with his Sister, Daughter, or daughter in Law: yea, there Wise men forbid conference with a woman altogether.

§. V.

Of Diuorce, and other Marriage obſeruations.

THe bill of diuorce is ſtill practiſed among the Iewes: it muſt bee written in twelue lines (it is therefore called g Get) neither more nor leſſe, and deliuered to the woman before three credible witneſſes, vnder their hands and ſeales. Then doth the husband deliuer it to her, ſaying, Loe, woman, the bill of thy Diuorce, take it of mee, by it being diuorced from mee, bee thou free to another husband. The tenor of this bill is this: The ſecond day of the weeke, the eight and twentieth of the moneth, N. in the yeere of the world, 5363. as we heere at Mentz vpon Rhene vſe to reckon, I Iſaac, ſir-named Eckendorf, ſonne of R. Abr. now dwelling at Mentz: of my free will, without conſtraint, thee Sara, ſir-named Turmmerle, daughter of R. Leui, which hitherto hath beene my wife, haue determined to free, forſake and diuorce: And now to forſake, free, and put thee from me, that thou mayeſt bee thine owne, and at thine owne free will and pleaſure mayeſt depart whither thou wilt, and none from hence-forth for euer ſhall prohibite thee: And thou art ſo freed, that thou mayeſt marrie to any other man.

g Vid. Eli. Thiſ. rad. get & Druſ. præt pag. 13. & Bux. Syn. c. 28.

This diuorce may not bee done in euery place, but they haue ſome ſpeciall place appointed, noted, and knowne, ſituate on ſome knowne Riuer: whereto certaine chiefe Rabbines are called by writing, if there bee none there dwelling, which conſummate the buſineſſe. By the old h Law, a woman might be reconciled to her husband before the Bill of diuorce giuen, not after.

Buxd. Syn. ca. 30.

The obſeruation of the brother, to marrie the wife of his brother deceaſed without iſſue, or elſe to loſe the inheritance, which was teſtified by pulling off his ſhooe, and ſpetting in his face; is now thus ruled by the Rabbins, that none ſhall marrie ſuch a widdow, but rather ſuffer the premiſed ignominie; which is performed in this ſort. She comes before the chiefe Rabbi with fiue witneſſes, where the Rabbi demands, if ſhe haue been three months a widdow, if her husband had a brother vnmarried, if the partie conuented bee he, &c. and laſtly, if ſhee be faſting (for otherwiſe ſhe might not ſpet in her brothers face.) Of him alſo the Rabbi asketh like queſtions, and receiuing a denyall of marriage, there is brought a ſhooe of ſingular faſhion for that purpoſe, which hee putteth on his right foot bare, and then ſetteth himſelfe againſt a wall. The woman comes, and diſclaiming his affinitie, ſtoopeth, and with her right hand (for if ſhe want a right hand, it putteth the Rabbines out of their right wits to skan, whether with her teeth, or how elſe it may be done) vnlooſeth the ſhooe, and taking it off, ſpets in his face, ſo that the fiue witneſſes may ſee it, ſaying, Thus it ſhall be done with him which will not build the houſe of his brother.

For this they alleage, Leuit. 12. 4.

In the time of her vncleanneſſe, a woman may not enter into the Synagogue, nor pray, nor name the Name of GOD, nor handle any holy booke; which if they obſerue, the Rabbines promiſe them longer life. As ſoone as ſhe knoweth of her vncleanneſſe, ſhe preſently ſeperateth her ſelfe from her husband the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, not touching him, nor ſitting on the ſame ſeate, nor eating in the ſame diſh, or on the ſame cloath, nor may drinke out of the ſame cup, nor ſtand againſt him, nor ſpeake in his face. If one will giue any thing to the other, one layeth it on a bench or table, and goeth away, and the other commeth and taketh it. They ſay it procureth the Leproſie in the Children which are then gotten, which they obiect to Chriſtians.

When ſhee hath numbred ſeuen i dayes of her vncleanneſſe, ſhee proceedeth to number as many of her purification: after which time finding her ſelfe pure, ſhee cloatheth her ſelfe in white, and taking a woman with her, waſheth her ſelfe in cold water, (ſome in winter put in warme water to it, which others in the coldeſt ſeaſon refuſe) and leaues not a hayre of her head vnwaſhed, as before is deſcribed. Some k faſt till they haue done it, leſt the fleſh in the teeth ſhould hinder the water from comming to them: for mouth and eyes muſt bee open, and they muſt ſtoope, that the pappe keepe not away the water from the breſt: and if they haue a playſter on a ſore, it muſt off, and their nayles muſt bee pared.

They l write, that if any ſhall exceed twentie yeeres and not marrie, or if hee ſhall marrie a wife which is barren, he ſinneth as much as if hee had ſlaine a man, and deſerueth the puniſhment of Onan, whom GOD ſlew. Prouided, if hee addict himſelfe to the ſtudie of the Law, and findeth no need of a wife: but if he finde concupiſcence preuaile, hee ought to marrie notwithſtanding. §. VI.

Of the Iewish Beggers, Diseases and Penances.

THE poorer Iewes on the Friday night, and euery Festiuall, entering into the houses of the richer, beg prouision for the Feast. And if any be exceeding poore, the Rabbines make him a licence to beg, therein testifying of his honestie and Iewish faith; wherewith hee wandereth through the Countrey, visiting all the Iewes he can finde. And if hee come to a place where are many Iewes, hee sheweth his licence to the chiefe Rabbi; or to the Clarke which calls men to the Synagogue, or to the Elders, or Ruler of the Synagogue, which is as their Consull, or to the Ouer-seers of the poore, and craueth their fauour: which granted, hee standeth with two others at the doore of the Synagogue, and beggeth; or else those two goe from house to house and beg for him. The like is done when a poore Iew hath a daughter marriageable, to beg for her dowrie. When poore Iewes trauell, they may turne into another Iewes house, where (their prouerbe is) the first day hee is a ghest, the second a burthen, the third a fugitiue. Buxdorf c. 33. Iewish beggers

The falling sickneſse is vsuall among the Iewes, and they vse to imprecate it to each other in their anger, as they also doe the plague. In a generall pestilence they write in their Chamber strange characters and wonderfull names, which (they say) are the names of the Pest-Angels. And I once saw (sayth our Author) Adiridon, Bediridon, and so on, the word Diridon riding on quite through the Alphabet, written with great letters in their houses, as a present remedie for the Plague. The Leprie they haue seldome, which may bee attributed to their dyet. Cap. 34. Diseases of the Iewes.

Now the Sword and Scepter is taken from them, in stead of other penalties, they inflict sharpe penances according to the nature of the crime. Thus the Adulterer satisfieth for his hot lust in cold water, wherein hee is inioyned to sit some winter dayes, and if the water be frozen, the Ice is cut, and hee set therein vp to his chinne, as long as an Egge is roasting. In Summer time hee is set naked in an Ant-hill, his nose and eares stopped, and after washeth himselfe in cold water. If the season bee neither cold not hot, hee is inioyned a certaine kinde of fasting, in which he may not eate any thing till night, and then onely a little bread and water is allowed him, and yet hee must after endure the Ant or water-penance. In Medrasch is written, that Adam sate vp to the nose in water an hundred and thirtie yeeres, till he begate Seth, for eating the forbidden fruit. If the penance seeme lighter, they enioyne him further to runne thorow a swarme of Bees, and when the swelling of his bodie through their stinging is abated, he must doe it againe and againe, according to the measure of his offence. If hee hath often that way offended, hee is bound to endure that penance many yeeres, yea sometimes a three yeeres fast together, eating bread and water at supper, otherwise nothing, except hee rather chuse to redeeme this, with fasting three whole dayes together in each yeere, without tasting any refection at all, as Queene Esther did. When any hath lyen with a woman in her vncleanneſse, hee incurreth the penance of fortie dayes fast; and twice or thrice euery of those dayes to receiue on his bare backe with a leather thong or girdle nine blowes: to eate no flesh or hot meate, nor drinke any wine, but on the Sabbath. If a man kisse or embrace his menstruous wife, the case is alike. A Robber is adiudged three yeeres banishment, to wander three yeeres thorow the Cities where Iewes dwell, crying aloud, I am a Robber, and suffer himselfe to bee beaten in manner aforesaid. He may not eate flesh, nor drinke wine; nor cut the hayre off his head or beard: hee must put on his change of garments, and shirts vnwashed. He may not wash himselfe: euery moneth once he must couer his head: hee must weare his arme, wherewith he committed murther, fastened to his necke with a chayne. Some are enioyned that where they sleepe one night, they may not sleepe the next, that they may wander ouer the world like Cain. Some are constrained to weare an yron brest-plate next their skinne: and some to throw themselues downe before the doore of the Synagogue, that they which goe in may treade on him. That Iew which accuseth another before a Christian Magistrate, is accounted a Traytor and neuer made reckoning of after. Cap. 35. Iewish penances.

But why doe I tyre the Reader, to whom I feare I haue beene ouer-tedious? But in this matter of Religion, of whom is it fitter to protract discourse, then of them, whom the old world yeelded the only example of Truth, and the present age, a principall example of falsehood and superstition? Let it not grieue the Reader, to performe the last office of humanitie to our Iew, and as hee hath seene his birth, his Synagogue-Rites, and home superstitions, so to visit him on his Death-bed, and helpe lay him in his graue: and examine his hope of the Resurrection, and of their Messias, and wee will end our Pilgrimage in this Holy Land.

§. VII.

Of their visitation of the sicke, And funerall rites.

n Ceremonies about the sicke.

WHen n a man lieth sicke, the Rabbines visit him; and if he be rich, order is taken for his Will, and then they exhort him to perseuere constantly in their Faith: They aske him if hee beleeue that the Messias is yet to come. Hee maketh his confession on his bed, saying; I confesse before thee, my God and Lord, God of my parents, Lord of all Creatures, that my health and death is in thy hand, I pray thee grant me recouery of my former health, and heare my praier, as thou dideſt Hezekiah in his sicknes. And if the time of my death be come, then grant that death may bee a remission of all my sinne, which of ignorance or knowledge I haue committed, euer since I was a man: grant that I may haue my part in Paradise, and the world to come, which is reserued for the iust; grant that I may know the Way of euerlasting life, fill mee with the ioy of thy excellent countenance by thy right hand for euer and euer. Blessed bee thou, O GOD, which heareſt my prayer.

Thus they which refuse the merits of Christs death, ascribe remission of sinnes to their owne. When he giueth vp the ghost, o all the standers by rend their garments, but in a certaine place of the same, where they doe no great harme, about a hand-breadth. They lament the dead seuen dayes. They presently after his death powre out all the water in the house into the streete: they couer his face that it may no more bee seene: they bow his thumb in his hand, framing a resemblance of the Hebrew name Schaddai: his other fingers are stretched out, to testifie a forsaking of the world: they wash him with hot water, and hauing anointed his head with wine and the yolke of an Egge mixed together, they put on him a white vestment, which he vsed to weare on the Feast of Reconciliation. When they carry him out of the house, they hurle after him a broken sherd, signifying, that with him all heauinesse should bee expelled and broken. When they are come to the place p of buriall, they say, Blessed be GOD which hath formed you with iudgement and iustice, hath created, fed, sustained, and at last hath deprined you of life, (speaking to the dead.) Hee knoweth the number of you all, and will quicken you againe in his time. Blessed be God, which doth to die, and maketh aliue. Let the dead liue, with my carkasse let them rise againe. Awake and reioyce yee that lie in dust, because thy dew is the dew of light, and the earth shall cast foorth her dead. This the Minister sayth alone: then he goeth on with a long prayer of three and twenty sentences, which the people say after him, going about the sepulchre. They call this prayer Tziddduck haddin, the subiect wherof is the iustice of GOD; calling for pardon in the name of Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, acknowledging that by three things the foundations of the world are founded, the Law, worship, and piety to the dead: calling for deliuerance for the bloud of his seruants shed in the 856. yeere for the confession of his holy Name, and for the merit of the onely-begotten, which was seuen and thirty yeeres old, in whose place a Ramme was taken; concluding with mention of their Captaines slaine in the 136. yeere. Heere they take downe the corps: and then the Minister singeth, the people following: This is the way of the world, let him sleepe in peace, &c. Yee Fathers of the world which sleepe in Hebron, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and say, His comming be in peace. Yee euerlasting hills of the double caue, open vnto him the gates of the garden of Eden, and bid him welcome, Yee Angels of peace, go forth to meete him, vnlocke to him the gates of Paradise. Yee keepers of the treasures of the garden of Eden, open the gates, and let N. enter, & enioy the fruites of Paradise; good things bee at his right hand, pleasant things at his left. Heare this, O Lord, and let his comming be in peace. Then lay they him into the ground, and his neereſt kinsmen cast in the first earth: after which they turne to the East with diuers other blessings. When q they returne, they blow themselues backwards three times, and throw grasse ouer their heads, signifying their hope of the resurrection, according to that Es.66.14. and your bones shall bud as the grasse; saying also, Dust thou art, and to Dust thou shalt returne. Then doth euery one mutter a Prayer to himselfe, as he goeth out of the buriall place. In the porch of the Synagogue, God r shall destroy death for euer (say they) and wipe away all teares from their eyes, and will take away their reproach from all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it. Then enter they into the Synagogue, and leape vp and downe, and change their Seates seuen times, and there say ouer their Purgatorie-prayer Kaddisch. The Mourners goe bare-foote seuen dayes, and eate not Flesh, nor drinke Wine, except on the Sabbaths and Festiuals. They bathe not in three and thirty dayes after, cut not their nayles, worke not, make a pittifull howling, &c. The first night the Mourner eateth nothing of his owne, but meate sent him from his friendes.

o And about the dead in the house.

p At the graue. They may not bury the corps in silke or needle worke, (Iuch.f.54.) no not a Prince: for this were waste, and a worke of the Gentiles. Officium Lugentium ex lib. precationum heb. Mahzor. vid. Genebrard.

q After the buriall.

r Esay 25.8.

The

The childe mourneth for his Father a yeere. The sonne eleuen moneths saith ouer his Kaddisch; for meane sinners are freed sooner: but the wicked stay the whole twelue moneths: and therefore to persist the twelfth moneth in his prayer, should be to acknowledge his father a wicked man. And for the effect hereof, Rabbi Akibha met once in the way a man, with an Asse-like burthen of sticks, which vpon examination confessed, That hee was a Purgatorie-ghost, carrying to burne himselfe, such bundles euery day. Rabbi Akibha enquired if hee had a Sonne or Wife, and where; and finding out his sonne, taught him this prayer, which was so effectuall, that in a dreame this Ghost returned to the Rabbi with thankes for his deliuerance, and sayd, hee was now in Gan Eden, or Paradise. Rabbi Akibha signified this to the Iewish Synagogues, with iniunction to teach their Children this prayer.

But to returne to our Funerals: when they are come backe to the mourning house, they wash their hands, but obserue not the Mosaicall Rites, because the Temple is not standing. Then doe they powre out a long blessing ouer a cup of Wine, and another ouer their Meate, exceeding much longer. Their Purgatorie-Prayer, or (as Genebrard calleth it, their) Requiem, vel libera, is this: It is better to go into the house of mourning, then into the house of feasting, in which is the end of all men: which let the liuing remember. Let vs heare the end: Feare GOD, and keepe his Commandements; this is the dutie of euery man. A sure rest in the high habitation vnder the wings of GOD, in the degree of the Saints, shining as the brightnesse of the skie. The change of bonds, pardon of sinnes, grant of saluation, indulgence and mercie from the sight of him which dwels in Heauen, and a portion in the life to come: there let the portion be, and the dwelling of the soule of the wise Master N. The Spirit of the Lord make him to rest in Gan Eden, and giue him peace, as it is written in Esay, Let peace come, and let him rest in beds, walking before it, he and all the deceased of Israel, through his mercie, Amen. They write also on the Tombe, Let his soule bee in the Garden of Eden, Amen. Or, Let his soule bee bound in the bundle of life. And sometimes, Thou art the Tombe of N. which departed into Eden, such a day of such a moneth and yeere. Thus poore Purgatorie with Iewes and Romists is preached by walking Ghosts. They haue a light burning for the dead seuen dayes. They powre the water out of the doores, because the Angell of Death washed his sword (lately vsed) in water, and enuenometh it. This his sword he holdeth in his hand at the beds head, hauing on the end thereof three drops of gall. The sicke man spying this Deadly Angell, openeth his mouth with feare, & then those drops fall in, of which one killeth him, the second maketh him pale, the third rotteth and putrifieth. Elias [f] Leuita addeth, that after a man is dead, the Angell of Death commeth and sitteth on his Graue, and presently the soule entreth into his body, and hee maketh him stand on his feet, hauing to that purpose, in his hand a chayne, halfe of yron, and halfe of fire, wherewith hee striketh him. At the first blow his members are dissolued, at the second his bones are scattered; then come the Angels, and gather them: at the third hee is brought to dust and ashes, and returneth into his Graue. And this, sayth R. Meir, is more grieuous then the iudgement of Hell: for the iust, and the sonnes of the Princes, and abortiues are iudged therewith, except they which dye on the Eeuen of the Sabbath, and in the land of Israel: of which you haue heard their rolling opinion before; neither will wee roll this stone to our Reader againe.

§. I.

Of the Signes of the comming of their Messias.

THe Iewes generally beleeue, hope, and pray for a Messias; but such a one, whose Kingdome shall bee of this world, and who shall (to vse the Apostles [a] phrase, who were also, euen after Christs death and resurrection, partakers of this dreame) Restore the Kingdome to Israel. And because the Scripture speaketh sometimes of the poore, contemptible, and deiected state of the promised Messias, sometimes of the puissance, renowne, and glory of his Kingdome: they therefore frame to their conceits, two Messiahs, one poore and simple, but a mightie warriour, whom they call Messias Ben-Ioseph, the other Messias Ben-Dauid;

Dauid; after the other in time, but before him in glory, and the true Messias: howsoeuer euen this also bee in their opinions but a meere man, and one which shall marry and leaue behind him a remayning and raigning posterity. The Cabalists (according to their transcendent mysteries) out of the name Adam, which the Hebrewes write without points, Adm, gather, that the soule of Adam, by a Metempsychosis passed into Dauid, and that of Dauid into Messias, which yet lyes hid for the sinnes of the Iewes.

The ancient Iewes looked for this Messias to bee sent them about that time, when Iesus came in the Flesh: as that Propheſie which is fathered on Elias testifyeth, to wit, that the world should bee two thousand yeeres Tohu, empty and without law, two thousand vnder the Law, two thousand vnder the Messias: and accordingly Christ Iesus came into the world about the yeere after the Creation, 3963. The Iewes reckon 202. yeeres fewer in all their computations, then the Christians. Vpon this occasion, and in regard of the generall expectation of the Messias, about that time rose so many Sects, and especially that rebellion of Ben-Cochab, before spoken of, to whom R. Akibha (famous for his foure and twenty thousand Disciples) gaue testimony, and called him Messias the King. But this Ben-Cochab, the sonne of the Starre, Numb. 23. was by Adrian (as you haue seene) besieged, taken, and executed, and was called after [b] Ben-Cozobh, the sonne of lying. They therefore, when as they found no Messias, said, that the time was deferred, because of their sinnes: and after denounced Anathema to him, that should set downe the time of his comming: And being conuinced in their consciences, that the [c] Propheſies of this time were already past and accomplished, they affirmed in their writings, that hee was then borne, but did not yet reueale himselfe, because of their sinnes. R. Salomon Iarchi writeteh, that the ancient Iewes thought he was borne on that day, in which Ierusalem was last destroyed; but vncertaine where he hath lyen hid. Some say that he abideth in Paradise, tyed by the haire of a womans head: so interpreting that of the Canticles, The [d] hayre of thy head is as purple, The King is tyed in the rafters; by rafters meaning Paradise. The Talmudists [e] write, that hee lay at the gates of Rome among the Lazars and Leapers, according to Esay 53.

1. Before he commeth, they write, that ten notable miracles shall happen to warne them thereof. First, GOD shall raise vp three Kings, which shall make profession of the true Faith, but shall indeed betray it, and seduce men, and cause them to deny GOD. The louers of the Truth shall flee and hide themselues in caues and holes of the earth, and these Tyrants shall pursue and slay them. Then shall there be no King in Israel (as it [f] is written) no Pastor, no holy men. The heauens shall bee shut vp, the people shall be made few; for these Tyrants (which yet by diuine dispensation shall raigne but three months) shall impose ten times as much, as was before exacted, and they which haue not to pay, shall lose their heads. And from the ends of the earth shall come men, blacke and loathsome; the dread of whose countenance shall kill men: for they haue two heads, and seuen eyes, sparkling like fire.

f *Hosh.*3.4.

2. The second Miracle shall bee a great heate of the Sunne, causing Feauers, Pestilences, and other diseases, so that the Gentles shall digge themselues graues, and there lye and wish for death. But the Israelites shall haue this heat to be as wholesome medicine to them: so interpreting the [g] Prophet.

g *Malac.*4.2.

3. GOD shall make a bloudy dew fall on the earth, of which the people, and the wicked of the Israelites shall drinke, thinking it to be good water, and shall die: it shall not hurt [h] the iust, who shall shine, &c.

h *Dan.*12.3.

4. Fourthly, GOD shall make a wholsome dew to fall, whereof the indifferent meaner sinners, sicke of the former dew, shall drinke and liue, *Hos.*14.6.

5. Fifthly, The [i] Sunne shall be darkened thirty dayes, and then receiue againe his light, whereby many shall embrace Iudaisme.

i *Ioel.*2.31.

6. Sixthly, GOD shall permit the Edomites (or Romans) to rule ouer all the world: but one especially, at Rome, shall raigne nine moneths ouer all the world, wasting large countries, laying heauy tributes vpon the Israelites. Then shall the Israelites haue no helper (as sayth Esai 49. 16.) But after nine moneths GOD shall send Messias Ben-Ioseph of the children of Ioseph, whose name shall be Nehemias, the sonne of Husiel. Hee shall come with the race of Ephraim, Manasse, Beniamin, and Gad, and the Israelites hearing of it, shall flocke to him, as Ieremie sheweth, [k] Conuert yee to the Lord, yee rebellious children, I will take yee, one of a City, and two of a Tribe, &c. This Messias shall ouerthrow the Edomites, and slay their King, and destroying the Empire, shall carrie to Ierusalem, holy vessels, reserued in the house of Ælian for a treasure. The King of Egypt also shall make peace with the Israelite, and shall kill the men about Ierusalem, Damascus and Ascalon; the fame whereof shall affright all the inhabitants of the earth.

k *Ierem.*3.14.

7. Seuenthly, There is at Rome a marble Image of a Virgin not made by mans hand, to which which shall resort all the wicked of the world, and shall incestuously conuerse therewith. Hence shall GOD frame an Infant in the same, which shall with breach of the marble come foorth. This shall bee named Armillus the wicked, the same which the Christians call Antichrist, of ten elles quantitie of bredth and length; a spanne bredth betweene his eyes, which shall bee red and deepe in his head; his hayre yellow, the soles of his feet greene, deformed with two heads. Hee shall professe himselfe the Romane Messias and GOD, and shall bee accepted of them. He shall bid them bring him the Law which hee hath giuen them, which they shall bring with their Prayer-booke: hee shall cause them to beleeue in him, and shall send Ambassadours to Nehemias the sonne of Husiel, and to the people of Israel, commanding them also to bring him their Law, and to acknowledge him for GOD. Then shall Nehemias goe vnto Armillus with three hundred thousand Ephraimites, carrying with him the booke of the Law; and when he comes at him, hee shall reade out of the same this sentence, I am the Lord thy God, thou shalt haue none other Gods in my sight. Armillus shall reply, that there is no such sentence in their Law, and therefore they should acknowledge him for God, as well as the Gentiles. Then shall Nehemias ouerthrow two hundred thousand of Armillus his Armie: whereat Armillus shall bee so wrathfull, that hee shall assemble all his forces into a deepe valley, and there shall destroy (with many other Israelites) this Nehemias. But the Angels shall take and hide him, that Armillus may not know of his death, lest hee should not leaue one of Israel liuing. All Nations shall then expell the Israelites, and such affliction shall befall them, as neuer since the beginning of the world. At this time shall the Angell Michael come foorth, and seperate the wicked from Israel, as writeth [l] Daniel. They which remaine, shall flye into the desart, and for fiue and fortie dayes space, liue with grasse, and leaues, and hearbes; but all the wicked Israelites shall dye. Armillus shall after subdue Ægypt, and shall turne thence against Ierusalem, and seeke againe to waste it. These things after their manner, they fable out of the eleuenth and twelfth of Daniel.

The eighth Miracle is the arising of Michael, who three times shall winde his great horne, Esa.27.13. and Zach.9.14. At the first sound, the true Messias Ben Dauid, and Elias the Prophet, shall shew themselues to those deuout Israelites in the desarts of Iuda, who shall then gather courage: and all the Iewes in the world shall heare this sound, and shall confesse GODS deliuerance, and all that haue beene led captiue into Assyria shall assemble together. The same horne shall strike feare and diseases into the Christians and other people. Now shall the Iewes make great iourneyes towards Ierusalem, and together with Elias and Messias shall come thither with ioy. Armillus hearing this, in his proud furie shall re-assemble his Christians against the Messias and Ierusalem. But GOD not suffering his people to fall out of one trouble into another, shall say to the Messias, Come place thy selfe at my right hand; and to the Israelites, Bee still and wait for the great succour of the Lord this day. And then shall GOD rayne fire and brimstone from Heauen, as Ezekiel [m] reporteth, where with Armillus and his Armie shall dye, and [n] The house of Iacob shall bee as fire, and the house of Ioseph as a flame, and the house of Esau (the Idumæan Atheists which destroyed GODS house) as stubble.

n Obad.18.

At the second sound or blast of this horne of Michael, the graues at Ierusalem shall open, and the dead arise, and Messias Ben Dauid with Elias shall reuoke into life, that Messias Ben Ioseph, and the Israelites shall send Messias Ben Dauid into all Countries of the Iewes dispersion, to cause them to come to Ierusalem; and the Nations with whom they are, shall bring them in their Chariots, and on their shoulders. 9.

The last Miracle, is the third time of Michaels winding his horne, when GOD shall bring foorth all the Iewes, which are by the Riuers Gosan, Lachbach, Chabor, and in the Cities of Iuda, and they without number or measure, shall with their Infants enter into the Paradise of Moses; and the ground before them and behind them shall be meere fire, which shall leaue no sustenance to the Christians. And when the ten Tribes shall depart out of the Nations, then the piller of the cloud of Diuine glory shall compasse them, and GOD shall goe before them, and shall open to them the fountaines flowing from the tree of Life, Esa.49.10. I might adde to these miracles that of the [o] Asse, which Abraham rode on when hee went to sacrifice his sonne; which Moses also vsed when he returned into Ægypt (and some say, Balaams Asse was the same) this shall the Messias ride on, according to Zacharies Prophesie, Zach.9.5. 10.

o Vitt Carb.l.2. cap.15.

Against these ten miraculous signes, fore-shewing Messias his comming, the most being full of troubles, they haue ten consolations: first, The certaintie of Messias comming: secondly, That hee shall gather them from all places of the dispersion, Ierem.31.8. but the Lame there mentioned shall bee so cured, that [p] They shall leape as Harts, &c. thirdly, GOD will raise vp the dead: fourthly, GOD will erect a third Temple, according to the figure of that in Ezekiel 41. fiftly, That the Israelites shall then raigne ouer all the earth, *Esa.*60. 12. yea, all the world shall bee subiect to the Law, *Soph.*3.9. sixtly, GOD will destroy all their enemies, *Ezek.*25.14. seuenthly, GOD will take from them all diseases, *Esa.*33.24. eightly, GOD will prolong their liues, that they shall liue as long as an Oake, *Esa.*65.22. and as in the times from Adam to Noe: ninthly, They shall see God face to face, *Esa.*40.5. and They all shall Prophesie, *Ioel.*2.28. tenthly, GOD shall take away from them all euill concupiscence, and inclination to euill, *Ezek.*36.26. Thus farre out of the booke Abbkas Rochel.

§. II.

Iewish tales of monstrous Birds, Beasts, Fishes and Men.

THeir cheere in these dayes shall bee the greatest Beasts, Birds, and Fishes, which GOD euer created; and no other wine then that which grew in Paradise, and was kept in Adams Celler till that time: the great Oxe Behemoth mentioned in Iob [q], and *Psal.*50.10. All the Beasts of the wood are mine, and the beasts feeding on a thousand hills, that is, Behemoth, which euery day feedeth on a thousand hills. But lest this deuouring beast should consume all the hills in the world, they tell you that hee is a stalled Oxe, still abiding in the same place, and what hee eateth in the day, groweth againe in the night. The huge Whale Leuiathan, or, as they pronounce it, Lipiasan, must honour also this Feast: of this they write in the [r] Talmud; that to preuent filling the world with these huge monsters, GOD gelded the male Leuiathan, and the female is slaine, and preserued in pickle, for the iust, to be eaten in the times of the Messias, Esay, 27. The male Behemoth was gelded also, and the female was stored vp for this feast. Elias Leuita [s] reporteth of a huge huge Bird, also called Bariuchne, to bee rosted at this feast; of which the [t] Talmud saith, that an egge sometime falling out of her nest, did ouerthrow and breake downe three hundred tall Cedars; with which fall the egge being broken, ouerflowed and carryed away sixtie Villages. Wee will haue the Whetstone before we part. R. Barchannah saw a Frogge as big as Akra, a village of sixtie housholds: then came a huger Serpent and swallowed that huge Frogge. Lastly, the hugest, hugest Crow that euer the Rabbine saw, flew and deuoured these both; and flying away, sate on a tree, which tree sure could not be lesse then the three hundred Cedars before mentioned, if this Crow were but as bigge as that egge. R. Papa answereth, that he would neuer haue beleeued it, but that hee saw it. (I hope they will pardon vs if wee be of the same minde.) But would you not faine heare of a man, holding like proportion? then let R. Saul tell you of his aduentures in the burying of a dead corps, where hee encountred with a bone of a man, into which there flew a Rauen, and the Rabbi would needs follow after to see what became of her: and so, he went, & he went, three leagues in the hollow of the same bone, and could find no end therof, and therfore returned: so he perceiued it was one of the bones of Og the Giant, whom Moses had slaine. Perhaps you will maruell how Moses could atchieue such an exploit. Forsooth, you must vnderstand, that Moses was ten cubits high, and had an Axe ten cubits long, and leaped other ten cubits in the ayre, and so gaue the deadly blow to Og, who (it seemes) was layde along in some deepe Trench, or else you will thinke the Rabbine lyed. Tush, your incredulitie makes you vnworthy to heare their storie of R. Osua, who beguiled the Angell of Death, of whom (when hee came to smite him) hee would in kindnesse needs learne his future place in Paradise; where with the deadly Angell was content, and went with him; yea, for his securitie, at his request resigned his deadly weapon into his hands. Thus at last they came at Paradise, where hee shewed him his place, which he desirous to take better view of, required his helpe to lift him higher, and then with a quicke deliuerie leapt into Paradise. Thus did the poore coozened Angell misse his prey, and was glad with much a-doe to recouer his sword from the Rabbine. And that you might see their skill, no lesse in Cosmographie then Theologie: Another was carryed to the place where Heauen and Earth meete, and kisse each other; where, whiles hee might take the more diligent view in obseruing those parts (which the Frier of Oxford neuer saw, nor Faustus with his Mephostophiles) hee hanged his Cloake on a window in Heauen; and suddenly it was conueyed out of sight. Hereat amazed that there should bee theeues in Heauen, a voyce told him it was the heauens motion, and at such an houre the next day he might attend, and againe obtaine his Cloake; which hee did accordingly. But to take view of other strange creatures, make roome I pray, for another Rabbi with his Bird; and a great deale of roome you will say is requisite: Rabbi Kimchi on the 50. Psalme auerreth out of Rabbi Iehudah, that Ziz is a bird so great, that with spreading abroad his wings, hee hideth the Sunne, and darkneth all the world.

world. And (to leape backe into the Talmud) a certaine Rabbi saying on the Sea, saw a bird in the [u] middle of the sea, so high, that the water reached but to her knees; whereupon he wished his companions there to wash because it was shallow; Doe it not (saith a voyce from heauen) for it is seuen yeeres space since a Hatchet, by chance falling out of a mans hand in this place, and alwaies descending, is not yet come at the bottome. I perceiue by your incredulous smiles, you will scarce beleeue [x] that a Lyon in the wood Ela, roared suddenly, that all the women in Rome (foure hundred miles from thence) for very horror proued abortiue; and when he came an hundred miles neerer, his terrible noyse shooke the teeth out of all the Romans heads; and the Emperour himselfe, that caused the Rabbi to obtaine of GOD by his prayer, to make this triall of the Lion, fell downe from his Throne halfe dead: and with much importunity requested his helpe, to cause him retire to his denne. But this roaring hath almost marred our Feast.

Their Messias his Feast.

OVr Wine you haue heard of, fetched out of Adams Celler, Esay 27.2.3. and Psal. 75.9. Before the Feast, Messias will cause these prety creatures, Behemoth and Leuiathan [y] to play together and make them sport: but when they haue wearied themselues in the fight, Messias with his sword shall kill them both, *Esa.*27.1. Then followeth the Feast, and afterwards his Marriage; [z] Kings Daughters shall bee among thine honourable women: at thy right hand standeth the Queene in the golde of Ophir. Amongst the Messias his excellent women (Rabbi Kimchi expoundeth) shall bee Kings Daughters, for euery King shall repute it to his owne glory to bestow a daughter on the Messias: But the true Queene shall bee one of the faireſt Israelites daughters, and shall continually conuerse with him, whereas the others must come onely at call. He shall thus beget children, which shall raigne after him, Esay 53.10. when he is dead.

y *Iob.*40.15. *Psal.*104.26.

z *Psal.*45.10.

Now the state of the Iewes in his time shall be such, that the Christians shall freely build them houses and Cities, and till their grounds, and bestow on them their goods; yea, Princes shall serue them, and they shall walke in faire garments, *Esa.*60.10,11,12. and *Esa.*61.5,6. The ayre also shall be new and wholesome, Esa. 65.17. by the benefit whereof, they shall abide sound, and liue long, and in their age bee as fresh as if they were yong, *Psal.*92.14.15. The Wheat once sowne shall alway grow vp of it selfe, no otherwise then the Vines, Hosea 14.8. And if any shall desire any raine for his field, or garden, or one herb by it selfe, he shall haue it, *Zach.*10.11. Then shall be peace among men and beasts, *Hos.*2.19. *Esa.*11.7. If there arise any warre among the Gentiles, the Messias shall accord them, *Esa.*2.4. They shall liue in great felicitie, full of the knowledge and praise of GOD. The earth shall be full hereof, &c. The Talmud also speaketh of a thousand yeeres, wherein the world shall be renewed (somewhat like the opinion of some Ancients in the Primitiue Church) in which time the iust shall haue wings giuen them like Eagles, whereby they may flie ouer the face of the waters. But the bodies of the iust which shall rise againe, shall neuer returne to dust. Ricius in this and many other of their absurdities, seekes to giue an allegoricall interpretation: but which of the Heathen haue not so patronized their superstitions and Idolatries? as appeareth in the Poets, Philosophers, Chaldæan and Egyptian Priests, whose mysticall learning cannot free their religions from being mysteries of iniquitie. Sixe thousand yeeres the world endureth, saith R. Katina, and a thousand yeere shall be a desolation, and GOD onely shall be exalted in that day (for one thousand yeeres is one day of the Lord) as it is written, A thousand yeeres in thy sight are as yesterday; and this is a Sabbath wherein shall be the feastings aboue mentioned. And thus did [a] Elias affirme, as is said two thousand yeeres the world was emptie, two thousand the Law, and two thousand Messias; but for the sins of men that is wanting, which we see wanting. (This last clause, Ricius saith, is added by the Talmudists, which still expect their Messias) eighty fiue Iubilees shall the world indure, and in the last, saith this Elias, shall come the Sonne of Dauid.

Thus haue wee heard the infancie of the Church in the time of her nonage, and of those Hebrew Patriarchs: wee haue seene also their present Infancie in these Iewish Fables, the iust reward of [b] Louing darknesse rather then light. And so with our prayers to GOD, at last to take that Veile of MOSES from their hearts, that there may be One proper Shepheard, and one sheepefold, and that meane-while, we may learne preciously to esteeme, and reuerently to make vse of that light we haue; warned by the spectacle of Diuine Iustice in them, through so many ages blinded in so palpable fooleries; we will now leaue them and this Holy Land, and

CHAP. XXI.

Of the hopes and hinderances of the Iewes Conuersion.

WHen I had now (as I thought) brought this Iewish Relation to an end, and euen wearied the Reader with that which might much more wearie the writer: that Propheſie of [a] Paul, That all Iſraell ſhall bee ſaued, &c. which by moſt Interpreters is conſtrued of the generall conuerſion of that Nation, after the fulneſſe of the Gentiles bee come in (as in the beginning of this Worke is ſaid) cauſed my ſtraying Pen (ready to wander from theſe, ſo farre wandering from their holy Progenitors) to vndertake this taske, alſo to declare, what future hopes, and what preſent feares and lets may be conceiued of their conuerſion to Chriſtianitie. The hope (though it be yet toſſed vpon ſurges of almoſt-deſperate Seas, yet) hath Anchoram ſacram, a ſure Anchor to relye on, and a kinde of obſcure kenning of that wiſhed-for Hauen, where it would bee. For [b] Non ita perierunt ad vnum Iudæi, vt nulla ſuperſit de illorum ſalute ſpes. The deſtruction of the Iewes (ſaith Peter Martyr) is not ſo deſperate, but that their is ſome Hope left of their ſaluation. And a little after (alluding to the Apoſtles myſterie) Cum enim plenitudo fuerit iam ad Chriſtum conuerſa ex gentibus, tunc & Iſraelitæ accedent: For when there ſhall haue beene a full conuerſion of the Gentiles vnto Chriſt, then ſhall the Iewes alſo come in. So Chryſoſtome: Quia [c] ſubintrauit plenitudo Gentium, in nouiſſimo ſaluabitur omnis Iſrael; becauſe the fulneſſe of the Gentiles hath come in, at laſt all Iſrael ſhall bee ſaued. The ſame hope is generally cheriſhed by the reſt of the Fathers. And D. Willet in a booke [*] written of this argument, brings to this purpoſe many authorities of Scriptures and Fathers, *Gen.*9.27. and 49.10. *Deut.*33.7. *Pſal.*125.1. Ezek. 37.1. and 47.4. *Zach.*2.12. and 12.10. *Mal.*3.5. Luk. 15.31. *Ioh.*10.16. 2. *Cor.*3.16. *Apoc.*3.9. &c. and eſpecially that in the eleuenth to the Romans, wherein many arguments are compiled together: confirmed alſo by the interpretations and teſtimonies of Origen, Athanaſius, Chryſoſtome, Hierome, Auguſtine, Beda, Hugo Cardinalis, Aquinas, Gorrham, Caluin, Beza, Bullinger, Martyr, to whom wee may adde diuers others. Theſe indeed further our hopes, which yet depend more vpon Diuine goodneſſe then on humane probabilitie; the ſtabilitie of his Truth, which hath promiſed (as Paul alſo *Rom.*11. expoundeth the former Prophets) The vnchangeableneſſe of Gods Election, the bottomeleſſe Sea of his Mercies, the vaſearchableneſſe of his Iudgements, miniſter hope beyond hope. Hereunto alſo may bee added, the common grounds, both of Reaſon, which they hold with vs in Nature; and of the Scripture, the ancienter parts whereof, and eſpecially the Law of Moſes, they maintayne with equall acknowledgement, (and for the moſt part) with more forward induſtrie and zeale, then doe the commoner ſort of Chriſtins.

But the [d] impediment which haue hitherto, and doe yet with-hold them from Chriſtianitie, doe exceed in number and power. For that fore-ſtalled preiudice of theirs, the glory of the Temple, the ſacrifices and legall worſhips paſt, their hopes then and ſtill of ſuch a Monarch to their Meſſias, as you haue heard of, the ſplendour of their renowmed Anceſtors, the keeping of the Diuine Oracles, their peculiar tytle of being Gods people, haue bred in them ſuch a ſwelling pride, that they naturally enuie and abhorre the very thought thereof, that the Gentiles ſhould in theſe things either equal or ſucceed them.

Sooner (ſaith Martin [e] Luther) then they would endure that the Gentiles (which in their daily prayers they curſe and reuile) ſhould haue any part with them in their Meſſias, and bee accounted co-heyres thereof, they would crucifie ten Meſſiahs: yea (if it were poſſible) would doe to death GOD himſelfe, with all the Angels and creatures elſe, although they ſhould therefore vndergoe a thouſand hels.

Hence, in a great part, proceedeth their naturall and long continued obſtinacie. And beſides that preiudice, pride, and enuie, they are not a little ſcandalized from the Chriſtians themſelues, ſomewhat in regard of the mutuall differences and diſagrements among Proteſtants; which, though in it ſelfe bad, is made much worſe by the vnſeaſonable and vnreaſonable exaggeration of their common Aduerſarie, the Papiſt: but more, in reſpect of thoſe which call themſelues Catholikes, and are not, but euen by theſe men are found to bee manifeſt Idolaters. A ſcandall are the alterations which they are forced by the Inquiſitors, to make in their Authors and Monuments of Antiquitie: thinking, that theſe deuices are our beſt euidences. A ſcandall is the vowing and praying to Angels and Saints, yea, more to the Mother of Chriſt, then to Chriſt himſelfe, or to GOD, to whom alone they repute this is a due ſacrifice. But the greateſt ſcandall of all others, is the worſhipping of Images. Indeede it ſeemed ſtrange to me, and doth to the reſt of my Brethren according to the fleſh, (Nathaniel, a Iew borne, baptized in London, before the Congregation at All-hallowes made this confeſſion) euen vnto this day, in whom this blindneſſe and hardneſſe of heart is in part continued, through occaſion giuen by them that profeſſe the name of Ieſus: and not onely in vs, which are of the houſe of Iſrael, but in others, as the Turkes and Mahumetanes, which are the race of Iſhmael. Wee and our Fathers and Elders ſay, and in our bookes call them by no other name, but Baale abodazara, Idolatrous Maſters: a thing ſo deteſtable vnto vs, as nothing more, &c. They ſay vnto vs oftentimes, that they doe not worſhip him as gods, but GOD in them. Neither are the Heathen, we ſay, that are round about vs, ſo blinded, that they thinke the ſtocks and ſtones to be GOD, but they are perſwaded that God may be worſhipped in them. And yet they goe farther: for the Chriſtians in Spaine and Portugall haue it written in their Bookes, That the Virgin Mary is the Lords Treaſurer, and that ſhe beſtowes gifts and graces vpon her ſeruants: That her Mercie pardoneth them, whom the Iuſtice of her Sonne might condemne, and that our ſaluation lieth in her hands. But our Law teacheth, That GOD is All-ſufficient, hee giueth to whom he liſteth, He will not giue his glory to another, &c. The Reader may (if hee pleaſe) from that Iew himſelfe, in his printed Confeſſion, be further informed of that Partition wall, which ſeparateth the Iew and Catholike. g Apr. 1577.

They are ſo much the more ſcandalized, when they ſee the Catechiſmes recite the Decalogue, with omiſſion of that ſecond Commandement, which they thinke (as one of their greateſt Rabbins conteſted with our [h] Author) was the Ordinance of Chriſt himſelfe. Yea, the Prieſts and Friers let paſſe in their Conferences with them for currant, their Iewiſh vpbraidings, that Chriſt, a Carpenters Sonne, was an Image-maker, or at leaſt an Author of their worſhipping. As for thoſe ſpeculatiue plaiſters of δουλεία and λατρεία, of intention inſtrumentall and finall in worſhip of Images of the true, and Idols of the falſe gods, they are (as euen now you heard) the vnſauoureſt dregs to the Iew in the world. h Rel. Weſt.

The poore Idiot, among the Chriſtians, can as little diſtinguiſh as the Pagan, and both amongſt the Chriſtians is like honour done to Gods Image, and to that of Saints, and to them both, in like forme of worſhip, as amongſt the Pagans. They are forced to be at ſome Sermons, and there are well edified by their hearing, when they ſee the Preacher direct his prayer to a Crucifixe, calling it his Lord and Sauiour. Their Tranſubſtantiation is a monſter, as hideous as the former.

The meanes [i] vſed to their conuerſion are weake; eſpecially in ſome places, where they haue not the New Teſtament in ſuch Language as they can vnderſtand: and the Inquiſitors haue inhibited and taken from them all bookes written on that Theame, in defence of Chriſtian Religion, or againſt it, alledging, they will haue no diſputing in matters of Religion either way, like the Ieſuits Edict at Dola, forbidding all talke of GOD, either in good ſort or in bad. i Ibid.

But of all other, this is a good furtherance, that when in their Baptiſme they deny the Deuill and all his workes, they muſt renounce their right and propertie in all their goods and poſſeſſions; the ſhamefull couetouſneſſe of hypocriticall Chriſtians, hauing brought theſe irritamenta malorum within the compaſſe of the Deuils workes, preſuppoſing (forſooth) that either the conuerted Iew, or his corrupt anceſtors, haue ſcraped together ſuch heapes of wealth by vſurie, or oppreſſion, or ſome vnlawfull meanes or other. Therefore for the good of his ſoule, his body ſhall be left to beg or ſtarue; while, with the leauing of his Iewiſh ſuperſtition, hee muſt likewiſe leaue all that he hath: and his new-receiued Religion muſt be a meanes to ſtrip him of his riches, and to weane him from his wel-beloued Mammon, which that Nation is naturally ſo farre in loue with. This alone, to the world-bewitched Iew, is ſuch a Partition-wall to keepe him from Chriſtianitie, that he will venture ſoule and all, rather then thus betray himſelfe, his wife and children, to extreme beggerie and want. And ſo much the worſe, ſaith [k] Victor Carbenſis, one of theſe Conuerts, becauſe in their Iewiſh eſtate they had not learned any Art which now might miniſter vnto them ſuſtenance. Thus are they driuen to beg from doore to doore for their food, expoſed not onely to this extremitie of want, but to the opprobries alſo of vnchriſtians Chriſtians, who Iewiſhly hate the name of a Iew; not k Vict. de Carben. cont. Iud. l. 1. c. 4, 5.

can the Iew be waſhed from it with the ſacred tincture of Baptiſme; whiles the ſcumme of the irreligious-religious vulgar ſcoffe and point at them, ſaying, There goes a baptized Iew (a name beſt fitting themſelues) and on the other ſide their owne Countreymen hate and abhorre them as Apoſtataes, Renegadoes, and Fugitiues. And if any ſhew them kinder entertainment, yet (as a nine-dayes wonder) it laſteth but a little while, whereof the Iewes haue this prouerbe, A new Conuert is as a new or cleane cloth, which at firſt is pleaſant, but after a little wearing groweth foule and loathſome: Eſpecially, ſince the faireſt of his preferment (to welcome him to our Religion) is to turne Frier: then which profeſſion, nothing can be more hatefull to him, who accounteth it a courſe againſt Nature; and a breach of that Ordinance of [l] GOD (Creſcite & multiplicamini) of multiplying the world by a holy propagation in that [m] Honourable eſtate of Mariage, which that [n] doctrine of Deuils hath made the Frier vncapable of. As for the example of Elias, and ſome other holy Men (whom our Popiſh Votaries would make Patrones of their diſorderly Orders;) the Iew (herein more truely-Chriſtian then the Papiſt) holdeth it a courſe extraordinary, and ordinarily preferreth holy Marriage farre before that ſeeming-holy Vow of Virginitie. Thus we ſee what outward ſcandals, beſides their generall preiudice againſt Chriſtianitie, doe hinder them from it: which offences, in behalfe of the Chriſtians, together with that preiudice, Pride, and Enuie, and aboue all, that Veile which Diuine Iuſtice hath left vpon their hearts, GOD in his good time remoue, and grant, according to that Prophecie, That all Iſrael may be ſaued.

AND thus haue we ended our Iewiſh Relations; our next iourney is into Arabia: a way dreadfull ſometimes to the Iſraelites paſſing this way to Canaan, where yet their expected inheritance, their pillar of a cloud by day, and fire by night, their Manna, and many other miraculous effects of Diuine preſence, might arme them againſt heates, droughts, deſarts, ſerpents, enemies, and all oppoſitions. Not ſo your Pilgrime: now leauing Palæſtina and the Holy Land, to viſite theſe Arabian deſarts full of emptineſſe, ſtored with wants, and yet moſt fruitfull of that which is worſe then barrenneſſe, the very Seminary of Mahumetane impious pietie. The very conceit whereof makes him (like the Riuer Iordan, which loſeth himſelfe in this wilderneſſe, and therefore lingers as long as he may, diffuſing himſelfe in lakes by the way, as loth to mixe his Freſh-waters with the Dead Sea) to ſtay and ſtray ſo long in Palæſtina: as he which knowes a Heatheniſh and Moriſh Mare mortuum, will ſwallow him (if he could ſinke) as ſoone as he is paſſed hence. Let vs therefore ſtay here a little longer to refreſh our eyes wearied with Iewiſh ſpectacles, and take view of thoſe which haue ſince ſucceeded them in habitation, in ſinne, in iudgement. And where might wee better ſtay, or what part of the world can yeeld ſuch varietie and multiplicitie of obiects to both the eyes of the minde, Curioſitie and Deuotion? No where ſuch manifold alterations and diuiſions of ſtate, ſo diuerſified a Map of Nature, ſo multiplied rites of Religion in ſuch differing ſects of Heathens, Hebrewes, Mahumetans, Chriſtians: No where Antiquitie ſhewing a grauer countenance: no where the Monuments of ſuch mercies, the ſpectacles of ſuch iudgements, ſuch conſolations, ſuch deſolations, ſuch ambition of Potentates, and forraine furors from the Eaſt, the Weſt, the North, the South; ſuch Miracles, ſuch Oracles, ſuch confluence of Pilgrims looking as farre oppoſite as Sampſons Foxes, with as fierie diuiſions, whether in differing hereſies of one, or differing names of diuers Deuotions; both Catholike and Hereticall Iewes, Saracens and Chriſtians, concurring in viſiting, adorning, adoring, theſe places with Titles and Rites of Holineſſe. How often hath this country emtied our Weſterne world with Armes and Armies to recouer it, and the Eaſterne in like manner to retaine it? How often hath it brought Armies of Angelicall ſpirits out of the higheſt Heauens, to couer theſe Hilles with Chariots and Horſes of fire, round about the holy men of GOD? How oft? But what ſpeake I of Men or Angels? GOD himſelfe loued the gates of Sion, more then all the dwellings of the

the world: and IESVS CHRIST, the Angell of the Couenant, true GOD, and perfect MAN, here was borne, here liued, practiſed, died, aſcended, and hence he ſent his Apoſtles to bee Fiſhers of men, that the ſoanes of men might bee made the heires of GOD, co-heires with himſelfe.

After, the Iewes for reiecting him, were reiected out of both the heauenly and earthly Canaan; this countrey was inhabited partly by Roman Colonies, there planted for ſecuritie of the countrey by the Roman Emperours, partly by ſuch Syrians as ſubmitted themſelues peaceably to the Roman Empire, both that Ethnike before Conſtantine, and after in farre more flouriſhing eſtate vnder the Chriſtian Emperours, till the daies of vn-chriſtian Phocas. [a] This was the murtherer of Mauritius his Lord, the vſurper of the Empire, the exalter of the Roman See vnto the Eccleſiaſticall Supremacie (with as good right as himſelfe had to the ſtate) a monſter of mankinde, vnder whom the Empire was neere an vtter ouerthrow, as by the Hunnes, Auares, and other Nations in the Weſt; ſo eſpecially by the Perſians in the Eaſt; whoſe Emperour Choſroes ouerthrew that Armie which had conſpired againſt Mauricius, and [b] in the fourth yeere of Phocas ouer-ranne Meſopotamia and Syria: in the next yeere after carried much prey and many captiues out of all Syria, Paleſtina and Phœnicia; in the ſeuenth yeere of his raigne poſſeſſed Armenia, Galatia, Paphlagonia, and ſpoiled all as farre as Chalcedon. Yet ſaith Cedrenus, Phocas did more harme at home, then the enemy in the field. At the ſame time the Iewes made a commotion at Antioch, and ſlew (beſides many other Citizens) Anaſtaſius the Patriarch, in deſpight alſo putting his priuitiues in his mouth. But the Iewes paid much bloud for this butcherie; and Phocas alſo himſelfe the chiefe Butcher, was moſt mercileſly butchered preſently after by Heraclius his ſucceſſour. They tell of a Reuelation to a certaine Holy man, that GOD had made Phocas Emperour, becauſe hee could not finde a worſe man by whom to puniſh that people: which I mention, that the world might ſee what a good Mid-wife Rome (then in trauel) had to helpe her babe Antichriſt into the world. But to returne to the Storie, Heraclius could not withſtand the Perſian inſolence, but loſt in his firſt yeere Apamea, and Edeſſa, and in the next Cæſarea, from whence they carried many thouſands into captiuitie: in the fourth Damaſcus was taken, and in the fifth Ieruſalem, where (by reaſon of the Iewiſh crueltie, who bought all the Chriſtians they could to ſlaughter them) there were ſlaine [c] ninetie thouſand. Zacharias the Patriarch, together with the holy Croſſe, and exceeding ſtore of captiues and ſpoile, were carried into captiuitie. The next yeere they ouercame Egypt, Africa and Ethiopia. Choſroes neglects all ouertures of peace made to him by Heraclius, except they would deny their crucified God, and worſhip the Sunne. He alſo cauſed the Chriſtians in his dominion to become Neſtorians, the cauſe perhaps why almoſt all the farre Eaſterne Chriſtians to this day are, or at leaſt are called, Neſtorians. Againſt him Heraclius continued a ſix yeeres expedition, in which hee ouerranne his countries, ouerthrew his Armies, ſacked his Cities, Caſtles, and Palaces, and at laſt aſſiſted his eldeſt ſonne Siroes (whom Choſroes ſought to diſ-herit) againſt him, who tooke him, and hauing before expoſed him to all contumelious inſultations, and almoſt ſtarued him in a darke priſon, and ſlaine all his other children in his ſight; with abominable tyrannie ſhot his tyrannicall father to death. So died Choſroes; a ſucceſſour of Sennacherib, in the dominion of many the ſame countries, ſubiectiou to the like blaſphemous impietie, and reward by like parricide. Heraclius in the nineteenth yeere of his raigne viſiteth Ieruſalem, reſtoring the captiued croſſe and Patriarch by reſtitution of Siroes. He baniſhed thence all the Iewes, prohibiting by Edict that none ſhould come neere it by three miles.

§. II.

Of the Saracens and Turkes in Paleſtina.

THE Saracens had done good ſeruice in theſe wars againſt the Perſians, which in the time of Heraclius began a new Religion and Empire, vnder Mahomet the founder of both: the ſecond, after whom Omar ouerthrew Theodorus the brother of Heraclius in battell, and after him another Theodorus and Boanes his Generals, & forced the Emperour to abandon Syria, carrying the holy croſſe from Ieruſalem to Conſtantinople.

In the 26. of Heraclius hee entred Ieruſalem hypocritically and pſeudoprophetically clothed in a homely garment of Camels haire, and ſought out the place of Salomons Temple, there to erect another; ſubduing ſoone after the whole Perſian State, and a great part of the Roman. Anno Dom. 641. did Homar build his Temple at Ieruſalem with incredible coſts in matter and workmanſhip, enriching the ſame with many and large poſſeſſions and reuenues; in the Muſaike worke of the inner and outward part thereof expreſſing in Arabike letters letters, the Author, time, and charges of the building. The forme whereof is thus deſcribed by William Archbiſhop of Tyrus. [a] The Church-yard was ſquare, about a bow-ſhot in length and bredth, compaſſed with a high wall, hauing on the Weſt ſquare two gates, one on the North, and another on the Eaſt: on the South was the Palace. On euery of theſe gates, and on the corners were high ſteeples, on which at certaine houres the Prieſts after the Saracenicall manner called them to prayers.

a Lib. 8. c. 3.

In this compaſſe none were ſuffered to dwell, nor to enter but with bare and waſhed feet, Porters being aſſigned to that purpoſe.

In the midſt of this ſquare, was another ſomewhat higher, whereto they aſcended by ſtaires in two places on the Weſt ſide, as many on the South, and one on the Eaſt: in euery of the corners were Oratories or Chappels erected. In the middle hereof was the Temple raiſed of eight-ſquare forme, cruſted within and without with Marble and Muſaike worke, hauing a ſphericall roofe, artificially couered with Lead. Both the inner and outward ſquare was paued with white ſtone, whereby the raine water deſcended into many ciſternes for that cauſe prouided.

In the midſt of this Temple within the inner row of pillars, there was a Rocke of prettie height, with a Caue vnder it of the ſame ſtone, vpon which, they ſay, Dauid ſaw the Angell ſtanding which ſmote the people with peſtilence, after he had numbred them; where alſo he then built an Altar. This remained open to the view, till the Weſterne Chriſtians, winning the place, couered it with Marble, and erected thereon an Altar and Quire. Baumgarton (who was at Ieruſalem a hundred and nine yeeres ſince) and was thruſt downe the ſtaires by the Saracens, ſaith, this Temple is not now very large, and that it is twelue-cornered, with a round ſteeple in the midſt; thereon, (as on their ſteeple vſually) a halfe Moone: within were reported to burne continually two thouſand Lampes. The floore of the Church-yard being white Marble, occupying a bow-ſhot about the Temple, maketh ſuch a reflexion of the Sun-beames, that a man is not able to endure it.

This Temple the Saracens haue in ſuch reuerence, that the Soldan did then entitle himſelfe the high Prieſt and defender of it. They call it the Holy Rocke. If any Iew or Chriſtian enter therein, they compell him to deny his Religion, and turne Turke, or elſe they cut him aſunder in the middle: which hapned to a Chriſtian Maronite, about ſixe moneths before, who in a Turkiſh habite had entred: but being knowne, for feare denied his Faith, but with reluctation of his conſcience reuoked this act ſoone after, and liued after ſuch a diſmembring three houres. Neere this Temple is another, ſometimes called Salomons porch, by the Chriſtians dedicate to our Ladie, larger then is now that of Salomons, in which eight hundred Lampes were ſaid to burne continually. Vnder both theſe wee are told, that there is a large Vault with admirable rowes of pillars, able to receiue many thouſands. Breidenbachius Chancellor and Deane of Mentz, who viſited thoſe places aboue twentie yeeres before him, writes almoſt the ſame things; ſaue that hee placeth but ſeuen hundred Lampes in this Temple of Salomon, or (as the Saracens called it) the Holy Rocke. The Soldan then liuing had built another neere it with eightie eight Lampes continually burning. Hee with his companions had like to haue beene ſlaine by the Saracens, for offering to enter another Temple in Mount Sion, wherein was ſaid to bee the ſepulchers of the Kings of Iuda. The Saracens come farre in pilgrimage to the Holy Rocke (ſo they call it of the Rocke aforeſaid, which is grated about with iron) which they dare not touch, for the reputed ſanctitie and reported rarities thereof; Melchiſedechs offering, Iacobs dreame of the Ladder (which yet ſome haue aſcribed to the ſtone now at Weſtminſter) Ieremies encloſing the Arke, by ſome ſuppoſed to be ſtill therein; and a world of wonders told thereof. Ludolphus Suthenenſis relateth of that bloudie diſſection of ſuch as entred therein. But it is high time for vs to bee gone out of it, leſt ſome wiſh vs cut aſunder in the midſt, and this prolixe Hiſtorie made ſhorter by the halfe.

Thus Paleſtina continued wholly ſubiect to the Saracens; who after being diuided into ſects, the Egyptian called Siha, preuailed againſt the Perſian or Eaſterne called Sunni, and obtained all as farre as Antioch, and the Chriſtians of thoſe parts were in ſome tolerable condition, till the dayes of Hequen the Calipha, who raſed to the ground the Temple of the Reſurrection built in the time of Conſtantine, and repaired by Heraclius: hee forbade them the keeping of holy ſolemnities, and afflicted them with manifold other oppreſſions, forcing many to Apoſtacie. In the time of Daher ſonne of Hequen the Church was re-builded. Ann. Dom. 1048. But the greedie gouernours cruelly exacted on the Chriſtians, ſtill threatning if their purpoſes were not effected, to demoliſh their Temple. Yet theſe full flies were farre more gentle then thoſe their meagre and hungry ſucceſſours, the Turkes, which hauing conquered theſe parts, tyrannized moſt cruelly both here and in the parts of the leſſer Aſia, Belpheth [b] the Turke hauing ouerthrowne & taken Diogenes the Chriſtian ſtian Emperour in battell, whom hee vſed at a Settle, aſcending or deſcending his Throne. Thus Tyrius. Raimond de Agiles teſtifieth, that the Surians or Chriſtians of thoſe parts, of whom remained about Libanus ſixtie thouſand, at that time of the Franks inuaſion, (ſo called as hee ſuppoſeth of Sur, the name of Tyrus till this day) endured ſuch miſerie both in this Turkiſh and that former Saracenicall ſlauerie, that many were compelled to forſake their Religion, and be circumciſed: ſome others for feare deliuered their young children to Circumciſion, and ſome were violently taken to this purpoſe out of their mothers boſomes, the father being ſlaine, and the mother violated. Churches were ſubuerted, Altars ouerthrowne, and ſuperſtitious Images by a contrary ſuperſtition were done away: and if any mans deuotion deſired them in priuate, they were forced by a monethly or yeerely price to redeeme them. They proſtituted in Stewes their ſonnes and daughters, and yet the mother durſt not weepe at the ſight.

§. III.

Of the exploits of the Frankes and other Weſterne Chriſtians in Paleſtina.

THirtie eight yeeres they groaned vnder this Turkiſh yoke, from which they were freed by the Franks and other Weſterne Nations, vnder the conduct of Godfrey of Buillon, Robert of Normandie ſonne to the Conquerour, and other, who by the inſtigation of Peter the Eremite firſt, (whom [f] they ſo admired, that his words and deeds were acounted diuine, and the very hayre plucked off his Mule for Reliques) and after of Pope Vrban (calling a Councell at Claremont to this purpoſe) croſſed themſelues [g] to warre in and for the Holy land againſt the Infidels. GOD bleſſed their deſignes, and gaue into their hands all the three Paleſtina's: for ſo they were diuided according to the three chiefe Cities, Ieruſalem the firſt, the ſecond vnder Cæſarea, the third adiacent to Scythopolis, and ſubiected by the Chriſtians to Nazareth. From Antiochia to Ægypt, and as farre as Edeſſa, was ſubdued to the Chriſtian Faith and Scepter, farre more then Dauid or Salomon poſſeſſed. They had (ſaith Vitriaco) foure principalities, that of Edeſſa, chiefe Citie (after his account) of Media, the ſecond of Antiochia, the third of Tripoli, the fourth of Ieruſalem. But of their happie atchieuements another place is fitter. They which liſt to be acquainted with theſe warres; beſides Tyrenſis, Vitriacus, Sanutus and others of later times, may out of the writings of diuers eye-witneſſes which were in that firſt expedition, ſatisfie themſelues, as Robertus Monachus, Raimundus de Agiles, Fulcherius Carnotenſis, and diuers [h] others.

Ieruſalem was entred on the twelfth of Iuly 1099. being Friday; and after much bloud and ſlaughter in the Citie, they ſet vpon thoſe which had betaken themſelues to Salomons Temple (ſo was that called which Homar built) where, ſaith Robertus Monachus, was ſo much bloud ſhed, that the ſlaine bodies were rolled by the force thereof, and armes or diſmembred hands ſwamme vpon the bloud, and were ioyned to ſtrange bodies: the killing ſouldiers were ſcarce able to endure the hot vapours of the blond of the ſlaine. Guibertus Abbas ſaith, the bloud reached to the ancles; Baldricus, to the calfe of the legge; Raimond de Agiles, that they rode in bloud vp to the knees, and to the brydles of the Horſes, and Fulcherius, that there were ſlaine in this Temple about ten thouſand, and many of them were ripped vp by the Frankes to finde gold which they had ſwallowed, and the bodies after burned in heaps to finde the mettall in the aſhes. Albertus Aquenſis addeth, that the third day after the victorie, for feare of the remained captiued Saracens, (leſt they might ioyne with the enemie againſt them) and in furious zeale, they made a freſh maſſacre, ſlaying thoſe which for pittie, or couetouſneſſe of ranſome, they had in hotter bloud ſpared: not the honour of Noble Matrons, not the delicacie of tender Maydens, not the children yet in the wombes of their pregnant mothers, not the Infants now ſucking at the breſt, not the hopes of innocent yonglings, playing or crying by the mothers hands; not ſighes, teares, promiſes, prayers, lamentable cryes, twyning embraces of the legges, bodyes, hands of the bloudie Souldier, could ſtay the hand euen then giuing the fatall blow, but Ieruſalem was now againe filled with ſlaine carkaſſes. Generally it is agreed, that they found much wealth in the Citie to pay them for their paines. Soone after they encountred an Armie of three hundred thouſand Saracens, which they ouerthrew, being but twentie thouſand Chriſtians: where Robert Duke or Earle (for I finde both Titles often giuen him, but in ancient Stories of thoſe times, both hee and King William his father are oftenеſt called Earles) of Normandie tooke with his owne hand, the chiefe ſtanderd of the Enemie (being a long ſpeare couered with ſiluer, with a golden Globe or Apple on the top, hauing ſlaine the bearer, and thereby terrifying the enemie and putting them to rout) which was long after reſerued as a monument in the Temple of the Sepulchre.

Many other victories being obtained, the Saracens were either expelled Paleſtina, or ſubiected to the Franks, and the Chriſtians which were poorer & few, recouered freedom. Yet as few as they were in the Cities, Raimond tells of threeſcore thouſand Surians or Chriſtians of that Countrey, which in this long Saracenicall night continued their habitations in the Mountaines of Libanus. But of this is no maruell: for euen till theſe dayes, notwithſtanding the manifold changes and chances of thoſe Regions and peoples, there haue in the Mountaines and Deſarts of Paleſtina and Syria liued ſome Nations, neither acknowledging the Saracenicall Law nor Empire.

§. IIII.

Of the Azopart and Aſſyſine.

Azopart. SVch were the Azopart which liued in Caues in the Deſarts of Aſcalon, which King Baldwin the ſucceſſour of Godfrey ſought to ſmoake and fire out of their dens, and by cunning Stratagems deſtroyed as many as hee could: and iuſtly. For theſe being blacke in hue, blacker in conditions, vſed to rob and ſlay ſuch as they could lay hold on. Such were the Aſſyſines, which liued in the Prouince of Tyre, as Tyrius reports of them: not farre from Antaradus, which had ten ſtrong holds with the Countrey adiacent, and were thought to bee in number ſixtie thouſand. Their gouernment went not by inheritance, but by Election: the chiefe or Grand Maſter of them being called The Old Man, who was obeyed in whatſoeuer hee commanded, were the attempt neuer ſo dangerous. If he gaue to one or more of them a weapon, and enioyned the killing of ſuch an Enemie, Prince or priuate man, they gladly vndertooke it, with the death of that partie, or themſelues in attempt. Both Saracens and Chriſtians called them (the reaſon of the name vnknowne) Aſſyſines. For the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres they were zealous followers in a preciſer courſe of the Mahumetan Sect. But about the time when our Author the Archbiſhop of Tyre wrote this, their OLD MAN grew into diſtaſte of his Religion; and by reading the Scriptures, became deſirous of Chriſtianitie. Hee perſwaded his Subiects alſo to forſake Mahumetiſme, prohibiting their Faſts, demoliſhing their Moſchees, allowing Swines fleſh. He ſent alſo to Almaricus King of Ieruſalem, offering to turne Chriſtian, if hee might liue peaceably, and bee releaſed of two thouſand Byzantines, which he yeerely payd for quietneſſe to the Knights Templers, who had certaine Caſtles bordering on him. The King was content to pay this money himſelfe; but by the treacherie of the Templers, the Legat was ſlaine, and foule ſcandall inflicted on the Chriſtian name, the Aſſyſines neuer after returning to their old Mahometrie, or turning anew to Chriſtianitie. Mathew Paris relateth, that theſe Aſſyſines thus cloſely and treacherouſly murthered Raimund Earle of Tripolis Anno Dom. 1150. Paulus Æmylius affirmeth, that theſe Aſſyſines came out of Perſia, that they were taught from their child-hood diuers Languages, and to conceiue it meritorious of heauenly reward to kill the enemies of their Faith, that their OLD MAN was called alſo Arſacida. Two of them (ſaith hee) ſlew Raimund, two of them after ſlew Conrad Ferratenſis [b] walking in the Market-place of Tyre, which Citie hee had defended againſt the enemies, who being executed therefore, ſeemed very cheerefull. And Saint Lewis himſelfe hardly eſcaped the like treacherie.

Marcus Paulus reporteth of one in the North-Eaſt parts of Perſia, called The Old Man of the Mountaine, by proper name Aloadin, [c] which had built a ſtrong Caſtle, and therein an imaginarie Paradiſe, who vſed that Aſſaſine myſterie, promiſing to reward theſe murtherers with the pleaſures of Paradiſe, a taſte of which in all fleſhly delights he had before giuen them. In the Tartarian conqueſt (ſaith Odoricus) he had ſo ſlaine diuers Tartars, which therefore beſieged his Caſtle, and after three yeeres ſiege forced it for want of victuall. So Paulus; but Haithonus hath ſeuen and twentie yeeres, and that then it was yeelded for want of cloathes, and not of meates: hee calls this Caſtle Tigado, and the inhabitants by the former names of Aſſaſines. This was done by Haalon the Tartar Anno 1262. About a hundred yeeres ſince they [d] tell of the ike Paradiſe of Aladeules in thoſe parts deſtroyed by Selym the Turke: but I thinke it was rather the memorie of Aloadin, then any truth of Aladeules. and robbing Curdi do yet remaine: the other neere to Damasco, of whom we haue spoken. The place where this OLD MAN liued, was called Mulehet, that is, a place of Heretikes: for so the Saracens deemed them. Beniamin Tudelensis, aboue foure and fortie yeeres agoe, hath written that these Hhassissin neere Baalgad vnder Libanus, followed not the doctrine of the Ismaelites, but of one whom they esteemed a Prophet, whose word they obeyed, whether to liue or die. Him they call Hheich all Hhassissin: he is their Senator, at whose command all the Mountaines goe out and in. His seate is in the Citie called Karmos, which was sometime the biginning of the Country of Sehon. And they haue a Religion amongst themselues, according to the doctrine of their Senator. They are a terrour to all men; for they kill euen Kings with the Sawe. Their Dominion continues eight dayes iourney. They hold warre with the Christians called Frankes, and with the King of Tripolis, of the Region of Saam (Damascus) wherein hapned not long since an Earth-quake, whereby were slaine in that Region, many both Iewes and Gentiles, and in the Land of Israel * twenty thousand. Thus farre out of the Iew. Iacobus de Vitriaco Bishop of Acon, in his Easterne Storie, accounts it no small grace of GOD, that in the siege of Damiata (where himselfe was present An. 1219.) their chiefe men escaped these Assasines; they being (after that murther by the Templaries committed on their Legate) for the most part enemies vnto them. Yet one he mentioneth, the sonne of the Earle of Tripolis * being at his deuotions, in the Church of our Lady at Carchusa, slaine by them as he was kneeling before the Altar. Whereupon the Templers warred on them, and forced them to the Tribute of three thousand Byzantines. In his first Booke, he telleth their customes at large. The place of their first originall, whence they came into Syria, he placeth neere Baldac or Bagdet, in the confines of Persia: they willingly and cheerefully obey all the commands of their Abbat, Master, or, OLD MAN of the Mountaines, in all things absolutely, esteeming it meritorious *: who also bringeth vp children of purpose, in secret and pleasant places, and in diuers languages, where they neuer see any but their Masters, till their Lord send them thence for hatred of his enemies, or at request of his friends, or for reward and price, giuing them a sharpe knife or blade for such exploits. If they dye, they are accounted Martyrs, and reuerenced as Saints; their Parents rewarded with gifts: and if they were bond, with freedome. Hence it is, that they take vpon them so cheerefully this deadly Legacie, with no lesse warinesse and subtile in Protean insinuations and fashion-imitations, then vehemencie of desire and resolution, studious to effect the same, sometimes in the habit of the Clergie men, or Monkes, sometimes like marchants, alwayes applying themselues to others fashions, that it is impossible to preuent them: inferiour persons they disdaine to deale with, but mightier Potentates must either purchase their securitie, or alwayes bestrongly garded. Vitriacus affirmeth, that they were imagined to bee descended from the ancient Esses; and that they still retained the Iewish writing, hauing letters mixed of the Hebrew and Chaldee, which perhaps may bee the Samaritan Letters.

Marinus Sanutus Torsellus, about three hundred yeeres since, wrote a large booke, entituled Secreta fidelium Crucis, touching the recouerie of the Holy Land, in which he mentions these Assasines, or as he cals them Arsasidæ; of whom besides other things hee relates this Storie. An. 1194. Boamund Prince of Antiochia sends for Leunon Lord of Armenia his vassall (so great where then the Christian affaires) to come to him, which he at first refused, because he had in like manner sent for his brother Rupinus, and made him prisoner: but after, vpon condition he came with such an Ambuscado, that when Boamund would contrarie to Couenant haue taken him, himselfe was taken and carried prisoner into Armenia: from whence he was deliuered by meditation of Henry then Gouernour of the Holy-Land, vnder Q. Isabell, at whose hands the said Lord of Armenia desired, and receiued the Title and Crowne of a King. And this was the beginning of that Royall Title to those Kings of Armenia. But this Henry in his returne, visited (according to his request) the King of the Arsasidæ (so he calles him) who brought him to a Castle where was a very high Tower, and in each corner thereof stood two men clothed in white. Then said the King to his gheſt, Your Subiects will not obey you in like manner as mine will me; and withall gaue a humane * or spetting token: and presently two of those white ones cast themselues downe, and with the fall died instantly. Then did hee offer the like experiment in the rest, but Henry refused, as hauing more proofe then he desired of this, more then Votarie obedience. He offred him also, that if he had any enemie, he would procure him to bee slaine by these his seruants.

Mar. Sanut. l. 3. pars 10 c. 8. Haply this name Arsasidæ was either taken or giuen them of Arsaces the first founder of the Parthian Empire in those parts whence these came.

* Excreauit.

I stay the longer on these curſed Assassines, that the Reader may make comparison, and obserue their resemblance with the latter Iesuiticall brood, in totall and simple obedience, the opinion that it is tolerable, nay lawfull, commendable, meritorious of heauen, to kill, and treacherously to murther the Princes of the earth, and the glorious martyrdome of such as are therefore executed.

§. V.

Of the Dogzijn and Drusians, and other Pagans there.

Dogzijn or Drusians.

ANother like both People and Sect, Brethren in euill, were the Dogzijn, of whom Beniamin thus writeth. About ten miles from Sidon, there is a certaine people which holds warre with the Sidonians, called in their language Dogzijn, of others called Pagans, of no Religion or Sect: They dwell in the Mountaines, in Caues, and holes of Rocks, obeying no King or Gouernor, but liue at randome in the higheſt Hills, and ſteepeſt Rockes, three dayes iourney vnto the Hill Hermon. They are infamouſly inceſtuous, the Fathers polluting their owne Daughters. And in a ſolemnitie which they yeerely celebrate, all both men and women come to a common Feaſt, where they change Wiues with each other. They hold that the ſoule, when it departeth out of the body of a good man, paſſeth into ſome Infant then begotten: but of a bad man, into a Dog or other Beaſt. Their knowledge is according to their life. There are no Iewes amongſt them, but ſometimes Artificers, and diuers come vnto them for Marchandize, and goe away againe, and the Iewes are gently entertained of them. This people is very ſwift in running vp and downe thoſe hills, and not to bee vanquiſhed of other men. Thus farre Tudelenſis.

Martin a Baumgarten relateth, that the Venetian Conſull told him of a Sect not farre from Tripoli, which vſe at certaine times promiſcuous luſts, the Father with the Daughter, the Mother with the Sonne, and each with his next Mate: The iſſue thereof if Male, to be killed with needles, as ſacrificing their bloud, the Females preſerued. Hee names them not. But it is likely to be the poſteritie of thoſe Dogzijn, perhaps that of killing their Males being added by ſuch as make bad things worſe (and yet Epiphanius reporteth of the Gnoſtikes, as great or worſe abhominations) for euen the Diuell himſelfe may bee ſlandered. But long before his time, Iacobus de Vitriaco did write of a certaine miſerable people liuing in the Mountaines, and not farre from Tripoli, which in great part obſerued the Law of Mahomet, but had another hidden Law which they ſaid they might reueale to no man, but to their owne Children, when they grew to be of ripe age. Their wiues and daughters, with an implicite faith profeſſe a beliefe in the ſame, but know it not. And if the Sonne ſhould vpon any cauſe reueale it to his Mother, the Husband would ſlay his Wife, and the Father his Sonne. Theſe eate Swines fleſh, and drinke Wine, and of other Saracens are accounted Heretikes. Theſe haue their workes of darkneſſe in ſecret, wherein they practiſe filthineſſe, and ſuch things as are contrarie to the Female ſexe, and therefore feare leſt their wiues would not endure their execrable rites, if they were therewith acquainted.

Epiph. hær. 26. Iac. de Vitr. l. 1. cap. 13.

Howſoeuer the caſe ſtandeth, a filthy Sect it was and is. For euen ſtill it continues: and (if my coniecture deceiue not) theſe are thoſe Druſians of which many Authors haue written, falſely ſurmiſing them to bee the Relikes of the Latine Armies, and of thoſe Frankes which ſometime poſſeſſed theſe parts of Syria. I deny not but that ſome of theſe might ioyne vnto them, in and for that fellowſhip of filthineſſe; as heere in theſe parts, many debauched beaſts, with thoſe beaſtly Gypſies: yea, I thinke that the Aſſaſſines and theſe, ſince the Tartars deſtroyed the chiefe of that Sect in Perſia, and poſſeſſed the parts of Syria, haue growne into one people; receiued alſo into their ſocietie whatſoeuer dregges of Nations, male-contents, exiles, and vnruely borderers, thoſe Mountaines could ſecure, in, and thorow all the changes of State and Dominion, which thoſe Countries haue ſuffered; which freedome they retayned not onely in the weaker, and more vnſetled gouernment of the Mamalukes and Ægyptian Soldans, but euen ſtill continue (in ſome ſort) notwithſtanding the Ottoman greatneſſe. Circumciſion they embrace with the Turkes, vſe the libertie of Chriſtians in drinking Wine, and more then beaſtly licentiouſneſſe in inceſtuous copulations with their owne Daughters. Thus Botero. Knolls in his Turkiſh Hiſtorie ſaith, they follow one Iſman, a Prophet of their owne, and are not Circumciſed. But I haue learned of a friend of mine, one Maſter Pounteſſe, who hath had acquaintance with them, that they are Circumciſed. And that they are of thoſe Dogzijn which Beniamin mentions, it is apparant by their place of abode, by their hereticall Sect and Cuſtomes ſo like, and by their name eaſily changed from Dogzijn to Dorzijn, and ſo to Drozijn or Druzijn, an eaſier change then ſo long a time, and forraine pronunciation vſually admit.

G. Bot. Ben.

Biddulph. writes, that they retaine ſtill Baptiſme, and the names of Chriſtians, but are called Rafties, that is, Infidels. Selym the ſecond ſought to bring them vnder the Turkiſh yoke, and his ſucceſſors likewiſe till theſe dayes, yet both theſe and the Arabians were neuer made fully ſubiect. Thus the ancient Scythians, the Reisbuti in the Mogols Countrey of Cambia, the Curdi,* other Mountaine inhabitants and borderers (as alſo a long time the Welſhmen in in Wales) vnder the greateſt ſoueraignties haue enioyed a kinde of freedome, ſecured by the mountainous ſituation, their naturall hardineſſe, and the greateſt cauſe, their pouertie, as a bootleſſe bootie, and worthleſſe conqueſt, to buy bareneſſe and barrenneſſe with the price of bloud. Theſe Druſians are a people warlike, and religious obſeruers of their owne ſuperſtition, yeelding due obedience vnto their naturall Lords: they weare long coats, reaching to the knees, buttoned before, and no breeches: and vſe the Arcubuſe and Scimatar. They are increaſed in numbers, (which might come to paſſe by the long warres, which the Weſterne Chriſtians with often inuaſions made in thoſe parts after they were diſpoſſeſſed of the Kingdome of Ieruſalem; the ſame ſeconded by the Tartars a long time: and after it was the confines of the Turkiſh and Mamalukes Empires: ſo that it is no maruell if they bee of ſundry Nations and Religions, being the confluence of ſo many people, and ſinke of ſo many Sects, howſoeuer the Druſians name bee predominant. They inhabit from Ioppa, to Cæſarea and Damaſco. Some diſſenſions among their Princes gaue opportunitie to Ebrain Baſſa, An. Dom. 1585. to ſpoyle their Countrey, and extort what hee could, one of them helping to cut the others throat, yet neuer could he force Man-Ogli to come in and ſubmit himſelfe, although herein he vſed the Turkiſh forces, and wilieſt ſtratagems, then alſo inueſting Aly Ebre-Carſus in the ſoueraigntie, ſwearing him to the Turke, and carrying with him Ebne-Manſur, and Serafadin, two of the Druſian Princes which had ſubmitted themſelues in his Galleyes, as priſoners to Conſtantinople. Knolls Amur. 3.

They are ſtill (it is the Relation of a Traueller) gouerned by a ſucceſſion of Princes whom they call Emyrs. The preſent Emer of Sidon, is Faccardine, a man neuer ſeene to pray, nor in a Moſque; ſmall of ſtature, couragious and tyrannicall. Hee neuer commenceth battell, nor executeth any notable deſigne, without the conſent of his Mother a woman skilled in Magicke. To his Towne hee hath added a Kingly Signiorie, what by his ſword, and what by his ſtratagems. He pickt a quarrell with Ioſeph Emer of Tripoli, and diſpoſſeſt him of Barut, and after ſackt Tripoli it ſelfe, and forced the Emer to flie to Cyprus: and when with the forces of Damaſco (for hee got to be made Seidar or Gouernour of the Souldierie there) he ſought to repayre his loſſes in the field, the Damaſcens were foyled, and purſued to the gates of their Citie, the conquerours lodging in the Suburbs, whence they were remoued by the force of fifteene hundred thouſand Sultanies. This was Anno 1606. Thus vnder the tytle of a Subiect to the Turke, but yeelding obedience at large, he holdeth Gazir, Barut, Sidon, Tyrus, Acre, Saffet, or Tyberias, Diar, Camer, Elkiffe, the two heads of Iordan, the Lake Bemochonthis (now called Houle) and Sea of Tyberias with the hot Bath adioyning, Nazareth, Cana, and Mount Tabor. Saffet is his principall Citie, in which are many Iewes. The grand Signior often threats his ſubuerſion, both for his incroaching, and intelligence with the Florentines, which hee diuerteth with gifts and fauour: but yet prouides for it by fortifying his holds, able to hold out a long warre, hauing alſo fortie thouſand expert ſouldiers in continuall pay, beſides the aduantage of the Mountaines, and in greateſt extremitie, the Sea and the Florentine. Hee hath the fifth part of the increaſe of all things, and head-money for all Cattell within his dominions, and two Dollers yeerely for the head of euery Iew and Chriſtian. The Marchants are there ſo ſafe, that they may trauell with their purſes in their hands, yet ſubiect to tyrannicall ſeizures, vpon the death of Factor or Owner. But more then enough of theſe Druſians, and other peoples mingled with them. Biddulph mentions Vſeph Beg, or Lord Ioſeph, which in the Mountaines holds out againſt the Turke: he tells alſo of one Aſan Baſhaw, which ruleth like a King in an ancient Citie called Achilles, paying duties to the Turke ſucceſſiuely from his predeceſſours of the houſe, as it is ſayd of Sanballat, and is called Eben Sumboloc, and his Kindred call one another Amiogli, for they account themſelues Ammonites. This Baſhaw is old, and referreth matters of gouernement to his kinſman Vſeph Beg. It ſhould ſeeme they are ſome relickes of the Cutheans or Samaritans, which perhaps ioyne with the Druſians in many things. There are alſo in theſe parts of Palæſtina many Arabians, which it ſeemes haue peſtered thoſe places euer ſince the inuaſion of Homar, if not before; and theſe ſtill vſe to prey vpon the Pilgrims that trauell to Ieruſalem, notwithſtanding the conduct of Ianizaries. Of theſe Arabians, one Sect is called * Beduines, which imagining the day of euery mans death fatally deſtined, neuer goe armed to battell, vſing onely Speares and Swords, diſdaining Bowes and Arrowes, as tokens of cowardiſe. Theſe are falſe alike to Chriſtians and Saracens, eaſily betraying either, alway addicting themſelues to the ſtrongeſt: dwell in Tents, goe cloathed with skinnes, wander vp and downe in Tribes, ſtill ſeeking freſh paſtures, feed on Milke, and commit the care of all buſineſſes to their wiues. Some of the Eaſterne people worſhip to the Eaſt, which they ſay, they learned of their fathers that were Chriſtians, themſelues being Mahumetans, yet account other Saracens hereticall: and ſome eſteeme the Sunne to bee the chiefe God. §. VI.

Of the vnchriſtian Chriſtians.

SVch are and haue beene the vnholy Inhabitants of the Holy Land ſince the Iewes expulſion, neither can wee ſay much better of their conquerours the Perſians, Arabians, Turkes, Tartars, Mamalukes, and after theſe the Turkes in the Ottoman Dynaſtie: no, nor can wee commend the Chriſtians for much Chriſtianitie, whether the native Surians, (ſome of which haue paſſed through all theſe changes without any great change, either to the Saracenicall or Weſterne Rites from their Greekiſh) or their inuaders and conquerours. For theſe ſoone degenerated into an vnchriſtian Chriſtianitie, and were called Pulam, ſucceſſors of the places, not the conditions of thoſe which paſſed thither with Duke Godfrey. They gaue themſelues to effeminate delicacies, to exceſſe in dyet and apparell, full of inteſtine diſcords and ciuill contentions, coozners and falſe, addicted to Witch-crafts and Diuinations, contumelioufly abuſing Pilgrims, whom deuotion had brought from farre Countries thither, or which came to helpe them againſt the Saracens, calling them in ſcorne the ſonnes of Hernaud. The Maronite Chriſtians were in times paſt ſixtie thouſand, but now are few: neither is this a fit place for diſcourſe of that and other Sects of Chriſtians liuing in, or frequenting theſe holy places, Neſtorians, Iacobites, Abaſſens, Armenians, Georgians, Greekes and others. But the conditions of the Inhabitants at that time, wee mention as the cauſe of the loſſe of that Countrey to the Saracens: the Clergie minding more (as a Clergie man of their owne expreſſeth) the Churches goods then her good; to fleece, then to feed their flockes; the Regulars enriched with poſſeſſions, religion brought foorth wealth, and the daughter ate vp the mother. The Natiue Laytie melted in luſts and pleaſures, grew more fearefull then women, except they were aſſiſted with the Frankes, Engliſh, or other Weſterne people: ſtrengthning themſelues in the ſtrength of their contentions, againſt their Chriſtian brethren with Saracenicall aſſiſtance. Their wiues they mewed vp very cloſe from the ſight, almoſt of brethren and neereſt kindred, ſcarce ſuffering them to viſit the Church once in a yeere: ſome of the greater ones erecting Altars in their wiues bed-chambers, whereon ſome ſillie Prieſt might mumble his Parrot mumſimus. They the more enraged, vſed all meanes with womens wiles and deuilliſh wils by Sorceries, or any other meanes to effect their filthy purpoſes. It was alſo made a refuge and receptacle of the moſt diſordered perſons in theſe Weſterne parts, Theeues, Robbers, Periured, Adulterers, Traytors, Murtherers, Parricides, Pyrats, Apoſtate Monks, and Nunnes, which became common harlots, and other monſters in ſhapes of men and women, paſſing the Sea to this Land entituled Holy; where Cœlum non animum, changing ſoyle not ſoule; they practiſed the like villanies with leſſe ſhame, being further from their friends. And eaſily might they eſcape after greateſt miſchiefes, either running as Rennegadoes to the Saracens, or eſcaping by ſhip to ſome neere Iland, or to ſuch priuiledged Sanctuaries, as euery Religious houſe afforded, to the preiudice of iuſtice and Religion. Some alſo which in Europe had beene condemned for ſome crimes, by mediation of friends obtained this exchange of puniſhment to bee ſent hither, where they became harbourers of Whores, Gamers, Murtherers, and for further impunitie were at a yeerely fee with the great ones. Neither could the feare of humane Iuſtice, or diuine Iudgements reclaime them, many terrible Earthquakes happening amongſt them, (by one of which Tyrus was almoſt vtterly together with the Inhabitants deſtroyed) ſhake their earthie hardned hearts, or mooue them to relent. No maruell if the Land could no longer brooke ſuch Inhabitants, but expoſed them to the ſword of the Saracens, and then againe (for ſo the father when hee hath chaſtened his children, caſts the rod into the fire) to the Tartars, and from one to another, till the Turke now Lords it amongſt them in ſort as you haue heard. And euen ſtill the wickedneſſe of the people in vnnaturall luſts, and nameleſſe filthineſſe is ſuch, that I abhorre further to write of it: ſo is this paradiſe of the world, both in bodily and ſpirituall pleaſures and fruitfulneſſe, now become a deſolate wilderneſſe for the one, and diſconſolate in the other, whiles one is loath to ſow for another to reape. Iuſtus es Domine, & Iuſta ſunt iudicia tua.

THE

The Second Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of Arabia, and of the ancient Religions, Rites, and Customes thereof.

ARABIA is a very large Region, [a] lying betweene two Bayes or Gulfes of the Sea, the Persian on the East, and that which hereof is called the Arabian, on the West: On the South is the Ocean; on the North is Syria and Euphrates. [b] Plinie sets downe the Northerne Limits, the Hill Amanus, ouer against Cilicia and Commagena; many Colonies of them being there planted by Tigranes the Great: it thence (sayth hee) declineth to our Sea and the Ægyptian shore, and to the heart of Syria to Mount Libanus. By a certaine workemanship of Nature, it much resembleth the forme and site of Italy. [c] Arabia signifieth Holy, as Solinus affirmeth. But in the Scripture ערבי Harabi signifieth both a robber by the way, and an Arabian. So *Ier.*3.2. In [d] the wayes thou hast sate for them as the Arabian in the Wildernesse, in the vulgar Latine is translated, Expectans eos quasi latro insidians in solitudine. Saint Hierome interprets ערב [e] Arabia & vesper & corvus & planicies & occidens, and acknowledgeth the fitnesse of the former name in Ieremie, answering the condition of the people giuen to robbe on the borders of Palestina, and all Trauellers from Ierusalem to Iericho. Thus hee comments on that place of Ieremie, which he translates, Quasi latro in solitudine, the Hebrew being Harabi. Hence Martin del Rio, Adeo autem latrocinijs infames, vt Hebræis Arabs latronem denotet, sicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum. From the practice of the people their proper names became appellatiues, an Arabian for a robber, (as Sarak also) a Chananite for a Marchant, a Chaldean for a Mathematician. The Nations of this wide Tract of Land are many. It is the next to bee spoken of in this our Discourse, according to Geographicall methode, as confining vpon Iudæa, whence wee last departed.

[f] Some deriue the name from Arabus, the sonne of Apollo and Babylonia. And the forged Berosus of Annius telleth, That Ianus Pater sent one Sabus into Arabia Fœlix, Arabus into Arabia Deserta; and Petreius into Petræa, all Nephewes of Cham; all indeed the Sonnes of Annius his braine. True it is, that Arabia is commonly diuided into those three parts, Petræa, Deserta, and Fœlix. Of the Nations in Arabia, Plinie writeth largely, amongst the rest naming naming the Saracens, whom S. Hierome often, Epiphanius alſo, and other of the ancient Fathers mention, of which wee are anon to ſpeake at large. But long before Plinie, the Scripture ſpeaketh of the people of this Region, not only thoſe which are ſaid to deſcend of Cuſh, the ſonne of Cham, but of many others, which deſcended of Abraham, as Iſhmael the ſonne of Abraham, by Hagar; and [g] Zimram, and Iokſhan, and Medan, and Midian, and Iſhbak, and Shuah, with their poſteritie, the iſſue of Abraham by Keturah: who, after that Seba, and Sabbetha, and Rama, and Sabthecа, had peopled ſome parts of Arabia, were ſent away with their portions Eaſtward to the Eaſt Countrey, that is into Arabia; where it is likely they mingled their Seed and Generations with thoſe former of the poſteritie of Cham: for therefore it ſeemeth Moſes wife, Zipporah, was called a [h] Cuſhite, or (as ſome reade) an Æthiopian, not that ſhee was of the Countrey Æthiopia in Africa, but a Midianite of Arabia, of Abrahams race: which Countrey, becauſe the poſteritie of Cuſh had firſt inhabited, and happily had mingled themſelues in marriages with them, ſhee is called a Cuſhite, which ſome wrongly expound, an Æthiopian, if they vnderſtand it properly; although Cuſh were alſo the Father of the Æthiopians. But of this name Æthiopia, ſometimes taken more largely, otherwhiles more ſtraitned, you ſhall ſee more in our ſeuenth Booke, the firſt Chapter. This poſteritie of Abraham are, in Scripture, often called the children of the Eaſt. Saint Hierome [i] reckons alſo to Arabia the Idumæans, Moabites and Ammonites: and certaine it is, that the places ſometimes by them inhabited, are now accounted to Arabia. The many names of the Arabian Nations, they which will, may reade in Plinie and others. Mohamed [k] Ben-Iacob Sirazita, Author of the Arabike Dictionary, affirmeth, that Iaarob (called Ierah, Gen. 10. 25.) ſonne of Cahhtan, or Iectan, was Author of the Arabike tongue, which was brought to perfection by Iſhmael ſon of Abraham; who dwelt in a Region called Araba of that Iaarob, whence the whole land of Arabia tooke name.

The Deſart Arabia hath a name anſwerable to the nature thereof; being, in great part, without Inhabitants, for the barrenneſſe of the ſoile: as is alſo a great part of that which is called Petræa. This Deſart Arabia is alſo [m] called Aſpera, Inferior, Caua, and of the Hebrewes Cedar. It is bounded on the Eaſt with Babylonia, and part of the Perſian Gulfe; on the North with Meſopotamia, neere to Euphrates; on the Weſt, with Syria and Arabia Petræa; on the South, are the Mountaines of Arabia Fœlix. Neere to them and to Euphrates it hath ſome Townes, and is frequented with Marchants, otherwhere partly vnpeopled, partly (Strabo therefore termeth it [n] Scenitis) fed with ſuch Roming Arabians, as haue no dwelling houſes, but remoue to and fro, ſeeking where to finde paſture for their Beaſts, and lodge in Tents.

fortie yeeres, in which time they receiued the Law, were fed with Manna; their Meate, Drinke, Clothing, Iudgements, Mercies, continually yeelding miraculous euidence of Gods presence amongst them.

Bellonius visited the Mount Sinai: he [z] saith, it is a mile and a halfe from Horeb, and farre higher: from whose top, (which is hard stone [a] of yron colour) may both shores of the Red Sea be seene. This Sea is not therefore called Red, because either the ground or the sand, or the water thereof is Red, as Bellonius hath obserued, for none of them are [b] so. The people thereabouts take care for no other houses then the boughes of Palme-trees, to keepe them from the heat of the Sunne (for raine they haue but seldome:) the cattell are lesse there then in Egypt. In the ascent of Mount Sinai are steps cut out in the Rocke: they beganne to ascend it at breake of day, and it was afternoone before they could get to the Monasterie of Maronite Christians, which is on the top thereof. There is also a Meschit there for the Arabians and Turkes, who resort thither on pilgrimage as well as the Christians. There is a Church also on the top of Mount Horeb, and another Monasterie at the foot of the Hill: besides other Monasteries, wherein liue religious people, called Caloieri, obseruing the Greeke Rites, who shew all (and more then all) the places renowmed in Scriptures, and Antiquities to Pilgrims. They eate neither flesh nor white meates. They allow food vnto strangers such as it is, rice, wheat, beanes, and such like, which they set on the floore without a cloth, in a woodden dish, and the people compose themselues to eate the same, after the Arabian manner, (which is to sit vpon their heeles, touching the ground with their toes, whereas the Turkes sit crosse-legged like Taylors.) There is extant an Epistle of Eugenius Bishop of M. Sinai, written 1569. to Charles the Arch-duke, wherein hee complaineth, that the Great Turke had caused all the reuenues of the Churches and Monasteries to bee sold: whereby they were forced to pledge there Holy Vessels, and to borrow on Vsurie.

Arabia Fœlix [c] trendeth from hence Southwards, hauing on all parts of the Sea: against which it doth abutt the space of three thousand fiue hundreth and foure miles. Virgil calls it Panchæa, now [d] Ayaman, or Giamen. This seemeth to bee the Countrie wherein Saba stood, chiefe Citie of the Sabæans, whose Queene visited Salomon: for so the Iewes reckon, howsoeuer the Abassines challenge her to themselues. Aben Ezra on Dan. 11. calls this Saba Aliman or Alieman: and Salmanticenses, Ieman, [e] which is all [f] one (for all is but the Article) signifying the South: as the Scriptures also call her Queene of the South. For so it was situate, not to Iudæa alone, but to the Petræan and Desart Arabia. The name Seba or Saba agreeth also with the name of Sheba, Gen. 10. 7. As for Sheba the Nephew of Abraham by Ketura, it is like he was founder of the other Seba or Saba in Arabia Deserta, the elder posteritie of Chush, hauing before seated themselues in the more fertile Southerne countrie: and because both peoples, these in Arabia, and those in Africa were comprehended vnder one generall name of Æthiopia, hence might those of Africa take occasion to vsurpe the Antiquities of the other. Yea, it is more likely that these Abassens in Africa a thousand yeeres after that the Queene was buried, were seated in Arabia, and thence passed in later ages into Africa, subduing those Countries to them. For so hath Stephanus, Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβίας: ἀπὸ τῆς Σαβάας. The Abassens (so we now call those Æthiopians in the Empire of Presbyter Iohn) are Nation of Arabia, beyond the Sabæans: and the Nubian Geographer diuers times mentions Salomons wife in Arabia, which I cannot interpret but of that Queene: so that out of Arabia they carried this Tradition with them, as it is likely, into Africa, where want of learning, and plentie of superstition, had so increased their Legend of this Queene, as we shall after heare. Beniamin Tudelensis writeth likewise, that the Region of Seba is now called the Land of Aliman, and that it extendeth sixteene dayes iourneys alongst the Hills: in all which Region there were of those Arabians, which had no certaine dwellings, but wandred vp and downe in Tents, robbing the neighbour Nations (as is also reported of the Saracens neere Mecca, which gouernment of Mecca, both Beniamin and Salmanticenses [g] adioyne to that of Aliman, or the Kingdome of Saba: for so, saith he, the Iewes in those parts still call the chiefe Citie of that Kingdome.) It hath store of Riuers, Lakes, Townes, Cities, Cattell, fruits of many sorts. The chiefe Cities are Medina, Mecca, Ziden, Zebit, Aden. Beniamin addeth Theima, or Theman, a Citie walled fifteene miles square, enclosing ground for tillage in the walls. Tilmaas also, Chibar and others. There is store of siluer, gold, and varietie of gemmes. There are also wilde beasts of diuers kindes. As for the Phœnix, because I (and not I alone) thinke it a fable, as neither agreeing to reason nor likelihood, and plainely disagreeing to the Historie of the Creation, and of Noahs Arke, in both which God made all Male and Female, and cõmanded them to increase and multiply, I thinke it not worthy recitall. One wonder of Nature done in Abis a Citie of this Region, will not, I thinke, bee distastfull: cited by Photius out of Diodorus Siculus, written in some part of his workes which is now wanting. daughter called Herais, which in ripe age was married to one Samiades, who hauing liued a yeere with her, did after trauell into farre Countries. In the meane time, his wife was troubled with an vncouth and strange disease: A swelling arose about the bottome of her belly, which on the seuenth day breaking, there proceeded thence those parts whereby Nature distinguisheth men from the other sexe: which secrets shee kept secret notwithstanding, continuing her womans habit till the returne of her husband. Who then demanding the companie and dutie of his wife, was repelled by her father, for which he sued him before the Iudges, where Herais was forced to shew that which before her modestie had forbidden her to tell: and afterwards naming himselfe Diophantus, serued the King in his warres, with the habite, and heart of a man, and leauing her feminine weakneſſe, as it seemed, to her husband, who in the impatience of his loue slue himselfe. Our Author addeth also, that by the helpe of the Physicians, such perfection was added to this worke of Nature, that nothing remained to testifie hee had beene a woman: he annexeth also like examples in some others.

Ludouicus Vertomannus, or Barthema (as Ramusius nameth him) tells g at large his iourney through all this threefold Arabia: he trauelled from Damasco to Mecca Anno 1503. with the Carauan of Pilgrimes and Marchants, being often by the way set vpon by Armies of those Theeuish and Beggerly Arabians. This iourney is of fortie dayes trauell, trauelling two and twentie houres, and resting two for their repast. After many dayes they came to a Mountaine inhabited with Iewes, h ten or twelue miles in circuit, which went naked, and were of small stature about fiue or sixe spannes high, black of colour, circumcised, speaking with a womanish voice. And if they get a Moore in their power, they flay him a liue. They saw there certaine white thornes, and in the same two Turtles, which seemed to them as a miracle: for in fifteene daies and nights they had neither seeene Birds nor Beasts. They giue their Camells by the way not aboue fiue Barly loaues at a meale, as bigge as a Pomegranate, and drinke once in three dayes. At the end of eight dayes they stayed a day or two to rest them. Their Pilot directed their iourney by the Compasse (in Diodorus times, they obserued the North-starre) no lesse then if it had beene at Sea. They trauelled fiue dayes and nights through the sandie Sea, which is a great plaine Champaine, full of a small white sand-like meale: where if, by some disaster, the winde blow from the South, they are all dead men. And although they had the winde at North, yet could they not see one another aboue ten paces off. And such as ride on Camels, are inclosed with wood, with holes to receiue the aire; the Pilots going before with their Compasse for direction. Many dyed there for thirst, and many with fulnesse, drinking too much when once they came at water. When the North windes blow, those sands are driuen to a heape. He supposed that i Mummia was made of such as the sands had surprised and buried quicke: but the truer Mummia is made of embalmed bodies of men, as they vse to doe in Egypt, and other places. For I haue read, not onely of Women, but Infants also, (which were not likely to take such dangerous iourneys) whose bodies haue beene thus vsed to Mummia. As for the other parts of Arabia, they which list, may by this our Author, by Plinie, Niger, and others be informed further. The like iourney to this of Barthemas, is related by diuers latter Trauellers, Monsieur de Monface, Anno 1608. went with a Carauan of 10000. from Alleppo to Bagdat. Their trauell (he sayth) was all by night, aswell to auoide the vehement heate of the day, as to be guided by the starre. Their guides call themselues Pilots. They trauelled thirty dayes till they came to Nane, where they take water vpon Euphrates. They saw no beasts but Asses, Roes and Gazels (a kinde of wilde Goates) and Stagges innumerable, so wilde, that they often ranne through the Carauan: No fowles but Pigeons, which nestle in the ruines of olde Townes, sometimes inhabited, where also they made vse of olde welles, otherwise hauing no water but what they carryed in Borachoes made of whole Goates skinnes. There can bee no path, by reason of the continuall motion of the sand by the wind. Their King hath 100000. horsemen subiect to him (gallant horse, men almost naked) himselfe subiect to the Turke.

To come to the disposition of the people, they are small, naked, beggerly. What they haue done in Asia, Afrike, and Europe by force of Armes, vnder the name of Saracens and pretence of Religion, shall follow in the next Chapter: What they still doe, if they meete with purchase, Trauellers know to their cost. Vsually Arabians are reckoned eyther Marchants or Theeues: the one hauing certaine habitations, or else trading abroad. Strabo, Plinie, and Solinus admire their wealth, as selling much to others, and buying nothing, thus treasuring vp the wealth of the East and West, the Parthians and Romanes. Their Marchandize was golde, siluer, frankincense, with other spices. Their golde by Diodorus testimony was often found in whole pieces, pure and shining, so that it gaue splendor and lustre to the gemmes inclosed therein: whence happily that of the Psalme, To him shall bee giuen

When they entred league with any, their manner was, that one ſtanding in the midſt betweene both parties, did wound the hand with a ſharpe ſtone, in the palme neere to the thumbes of them both, and taking flockes of the garments of them both, anointed with that bloud ſeuen ſtones ſet in the midſt of them: Meane while inuoking Dionyſius and Vrania: and then this Mediator becommeth ſuretie for the partie, who thereby eſteemeth himſelfe bound to obſerue it. And this did [t] they make league with Cambyſes. To theſe two Arabian gods, Great Alexander would haue added himſelfe a third (ſaith [u] Arrianus, in his life.) Hee affirmeth alſo that Seſoſtris the Egyptian King, paſſing through Arabia, in that his renowmed expedition, erected there in diuers places Egyptian Temples and ſuperſtitions: that the Troglodytæ which dwelt in Caues, and bordering on the Egyptians, by ſome reputed Arabians, were circumciſed as the Arabians and Egyptians were. The Arabians by teſtimony both of old and late Writers are accounted no warlike people. Virgil ſings of them, Molles ſua thura Sabei. In elder and later times they were gouerned by their Phylarchi, [y] or heads of the Tribe or Linage. They take Tributes and Cuſtomes accordingly, rather by a robbing force, then ciuill forme: making their will their law. On the one ſide of Euphrates, they acknowledge ſome obedience to the Turkes, ſuch as it is; On the other ſide not ſo much, as appeares by the paſſage downe Euphrates, recorded by Gaſparo Balbi, William Parry, and others, in ſome places paying a Cuſtome, in others like to bee robbed of all. The ancient Arabians which dwelt in the Cities, are ſaid to haue in each Citie a Prince, faire houſes and Temples after the Egyptian manner: and then Strabo ſaith, Arabia Fœlix was diuided into fiue Kingdomes.

When fifteen brothers (Kings Sons) had by their continuall company tyred their owne and only ſiſter, ſhe deuiſed a meanes to rid her ſelfe, or at leaſt to eaſe her ſomewhat of that trouble. Frankincenſe (ſaith [e] Plinie) groweth onely in Arabia, but not in euery place thereof. About the midſt of the Countrey is Sabota (the chiefe Citie of the Sabæans) in a hie Mountaine: eight Manſions from thence is the Region of Frankincenſe, which is called Sabba, that is, a myſtery: looking toward the Eaſt, euery way guarded and made vnpaſſable with Rockes. The ſoyle is Reddiſh, inclining to white. The length of the Frankincenſe-wood is twentie ſchœni, the bredth halfe as much, (a ſcœnus in this account is fiue miles.) Other Arabians beſides theſe and the Minæi ſee not this tree, nor all of theſe, but onely ſome three hundred Families, vnto whom the right of theſe Rites deuolueth by ſucceſſion. Therefore they are called Sacri, Holy, neither may they in the time, when they cut them, bee polluted with knowledge of Women or with Funerals. What manner of tree it is, Plinie ſaith he knew not, nor any Roman to his knowledge. They gathered it in the Spring and Autumne: they cut the trees from whence it ſweateth. There needes no watch to keepe them, but the innocencie of the Inhabitants. When Alexander in his youth beſtowed large ſtore of Frankincenſe in his deuotions, Leonides his Maſter told him, hee ſhould ſo doe when he had conquered the Countrey where it grew: Hee after enioyning (ſome part of) Arabia, ſent him a ſhip laden with Frankincenſe, and bade him ſerue the gods plentifully. The Frankincenſe, when it is gathered, is carried on Camels to Sabota by one way, out of which to goe were capitall. There they pay the tythes to a god which they call Sabis. The Prieſts take it by meaſure, not by weight. Certaine portions are allowed to them and to the Kings Scribes. Plautus therefore [f] calls it Frankincenſe Odor Arabicus. Virgil calls it Panchæan, and Sabæan Frankincenſe. The manifold Rites which the Heathens vſed in their holy things with this drug, Stuckius [g] ſheweth at large. Here alſo grew the Myrrhe in the ſame woods, and among the Troglodítæ. But this and Cinamon, and other things which grew elſewhere as well as here, need not much diſcourſe. They vſed yet ſome Religion in gathering of their Cinamon, as [h] ſome obſerue, ſacrificing before they began, and after diuiding what they had gathered, with a ſacred ſpeare aſſigning a portion to the Sunne: if the diuiſion be iuſtly made, the Sun ſealeth his conſent by fire, with his beames conſuming the ſame. Panchæa, and another Iland, called Sacra, are adioyned by [l] Diodorus to Arabia, both fertile (as hee ſaith) of Frankincenſe. long, the bredth answerable, hauing in it large Statues; and about it the houses of the Priests. Many fountaines there springing make a nauigable streame, called the water of the Sunne, which is medicinable to the bodie. The Countrey about, for the space of two hundred furlongs, is consecrated to the gods, and the reuenue thereof spent in Sacrifices. Beyond is a high mountaine, called the seate of heauen, and Olympus Triphylius: where Cœlus is said to haue instituted the Rites there yeerely obserued. The Priests rule all in Panchæa, both in ciuill and religious cases: and liue very deliciously, attired with linnen Stoales and Mitres, and party-coloured Sandals. These spend their time in singing Hymnes, and recounting the acts of their gods. They deriue their generation from the Cretan Iupiter. [l] They may not goe out of their sacred limits assigned them, if they doe, it is lawfull to kill them. The Temple is enriched with gifts and offerings. The doores excell for matter and workemanship. The bed of the god is six Cubits long, and foure broad, all of gold faire wrought. The Table stands by, nothing inferiour. In the middest is another bed of gold, very large, grauen with Ægyptian letters; in which are contained the gests of Iupiter, Cœlus, Diana, and Apollo, written by Mercurie. Thus farre Diodorus. Iustine [m] mentioneth Hierotimus an Arabian King, which had six hundred children by Concubines. Some [n] are of opinion that the Wise-men, which by the ancient conduct of a Starre came to Ieruſalem, (the first fruites of the Gentiles) came out of Arabia. Scaliger [o] mentioneth a conquest antiently made and holden by the Arabians in Chaldæa. Philostratus [p] saith, the Arabians are skilfull in Auguries, or Diuinations, because they eate of the head and heart of a Dragon. That they eate Serpents, Solinus affirmeth. Athenæus [q] saith, That the Arabians vsed to maime themselues, if their King hapned to bee maimed, and that in the same member: and in [r] another place hee citeth out of Heraclides Cumæus, the delicacies of this Arabian King, and his quiet or idle course of life, committing matters of iudgement to Officers: and if any thinke himselfe wronged by them, hee pulls a chaine fastned to a window in the highest part of the Palace; Whereupon the King takes the matter into his hand, and whether part hee findeth guiltie, dyeth for it. His expences were fifteene Babylonian Talents a day. The Arabians kill [s] Mice, as a certaine supposed enemy to the gods, a custome common to them with the Persians and Æthiopians. The [t] women couer their faces, contented to see with one eye, rather then to prostitute the whole face. They kill not vipers, but scarre them away with Clappers from their Balsame-trees, saith [u] Pausanias, when they gather that commoditie, because they thinke them consecrated to those Balsame-trees, vnder which they liue and feed of that liquor, with which also they cure themselues if they are bitten of them.

The Arabike tongue is now the common language of the East, especially among such as embrace the Mahumetan Religion: this language in the first diuision of tongues, according to [x] Epiphanius, was begun in Armot, the first speaker and Author thereof. It is now the most vniuersall in the world, as Bibliander, Postellus, Scaliger, Aldrete, and Claude Duret in his late Historie del' Origine des Langues de cest vniuers, doe proue at large; from the Herculean pillars to the Molluccas, and from the Tartars and many Turkes in Europe, vnto the Æthiopians in Afrike, extending it selfe; which was neuer granted to any other language, since that first confusion and babbling at Babel.

Of the Saracene Name, Nation, and proceeding in Armes: and the ſucceſſion of their Chalifaes.

§. I.

Of the Saracens before MAHOMETS dayes.

THe Arabians are distinguished by many sir-names, the chiefe whereof (saith [a] Scaliger) are the Hagarens (so called of Hagar the hand-maid of Sara) whom the Arabians call Erabelhagiari, and Elmagarin; and the Saracens, still called by their neighbours Essarak, that is, theeuish. The Hagarens were more ciuill, whose chiefe hold was Petra, and their Princes were all entituled Aretæ, as the Egyptians Ptolemæi. Hierome in many places affirmeth, that the Ismaelites, and Hagarens are the same which now are called Saracens: so in his Commentarie on the second of Ieremie, Cedar (saith [b] he) is the Region of the desart and of the Ismaelites maelites, whom now they call Saracens. And on the twentie fiue of Ezekiel, the Madianites, Ismaelites and Agarens, are now called Saracens. And on Esay twentie one, he extendeth their desart from India to Mauritania, and to the Atlantike Ocean. [c] Epiphanius likewise affirmeth, That the Hagarens and Ismaelites in his time were called Saracens.

Plinie [d] mentioneth that the Saracens: placing them neere to the Nabathæans. Ptolemey [e] likewise nameth the Scenites, so called of their tents, which with themselues, their flockes, and substance, they remoued vp and downe from place to place. Posteritie hath called all these Tent-wanderers (saith [f] Scaliger out of Ammianus Marcellinus) Saracens: and so doth Ptolemey in the next words call the next adioyning people, seating them in the Northerly bounds of Arabia Fœlix. In the same Chapter he setteth downe Saraca, the name of an Arabian Citie. [g] Some Authors haue written, that because Ishmael was sonne of Hagar a bondwoman, his nicer posteritie haue disclaimed that descent, and deriued their pedegreee, and name from Sara: Peruersonomine, saith Hierome, assumentes sibi nomen Saræ, quòd scilicet de ingenua & domina videantur esse generati. Iosephus Scaliger, in his Annotations vpon Eusebius Chronicle, after that hee hath cited the former testimony of Ammianus, and of Onkelos on the thirtie seuen of Genesis, addeth the authoritie of Stephanus; who affirmeth Saraka to bee a Region of Arabia, neere the Nabathæans, of which hee thinketh that the Saracens borrowed their name. Wee know (saith Scaliger) that the Arabian Nomades are so called; for SARAK in Arabike soundeth as much, that is, (furaces & λῃστικους) theeuish or robbers, such as the Cosak-Tartars, bordering on the Turkes, the Bandoliers in the Pyrenæan hills (and the Borderers sometimes betwixt England and Scotland.) De Sara, peridiculum: To call them Saracens of SARA, is ridiculous: for then either they must bee called SARAEI, or shee SARACA. Mr. Brerewood saith that Sarra signifies a Desart, and Shakan to inhabit, in the Arabike: and therefore as they are called Scenites of their Tents; so might they also of the Desarts their not habited habitation be called Saracens. Booke of Lang. c. 13. And Erpenius saith, that this name is vnknowne to themselues, but all the Muhammedans generally call themselues Muslimos, or Muslemans, which signifieth Beleeuers, as if all else were Infidells or Heretikes. [h] Marcellinus thus writeth of them; this people stretcheth from the Assyrians to the falls of Nilus: all warriours, halfe naked, in coloured jackes. None ploweth or planteth, but they wander vp and downe without houses or lawes; their life being alwayes in flight. Their wiues they hire & couenant with for a time: which breed child in one place, and bring forth in another, and neuer rest. Their food is Venison, Milke, Hearbes, and such Fowles as they can take: the most that wee haue seene, know not the vse of Wheat or Wine. Like Kites they snatch their prey, but stay not by it whether they winne or lose. They are such, as the Romanes need neuer wish them their friends or their enemies. In the time of Iulian [i] they made out-rodes and spoyles on the Roman Prouinces, because they were denied their wonted stipends by Iulian, who told them that hee had better store of iron then gold. Saint [k] Hierome interpreteth that Propheste concerning Ismael, That hee should be a wilde man, his hand against euery one, and euery mans hand against him, of this robbing, rouing, roguing life of his posteritie: Significat semen eius habitaturum in eremo, id est, Saracenos vagos incertisque sedibus, qui vniuersas gentes quibus desertum ex latere iungitur, incursant, impugnantur ab omnibus. In his second Booke against Iouinian, hee testifieth that their food was the milke and flesh of Camels, a creature easily bred in those barren desarts: but they thought it vnlawfull to eate swine flesh, and that swine were seldome, or not at all found among them. The Prophet [l] Ieremy reckoneth their Tents, Camels, and Flockes, as their greatest wealth, in that his Propheste of their destruction by Nabuchodonosor.

This name Saracene may well befit that course of life which they embraced. In the more Southerly parts of Arabia, they are more ciuill and rich, dwelling in Cities, and haue quicke trade, which all are wanting about Medina and Mecca, places so renowmed by the life and death of Mahomet [m]. Neither doth it seeme probable, that those which are called Agarens in the continued succession of so many ages, as appeareth, 1. Chron. 5. 10. and Psam. 83. 6. would after grow ashamed of that: or that Ishmael, which derided the hopes conceiued of ISAAC the sonne of SARA, would nourish his posteritie in the same hope, or leaue them any honourable memory of SARA, who had reiected him together with his mother. Yea, and their owne superstitious Legend proueth the contrary, as shall appeare in the next Chapter.

For their Religion in old times, One saith, [n] That the Saracens adore the Starre of Venus, and in their praying cry, Alla, oua, cubar [o], that is, God, and Venus. Ioannes Meursius noteth thereon, That they worshipped the Image of Venus, set on a great stone, on which they beleeue, that Abraham lay with Hagar, or else that hee tied his Camell thereunto while hee was sacrificing Isaac. [p] Scaliger calleth her Chubar and Chobar, and saith that neither Circumcision, nor the Friday Sabbath, were of Mahomets institution, but of ancient ancient time both those rites had beene vsed by the Arabians, and left by him as hee found them. q Herodotus testifieth that the Arabians worshipped Alilat, which is the Moone; for still they call the Moone newly horned Helal: and the Turkes and Saracens salute the new Moone at her first appearance, with a kind of veneration. In Sylburgius his Saracenica, is reported, that the Saracens, till the time of Heraclius, worshipped the Morning-starre and Venus, which they called Chabar, that is, r Great. Cedrenus also affirmeth this to bee an ancient superstition of the Arabians, in worship of Venus, whose Starre they say is Lucifer the Morning Starre, which for the greatnesse they call in their language Cubar to this day, (saith hee) τὴν Ἀφροδίτην τὸν ὄρθρον καλοῦντες, naming VENVS a god. For proofe whereof wee will vnfold a great mysterie of theirs. The workes of their profane prayer are, ἀλλὰ ἀλλὰ, ὦ κυβὰρ ἀλλά. Alla, alla, signifieth GOD, GOD, Oua greater, Cubar great, or Luna, and Venus, that is, GOD is the greater GOD, and Venus a great god. And certaine both in earth and in their Paradise, their chiefe deuotions seeme still to hold of Venus. In the beginning of the Spring, and in the beginning of Autumne, the Sunne entering into Aries and Libra, the Arabians vsed (which they had borrowed from the Zechians and Alharachuma, people of India) to cast stones vpon heapes, being naked and bare-headed, with great cries, and going about their Idols, kissing the corners in honour of their gods. This they vsed at Mecca in honour of Venus: and therefore in that solemnitie did they cast stones vnder their priuities, because those parts were vnder her dominion. Onely whereas nakednesse was immodest, some ordained that they should bind a cloth about their reines. This Mahomet found before his time, and did not reiect, as hee did some Idolatrous Rites; but in their pilgrimage Rites they still obserue it. Properly they called the morning Starre Chobar or Chubar: but as the Phœnician Astarte was with them in their confused worship, both Iuno, Venus, and the Moone: So they intended the like in this Arabian deitie. For as Orania, and Alilat, and Venus, were the same, as Herodotus auerreth: so the same confusion of deuotion was in Arabia, as well as in their neighbour-countrey, Phœnicia. Their Circumcision, it seemeth, came from Ishmael and the rest of Abrahams sons of old: their Friday-sabbath from this Chubar-deuotion: both before Mahomets time, as was also the abstinence from Swines-flesh, as we before haue obserued out of Saint f Hierome, who also mentioneth this their worship of Chobar, so interpreting those words of Amos, The Starre of your God, that is, saith hee, Chobar, or Lucifer, which the Saracens still worship to this day.

And in the life of Hilarion, hee telleth, that Hilarion passing thorow the Desart, came to a Citie or Towne called Elusa, on that very day whereon their Annuall solemnitie had gathered all the people into the Temple of Venus, for they worship her (for the Morning-Starre, to the worship whereof the Saracen Nation is addicted.) These hearing that Hilarion passed by, who had before cured many of them, came flocking about him with their wiues and children, crying in Syriake, Barah, that is Blesse vs. Hee in courteous and milde words, perswaded them rather to worship the liuing God, then those stones; promising, if they would beleeue in Christ, hee would visite them oftner. Maruellous was the grace of God: they suffered him not thence to depart, before he had laid the line for building of a Church; and their Priest, crowned as hee was, was marked with the signe of Christ. Thus farre Hierome.

Some t of the Arabians dwell in Cities, some in the Desarts; those better ciuilized & fit for Arts; these which inhabit the Desarts are called Bedauyæ or Beduois, that is, the people of the Desart; exceed in numbers, and wander without houses, vsing tents made of Cotton wooll, or of Goats and Camels haire, alway mouing and remooving as water and pasture mooue them, carrying their wiues, children, and vtensils on their Camels. Their horses are leane, little, swift, laborious, bold, and the horse-men actiue beyond beleefe, darting and catching with their hand the same Dart in the horses swiftest race before it commeth at the ground; and auoiding a Dart throwne at them by sleightie winding vnder the horses sides or belly: also taking vp weapons lying on the ground whiles the horse is running, and in like swift race, hit the smallest marke with Arrow or Sling. Their armes are Arrowes, Iauelins with iron heads, swords, (which they vse not to thrusts, but strokes) Daggers, Slings, and vse the same in aduerse fight, or in auerse flight. They lie in wait for Carrauans, prey vpon trauellers, liue at rapine and spoile, and often make themselues the Great Turkes Receiuers and Treasurers; and raise new Impost on all such as they can enforce, whether Trauellers or Cities; obeying neither the Ottoman nor any other Souereigne, but being diuided in innumerable Families, obey the heads of their owne Families or Tribes. Their Tribes or Families. These Tribes are distinguished by the Names of their first Parents, as Abi-Helal, Abi-Risce, Abi-Zaid, and six hundred others, all esteemed and saluted gentle, and equall in rights. Their Food is browne bread, new and sowre milke, cheese, goats, and camels flesh, pulse, hony, oile and butter. Rice

Rice is esteemed a great delicacie, by reason of their Tradition that it came of Mahomets sweat. For say they, when Mahomet compassed the Throne of God in Paradise, God turned and looked on him, which made the modest Prophet sweat, and wiping it off with his finger, six drops fell out of Paradise: one whereof produced the Rose, the second Rice, the other foure his foure associates. They vse a certaine hodge-podge or frumentie of boiled wheat laid after a drying in the Sun, then beaten & boiled with fat flesh til the flesh be consumed. This they call Heresie, & say that Gabriel the Angel taught it Mahomet for the strengthning his reines; whereby one night he fought against fortie men, and in another had fortie times carnal dealing with women. These might seem calumnies, deuised by some Mahumetan aduersarie, if the former author (both learned in and zealous of the law of Mohamed) had not related the same in a chapter of the choise of meats. Mohamed or Mahomet commended also the eating of gourds of the Melongene, affirming, that hee had seene this plant in Paradise, and measured the quantitie of mens wits by their eating store hereof. When he was once in prison (saith Ben-sidi-Ali) the Angell Gabriel came downe from heauen, and carried him in Gennet Elenaam, or the Garden of Pleasures, where amongst others he saw this shrub, and he asking why it grew there, the Angell answered, because it hath confessed the vnitie of God, and that thou art a true Prophet. Their garments are base, a cotton shirt with very wide sleeues, an vpper garment of woll wouen with white and blacke lines of Goats or Camels haire; their feet are bare. Their nobler sort go better clothed and vse shooes, a red lether girdle, a white tulipan of cotton or linnen of few folds. Their women goe almost naked, in a blew smocke of cotton, linnen head tire, and face vailed. They vse eare-rings, chaines, broochen, and rings of glasse, or other base matter, and die or paint with blew markes made with a needle their cheekes, armes, and lips. Thus much of the Beduines.

d Califa, that is, Vicar, was the name of the chiefe place or soueraignetie in cases spirituall and temporal, the successor of Mahomet. And Amira is a Lord, a name applied to the Califa, and the great Rulers vnder him, and also to all of Mahomet his kindred.

THis robbing and roguing people liued in much obscuritie, vntill that darkenesse brought them to light, and a Religion newly stamped by Mahomet, in a secret and iust iudgement of God, for the contempt of the Truth, was by as new a kind of preaching (viz. force of Armes) obtruded on the luke-warme world. For when as Mahomet, of whose life followeth a large discourse) had obserued that sicke state of the Empire afflicted with Iewish rebellion, Persian inuasion, and Nestorian infection, besides the securitie of the Head it selfe, Heraclius then Emperour: he thought good to take Occasion by the Fore-locke, and to strike whiles the yron was hot. First, [a] vnder pretence of Religon, hauing inueigled a multitude of Disciples, he made a commotion in Arabia: and being therfore driuen out of Mecca, many of his followers resorted to him: Of whom hee appointed Captaines and Leaders of the rest, Vbequar, Omar, Ozmen, Alifre, Talaus, Azubeirus, Zadimui, Zaedinus, and Abnobeid. The Arabians (as some affirme) aided Heraclius in his warre against Cosdroes the Persian: and after that warre ended, the Arabians complaining for want of pay, the Treasurer answered, that there was scarce sufficient for the Greek and Romane Souldiers, much lesse for that company of Dogs. Whereupon, as long before on like occasion they had rebelled in the reigne of Iulian, so now enraged, they departed into Syria, and adioyned themselues vnto Mahumet, who euen then after the Persian victorie had obtained (some say) of the Emperour whom he serued in those warres, to himselfe and his followers, a Region to inhabite; the Emperour so rewarding his exploits in the late warres. Mahumet with this supply assailed Mecca, which diuers times before he had in vaine attempted, and tooke it, with other pieces in Arabia, viz. Hunaim, Ietrip, Tambic, &c. He afterwards created foure Generalls, whom he called the foure sharpe swords of GOD, and commanded them to goe into the foure parts of the world, and to kill all such as would not embrace his Law. These foure were Ebubezer, [b] or Vbequar, Omer, Osmen, and Ali. Ebubezer went into Palestina, but was ouerthrowne by Theodorus Begarius, Cæsars Lieutenant. About the same time died Mahumet, and this [c] Ebubezer succeeded him; although Mahumet had designed Ali his successour. At his death (saith Cedrenus) a Comet appeared thirtie dayes together, at Noone in forme of a sword from the South to the North, foresignifying the Empire of the Arabians. Eubocara or Abubacher (for diuersly is this Ebubezer called) hauing by his might, and the assistance of Homar and Osmen, obtained to be [d] Califa, ouerthrew the Imperiall, and soone after died. Homar the next Califa, wanne Bosra, the chiefe Citie of Arabia, and all the Countrie Countrey as farre as Gabata, and put Theodorus, the Emperours brother, to flight. Hee beſieged Damaſcus, and hauing broken the forces that came to reskue it, obtained it: ſubduing alſo all Phœnicia. After that, turning his forces into Egypt, Cyrus the Biſhop of Alexandria ſtaied him, with promiſe of two hundred thouſand pieces of gold for yeerely Tribute. This was diſannulled by Heraclius, and Emanuel the Deputie denied the payment: whereupon entring the ſecond time vnder conduct of Hamrus, Egypt was conquered. After two yeeres ſiege, Ieruſalem alſo was wonne, into which hee entred clothed in a garment of Camels haire, and very homely, profeſſing great ſanctitie. Hee built a ſuperſtitious Temple, where that of Salomon had ſtood. Iaidus one of his Captaines ſubdued Edeſſa, and all Meſopotamia. Afterwards placing Muauias ouer all the Countries betweene Euphrates and Nilus, he inuaded Perſia: where the Perſians loſt both their King Hormiſda, their State, Religion, and Name: of Perſians being conuerted into Saracens. This victorious Homar made Ieruſalem his Royall ſeat, and while he was praying, was murthered by his ſeruant.

Ozmen, [e] the ſucceeding Caliph ſent a great Armie into Africa, vnder the leading of Hucba: who ouercomming Gregorius Patritius, and deſtroying Carthage, ſubiected all that Prouince to their Empire; making Tunes the Mother-citie: but ſoone after tranſlated that honour to Chairoan, which he built thirtie ſix miles from the Sea, and a hundred from Tunes. In the third yeere of his raigne Muauias the Deputie of Egypt, with a Nauie of ſeuen hundred, or as others ſay, of a hundred and ſeuentie ſaile, aſſailed Cyprus, and taking Conſtantia, waſted the whole Iland: and hauing wintred his Armie at Damaſcus, the next yeere beſieged Arad in Cyprus, and won it, and diſpeopled all the Ile. Thence hee inuaded the continent of Aſia, and carried away many priſoners: and after in a Sea-fight with Conſtans the Emperour, dyed the Lycian Sea with Chriſtian bloud. Hee wan Rhodes, and ſold to a Iew the brazen Coloſſe or pillar of the Sun, which laded nine hundred Camels, ſometimes reckoned one of the worlds ſeuen wonders, made in twelue yeeres ſpace by Chares. After this hee afflicted the Cyclides Ilands in the Archipelago, and then ſent his Fleet againſt Sicilia, where they made ſpoile with fire and ſword, till by Olympius they were chaſed thence. Muauias himſelfe with an Armie by land entred into Cappadocia: Iaid hauing ouer-run all the neighbouring Armenia, vnto the hill Caucaſus. But meane while Ozmen, beſiged in his houſe by Ali his faction, ſlew himſelfe, when hee had liued eightie and ſeuen yeeres, and raigned twelue. The Saracens could not agree about their new Prince; Muaui and [f] Ali with great armies, being Corriuals of that dignitie: and Ali being treacherouſly murthered by Muauias meanes, in a Temple neere Cuſa, a Citie of Arabia, was there buried, and the place is of him called Maſſadalle or Alli his houſe: for (if you beleeue the Legend) his corps being laid on a Camell, which was ſuffered to goe whither hee would, he ſtaid at this place. Of this Ali or Hali, Mahomets Couſin, the Perſians deriue their ſect; and tell of him many Legendary fables. Bedwell calls this place, in his Arabian Trudgman, Maſged Aly, that is, the Meſged, Moſque, or Temple of Ali. [g] Alhacem, the ſonne of Ali and Fatima Mahumets daughter, was by Muauia his owne hands crowned, [h] and by him ſoone after poyſoned. Thus was Muaui ſole Caliph, who granted peace to the Emperour, on condition that hee ſhould pay him euery day [i] tenne pounds of gold, and a Gentleman-ſeruant with a horſe. Damaſcus was now made the Seat-Royall. Of which Citie, although wee haue ſaid ſomewhat in our firſt booke, yet let vs bee a little beholden to Beniamin Tudelenſis, to ſhew vs the Saracenicall face thereof. In his time it was ſubiect to Noraldine (as hee termeth him) King of the children of Thogarma, that is, the Turkes. The Citie, ſaith hee, is great and faire, containing on euery ſide fifteene miles; by it ſlideth the Riuer Pharphar, and watereth their Gardens: [k] Amana is more familiar, and entreth the Citie, yea, by helpe of Art, in Conduits viſiteth their priuate houſes; both ſtriuing in emulous contention whether ſhall adde more pleaſure or more profit to the Citie, by Naaman therefore in the heate of his indignation preferred before all the waters of Iſrael. But no where is ſo magnificent a building, ſaith Beniamin, as the Synagogue of the Iſmaclites, which is therein: the people call it the Palace of Benhadad. There is to be ſeene a wall of Glaſſe, built by Art-Magicke, diſtinguiſhed by holes as many as the yeere hath dayes, and ſo placed, that euery day the Sunne findeth them fitted in order to his preſent motion; each hole hauing therein a Diall with twelue degrees, anſwering to the houres of that day, ſo that in them is deſigned both the time of the yeere and of the day. Within the Palace are Baths and coſtly buildings, ſo rich of gold and ſiluer as ſeemeth incredible: I ſaw there hanging a ribbe of one of the Enakims or Giants, nine Spaniſh palmes long, and two broad, on the Sepulchre was written the name of Abchamaz. After this, in the time of Tamerlan, the magnificence of their Temple was not quite extinct, but as is reported, it had fortie great Porches in the circuite thereof, and within nine thouſand Lamps hanging from the roofe, all of gold and ſiluer. For the Temples ſake at firſt he ſpared the Citie, but after, prouoked by their rebellion, he deſtroyed it and them. Neither were the walls of Damaſcus rebuilded, till a certaine Florentine for loue of the Gouernours daughter denying his faith, became Mahumetan, and after that both Gouernour and repairer of the Citie; in the walls engrauing a Lyon, the Armes of Florence. He was honoured after his death with a Moskee, and worſhipped after the manner of their Saints, the Saracens viſiting his tombe, and (hauing touched the ſame) ſtroking their beards with their hands. There did our Author * ſee a large houſe compaſſed with high walls, which was inhabited with Catts. The reaſon forſooth is this: Mahomet ſometime liuing in this Citie, made much reckoning of a Cat, which he carried in his ſleeue, & by lucky tokens from her, ordred his affaires. From this dreame the Mahumetans make ſo much of Catts, and hold it charitable almes to feede them, thinking that he ſhould prouoke the iudgement of God which ſhould ſuffer a Cat to ſtarue. And many of them are found in the ſhambles begging or buying the inwards of beaſts to nouriſh Catts: a ſuperſtition more likely to deſcend from the Egyptians, who for the benefit they receiued by Catts in deſtroying their vermine, of which that Countrey yeelds ſtore, in a Heatheniſh ſuperſtition deified them. But let vs returne to Muaui; hee ſubdued the Sect of Ali in Perſia, and after inuaded Cilicia, and ſent (to aide Sapores) a band of Saracens, which afflicted Chalcedon, and ſacked Armaria a City of Phrygia; and with a Fleete inuaded Sicill, tooke Siracuſe, and carried away with them the riches of Sicilia, and of Rome it ſelfe, lately fleeced by the Emperour, and here horded. Another Armie of Saracens, ouer-running the Sea-coaſt of Africa, led away eight hundred thouſand priſoners.

Muamad and Caiſe on the other ſide ſubdued to Muaui, Lydia, and Cilicia; [a] and after, with Seuus another Saracen Generall, beſieged Conſtantinople, from April to September, and taking Cizicum, there wintred their forces, and in the ſpring returned to their ſiege, which they continued ſeuen yeeres; but by Diuine aſſiſtance, and force of tempeſt, they were chaſed thence. And Conſtantine ſlew three hundred thouſand Saracens, in a battell (not long after) againſt Suſia the Nephew of Muaui, and compelled the Saracens to pay a great tribute. [b] Iezid raigned after the death of Muaui his father (a better Poet then Souldier) he ſoone died. Neither did his ſucceſſours Maruan and Abdalan liue two yeeres in the roome. [c] Abdimelec was choſen Caliph, who deſcended from Hali, when as Abdalan of the linage of Eubocara (the Arabians call this the Maraunian race, the other Abazian) had poſſeſſed himſelfe of that title by force, whom Ciafa the kinſman of Abdimelec ouerthrew. Ciafa after this victorie, entring Damaſcus, pluckt Iazid (one of the former Caliphs) out of his graue, burned his bones, and hurled the Aſhes into the riuer, and cruelly perſecuted all the Marauian ſtocke.

Hereupon [d] Abedramon one of that houſe, with a great number of his friends and followers fled into Mauritania Tingitana, where he was welcomed of the Saracens there being, and firſt intituled himſelfe Miralmumim, which ſignifieth The Prince of Beleeuers, and then builded [e] Marocco. Addimelec hauing other yrons in the fire, neglected this: firſt, appeaſing tumults in his owne ſtate; then ouerthrowing the Emperour in the field: after, receiuing (by treaſon of the Deputie) Armenia; winning that part of Perſia, which yet was ſubiect to the Romans, and by his forces ſpoyling Thracia, whiles the Greekes were diuided amongſt themſelues. He alſo chaſed the Romane Garriſons out of the coaſt-Townes which they held in Afrike. Abdimelec being dead, [f] Vlitus the ſonne of Abedramon ſucceeded, vnder whom the Saracens, beſides the ſpoile of Galatia, conquered all Afrike betwixt Niger and the Sea, a little piece excepted at the mouth of the ſtraites, ſubiect to Rodericus the King of Spaine: Mucar was made Lieutenant of the Saracen Empire in Afrike. To him Iulianus Earle of Cepta full of indignation againſt his Prince, for deflouring his faire daughter Caba, about the yeere 712. offereth the conqueſt of Spaine, if hee would furniſh him with ſome competent forces of his Saracens. This traytor, thus ſtrengthened with the authoritie of this place (being Gouernour of the Ile Viridis, and diuers places in Africa and Spaine) backed with his friends, and aided with the Saracens, ouerthrew the Gotiſh Empire, which had now ruled Spaine about three hundred yeeres: Rodericus loſing the field and his ſtate, and ſpending the remnant of his dayes with an Hermite, in a ſolitarie deſart of Luſitania. Iulianus himſelfe was after ſlaine by the Saracens, as were the Spaniſh Traytors; the iuſt end of vniuſt treacherie. Scaliger out of an Arabian Geographer, calleth that Captaine, Muſes or Moſes, ſon of Nutzir of the Marawan ſtocke, who had with him a valiant Captaine named Tark or Tarik, of whom the Hill and the Strait is named (as the vulgar pronounce it) Gibraltar, properly Gebal Tarik, [g] that is, the Hill of Tarik, becauſe hee had ſhipped ouer his Barbarians thither, and fortified himſelfe in that Hill, in the nintieth yeere of the Hegira: which hee did, leaſt his barbarous ſouldiers ſhould forſake him, and therefore alſo cauſed his ſhips to bee burnt. This Vlit, Qualid, Walid, or Oelid (for thus I finde his name diuerſified in Authors) beſides [h] theſe his conqueſts in Afrike and Europe, atchieued by his Captaines great

[d] Gizid, ſent with ſupply of three hundred and threeſcore ſhips, durſt not approach for feare of this fire: and the Saracens by their Caliph were reuoked, when the plague had ſlaine in Conſtantinople three hundred thouſand people. In his time Aly Eben Abas, one of the deſcendents of Abas, Vncle to Mahomet, warred for the Chalifate, challenging it to his ſtocke. But Aumar or Homar was poyſoned by Ochon, and Yezid or Gizid ſucceeded: whoſe reigne was troubled with the warres of Aly aforeſaid, ſtill continuing his challenge.

§. III.

Of the Abasian Chalifaes, their Citie Bagadet, with many Persian, Indian, and other occurrences vnder them.

TARIK MIRKOND writes, that the family of Abas had still from the first challenge continued their quarrell, and that Oelid, to satisfie them, had caused the sonnes of Abdala (one of the Abasians) to be proclaimed his successours: one of which, Safa, in this warre against Maruuan, forced him to flee to Mesera, or Cairo in Ægypt, where hee was taken and put to death, and with him eightie persons of the family of Ben Humia. They did also breake open their Sepulchers, and burnt the bones, sparing onely one of that line Hamarben Abdala Azis. Safa was sonne of Abdala the sonne of Aly, whose father was Abdula the sonne of Abas. Hee had for Wazir or Vesir (which I mention, to shew the antiquitie of this custome in the Saracenicall regiment, still obserued by the Turkes and Persians, as chiefe Counsellour and swayer of the State) Abuzalemah, whom for conspiracie hee put to death, placing in his roome Kaleb Barmaqui. He made his three Vncles chiefe Gouernours of the Prouinces, Dauid, or Daud of Medina and Mecca; Abdula of Syria, Ægypt, and Africke; and Safa hee sent to Korosan, the chiefe Citie whereof is called Mechad, whereas Ismael Sophi and his successours are interred. This Citie is fortified with three hundred Towers, each from other a Musket shot distant. Thus Mirkond. This Safa, or (as Curio calls him) Abulabas being dead, Abugephar Elmantzar g succeeded. Hee imprisoned the twelue sonnes of Hasin, the sonne of Ali, where they perished: He began first to build the Citie of Bagded. Mirkond saith, that in the 145. yeere of the Heg. hauing finished a warre against some Rebels in Arabia, parting from Cufa, hee crossed Mesopotamia, and comming to the bankes of Tygris, the bountie of the soyle, and commodious scituation for the visiting of his Prouinces, caused him to build this Citie, which, by reason of many pleasant and delightfull Gardens which are in that Countrey, the people called Bagadad, of Baga a Persian word, which signifies a Garden. Hee dyed vpon the way to Mecca A. Heg. 759. or after Zacuth 758. Iohn di Barros h ascribeth this Citie to the same Bugiafar also, for so hee calleth him; but Curio to one Muamat long after. Scaliger i thinketh this to bee Seleucia, a Citie built nigh vnto Babylon by Seleucus, neere the meeting and mixing of Euphrates and Tygris; of which see our Babylonian Historie in the first booke.

Mahdi his sonne succeeded A. H. 165. Mirkond calls him Mabadi Bila. In his time Akemben Ocem (sometime Secretarie to Abusalem, Gouernour of Karason, slaine by Abuiafar) reuolted from his subiection and Religion. Hee had but one eye, and was of terrible aspect: hee not onely sought to bee acknowledged for King, but would bee worshipped as a God; couering his face with a vaile, saying, That men were vnworthy to see his face, and many Prouinces receiued him for King. But Mahadi sending a strong power against him, his partakers poysoned him, and then gaue out, that hee was ascended into Heauen. But as many of his kindred and followers as were taken, were burned, and the Countries subdued A. Heg. 169. To Mahadi succeeded Elida Bila Musa, which after fifteene moneths dyed, and Arachid Bila Harun his brother succeeded. Against him rebelled Rasb Eben Nacer of Samarkand, who entituled himselfe King, in expedition against whom Arachid dyed A. H. 193. Mahamid Amin was his successour, to whom hee gaue all he held in Alep, and thence Westward: to Mahamun another sonne hee had giuen Persia and Karason; to Racem the third, Aderbaion and Diarbek. This diuision caused another, in which the Chalife seeking to dispossesse Mahamun by force, was ouerthrowne, Bagadet (whither hee was pursued) taken, and himselfe slaine A. 198. Mahamun or Mamon was the next Chalife, against whom the Gouernours of Aderbaion and Karason rebelled, which hee pacified as he could. Hee spent much to haue all the bookes of Philosophie, the Mathematikes, and Physike, which hee could get, to bee translated out of the Greeke. He dyed A. H. 210.

Abu Ezach Matacon, or Mutetzam, the fourth sonne of Harun, succeeded. Hee built Samarrah on Tygris Northwards from Bagdet, which soone after was ruined. Sistom, a Prouince neere the Persian Gulfe, rebelled, and long warres continued in Persia. This Matacon wanne much from the Grecian Emperour. Hee dyed after he had raigned eight yeeres, leauing behind him eight Sonnes, and eight Daughters, with eight thousand Slaues. Hee had taken eight Cities, (the chiefe of eight Realmes) and put to death the eight Kings thereof. Hee left eight millions also of Treasure, hauing liued (to make vp eight eights) fortie and eight yeeres.

Wacek succeeded, in whose time by a three yeeres famine Karason was almost dispeopled. Afterwards they returned, and warred against the Mayusi, Heathenish people in Persia, (whereof (whereof, saith Mirkond, there are great numbers at this day) which worship the fire, of whom they made a great massacre. Methucal, or Almoto Wakel Bila Iafar succeeded, A. 322. in whose raigne the descendants of Aly did rise, for that he sought all meanes to hinder their pilgrimage to his Sepulchre, breaking the bankes of Euphrates, with the inundation thereof into the desart, stopping their passage. Montacer sonne of this Chalife, murthered him by his slaues, A.H. 234. but dyed himselfe within fiue moneths after. Abul Abas Hamed his next heyre, after fiue yeeres rule, was cast into Prison by his Souldiers, and there famished. In Persia the Deputies or Gouernours had vnder many Chalifes succeeded by a kinde of inheritance, the Chalife confirming the succession to the heyre. But in these dayes arose one Acem Ben Zeyd Alauuy, that is, Sent of God: hee entred into Persia, and tooke diuers Cities and Prouinces thereof: Mostahhin the next Chalife enioyed the seate but sixteen moneths. He dyed A.H. 242.

Almatez Bila followed the thirtie three in order of their Chalifes. He sent Mesa Ben Buka against Acem Ben Zeyd, and recouered much from him which he had seised on in Persia: But after thee yeeres and a halfe, this Chalifa was forced by his souldiers, finding him in a Stoue bathing himselfe, to drinke a pot full of cold water, which sodainely killed him. Motady Bila succeded with like fortune, slaine of his Souldiers, after eleuen moneths. In these combustions the Chaliphate was deuided, one raigning in Bagdet, the other in Ægypt, whose historie you may finde in our Ægyptian relations.

Almat Hamed Bila succeeded in Bagdet the thirtie fiue Chalife. Persia was now rent with many factions: for besides Taher the allowed Gouernour, and Ahem Ben Zeyd which still continued his warres, a new Captaine Yacub Leys arose, who ouerthrew Taher, and slew him. This Yacub was a Tinker, as his Father also; after that, a Captaine of Robbers: then (fishing in those troubled waters) tooke part with another Rebell in Sistom, and sharing the Countrey, by his fellowes misfortune became sole Lord. After this hee preuayled against Taher and Acem, and brought Persia vnder him, following his designes against the Chalife himselfe, now much terrified with his fame, and was likely to haue preuayled, if hee had not dyed by the way A.H. 268. His brother Hamer Ben Leys succeeded in Persia, Karason and the rest of his conquests, the Chalife himselfe adding thereto Hierak, the chiefe Citie whereof (sayth our Author) is Hispahon, making him Chena of Bagadet, which is the soueraigne Magistrate of iustice, next the Chalife: but Matazed Bila Hamed the next Chalife slew him, being before vanquished by Ismael, to whom he gaue the tytle of King of Maurenahar, Karason, Scyras, Sistan and Kermon; Gerion also and Taberstan, which hee tooke from Mahamed Ben Zeyd Alauuy. Moktafy Bila was next Chalife, and after him his brother Moctader Bila, who dyed A.H. 301. And Iafar Ben Matazed succeeded. All this while was Persia and the neighbour-Countries subiect to warre and contention, each calling his owne, whatsoeuer hee could get and hold by force. The particulars I forbeare to recite. In these times the Arabians robbed Mecca, carrying from thence great spoyles, which the superstitious Moores had offered: amongst the rest, carrying away a stone to Cufa, a holy Relique, brought (forsooth) by Adam out of Paradise, and afterwards it befell to Ismael the sonne of Abraham, and (I know not when) was brought to Mecca. It is white by nature, but being touched by sinners (it were a sinne to deny it) prooued blacke. But Saint Rumwald at * Boxley, and many other Popish stones or blockes had like vertue.

* Lamberts Peramb. Kent.

Iafar our Chalife dyed A.H. 320. About these times Abusuia (Zacuth calls him Bawia) a poore Persian dreamed that he pissed fire, which inflamed the countrey, and deuiding it selfe into three parts continued long. An Astrologer interpreted, that hee should command great Prouinces, in which his sonnes should succeed him. Elkaher, or Kaher Bila Mahamet Ben Mathazed was the next Chalife, whose eyes his Souldiers put out after eighteene moneths, and gaue his place to Razibila. Hee cut off the hand of Eben Mokale his Wazir, and hanged it on a gibbet, for writing a Letter without his priuitie. Hee ordayned also that the Wazirs should preach the Law to the people, which till that time the Chalifes themselues had performed. Muktafy succeeded. In his time was a great famine and pestilence. The Souldiers put out his eyes, A. H. 330. after which he liued fortie two yeeres. But his sonne Mostachfy Abdela was Chalife. Now did the three sonnes of Abusuia finde meanes to make themselues Lords of Persia, and the adiacent Regions, one of which warred vpon the Chalife, tooke him and put out his eyes. A. H. 334. and placed Motyah Bila Fazele, in that dignitie. In his time the stone aforesaid was recouered from Cufa (being redeemed at the weight in gold) and restored to Mecca. And now the Chalifes began to bee but shadowes of that quondam bodie, and Lords in name. Tayaha, Abdel, Carim was Chalife after Motyah: in whose time the posteritie of Abusuia had ruinated Bagadet by their warres, which was by Azudu Daule (one of them) re-edifyed A. H. 368. This Prince shewed himselfe fauourable to his Diuines, Phylosophers, Physitians, and Poets, and gaue leaue also to the Christians

Chriſtians his ſubiects to build Churches, bearing part of the charge. Hee built a goodly Hoſpitall at Bagadet, A.H. 371. and endowed it with great reuenues, and another at Scyras not inferiour. Hee dyed, A. 372. and left his inheritance to his three ſonnes, of which Scerfa Daule went into Perſia, and Scamis Daule to Bagadet, which ſoone after poſſeſſed his brothers ſtate then dead, and aſſociated Bahao Daule the third brother with him in gouernment, who proued ſole heyre by the treaſon of mutinous Souldiers which murthered Scamis Daule, A.H. 380. Bahao depoſed the Chalife in the firſt yeere of his raigne; although the poſſeſſion of the place ſince the time of the Daules or Abuſuia's race, was but an Eccleſiaſticall power, plumed of the Temporall ſouereignetie. Hee gaue the place to Kader Bila Hamed, the fortie ſixe in order of Chalifes. At this time Mamud Gaſney raigned in Karaſan and Maurenahar: who taking the aduantage of the minoritie of Fakoro Daules ſonnes, (Fakoro himſelfe and Bahao being dead) much altered the face of the Perſian and Mahumetane affaires.

From this time forward, the Daules with ciuill contentions weakened each other. Great were the broyles alſo in all the Northerly adioyning Countries; the Kings of Bokara, Turqueſtan, Nichabur, Darband, Samarcand, with all the Prouinces in, or neere thoſe parts of Perſia, fryed in ciuill combuſtions, euery man meaſuring his right by his Sword and Speare. Mamud at this time hauing chaſed away his brother Iſmael, contracted friendſhip with Ilechkan King of Turqueſtan, and made a proſperous expedition into India, as his Father Sabutaquin had done before; which Ilechkan enuying, treacherouſly entred into his countrey, and forced Mamuds returne: but Mamud being victorious, Ilechkan ſtrengthned himſelfe with a new confederacie of Kaderkham, King of Katao kotan (a countrey in Catay) whoſe great forces forced Mamud to vſe the helpe of the Turkes, and with the Calanges, Gazneys, and Aueganys, aduanced, and (fighting on a Elephant) obtayned the victorie. A. H. 397. Now did Mamud returne to his Indian expedition, ſeeking to conuert the Indians to his Religion, where hee fought with Bal an Indian King, and ouerthrew him in battell, taking fortie Elephants, and rich ſpoyles: and the Indians retyring with their treaſures, and the riches of their Pagodes (or Idoll temples) Mamud entred heere alſo, where Mivkond ſayth, hee tooke ſeuen millions of dragmes of gold, 700. Ingots of gold, with ſtore of pearles and gemmes. Hee ouerthrew alſo the Gaores or Guzarates. In Karaſon was at this time ſuch a famine, that the people did eate vp one another. This being done, A. H. 400. Mamud went againſt Bagadet, and by ſtrait ſiege forced Kader Bila the Chalife to yeeld himſelfe, and redeeme his peace with money. After this, and ſome new exploites in Perſia, hee returned into India, where he againe did great Acts: and at his returne, ouerthrowing Nealataquin, gaue the gouernment of Koratrazin to Altuntar one of his Captaines. In a fourth iourney into India, hee querthrew Gulkand a Pagan King, who ſeeing himſelfe vanquiſhed with the loſſe of fiftie thouſand men, fearing a beautifull wife which he had, ſhould come into his enemies hands, ſlew her, and himſelfe alſo. In a fifth expedition hee ouercame Gipal and Iandebal two Indian Kings, and returning to Gaznehen, built a ſtately Temple or Moſque, as a Thankeſgiuing for his victories: and then entering into Perſia, tooke Rey and Hiſpahon in Hierak (now the ſeate of Abas the Perſian King) from Maindu Daule, whom hee diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdome. At this time were great quarrels among the Daules in Perſia, Kermon, and Diarbek; and Mocheraf preuayling againſt Sulton, called himſelfe King of Kings. A. H. 411. Gelala (another of the Daules) was the yeere after made King of Bagadet.

Mamuds exploites in India, Perſia, &c.

A. H. 416. Mocharaf dyed at Bagadet, and the yeere after, the Turkes tooke, fired, and ſpoyled Bagadet. This made them call Gelala againe to their ſuccours, who not long before was defeated at Bagadet, and forced to flee to Baſora; and now entring, went to the Chalifes houſe to kiſſe his foot, A. H. 419. But the Turkes which hee brought with him, falling to mutinie for their pay, the Chalife was forced to become pay-maſter. Mamud amidſt his conqueſts dyed, A. H. 421. and Mahamed his ſonne ſucceeded, and the next yeere followed Kader the Chalife, which had enioyed (without great ioy in it) his place fortie one yeeres, and Kahem his ſonne ſucceeded. Maſud the other ſonne of Mamud warred vpon his brother, whom by treacherie of Iſſuf and Amir Aly traytors to their Maſter, hee tooke and put out his eyes. Hee that loued the treaſon, rewarded the Traytors, the one with yrons in a dungeon, the other with more open, and yet more cloſe ayre, in hanging. Thus hee ruled Karaſon, Gazneken and Hierak, and ſent Altuntax Gouernour of Koarrazin againſt Taquin, who held Samarkand and Bokara, which warres were bloudie. But A. H. 424. his Garriſons in India, and the Countrey of Gibal reuolted, in recompence of which hee ſubdued Gerion and Taberſtan. Togotel * or Togozelbek and Iakarbek Salinquis, two Turkiſh Captaines, ſubdued many of his Townes in Karaſan, and forced Alaon Daule and Abuſale out of their Gouernments; whereupon Maſud returning, was by other of his enemies ouerthrowne.

throwne. Herewith enraged, hee put many Turkes to death which had fought in this laſt battell, but faintly on his part: and making an expedition into India, by treacherie was taken of his followers, and ſoone after ſlaine: his blinde brother Mahamed recouering the ſtate, but not his eyes; and therefore reſigning to his ſonne Hamed, who againe was diſpoſſeſſed by Moadud the ſonne of Maſud. But the Turks in Karaſan and Maurenahar would not acknowledge him, and in the 435. of the Hag. had the victorie againſt his armie. Other Turkes alſo going out of Turqueſtan, ſpoyled the Countries of Garmeer and Kandachar. This ſeemes a truer ſtorie of the Turkes beginning of greatneſſe in Perſia, then that which is vſually receiued: and is thus by Mirkond a Perſian Hiſtorian deliuered. Moadud hauing relieued Lahor, which his Vaſſals in India rebelling had beſieged, marched againſt the Turkes, but dyed in the way A. H. 441.

At Bagadet matters had continued in confuſion. They had reuolted from Gelata Daule, and proclaimed Abulganiar King, but hee refuſed: and the Turkes ſoone after fired the Towne, and ſpoyled it. This continued till A. H. 428. when the cold was ſo extreame, that the riuer Degile or Tygris was frozen twelue dayes together, and the Snow lay three ſpans deepe there. A. H 434. Ebrahem Nealy Saliuqui a Turke, entred Perſia in the Prouince of Hierak, and tooke Amedon. Tokzelbek before mentioned tooke Rey, and ſpoyled all Perſia with a victorious Armie. Hee alſo through the diſſentions of the ſonnes of Abulganiar, after their Fathers death, found meanes to encreaſe himſelfe. And the Chalife of Damaſcus forced Kahem the Chalife of Bagadet to flee to Tokzelbek for ſuccour: whereupon hee entred Bagadet, and put all to fire and ſword, rifling the very Sepulchers to ſearch for Treaſures. He tooke Malek Rhaym the ſucceſſour of Abulganiar, whom before hee had helped to winne Scyras, and the beſt part of Perſia, and impriſoned him, where hee dyed. And thus the Empire of the Daules being deadly ſicke, ſoone after dyed. Abd Rachid alſo the ſucceſſour of Maodud was ſo purſued by Tokzelbek, that at laſt in a Fort he was (through the corruption of his Guard by money) taken and murthered. Then did hee, marrying a ſiſter of the deceaſed, proclaime himſelfe King. But not long after being in a publike place to receiue the ſalutations which they are accuſtomed to make in thoſe parts, ten of the chiefe men conſpiring together, ſlew him.

Kahem or Alkahem dyed A. H. 467. and Almoktady Byla was Chalife the fortie eight in order. In his time the Turkes and Ferrogozad (the other ſonne of Maſud) came to compoſition, Almoſtazer Byla ſucceeded his Father in the Caliphate, A. H. 487. in whoſe time Bagadet hauing beene ruined by the ouerflowing of Tygris, the ſituation was changed, and it was new built on the other ſide of the riuer towards the Eaſt, where it now ſtands in a more commodious ſeat, hauing had twentie fiue Chalifes ſince the foundation by Abuiafar, and yet not one of them dyed in it. Hee liued in peace and dyed A. H. 512. This ſtorie is thus told by Zacuth. In his time the Aſtrologers fore-told an exceeding deluge, not ſo great as in the dayes of Noah, becauſe then (ſaid they) were ſeuen Planets in coniunction with Piſces, whereas now there were but ſixe, Saturne being excluded. This made the Inhabitants of Bagded afraid, becauſe of the low ſituation: and cauſed them to ſtop the paſſages of the waters. The Iſmaelites, which of deuotion performed their Pilgrimage, were moſt of them drowned. The Calipha for this cauſe arayed the Aſtrologer, which fore-told this, in royall apparell. Almoſtarched Byla Fazele his ſonne ſucceeded; hee warred againſt ſome Princes of Perſia, and ſeized vpon ſome Prouinces of Maſul Saliuqui King of Karaſon, but Maſud had the better, and ſlew the Chalife A. H. 529. His ſonne and ſucceſſour Rached Bila ſought to reuenge his death, but hauing conquered a great part of Perſia, was ſlaine alſo by Maſud A. 532. He following his victories, made himſelfe Maſter of Bagadet, and placed Almokafy Bila in the Califate, who taking aduantage of Maſuds death, which hapned ſoone after, marched into Perſia, and recouered that which Maſud had vſurped, which he enioyed peaceably, and dyed A. H. 555. And now the Chalifes became great Potentates againe. His ſonne Almoſtanget Byla Iſſuf ſucceeded the fiftie three Chalife. After his death which was through heate, by ſhutting the doore when he was in the Bath, ſucceeded A. 566. Almoſtanzy Benur Elah Acen: and hee * dying, A. 577. Nacer held the place fortie ſeuen yeeres: vnder whom Bagadet did greatly flouriſh. During his gouernment the Saliuquis were vanquiſhed by the Koarraſmians. Altahar Byla Mahamed, the next Chalife enioyed it but nine moneths; his ſonne Almoſtancer Byla ſeuenteene yeeres, in whoſe time the Mogoles or Tartarians wanne ſome Prouinces, but by him were diuers time defeated. Almoſtacem, or Muſteatzem Byla Abdula was the fiftie eight, (others reckon but fiftie foure) and the laſt of the Chalifaes of Bagadet the thirtie ſeuen of this family, which had commanded about fiue hundred twentie three yeeres, in the Perſian Chronicles of Mirkond, and others eſteemed as Kings thereof. Hee dyed A. H. 655. I confeſſe Zacuth and Mirkond doe not fully agree in names, times, and relations, nor yet much diſagree. I haue heere moſt obſerued ued the later as the larger. Not long before, one Bada profeſſing himſelfe a Prophet ſent of GOD, had of the ſcumme of all Nations gathered an Armie, wherewith hee committed much exceſſe and ſlaughter in Aſia, both of Iewes and Chriſtians. In the time of this laſt Chalife, the Tartar King Chita, made his brother Halacho King of Irak and Meſopotamia, who beſieged and ſacked Bagded, and ſlew Muſteatzem. This Chalipha was ſtarued by his commandement in the middeſt of his treaſures, becauſe hee would not employ the ſame (through niggardiſe) for his owne defence. From that time there hath been no Chaliph (ſaith this Arabian Hiſtorie) in Bagdet. In him ended the Abaſian line, of which had beene fiue and thirtie Chaliphaes.

§. IIII.

Of their Titles, Greatneſſe, and Learning.

AFter Mahumet or Muhammed the falſe Prophet, the firſt Captaines of warre were called Emirelmumenim, [a] that is to ſay, Præfecti orthodoxorum, the Captaines of the Sound-beleeuers: and after, becauſe, vnder cloake of Religion, they ſeized on the Primacie and tyrannie (ſpirituall and temporall) they named themſelues Caliphes, that is, Vicars. Bedwell interprets, ſucceſſours. The firſt Emirelmumenim, was Abubecher. When by his ſucceſſours, Gouernours [b] were ſent into Spaine and Africa, they for a time held the ſame as Deputies, although to their power nothing lacked but the Tytle of a King, yet they profeſſed to doe all in the name of the Emirelmumenim, vntill afterwards they tooke that Tytle alſo themſelues, and became abſolute. Whence all the pettie Kings of Spaine, and the African Potentates, were called Emireelmumenim; and the Kings of Barbarie are ſo ſtiled at this day, euen as the French King is called Chriſtianiſſimus, & the Spaniard Catholicus. The Legats of the Chalipha were called Naibin, which alſo ſignifieth the ſame that Chalipha; but this was made peculiar to thoſe Saracen tyrants, which vſed both Swords (to ſpeake in the Romiſh language) ſupreame in matters Diuine and Humane. Thus obſerueth Ioſeph Scaliger [c] of theſe names: whereby appeareth, that Emire elmumenim was not giuen onely to Abedramon and his ſucceſſours in Africa, as is before obſerued out of Curio.

Beniamin Tudelenſis nameth the Chaliph, which in his time ruled in Bagded, Amir Almumanin Alghabaſſi, which Montanus tranſlateth, The Prince of the beleeuers which liue in penance, or heauineſſe: But I rather encline to Mr. Seldens coniecture, that it is Emirelmumenim of the Abazian race or kindred: for ſo Beniamin adds after that the proper name of this great King was Al-ghabaſſi Hhaphtſi, whom I take to bee the ſame which is before called Moktaphi, the firſt ſillable in that name being common (as you ſee) to many of them, and Ktaphi or Chaphtſi not ſo vnlike as many names proue in their tranſmigration from one language to another. He reports that he had a Palace of three miles compaſſe within the Citie, within which was a wood or grouc of Trees of all ſorts, both barren and bearing, Beaſts alſo of all ſorts for game, and in the middeſt thereof a great lake with plentie of Fiſh, neither wanted there Fowles for varietie of diſport. He was skilfull of the Hebrew, and well reſpected that Nation. He had impoſed this rule on himſelfe, not to vſe any meate or apparell, which hee had not [d] firſt earned: to which purpoſe hee made fine Mattes, which being ſealed with his owne Seale, were by his Courtiers ſolde, the great men buying them for their vſe. None of the Iſmaelites (ſo he calleth the Mahumetans) might ſee his face: and the Pilgrimes which came from Mecca, in the Land of Eliman, and paſſing this way, deſired to ſee him, vſed to enter the Palace, and there cryed out, O Lord, Light of the Iſmaelites, and Sun-beame of our Law, ſhew vs the brightneſſe of thy face. But hee anſwered them nothing, as not ſeeming to regard them. Then his Courtiers and great Attendants ſued for them, ſaying, O our Lord, ſpread thy peace ouer theſe men which come from farre Countries, &c. Then would hee let out at the window a skirt of his garment, which they deuoutly kiſſed; and (when one of thoſe great men had ſaid, Goe in peace) returned full of gladneſſe to their home, where they were receiued almoſt with veneration for ſo happie an exploit. Euery of the Princes which attended on him, had their ſeuerall Palaces within the great Palace, and were duely obſerued, wearing alſo yron chaynes, becauſe they had once conſpired to ſet vp his brother. But they had the reuenues of Townes and Cities belonging to them, brought them by their Officers, notwithſtanding.

Thus did hee conſerue his Maieſtie with the people, and ſecuritie with his owne. I omit the Edifices and pillars of gold and ſiluer, adorned with Gemmes, which he mentioneth in that Palace: Out of which the Chaliph came but once in the yeere, in the moneth Ramadan, or a Iacob de Vitriaco. Hiſt. Ieroſ. l. 1. c. 9. Amir, Amira, Amiras, Admirans, à themate AMARA præcepit. Bedwel. Hence is our title Admirall compounded, and of ἅλιος, the Sea.

b Such were the Gouernors of Choraſan, Irak, Siras, Damaſco, Iaman, Mutzul, Halep, Gunia, Mahaan. The Arabian calleth them Kings: and their heyres ſucceeded them.

or their Easter solemnitie, at which time they resorted thither out of farre Countries to see him, as if hee had beene Mahomet. He was then carryed on a Mule, royally apparelled, and crowned with a Diadem of vnspeakable price, on which he ware a blacke cloth, in token that the day of death would obscure all that pompe and splendor. The Princes of Arabia, Media, Persia, Tuboth, did attend him: and thus he went to the great Temple built in the gate Bosra. The people, men and women, all cloathed in silke & purple, salute him, Peace be on thee our Lord King: He resaluting them with his hand, or mouing his garment. Being thus conueyed to the Porch, with musicke also of all kindes, and dances, he ascendeth a Tower of wood, and there maketh a Sermon of his Law; the wise-men of the Ismaelites applauding his learning, the people answering, Amen. After this, hee giueth them all his blessing: and a Camell is brought to him, which hee killeth for the Paschall Feast, and causeth the Princes to distribute pieces of the flesh of the beast which himselfe had slaine; this they esteeme a great gift. This done, they depart, the King returning by another way, by the bankes of Tygris, alone, (the Princes passing in the Riuer) vnto the Palace. Hee had built a Palace on the other side of Tygris, on a branch of Euphrates, which floweth by one side of the Citie, in which hee had raysed great Houses, Hospitals for the sicke, and for the poore, and for mad men, with all prouision for them at his charge. This I haue beene bold to insert out of this Iew, because I know none other Author that can acquaint vs with the State of Bagded in the time of her chiefe flourishing, before it was destroyed by the Tartars.

Thus haue wee giuen you a Chronographicall view of the ancient Chaliphaes, with their first and greatest Conquests, omitting the lesser and later: as in the yeere 807. in Sardinia and Corsica: in 826. in Creete, 843. in Sicil; and presently after in [e] Italy, ouer-running Tuscan, and burning the Suburbes of Rome it selfe, with the Churches of Peter and Paul 845. the next yeere in Illyria, Dalmatia; besides the taking of Ancona: in 847. chased by Pope Leo [f] from Ostia. These with other their affaires of warre in Lucania, Calabria, Apulia, at Beneuentum, Genua, Capua, (which Cities they tooke) I passe ouer. After this great body grew lubbelly and vnweldie, it fell vnder the weight of it selfe; none so much as the Saracens ouerthrowing the Saracens, as their [g] Sects and Diuisions make plaine. Neuertheless, this disioyning and disioynting notwithstanding, their Religion euen still couereth a great part of the world. For besides the triumphing sword of the Turke, Persian, Mogore, Barbarian, and other Mahumetan Princes: such is the zeale of the superstitious Mahumetan, that in places furthest distant; this their Religion hath beene preached, which they trade together with their Marchandize, euen from the Atlantike Ocean vnto the Philippinaes: It hath founded in China, it hath pierced Tartaria: and although the name of Christian extendeth it selfe into so many Sects and Professions in the Countries of Asia, Afrike and America, besides Europe (almost wholly Christians;) yet it is hard to say, whether there bee not as many Disciples and Professors of this ridiculous and impious deuotion, as of all those which giue their names to Christ, in whatsoeuer Truth or Heresie. Master Brerewood accounteth the Mahumetans more then the Christians, in proportion of sixe to fiue.

[g] Cairaoan became a Papacie absolute though schismaticall, as they called it: so did Marocco: the Persians were alway prone to such Schismes: and other, as it serued for their aduantage.

Thus hath the Field and the Church stooped to Mahomet: wee may adde more, (Saul among the Prophets:) learning hath flourished among the Mahumetans, at first vnlearned and rude, but enemies to learning in others. Yea, they [h] sought to propagate their impious Mahometrie, and extirpate the Christian truth by that pollicie of Iulian, prohibiting all learning to their Christian subiects. Such a decree of Abdalla, A. 766. is recited by Theophanes.

[h] Ber. Aldreto var. Antiq. l. 3. c. 33.

When the Kings of Africa possessed Spaine, they founded Vniuersities both at Marocco (it is [i] Scaligers report) and in Spaine, allowing yeerely stipends to the Professors. And in those times was great ignorance of good learning in the Latine Church, when good Disciplines flourished exceedingly amongst the Muhammedans. Yea, whatsoeuer the Latines writ, after the industrie of the Arabians had acquainted them with their ignorance, is wholly to be ascribed to the Arabians, both their Philosophie, Physicke, and Mathematikes. For they had no Greeke Author which was not first translated into Arabike, and thence into Latine, as Ptolomey, Euclide and the rest; till Constantinople being taken by the Turkes, the Greeke Exiles brought vs backe to the Fountaines. Iohn Leo testifies, that many ancient Authors and great volumes are amongst them, translated out of the Latine, which the Latines themselues haue lost. But now the Muhammedans are growne artlesse in Africa: only in Constantinople may good Arabike & Persian works be gotten by the helpe of the Iewes. Lud. Viues [k] saith, That they translated Arabike out of the Latine, but he was not so well able to iudge therof, although he rightly ascribeth the corrupting of Arts to vnskilful translations, and sheweth the difference of Abenrois or Auerrois his Aristotle (as the Latins haue him) from the Greeke. But his inuectiue is too bitter in condemning all the Arabians, as vnlearned, doting, and fauouring more of the Alcoran, then of Art: and the Spaniard might beare some grudge to that Nation, which so many hundred yeeres had spoyled Spaine; still leauing the fourth part of the Spanish Language (as Scaliger [1] testifieth thereof) Arabike, in monument of their Conquest.

Of their learned men were [m] Auicen, Auerrois, Auempace, Algazel, &c. Philosophers; Mesue, Rasis, and many other Physicians and Astrologers, mentioned in the Chronicles of Zacuthi; Leo, and Abilfada Ismael, Geographers; Cairaon, Bagded, Fez, Marocco, Corduba, &c. were Vniuersities of Saracen students. But now Learning and Schooles are decayed and ruined: euen as at first also it was amongst some of them little countenanced, as appeareth by that Hagag in the 96. yeere of the Hegira, who being Gouernor or King of [n] Irak, in his sickness consulted with an Astrologer, Whether the Stars had told him of any Kings death that yeere: he answered, That a King should die, but his name was Cani: Whereupon Hagag remembring that at his birth his mother had imposed that name on him: I shall die, saith he; but thou shalt go one houre before: and presently caused his head to be smitten off. An vnhappie Harbengership in regard of his Art: an vnhappie Art which can better tell others Destinies then their owne. But no maruell in Hagag, who was fleshed in bloud, that his Herodian Testament should bee thus bloudie, who in his life had in that Median Prouince slaine an hundred and twentie thousand men, besides fiftie thousand men, and fourescore thousand women, which perished in his imprisonments.

Baghdad or Bagdat.

Baghdad (which is also called Dar-assalam, that is, The Citie of Peace *) receiued that name of a Monke called Bachdad, who as Ben-Casen writeth, serued a Church builded in that Medow. But Abu-Giapar Almansur the second Abassæan Chalipha, who wanne it, A. Heg. 150. named it Dar-assalam. It is the Citie Royall of Mesopotamia, now called Diarbecr, which the said Almansur placed in a large Plaine vpon Tigris, and diuided by the Riuer into two Cities, ioyned by a Bridge of Boats. This Citie built in this place, Almansur ruled many yeeres, and after him other Chaliphaes, till the 339. yeere of the Hegira, in which King Aadhd-eddaule and Saif-eddaule tooke it, who with their Successours enioyed it till Solymus the Ottoman Emperour subdued, and is now ruled by a Bascia, with many Ianizaries. But hereof Ahmad Abi Bacr of Bachdad, in his Annals, will shew you more. This Citie is famous for Schooles of all Sciences, both in former and the present time. Here Ahmad Assalami a famous Poet wrote his Verses. Here Alpharabius the renowned Philosopher and Physician, borne at Farab in Turcomannia, professed these studies publikely with great applause, and leauing many of his Schollers in this Cities, went to Harran of Mesopotamia, where finding Aristotles Booke, De Auditu, hee read it fortie times, and wrote vpon the Booke, that he was willing againe to reade it. Hence hee went to Damascus, and there dyed, A. H. * 339. Thus Ben-Casem in his Booke, De viridario Electorum.

* The Deuils Ierusalem. The Tartarian conquest is here omitted.

* This number seemeth false, Bochara the Citie of Auicenna: some say in Bocara neere Samercand.

Bochara is an ancient Citie vpon Euphrates, in a Village belonging whereto Honain Ali Bensina (whom the Latines call, Auicenna) was borne, A. H. 370. Hee gaue himselfe to Physicke very young, and was the first which became Physician to Kings and Princes, who before in that Countrey vsed o no Physicians. He published neere an hundred bookes, manie of Physicke, some of Philosophie, a Dictionarie of Herbes and Stones, Verses of the Soule, &c. He liued eight and fiftie yeeres, and dyed in Hamadan. He had runne thorow all Arts, at eighteene. Thus Ben-Casem. But others affirme, that a certaine Physician flourishing of great note, vpon whom no praying nor paying could fasten a Disciple, lest the secrets of his Art should bee made common: the mother of Auicenna offers her sonne to doe him seruice in decoctions, and other meaner offices, which hee could not doe himselfe, nor was there feare of danger from him whom nature had made deafe, and therefore dumbe. Hee made tryals, and found Auicenna deafe, as he thought, and entertayned him, who watched his times, and transcribed his bookes and notes, sending them closely to his Mother, which after his mothers death hee published in his owne name.

o This seemed to arise of their opinion of Fate. Auicenna.

Damascus.

Damascus is called of the Arabians, Sciam, and Demasc, of the Syrians Darmsuc. It is luxurious in Fruits of all kinds, rich in Oliues, and Yron of excellent temper by nature, and so bettered by Art, that no Helme or Shield can withstand it. It is seated in a large Plaine at the roots of Libanas, there called Hermon, sixe miles in compasse, double walled, with a strong square Tower in the midst, built by a Florintine, beautified with Springs, Market-places, publike Buildings, Meskits, Bathes, Canes, and all sorts of like weauing, and in all ancient times with Learning and learned men. Here flourished Saint Damascen: and heere Almotannabbi excelled in Arts and Armes, emulous of Mahomet, but not with like successe. Hee was called Nabion, that is, The Prophet; this Motannabbi, that is, Prophecying: hee wrote the Alcoran elegantly and eloquently; this excelled in Prose and Verse: both had Followers, but this mans Disciples after his death were dispersed, which hapned, A. H. 354. Ben-Casem also relates, that Mohamed Abi Abdillah professed Philosophie in this Citie, and to dispute with all commers, and wrote a huge Booke, De vnitate existendi principiorum. He dyed there, A. H. 638.

Aleppo is called of the Inhabitants, Halcb, the chiefe Mart of all the East, frequented by Persians, Indians, Armenians, and all Europians. The Port is Scanderoone, called by the Inhabitants Escanderuneh. The soyle is very fertile, and nourisheth abundance of Silke-wormes. A.H.922. Sultan Selim tooke it, and found therein infinit wealth. Sciarfeddin which wrote the Victories of the Othomans in two Tomes, saith, that it had of Gold and Siluer coyned 1150000. & a mightie masse vncoyned; Vests of cloath of Gold, tissued or wrought with gold, silk, and scarlet, aboue 300000. besides abundance of Gems & Pearls. And besides other wealth innumerable, it had eight Armories well furnished. It now flourisheth in the next place to Constantinople and Cairo, and may be called, Queene of the East: Here are store of Gems, Amber, Bengeoin, Lignum Aloes, and Muske, which is taken from a little reddish beast, beaten with many blowes on one place that the bloud may all come thither. Then is the skin so swolne and full of bloud bound straight that the bloud may not issue: and put into one or more bladders, is dryed on a beasts backe till the bladder fall off of it selfe, and that bloud after a moneth becomes excellent Muske. At Aleppo was borne that great Grammarian Othaman Abu Homar, surnamed Ben-elhhageb, which wrote Casia and Sciasia of Grammer, and dyed, A. H. 672.

The Life of Mahumet, Mahammed, or Muhammed the Saracen Law-giuer.

§. I.
Mahumets Life after the Histories of Christians.

THe life of Mahomet is at large described by diuers Authors, but I finde it no where so fully as before the Alcaron in the Italian Edition, the sum whereof, and of the other reports touching the same, is this. Ismael was the first (according to that Italian Author, others ascribe it to Abraham) that built the Temple at Mecca, and hauing to wife an Egyptian Idolatresse, had by her twelue sonnes, which (as he saith) being dispersed in Arabia, Persia, Armenia, sowed so many sorts of Religion: and Chedar his second sonne, placed in the Temple of his father (vpon an high Tower called Alquibla) an Idoll named Allech and Alleze, instituting certaine cremonies: and amongst the rest, the sacrificing of a Ram, in remembrance of that Ram which was presented to his grand-father Abram at the offering of Isaac. Of Chedar [a] descended Thebic, and so in order, Caab, Numbib, Almucaien, Ahlucen, Acaha, Amubasoa, Amir, Celif, Nisca, Abhimaista, Aadirem, Scaad, Mudhar, Ilges, Mudicita, Hudhaisa, Chinene, Anascere, Melich, Phasce, Paliff, Lunai, Cabnai, Morta, Chelef, Facien, Abdamanef, Abdalmutalif, Abdalla the supposed father of Mahomet: his mothers name was Heunina or Hemina a Iewish (as some [b] write) his father was an Ethnicke or Pagan Idolater. His base condition and obscuritie was such, that the Turkes themselues doubt whether he were an Arabian or Persian, notwithstanding that genealogicall rabble. [c] Richerius reporteth, that he was a Cyrenean by birth, and that in the time of his minoritie or child-hood, he was by some Plagiarie stolne away from his friends, and sold to the Ismaelit-Marchants. Others say, that hee was abandoned both of father and mother, and (according to the cruell custome of that barbarous people) sold to strangers. From so base a beginning did this cunning Impostor and Seducer of the world arise to be the scourge of Princes, and disturber of the world.

a Fortalicium fidei reckoneth another genealogie: and the Saracen Chronicle continueth this, euen from Adam; not agreeing with themselues or any truth.

b I. Bo. Bert. Volater. &c.

c Christ. Richer.

He was somewhat comely of person, and of sharp wit, and therefore was made ouer-seer of the businesse of Abdalmutalif his Master, or (as some say) his Grand-father: and traded for him in Soria, Egypt, and Persia, and after his death, inherited his goods: continuing his trade of Marchandize with a great man of Corozan, he succeeded him in his bed & wealth, by the marriage of his widdow Gadisa (whom [d] others call Adega the daughter of Hulert) and that (as some suspect not vnprobably) by the helpe of Sorceries and Incantations. With this widdow, after shee was become his wife, he liued in his wonted course of life thirteene yeeres, and had by her one sonne, and three daughters. And by this meanes growne great, he aspired higher; assembling to himselfe a company of theeues, vnthrifts and out-lawes, which with him became voluntaries and aduenturers in the warres of the Emperour Heraclius against the Persians: in which he valourously behaued himselfe, and was wounded in the visage, and Cosdroes the Persian King was ouercome.

d Arabs Nobilis in Alcor. refut. Cedrenus calls her Chadicha.

After this, Mahomet deuising further how to satisfie his ambitious desire of Soueraigntie, met with occasion fitting those his aspiring designes. The Arabians being denied their pay

(as is said) raised a mutinie and [c] rebellion: these chose Mahomet to be their Captaine, who vsed them as his instruments of robbery and violence about the countries of Mecca. But the Nobles opposing themselues against him; hee, perceiuing that their power and authoritie would be a perilous rub in his way, thought it his safest course to insinuate with them; and therfore sought by alliance to winne their better liking, taking some of their daughters to his wiues; of which he had at one time eleuen, and in all his life fifteene, besides two slaues.

[c] This mutiny, according to others, hapned many yeeres after that Mahumet had vnder the cloake of Religion furthered his ambition and rebellion.

Heraclius at that time fauouring the Heresie of the Monothelites; & neglecting the affaires of the Empire, Mahomets proiects tooke better effect. Hummar also and Mauchia caused all Soria, and Iudæa and Egypt to rebell. Sergius at that time a Nestorian Monke of Constantinople (thence for that Heresie excommunicated) resorting to Mahomet kindled these sparkes into a great fire, perswading him to countenance his Rebellion, with the pretence of Religion; the rather now that Heraclius had offended the Christians by his exactions and Heresies, and the Iewes, by new cruelties, because by Magicke he had beene warned to beware of the Circumcised Nation. Thus some male contented Iewes, and some hereticall Christians being called to counsell, it was agreed, that hee should professe himselfe to be chosen in this turbulent state of the world, to bring vnto the same a New Law, appointed hereunto by Diuine authoritie: to the Iewes affirming himselfe their expected Messias; to the Christians promising amiddest so many Heresies, The rule of Truth; to the excommunicate Heretikes, restitution of their persons and goods; to seruants, libertie; to subiects, immunity from tribute.

And thus hee caused himselfe of Sergius to bee baptized, and to bee [f] circumcised also of Abdalla a Iew, hauing before beene a Paynime. After, hee got himselfe into a Caue two miles from the Towne called Garbe, continuing there two yeeres in companie of Sergius and Abdalla, which acquainted him with the Christian and Iewish Principles: and in the night resorted to his wife, whom he perswaded to this vaine beliefe by Zeidinus his seruant, rewarding him therefore with freedome, and proclaiming (as by an Edict from Heauen) the like libertie to all seruants of all sorts, which would follow him. This rout resorting to him, and by their numbers strengthening his faction, their masters not a little aggrieued, gaue out a rumour, that Mahomet was mad, and possessed of a Diuell, and that an euill end would befall him and his followers. And although they might haue gotten him into their hands, yet in regarde of his nine vncles, and some noble Families linked him in kindred, viz. the Corasists, the Hassinists, the Benitamines, they abstained from further rigour.

[f] He neither was circumcised himselfe. (saith an Arabian nobleman in confutation of the Alcoran) nor did command any thing thereof in his law, but the Arabians vsed Circumcision before his time.

Thus with the helpe of Sergius and [g] Baira a Iacobite; and Cillenus in the caue, with the fauour of his two vncles, Hanza, and Alabes at Mecca, with his elder brother (that tooke his daughter Fatima) and Eubocara (a chiefe man of that place, afterwards his father in law) he composed after his and their pleasure Constitutions and Canons, and published the same at Mecca; with protestation that the Angell Gabriel had been sent to him from God, as in old times to the Prophets, to teach him these things. And in the first place commanding them to beleeue in God the Creator of heauen and earth, the causer of raines and fruites, that inflicteth death on men, and after raiseth them vp to giue them either, in reward of their good workes, Paradise; or of their bad, Hell; and such other things, neuer before heard of among these simple Idolatrous Inhabitants of Mecca, he grew in great estimation.

[g] Sansouino calleth him Bacira, and addeth also Nicholas a Prieft of Rome.

For in Persia and Arabia, before this time, some worshipped a Tree, which they called Putulangua, offering sacrifices thereto: some an Idoll, called Bliomum; and some the Sunne; and others vsed other Idolatries; spred by the so many sonnes of Ismael: and therefore the ruder multitude, astonished with these Propheticall and Angelicall titles, were easily bewitched. And by degrees he published his intended wickednes, not sparing outragious villanies, as [h] the stealing of a Camell, the murthering of a Iew sleeping vnder a tree. Yea, hee pretended not humane infirmitie, but diuine authority, to his most mischieuous designments. For example, being lustfully affected to [i] Zamech, the daughter of Gaissi, the wife of Zaidi, he writ in his Law, That after vow or promise of marriage, it was lawfull for him to enioy her, and (if he pleased) to take her to his wife. And being reprehended, that Aissa his [k] wife was dishonest with Zaphagam, the son of Almuthathum, the Angell (forsooth) said, she was chast. And being found by his wiues, with Mary the wife of Macobe, the King of the Iacobites, he in another Chapiter is absolued of his oath, and free to lye with any woman, not being able to containe himselfe, notwithstanding he had sworne so to do. And by the same authority he enioyned them penance, for blaming the Prophet. And willing to diuorce one of his wiues, but fearing the greatnesse of her kindred, hee frameth one Chapiter, blaming him for fearing man more then GOD. Meeting once with a woman on the way, hee would haue abused her, but she refusing, he set vpon her Asse (Lettice befitting his lippes) affirming that that woman had more sinned, then if shee had slaine an hundred men. And the Saracens to this day, saith [l] Petrus Alfonsi, deplore that fact of this Saracen woman.

He wanteth not his miracles also in his Legend. As he iourneyed in the heate of the day with [m] his Camels, a Cloud couered his head from the scorching heate of the Sunne, about the seuenteenth yeere of his age. And when hee first entered the Caue, he saw the Angell Gabriel in his proper shape, with white wings on a seate of gold betwixt Heauen and Earth, who brought him his Prophecie: and going to Mecca to tell his wife; the Beasts, Trees, Stones, and Hearbs, saluted him with the name of a Prophet, and a messenger of God; and the trunke of a Tree standing in the way, diuided it selfe for him to passe betweene, and then after closed againe. Hee also, to satisfie his inner doulous vncle Bugallinus, caused the Moone to descend from heauen, which entred into his sleeue, and after passed it selfe in two, and then ascended againe. To satisfie the peoples doubtings, he caused a Bull (taught before to come at his call) to bring on his hornes a Chapiter, which hee there had tyed, to testifie the truth of Mahomet.

in Mahomets miracles.

But while the fame of this Prophetical Function filled the mouthes of the vulgar with acclamations, it no lesse filled the hearts of the Nobles of Mecca with disdaine, who sought therefore to apprehend him; but hee, closely fled to Iatrib or Medina with his followers, where he liued with the name of a Prophet thirteene yeeres. From this flight they begin the computation of their Hegira: the word Hegrath signifieth a persecution for Religion. Wherein Mahomet imitated the Christians of those parts, who accounted their yeeres from the persecution of Diocletian. That his flight hapned on the sixteenth of Iuly An. Dom. 622. on Friday: Therefore doe they keepe holy the Friday. And because then the Moone shewed her new hornes, that became a sacred ensigne to the Mahometans: and on Towers where they watch to obserue the new Moone, they set vp an horned Moone, as Christians on Steeples vse to erect the Crosse. For then there was no new Moone day of there moneth Muharram [n], but was the second day after the Iewish account: and therefore the new Moone might then be seene. But for the Friday it was obserued, before Mahomets time, as shall after be shewed. Hee depriued a certaine Carpenters poore Orphans of their patrimonie, and consecrated their House into a Temple. This Citie being for most part inhabited with Iewes, they asked a signe in confirmation of his Office. He said, That hee was not sent with miracles, but denunciation of Armes heere, and Hell hereafter: and those which would not receiue his new Doctrine, he expelled by force. Being absolute Lord heere, he aspired also to the Dominion of Mecca. He sent thirtie Horse with Hanzeta to rob the Marchants, trauelling thither: but being then preuented, hee sent foure yeeres after, sixe hundred of his best Souldiers vnder Hugaida to assault Mecca, but hee also was discomfited: yet not desisting his enterprize, seuen yeeres after he atchieued it, and after eleuen battels entered and sacked the Towne, and gaue the spoyle to his souldiers; and for feare, the neighbouring Cities submitted themselues. Mahomet here with encouraged, assaulted the Persians and Ægyptians, exchanging with those hee conquered, his new Religion for their old wealth and libertie, binding the Gouernours thereunto. But now being old, and through his intemperances weake, and diseased also with the falling Sickneese, he coloured his often falling with pretext of Gabriels brightnesse, and the vnsufferable splendour of his presence.

n For the vnderstanding of this, reade Scal. E. Tib. 2. & 5.

Hee was of meane stature, large sinewes, browne colour, broad face, with a cut lip, and had one of his fore-teeth stricken out in one Expedition, and in another his face wounded. He had a great head, thinne haires, long shankes, not proportionable to his head. He was of few words, but deceitfull; couetous, and withall prodigall, (but of other mens goods) and in deeds of lust equalling himselfe to fortie other men, or (as some say) fiftie. When hee was threescore and three yeeres of age, he dyed; of which he liued in trade of Marchandize thirtie eight, and in the Caue two; at Mecca ten, in Medina thirteene. He had commanded, that they should not burie him; for that on the third day after hee would ascend in bodie and soule into Heauen. Meanewhile the Earth being poysoned with the stinke of his Carkasse, they buryed him, not at Mecca (as some affirme) but at Medina. His Law, in his life-time, sustained many alterations; Cellenus his Scribe writing what himselfe pleased: and the seuerall parcels of the same being collected by Odman, one of his successours, this Booke was thereupon called Alcaron, that is, a Summarie, or Collection of Precepts. Thus Mahomet aduantaged himselfe with the mutinous Rebels, Fugitiues, Vnthrifts, Apostata-Iewes, and hereticall Christians in that diseased State of the Empire: the body whereof was afflicted on the East by the Persians, on the West by the Gothes and other Barbarians, and fretted within his owne bowels by intestine rebellions: the Soule thereof being no lesse torne and rent by the Sects and Heresies of the Arians, Donatists, Nestorians, Pelagians, and others. He fishing in these troubled waters, set on foot his new Religion, to bring light to the Gentiles, and to mitigate to the Iewes and Christians the seueritie of the Law and Gospell. But the Mahumetans themselues doe report otherwise, fabling of this Fabler great matters, as if hee had been the Promise and Hope of Nations, and the most excellent personage of the World,

§. II.

The Saracens storie of Mahomets life.

o Legend of Mahomet, Hermano Dalmata interprete.

THey haue written a Booke of the generation of Mahomet to this effect: o The Booke of the generation of Mahomet, the Messenger of God, (the Prayer and Saluation of God bee vpon him) from Adam and Eue, to the time when God brought him forth, gracious perfect, and fit for himselfe. When as Kabachbar had learned out of their Scriptures, and by Astrologie, that this Prophet should be borne to the world, hee heard, That there was a man borne in Iseras, a Citie of Arabia, hauing all such markes and tokens, as hee had fore-seene by the Prophecies and his Art, viz. A spot on his fore-head, a print betweene his shoulders, &c. And to satisfie his desire, hee went thither to see; where finding those tokens fulfilled in young Mahomet, hee thereupon expounded the darke mysterie of his fatre-fetched Light, learned of his Master Kabelmedi, in this manner: When Adam was newly created, as he stood vp, his braine shaked and made a noyse, as the leaues doe, which are shaken with the winde: whereat Adam wondring, God said vnto him, The sound which thou hast heard, is the signe of the Prophets and Messengers of my Commaundements. Take heed therefore that thou commit the Seed of Light onely to worthie Loynes, and to a cleane Wombe: And this q Light of Mahomet that should be borne, shined from the face of Adam, as the Sun or Moone at the full. And when hee had begotten Seth, that Light passed instantly from the face of Adam into the face of Eue, in so much, that the birds of the Aire, and beasts of the Earth, wondred at her beautie. Yea, the Angels, euery day saluted her, and brought her odours out of Paradise, till she brought forth Seth alone, hauing before at euery birthen, brought forth a brother and a sister.

p These prophets were Abnabdalla, Abnalmutaira, Abuzaid, Abamacumet, Alabez, Alfad, Abulambez, Ezerigi, Abnamare, Kabalchabar (scholler of Kabalmedi) or Kabalachbar.

q A mahumetan Chronicle saith, That this Light claue to the hands of God who stood a thousand yeeres before Adam, worshipping him as the Angels; after inclosed in the Rib of Adam, &c.

Seth inherited this Light, which remained betweene heauen and earth, the Angels thereby ascending and descending vpon Seth, and crying alwaies, Reioyce thou Earth, worthie of the Light of Mahomet, on him be Prayer and Saluation of God. Adam drawing neere to his end, declared vnto him, by his Testament, the mysterie of that Light, and the Genealogy of the Prophets. Then descended Gabriel accompanied with threescore and ten thousand Angels, beating euery one of them a white leafe and a pen, which signed the writing, for the continuance of the order of the Prophetical generation. Seth receiued this writing, & was cloathed with a double red garment, shining as the Sunne, as soft as the violet-flower.

From him it passed by succession to Noe and Sem; then to Abraham, at whose birth two lights from the East and West (meeting in the middest) lightned the whole world: and the Angels were heard singing, That it was the Light of the Prophet, Mahomet who should be borne of his Seed, whose Word should bee in the vertue of God. This Light passed from Abraham to the face of Hagar, being with childe, and after to Ismael; and God told him, That the soule of Mahomet, in the beginning of the Creation, was mingled with his, and that his name in Heauen should be Assmet, in Earth Mahomet, in Paradise Abuultrazim. At this Sara grieued, vntill three Angels comforted her with the promise of ISAAC. From Ismael it remoued to Keidar his sonne, who being indued with seuen Gifts, married Nulia of the Land of Isaac, but, being warned by an Oracle, he tooke to wife Algadira an Arabian; and after, by diuine warning, carried the cheft of this Light vnto Iacob. Then was Hamel borne to him, and receiued the same Light; in which succeeded Thebicht, Hamiessu, Adeth, Aduue, Adne, Mudhar, Nizar, Musar, Aliez, Madraca, Hordeima, Kneiua, Anofra, Melic, Falhrem, Luie, Gulibeu, Kab, Murran, Cudai, Abdamenef, Hessim; a man by diuine testimonie free of all vncleanneſſe. To him did all Kings offer their daughters in marriage, and among the rest Constantine, which he refused, and married Selma, the daughter of Zeit, and had by her Abdalmutalib, whose Light caused raine in drought. To him an Elephant portrated himselfe, and said with mans voice, Saluation be on you, and on the Light that shineth out of your Reines, Dignitie, Fame, Honor, and Victorie bee on you, and that there should proceede from him a King, greater then all the Kings of the earth: Another time, as hee slept on the stone which was placed by Abraham in his Oratorie at Mecca, hee dreamed of a chaine reaching East and West, and to Heauen, and to the Depth, which was presently conuerted into a flourishing hearb. Noe and Abraham presented themselues interpreters of this Dreame. Abdalla his sonne, the father of Mahomet, had a Tutor giuen vnto him: to defend him from his enemies, who seemed a man, but was none. Hee was preserued from the lying in waite of the Iewes, by threescore and ten Angels, which seemed Men. Hee wedded f Erminh, and therefore two hundred Women perished for his loue; some hanging, some burning themselues.

f Or Hemina Daughter of Abdemenef.

When the prescribed time was come, in the moneth Dulheia, on a Fryday-night, God bad bad Ariduvan to open the gates of Paradiſe, that the innermoſt of his ſecret might be manifeſted: for it pleaſeth mee (ſaith hee) this night to tranſport the Light of my Prophet from the reines of Abdalla into the wombe of Ermina, and that it come into the world. This being done, as Abdalla, the Iudge and Lord of the Arabians, went into the houſe of Prayer, hee perceiued a great light to lighten from his houſe vp toward Heauen, and preſently dyed. On the twelfth day of Rab, on a Tueſday, Mahomet was borne, circumciſed and all frolik. And then all Idolls fell and became blacke: All Kingdomes were deſtroyed, and not one ſtood vp-right. Lucifer was caſt into the bottome of the Sea, and in fortie dayes could not get out, and then called his fellowes, and told them, that Mahomet was borne with the power of the ſword, who would take away all their power. The ſame alſo, GOD cauſed to bee proclaimed in Heauen and Earth. His mother ſaid, that ſhe was deliuered of him without paine, and Angelicall Birds came to nouriſh the child; and a man clothed in white preſented him with three keyes, like to Pearles, which he tooke; the key of Victorie, the key of the Lawes, and the key of Prophecie. And after came three perſons with ſhining faces, preſenting him a Cauldron of Emeralds, with foure handles, which Mahomet accepted as a ſigne of his rule ouer all the world. The Birds, Clouds, Windes, Angels, contended for the nouriſhment of the childe. But the cauſe was determined by heauenly voice affirming, That hee ſhould not bee taken from the hands of men. An Aſſe, almoſt famiſhed, worſhipped him, and receiuing him on her backe, became Herald to this new Prophet, with mans voyce proclaiming the worthineſſe of her Carriage. Three men carried him vp into a Mountaine: of which, one opened him from the breaſt vnto the Nauell, and waſhed his entrailes with ſnow: the ſecond cleaued his heart in the middeſt, and took out of it a black graine, ſaying, That it was the portion of the Deuill. The third made him whole againe. Seraphin nouriſhed him three yeeres, and Gabriel nine and twentie, who gaue vnto him, in the fortieth yeere of his age, the Law, and carried him to Heauen. This his iourney is related by Frier Richard, ſometimes a ſtudient in the Vniuerſitie of Baldach, Chapter 14. and in his [t] life.

Gabriel, with threeſcore and ten paire of wings, came to Mahomet, in the chamber of Aiſſa, his beſt beloued wife, and ſaid, That GOD would haue him to viſit him where he is; and brought with him the beaſt Elmparac, or Alboraeh, of nature betweene a Mule and an Aſſe. This beaſt told Mahomet, That hee would not take him on his backe, till he had prayed to God for him. His ſteps were as farre as one could ſee, ſo that in the twinkling of an eye hee had brought Mahomet to Ieruſalem. Then Gabriel with his girdle tyed the beaſt to a Rocke, and [u] carried Mahomet on his ſhoulders into heauen: where he knocked, and the Porter opened. Here Mahomet ſaw [x] troupes of Angels, and prayed twice on his knees for them: and amongſt the reſt, old Father Adam, reioycing for ſuch a Sonne, and commending him to his prayers. Then hee brought him to the ſecond Heauen, which was a iourney of fiue hundred yeeres, and ſo forth on to the ſeauenth Heauen: Heere hee ſaw the Angelicall people, euery of which was a thouſand times greater then the World, and euery of them had threeſcore and ten thouſand heads, and euery head threeſcore and tenne thouſand mouthes, and euery mouth ſeuenteene hundred tongues, prayſing God in ſeuen hundred thouſand Languages. And he ſaw one Angell weeping, and he asked the cauſe: who anſwered, That he was Sinne. And Mahomet prayed for him. Then Gabriel commended him to another Angell, and he to another, and ſo forth in order, till he came before GOD and his Throne. Then GOD (whoſe face was couered with threeſcore and ten thouſand cloathes of light, and from whom Mahomet ſtood two ſtones caſt below) touched him with his hand, the coldneſſe whereof pierced to the marrow of his back-bone. And GOD ſaid, I haue impoſed on thee and on thy people Prayers. When hee was returned as farre as the fourth Heauen, Moſes counſelled him to returne back, to obtaine eaſe vnto the people, which could not beare ſo many praiers, which he did oftentimes, till there remained but few, thus returning to his Elmparac, he rod backe to his houſe at Mecca. All this was done in the tenth part of the night. But when he was requeſted to doe thus much in the peoples ſight, he anſwered, Prayſed be GOD, I am a Man, and an Apoſtle.

The Booke Aſcar (ſaith (Bellonius) telleth further, That in this iourney Mahomet heard a womans voice, crying Mahomet, Mahomet, but hee held his peace. Afterwards another called him, but he gaue no anſwere. Mahomet asked the Angell, who they were? He anſwered, That the one was ſhee which publiſhed the Iewes Law, and if hee had anſwered her, all his Diſciples ſhould haue beene Iewes: the other was ſhee which deliuered the Goſpell, whom if he had anſwered, all his followers had beene Chriſtians.

u La vita Mahometi ſaith, In a ſhining ladder they went vp to heauen, where the ſtars hung by golden chaines, as big as mount Notho by Medina.

x There were in the firſt heauen Angels of the ſhapes of all creatures, praying for the creatures of their ſhapes: and a Cock, whoſe feete touched one Heauen, and head the other, whoſe crowing moued the Cocks of the earth to doe ſo. In the ſecond was Noe. This heauen was of gold; the third of Pearles, wherein was Abraham, and the huge huge Angell of Death, with a booke & pen in hand, writing the times and mens liues: (which fatall opinions maketh them hardie.) The fourth was of Emerall, here was Ioſeph and the Angell of Compaſſion, weeping for the ſinnes of men. The fifth of Diamond, and in it Moſes. The ſixth of Rubie, and in it Iohn Baptiſt. The ſeuenth of fire, and in it Ieſus Chriſt. All theſe recommended themſelues to his Prayers.

The

The said Booke telleth, That GOD gaue him a fiue-fold priuiledge. First, that he should bee the highest creature in heauen or earth: Secondly, the most excellent of the sonnes of Adam: Thirdly, an vniuersall Redeemer: Fourthly, skilfull in all languages: Fifthly, that the spoiles of Warres should be giuen him. Gabriel after (saith that Booke) carryed him to Hell, to see the secrets thereof, and the seuen gates thereof, &c. where (as in the place fittest for him) wee will leaue him. The booke of the vertues of Mahomet saith, That in glorying of his strength hee would boast, that hee had knowne his eleuen wiues successiuely in one houre.

One of their Chronicles telleth of his Martiall affaires. This Chronicle reckoneth from Adam to Noe one thousand two hundred fortie and two yeeres: From thence to Abraham, one thousand and foure score: Hence to Moses fiue hundred and fifteene: After him to Dauid, fiue hundred threescore and nine: and from this time to Christ, one thousand three hundred and fiftie: from whence to Mahomet is numbred six hundred and twentie; in all fiue thousand three hundred threescore and sixteene, from Adam to Mahomet. All the Prophets were in number an hundred and twentie thousand, and the Messengers of GOD three hundred and fifteene: whereof Adam, Seth, Esdrik, Noe, Abraham, were Hebrewes; Huth, Schale, Ishmael, Schaib, Mahomet, were Arabians.

If this Historie of Mahomets life be long and tedious, I thought good, out of an Arabian Chronicle, to adde this Epitome thereof. His Mother dyed in a iourney to Mecca, when he was fourescore yeeres old, and his Nurse restored him to his Grand-father Abdalmutalif, with whom hee liued eight yeeres. The Seraphim preserued him, but was neuer seene. After that, Gabriel was his Guardian, of whom hee receiued the Law, which he kept close three yeeres, communicating it onely to some of his owne opinion, by whose helpe hee became Priest and Prince of the Arabians and Saracens, and about eighteene moneths after was carried into Heauen: and being returned into the Earth, he tooke Eubocara, Ali, and Zaid, to be his companions in this enterprise. He went to Zaif, or Atharf, and preached publikely, and thence to Mecca, ten yeeres going from place to place. And of his Conuerts, he chose some for guard of his Person, who sware the obseruance of his Law, to the number of fortie, who now with Word, now with the Sword, set forward this Doctrine. After ten yeeres, Mecca was peopled onely with beleeuers; and all Arabia was conuerted without difficultie. Then hee sent to the neighbouring Kings to become of his Religion; to the King of Persia, to the Roman Emperour, to King Cinna, to the Lord of the two Seas, to the King of Æthiopia, &c. After he returned to Ietrib, and on Tuesday, the twelfth of Rab, in the eleuenth yeere, dyed. His Sepulture was appointed by GOD, in the house of Aisca his Wife, in the chamber where hee was wont to sleepe, where at this day is a Temple of bricke. His bodie was wrapped in three white clothes, without any pompe. His seale was a siluer Ring, with this inscription, Mahomet the Messenger of God. He went twise on Pilgrimage, and nineteene times conducted an Armie.

a Nabi, a Prophet.

The place of his buriall is at Medina, surnamed of him Talnabi [a], that is, of the Prophet; not (as some write) at Mecca. Neither doth his corps hang in the ayre by force of Loadstones drawing vp his yron Coffin or Chest, but lieth buried in the ground (if any where) as Ludouicus Verttomannus, by his owne view, hath obserued. Of this place, and of Mecha, we shall speake more, in relating the Rites of the Pilgrims that visit them.

The Booke of the Policie of the Turkish Empire.

Some relate otherwise of the death of Mahomet, as that hee dyed at fortie yeeres of age, being poysoned by one of his disciples, called Albunor, to make triall of his boasting Prophesie, that he would rise againe within three daies after his death. This Albunor after comming to see him, found his bodie torne in pieces, and deuoured of dogs: whereupon gathering together the bones that remained, into a Coffin, hee caused them to bee buried. Which in my minde is not so probable as the former report. The day of his death Scaliger accounteth the tenth yeere of the Hegira, on Munday the twelfth of Rabie 1. or rather the euening before, that is, the sixteenth of Iune, in the yeere of our Lord 631. and was borne the fifth of May, An. Dom. 570. on the same day and moneth, sixtie three Arabike yeeres before.

Computation of their Hegera.

Vnto this which hath been spoken, I haue thought good to adde out of Arabike Authors, collected by Gabriel and Iohn the Maronites this which followeth. Mahomed was borne at Mecca, and in the fortieth yeere of his age, and as Ben-Casem hath, in the 933. of Alexander the Great, began to vtter his doctrine, first priuily, after that publikely; whereupon hee was banished the Citie in the fiftie two of his life, or according to Abdillatif Ben-Iusef, the fiftie three, and fled to Iathreb, from which flight, which they call Hegeraton, or Hegera, which hapned A. B. 622. or thereabouts. And although this yeere 1623. bee to them 1032. Yet, because they reckon according to the yeeres of the Moone, which they say consist of three hundred fiftie foure dayes, the Moones course hath in this space exceeded that of the Sunne, some moneths aboue thirtie one yeeres. Whereupon their moneths are vncertaine.

Note for reconciliation thereof with Christian account.

taine. In this Citie by ſubtile hypocriſies, Mahomed became Politicall and Eccleſiaſticall Prince; and beganne to procure the friendſhip of many, and to promulgate his lawes by degrees. In the ſecond yeere of his flight, he enacted his lawes of Faſting; in the third, forbade wine and ſwines-fleſh; and ſo proceeded with the reſt, that within eight yeeres, hee brought into ſubiection Mecca (whence he had beene expulſed) and Muna, and went forward with his law and conqueſt. As concerning his wiues, Ben-Caſem ſaith, he had foure: hee is alſo reported to haue many harlots and concubines: and in this Chapiter Surato-lbaqra, or de vacca, hee bids them marrie one, two, three, or foure wiues a man, and to take as many concubines as they are able to keepe. Ben-Sidi Ali ſaith, That he gloried that he had the power of ten Prophets in copulation giuen him by God: yea, he aſcribed all his villanies to God, by miniſterie of the Angell Gabriel. His firſt wife was named Chodaige, by whom he had two ſonnes, and foure daughters, Zainab, Fatema (whom Ali married) Om Kalthum the third, and Rakia the fourth (both which Abu-becr married.) His ſecond wife was Aiſce daughter of Abu-Becr the firſt Chalifa, which was but ſix yeeres old (Ben-Caſem is our Author) when Mohamed tooke her to wife: the Moſlemans call her The Mother of the faithfull: who beſides the knowledge of tongues, peruſed diligently the Arabike hiſtories, loued exceedingly, and alway praiſed Mohamed. The third was named Mary, which brought forth to Mohamed Ebrahim, ſirnamed Caſem (whence Mohamed is often called Abulcaſem) though Ben-Abdilatif will haue Ebrahim to be one, and Caſem another; but Ben-Caſem ſaith, he had but three ſons; of which Ebrahim Caſem dyed at eighteene moneths, and Taiheb and Taher his ſonnes by Codaige, dyed both in their cradles. Mohameds laſt wife was Zainab, whom alſo they call the Mother of the faithfull, before the wife of Zaid Ben-Harteh, Mohameds Maſter, who diuorced her, whereupon Mohamed gladly tooke her to wife.

Mother of the Moſlemans.

He had foure Councellors or Companions; the firſt, Abdollah, or Abu-Bacr, his ſincereſt and moſt inward friend, a man very rich, and releeuer of Mohameds neceſſities, his ſucceſſour after his death. He dyed the thirteenth yeere of the Hegira, and ſixtie three of his age, and was buried in the ſame graue with Mohamed. The ſecond was Homar the ſonne of Chattab, ſurnamed Faruq, who ſucceeded Abi-Bacr, and ruled ten yeeres and ſix moneths. Hee was the firſt which was called King of the faithfull, and writ the Annalls of the Moſlemans; and brought the Alcoran into a Volume, and cauſed the Ramadam Faſt to be obſerued. He was ſlaine the twentie three of the Hegira, and buried by Abi-Bacr. The third was Othman, who in his twelue yeeres raigne ſubdued Cyprus, Naiſabur, Maru, Sarchas, and Maritania, and dyed A. H. 35. and was buried in the buriall place of the Citie. Aali is the fourth, who is called alſo Emir Elmumenin, that is, King of the faithfull; Hee was ſlaine A. H. 40. in the ſixtie three of his age, and was buried in the Citie Kerbelai. Hee was Vncles ſonne, or Coſin-German to Mohamed, and his ſonne-in-law, and deare familiar from his youth, and receiued the Moſleman law together with Mohamed; whereupon hee was wont to ſay, I am the firſt Moſleman. And therefore the Perſians deteſt the other three Chalifas, as heretikes, burne their writings whereſoeuer they finde them, and perſecute their followers; becauſe forſooth they were ſo impudent, to prefer themſelues before Aali, and ſpoiled him of the right due by Teſtament. Hence are wars & hoſtile cruelties betwixt them & the Turks, and Arabs. Mohamed, the falſe prophet, in the eleuenth yeere after his Hegira or flight, and the ſixtie three of his age, dyed at Medina, and was buried there in the graue of Aaiſee his wife. Here is a ſtately Temple and huge, erected with elegant and munificent ſtructure, daily increaſed and adorned by the coſts of the Othomans, and gifts of other Princes. Within this building is a Chappell not perfectly ſquare, couered with a goodly roofe, vnder which is the Vrne of ſtone, called Hagiar Monaiiar, ſometimes belonging to Aaiſce aforeſaid. This is all couered with gold and ſilke, and compaſſed about with yron grates guilded. Within this, which ſhineth with gold and gems, Mohameds carcaſſe was placed, and not lifted vp by force of Load-ſtone or other Art; but that ſtone-Vrne lieth on the ground.

The Moſleman Pilgrims after their returne from Mecca, viſit this Temple, becauſe Mohamed yet liuing was wont to ſay, That hee would for him which ſhould viſit his Tombe, as well as if he had viſited him liuing, intercede with God for a life full of pleaſures. Therefore do they throng hither with great veneration kiſſe and embrace the grates (for none haue acceſſe to the Vrne of ſtone) and many for loue of this place leaue their Countrey, yea, ſome madly put out their eyes to ſee no worldly thing after, and there ſpend the reſt of their dayes. The compaſſe of Medina is two miles, and is the circuit of the wall, which Aadhd Addaule King of Baghdad built A. H. 364. CHAP. IIII.

Of the Alcoran, or Alfurcan, containing the Mahumetan Law: the ſumme and contents thereof.

§. I.

Of the Compoſition of the Alcoran.

THe Booke of Mahomets Law is called by the name of ALCORAN, which ſignifieth a collection of [a] Precepts; and Alfurcan, (as it is expreſſed and expounded in a Booke, [b] called, The Expoſition or Doctrine of the Alcoran) becauſe the ſentences and figures thereof are ſeuered and diſtinguiſhed, for Al is the Article, and phurcan ſignifieth a diſtinction, or as ſome ſay, Redemption. Claude Duret citeth an opinion that of the Hebrew word Kara, which ſignifieth the Law or Scripture, commeth this word Koran, which with the Article Al ſignifieth τὴν γραφὴν the Scripture, as with them it is eſteemed: The like hath Soranzo. Maſter Bedwel in his Arabian Trudg-man, ſaith, that the Thema is not KARANA, coniunxit, colligit, as before is deliuered; but KARA which ſignifies to read, ſo that Alkoran in Arabike, is iuſt as much as Hammikra is in Hebrew, that is, the Text, Corpus iuris, the authenticall bodie of their Law. It is called in their language the Koran, without the Article Al, and Korran (ſo Cantacuzenus τὸ βιβλίον Ἀρραζισὶ Κορρὰν ὀνομάζεται) as if one ſhould ſay, their Bible, Scripture, or Booke of the Law.

a Robertus Retinenſis.
b Harman. Dal. interprete.

The Word of GOD (ſaith Mahomet in that Booke) came not to mee all at once, as the Law vnto Moſes, the Pſalmes to Dauid, and the Goſpell to Chriſt. The Sentences or Chapters thereof are called Azoaras, which is interpreted a Face, as wee call them Capita, Heads. So ſaith one which hath written Notes vpon the Alcoran: but Maſter Bedwel (who hath publiſhed an Index or Table of all theſe Azoara's or Chapiters with their Arabike Titles, as they are named and cited by the Mahumetans) ſaith, That they call the name of the Chapiter Sura, and with their Article Aſſura, or Suraton, Aſſurato. And hee deriues of the Hebrew word Zobar that Azoara: but this Arabike Sura is expreſſed not by Zain, He, but by Sin, Wau, and Reſh, differing letters, being no other then the Syrian Surya, which ſignifieth, principium initium. For as the Bookes of Moſes in the Hebrew, and the Sections of the Ciuill and Canon Law: ſo theſe Chapiters, for the moſt part, are denominated of ſome notable word in the beginning of the ſame: and are ſo cited by Mahumetans and learned Chriſtians. Yet theſe ſometime name it by the interpretation, as the chap. Albacara, the chap. of the Cow, becauſe the word ſo ſignifies. The ſtile [c] is not in Meter, as ſome haue imagined: for Ioſephus Scaliger [d] (a great Criticke, and reputed one of the greateſt Linguiſts in the world) affirmeth, That that Language is not capable of metricall meaſures by quantities of Syllables; as neither the Hebrew, Abyſſine, or Syrian. Hee ſaith yet, That the Alcoran is compoſed in Rime, but ſuch, as is not in any tunable proportion; but that word, which maketh vp the Rime, being ſometimes neerer, and ſometimes farre beyond all harmony, diſtant from that word whereto it anſwereth. A hobbling kinde of Rime, ſaith Maſter Bedwel (in his Index Alcorani) and rude Poeme, without all care, for (it is Poſtellus his teſtimony) you ſhall haue a period of two hundred Syllables to rime, and hold like cadence to as other very ſhort. Scaliger addes, that at the end of ſuch Rimes are ſet the figures of Flowers, or ſome ſuch matter: which if it be ſo, the Turkiſh nicetie of making no likeneſſe of any thing in their Carpets, or other workes, is ſtricter then theſe Alcoran bookes themſelues, and indeed is not common with them vnto other Mahumetans, who vſe their libertie in this point.

c The ſtile of it.
d In annotationibus in Euſeb. Chron. Solum. Canticum Moſis extremo Deuteronomio, Prouerbia Salomonis, & totus fere liber ob quadã rythmi neceſſitate cohibentur, qui rythmus eſt inſtar duarum dimetriarum Iambicarum--- Sed aliquando paucierum ſunt ſyllabarum, aliquando plurium, &c.--- Nam vt in Hebraico, Syriaco, Arabico & Abyſſino idiomate vlla metri ſpecies concipi poſſit, nemo efficere poſſit, quia id natura ſermonis non patitur.

For the words and [e] phraſe; no man euer writ any thing in Arabian more rudely (ſaith an Arabian Chriſtian in confutation hereof) and much better might Muzeilenia, Heleaſi, and Alabazbi the Æthiopian, and Calliata Ellecedi, which vpon emulation compoſed alſo euery one an Alcoran, glory of thoſe their Workes, containing more honeſtie and truth. Neither hath it pleaſed any noble or wiſe man, but the rude vulgar: of which ſort the wearie Labourers gladly gaue eare to his promiſe of Paradiſe, the poore delighted to heare of Gardens in Perſia, and Bankrupts and Felons eaſily liſtened to ſecuritie and libertie. The language is vulgar, (Poſtellus alſo teſtifieth) and without all Art of Grammar, ſuch as is obſerued of their learned Writers; without all bounds of reaſon or eloquence. The Method [f] is ſo confuſed, that our Arabian Author (who liued before it was ſo generally embraced, and in freer times) saith, That hee had heard euen good Saracens affirme with griefe, that it was so mixed and heaped together, that they could finde no Reason in it. Bad Rime, as you haue heard, and worse Reason. Hierome Sauanorola [e] hath the like saying, That no man can finde herein any order: Nor could so confused and foolish a Worke proceed from any naturall or supernaturall light. It is yet craftily [f] contriued, when hee hath set downe some wicked doctrine, presently to lace and fringe it with precepts of Fasting, Prayer, or good manners: alwayes taking away things hard to bee beleeued or practised: and where it deliuereth any truth, it is maymed with defect, eclipsed with obscuritie, and serueth for a stale to falshood. Erpenius hath translated the Chapiter of Ioseph, containing a hundred and eleuen Verses; the second of which calls it Coran, and the next Alcoran, the Article added. His Annotation is Per verbum Dei intelligunt legem suam quæ Coranus ipsis dicitur, & quàm Muhamed ijs persuasit cœlitus ad se demissam. And although the matter bee absurd and impious, yet he saith (others perhaps haue of zeale said otherwise) that this Coran is composed with such puritie of speech, accurate analogie, and expressed with perfection of writing, that deseruedly it is to them the matter and rule of Grammar. They call it Koran of a word which signifies to read, as a reading Lecture, or collection of Chapiters, as the learnedst Arabs will haue it. It is not much lesse then the New Testament in words. The Arabs extoll it aboue all creatures, and ranke it next to God, and thinke him vnworthy to liue, which toucheth it vnreuerent as a contemner of God. They vse it therefore with all reuerence, nor will permit a Christian or a Iew to touch it: to sit on it is a grieuous crime capitall to Iewes or Christians. Nor may they themselues touch it vnwashed, and therefore write on the couer thereof, Let no man touch it but he which is cleane. In it are one hundred and fourteen Chapiters of vnequall quantitie (that of Ioseph the twelfth) the second as large as the last fortie. The first is but of six Verses, and therefore not reckoned a Chapiter by our Country-man Robert of Reading, who also diuides the fiue following into more by tenne, that the seuenth is his seuenteenth. Euery Chapiter hath the name of the first word, or of the subiect, as this is called Ioseph; the first, opening, because it presents it selfe at the opening of the booke. It was composed out of diuers papers of Muhamed, found at his house (which hee professed to receiue from Gabriel at diuers times) by Abubecr his father in law, the Numa of that Saracen Empire. Each Chapiter is called Souraton, and with the Article Assurato, whence the Latine call it Azoara (z. for ss.) and o. a for o. u) as in the word Alcoran: it is not to be construed vultus, but gradus, a degree or step; for these steps the whole is passed: and each of these was a lesson also to be conned of children and of his disciples. After these fancies had caused him to bee expelled Mecca, he fled ten dayes off to Iatrib, and there diuulged the rest. This is called Medina, and Medinatalnabi, the Citie of the Prophet: and hence some Chapiters haue title of Mecca, some of Medina. This flight was the fifteenth of Iuly at night, A. 622. which is their Æra or computation of their yeeres, reckoned by the Moone: so that their 1026. began the twentie ninth of December A. D. 1616. Euery Chapiter consists of Verses very vnequall and lame affected rithmes. Yea, sometimes a sentence is patched in, to make vp a rithme. Before euery Chapiter is prefixed Bismillahirrahmanirrahimi, for so they read it coined together with Articles, as if it were all one word: the signification is, In nomine Dei miseratoris misericordis, that is, In the name of God shewing mercie, mercifull, which is as much as summè misericordis, exceedingly mercifull (or mercifull in Act and Nature.) To these words they ascribe innumerable mysteries and vertues; so that they thinke that almost no worke can haue good successe, vnlesse they preface it with this sentence. Therefore in the beginning of their bookes they vse it, and whatsoeuer businesse they goe about (if it be to mount their horse, or set forth to rowe a boat, &c. as I haue beene told.) Also there are in the beginning of Chapiters, fourteene mysticall words of the signification, whereof the Arabs professe their vncertaintie, and Abubecr was wont to say, That in euery booke God kept somewhat secret to himselfe, which in the Alcoran were those mysticall beginnings of Chapiters. Diuers haue diuersly deuised to hunt out Cabalisticall senses and state-periods, with other vanities from them. They hold that all the Alcoran was sent in one night, which they call therefore, nox demissionis & nox potentiæ, and lest it might breed a contradiction that some parts were deliuered at Mecca (for so it must be written, not Mecha) they say, that Muhamed receiued them by pieces of the Angell, as occasions required; but hee from God all in one night: and so they will haue the name signifie also a booke sent from heauen. Thus much Erpenius in his Annotations on that Chapiter, wherein also he blameth the old translation of Robert Reading, as in other things, so in that, that when his mistresse brought Ioseph before other women, they were all (saith the translation) menstruous, and cut their hands, saying, hee was rather an Angel then a man. He translates for menstruate sunt, magnificarunt eum, they magnified him; adding concerning that cutting off the hand, that it is still an vse of the Arabs, Persians, and people of the East to expresse loue. My friend Mr. Bedwel fortie yeeres studious of Arabike, hath hath told mee that that translation of Reading is generally reasonable well done; nor is so faultie as some will haue it, or much reading supply that way. As for other supply, it needs a sword (like that Gordian knot) rather then a penne, that (as by the sword it hath beene obtruded on the world, as a iust punishment of ingratitude to the Sonne of God the eternall Truth; and not by reasons or Scriptures, which it corrupts, mingles, mangles, maimes, as the Impostors obliuion sometimes, sometimes the memorie of his owne designes occasioned, so) by the sword and fire it may be rooted out of the world againe. The first Surat or Chapiter, which is the Pater noster or daily prayer of the Muhamedans, I will transcribe out of Erpenius, called by them, Opening, as before is said, and the Mother of the booke, foundation, treasure, and perfection. In the name of God, the shower of mercie, mercifull. Praise to God the Lord of the Creatures, the shewer of mercie, mercifull; the King of the day of Iudgement. Wee worship thee, and we call vpon thee. Direct vs into the right way, the way of them who are gracious towards them, without anger against them, and not them which erring not, Amen. The Copies of [d] the Alcaron were diuers; and after Mahomets death made (if it could be) worse, at least otherwise, then he left them. For Hali had one Copie left him by Mahomet, which the Iewes corrupted, adding, racing, changing at their pleasure, and promised him their assistance, if hee would professe himselfe a Prophet. But Ozimen commanded all the Bookes to be brought and deliuered into the hands of Zeidi and Abdalla, to bring all into one booke, and, where they dissented, to reade after the Copie of Corais, and to burne all the rest.

d The agreement of Copies.

They thus composed the Alcoran, whereof they left foure Copies, which after were lost. And yet Hali, Abitalib, and Ibenmuzod then refused to deliuer their Bookes: Whereupon arose diuers Readings, and afterward diuers Schismes; which to compound, others often endeuoured by like labours after, but could not throughly perfect the same. Neither doth that which we haue translated, agree with those things which Frier Richard, and others cite out of it, in their confutations thereof.

The [e] truth thereof is such in his deuisings of new, and seeking and altering the old, that it is not probable in Viues opinion, that euer hee read the Old and New Testament: For (saith [f] he) though I thinke of him exceeding badly, yet thinke I him not so mad to change and wrest the Scripture, there especially, where it made nothing against him; but he had partly heard of such things, partly was so perswaded by his fellowes, Apostata-Iewes and Christians. This riming, harsh, confused, packing worke, disagreeing each Copie from other, and all from truth and honestie, hath beene [g] translated into Latine [h] once by an English man, Robertus Retinensis; and after by Ioannes Segobiensis, a Spaniard, at the Councell of Constance; and after out of Arabian into Italian, published by Andræa Ariuabene. The first and last of these, (that of Robert of Reading, and the Italian) translations are here by vs followed. For the Arabike I vnderstand not, nor can warrant this, when so great a man as Scaliger findeth great fault with it: He that vndertooke to mend the Latine stile, marred the sense; and the Italian beguileth the world, in professing to haue translated out of the Arabike. Thus Scaliger, who mentioneth another translation then in hand, which we are almost out of hope to see. In the meane while, such as we haue, we giue to you.

h Anno 1143. Moued by Pet. Cluniacensis, whose Epistle thereof to S. Bern. is extant.

It containeth Chapters, or Azoara's 124. euery of them beginning, In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. Euthymius Zigabenus mentioneth but 113. Mr. Bedwel saith, that all the Arabike copies which euer hee saw, whether written in the East, or West amongst the Moores in Barbarie, doe constantly with one consent reckon 114. The reason of this difference is this, some Interpreters doe not account the first for any Chapiter, but make it a kinde of Preface. Robert of Reading of the second Chapter maketh foure, of the third three, of the fourth foure, of the fifth two, of the sixth three. The first [i] of these are the words of Mahomet, and is called the Mother of the Booke, and is as it were their Creede: the rest are all deliuered as the words of GOD; hee being induced as speaker. The first is in this sense. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. Thankes bee vnto God, the Lord of the World, mercifull, pittifull, Iudge of the day of Iudgement. Wee pray vnto thee: wee trust in thee. Lead vs into the right way, the way of them whom thou hast chosen, not of them with whom thou art angrie, and of the Infidels. Postellus [k] thus translateth it. In the name of God, mercifull, pittifull. Praise bee to God, King of the World, mercifull, and pittifull; King of the day of Iudgemint; O let vs serue him, and wee shall bee helped; Direct vs in the right point; the point of them with whom thou art well pleased; without anger against them; and they shall not erre. This prayer is (saith hee) as common to them as the Lords Prayer to vs: and is so ouer and ouer with battologies by some of them repeated, that they will say ouer the same word, or two, or three words an hundred times, saying, Alhamdu lillah, hamdu lillah, hamdu lillah, and so on with these, and the other words in like manner. And thus doth the Priest in their publike prayers; which (they say) supplieth the defects of such as are negligent in praying: some will say, and repeat it in the fields, till with wearinesse they fall downe.

i In the Italian are 124. chapt. besides this first: and the Easterne Saracens reckon it but one Azoara to the fifth. Bellon. l. 3. diuided it into foure bookes and 201. chap.

The Doctrine of the ALCORAN brought into common Places.

OF * GOD he [a] writeth, that he is One, neceſſary to all, incorporeall, which neither hath begotten, nor is begotten, nor hath any like him: the Creator, long-ſuffering, ſearcher of the heart, true. That he will confound inchantments, that without his gift, none can beleeue (this his Alcoran) that hee hath no ſonne, for hee needeth nothing [b], and he which ſetteth a ſecond in the place of GOD, ſhall goe into hell, Az. 31. and he hath no partaker, 32. yet in Azoar. 67. hee induceth God, ſpeaking thus: To Chriſt the ſonne of Marie, wee haue giuen the Goſpell, that by him men may obtaine the loue and fauour of GOD: and that the beleeuers amongſt them (Chriſtians) ſhall receiue a great reward: as alſo in Az. 2. he ſaith, Euery one whoſoeuer liueth rightly, be he Iew or Chriſtian, or if he leaueth his owne Law, and embrace another, if hee worſhip GOD, and doe good, ſhall vndoubtedly obtaine Diuine fauour. Az. 2. The Creator ſaid, I am the onely Creator, alwayes the ſame, pittifull, mercifull, beſides whom there is none other; whoſe miracles and great workes are vnto the wiſe the frame of Heauen and Earth, the intercourſe of night and day, the ſhips in the Sea fit for the vſe of men, raine for the refreſhing of the earth, the compoſition of all creatures, the windes, the cloudes, &c. 15. Inuoke and worſhip one GOD alone. 43. All the miracles of GOD cannot bee written, if all the Trees in the world were pennes, and the Sea ſeuen times greater, and were inke; with whom it is a ſmall thing to raiſe the dead.

* Of God and Chriſt.

b Azo. 20.

OF THE BIRTH OF CHRIST hee writeth thus, Azo. 29. Wee ſent our Spirit to Marie (the beſt of all women, and the wombe vntouched, Azoar. 31.) in likeneſſe of a man, profeſſing himſelfe a Diuine Meſſenger concerning a Sonne, &c. And when ſhee in trauell plained, Chriſt came from vnder her, and ſaid, Feare not: and when ſome chid with her about the childe, the childe it ſelfe made anſwere, I am the Seruant and Prophet of God. Hee ſaith, the Iewes did not ſlay Chriſt, but one like him: Azo. 11. and vpbraideth them for not receiuing him, Azo. 2. and chap. 4. To Chriſt the Sonne of Marie, properly communicating our owne ſoule, wee haue giuen him ſtrength and power more then other Prophets: yet chap. 13. he diſclaimeth that worſhip which is done him and his mother.

Of Chriſt.

Az. 4. Wee giuing our ſoule to Chriſt, the Sonne of Marie, preferred him before all others, that had beene exalted by me, to ſpeake with GOD, to power and vertue. He inſerteth the Prayer of the Virgins Mother, when ſhee felt her ſelfe with childe by Ioachim; and maketh Zacharie to bee the Virgins Tutor. 5. Who (hee ſaith) for his vnbeliefe was dumbe three dayes. The Angell ſaluted Marie, ſaying, O thou the pureſt of all women and men, deuoted to GOD. Ioy vnto thee of that great Meſſenger, with the Word of GOD, whoſe name is IESVS CHRIST, an excellent man, at the command of the Creator: he ſhal come with Diuine power, with knowledge of all learning, with the Booke of the Law and Goſpell; ſhall giue Commandements to the Iſraelites; ſhall giue life; cure diſeaſes; ſhew what is to be eaten, and to be done; ſhall confirme the Old Teſtament; ſhall make ſome things lawfull, which before were vnlawfull, &c. Hee acknowledgeth that his Mother knew not man. 11. They ſay (the Iewes) that they killed Chriſt, the Sonne of Marie, the Meſſenger of GOD, but it was not true, but they crucified in his ſtead another like him; for the incomprehenſible GOD cauſed him to goe vnto Him. IESVS is the Spirit, and Word, and Meſſenger of GOD, ſent from heauen. 11. And GOD ſpake to him (Az. 13.) and gaue him a cleane and bleſſed ſoule, whereby he made yellow formes of birds, and breathing on them, made them flie. Hee cured one borne blinde, and the leprous, and raiſed the dead. GOD taught him the Booke and Wiſdome, and the Goſpell and Teſtament.

c Of his law, and the followers therof.

Concerning c his LAVV and ALCORAN, he handleth it in the second Chapter of Azoara, which beginneth thus. In the name of the mercifull and pittifull God. This booke without any falshood or errour, shewing the Truth (to them which loue, feare, and worship GOD, and are studious of prayers and almes) and the obseruation of the lawes giuen of GOD from heauen to thee and other thy Predecessors, and the hope of the world to come, hath manifested the true Sect. For this bringeth the followers thereof to the highest, inricheth them with the highest good, as to the vnbeleeuers and erroneous, it menaceth truely the greatest euill to come. This hee after applieth to Paradise and Hell, which is due to the Enemies of Gabriel, which intimateth this Booke to his heart by the Creator, and to all the Enemies of GOD and Michael, and the Archangels. This his Alcoran hee calleth the establishing of the Law of the Israelites: and Azo. 21. hee arrogateth to his Booke, wisdome and eloquence: and 47. hee saith, d it was composed of the incomprehensible and wise GOD, euery where agreeing with it selfe, and calleth it (63.) the Booke of Abraham: and (69.) if it should be placed on a Mountaine, that Mountaine for Diuine feare would be dissolued. Those which will not be conuerted, take and slay, by all meanes intrapping them: and fight against them till they be your Tributaries and Subiects. And 18. the fifth part of all the prey is due vnto GOD, and his Prophet, and to your Kindred and Orphans, and the poore. Those that are taken in Warre, kill or make slaues; but pardon them if they will turne to your Law, and GOD also will pardon them. Such good Warriours shall haue full pardon. The Iewes and Christians (contrarie to that he had said before) let GOD confound. He hath sent his Messenger with the right way and good law, that he may manifest and extoll it aboue all lawes. Of the twelue moneths, foure are to be consecrated to fight against the enemies. Those that refuse this war-fare, lose their soules, and they which flie in the day of battell (Az. 6.) doe it by the Deuils instigation, thus punishing them for their former sinnes: Yea, the Deuils themselues Az. 56. being conuerted thereby, say to their Diobolicall Nation, We haue heard a Booke sent after Moses, which approoueth all his sayings, and teacheth the true and right way. And Az. 12. he calls the Alcoran a Booke of truth sent from aboue, a Confirmer of Christs Precepts: Hee saith, Az. 15. That Moses deliuered some things in writing, more vnwritten. He makes his Booke to bee the same which GOD had taught Abraham, Ismael, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, and CHRIST. Az. 5. he saith, his booke containes some things firme, and without exception, some things contrarie, which froward men peruert to controuersies: but the exposition thereof belongs to GOD onely, and to the wisest which beleeue that all of it came from God. Az. 6. he excites them to defend it when hee shall be dead or slaine, and God will reward them. Neither can any die, but by the will of God, to wit, in the time appointed. They which in the expedition shall haue pardon, which is better then all possessions, and an easie iudgement. And they which die in the wayes of God, are not to bee esteemed dead, for they liue with GOD. That life is firme, this and all worldly things mutable. 7. If the Alcoran (Az. 9.) were not of God, it would haue many contrarieties in it, which himselfe yet Az. 5. confesseth. They which are well (Az. 10.) and remaine at home, are not of like merit, as they which goe to warre. The fire of hell is hotter then the danger of warre. And although thou (Prophet) shouldest pardon the resisters of God and his Messenger seuentie times, yet God will neuer pardon them. The sicke and weake, and such as haue not necessaries, are excused from this necessitie of warre: but to the good Warriours God giueth Paradise, in reward of their soules and goods, whether they kill or be killed. Azo. 18. 19. And in 57. Kill the vnbeleeuers whom you conquer, till you haue made great slaughter. God could take vengeance on them, but hee chuseth rather to doe it by you: he shall lay deafenesse and blindnesse on the faint-hearted. Yet in 52. and 98. as contrary to himselfe hee affirmeth, that hee is sent onely to teach, not to compell and force men to beleeue: and Az. 4. Offer no man violence for the law; then the right way and the euill are opened: except wee expound it rather, that Iewes, Christians, and all vnbeleeuers, are compelled to bee tributaries and their slaues; not forced to their Religion, but instructed onely; which agreeth with their practise. From this Doctrine and that of Destinie in the 50. Az. hath risen their forwardnesse to the warre, and the greatnesse of their Conquests. Agreeable to this doctrine is their manner of teaching it: the Reader or Preacher (as saith Frier Richard, Student amongst them in the Vniuersitie of Baldach) holdeth a bare sword in his hand, or setteth it vp in an eminent place, to the terrour of the gaine-sayers.

d Azoara. 47.

e Mahomet disclaimeth diuine miracles, and humane Disputations, prouing with the sword.

But Disputation e and reasoning about his Law, hee vtterly disliketh, Az. 32. To such as will dispute with thee, answer that God knoweth all thy doings, which in the last day shall determine all controuersies. And 50. Nothing but euill cleaueth to the heart of such as vnwisely dispute of diuine Precepts: but commend thou thy selfe vnto God, that knoweth all things.

things. And Chap. 4. 15. Hee is commanded to goe away from such. This Booke is giuen to take way discord from men: miracles he disclaimeth as insufficient proofe: for though it should make plaine the mountaines, and make the dead to speake, yet they would be incredulous: But it is thy dutie onely to shew them my Precepts, Az. 23. And Az. 10. Yee which are good, beleeue in GOD, in his Messenger, and in the Booke sent from Heauen. They which first beleeue, and after deny, and become incredulous, shall haue no pardon nor mercy of GOD, but shall goe into the fire. And (11.) We will bring infinite euill vpon him, that will not obey GOD and his Messenger, and will be Disputing. To them which [f] demand that the Booke may raine vpon them from Heauen, thou shalt say, That some asked a greater thing of Moses, that he would shew GOD vnto their eyes, and were therefore smitten with lightning from Heauen. (12.) To Iewes and Christians, GOD hath giuen disagreements, till GOD shall determine the same at the day of Iudgement. Make not your selues Companions of them which deride our Law. No man receiueth the perfection of the Law, but he which beleeueth the Testament, the Gospell, and this Booke sent of GOD. 14. They which erre will say, Let GOD shew vs miracles. These hurt none but their owne soules, for if they should see all [g] miracles done, they would dispute with thee, saying, That they could not be done but by inchantments. Thou shalt not come to them with manifest miracles; for they would refuse them, as odious things. 15. Dispute not with them which will not heare; and if they demand miracles, say, GOD only doth them: I know not the secrets of GOD, and follow nothing but that which GOD and the Angell hath commanded; and if Angels should speake to such, they would not beleeue. 16. GOD himselfe and his blessed Spirit haue compounded this most true Booke. 26. 44. They which say his Law is new or fained, go to the Deuil. 47. He inducеth some gaine-sayers, saying, We will not leaue worshipping our Images for this Iester and Rimer. Yet is he alone come with the truth, confirming all the other Messengers. 55. He saith, I (GOD) writ this Booke with my owne hand. 56. The vnbeleeuers say I am a Magician, and haue fained it: but then I pray GOD I may haue no part in him when he shall be our Iudge. Say not there are three GODS, but one GOD alone without a Sonne, to him all things are subiect. Christ cannot deny but that he is subiect to GOD, as well as the Angels. 12. We sent Christ, to whom we gaue the Gospell, which is the light and confirmation of the Testament, and the right way to him which feareth GOD; The complement of the Iewish law. Therefore let euery seruant of the Gospel follow his precepts, otherwise he shall be a bad man. No religion or law attaines to perfection, but such as obey the precepts of the Testament and the Gospel, and this Booke (the Alcoran) sent from GOD. To beleeuing Iewes and Christians he promiseth pardon: but Az. 13. preferres the Christians to the Iewes. All that say that Christ is GOD, are vnbeleeuers and lyers (Christ himselfe hauing said, Yee children of Israel beleeue in your GOD and my Lord) of whom he which will be partaker, shall be cast into the fire eternall. Christ is but the Messenger of GOD, before whom were many Messengers: and his Mother was true, and they did eat. Good people exalt not your selues in your Law, further then the truth. 3. The soule of Christ was cleane and blessed, he cured the leprous, raised the dead, taught wisedome, the Testament, and the Gospell. The vnbeleeuing Israelites beleeued that he was a Magician. And 34. We haue giuen a good place and abounding with water to the Sonne of Marie, and to her, for hauing done such miracles in the world.

Of the [h] Creation he affirmeth (Az. 2.) that when GOD had made the world, he disposed the seuen Heauens: he told the Angels he would make one like vnto himselfe in the earth: they answer, We in all things are subiect to your Maiestie, and giue praise vnto you: but he will be wicked, and a shedder of blood. Then GOD testifying, that he knew a thing not knowne to the Angels, taught Adam the names of things by himselfe, not knowne to the Angels [i], and therefore commanded the Angels to doe reuerence before Adam, which wicked [k] Belzebub refused; they obeyed. And Az. 25. We made man of clay, and I breathed into him a portion of mine owne soule, after that I had created the Deuill of pestiferous fire: and because Belzebub refused to humble himselfe to this man (made of blacke mire) he was damned, and when he desired respite till the resurrection, it was denied: and therefore he said he would teach all euill things, that they shall not giue thee thankes, &c. Of the Angels he affirmeth (45.) that some of them haue two wings, some three, some foure: and (52.) the Heauen would fall vpon men, were it not for the Angels that call vpon GOD.

OF [l] PARADISE he dreameth in this sort. Az. 5. and 65. He which feareth GOD, shall receiue the two Paradises full of all good, pleasant with streaming fountaines. There they shall possesse rings of Gold, Chaines, Iewels, clothed with Cloth of Gold; their beds shall be of Gold, and this for euer. There they shall lie on silken and purple Carpets, and shall be accompanied with many Maidens, beautifull as the Hyacinth and Pearles, neuer deflowred of men or Deuils, neuer menstruous, sitting in pleasant shades with their eyes fixed on their husbands: their eyes large, with the white of them exceeding white, and the blacke very blacke, lying on the shining greene. Faire young men shall serue them with Vials and other Vessels, full of the most excellent liquor, which shall neither cause head-ach nor drunkennesse, and shall bring them the choisest fruits, and flesh of fowles. They shall there heare no filthy or displeasing word: and (Az. 86.) In Paradise shall be administred to them in well-wrought vessells of glasse and siluer, drink, as the sauourie Ginger, out of the fountaine Zelzebil: they shall haue garments of silke and gold, chaines of siluer, blessed Wine, Maidens likewise with pretty brests: there shall be tall trees of colour betweene yellow and greene. They shall haue in Paradise all pleasures, and shall enioy women with eyes faire, and as great as Egges: sweet smelling Riuers of Milke and Honie, and fruits of all sorts. Az. 6. He saith, Paradise is of as great capacitie as Heauen and Earth.

l Of Hell. OF HELL l hee fableth that it hath seuen gates; that it shall make the wicked like to fleas, that they shall be fed with the tree Ezecum, which shall burne in their bellies like fire; that they shall drinke fire; and being holden in chaines of seuentie cubits, shall be kept sure; the fire shall cast forth embers like Towers or Camels. They which contradict, shall bee punished with the fire of hell: they which feare, shall goe into Paradise; and as it were in a n Of the Prophet Mahomet. He n sometimes excuseth his owne baseneſſe, as Azo. 17. where he saith he could nor write nor read, adding that his name and mention is in the Testament, and Gospel, and 36. The vnbeleeuers (saith he) murmure that he is followed onely of Weauers, and the raskall-rout. And 53. That the Alcoran was not committed to a man of great possessions: and they say, that it is Art-magike, and that I haue fained it. And in 64. The Moone was diuided, and they say, it is Sorcerie. (The tale is told by Frier Richard thus: Mahomet pointed to the Moone with his thumbe, and middle finger, and it was diuided, the two pieces falling on the Hils of Mecha, which entring into Mahomets coat, was made whole againe.) Hee

o Mahomet guiltie of his witchcraft, often speaketh of it: that he may not bee thought such a one. o sometimes extolleth himselfe, blasphemously inducing Christ, thus saying to the Israelites; O yee Israelites, I being sent a Messenger vnto you from GOD, affirme by the Testament which I haue in my hand, that a Messenger shall come after me, whose name is Mahomet, of whom they shall say he is a Magitian. 71. His beastly prerogatiue he boasteth (43.) saying, he is the seale & last of the Prophets. To Thee, O Prophet, we make it lawfull to lie with all women which are giuen thee, or which thou buyest, and thy Aunts, thy Kindred, and all good women which freely desire thy company, if thou be willing: and this is permitted to thee alone. Diuorce these, couple thy selfe to those at thy pleasure. And being by some other of his wiues found in bed with Marie the wife of a Iacobite Christian, hee sware that he would neuer after vse her company: but after being impotent in his lusts, hee ordaines a Law to himselfe, Az. 76. Why doest thou, O Prophet, make that lawfull for the loue of thy woman, which GOD hath made vnlawfull? GOD full of pittie, and giuer of pardon, hath commanded thee to blot out, or cancell thine oathes.

Of his iourney to Heauen, to receiue the Law, he speaketh. Az. 63. and 82. mingling iniunctions of deuotion. 83. Thou, O Prophet, rising in the night, spend halfe the night, or a little more or lesse, in watching, and continually and deuoutly reade ouer the Alcoran: bee thou iust, patient, and refuse not to wash thy garments, O thou man cloathed in woollen. 43. Let none enter into the house of the Prophet, before hee call; but let him stand without the gate: let none doe dishonestie within his house, let none hurt the Prophet in any thing, or haue his wife after him.

p Of the Prophets in Scripture. Some p Prophets hee mentioneth, not named in Sripture; and of those there named hee telleth many fables. Ismael was a true Prophet, and found a good man before GOD. Ioseph nine yeeres imprisoned for the Queene. Abraham ouerthrew his Fathers Idols, and should haue beene burned for the same; but the fire lost his force. The Mountaines and Birds that praise GOD, were subiect to Dauid. q Salomon learned Magick of Arot and Marot, Diuels so called: hee knew the language of Birds: and when hee was in the middest of his Armie, consisting of Deuils, Men, and Birds; the Lapwing brought him newes of the Queene of Saba's comming, to whom by this Lapwing hee sent a Letter, &c. Of this Armie the Ants of Pismires being afraide; one Ant perswaded her fellowes to get them into their holes, least they should bee troden on. Moses married Pharaohs Daughter. (37.) One Ascemel made the golden Calfe in the Desart against Aarons will. Pharach requested Homen to build a Tower, whereon to climbe to heauen, to the GOD of Moses: (50.) In the time of Noe they worshipped Idols, whom hee nameth Huden, Schuan, Iaguta, Iamea, Nacem.

q Such tales as these of Abraham, Salomon, &c. you shall finde both in the Iewish and Popish Legends, as if the Iew, Papist, & Mahumetan, had contended for the wherstone: which any one that readeth shall finde.

The

The Prophet Huth was sent to the Nation Haath, to teach them the worship of one GOD: and Schale to Themuth; and Schaibe to Madian; and Abraham and Lot to the Sodomites; on whom, becauſe they were incredulous, it rained yellow and ſharpe ſtones. In diuers places of the Alcoran, the better to colour his filthineſſe, hee hath diſperſed good SENTENCES, like Roſes ſcattered on a dung-hil, and flowers in a puddle: concerning Almes, Prayer, Tithing, Iuſtice, &c. Others he hath of another ſort, eſtabliſhing his owne Tyrannie and Religion. Az. 26. In the 3. 8, and 9. Az. Hee permitteth all licenciouſneſſe with all women which they haue of their owne: but preſcribeth waſhings after Venery, and after naturall eaſements. Loue not your enemies: the women of another faith proue firſt: and if they fauour the vnbeleeuers, diuorce them. 52. The women muſt couer their faces. 43. Wilfull murther is prohibited. Az. 10. Ridiculous is the confirmation of this holy Law, by such variety of OATHES, as I am almost afraide to mention, in regard of our Gull-gallants of these times, who would sometimes bee at a set in their braue and brauing phrases, if they should not haue variety of Oathes and curses, to daube vp with such interiections all imperfections of speech, and make smoother way for their current of their gallantrie. But yet euen for their sakes, let vs mention a few, that they may see Mahomet had as braue a humor this way as they. He inducteth GOD swearing by lesse then himselfe, as by the order of Angels, by the Alcoran, by the blowing Windes, by the waterie Cloudes, by the sayling Ships, by the Mount Sinai, the Heauen, the Sea, the euening Sarre, the West, his Pen and Lines, the guiltie Soule, the Deuils, by the Morning, ten Nights, the Passeouer, by the Figges and Oliues, by the Dawning, and Twilight, and a World more of the like: onely he saith (Azoara 100.) that he may not sweare by the earth, nor by the Sonne like to the Father. Yet he allowes not others to sweare or forsweare: as after you shall see.

Inheritances and Iust dealing. Az. 8. They which eate the inheritance of Orphans, euerlasting fire shall eate them. Be faithfull in keeping and deliuering their goods, for GOD taketh knowledge of all accounts. Let one Sonne haue as much as two Daughters. In barganing vse no lying, slaying your owne soule. The couetous shall haue endlesse punishment: he that killeth vnwillingly, shall giue to the Kindred of the partie slaine, another man, or if he cannot doe that, let him fast two monethes together: he which killeth wilfully shall be cast into the fire. Az. 70. It is no sinne to reuenge iniuries.

Courtesie. Salute him which saluteth thee, for saluation is much pleasing to GOD.

Mortall Sentences. Sententias loquitur Carnifex. Az. 27. Worship one GOD alone. Honour thy Father and Mother, and doe them good. Giue them no bad word when they are old. Be subiect with all humility, and pray GOD to pardon them. Giue to the poore and to your kindred, but not superfluously: for they that doe superfluously are of Kinne to the Deuil. Slay not your children for no cause. Bee yee not Fornicators; for that is wickednesse, and a bad way. Be reuenged on Murtherers. Say nothing till yee know it; for you must giue account of your saying. 26. In disputing or reasoning vse onely good words. Answere in honest sort to him which asketh thee. 27. Be iust in weight and measure. 37. The Deuill standeth ouer the makers of songs and lies, that is, the Poets, if they amend not, doing good. 68. If you cannot giue, be daily in prayers. Pay your tithes, following GOD and the Prophet. They which do not good but for vaine glory and ostentation, shall bee damned. 118. The Histories which are in the Old Testament are so cited by him, as if hee neuer had read them, so many dreames and lies are inserted.

Washings and Prayer. Az. 12. Before PRAIER WASH the face, the hands, the armes vp to the elbow, the feete vp to the ankles; and after carnall company wash in the Bath: and if water cannot bee had, with dust of cleane earth. GOD desireth cleannesse. 9. In prayer let them be sober, that they may know what they say. 2. GOD will not aske why men pray not toward the East, for the East and West is his; but will demand of the workes which they haue done, of their Almes, Pilgrimages, and Prayers. He commandeth that they be humble in prayer, and that in prayer they turne towards Mecca. Euery one which shall pray, asking that which is good, which way soeuer hee shall turne him, shall be heard of GOD: although the true manner of praying be toward the Center of the Temple of Mecca. They which are good, make their prayers to helpe them by their patience and abstinence. GOD dwelleth in such men. Pray according to the vsuall custome in all places, the foot-man on foote, the horseman on his horse.

Almes. Az. 3. He that giueth his owne for Gods sake, is like a graine that hath seuen eares, euery of which containeth an hundred graines. Good men loose not your Almes by vaine glorie. 4. Giue almes of the good gaines of your money, and of that which the earth produceth; but GOD respecteth not gifts of that which is vniustly gotten. Satan perswaded you to giue nothing for feare of pouertie. To giue almes publikely is good, but to giue priuately is better: and this blotteth our sinnes. Giue especially to those which stay in one place, and are ashamed to aske. 6. GOD will giue Paradise to them which in time of famine and scarcetie giue liberally, and which receiue iniuries, and repent of their sinnes.

Az. 2. Euery one which draweth nigh to death, let him leaue of his money to his family and kindred to distribute in almes, and they which shall change that vse, shall be iudged of the Creator, &c.

Az. 2. They which are intreated to beleeue the Diuine Precepts, say, they will follow their Ancestors in their Sect. What, would yee follow your Fathers if they were blinde or deafe? Will yee be like them in being mute, blinde, and foolish? Traditions.

Az. 2. O good men, EATE that good which he hath giuen you, and giue him thanks; aboue all other things calling vpon him. Abstaine from that which dieth of it selfe, from Swines flesh, from bloud, and from euery other creatur that is killed, and not in the name of the Creator. But in case of necessity it is not sinne; for GOD is mercifull, and will forgiue you this. 12. Eate not of that which is drowned, burned in the fire, and touched of the Wolfe. 16. Eate nothing which hath not before beene blessed. To the Iewes we made many things vnlawfull, because of their wickednesse. 2. Hee which shall contradict this Booke, shall continually bee consumed in vnquenchable fire, and none of his workes shall helpe him. Meates. vncleane.

Az. 3. To them that doubt of WINE, of Cheese, Scailes, and of Tables, thou shalt say that such sports, and such drinkes are a great sinne, and although they be pleasant or profitable, yet are they hurtfull sinnes: if they say what shall we then doe, thou shalt say, the good things of GOD Perswade them to seeke the Orphanes, and succour them as their Brethren, or else GOD will make them so poore, that they shall not bee able to helpe either themselues or others. 13. Wine, Cheese, and Tables, are not lawfull, but the Deuils inuentions, to make debate amongst men, and to keepe them from doing good. Let none goeon hunting in the Pilgrimage moneth. Drinkes and Games.

Az. 3. Take not a WIFE of another Law, nor giue your daughters to men of another Law, except they before conuert to your Law. Let no man touch a woman in her disease, before she be well clensed. Vse your wiues, and the woman which are subiect to you, where, and how you please. Women which are diuorced, may not marrie till after foure moneths, hauing had three times their menstruous purgation. Let them not deny their husbands their company at their pleasure. They are the heads of the women. After a third diuorce from one man, they may not marrie the same man againe, except they haue in the meane time beene married to another, and be of him diuorced. Let the woman nurse their children two yeeres, receiuing necessaries of the fathers. After buriall of a husband, let them stay vnmarried foure moneths and ten daies; and not goe out of the house in a yeere after. Take yee two, three, foure wiues, and finally, as many as in your minde you are content to maintaine and keepe in peace. It is vnlawfull to marry with the Mother, Daughter, Sister, Aunt, Neece, Nurse, or the Mother or Daughter of the Nurse; and take not a whore to wife. 9. Let the wiues keepe their husbands secrets, or else let them be chastised, and kept in house and bed, till they be better. 10. Let the husband seeke to liue peaceably with his wife. 31. Cast not thine eyes on other mens wiues, though they be faire. A woman conuicted of adulterie by testimonie of foure women, must be kept in her house till shee die and let none come at her. Az. 8. If you loue not your wiues you may change them: but take away nothing of that which is giuen them. Women, Marriage, Diuorce.

Az. 3. Sweare not in all your affaires by GOD and his names. They which forsweare themselues shall haue no good thing in the world to come. And 35. Sweare not rashly, for GOD seeth euery thing. They which sweare from their hearts are bound thereto before GOD; and not else. To redeeme such an oath, they must feede or cloath ten poore men, or fast three daies. Az. 13. Swearing.

Az. 4. Offer violence to no man in respect of the Law, for the way of doing good and euill is open. 4. GOD gaue first the Testament, then the Gospell, and lastly the true Booke, the Alfurcan of the Law, in confirmation of those former. Forcing to beleeue.

Az. 4. They which liue of VSVRIE shall not rise againe otherwise then the Deuils: they embrace that which GOD hath said is vnlawfull: but they say vsurie is as Merchandize. Ye which are good feare GOD, and forsake Vsurie, lest the anger of GOD, and of the Prophet assaile you. Take onely the principall; and if he cannot pay you, stay still he can, and giue him almes; for this shall be better for you. And Az. 6. Euery one which feareth GOD, must very much beware of this vice, fearing the fire prepared for vnbeleeuers. And Az. 11. ascribeth the miseries of the Iewes to their wickednes and vsuries. Vsurie.

Friendſhip. Az. 5. Let no man reckon him a good friend, which is an vnbeleeuer, except it be for feare. If betwixt you there grow diſcord, laying aſide all ſtomacke, doe the will of GOD, and become Brethren together, imitating GOD, who hath deliuered you from the fire, and from dangers. 6. GOD would not that any ſhould doe euill to thoſe of his owne Nation, and thoſe which conſent to your Law, but rather their profit and commoditie.

Infidels. Az. 6. Thinke not that euer Paradiſe ſhall be open vnto you, if you be not firſt valiant and couragious in battaile: and before you enter into battaile prepare your ſelues for death: and after the death of the Prophet Mahomet, defend the orders by him giuen with Armes. No man can die, but when GOD will, that is, when his time is come. Thoſe which flee out of the warre, are prouoked of the Deuill; but GOD pardoneth them which repent. They which die in the way of GOD, are not truely called dead: They liue with GOD. Let none feare them which are gouerned of the Deuill. 7. Be patient, and you ſhall haue eternall life. 10. Accompanie not with vnbeleeuers, neither in friendſhip, nor other buſineſſe. They which goe on warfare for GOD and the Prophet, ſhall receiue abundance in the Earth, and after death the mercie of GOD. They which refuſe (except they be ſicke or children) ſhall be caſt into Hell. Neglect not prayers in your expeditions. Some may pray, whiles other ſtand in Armes. Pray not for them which hurt their owne ſoules. 18. Looke to your ſelues that there be no diſcord amongſt you.

His laſt Azoara is this: In the Name of the mercifull and pittifull GOD; ſanctifie thy ſelfe, and pray continually, and humbly vnto him, which is Lord of all Nations, Lord of all, GOD of all, that he will defend and deliuer thee from the Deuill, which entreth into the hearts of men, and from deuilliſh and peruerſe men. (From Mahomet himſelfe, and from his diuelliſh and peruerſe Law. CAP. III.

The Saracens opinion of their ALCORAN.

THus haue I endeuoured to bring ſome order out of confuſion, and haue framed theſe heads out of that Alcoran-Chaos,[a] where is ſcarce either head or taile: this tale they haue and beleeue (for what will not? What ſhall not they beleeue, which refuſe to beleeue the Truth?) that he which readeth[b] this Booke a thouſand times in his life, ſhall haue a woman in Paradiſe, whoſe eye-browes ſhall be as large as the Raine-bow.

But amongſt the more ſtudious and iudicious the manifold contradictions therein, hath bred no ſcruple, as in their ordinary diſcourſes in ſpeech and writing may appeare. For (as many Marchants and ſuch as haue liued with them, report) it is a common thing[c] to heare from themſelues obiections and doubts touching their Law: in their Bookes alſo and Tractates are contained many Morall ſentences and exhortations to vertue and holineſſe of life, and thoſe things called in queſtion which the Alcoran hath ſeemed to determine. Of theſe their Bookes Maſter Bedwel hath lately tranſlated and publiſhed one, a Dialogue written ſome ſix hundred yeeres ſince, in which many ſcruples are propounded and left vndecided: many things found contradictory: yea, and the Bookes of the Old and New Teſtament, commended and approued, and the Doctrine of the Trinitie explained: the exceptions alſo made by the other Mahumetans to the Goſpell, anſwered. In that booke it is affirmed, that there were written by Mahomet a hundred and twentie thouſand ſayings, of which onely three thouſand are good: the reſidue falſe: that the deſcent of the Moone into Mahomets ſleeue is impoſſible: that ſhedding of blood is too ſlippery an argument for proofe of Doctrine: that the Sunne, his beames, and heat, doe repreſent the Trinitie and Vnitie: that the ſtate of Paradiſe is like to that of Angels, without meate, drinke, women; and therefore that voluptuous Paradiſe is one of Mahomets fictions; for himſelfe, ſaith hee, did write ſome things in ieſt: that it ſeemeth abſurd, and againſt reaſon and faith, to follow a Law, which (it ſelfe ſaith) none can vnderſtand but GOD: that the Alcoran in the Aſſora Ionas, ſends men to the Iewes and Chriſtians for the right vnderſtanding thereof: that whereas it ſayes Chriſt is the word of GOD, it followes hee is the Sonne of GOD, as reaſon and ſpeech, the Sunne and his rayes, are one Eſſence, and the Vnderſtanding, Will, Memory, in one Man: that the Chriſtians could not (as the Mahumetans obiect) blot the name of their prophet out of their Scriptures, ſeeing the Iewes and Chriſtians, and Heretiques and Chriſtians ſtians haue alway beene watchfull aduerſaries to each other: and they are more ancient ſixe hundred yeeres then Mahomet: that the ſtorie of the ſpeaking Ant, and other things are triuiall and impertinent: that Moſes Law was giuen with open miracles, and the Goſpell approued with diuers languages, and martyrdomes; that theſe nor any Law of GOD hath therein any contrarietie: that virginitie is a chiefe and bodily good, and their prophet writes of himſelfe, polygamy, adulteries and the like, with many libidinous precepts and practiſes: that theſe things ſeeme contrarie, that the Deuills ſhall be ſaued, the Iewes alſo and Chriſtians, which yet he counſelleth to ſlay, with other the like contradictions: that their prophet onely vnderſtood the Arabike, and by an Interpreter heard that which is contained in the Bookes of Iewes and Chriſtians (which eaſily appeares in his falſifying the Hiſtories of the Bible) that hee hath no Teſtimony but his owne: that there are many abſurd things in their law not confirmed by Miracle: and others excuſe them by Metaphors, &c.

Theſe things are there religiouſly diſcourſed with ſhew of reuerence to their Law, but exceeding magnifying of Chriſt and his Goſpell: which is ſo generall with the more learned ſort, that ſome alſo haue hazarded their liues in this quarrell. And Auicen that learned Phyſician ſaith againſt their Paradiſe, that wiſe Diuines more reſpect the minde, the conſunction whereof with truth is a felicitie beyond thoſe ſenſuall pleaſures of the bodie. And were it not for ſenſualitie, ignorance, and the ſword, theſe Alcoran-fables would ſoone vaniſh.

CHAP. V.

Other Muhameticall ſpeculations, and explanations of their Law, collected out of their owne Commentaries of that Argument.

OF ſuch writings as haue come to our hands, touching Mahomets doctrine and Religion, that ſeemeth moſt fully to lay them open, which is called by ſome, Scala, a booke containing the expoſition of the Alcoran, in forme of a Dialogue, tranſlated into Latine by Hermannus Dalmata, and made the twelfth Chapter of the firſt Booke of the Alcoran in Italian. I haue therefore preſumed on the Readers patience, to thoſe former collections out of the Alcoran it ſelfe, to adde theſe enſuing, as a further explanation of their opinions. The Meſſenger of GOD (ſo beginneth that booke) was ſitting amongſt his fellowes (the praier and ſalutation of GOD bee vpon him) in his Citie Ieſrab; and the Angel Gabriel deſcending on him, ſaid, GOD ſaluteth thee, O Mahomet, &c. There came foure wiſe-men, Maſters in Iſrael, to prooue thee; the chiefe of whom is Abdia-Ben-Salon. Mahomet therefore ſent his couſin Hali to ſalute them; and they being come to Mahomet, after mutuall ſalutations, Abdia telleth him, that he and his fellowes were ſent by the people of the Iewes, to learne the vnderſtanding of ſome obſcurer places of their Law. Mahomet asketh, if he come to enquire, or to tempt. Abdia ſaith, to enquire. Then Mahomet giuing him full leaue, he beginneth; hauing before gathered out of the whole bodie of their Law, an hundred moſt exquiſite queſtions. The principall dregs you ſhall here haue.

a F. Sanſou. & Bellar. lib. 3.

Abdia. Tell vs (O Mahomet) whether thou bee a Prophet or a Meſſenger? Mahomet. GOD hath appointed me both a Prophet and a Meſſenger. Ab. Doeſt thou preach the Law of GOD, or thine owne Law? Mah. The Law of GOD: this Law is Faith, and this Faith is, that there are not Gods, but one GOD, without partaker. Ab. How many Lawes of GOD are there? Mah. One, the Law and Faith of the Prophets, which went before vs, was one; the Rites were different. Ab. Shall we enter Paradiſe for Faith or Workes? Mah. Both are neceſſarie; but if a Gentile, Iew, or Chriſtian, become a Saracen, and preuent his good Workes, Faith onely ſhall ſuffice: But if Gentile, Iew, or Chriſtian, doe good Workes, not in the loue of GOD, the fire ſhall conſume both him and his worke. Ab. How doth the mercie of GOD preuent his anger? Mah. When before other creatures Adam roſe vp, he ſneeſed and ſaid, GOD be thanked: and the Angels hearing it, ſaid, The Pittie of GOD be vpon thee, Adam, who anſwered, Amen: Then ſaid the Lord, I haue receiued your Prayer. Ab. What be the foure things which GOD wrought with his owne hands? Mah. Hee made Paradiſe, planted the tree of the Trumpet, formed Adam, and did write the Tables of Moſes. Ab. Who told thee this? Mah. Gabriel, from the Lord of the world. Ab. In what forme? Mah. Of a man ſtanding vpright, neuer ſleeping, nor eating, nor drinking, but the praiſe of GOD. Ab. Tell me in order what is one, what is two, what three, foure, fiue, ſixe, &c. to an hundreth. Mah. One is GOD without Sonne, partaker or fellow, Almightie Lord of life and death. Two, Adam and Eue. Three, Michael, Gabriel, Saraphiel, Archangels, Secretaries of

Ab. Well, ſhew vs how the earth was made, and when? Mah. GOD made man of mire: the mire of froth: this was made of the tempeſts; theſe, of the ſea: The ſea, of darkneſſe; the darkneſſe, of light; this, of the word, the word of the thought; the thought of Iacinth; the Iacinth of the commandement: Let it be, and it was. Ab. How many Angels are ſet ouer men? Mah. Two, one on the right hand, which writeth his good deeds; another on the left, which regiſtreth his bad. Theſe ſit on mens ſhoulders. Their pen is their tongue, their inke is their ſpittle, their heart is the booke. Ab. What did GOD make after? Mah. The bookes wherein are written all things paſt, preſent, and to come, in heauen and earth; and the pen made of the brighteſt light, fiue hundred yeeres long, and eightie broad, hauing eightie teeth wherein are written all things in the world, till the day of Iudgement. The booke is made of the greateſt Emerald; the words, of Pearles, the couer of pitie. GOD ouer-looketh the ſame an hundred and ſixtie times in a day and night. The heauen is made of ſmoake of the vapour of the ſea: the greenneſſe of the ſea proceedeth from the mount Kaf, which is made of the Emeralds of Paradiſe, and compaſſeth the world, bearing vp the heauens. The gates of heauen are of gold, the lockes of light, the keyes of pietie. Aboue the heauens are the ſea of life, aboue that the cloudie ſea; then the arie ſea, the ſtony ſea, the darke ſea, the ſea of ſolace, the Moone, the Sun, the Name of GOD; Supplication, Gabriel, the parchment raſed, the parchment full written, all theſe in order one ouer another. Then aboue all theſe, the threeſcore and ten ſpaces of light: then threeſcore and ten thouſand hils, with threeſcore and ten thouſand ſpaces betweene, and threeſcore and ten thouſand troupes of Angels on them, in euery troupe fiue thouſand Angels alway praiſing the Lord of the world: aboue theſe the limits or bounds of Angelical dignitie: and aboue the ſame the banner of glory, and then ſpaces of pearles, and in their orders one aboue another, the ſpaces of Grace, of Power, of Diuinitie, of Diſpenſation, the Foot-ſtoole, the Throne, the houſe of the Vniuerſe.

Ab. Are the Sunne and Moone faithfull or not? Mah. They are faithfull, and obey euery command of GOD. Ab. Why then are they not of equall light? Mah. GOD created them equall, but by this it came to paſſe, that the viciſſitude or intercourſe of day and night was vncertaine, till Gabriel flying by the Moone, darkened her with the touch of his wing. Ab. How many orders are there of the Starres? Mah. Three, the firſt of thoſe which hang by chaines from the Throne of GOD, giuing light to the ſeuenth Throne: the ſecond chaſe away the deuils, when they would enter into heauen: the third, in the ſight of the Angels. There are ſeuen ſeas betweene vs and heauen. There are three windes: the firſt barren; the ſecond tempeſtuous, which ſhall blow the fire in the day of Iudgement: the third miniſtreth to the earth and sea. Ab. Where is the Sunne? Mah. In a hot fountaine: this, in a Serpent; which is a great space in the mount Kaf, and this Kaf is in the hand of the Angell, which holdeth the world till the day of Iudgement. Abd. What is the manner of them, which beare vp the Seat of GOD? Mah. Their heads are vnder the Seat of GOD, their feet vnder the seuen Thrones, their neckes are so large, that a bird in a thousand yeeres continuall flight, should not reach from the one eare to another. They haue hornes, and their meate and drinke is the praise and glory of GOD. Abd. How farre is it to heauen? Mahom. Fiue hundred yeeres iourney to the lowest, and so from each to other. Abd. What birds are betweene vs and heauen? Mahom. Some, which touch neither heauen nor earth, hauing manes like horses, haire like women, wings like birds, and lay their Egges, and hatch them on their tailes till the day of Iudgement.

Ab. What was the forbidden tree? Mah. Of wheat, which had seuen eares, whereof Adam plucked one, wherein were fiue graines; of which, two hee eat, two hee gaue to Eue, and one hee carried away. This graine was bigger then an Egge, and being bruised, brought forth all kindes of seed. Ab. Where was Adam receiued after his expulsion from Paradise? Mah. Adam in India, Eue in Nubia. Adam was recouered with three leaues of Paradise; Eue, with her haire: They met together in Arafe. Further, as concerning Eue, she was made of a rib of the left side, for otherwise she had beene as strong as the man.

Ab. Who dwelt in the earth before? Mah. First the Deuils, seuen thousand yeeres after them the Angels: lastly Adam, a thousand yeeres after the Angels. Ab. Who beganne the Pilgrimage? Mah. Adam. Gabriel shaued his head, and hee circumcised himselfe; and after him Abraham. Ab. To what land spake GOD at any time? Mah. To Mount Sinai, that it should lift vp Moses to heauen: Abitabil and Moses are the two men whose sepulchers are knowne. Moses by chance found a sepulcher, which while hee measured with his bodie, the Angell of Death drew from him his soule out of his nostrils, by the smell of an Apple of Paradise.

Ab. Where is the middle of the earth? Mah. In Ierusalem. Ab. Who made the first ship? Mah. Noe: hee receiued the keyes thereof of Gabriel, and going forth of Arabia, compassed Mecca seuen times, and likewise Ierusalem. In the meane while Mecca was receiued vp into heauen, and the Mount Abikobez preserued Ierusalem in her belly. Ab. What shall become of the children of the Infidels? Mah. They shall come in at the day of Iudgement, and GOD shall say vnto them, Would yee doe that thing which shall be commanded you? And he shall command to flow forth one of the riuers of hell, and bid them leape into the same. They which obey, shall goe into Paradise. This shall bee the triall of the children of the faithfull also, which are borne deafe, blinde, &c. Abd. What resteth vnder these seuen earths? Mah. An Oxe, whose feet are on a white stone, his head in the East, his taile in the West; he hath fortie hornes, and as many teeth; it is a thousand yeeres iourney from one horne to another. Vnder that stone is Zohot, a mountaine of hell, of a thousand yeeres iourney. All the Infidels shall ascend vpon the same, and from the top shall fall into Hell. Vnder that Mount is the land Werelea; vnder that, the Sea Alkasem: the Land Aliolen, the sea Zere: the land Neama, the sea Zegir: the land Theris, the land Agiba, white as Milke, sweet as Muske, soft as Saffron, bright as the Moone: the sea Alknitar; the fish Albehhut, with his head in the East, his taile in the West: all these in order one after another. And beneath all these in like infernall order the Winde, the Mountaine, the Thunder, the Lightning, the bloudie Sea, Hell closed, the fierie Sea, the darke Sea, the Sea Po, the cloudie Sea, Prayses, Glorification, the Throne, the Booke, the Pen, the greater Name of GOD.

Ab. What hath come out of Paradise into the World? Mah. Mecca, Iesrab, [b] Ierusalem: as on the contrarie, out of Hell; Vastat in Egypt, Antiochia in Syria, Ebberan in Armenia, and Elmeden of Chaldæa. Ab. What say you of Paradise? Mah. The ground of Paradise is of gold, enameled with Emeralds, and Hiacinths, planted with euery fruitfull Tree, watered with streames of Milke, Hony, and Wine: the day is of a thousand yeeres continuance, and the yeere of fortie thousand yeeres. The people shall haue whatsoeuer can be desired, they shall be clothed in all colours, except [c] black, which is the proper colour of Mahomet: they all shall bee of the stature of Adam, in resemblance like Christ, neuer encreasing or diminishing. As soone as they are entered, shall bee set before them the Liuer of the Fish Albehhut, and whatsoeuer dainties they can desire. They shall not need going to stoole any more then the childe in the wombe, but they shall sweat out all superfluities, of sent like Muske. They shall eat but for delight, not for hunger. Vnlawfull meates, as Swines flesh, they shall refraine. And if you list to know why this beast is vnclean, vnderstand that Iesus on a time called forth Iaphet to tell his Disciples the Historie of the Arke; Who told them, that by the weight of the Ordure, the Arke leaned on the one side, whereupon Noe, consulting with GOD, was bidden bring the Elephant thither, out of whose dung, mixed with mans, came forth a Hog, which which wrooted in that mire with his ſnout, and by the ſtinke thereof was produced out of his noſe a Mouſe, which gnawed the boords of the Arke: Noe fearing this danger, was bidden to ſtrike the Lion on the forehead: and by the Lions breath was a Cat engendred, mortall enemie to the Mouſe. But to returne from this ſtinking tale, to refreſh our ſelues with the like ſweets of this Paradiſe. He addeth, that there they haue the wiues that here they had, and other Concubines, whom, how, when, whereſoeuer they will.

[b] Ierusalem was rased of them. An. 1219. yet durst they not destroy the holy sepulchre, because of that Testimony of Iesus in their Alcoran: yea, they kisse the Gospels in reuerence, especially, Luc. 1. missus est Gabriel, which they will often reiterate. Vitr. l. 3. They call it not Ierusalem, but BEITAA'LMIKDAS, that is, the house of the Sanctuary, and Cudsi Mubarruk, that is, the blessed Sanctuarie. Bed. Trud.

Abd. But why is Wine lawfull there, and here vnlawfull? Mah. The Angels Arot and Marot, were ſometime ſent to inſtruct and gouerne the world, forbidding men, Wine, iniuſtice, and murther. But a woman hauing whereof to accuſe her husband, inuited them to dinner, and made them drunke. They inflamed with a double heat of Wine and Luſt, could not obtaine that their deſire of their faire Hoſteſſe, except one would teach her the word of aſcending to heauen, and the other of deſcending. Thus ſhe mounted vp to heauen. And vpon enquirie of the matter, ſhee was made the Morning-Sarre, and they put to their choice, whether they would bee puniſhed in this world, or in the world to come: they accepting their puniſhment in this, are hanged by chaines, with their heads in a pit of Babel, till the day of Iudgement.

Hell, ſaith Mahomet there, hath the floore of Brimſtone, ſmoakie, pitchy, with ſtinking flames, with deepe pits of ſcalding Pitch, and ſulphurous flames, wherein the damned are puniſhed daily: the trees beare moſt loaſome fruits, which they eate.

The day of Iudgement ſhall be in this ſort. In that day GOD will command the Angel of Death to kill euery Creature; which being done, hee ſhall aske him if nothing bee aliue: Adreiel the Angell of Death ſhall anſwere, Nothing but my ſelfe. Then goe thy waies betwixt Paradiſe and Hell; and laſt of all kill thy ſelfe. Thus he, folded in his wings, proſtrate on the earth, ſhall ſtrangle himſelfe with ſuch a bellowing noiſe, as would terrifie the verie Angels, if they were aliue.

Thus the world ſhall bee emptie fortie yeeres. Then ſhall GOD hold the Heauen and Earth in his fiſt, and ſay, Where are now the mightie men, the Kings and Princes of the World? Tell mee (if yee be true) whoſe is the Kingdome, and Empire, and Power? Repeating theſe words three times, he ſhall riſe vp Seraphiel, and ſay, Take this Trumpet, and goe to Ieruſalem, and ſound. This Trumpet is of fiue hundred yeeres iourney. At that ſound all Soules ſhall come forth, and diſperſe themſelues vnto their owne bodies, and their bones ſhall be gathered together. Fortie yeeres after hee ſhall ſound againe, and then the bones ſhall reſume fleſh and ſinewes. After fortie yeeres the third ſound ſhall warne the Soules to re-poſſeſſe their bodies: and a fire from the Weſt ſhall driue euery creature to Ieruſalem. When they haue here ſwum fortie yeeres in their owne ſweat, they ſhall with much vexation, come to Adam, and ſay, Father Adam, Father Adam, Why haſt thou begotten vs to theſe miſeries and torments? Why ſuffereſt thou vs to hang betweene hope and feare? Pray to GOD, that hee will finiſh his determination of vs, betweene Paradiſe and Hell: Adam ſhall excuſe his vnworthineſſe for his diſobedience, and ſend them to Noe, Noe will poſt them to Abraham, Abraham to Moſes: He ſhall ſend them to Ieſus Chriſt: To him they ſhall come, and ſay, The Spirit, Word, and Power of GOD, let thy pitie moue thee to make interceſſion for vs. He ſhall anſwer them, That which you aske, you haue loſt. I was indeed ſent vnto you in the power of GOD, and Word of Truth, but yee haue erred, and haue made me GOD; more then euer I preached to you: and haue therefore loſt my benefit. But goe to the laſt of the Prophets, meaning him with whom thou now talkeſt, Abdia. Then ſhall they turne to him, and ſay; O faithfull Meſſenger, and friend of GOD, we haue ſinned, heare vs, holy Prophet, our only hope, &c. Then ſhall Gabriel preſent himſelfe to helpe his friend, and they ſhall goe to the Throne of GOD. And GOD ſhall ſay, I know why you are come: Farre be it that I ſhould not heare the prayer of my faithfull one. Then ſhall a bridge be made ouer Hell, and on the top of the bridge ſhall bee ſet a ballance, wherein euery mans workes ſhall bee weighed, and thoſe which are ſaued, ſhall paſſe ouer the bridge, the other ſhall fall into Hell. Abd. How many bands of men ſhall there be in that day? Mahom. An hundred and twentie; of which, three only ſhall be found faithfull; and euery Band or troupe of men ſhall be in length the iourney of a thouſand yeeres, in breadth fiue hundred. Abd. What ſhall become of Death? Mah. He ſhall be transformed into a Ram, and they ſhall bring him betweene Paradiſe and Hell. Then ſhall ariſe much diſſentions betweene theſe two peoples, through feare of the one, and hope of the other. But the people of Paradiſe ſhall preuaile, and ſhall ſlay Death betweene Paradiſe and Hell. Abd. Thou, O Mahomet, haſt ouercome, and I beleeue, that there is but one GOD Almightie, and thou art his Meſſenger and Prophet.

In this long and tedious Summarie, of that longer and more tedious Dialogue, compared with the former Iewiſh opinions, touching their Behemoth, Leuiathan, Ziz, Ieruſalem, Swines fleſh, the Angell of Death, and other their ſuperſtitious opinions, it may appeare, that the Iewes were forward Mint-masters in this new-coyned Religion of Mahomet.

In the beginning of this Dialogue, are mentioned their fiue Prayers, and their Ramadam, or Ramazan: Of which, that Arabian Noble-man, in confutation of the Alcoran, writeth thus: [h] He which hath fulfilled these fiue Prayers, shall bee praised in this world, and in the next. They are as follow: Two kneelings in the morning, after-noone, foure; at Vespers, or a little before Sun-set, foure; after Sun-set, foure; at their beginning of supper, two; and after supper, when it is darke, two; in all eighteene kneelings in a day.

h Arab. Nob. in Confut. Alcor.

Their Lent [i], or Fast of the Moneth Ramazan, is thus: In the day time they must fast from Meate, Drinke, and Venerie, till the Sunne bee downe: then is Riot permitted them, till a white threed may be discerned from a blacke. But if any be sicke, or in iourneying, he may pay at another time the same number of dayes.

i Of Mahomets Lent.

Sampsates Isphacanes, a Persian, in a letter written to one Meletius, which had conuerted to Christianitie, and fled to Constantinople, to reduce him to his former vomit, alleageth this saying of GOD to Mahomet: I haue made all things for thee, and thee for mee: obiecteth to Christians the worship of three Persons, the Father, Mother, and Sonne, the worship of many gods. And how (saith he) can GOD haue a Sonne without a woman? And how can they agree together? How can GOD be made Man? And why could he not haue saued man by a word, but, as if he had beene hindred through weakenesse, did therefore become man? And if he were GOD, how could he suffer? Yea, the name of Mahomet, saith hee, was expressed both in the Old Testament, and the Gospel, Christ himselfe commending it, which the Christians haue raced out: yea, from euerlasting it was written on the right side of the Throne of GOD. And the Musulmans deriue their faith from Abraham. This I haue inserted, to shew the vaine conceits they haue of our Religion, and their blinde confidence in their owne, with their carnall dreames of Diuine Mysteries, and diuellish slanders of our Scriptures, which they know not: their scandall also from the worship of Images and Saints.

Frier Richard [k] reciteth among Mahomets opinions, That of threescore and thirteene parts of the Saracens, one onely shall be saued; and, that the Deuils shall once bee saued by the Alcoran; and that the Deuils call themselues Saracens, fit companions with them in their holy things.

k Richardus Confut. Alcor.

Some [l] make it a Canon of Mahomet, That they should looke toward the South when they pray, that when they pray they should say, GOD is one GOD, without equall; and Mahomet his Prophet: which, Lod. Barthema saith, Are the Characters of the profession of a Mahumetan, and that, by the pronouncing of those words, hee was tried whether he was an Infidell, or no. These words, saith the aboue-said Arabian (as they affirme) before the beginning of the world were written in the Throne of GOD.

Bellonius [m] in his Obseruations telleth out of their Bookes, that there is a Tree in Paradise which shadoweth it all ouer, and spreadeth her boughes ouer the walles, whose leaues are of pure gold and siluer, each of them after the Name of GOD, hauing therein written the name of Mahomet. And that if a Christian, at vnawares, should pronounce the said Prayer, La illah, &c. GOD is one GOD, and Mahomet his Prophet, hee must either die or turne Turke. Such reputation haue they of this forme, which they call a Prayer, with as good reason as the Aue Marie among the Romists, wherein yet they pray not for any thing. Bellonius also saith, That they hold the Heauen to be made of Smoke, and the Firmament stablished on the horne of a Buffall, by whose stirring Earthquakes are caused: That there are seuen Paradises, with Houses, Gardens, Fountaines, and whatsoeuer sense accounteth delectable; where they shall enioy all delights without any sorrow, hauing Carpet, Beds, Boyes, Horses, Saddles, Garments, for cost and workmanship most curious, and readie for attendance. Those Boyes richly adorned, when they haue satisfied their hunger and thirst, shall present euery Saracen a huge Pome-citron in a golden Charger, and as soone as they shall smell thereof, there shall thence proceed a comely Virgin in gallant attire, which shall embrace him, and he her; and so shall they continue fiftie yeeres. After which space ended, God shall shew them his face, whereat they shall fall downe, not able to endure the brightnesse, but hee shall say, Arise, my seruants, and enioy my glory; for hereafter yee shall neuer die, nor be grieued. Then shall they see God, and each lead his Virgin into his Chamber, where all pleasures shall attend them. If one of those Virgins should come forth at midnight, shee would lighten the world no lesse then the Sunne, and if shee should spet into the Sea, all the water thereof would become sweet. Gabriel keepeth the keyes of Paradise, which are in number threescore and ten thousand, each seuen thousand miles long. But hee was not able to open Paradise, without Inuocation of the Name of GOD, and Mahomet his friend. There is a Table of Adamant seuen hundred thousand dayes iourney long and broad, with seates of gold and siluer about it, where they shall be feasted.

There is extant a Conſtitution of Methodius, Patriarke of Conſtantinople, touching the diuerſities of Penances (according to the diuerſitie of the offence) to bee performed by ſuch as haue reuolted from the Faith to Mahumetiſme. Likewiſe, there is a fragment of Nicetas, wherein are expreſſed the abiurations, and renunciations of Mahomet, and his Law by new conuerts, both before Baptiſme, when they were admitted into the number of the Catechumeni, and at Baptiſme, as was then vſed in the Church, ſome of which I here mention, as fitting to our purpoſe. After the Anathema pronounced againſt Mahomet, Ali his ſonne-in-law, Apompicertus, Baeicer, Amar, Talcan, Apupachren, Sadicen, and the reſt of his conſorts and ſucceſſours; alſo againſt Gadiſe, Aiſe, and others his wiues, with Phatuma his daughter: he Anathematiſeth the Core, that is, Mahomets Scripture, and all his learning, lawes, Apocryphall narrations, traditions, and blaſphemies. The fifth Article is againſt Mahomets Paradiſe, there thus expreſſed, That in it are foure Riuers, one of cleare water, a ſecond, of ſweet milke, a third, of pleaſant wine, a fourth, of honie: and that the Saracens at the day of Iudgement (which ſhall be fiue hundred thouſand yeeres after his time) ſhal liue carnally with their wiues vnder the ſhadowes of certaine trees, called Sidra, and Telech, and ſhall eate what fruits and birds they will, and ſhall drinke of the fountaines Caphura and Zinciber, and wine out of the ſpring Theon. Their age ſhall be the ſame with the heauens: their members foure cubits: they ſhall haue their fill of luſt in the preſence of God, who is not aſhamed. Sixthly, He Anathematiſeth Mahumets Angels, Aroth, Maron, Tzapha and Marona, with his Prophets, Chud, Zalech, Soaip, Edres, Duaciphel and Lechina. Seuenthly, His doctrine of the Sun & Moone, and his challenge to be the Key-bearer of Paradiſe: alſo his houſe of Mecca, in the middeſt whereof, they ſay, is a ſtone repreſenting Venus, on which Abraham lay with Hagar, and tied thereto his Camell, when he ſhould haue ſacrificed Iſaac: where the Pilgrimes holding their eare with one hand, point to the ſtone with the other, and ſo turne round till they fall downe with giddineſſe. He renounceth likewiſe their caſting ſeuen ſtones againſt the Chriſtians, and the tale of Mahomets Camel, and them which worſhip the Morning-ſtarre, or Lucifer and Venus, which the Arabians call Chobar, that is, Great. And thus hee proceedeth in two and twentie Articles, abandoning his former ſect: after which he deſireth Baptiſme.

See of this in the next Chapter, and in the ſecond Chapter.

Catecheſ. Myſt. pro aduenis ex Secta Mahom.

Of like ſubiect are the Catecheſes Myſtagogicæ, or inſtructions of Peter Guerra de Lorca, concerning conuerting and keeping from Mahometiſme, in which are rehearſed, and refuted a great part of their ſuperſtitions, dedicated to King Philip the ſecond: But King Philip the third, hath otherwiſe conuerted the Moores of Spaine, for whom he writ his booke, by an vtter ſubuerſion & turning them quite out of his dominions. He therin telleth of the deuils appearing to Mahomet in forme of a Vulture, with a beake and feathers of gold, profeſſing himſelfe to be Gabriel, ſent of GOD to teach him his Law: that Mahomet would not permit Iewes to turne to his Law, without baptizing them firſt vnto Chriſtianitie: that the Saracens worſhip the New-Moone: that the women ſpend all their time and care to adorne themſelues for their husbands luſt, and becauſe they reſpect fatneſſe in their wiues, theſe therefore with idleneſſe, ſleepe, and diet according, doe fat themſelues like Swine: that a Mahumetan may attaine to that perfection, that he may ſatisfie for ſinne paſt, and after liue without ſin, eſpecially by Faſtings and Pilgrimages: that the bleſſed Virgin ſhal (as they dreame) in the other life bee married to that curſed monſter Mahomet: that women ſhall riſe againe in the male ſex, and ſhall alſo haue women for their luſt, which ſhall bee produced out of certaine trees: with diuers other things ſcarcely obiected to them by others. Thomas à Ieſu another Spaniard, hath written prolixly of this Argument, but I may not heere now follow him.

Theſaur. ſapientiæ diuinæ in ſalute om. gent. procuranda.

Let me yet be bold out of certaine Arabikes of the beſt note to adde the Creed, the Commandements, Meſcuites, with other Mahumetan Rites and Cuſtome, collected by Gabriel and Iohn, two Maronites, and firſt touching the Eaſterne Languages and Authors.

Eaſterne languages.

THere are in the Eaſt eight principall Languages, the Arabike, Perſian, Turkiſh, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriake (which little differs from Chaldees) Greeke, and Armenian. The Arabike is moſt noble and vſuall, and is extended as far as Mohameds name, as their ſacred Language, know to all Moſlemans of better faſhion. In this is their Alcoran and their publike Prayers, and moſt of their Lawes. Yea, ſaith Zaheri, the bleſſed in Paradiſe vſe it. In this alſo are written their Bookes of Phyſicke, Aſtrologie, Rhetorike. The Perſian hath little but Poets and Hiſtorians, the Turkiſh almoſt nothing; the Chaldee and Syriake are nigh loſt, as the Greeke. But Arabike Authors.

Auerroes, Algazeles, Abu-Becer, Alfarabius (called of the Moſlemans, the ſecond Philoſopher) Mohamed Ben-Iſaac, and Mohamed Ben-Abdillah adorned the Arabike: beſides very many Aſtrologers, Mathematicians, Phyſicians, and Hiſtorians. Ben-Sidi Aali reckons one hundred and fiftie, which haue written on their Law; Ben-Caſem, innumerable Grammarians and Rhetoricians.

Now

Now for the Moſlemans Religion, Ben-Sidi Aali expreſſeth it to conſiſt herein, that they beleeue all the ſpeeches made by Gabriel the Angell to our Prophet, when hee queſtioned him of the things to bee beleeued and done: which are theſe, to beleeue in one God to whom none is equall (this againſt Chriſtians) and that the Angels are the Seruans of God, to beleeue in the Scripture ſent to the Apoſtles, diuided in their opinion into one hundred and foure Bookes, of which tenne were ſent to Adam, fiftie to Seth, thirtie to Enoc (called Edris) ten to Abraham, the Law to Moſes, the Pſalmes to Dauid, the Goſpel to Iſa, or Ieſus Chriſt; laſtly, the Alcoran to Mohamed. That they hold theſe ſent for mens good; and beleeue in the Reſurrection after death, and that ſome are predeſtinate to fire, ſome to Paradiſe, according to the will of God (for it is ſaid in the Alcoran; there is none of you which hath not his place in Paradiſe, and a place determined in Hell) that they beleeue alſo the reward of the good and puniſhment of the bad; and the interceſſion of the Saints. Alſo this is of the things to bee holden, that they firmely beleeue in the Diuine Pen, which was created by the finger of God. This Pen was made of Pearles, of that length and ſpace that a ſwift Horſe could ſcarcely paſſe in fiue hundred yeeres. It performeth that office, that it writes all things paſt, preſent, and to come: the Inke with which it writes is of light; the Tongue by which it writes, none vnderſtandeth, but the Archangel Seraphael. That they beleeue alſo the puniſhment of the Sepulchres; for the Dead are vſed often to be puniſhed in their Graues, as happened in a certaine Sepulcher betwixt Mecca and Medina. Moſlemans Creed.

The Precepts of the Moſlemans are, firſt Circumciſion, not on the eight day, as to the Iewes, but at the eight, ninth, tenth, eleuenth, twelfth yeere, that they may know what they doe, and may profeſſe their Faith with vnderſtanding. And although moſt hold women free therefrom, yet in Egypt they circumciſe women at thirteen, fourteene, or fifteene yeeres old (many of them till then goe ſtarke naked) and Sidi-Ben Aali ſaith, that it was commanded to men, but is vſed to women for honour. Moſleman Precepts are; Circumciſion. Fiue houres Prayer.

The ſecond Commandement is Prayers hourely, which in the Church, at home, or abroad, they are bound to performe, fiue times in the day and night: firſt, at breake of day; the ſecond, about noone; the third, in the afternoone; the fourth, after Sun-ſet, when the Starres begin to appeare: the laſt, in the firſt watch, or before mid-night (for after, it is vnlawfull, ſaith Ben-Sidi Aali) neither may any tranſgreſſe theſe houres without ſin; yea, ſaith he, if one were caſt into the Sea, and knew the houre of Prayer, if he be able, he ought to doe it; as alſo women in trauell muſt hide the Infants head as they can, and doe it. Trauellers when they perceiue that houre is come, goe out of the way and waſh; or if they haue no water; lightly dig the Earth, and make ſhew of waſhing, and go not thence till they haue finiſhed their Deuotion. Thirdly, Almes is alſo commanded; and they which are ſo poore that they cannot giue to Orphans and the poore, muſt helpe in Hoſpitals and High-waies, by ſuch ſeruice to ſatisfie God. Fourthly, Ramahdan Faſt of thirtie dayes is commanded from morning to Sun-ſet, and the Stars appearing: for then after euening Prayer they eate any food (except Wine) with Bacchanall cheere, and tumults. Fifthly, Pilgrimage once in their liues to Mecca and Medina is alſo commended; and ſixthly, to fight againſt the enemies of their Faith is no leſſe commanded; not to preach by the Word and Meekeneſſe, as Chriſt, but by the Sword and Warre, to inuade and reuenge. And if by their perſons and blood they cannot, they muſt (ſaith our Author) by their purſe and goods helpe the Prince herein. And if they die in War, the ſenſuall pleaſures of Paradiſe, Riuers of Milke and Honey, beautifull women and the like, are their preſent purchaſe. Therefore do they giue to Apoſtataes, which become Moſlemans, an Arrow borne vp by their fore-finger; the Arrow ſignifying Warre, and that one Finger the Vnitie of the Deitie. Their laſt Commandement is waſhing with water, which is three-fold, one before Prayers, handled in three Chapiters by Ben-Sidi Aali, thus performed; the armes ſtripped naked to the elbow, they waſh the right hand and arme, then the left, after the Noſe, Eares, Face, Necke, Crowne, Feet to the ioynts, if they bee bare, or elſe their ſhooe-tops; laſtly, their Priuities; meane-while mumbling their Deuotions. Theſe waſhings they thinke to waſh away their Veniall and lighter ſinnes; for their greater they vſe Bathes, and ſay all the bodie muſt be waſhed to waſh away Crimes. The third waſhing is of their ſecrets by themſelues, or their Seruants after the Offices of Nature, deliuered by him in two Chapiters, too fooliſh and filthy to be related. Adde the prohibition of Images painted or carued, Thefts, Homicides, Robberies, Adulteries, Swines-fleſh, Wine, ſtrangled bloud, and things dying of themſelues, and all vncleane creatures. Almes. Faſt. Pilgrimage. Fighting. Note. Waſhings.

He alſo inſtructs at large of their Teſtaments and Funerals. The Moſlemans being ſicke, preſently ſend for an Abed, Religious man, or Santone to ſtrengthen them in the Faith, and propound heauenly things to him, reciting ſomewhat out of the Alcoran. And if the Diſeaſe be very dangerous, they waſh and make their Teſtament; and are bound to reſtore all ill-gotten goods, giuing the creditors a bill of their hand. And if they know not to whom to reſtore, they muſt bequeath a ſumme of money to publike vſes, Hoſpitals, Meſquits, Bathes, the poore and Religious perſons: yea, for that reſpect they ſet Captiues at libertie, as is read Order of viſiting the ſicke, of Wils, Reſtitutions, and Burials.

that Auicenna did; some giue Bookes to publike vses; some, other things. Ben-Sidi Aali saith, it is Mohameds precept, that the third part of mens goods bee bestowed on publike vses. And if a man die intestate, they say other dead men will chide him. When they are dead, the bodie is washed, the Nose, Eyes, Mouth, and Eares stopped with cotton; better apparell is put on, white shirts, and Tulipants. Then is the bodie carried to the buriall place without the Citie with a great troupe; the Santones or Religious going before, then the men promiscuously, after the Corps; followed by women howling, lamenting, shricking, till they come to the Graue. There are those Garments taken away, and the Corps shrowded in a white sheet, and put into the Graue with the face to the South. After the couering with Earth, many Prayers are made, and much Almes is giuen to the poore to doe the same.

Mesquites, or Moschees, and their Ceremonies in them.

Touching the Easterne Customes. Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of the structure of Mesquites. Before them is a large floore paued with Marble, in the midst is a square Lauer, where they which come to pray vse to wash themselues. After this is a great Hall without Images or Pictures, the Walls bare, not shining with Gold or Gems: the Pauement matted, on which the vulgar sit; the Rich vse Carpets spread for them by their Slaues. From the Roofe hang many Lampes, which are lighted in Prayer time, and that being ended, are put out. These Churches are for the most part round & couered with Lead; and haue adioyned high Towers which serue for Steeples, with foure Windowes open to the foure Windes; whereon the Priests at set-times ascend, and with a strong voyce call men to Prayers. Which being ended, and their Legall washing being done, all of them leauing their Shooes on a rew at the threshold of the Gate or Porch, they enter with great silence. The Priest beginneth the Prayer, and all follow, and whiles hee kneeleth they doe so, and rise when hee stands vp, and imitate him in the eleuation or depression of the voyce. None yauneth, cougheth, walketh, or talketh, but in great silence, after Prayers they resume their Shooes and depart. No woman may come to the Mesquites at these set houres, if there bee any men, nor may haue any societie of men, except the Priest, which directeth and goeth before them with his voyce in their manner of praying, as saith the said Author.

Mosleman women dis-respected. Hence some ascribe to the Turkes falsly, that women haue no soules.

They are permitted not to enter the Mesquites, but to stand at the doore, and must bee gone quickly before the men haue done their Prayers. He addes that the womens Church is the inner part of their owne house. Such is their dis-respect of women; notwithstanding, Mohameds promises in his Alcoran, that many, say they, enter not Paradise, but may stand at the doore with Christians, and see the glorie of the men.

Easterne attire

The Garments of the East are commonly long, some slit on the right and left hand, some whole. The vpper Garment hath wide sleeues. Their head-tire is a Tulipant but differing, of Princes white and fine, artificially wreathen, rather long then round: of their Cadies and Mufeis very large, of fiftie or sixtie Els of Calico round and wreathed; of Citizens lesse, of Serifs or Mohameds posteritie greene: of Souldiers and Seruants long and white. Christians vse not white nor round ones: the Maronite Patriarke and his Suffragan Bishops weare a huge Tulipant, round and blue, with a blacke hood vnder it: other Priests lesse, and no hood. The women are pompous, but cõming abroad weare a couering made of Horse-haire before their face, that they may see and not be knowne, not if their owne Husbands meet them; neither if they did know, would they salute, it being a shame for a woman to bee seene speaking with a man. Their Chaines, Brooches, and other Ornaments, and Paintings of their Eyes, Browes, and Fingers ends, I omit. Both men and women are so addicted to neatnesse, that they are very carefull lest any drop of vrine spot their clothes in making water or going to stoole, and would then thinke themselues vncleane. They therefore then sit downe (like women) and wash; or if no water may bee had, wipe with three stones, or a three cornered stone, as Ben-Sidi Aali in his Chapiter of washing warneth. They thinke it vnlawfull to spit or pisse on a brute creature. In food they abstaine from strangled and bloud; and Moslemans, from Swines-flesh. They loue Iunkets: they breake bread and cut it not. Their Table is a round piece of Leather, to which they come with washing and Prayers promised. They vse not Forkes, but Spoones of Wood of diuers colours, and where they need not them, three Fingers, as Ben-Sidi Aali warneth. Pewter and Porcelane is in much vse, but other Vessels of Plate or Gold, saith hee, Mohamed forbade, saying, The Deuill vsed such, the common drinke is water; the better sort adde Sugar, sometimes Amber and Muske, &c.

A note for trauellers in these parts, not to prouoke them without liberty in vrine, &c. a cause of quarrell often to Christians.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Pilgrimage to MECCA.

WE haue heard of the antiquitie of this Pilgrimage in the former Chapter, deriued from Adam, who was shauen and circumcised for that purpose: and the Alcoran nameth Abraham the founder of the Temple, &c. Pittie it were, that the last of the Prophets should not honour that which was first instituted by the first of men. If wee will rather beleeue that Arabian before mentioned, we shall finde another originall; namely, That whereas two Nations of the Indians, called Zechian and Albarachuma, had vsed to goe about their Idols naked and shauen, with great howlings, kissing the corners, and casting stones vpon an heape, which was heaped vp in honour of their gods, and that twice euery yeere, in the Spring, and in Autumne: the Arabians had learned the same of the Indians, and practised the same at Mecca, in honour of Venus (casting stones backe betweene their legs, the parts of Venus) in the time of Mahomet. Neither did Mahomet abrogate this, as he did other Idolatrous Rites: onely for modesties sake they were enioyned to gird a piece of linnen about their Reines. Petrus Alphonsi [a] an ancient Author, who of a Iew had become a Christian, thus relateth this Historie. The Ammonites and Moabites erected two Idols, one of white stone called Mercurie, in honour of Mars: the other of blacke, called Chamos, in honour of Saturne. Twice a yeere these men ascended to worship them; when the Sunne entred into Aries, in honour of Mars, and then at their departure they cast stones (as before is said:) when the Sunne entred into Libra, in honour of Saturne; at which time they sacrificed naked, with their heads shauen. The Arabians also worshipped them: Mahomet did not abolish them, but placed the Image of Saturne in a corner, with his back-part forwards; and buried the Image of Mars in the ground, and laid a stone ouer it. These stones he permitted them to kisse, and with shauen crownes, and naked backes to cast stones backwards betweene their legs, which they say, is done to scarre away the Deuill. This is suffered to bee done at Mecca in honour of Venus. But wee haue alreadie heard, that Venus was the ancient Arabian and Saracenicall Deitie, to whom they performed such Rites of old.

Sup. cap. 5.

Mecca, or (as they call it) Macca, signifying an Habitation, containeth in it about sixe thousand houses fairely built, like those of Italy: Other walls it hath not, then such as Nature hath enuironed it with; namely, With high and barren Mountaines round about. Some [b] report, That betweene the Mountaines and the Citie are pleasant gardens, abundance of Figs, Grapes, Apples, Melons, and that there is store also of Flesh and Water. But it seemeth, that this is of later industrie, not of Natures indulgence, if it be true. For Lud. Barthema [c], or Vertoman, being there in the yeere 1503. saith, That the place was accursed of GOD, as not bringing forth Hearbs, Trees, Fruites, or any thing, and besides, hauing great scarcitie of water, and is serued with these things from other places. It is gouerned by a King (tributarie, then to the Soldan, now to the Turke) called the Seriffo, lineally descended from their great Seducer, by his daughter Fatima (the onely issue of this libidinous poligamous Prophet) married to Hali. All of this kindred are called Emyri, that is, Lords, cloathed with (or at least, wearing Turbants of) greene, which colour the Mahumetans will not suffer other men to weare.

[c] Vertoman. lib. 1. cap. 14.

The number of Pilgrimes which resort hither, is incredible. From Cairo commeth a Carouan of deuotion, some to Mammon, some to Mahomet, either for trade of Merchandize, or for Superstition, and another yeerely from Damascus: besides those which come from the Indies, Æthiopia, Arabia, Persia, &c. Lud. Barthema saith, That (at his being at Mecca) of the Carouan of Damasco wherein he went, were fiue and thirtie thousand Camels, and about fortie thousand persons: of that of Cairo were threescore and foure thousand Camels, and now in these times about fortie thousand Camels, Mules, and Dromedaries, and fiftie thousand persons, besides the Arabian Carouan, and of other Nations.

This Mart of Mecca is much impaired, since the Portugales haue intercepted the Indian commodities, which by a Carouan from thence, were wont to be brought hither.

Let me desire the Reader to haue patience, and goe along on this Pilgrimage, with one of these Carouans, thorow these Arabian Deserts to Mecca and Medina: and because that of Cairo is the chiefe, wee will bestow our selues in it, and obserue what Rites they obserue before they set forth: what by the way, and at the intended places of their deuotion. [d] Touching the necessitie whereof; they thinke, that they which goe not once in their liues, shall, after death, goe to the Deuill. Yea, some, for deuotion, plucke out their eyes after so holy a sight.

The moneth Ramazan (or Ramadham, the ninth moneth in their Kalendar, containing thirtie daies, as you haue heard) is their Lent; falling sometime high, sometime low, being that whole moneth, during which time the Pilgrimes and Merchants resort to Cairo from Asia, Greece, Barbarie, &c. After their [m] Lent ended, they obserue their Easter, or Feast, called Bairam, three dayes. Twentie dayes after this Feast, the Carouan is readie to depart. Against this time, they assemble themselues at a place, two leagues from Cairo (called Birca) attending the comming of the Captaine. This Captaine of the Carouan, whom they call Amarilla Haggi, is renewed euery third yeere; and to him the Grand Signior, euery voyage giueth eighteene Purses (each containing sixe hundred twentie fiue Duckats of gold) for the behoofe of the Carouan, and also to doe Almes vnto needfull Pilgrimes. He hath foure Chausi to serue him, and foure hundred Souldiers, two hundred Spachi, mounted on Dromedaries, and as many Ianizaries riding on Camels. The Chausi and Spachi, the Captaine maintaineth at his owne charges: The Ianizaries haue their prouision from Cairo. He hath eight Pilots for guides; which Office is hereditarie.

m Pilgrimage to Mecca. Hak.

They carrie sixe pieces of Ordnance to terrifie the Arabians, and to triumph at Mecca. The Merchandize that goeth by Land, payeth no custome; that which goeth by Sea, payeth ten in the hundred. At the Feast, before the Carouan setteth forth, the Captaine, with his Retinue and Officers, resort vnto the Castle of Cairo, before the Basha, which giueth vnto euery man a Garment, and that of the Captaine is wrought with Gold, the others according to their degree. Moreouer, he deliuereth vnto him the Chisua Tunabi, or Garment of the Prophet; a Vesture of Silke, wrought with these letters of Gold, La illa ill' alla Mahumet Resullala: that is, There are no gods but God, and Mahomet is the Messenger of God. After this, he deliuereth to him a Gate, wrought curiously with gold; and a couering of greene veluet, made in manner of a Pyramis, about nine palmes high, wrought with fine gold, to couer the Tombe of the Prophet Mahomet, and many other couerings besides of gold and silke to adorne it. The two former are for the house of Abraham in Mecca.

Then the Captaine hauing taken his leaue, departed accompanied with all the people of Cairo, in manner of a Procession, with singing, shouting, and a thousand Ceremonies besides, and passing the gate Bab. Nassara, laieth vp, in a Mosquita, the said Vestures very safely. This Ceremonie is performed with such publike resort, that it is not lawfull for any man to forbid his wife the going to this Feast: for shee may, vpon such a cause, separate her selfe from her husband, and lie with another man. The Camels which carrie the Vestures, being adorned with cloth of gold, and many little bels, the multitude streweth flowers and sweet water on them; others with fine cloth and towels touch the same, reseruing these for reliques. Twentie daies after this Feast, the Captaine, taking the vestures out of that Mosquita, repaireth to Birca, where his Tent abideth some ten daies. In this time, they which meane to follow the Carouan, resort thither, and amongst them, many women attired with trifles, tassels, and knots, accompanied with their friends, mounted on Camels. The night before their departure, they make great feasting and triumph, with discharging their Ordnance, Fire-works, &c. shouting, till, at the breake of day vpon the sound of a Trumpet, they march forward on their way.

From Cairo to Mecca is fortie daies iourney, trauelling from two a clocke in the morning till the Sun-rising: and then hauing rested till noone, they set forward, so continuing till night, obseruing this order till the end of their voyage, without change; except [n] at some places, where, in respect of water, they rest sometimes a day and a halfe to refresh themselues. The Carouan is diuided into three parts; the fore-ward, the maine battell, and the rere-ward. The fore-ward containeth about the third part of the people; and amongst these, the eight Pilots, a Chausi, and foure knaues, with bulls sinewes, which punish offendors on the soles of their feet. In the night time they haue foure or fiue men goe before with pieces of drie wood, which giue light: they follow the Starre, as the Mariners. Within a quarter of a mile followeth the maine Battell, with their Ordnance, Gunners, and fifteene Archers, Spachi; The chiefe Physician, with his Ointments and Medicines for the sicke, and Camels for them to ride on. Next goeth the faireſt Camell that may be found in the Turkes Dominion, decked with cloth of gold and silke, and carrieth a little cheſt, made of pure Legmame, in forme of the Israelitish Arke, containing in it the Alcoran, all written with great letters of gold, bound betweene two tables of Massie gold. This cheſt is couered with silke, during the voyage; but at their entring into Mecca and Medina, it is couered with cloth of gold, adorned with Iewels. This Camell is compassed about with Arabian Singers and Musicians, singing alway and playing vpon Instruments. After this follow fifteene other most faire Camels, euery one carrying one of the abouesaid vestures, being couered from top to toe with silke. Behinde these, goe the twentie Camels, which carry the Captaines money and prouision. After followeth the Standard of the great Signior, accompanied with Musicians and Souldiers, Souldiers, and behinde theſe, leſſe then a mile, followeth the rere-ward, the greateſt part Pilgrimes; the Merchants for ſecuritie, going before: for in this voyage it is needfull and vſuall, that the Captaines beſtow Preſents, Garments, and Turbants vpon the chiefe Arabians, to giue him free paſſage, receiuing ſometimes, by pilferings ſome damage notwithſtanding. They paſſe by certaine weake Caſtles in the way, Agerut, Nachel, Acba, Biritem, betweene which two laſt is the Riuer of Iethro, and the Ponds of Midian, where Moſes ſate down. At Iebhir, the firſt Towne ſubiect to the Seriffo of Mecca, they are receiued with much ioy, and well refreſhed with the plentie which that place yeeldeth. They finde other filthy Commodities alſo more then plentie, which fact (they hold) purgeth them from a multitude of ſinnes, and encreaſeth their deuotion to proſecute the voyage. The next day they goe towards Bedrihonem, in which place groweth ſhrubs, whereout iſſueth balme. Hereby they lodge one night, in memory of a victory here obtained againſt the Chriſtians, at the earneſt prayers of their Prophet, dreaming of Drums, heere ſtill ſounded by Angels, as they paſſe. The next morning by Sun-riſing, they arriue at Bedrihonem, where euery one waſhed himſelfe from top to toe, couering their priuities with a cloth, and their ſhoulders with another white one; and they which can goe in this habite to Mecca, merit more; they which cannot make a vow to offer a Ram at the Mountaine of Pardons. After this waſhing, it is not lawfull for any man or woman to kill a Flea or Lowſe with their hands or nailes, till they haue accompliſhed their Vowes at that Mountaine.

This night they come within two miles of Mecca. The next morning they march on, and the Seriffo meeting them, reſigneth his gouernment to the Captaine, during his abode there: and the Captaine giueth him a garment of cloth of gold, with other Iewels. After this, hauing eaten together vpon Carpets and Hides, they take with them the gate and garment abouesaid, and goe, attended but with few, to the Moſquita, and there cauſe the old to bee pulled downe, and put the new couerture on the houſe of Abraham: and the old veſture is the Eunuches which ſerue in the ſaid Moſquita, which ſell it deare to the Pilgrimes, euery little piece being accounted a moſt holy Relique. And well may it be ſo, for (can you doubt of it?) putting the ſame vnder the head of a man at his death, all his ſinnes muſt, by vertue heereof be pardoned. They take away the old doore, which is the Seriffoes fee, and ſet in place the new. Thus after ſome Oriſons, the Captaine returneth to his pauilion, the Seriffo remaineth in the Citie.

That you may be the better acquainted with this Moſquita, & houſe of Abraham, you are to know, [o] that in the middeſt of the Citie is the great Moſquita, built (they ſay) in the time when their Prophet liued. It is foure-ſquare, euery ſquare halfe a mile, being in all the circuit two miles, in manner of a Cloyſter: The galleries round about are in manner of foure ſtreets; theſe ſtreets being ſeparated from each other with Pillars, of Marble ſome, and ſome of Lime and Stone. In the middeſt of all ſeparate from the reſt, is the houſe of Abraham. This Moſquita hath foureſcore and nineteene gates, and fiue ſteeples, from whence the Taliſmani call the people to their deuotion. And the Pilgrimes, which are not prouided of Tents, reſort hither, men and women lying together; their Houſe of Prayer becomming a den of Theeues. Barthema ſaith, that this Temple is round, like the Coliſeo at Rome. That at euerie entrance is a deſcent of ten or twelue ſteps, on both ſides whereof ſtand Iewellers, which ſell gems onely. Within, it is vaulted, gilded, and odoriferous, beyond what can be ſpoken: for there are foure or fiue hundred men which ſell powders to preſerue dead corpſes, and other ſweets. It ſeemeth, that ſince his time the temple and houſe of Abraham are altered. This [p] houſe is foure-ſquare, made of ſpeckled ſtone, twentie paces high, and fortie in circuit. And vpon one ſide of this houſe, within the wall, there is a ſtone of a ſpan long, and halfe a ſpan broad, which ſtone (they ſay) fell downe from heauen; a voice from heauen at the ſame fall, being heard, that whereſoeuer this ſtone fell, there ſhould be built the houſe of GOD, wherein hee will heare the praiers of ſinners. Then was the Stone [q] as white as ſnow, but now, through the kiſſes of ſinners, it is become ſo blacke as it is. The entrance into this houſe is ſmall and high. There are without this houſe one and thirtie pillars of braſſe vpon ſquare ſtones, ſuſtaining a threed of Copper, reaching from one to another, on which are faſtened many burning Lampes. The founder of theſe was Solyman. Being entred into this houſe through that difficult paſſage, there ſtand two pillars of Marble at the entrance: in the middeſt are three of Aloes-wood, couered with tyles of India, of a thouſand colours, which ſerue to vnder-prop the Terratza, or roofe. It is ſo darke, that they can hardly ſee within for want of light; nor is it without an euill ſmell. Without the gate fiue paces, is the Pond Zunzun; that bleſſed Pond which the Angell ſhewed to Agar for her ſonne Iſmael.

Of their Feaſt Baraim is ſaid alreadie: About ſixe daies after they be come hither to Mecca, they celebrate another Feaſt called Bine Baraim, that is, the great Feaſt, which is alſo called, The Feaſt of the Ram. In thoſe daies ſpace they prepare themſelues hereunto with due ceremonies, ceremonies. Firſt, departing from the Carouan, guided with ſuch as are skilfull in the way, they goe twentie or thirtie in a companie walking thorow a ſtreet, which aſcendeth by little and little, till they come vnto a certaine gate, whereon is written in Marble, Babel Salema; that is, the gate of Health. And from this place is deſcried the great Moſquita, and twice ſaluted, ſaying, Peace to thee, Meſſenger of God. Then proceeding on their way, they finde an Arch on their right hand, whereon they aſcend fiue ſteps, vpon which is a great void place made of ſtone: after deſcending fiue other ſteps, and proceeding the ſpace of a flight-ſhoot, they finde another Arch, like vnto the firſt; and this way, from the one Arch to the other, they goe and come ſeuen times, ſaying alwaies ſome of their prayers, which (they ſay) the afflicted Hagar ſaid, whiles ſhe ſought and found not water for her ſonne. After this Ceremonie, thy enter into the Moſquita; and drawing neere vnto the houſe of Abraham, they go ronnd about it other ſeuen times, alwaies ſaying, This is the houſe of GOD, and of his ſeruant ABRAHAM. This done, they goe and kiſſe that blacke ſtone abouesaid; and then goe they to the Pond Zunzun, and in their apparell, as they be, waſh themſelues from head to foot, ſaying, Tobah Allah, Tobah Allah, Pardon Lord, Pardon Lord; drinking alſo of that muddie vnſauourie water: and thus returne they, cleanſed from all their ſins. Euerie Pilgrime performeth theſe Ceremonies once at the leaſt; the deuouter ſort often.

An hundred yeeres ſince theſe Ceremonies were ſomewhat different, after Barthemaes [r] relation. On the three and twentieth of May, the people (before day) compaſſed that houſe of Abraham ſeuen times, alway touching and kiſſing euery corner. Ten or twelue paces from this houſe was another, in manner of a Chappell with three or foure gates, and in the middeſt thereof a pit of brackiſh water, threeſcore and ten yards deepe. Thereat ſtand ſixe or eight men, appointed to draw water for the people; who after their ſeuen-fold Ceremonie come to the brink, and ſay, All this be for the honor of God, and the pittifull God pardon me my ſins. Then doe thoſe other powre vpon them three buckets full of water, from the top of their heads to their feet, be their garments neuer ſo coſtly.

[ſ] The Pilgrims going to the Mountaine of Pardons.

The Carouan [ſ] hauing abode at Mecca fiue dayes, the night before the euening of their Feaſt, the Captaine with all his company, ſetteth forwards towards the Mountaine of Pardons, called Iabel Arafata, diſtant from Mecca fifteene miles. This Mountaine, or ſmall Hill rather, is in compaſſe two miles, inuironed round about with the goodlieſt Plaine that a mans eye hath ſeen, and that Plaine compaſſed with high Mountains. Vpon the ſide towards Mecca, there are many pipes of cleare-freſh water, wherewith the people refreſh themſelues, and their cattell. Adam and Eue, when they were baniſhed Paradiſe, after they had beene ſeparated fortie yeeres, one in Nubia, and the other in India (as you heard before) met at this pleaſant place, and here inhabited and built a little houſe, which they call at this day Beyt-Adam, the houſe of Adam.

Hither come alſo the ſame day the other Carouans of Arabia and Damaſco, and all the inhabitants for ten dayes iourney round about, ſo that at one time here is to be ſeene aboue two hundred thouſand perſons, and three hundred thouſand cattell. Now all this company meeting together, the night before the Feaſt, the three Hoſtes caſt themſelues into a triangle, ſetting the Mountaine in the middeſt, and fill Heauen and Earth with ſhouting, ſinging, hallowing, gun-ſhot and fire-works all that night. The next day being their Feaſt, in ſilence they attend their ſacrifices and prayers onely. And in the euening, they which haue horſes, mount thereon, and approach as nigh vnto the Mountaine as they can: others make the beſt ſhift they can on foot, giuing euer vnto the Captaine of Cairo the chiefe place, the ſecond to the Captaine of Damaſco, and the third to the Captaine of Arabia. And being all approached, there commeth one of the Santones mounted on a Camell well furniſhed, who at the other ſide of the Mountaine aſcendeth fiue ſteps into a Pulpit made for that purpoſe, and there maketh a Sermon to the people. The Contents whereof, are the benefits which GOD hath beſtowed on them deliuerance from Idolatrie, giuing them the houſe of Abraham, and the Mountaine of Pardons: adding, that the mercifull GOD commanded his Secretary Abraham, to build him an houſe in Mecca, wherein his ſucceſſours might be heard, at which time all the Mountaines in the world came together thither with ſufficiencie of ſtones for the building therof, except that little low hill, which for pouertie could not goe to diſcharge this debt: for the which it became ſorrowfull, and wept thirtie yeeres, at the end whereof God in compaſſion ſaid vnto it, Weepe no more, my daughter, comfort thy ſelfe: I will cauſe all thoſe that goe to the houſe of my ſeruant Abraham, that they ſhall not be abſolued from their ſinnes, vnleſſe they firſt come to doe thee reuerence, to keepe in this place their holieſt Feaſt. And this I haue commanded to my people by the mouth of my friend and Prophet Mahomet. This ſaid, he exhorteth them to the loue of God, to prayer, and almes. The Sermon ended, at the Sun-ſetting they make three prayers: firſt for the Seriffo, ſecond for the grand Signior, the third, for the people: to which prayers all with one voyce, cry Amin la Alla,

Digitized by Google

Alla, Amin Ia Alla; Be it so Lord. Barthema addeth to the Sermon the Cadi or Santones exhortation to weepe for their sinnes, and knocke their breasts, with inuocation of Abraham and Isaac, to pray for the people of the Prophet; and reporteth further, that there were killed on the first day more then thirtie thousand Rams, or Sheepe toward the West, and giuen to the poore; of which there were thirtie or fortie thousand. Thus hauing had the Santones blessing, and saluted the Mountaine of Pardon, they returne the way they came, in the middest of which way, is a place called Mina: and a little from thence foure great Pillars, two on each side of the way. If any passe not thorow the middest of these, he loseth all the merit of his Pilgrimage. And from the Mount of Pardons till they be passed these pillars, none dare looke backeward, for feare lest his sins, which he hath left in the Mountaine, returne to him againe.

Being past these Pillars, euery one lighteth downe, seeking in this sandie field fiftie or threescore little stones, which they binde in an handkerchiefe, and carry to that place of Mina, where they stay fiue dayes, because at that time there is a Fayre, free and franke of all custome. And in this place are other three Pillars not together, but set in diuers places. Monuments of those three Apparitions, which the Deuill made to Abraham, an to [t] Ismael his sonne: for they now a dayes make no mention of Isaac, as if he had neuer beene borne. They say, that when as Abraham at Gods command went to offer his sonne Ismael, the deuill dehorted him from the same: but seeing his labour lost, he went to Ismael, and bid him pittie himselfe. But Ismael tooke vp stones and threw at him, saying, I defend me with God from the Deuill the offender. These words the Pilgrimes repeate in their visitation of these Pillars, hurling away the stones they had gathered. From hence halfe a mile is a Mountaine, whither Abraham went to sacrifice his sonne. In the same is a great den whither the Pilgrimes resort to make their prayers, and there is a great stone separated in the middest by the knife of Ismael (they say) at the time of this sacrifice. Barthema reporteth that heere at Mecca he saw two Vnicornes: which I mention, because since that time I haue not found any Author which hath testified the like sight. They were sent to the Seriffo for a present by an Æthiopian King.

The Caroan departing for Medina, as soone as they come in sight thereof (they call the place The Mountaine of Health) they alight, and going vp the hill, shout with loud voyces and say, Prayer, and health be vnto thee, O Prophet of God, Prayer and health be vpon thee, O beloued of GOD. They proceed on their iourney; and lodge that night within three miles of Medina, and the next morning are receiued with solemnitie of the Gouernour. Medina [u] is a Citie two miles in circuit, with faire houses of lime and stone, and a square Mosquita in the middest, lesse, but more sumptuous then that of Mecca. This is called Medina Tal Nabi, that is, the Citie of the Prophet; in Barthemaes time, it contained about three hundred houses, and was very barren, one garden of Dates excepted: but now they haue store of fruits. This Temple is square, an hundred paces in length, fourescore in breadth. It hath in it an Ile made Arch-wise, supported with foure hundred Pillars, and supporting (as he saith) three thousand Lampes. In one part of this Mosquita was a Librarie of fortie fiue Mahumeticall bookes. Also within the same (in a corner thereof) is a [x] Tombe built vpon foure Pillars with a Vault, exceeding in height the Mosquita: being couered with Lead, and the top all inameld with gold, and an halfe Moone vpon the top, wrought within verie artificially with gold. Below there are round about great yron staires ascending vp to the middest of the Pillars, and in the middest lyeth buried the bodie of Mahumet (not in an yron chest attracted by Adamant at Mecca, as some affirme.) Or to say the truth, neither here nor at Mecca can they shew this Seducers bodie. For the Captaine of that Carouan of Damasco, in which Barthema went on this Pilgrimage, offered to the chiefe Priest of that Mosquita, three thousand Saraffi of gold, to shew him the bodie of the Nabi or Prophet; that (saith he) being the onely cause of my comming. The Priest answered proudly: How can those eyes, wherewith thou hast committed so much euill in the world, see him by whom GOD hath created Heauen and Earth? The Captaine replied, True Sir, but doe me that fauour, to let me see his bodie, and I will presently plucke out mine [y] eyes. The Priest answered, O Sir, I will tell you the truth. It is true, that our Prophet would die heere to giue vs good example: for hee might haue died at Mecca, but such was his humilitie for our instruction: and presently after hee was dead, he was carried by the Angels into heauen. And where (saith the Captaine) is Iesus Christ the Sonne of Marie? The Priest answered, At the feet of Mahomet.

[u] Description of Medina: the word signifies the people.

[x] In Barthema it is said that it was a graue (fossa) vnder the earth: and there were also Hali, Othman, Bubecher, and Homar, with the bookes of their ordinances and Sects.

[y] Which some are reported to doe indeed after their so holy pilgrimage-sights, not further polluting their eyes.

In the night time by some fire-workes in the steeple, they would haue gulled the credulous people with opinion of miracle, vsing out-cryes in the night, saying, Mahomet would rise againe: and when the Mamalukes could see no such light shine forth of Mahomets Tombe, as they rumoured, they said, It was because they were slaues, and weake in the faith, and could not see heauenly sights.

To

To returne to the discouery of this supposed Sepulchre: Ouer the bodie they haue built a Tombe of speckled stone, a brace and halfe high, and ouer the same another of Legmame, foure-square in manner of a Piramis. Round about the Sepulchre there hangeth a curtaine of silke, which hideth the Sepulture from their sight that stand without. Beyond this in the same Mosquita are other two Sepulchres of Fatima and Hali: (who yet, as some say, was buried at Massadalli, neere Cusa: others say, hee neuer died, but his comming is still expected.) The attendants on these Sepulchres are fiftie Eunuches, white and tawnie, of which, three onely of the eldest and best esteemed white Eunuches, may enter within the Tombe; which they doe twice a day to light the Lampes, and for other seruices. The other attend on the Mosquita, and those two other Sepulchres: Where euery one may goe and touch at his pleasure, and take of the earth for deuotion, as many doe. The Captaine with great pompe presenteth that Pyramid-like Vestment (whereof you haue heard) for the Tombe, the Eunuches taking away the old, and laying on the new: and after this, other vestures for the ornament of the Mosquita. And the people without deliuer vnto the Eunuches, each man somewhat to touch the Tombe therewith: which they keepe as a Relique with great deuotion.

Here is a stately Hospitall built by Cassachi, or Rosa, the wife of great Soliman, richly rented, and nourishing many poore people. A mile from the Citie are certaine houses, in one of which they say Mahomet dwelt, hauing on euery side many Date-trees, amongst which there are two growing out of one stocke exceeding high, which their Prophet, forsooth, grafted with his owne hands. The fruit thereof is alway sent to Constantinople for a Present to the Grand-Signior, and is said to be the Blessed fruit of the Prophet. Also there is a little Mosquita, wherein three places are counted holy. The first, they affirme their Prophet made his first prayer in, after hee knew God. The second is that, whither he went when he would see the house of Abraham. Where when he sate downe to that intent, the Mountaines opened from the top to the bottome, to shew him the house, and after closed againe as before. The third, is the middest of the Mosquita, where is a Tombe made of Lime and Stone foure square, and full of sand, wherein they say was buried that blessed Camell which Mahomet was alway wont to ride vpon. Euen still (as one Mr. Simons a Merchant and beholder thereof reported to me) they haue a superstitious custome at Cairo, of carrying the leg of Mahomets Camell (as they affirme) in a Coach, the women in zeale of their blinde deuotion, hurling their Shashes to receiue thence some holy and blessed touch, for their Mahumeticall edification: as the Papists ascribe no small holinesse to the touch of our Ladies Image at Loretto with their beades, or other implements of their superstition, as my friend Mr. Barkley, an eye-witnesse, hath told me. Maruell much we may, that the Souldiers which crucified Christ, and parted his garments by lot, and Iudas which kissed him, and the Deuill also which carried his bodie out of the wildernesse, and set it on a pinacle of the Temple, did not from such holy touches acquire much holinesse. But here a good intent was wanting, which though the Mahumetans haue, yet a Camels leg is not so holy as our Ladies Image; Grant it: but they pretend Tradition and Deuotion no lesse then these: and otherwise, there is as little warrant [m] for that house and Image of our Ladie that they are true, as of the other. Blessed VIRGIN! whom all generations call blessed, and iustly admire for that holinesse, which with thankefulnesse to God, and charitie to man, wee are to imitate; then these stones and blockes should thus vsurpe thy name, and (in a worse sacriledge) diuine worship, yea more then those holies of diuine institution, which were so farre from conueying [n] holinesse by touching, that being themselues touched by any vncleane thing, they receiued thence infection of vncleanesse. And if Christ himselfe should thus be honoured, where, in all the Christian world are such Vowes, Pilgrimages, and Deuotions in his name, as here to the supposed Ladie of Loretto? As if they would rather be Mariani then Christiani in their Religion. But who brought vs now to Loretto? Nay, who can but in reading the one, thinke of the other, both being frequented so generally in Pilgrimages, Offerings, and I know not what superstitions? Only in this is Loretto worse, that it abuseth more holy names of God, and his Saints, to like vnholy holies. But of this subiect, that Reuerend and learned Deane, Dr. Sutcliffe hath largely and learnedly written, both in confutation of that impious Pamphlet of [o] Gifferds Calsino-Turcismus, and plainely paraleling the Mahumetans and Turkes in verie many points of their Religions. To him I referre the industrious Reader. Yea, the verie Narration of the Saracenicall and Turkish Rites by vs in this Booke, shall bee sufficient to them which know the Popish, in many things to discerne and acknowledge the Kindred, and like hellish descent both; like Sampsons Foxes, hauing their tayles knit together with fire-brands, which both fill and emptie the world with their flames; howsoeuer their heads looke contrarie, one toward Christ, the other toward Mahomet. That which I speake of Popish, I vnderstand of that which our Aduersaries maintaine by authoritie (not from Scriptures, or the ancient Councels Councels and Fathers, but) from the Popes pretended Supremacie and visible Monarchie, as Head and Vice-God in the Church; the Alcoran, whereof is his Decretals, Extrauagants, Consistorie, Constitutions, and such Canons as p their holy Ghost sent from Rome in a boxe, lately thundered at Trent besides, and against the Canonicall Scripture, which holy men of God writ as they were moued by the holy Ghost. But let vs backe to Medina. On the other side of the Citie are Tombes of the holy Mahumetans, Abubachar, Ottoman, Omar, which Bartema saith, were buried in the same Temple with Mahumet, and all vnder the earth. A daies iourney from Medina is a steepe mountaine, hauing no passage but one narrow path, which was made by Hali: who fleeing from the pursuing Christians, and hauing no way of escape, drew out his sword, and diuided this mountaine, and so saued his life. The Captaine at his returne to q Cairo, is with a sumptuous Feast receiued of the Basha, and presented with a garment of cloth of gold: he againe presenteth the Alcoran, out of the chest to the Basha to kisse, and then it is laid vp againe. By this time your pilgrimage hath more then wearied you. I haue made bold to trouble you a little longer, with this argument of Mahomets Meccan Pilgrimage, out of the Maronites collection from Arabike Authors.

p Because at Trent nothing might bee decreed, but what was first sent and ordered from Rome: hence grew this Prouerbe.

q When the Soldans raigned in Egypt, they had a Ceremonie after the Pilgrimage, to cut in pieces a Camel which had carried their Alcoran in great solemnitie to the Soldans Palace: euery particle of the beast, and of his furniture being esteemed, and reserued as a holy Relique: the same is now performed (saith Dousa) at Constantinople. The like was in Beniamins dayes at Bagedat: & I know not what Camel-superstition is often mentioned in the Alcoran.

Mecca chiefe Citie of Arabia Deserta, is called also in the Alcoran, Becca, the holy Citie of the Moslemans, both for Mahomeds reuelations there had, and for the Temple especially, called by them Kabe, or, The Square House, which they fable, was first built by Angels, and often visited by Adam himselfe: and lest it should bee destroied by the Floud, was lifted vp to the sixth Heauen, called Dar-assalem (The habitation of peace) after the Floud, Abraham built another house like to the former, by the shadow thereof sent from heauen to him. Thus writeth Iacub Ben-Sidi Aali. This is a Chappell, not very large, of square figure, open with foure Gates, by one of which the Ministers haue accesse; the other are opened but once in the yeere. It glittereth all with Gold, and is couered with vests of Gold, an encompassed with elegant Iron-worke, to keepe off neere commers. No man may enter it but certaine Elders, which haue long beards to their breasts, and remaine there night and day. Neere to this Chappel is a large marble Floore adorned about with eight huge Lights, and sixe and thirtie Lamps of Gold, perpetually burning. Three pathes leade thereto whereon men and women goe bare-foot to the Chappel, which they compasse seuen times with great reuerence, mumbling their deuotions; kisse the corners, sigh and implore the aide of Abraham and Mohamed. Round about all this space is a stately building of very elegant structure, as it were a wall; in which are numbred sixteene principall Gates to goe in and out, where hang innumerable Lamps and Lights of incredible greatnesse. Within this space betwixt the rewes of Pillars are Shops of Sellers, of Gemmes, Spices, Silkes, in incredible store from India, Arabia, Æthiopia: that it seemes rather the Mart of the World, then a Temple. Here doe men kisse and embrace with great zeale a certaine stone, which they call Hagiar Alasuad, or, The Blacke stone, which they say, is a Margarite of Paradise, the light whereof gaue lustre to all the Territorie of Mecca. Before this, saith Iacub Ben-Sidi Aali, Mohamed commanded to weepe, to aske God pardon for sinnes, and to crie with sighs and teares for ayde against their enemies. After they haue visited that Chappel, and the Stone, they goe to another large Chappel within the Temple, where is the Well, called Zam Zam; which is (saith the said Author) the Well which flowed from the feet of Ismael, when hee was thirstie and wept: which Hagar first seeing, cried out Zam Zam, in the Coptite or old Ægyptian Tongue; that is, Stay, stay. There are many which draw water thence and giue to the Pilgrimes, who are commanded to wash therewith their bodie and head three times to drinke thereof, and if they can, to carrie some of it with them, and to pray God for health and pardon of sinnes. To this building is added a Noble Schoole or Vniuersitie, A. H. 949. by Solyman who adorned it by his costs by maruellous structure, and endowed it with reuenues.

After these visitations, all the Pilgrimes goe to a certaine Temple on a Hill, ten miles from the Citie, and flocking in great numbers, buy according to their abilitie, one or more Rams for sacrifice. And because some are of opinion, that the Mohamedans haue no sacrifices, we will relate what Iacub Ben-Sidi Aali hath written of their ceremonies. Dhahhia (so the Arabs call a Sacrifice) is a killing of beasts in the worship, and for the offering of God, and they are Lambs of sixe or seuen moneths at least; Camels of fiue yeeres, Bullockes of two yeeres. The males are to be chosen before females, and those cleane, white, infected by no naturall or violent defect, fatte, corpulent, horned. Euery man must kill his owne Sacrifices, and rippe them with his owne hands, except in vrgent necessities, and then he may substitute others to doe it for him. For euery one before they eate any thing, are bound to eate some piece of the Sacrifice; the rest, if they can, to giue cheerefully to the poore. They which are admitted to these Oblations, let them offer one Ram for themselues, another for the soules of the Dead, another for Mahomed, that in the day of Iudgement he deliuer them from calamities. These Sacrifices are offered to God in imitation of Abraham, which would haue offered his sonne Ismael to God; who going out of the Citie with him to a certaine Hill, called Mena, where Territorie of Mecca.

Whiles the Pilgrims are heere buſied in their ſacrifices, Beduine Arabs aſſault the Carauans, and robbing them, flee to the Hils, and inacceſſible refuges, ſo ſwift as if they did flie. And although all Armes are forbidden in the Territorie of Mecca (which containeth on the Eaſt ſixe miles, on the North twelue, on the Weſt eighteene, on the South foure and twentie, in which reſpect Mecca & Medina are called Atharamain) yet they ceaſe not to infeſt, & Pilgrims are here forced to Armes. This Territorie is barren for want of water and raine, hath very few Herbs and Plants, or other pleaſures of Groues, Gardens, Vines, or greene obiects; but is roaſted with the Sunne, both land and people. And this haply is the cauſe that no man may breake a bough if they finde any Tree. Only the ſhrubs of Balſam, brought hither from Cairo thriue well, and are now ſo propagated, that all the ſweet liquor of Balſam is carried onely from this Citie, thorow all Regions in great plentie. Heere are ſtore of Pigeons, which becauſe they are of the ſtocke of that which came to Mahomeds eare (as the Moſlemans fable) no man may take or ſcarre them. A certaine Scerif enioyeth the dominion of this Citie, and all the Land of Medina by inheritance, called Alamam-Alhaſcemi, that is, the Captaine or chiefe Haſcemee, deſcended of Haſcem great Grand-father of Mohamed; Who were neuer depriued of their dominion by the Ottoman or Soldan. Yea, the Ottoman calls not himſelfe the Lord of Mecca and Medina, but the humble ſeruant. Yet this Scerif notwithſtanding his reuenues and gifts by Pilgrims and Princes, through the Beduines ſpoiles, and his kindreds quarrels ſeeking the Soueraigntie, is alway poore. Therefore doth the Ottoman beſtow the third part of the reuenues of Egypt, and to protect the Pilgrims from the inuaſions of the Arabs.

Mohameds birth and life.

Medina is called The Citie by Antonomaſia, and Medina Alnabi, that is, The Citie of the prophet: becauſe Mohamed, when he was forced to forſake his Countrey Mecca, betooke himſelfe to this Citie, then called Iathreb, and was made Lord thereof. It is an errour that he was borne here, for he was borne and brought vp at Mecca.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Succeſſors of MAHOMET, of their different Sects, and of the diſperſing of that Religion, through the World.

MAHOMET hauing with Word and Sword publiſhed his Alcoran (as you haue heard) his followers after his death ſucceeding in his place, ſucceeded him in tyrannie. Eubocar, ſurnamed Abdalla, vndertooke the defence of that faithleſſe Faith and Kingdome, and that (as his Predeceſſor had done) partly by ſubtiltie, partly by force. For when as Mahumets Diſciples had buried their new Religion, with their old Maſter, except a few of his kindred, hee applied his wits to recall them; and whereas [a] Hali, Mahomets neereſt kinſman and ſonne-in-law diſagreed from him, and was perſwaded by the Iewes to profeſſe himſelfe a Prophet, with promiſe of their beſt aide and aſſiſtance: Eubocar (or Ebuber) reconciled him, and as the Arabian Chronicle witneſſeth, conuerted many Infidels, and ſlue the gaine-ſayers. He raigned one yeere, and three moneths and thirteene dayes. The next ſucceſſour Aomar (ſaith the ſame Author, Leo [b] termeth him Homar) ordained their prayers in the moneth Ramazan, and that the Alcoran ſhould be read through, which he cauſed to be written out, and vnited in one booke: He conquered Egypt by Hanir his Captaine; after that Damaſco, Ieruſalem, Gaza, and a great part of Syria were ſubdued. He raigned ten yeeres and ſixe moneths. [c] Odmen or Ozimen ſucceeded, and raigned twelue yeeres, and after him Hali; and next to him his ſonne Alhacem; and then Moaui the great Conquerour, &c. Theſe foure Eubocar, Aomar, Ozimen, and Hali, are the foure great Doctors of the Mahumetan Law: and Mahomet before his death propheſied that they ſhould ſucceed him, and of their worthineſſe.

But as Mahomet had pretended the name of Gabriel, to the dreames of Sergius, and other Apoſtata's of the Chriſtians and Iewes, diſagreeing both with the truth and themſelues: ſo it was not long, that this vntempered mortar would hold together theſe buildings. For the [d] Alcoran being (according to diuers Copies thereof) read diuerſly, was cauſe of different Sects among them. Ozimen, to preuent the danger hereof, commanded that all the Copies of their Law ſhould be brought and deliuered into the hands of Zeidi and Abdalla: who who conferring their Copies, ſhould make one booke, and where they diſſented, ſhould read according to the Copie of Corais. Thus theſe two according to the Kings Edict, to ſtabliſh an vniformitie in the reading of the Alcoran, hauing out of all thoſe Copies framed one to be Athenticall, burned all others. Yet were they deceiued of their hopes, partly, becauſe Hali, Abitalib, and Ibenmuzod, would not bring in their bookes, of which that of Hali was the ſame which Mahumet had left, and was after by the Iewes altered, putting out and in at their pleaſure: & partly, becauſe that booke, which they had thus culled out of the reſt, to remain Canonical, was loſt, & of the foure Copies which they had written therof, by fire & negligence al periſhed. Eletragig would haue vſed the like policie after; but this many-headed ſerpent, which could not in the ſhel be killed, much leſſe in his riper growth could be reformed.

Thoſe foure Doctors aforeſaid, emulous of each other, intending their owne priuate ends, ſowed the ſeeds then, which fructifie in their venemous multiplication till this day, [e] Hali or Halli was Author of the Sect Imemia, which was embraced of the Perſians, Indians, and of many Arabians, and the Gelbines of Africa. Ozimen, or Odmen, began the Sect Baaneſia or Xefaia, and hath in diuers Countries his followers. Homar founded the Aneſia, followed of the Turkes, Syrians, and in Zahara in Afrike. Ebocar (otherwiſe called Ebuber, or Abubequer) taught the Sect Melchia, generally poſſeſſing Arabia and Africa. Theſe are holden as Saints in the Saracene Kalender, as [f] Scaliger teſtifieth, who had one in Semiarabike and Perſian, wherein ouer againſt the 27. of December was written, the death of Phetima) ſhe was the daughter of Muhamed) God haue mercy on her. Againſt the 10. of Ianuary, the death of Abu-Boker; God haue mercy on him: and ſo of the reſt. Againſt the 16. of Nouember, the beginning of the faſt Caphar: ſo they call the Chriſtians: & on the 25. of December, the birth of Ieſus. On the 17. of Ianuary, the birth of Moſes: Which I mention to ſhew what honor they aſcribe to them or rather that diſhonor, which in this cõfuſion of light with darknes, the Prince of darknes in the form of an Angel of light, doth vnto them. Frõ theſe 4. in proces of time aroſe other § 68. Sects of name, beſides other pedling factions of ſmaller reckoning. Amongſt the reſt the Morabites haue bin famous; liuing for the moſt part as Heremites, and profeſſing a morall Philoſophie, with principles different from the Alcoran. One of theſe not many yeers ſince, ſhewing the name of Mahomet in his breſt (there imprinted with Aqua fortis or ſome ſuch like matter) raiſed by a great number of Arabians in Afrike, & laid ſiege to Tripolis: where being betraied by one of his Captaines, his skin was ſent for a preſent to the grand Signior. Theſe Morobites affirm, that when Hali fought, he killed a 100000. Chriſtiãs with one ſtroke of his ſword, which was a 100. cubits in length. The Cobtini are a ſect ridiculous. One of them ſhewed himſelfe riding in the Country of Algier, on a Reed, reyned and bridled as a horſe; much honoured, for that on this Horſe, this Aſſe had (as he ſaid) rid an 100. leagues in one night. R. Moſes Ægyptius [h] writeth of two Sects of Moores, the one called Seperatiſts, the other Intelligents, or Vnderſtanders, both followed in their opinions by many Iewes. Theſe later were of opinion, that nothing in the world commeth to paſſe by chance or accident, neither in generall nor particular, but all are diſpoſed by the will and intent of God, as well the fall of a leafe, as the death of a man. The Seperatiſts in a contrary extreme, allow to man and beaſt a freedome, and that God rewardeth all creatures according to their merits or demerits: his prouidence extending it ſelfe to the fall of the leaues, to the way of the Ants: & if one be borne defectiue, it is better for him, then if he had bin perfect, and ſo if any aduerſitie befall him; for his reward ſhal be the greater in the world to com: yea, the beaſt which is ſlaughtered, & the Ants, Flea, or Louſe ſhall not loſe his reward from the Creator: the Mouſe alſo which hath not ſinned, & is killed of the Cat, ſhall there be recompenced. (Now beaſts pray for their ſoules, and Fleas and Lice prey vpon their bodies which hatched this beaſtly louſie Diuinitie.) The Intelligent beleeueth, that it is conuenient that men be puniſhed in this life, and for euer in hell, becauſe the Creator would: the Seperatiſt thinketh that vniuſt; and that whatſoeuer is puniſhed in this life, ſhall be rewarded in the next, becauſe ſuch is the Creators wiſdome. Neither may we beleeue the Rabbine, who reciting 5. differing opinions concerning the prouidence of God: firſt, of the Epicures, which exclude it wholly: ſecondly, of Ariſtotle: that it deſcended not beneath the Moon: thirdly, of the Intelligents: fourthly, of the Seperatiſts: fiftly, his own, which he attributeth to the law of Moſes, that euery man hath free-wil, and all good befals him in reward, al euil for puniſhmẽt, & what meaſure any man meteth, ſhal be meaſured to him again: but for other creatures, beaſts, plants, and their operations, as of a ſpider catching a fly, & the like [i] he attributeth with Ariſtotle vnto chance, & not to diuine prouidence, which he appropriateth in things below vnto man. Theſe opinions he aſcribeth; that of Ariſtotle to Iob, that of the Seperatiſts to Bildad, that of Sophar to the Intelligents, that of Eliphaz is the ſame with his own: & then let him with Eliphaz ſacrifice to expiate it. I. Leo. l. 3. writeth, that one Elefacim had written at large of the Mahumetan ſects: of which he reckoneth 72. principall (which agreeth with our former number) euery one accounting his owne to be good and true, in which a man may attaine ſaluation. And yet Leo there addeth, that in this age there are not found aboue two. [c] One is that of Leſhari; which in all Turkie, Arabia and Africa is embraced: the other Imamia, currant in Perſia and Coroſan (of which in his proper place more.) So that by Leo's iudgement, all which follow the rule Leſhari or Haſhari, are Catholike Mahumetans; although of theſe the ſame Author affirmes, that in Cairo and all Egypt are foure Religions different from each other, in Spirituall or Eccleſiaſtical Ceremonies, and alſo concerning their Ciuill and Canon Law; all founded on the Mahumetan Scripture in times paſt, by foure learned men, diuerſly conſtruing the generall rules to ſuch particulars, as ſeemed to them fitter for their followers; who diſagreeing in opinion, agree in affection, and conuerſe together, without hatred or vpbraiding each other. As for thoſe other Sects, it ſeemeth that they are, for the moſt part, long ſince vaniſhed: and thoſe differences which remaine, conſiſt rather in diuerſitie of rule, and order of profeſſion, then in differing Sects and Hereſies of Religion: except in ſome few, which yet remaine, of which [d] Leo thus reporteth: Foureſcore yeeres after Mahumet, one Elheſenibnu Ahilhaſen gaue certaine rules to his Diſciples, contrarie to the Alcoran principles, but writ nothing. About a hundred yeeres after Elharit Ibnu Eſed of Bagaded writ a booke vnto his Diſciples, condemned by the Calipha and Canoniſts. But about foureſcore yeeres after that, another great Clerke reuiued the ſame doctrine, and had many followers; yet hee and they were therefore condemned to death. But obtaining to haue triall of his opinions by diſputation, he ouerthrew his Aduerſaries, the Mahometane Lawyers: and the Caliſa fauoured the ſaid Sect, and erected Monaſteries for them. Their Sect continued, till Malicſah, of the Nation of the Turkes, perſecuted the ſame. But twenty yeeres after it was againe renewed, and one Elgazzuli (a learned man) writ ſeuen bookes, reconciling theſe Sectaries and the Lawyers together: which reconciliation continued till the comming of the Tartars: and Aſia and Afrike was full of theſe Reformers of their Law. In old time none but learned men might be admitted Profeſſors hereof: but within theſe laſt hundred yeeres euery ignorant Idiot profeſſeth it, ſaying, That learning is not neceſſary, but [e] the holy Spirit doth reueale to them which haue cleane hearts, the knowledge of the truth. Theſe contrary to the Alcoran ſing loue-ſongs and dances, with ſome phantaſticall extaſies: affirming themſelues to be rauiſhed of diuine loue. Theſe are great gluttons: they may not marry, but are reputed Sodomites.

The ſame our Author writeth of ſome which teach, that by good workes, faſting, and abſtinence, a man may attaine a Nature Angelicall, hauing his minde ſo purified that he cannot ſinne, although he would. But he muſt firſt paſſe through fifty degrees of Diſcipline: And although he ſinne before hee be paſt theſe fifty degrees, yet GOD doth not impute it to him. Theſe obſerue ſtrange and ineſtimable Faſts at the firſt; after they liue in all pleaſures of the world. Their rule was written in foure volumes, by a learned and eloquent man, Effehrauar: and by Ibnul-farid, another Author, in exact and moſt learned Verſe. That the Spheres, Elements, Planets, and Starres, are one God, and that no Faith nor Law can be erroneous, becauſe that all men (in their mindes) intend to worſhip that which is to bee worſhipped. And they beleeue that the knowledge of GOD is contained in one man, who is called Elcorb, elected and partaker of GOD, and in knowledge as GOD. There are other forty men amongſt them, called Elauted, that is, [f] Dunces, becauſe of their leſſe knowledge. When the Elcorb or Elcoth dyeth, his Succeſſour is choſen out of theſe: and into that vacant place of the fortie, they chuſe one out of another number of ſeuentie. They haue a third inferiour number of a hundred threeſcore and fiue (their Title I remember not) out of which they chuſe, when any of the threeſcore and tenne die. Their Law or Rule enioyneth them to wander through the World in manner of Fooles, or of great Sinners, or of the vileſt amongſt men. And vnder this cloke many are moſt wicked men, going naked without hiding their ſhame, and haue to deale with women in the open and common ſtreets like beaſts. Of this baſe ſort are many in Tunis, and farre more in Egypt, and moſt of all in Cairo. I my ſelfe (ſaith our Author) in Cairo, in the ſtreet called Bain Elcaſraim, ſaw one of them with mine eyes, take a beautifull Dame comming out of the Bath, and laid her downe in the middeſt of the ſtreet, and carnally knew her, and preſently when hee had left the woman, all the people ranne to touch her clothes, becauſe a holy man had touched them. And they ſaid, that this Saint ſeemed to doe a ſinne, but that hee did it not. Her husband knowing of it, reckoned it a rare fauour and bleſſing of GOD, and made ſolemne feaſting and gaue almes for that cauſe. But the Iudges, which would haue puniſhed him for the ſame, were like to bee ſlaine of the rude multitude: who haue them in great reputation of ſanctitie, and euery day giue them gifts and preſents.

There are another ſort that may be termed Caballiſts: which faſt ſtrangely, nor doe they eate the fleſh of any creature, but haue certaine meates ordained and appointed for euery houre of the day and night, and certain particular praiers, according to the dayes and months, numbring numbring their ſaid Prayers: and vſe to carry vpon them ſome ſquare things, painted with Characters and Numbers. They affirme, that the good Spirits appeare, and acquaint them with the affayres of the world. An excellent Doctor, named Boni, framed their rule and prayers, and how to make their ſquares: and it ſeemeth to me (who haue ſeene the worke) to be more Magicall then Cabalaſticall. One booke ſheweth their prayers and faſtings: the ſecond, their ſquare: the third, the vertue of the foureſcore and nineteene names of GOD, which I ſaw in the hand of a Venetian Iew at Rome. There is another rule in theſe Sects, called Suuach, of certaine Hermites which liue in Woods, and ſolitary places, feeding on nothing but hearbs and wilde fruites, and none can particularly know their life, becauſe of this ſolitarineſſe. Thus farre Leo.

Beniamin Tudelenſis [g] telleth of a Nation, neere to Mount Libanus, which hee calleth Hhaſſiſſin, which varied from the ordinary ſort of Iſmalites, and followed a peculiar Prophet of their owne, whoſe word they obeyed, whether for life or for death. They called him Hheich al Hhaſſiſſin: his abode was at Karmos. They were a terror to all about them, ſawing aſunder euen the Kings if they tooke any. They warred with the Frankes (the Chriſtians which then held Ieruſalem) and the King of Tripolis. Their dominion extended eight dayes iourney. Zachuth mentioneth one [h] Baba, which about the 630. yeere of the Hegira, fained himſelfe a Prophet ſent of God; vnder which colour hee gathered together a great Armie, wherewith he filled all Aſia with ſlaughter and ſpoile, ſlaying Chriſtians and Iſmaelits without difference: till Giatheddin King of Gunia, ouerthrew and deſtroyed him and his Hoſt.

Beſides the former; they haue other Heremites of another ſort; one is mentioned by Leo; [i] who had fiue hundred Horſe, a hundred thouſand Sheepe, two hundred Beeues, and of offerings and almes, betwixt foure and fiue thouſand Duckets, his fame great in Aſia and Afrike, his Diſciples many, and fiue hundred people dwelling with him at his charges; to whom he enioyneth not penance, nor any thing: but giueth them certaine names of God, and biddeth them with the ſame to pray vnto him ſo many times a day. When they haue learned this, they returne home: he hath a hundred Tents for ſtrangers, his Cattell, and Family: hee hath foure wiues, beſides ſlaues, and (by them) many children ſumptuouſly apparrelled. His fame is ſuch, that the King of Telenſin is afraide of him: and he payeth nothing to any: ſuch veneration haue they towards him, reputing him a Saint. Leo ſaith, hee ſpake with him, and that this Heremite ſhewed him Magick-bookes, and he thought that this his great eſtimation did come, by falſe working of the true ſcience; ſo the Heremite termed Magicke.

But theſe Heremites we cannot ſo well reckon a Sect, as a Religious Order; of which ſort there are diuers in theſe Mahumetane Nations, as in our enſuing diſcourſe ſhall appeare: To returne therefore to the conſideration of the meanes vſed to preuent the varietie of Sects among them: The Caliphs ſought to remedie theſe inconueniences by their beſt policie. [k] Moaui, about the yeere of our Lord 770. aſſembled a generall Councell of their learned men to conſult about an Vniformity; but they diſagreeing among themſelues, hee choſe ſix men of the moſt learned, and ſhut them vp in a houſe together with their Scriptures, commanding them that out of thoſe Copies diſagreeing (as you haue heard) they ſhould chuſe that ſhould ſeeme beſt. Theſe reduced the Doctrine of Mahomet into ſix bookes; forbidding any on paine of death to ſpeake or write otherwiſe of their Law. But becauſe the Arabians of ſubtle and piercing wit, which ſtudied Philoſophy in the Vniuerſities of Bagdet, Marocco, Cordoua, and other places, could not but ſpie and diſcerne the mad folly of the law, ſo palpable to any reaſonable iudgement: It [l] was therefore ordained, that the Phyloſophy Lecture ſhould be taken away, and in place thereof they ſhould read the Alcoran; prouiding, for all theſe Students of their Law, their expences out of the publike charge, and inhibiting all further ſtudie in Philoſophy: inſomuch that they now (ſaith our Author, who himſelfe was a Student in that Vniuerſity) repute him not a good Saracen, who is addicted to that ſtudie. This Frier Richard mentioneth another Prophet, named Solem, had in eſtimation with theſe Babylonians, which was after ſlaine by the Tartars. He and Cardinall Cuſanus affirme, that the Saracens of the Eaſt differ in their Alcoran from thoſe of the Weſt, [m] making the firſt fiue Chapters but one; and that they differ in the expoſition thereof, and in the ſame Schooles or Vniuerſities, one Sect condemneth another.

But in theſe times the Mahumetane Profeſſors are chiefly diſtinguiſhed by the ſeuerall Nations; of which are foure principall: the Arabians, Perſians, Turkes, and Tartars (to which wee may adde the Mogore, as a fifth; whom the Ieſuites, in their Epiſtles, report to halt from his former Mahumetiſme, and to incline to Gentiliſme.) Of all theſe, the Arabians are moſt zealous in their ſuperſtition; the Perſians moſt agree to Reaſon and Nature; the Tartars are more Heatheniſh and ſimple, the Turkes are the freeſt and moſt Martiall. The Arabians account it their peculiar glory, that Mahumet was of that Nation, and that Mecca and Medina are there ſeated: and therefore haue laboured in the dayes of their former puiſſance by the ſword; ſince, by their traffique and preaching, to ſpread their Mahumetiſme through the World. Their firſt Seducers had poſſeſſed Syria and Paleſtina: Homar had added Egypt, and in a ſhort time their Succeſſors had preuailed in Aſia, Afrike, and Europe, as we [t] haue before ſhewed. All Mahumetans are called by vs Saracens, which Erpenius in his Annotations on his Ioſeph, ſaith, is a name to them vnknowne (ſo is China to the Chinois, Peru, to the Peruans, &c.) but giuen them by others. They call themſelues Muſlimos, or Muſlemans, of a word which ſignifieth Beleeuers (as one would ſay in their ſenſe, Catholike and Orthodoxe belecuers.)

They haue beene ſuch in Armes: and in diligence of Preaching they haue beene as forward, and ſo continue. Seuen hundred yeeres ſince, Perimal raigning in Malabar; they there ſowed their Tares: and the more eaſily to take thoſe Ethnikes in their net, they tooke their daughters in marriage; a matter of much conſequence, in regard of their wealth, and practiſed of them to this day. They were Authors of great gaine vnto them by their trades and traffique for Spicery: and were ſuffered to inhabite, and plant Colonies amongſt them. By their meanes, Calicut, of a ſmall thing, became a great and rich Citie. And Perimal himſelfe was peruerted by them to their faith: who zealouſly inclined to their perſwaſions, reſolued to end his dayes at Mecca, and put himſelfe on the voyage, with ſome ſhips of Pepper, and other things of price, but periſhed by tempeſt in the way. From Malabar they paſſed to the Maldiuæ, and Zeilan, Somatra, Iaua, Molucca, the Philippinaes, and in the Continent to Cambaia, Bengala, Siam, Malucca, Ior, Pam, and the huge Kingdome of China, preaching and planting their ſuperſtitions, as in the particular Hiſtories of theſe Nations ſhall further appeare. They are in this reſpect ſo zealous, that euen the Arabian Mariners will ſtay behinde in the Countries of the Ethnikes, there to diuulge this their Sect: and in the yeere 1555. one of them pierced as farre as Iapon, there to haue laied their Leauen: but the Portugalls in theſe Eaſterne parts, treading in the ſame ſteps, by their traffique and preachings, haue much hindered their proceedings. The Tartars, Perſians, and Turkes, require longer and ſeuerall diſcourſes in their due place; and firſt, we will ſpeake of them which are firſt in this ranke, the greateſt of all Mahumetane States, the Turkes.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Turkiſh Nation: their Originall, and Proceedings.

§. I.

Of the Turkiſh Name, and firſt Originall.

ALthough ſome may thinke, that I haue beene ſo tedious, in the relation of the Mahumetan opinions and ſuperſtitions, that, to ſpeake any thing more, would ſeeme but as powring water into a full Sea: Yet, becauſe there is in this World nothing certaine, but vncertaintie; it being diuine prerogatiue to be yeſterday, to day, the ſame for euer: and that this Saracenicall Religion hath ſuſtained her chances and changes, according to the diuerſitie of times and places where it is and hath beene profeſſed: ſo doe I hold it fit, as wee haue ſeene the foundation, to behold alſo the frames and fabriques thereon builded, and from that Fountaine (or ſinke-hole rather) of ſuperſtitition, to lead you along the gutters and ſtreames thence deriued. And becauſe the Turkes are preeminent in all thoſe things, which this profeſſion accounteth eminent, it is meeteſt to giue them the firſt place heere, which elſewhere take it: and after we haue ſet downe a briefe Hiſtorie of that Nation, and the proceedings of their ſtate, to aſcribe their theorie and opinions, and then their practice and rites of Religion. But before we come to the diſcouerie of their Religion, it is not amiſſe to ſearch the beginning and increaſe of this Nation.

The name of Turkes ſignifies (ſaith Chitræus) Shepheards, or Heard-men: and ſuch it ſeemeth was their ancient profeſſion, as of the reſt of the Scythians vnto this day. Nicephorus [a] (and before him Simocatta, from whom Nicephorus borroweth it) ſpeaketh of the Turkes, and placeth them about Bactria: their chiefe Citie he calleth Taugaſt, which is ſuppoſed to be the worke of Alexander. Their Religion, hee ſaith, at that time was to worſhip the Fire, Aire, Water, and Earth, which they adore, and ſing Hymnes to. They acknowledge God the maker of Heauen and Earth, to whom they ſacrifice Horſe, Kine, and Sheepe: they haue Prieſts which diuine things to come. The Prince of Taugaſt, they called the ſonne of God: They worship Images. The Prince spendeth the night with seuen hundreth women. The Tartars haue now possessed the same Countrie; but long before, the same rites, as you may reade in our Historie of them. To deriue them (as some doe) from Troians and Iewes, is somewhat farre [b] fetched: nor is there much likelihood that they should receiue their name of Turca [c] a Persian Citie: the name is ancient, and applied by [d] Mela and Plinie to a Nation of the Scythians, and their original is accounted Scythian by the [e] most and best Authors. Beniamin Tudelensis calleth them alway by the name Tegarma. There are which bring a long Genealogie from Noahs Arke, vnto the Ottoman Family: herein disagreeing, while some wil haue Magog, others Tubal the Author of their Nation. Leunclauius [f] reciteth and refuteth the same. He writeth the name Iurki, alleaging Herodotus for his Author: and citeth many Authors to proue, that they descended of the Vnni or Vngri, which were called Turkes, of which there were two sorts, one Westerly in Pannonia, another Easterly neere Persia, called by the Persians Magores, he concludeth, that the Vnni or Iurchi came from Iuchra or Iuchria (whence the name Iuchri might easily be deflected to Iurchi) beyond Tanais; and first after they had forsaken their owne Countrie, settled themselues neere Mœotis, from whence they passed to Chazaria, and some went Westward to Pannonia, some Eastward to Armenia, and thence into Persia.

Many probable Arguments might bee brought, to proue that they descended of the Scythians, whose wandering shepheardly-life, both the name, and their practice (in old times, and in some places still) expresseth. The first Expedition and militarie employment, which I haue read of the Turkes, (except what the feare of them compelled the Persians vnto, as in their Historie wee shall after see) was [g] vnder Varamus a rebellious Persian, aboue a thousand yeeres since, when Cosroes was King of Persia, and Mauritius the Roman Emperour: at what time many of them were slaine, and many taken, which confessed, that famine had forced them to those warres, for which cause they marked themselues with a blacke Crosse; a Ceremonie which they said they had learned of the Christians, thinking thereby to expell hunger. This hungrie Nation hath since beene a greedie and insatiate deuourer of Nations. Another expedition of theirs (which some reckon the first) [h] was in the yeere 755. or after another account 844. at which time, passing through the Georgian Countrie, then called Iberia, they first seized on a part of the greater Armenia, which their posteritie holdeth at this day, called of them Turcomania. In this wide and spacious Countrie they romed vp and downe, without certaine habitation, a long time with their Families and Heards of cattell, like the ancient Scythian Nomades; and the Tartars, and the same Turcoman Nation at this day. Their language also, as Megiserus in his Turkish Grammar sheweth, hath great affinitie, with the Tartarian, as also with the Persian (neere whom, and sometimes, as now will appeare, amongst them, they liued.) But from the Arabike it differeth altogether. Yet in their holies they most vse the Arabike, by reason of the Alcoran written in that language: likewise they vse the Arabike Letters and Prickes. The beginning of their greatnesse is thus by Christian Historians related.

§. II.

Of the Turkish Kingdome in Persia, and their other Conquests.

WHen as the Saracens Empire grew now vnweldie, through her owne greatnesse, and the Soldans, which were wont to conquer for the Chaliph, began now to share with him in his large Dominion: Mahomet (then Sultan, or Soldan of Persia) was for this cause hardly beset with the Chaliph of Babylon; assailed also on the other side by the Indians. He sought to strengthen himselfe against these enemies, with the new friendship of these Turkes, of whom hee obtained for his aide three thousand hardie Souldiers, [a] vnder the conduct of Togra Mucalet, the sonne of Mikeil, a valiant Captaine, and chiefe of the Selzuccian Tribe or Familie, whom the Greekes commonly call Tangrolipix, and some Selduc, or Sadoc. By the helpe of this Tangrolipix Mahomet the Persian Sultan ouercame Pisasiris the Caliph. The Turkes, after this warre, desiring leaue to passe ouer the Riuer Araxis to their Country-men, were both denied, and threatned, if they againe should seeke to depart. Whereupon they withdrew themselues into the Desart of Caranontis; liuing there, and thence making roades into the Countries adioyning. Mahumet sent against them twentie thousand men, which by a sudden surprize in the night, Tangrolipix defeated, and furnished himselfe with their spoiles. And now durst Tangrolipix shew his face in the field, where his Armie was increased by the resort of lawlesse persons, seeking after spoile. Mahomet on the other side, impatient of his losse, put out the eyes of the Captaines, taines, which had the leading of the Armie, and threatned to attire the Souldiers, that had fled, in womens apparell; and raising another great Armie, set forward against Tangrolipix, who was now fiftie thousand strong, and was presently made stronger by those threatned Souldiers, who fled from their Lord vnto him. They met at Ispahan (a Citie of Persia) and there Mahomet falling with his Horse, brake his necke: vpon which mischance both Armies comming to agreement, by common consent proclaimed Tangrolipix [b] Sultan in his stead; and so made him King of Persia, and the Dominion thereunto pertaining, which was done Anno 1030.

b Tangrolipix first Sultan amongst the Turkes; An. Do. 1030. some call him Tangrolipix and some Tancroipix.

Tangrolipix opened the passages of Araxis to the rest of his Countrie-men, whom hee exalted to the highest places of command, so bridling the Persians, and he and his receiuing in their new Conquests the yoke of the Mahumetan Religion. Ambition inciting him to further exploits, he warred also vpon Pisastris the Chaliph: and after diuers ouerthrowes, slue him, and seized on his state. Hee sent Cutlu-Muses his Kinsman against the Arabians, by whom hee was discomfited: whereat aggrieued, hee went against them himselfe, but with like successe. Hee sent Asan his brothers sonne to inuade Media, who in that enterprise was slaine: he sent againe Habraime Alim his brother, with an Armie of an hundred thousand men, who tooke prisoner Liparites Gouernour of Iberia (who came to aide the Emperours Lieutenant in Media) whom Tangrolipix frankely set free, and sent his Embassadour to the Emperour, proudly demanding him to become his subiect.

Such haps, and such hopes had Tangrolipix, the first Turke that euer was honoured with a Diademe. His sonne [c] and successour Axan tooke Diogenes the Emperour of Constantinople prisoner in the field: But Cutlu-Muses, with his Cousin Melech (who in his Fathers dayes had fled into Arabia) rebelling and taking armes against him; as Axan was readie to ioyne battell with them, the Caliph (who retained the highest place still in their superstition, although dispoyled of his Temporalities) setting aside all his Pontificall formalitie, whereby he was bound not to goe out of his owne house, thrust himselfe betweene these Armies: and with the reuerence of his place, and person, together with his perswasions, moued them to desist, and to stand to his arbitrement: which was, that Axan the Sultan should still enioy his Dominions entirely: And that Cutlu-Muses, and his sonnes aided by him, should inuade the Constantinopolitan Empire, and should be absolute, and onely Lords of whatsoeuer they could gaine thereof. There was neuer any thing to that impietie more commodious, nor to our Religion more dangerous. For by this meanes Cutlu-Muses, with his sonnes in a short time conquered all Media, with a great part of Armenia, Cappadocia, Pontus, and Bithynia; which their designes were much furthered, by treasons and dissentions in the Greeke Empire. Axan the Sultan also gaue to his Kinsman Ducat and Melech, the gouernement of Aleppo, and Damasco, with the adioyning parts of Syria, by that meanes to encroach vpon the Egyptian Caliph, which accordingly they in short time did.

But these their haughtie attempts were stayed, and being now in the flowre, were cut shorter by that fortunate Expedition [d] of the Christian Princes of the West, agreed vpon at the Councell of Claremont, and performed by Gualter Sensauier; Peter the Hermite, first and principall mouer hereof; Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, with his two brethren Eustace and Baldwin, of the honourable house of Buillon; Hugh, surnamed the Great, brother to Philip the French King; Raymond and Robert, Earles of Flanders; Robert of Normandie, sonne to William the Conquerour; Stephen de Valois, Earle of Chartiers; Ademar the Popes Legate; Bohemund Prince of Tarentum, and others, conducting, as the most receiued opinion is, three hundred thousand Souldiers, in defence of the Christian Faith, against the Turkes and Saracens, which both ouerthrew the Turkes in the lesser Asia, and recouered also the holy Land. The Principalitie, or (as some stile it) the Kingdome of Antioch was giuen him by common consent to Bohemund Prince of Tarentum; the Kingdome of Ierusalem, to Robert: who (hearing of his Fathers death) refused it, in hope of England; and Godfrey of Buillon was saluted King.

d The memorable Expedition of the Christian Princes into the holy Land. Historia belli sacri G. Tyrij. and many others write at large of these Warres: vide Gesta Dei per Francos, see also sup. l. 2. vlt.

The Turkes and Saracens, seeking to recouer that which they had lost, lost also themselues; a hundred thousand of them being slaine in one battell: the like successe had the Turkes after against Conrade the Emperour, at Meander: leauing for trophees and triumphall arches to the Christians, huge heapes, or hills rather, of their bones. Hereunto helped the dissentions among the Turkes, and diuisions of their state among diuers brethren. The Egyptians also paied tribute to the Christians: which Dargan the Sultan detaining, hee was by Almericus, the King of Ierusalem ouerthrowne in battell. Noradine the Turke, King of Damasco, sent thither also Saracon to aide Sanar the Sultan (before expulsed) to recouer his state from this Dargan: but hee hauing won certaine Townes, kept them to himselfe, so that Sanar betooke him to the patronage of Almericus, who ouerthrew Saracon in battell, and after besieged and tooke Alexandria, and Pelusium, seeking also to conquer Egypt to himselfe:

ſelfe but indeed (as the euent proued) ſo ſubuerted his owne ſtate. For Sanar ſought helpe of Saracon, and for feare of both their forces, Almericus left Egypt. Saracon, moued with ambition, treacherouſly ſlew the Sultan, and by the Caliph was appointed Sultan, the firſt of the Turkes that euer enioyed the ſame, to whom Saladine his Nephew ſucceeded. Hee (not reſpecting the Maieſtie of the Caliph, as the Sultans before had done) ſtrucke out his braines with his Horſe-mans Mace, and rooted out all his poſteritie; the better to aſſure himſelfe, and his Turkiſh ſucceſſours in the poſſeſſion of that Kingdome, vnder whom it continued to the time of the Mamalukes. Noradine alſo the Turke being dead, the Nobilitie diſdaining the gouernement of Melechſala his ſonne (yet but a youth) betrayed [e] that ſtate vnto Saladine. And thus did he hem in the Kingdome of Ieruſalem on both ſides: and not long after, Aleppo was betraied vnchriſtianly into his hands by a traitor, which gouerned the ſame for the Chriſtians: Neither was it long, before he had (through diſcord and treaſon amongſt the Chriſtians) obtained [f] Ieruſalem it ſelfe, Anno 1187. and after Aſcalon, and Antioch alſo: Neither could the Chriſtians of the Weſt euer recouer the poſſeſſion of that Kingdome; the cauſe continuing the ſame, which before had loſt it, viz. diſſention and treacherie, as the examples of Richard and Edward (firſt of thoſe names) Kings of this Land doe ſhew.

About 1202. yeeres after Chriſt, the Tartars (of whom in their due place) hauing conquered Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, among others, ouerthrew that Togrian Kingdome of the Turkes in Perſia, one hundred and ſeuentie yeeres before founded by Tangrolipix. The Turks which remained (driuen to ſeeke ſhelter from this violent ſtorme) fled out of Perſia into Aſia the leſſe: where Cutlu-Muſes his ſucceſſours (their Country-men) enioyed ſome part of the Countrie. And there many of them arriuing vnder the conduct of Aladin, the ſonne of Cei Huſreu, deſcended alſo of the Selzuccian Family in Perſia, taking the opportunitie offered by the diſcord of the Latines, with the Greekes, and the Greekes among themſelues, ſeized vpon Cilicia, with the Countries thereabout: and there firſt at Sebaſtia, and afterward at Iconium, erected their new Kingdome, bearing the name of the Aladin [g] Kings or Sultans.

The Tartars, vnder the conduct of Haalon, ſent by Mango the great Cham, hauing conquered and ſtarued the Chaliph of Babylon (as is before) ouerthrew the Turkiſh Kingdome of Damaſco, and raced [h] Aleppo; the other arme of this faire and farre ſpreading Tree, being ſurprized by the Mamaluke ſlaues, who after Haalons departure, recouered Syria and Palæſtina, and were againe with great ſlaughter diſpoſſeſſed of the ſame by Caſſanes [i] a Tartarian Prince, who repaired Ieruſalem, and gaue it to the Chriſtians of Armenia, and other the Eaſterne Countries. But Caſſanes retyring into Perſia to pacifie new broiles, the Sultan recouered the ſame; the Chriſtians of the Weſt neglecting the iuſt defence thereof, ſpecially through the pride and contention of Boniface the Pope (contrarie to his name) filling a great part of Europe with faction and quarrells.

Of the Ottoman Turkes, their originall and proceedings.

THe Turkes in Aſia paid tribute to the Tartar Cham, till (ſucceſſion in the bloud of Aladin failing) this Kingdome was diuerſly rent, euery one catching ſo much as his might could beſtow on his ambition. The greateſt of theſe ſharers was [a] one Caraman Aluſirius, who tooke vnto himſelfe the Citie Iconium, with all the Countrie of Cilicia, and ſome part of the frontiers of Lycaonia, Pamphylia, Caria, and the greater Phrygia, as farre as Philadelphia: all which was after him called Caramania. Next neighbour and ſharer to him was Saruchan: of whom Ionia Maritima is called Saruchanili. The greateſt part of Lydia, with ſome part of the greater Myſia, Troas, and Phrygia fell to Caraſius, called of him Caraſi-ili: ſome part of Pontus, and the Countrey of Paphlagonia fell to the ſonnes of Omer, which Countrey is called Bolli. Theſe all were of the Selzuccian Family. But the foundations of farre higher fortunes, were then laid much lower by diuine prouidence, exalting Ottoman of the Oguzian Tribe or Family, who then held one onely poore Lordſhip, called Suguta in Bythinia, not farre from Olympus, giuen before to his father Erthogrul in meed of good ſeruice: which he increaſing, by winning ſomewhat from the weaker Chriſtians his neighbours, afterwards erected into a Kingdome, which hath deuoured ſo great a part of the world, as is at this day ſubiect to the Turkiſh greatneſſe. When the Tartars chaſed (as is ſaid) the Turkes out of their Perſian Kingdome, which Tangrolipix had there eſtabliſhed, one Solyman a Turke (of the Oguſian Tribe) reigned in Machan [b] ouer a ſmall ſmall Realme, which for feare of thoſe Tartars he alſo forſooke, and with a thouſand of his people, fled, and ſeated himſelfe in a part of Armenia, about Erzerum; and after, vpon ſome better hopes, reſolued to returne againe into Perſia, but in ſeeking to paſſe the Riuer Euphrates, was drowned, and his followers diſperſed, following their ancient Trade of wandring Heardſ-men. Hee left behinde him foure ſonnes, Tencur-Teken, Iundogdis, Ertogrul, the father of Ottoman, and Dunder. The two eldeſt returned into Perſia. The two youngeſt ſtayed, and with them foure hundred Families, with their Tents and Carts, their moueable Houſes. And inſinuating into the Sultan Aladins good liking, by ſute and deſert, this Ertogrul was rewarded, as yee haue heard, being made Lord of Suguta, and Warden of thoſe Marches: and liued therein ſecuritie, till he was of great yeeres, and had ſeene much alteration in that ſtate. He died Anno 1289. hauing liued ninetie three yeeres. And him ſucceeded by common conſent, as Lord ouer the Oguzian Turkes, his ſonne Ottoman, ſaluted therefore by the name of Oſman Beg, or Lord Oſman. Hee firſt [d] got into his ſubiection a great part of the Caſtles and Forts of the greater Phrygia; equally protecting his Subiects, both Chriſtians and Turkes: he conquered Nice, the name whereof is reuerend for the firſt Generall Councell of Chriſtendome; and Aladin the ſecond, Sultan of Iconium, ſent vnto him a faire Enſigne, a Sword and Robe, with ample Charters, that whatſoeuer he tooke from the Chriſtians, ſhould be his owne: and that publike prayers ſhould be ſaid in their Temples for his health, which was of him humbly accepted, and ſuch prayers made by one Durſu, whom hee had appointed Biſhop and Iudge of Carachiſer, Anno 1300. Neapolis was made his ſeat Royall. Hee fiſhed ſo well in the troubled ſtreame of the Greeke Empire, that hee ſubdued the moſt part of Phrygia, Myſia, and Bythinia; and Pruſa after a long ſiege was yeelded vnto his ſonne Orchanes, and made the Royall ſeat of the Ottoman-Kings, where Ottoman himſelfe was buried 1328. His ſonne Orchanes ſucceeded: Aladin his brother contenting himſelfe with a priuate life, who after built two Mahumetan Churches, and another at Pruſa. Orchanes alſo erected in Nice a ſumptuous Temple, appointing a Preacher to preach to the people euery Friday, and two faire Abbies: in the one of which, hee with his owne hands ſerued the ſtrangers and poore the firſt dinner. Hee was the firſt that builded Abbies among the Turkes, followed herein by moſt of his Succeſſours. Hee got Nicomedia, and the Townes adioyning. He alſo wonne all Charaſia, and at his returne built a Church and Abbey at Pruſa, placing therein religious men, ſought out with all diligence. His ſonne Solyman, firſt of the Turkes that had poſſeſſed any foot in Europe, croſſed the Helleſpont, and wanne the Caſtle Zemeenic, and after that Maditus, receptacles for the Turks, which came ouer in multitudes, hee tranſporting Chriſtians into Aſia, to dwell in their roome. And after, [e] he wan Gallipoli, ſpoyling the Countrie, and winning from the Greekes, who were negligent in preuenting or remedying this danger. But Solyman dying with a fall, his old father Orchanes liued not two moneths after; a Prince very zealous in his ſuperſtition, who beſides building diuers Churches, Abbies, Colledges, and Cells, allowed Penſions to all ſuch as could in the Church ſay the booke of Mahomets law by heart, and competent maintenance to the Iudges that they ſhould not ſell iuſtice.

Amurath [f], which ſucceeded, exceeded him in his blind zeale. Hee kept in awe the Turkiſh Princes in Aſia, and wanne many Townes and Caſtles in Thracia: and amongſt others, Adrianople the ſeat Royall of the Turkiſh Kingdome, vntill Conſtantinople was after ſubdued. This was done 1362. Hee ordained, that euery fifth captiue of the Chriſtians, aboue fifteene yeeres old, ſhould bee taken vp for the Turkiſh King, which were diſtributed among the Turkiſh huſ-bandmen in Aſia, to learne the Turkiſh Language, Religion, and Manners; and after two or three yeeres, choice was made of the better ſort, to attend vpon the Princes perſon, and for his warres, called Ianizars, that is, new Souldiers: which Order after grew to great account, and is yet a principall pillar of the Turkiſh greatneſſe. He ouerthrew Aladin the Caramanian King, which made the other Princes of the Selzuccian Family to ſubmit themſelues vnto him. And buſying himſelfe in his new Conqueſts in Europe, after a great victorie obtained againſt Lazarus, Deſpot of Seruia, as he viewed the ſlaine carkaſſes, was ſlaine of a wounded and halfe-dead Souldier; who comming ſtaggering (as it were) to beg his life, ſtabbed this great Cõqueror, with a dagger, hidden vnder his [g] garments.

Baiazet [h] his ſonne and ſucceſſour, oppreſſeth moſt of the Mahumetan Princes in Aſia, inuadeth Valachia, beſiegeth Conſtantinople eight yeers, ouerthroweth the King of Hungarie in battell, ſubdueth the Caramanian Kingdome, and amidſt his aſpiring fortunes, is by [i] Tamberlane depriued of his Kingdome and libertie, ſhut vp and carried about in an yron Cage; againſt the barres whereof he beat out his braines, Anno 1399. Mahomet [n] was there saluted Sultan in the field, a man equally vnequall and troublesome to the Christian and Mahumetan Princes. He wanne Constantinople the twentieth of May, 1453. the taking whereof, is by Leonardus Chiensis, • declared in a Treatise composed of that vnhappie argument, and likewise by Cardinall [p] Isidorus Ruthenus. Hee wanne Trabezond, the Imperiall seat of another Christian Empire, [q] Anno 1460. Hence hee was called Emperour (a name not giuen to the Turkish Kings.) He burnt Athens, Anno 1452. Hee obtained Epirus and Mysia, Anno 1436. and did much harme against the Soldan and Mamalukes. He conquered Eubœa and Illyricum, in the yeere 1474. ouerthrew the Persians; and in the last act of his bloodie life, he tooke (by Achmetes his Captaine) Otranto or Hydruntum in Italy, with no small terrour to all Italy. Hee was sir-named Great, and is said to haue conquered two hundred Cities, twelue Kingdomes, and two Empires: which he left to Baiazet his sonne, Anno 1481. His other sonne Zemes was forced to flee into Italy, where a great summe of money [r] was yeerely allowed the Pope to keepe him for his owne securitie, and for loue of his brother, whom Alexander the Bishop is reported [s] to poyson, as some thinke, by composition with the grand Seignior. He had some warres against the Mamalukes, some against the Christians, more vnnatural against his brother, but most most vnnatural and monstrous against his sonne Selym. His conquests were in Cilicia, Caramania, and Peloponnesus.

Selym, not content to haue thrust his father out of the Throne, aspired to a further effect of aspiring ambition, depriuing him of life, from whom himselfe had receiued it. To this end he corrupted a Iew, Baiazets Physician (whom Knolles calleth Hamon; but [t] Menauino, an eye-witnesse, nameth him Vstarabi) who with the powder of beaten Diamonds poysoned him; and for reward, when hee claymed Selyms promise, had his head stricken off in the Tyrants presence. So much did he hate the Traytor, whose treason he so much loued. The body of Baiazet was embalmed, and interred at Constantinople, in a beautifull Sepulchre, neere to the Meschit, which himselfe had built, and Priests were appointed, which should euery day pray for his soule. Two of his Pages did Selym put to death, for wearing blacke and mourning apparell for their Masters death: and three others (whereof Menauino was one) hardly, by intreatie of Selyms daughters, and some Bassaes, escaped.

This Viper, that spared not his father, proceeded with bloudie hands to make an end of the rest of his Ottoman-kindred, beginning with fiue sonnes of his brethren, and adding the remnant, as hee could bring them into his power. And hauing thus founded his Throne in bloudie cruelties of his owne at home, no maruell if abroad his proceedings were no lesse cruell and bloudie towards his enemies. Of whom, the first which offered himselfe (after his domesticall warres appeased) was Ismael the [u] Sophie: who with thirtie thousand Persian Horse-men gaue battell to Selym (notwithstanding his three hundred thousand Turks) where was fought in Armenia, neere Coy, a terrible and mortall battell betwixt them: the Turkes at last (very hardly) preuailing, by helpe of their great Ordnance: but so little cause had they to reioyce of their victorie, that this is reckoned among the dismall and disastrous dayes, termed by the Turkes, The onely day of Doome. The next [x] yeere he entred againe into the Persian Confines, and there tooke Ciamassum, ouerthrew Aladeules, the Mountaine King, who raigned in Taurus and Antitaurus, and slew him. But his most fortunate attempts were against Campson Gaurus, the Egyptian Soldan, and his forces of Mamalukes, whom by his multitudes (notwithstanding their fame and valour, not inferiour to any Souldiors of the world) hee ouercame; the Soldan himselfe being left dead in the place, August. 7. 1516.

Of SOLYMAN the Magnificent.

SOLYMAN, ſir-named the Magnificent, ſucceeded his Father Selym in place, and ſurmounted him exceedingly in exploits. Belgrade, (which ominous name, did preſage happineſſe vnto him in his Warres and proceedings) was the beginning of his Conqueſts, wonne by the Turkes, Auguſt. 29. 1521. [a] Rhodes receiueth him on Chriſtmaſſe day, 1522. but withall exileth both Cheere, Chriſtmaſſe, and Chriſtians. Hee inuadeth [b] Hungarie, and in the field diſcomfiteth and killeth Lewes, and ſlayeth, or captiueth two hundred thouſand Hungarians in that expedition, 1526. Hee entereth Hungarie the ſecond time, 1529. and (after ſome butcheries therein) marcheth to Vienna in Auſtria, where he loſt foureſcore thouſand of his Turkes, and then with ſhame & anger returned. In the yeere 1532. he returneth with an Armie of fiue hundred thouſand men; to whom Charles the fifth oppoſed himſelfe, and the Chriſtian forces, in greater numbers, then hath in many ages been ſeene, muſtering in his Armie, at Vienna two hundred and threeſcore thouſand men, whereof foureſcore and ten thouſand Foot-men, and thirtie thouſand Horſe-men were old Souldiers, to whom Solyman did not, nor durſt not, bid battell. Poore Hungarie rues in meane while, whether he getteth or loſeth in Auſtria, being made his thorow-fare as he went and came.

After this he trieth his ſucceſſe againſt the Perſian, where hee taketh Tauris and Babylon, with the Countries of Aſſyria and Media, Anno 1534. each of which had ſometimes beene Ladie of the World. At incredible coſts he prepared a Fleet in the Red Sea, 1537. and taking Aden and Zibyth, two petie Kingdomes in Arabia, by his forces [c] beſieged Dium, a Caſtle of the Portugals in the Eaſt-Indies, but without his wiſhed ſucceſſe. For the Portugals ſtill retaine their Indian-Seas and Traffique, and not onely freed that their Caſtle from Turkiſh bondage, but had meanes to fortifie it better, by the Ordnance, which the Turkes in their haſtie flight had left behinde. A more dangerous plot did Solyman meane while contriue againſt Chriſtendome, preparing his forces to inuade Italy, and to that end was come to Aulona, an Hauen in Macedonia, with two hundred thouſand Souldiers, where Barbaruſſa, and Lutzis Baſſa, his great Admirall, met him with his Fleet, to tranſport his Armie. But Solyman, firſt employed theſe Sea-forces on the coaſt of Italy, and tooke Caſtrum; his Horſe-men (which he had ſent ouer in great Palendars) carried away the people, cattell, and ſubſtance, betwixt Brunduſium and Tarentum, fortie miles ſpace; all the countrey of Otranto terrified with feare of a greater tempeſt. But the Venetians turned it from the reſt of Italy, vpon themſelues (notwithſtanding their league) by vnſeaſonable exacting of that Sea-courteſie, the vayling of the bonnets, or top ſayles of ſome Turkiſh Gallies vnto them, as Lords of that Sea; for which neglect ſome of them were ſunke. [d] Auria alſo, the Emperours Admirall, had ſurpriſed ſome of the Turkes ſtragling Fleet, and after held cruell fight with twelue great Gallies, full of Ianizaries and choice men, whom he ouerthrew and tooke. But the Ianizaries that were left, caſt their Scimaters ouer-boord, leaſt ſuch choice weapons ſhould come to the Chriſtians hands. Solyman conuerting his forces againſt the Venetians, for the indignities mentioned, had almoſt fallen into the hands of the Mountaine-Theeues, which liued in the Acroceranian Hills: who in a ſtrange reſolutiou had conſpired to kill him in his Tent, and had almoſt (to the wonder of the world) in a night, by vnknowne wayes, ſuddenly effected it, had not the cracking of a bough diſcouered their Captaine, who in a tree was taking view of

of the Campe, how to bring to paſſe his deſperate deſignes. This their Captaine, (by name Damianus) was, after confeſſion hereof, torne in pieces, and thoſe wilde Mountainers (liuing on robberie, without Law or Religion) were, like wilde beaſts, hunted to deſtruction.

The Turkes inuaded Corfu, whence they carried ſixteene thouſand of the Iſlanders captiues. They likewiſe, in their returne, committed great ſpoyle in Zante, and Cythera, ſacked Ægina, Paros, and other Ilands in the Archipelago; bringing Naxos vnder tribute. Barbaruſſa ſacked Botrotus, a Venetian Citie: The like did Vſtrif to Obroatium, and the Caſtle of Nadin. Nauplium alſo, and Epidaurus were beſieged. But Ferdinand (who had entituled himſelfe King of Hungarie, after Lewis his death) receiued a greater diſgrace in Hungarie, by the Turkiſh forces, then befell the Venetians in all their loſſes: Cazzianer (the Generall of the Chriſtians) ſhamefully flying and betraying his aſſociates to the Turkiſh crueltie. The next yeere 1538. Barbaruſſa chaſeth the Chriſtian Fleet, in which the Emperours, Venetians, and the Popes forces were ioyned.

In the yeere 1541. Solyman againe inuadeth Hungarie, profeſſing himſelfe Protector of the young King, which Iohn, late King of Hungarie (who had held long warres with Ferdinand, about that Title) had left behinde him his heire and ſucceſſor. But vnder colour of protection, hee maketh himſelfe Lord of Buda, the chiefe Citie, turning the Cathedrall Church into a Meſchit: and maketh Hungarie a Turkiſh Prouince, beſtowing Tranſyluania) and what he pleaſed, on the Orphan. Two yeeres after he reentereth Hungarie, and taketh Strigonium: turning the Chriſtian Temples into Mahumetan, ſacrificing there for his victorie, as he had done at Buda. Hee entred alſo into e Alba Regalis, (where the Hungarian Kings lye entombed) another chiefe Citie of that Kingdome, and ſlew the Magiſtrates. I ſpeake not all this while of the ſpacious Countries in Africa; which, from the Riuer Mu'uia, hee added to his Dominions: the Kingdomes of Algier, Tremiſen, Tunes, Tripoly, &c. being annexed to his Turkiſh Soueraigntie. Howbeit Tunes, by ayde of Charles the Emperour, ſomewhat recouered her ſelfe, but breathed out againe her laſt gaſpe of libertie, in the daies of Selym his ſonne. And thus was f Solyman victorious and happy; otherwhere victorious and vnhappy, when he was forced to darreine battell againſt his owne bowels, and hauing murthered Muſtapha his eldeſt ſonne (the hopefulleſt branch in Turkiſh eſtimation, that euer grew out of the Ottoman ſtocke) hee warred againſt Baiazet, another of his ſonnes; whom, with foure of his children, he procured to be done to death in Perſia. And after much domeſticall trouble, in his ſeuenth Expedition into Hungarie (his Fleet in the ſiege of Malta, being before, with great diſgrace repulſed) he dyed at the ſiege of Zigeth, the fourth of September, 1566.

§. II.

Of SELIM the ſecond, and AMVRATH the third.

SELYM, the onely ſonne, which the bloudie father had left aliue, ſucceeded in the Throne, not in the proweſſe and valour of his father. Neither hath any Turkiſh Sultan ſince his dayes, led their forces in perſon, but committed it to their Deputies and Generals; except once, when Mahomet the third, had almoſt loſt his Armie and himſelfe. Yet did this Selym, by his Baſſaes, make him Lord of g Cyprus, and alſo of the Kingdome of Tunis. But this ſweet meate was ſourely ſauced, by his exceeding loſſe in the Sea-fight betwixt Hali Baſſa, Admirall of the Turkes, h and Don Iohn of Auſtria, Generall of the Fleet ſet forth by the Pope, Spaniard, and Venetian, 1571. wherein an hundred threeſcore and one Gallies were taken, fortie ſunke or burnt, and of Galliots, and other ſmall veſſels were taken about threeſcore. The Turkiſh Admirall was then ſlaine. Wittily did a Turke deſcant vpon this loſſe of the Turkes, and their gaine of Cyprus, comparing this to the ſhauing of a mans beard, which would grow againe: that, to the loſſe of an arme, which, once cut off, cannot bee renued. Laſtly, Tunes came in, and Selym went out of this Turkiſh Soueraigntie, both in manner together, 1574.

h Our gracious Soueraign King Iames, hath written a Poem of this battell.

Amurath his heire, began his Empire, with the ſlaughter of his fiue brethren. The mother of Solyman (one of that number) ſlew her ſelfe with a dagger, for anguiſh of that loſſe. He in viewing a new Gally, by the breach of a Peece, hardly eſcaped death, thirtie of his company being ſlaine. And becauſe the Plague was exceeding hot, hee by deuotion ſought to appeaſe diuine anger: and therefore prohibited all vſe of Sodomie, Blaſphemie, and Polygamie, and himſelfe put out fiue hundred women out of his Seraile. In a priuate habite hee viſited the Markets, and hanged vp the hoorders of corne. He by the Tartars inuaded Polonia: and Henry of France, ſecretly leauing that Kingdome of Polonia, hee wrote vnto him to chuſe Stephen Battor for their King; in which letters he called himſelfe, God of the Earth, Gouernour uernour of the whole World, Meſſenger of God, and faithfull ſeruant of the great Prophet: which wrought ſo much with the Nobilitie, that either they would not, or durſt not doe otherwiſe, howſoeuer Maximilian had beene before by many of them choſen.

Tamas i the Perſian (at the ſame time dying) bequeathed his Crowne to Iſmael his ſonne, whom Aidare his brother ſeeketh to depriue, but is therefore himſelfe depriued of that ambitious head, which he ſought to adorne with the Crowne; and Iſmael adding the ſlaughter of eight his younger brethren, aſcendeth the Throne, which, together with his life, hee loſt by vnnaturall trecherie of Periaconcona his ſiſter, the foure and twentieth of Nouember, 1577.

Mahomet his brother ſucceeded in this troubleſome State, which Amurath the Turke (in theſe troubled waters) thought fit time for himſelfe to fiſh for. Hereunto alſo helped the hatred and ciuill broyles in Perſia, for the head of Periaconeona, preſented to Mahomet, with the haire diſheuelled on a Launce, and for other vncouth and bloudie ſpectacles; Sahamal and Leuent Ogli (two Georgian Lords) ſeeking alſo innouations. Amurath therefore, in the yeere 1578. ſent Muſtapha Baſſa, which had lately conquered Cyprus, with an Army of an hundred and tenne thouſand into Perſia: who, in the firſt battell he had with them, ſlew fiue thouſand, and tooke three thouſand Perſians: and to ſtrike that Nation with terrour, commanded a bulwarke to be framed of thoſe heads: but by an exceeding tempeſt, which laſted foure dayes together (whereby the Heauens ſeemed to melt themſelues in teares for the Perſians loſſe, and with lightnings, to ſhew that indignation againſt the Turkes, which in their thundering Dialect they aloud vttered) there grew ſuch horror to their mindes from aboue, and ſuch ſickneſſe to their bodies, from thoſe putrified carkaſſes beneath, that Muſtapha was forced to remoue, miſſing forty thouſand of his firſt Muſters. After hee had fortified the Armenian Caſtle of Teflis, his Armie being driuen to ſhifts for lacke of victuals, ten thouſand of his forragers were ſlaine by the Perſians, who were recompenced with like ſlaughter by Muſtapha, that came vpon them whiles they were buſie about the ſpoyle, and ſpoyled the ſpoylers. In paſſing ouer the Riuer Canac, he loſt foureſcore thouſand Turkes, which the Riuer ſeemed to take for Cuſtome (as it had many of the Perſians in the late conflict) whereof his violent current was a greedy and cruell exactor. Muſtapha erected a Fortreſſe in Eres, and tooke Sumachia, chiefe Citie of Siruan (Derbent offering her ſelfe to the Turke) and then returning into Natolia. But Emir Hamſe Miriſe, the Perſian Prince recouered, after his departure, both Eres and Sumachia, ſlew and captiued the Tartars, thirtie thouſand of whom were newly come to the Turkes ayde. He raſed Sumachia, euen with the ground. The next yeere Muſtapha fortified Chars in three and twentie dayes, wherein they were hindered with Snowes, on the fiue and twentieth of Auguſt, although it ſtandeth in fortie foure Degrees. Anno 1580. Sinan Baſſa was choſen Generall for the Perſian Warre; who, as hee departed from Teflis, loſt ſeuen thouſand of his people, beſides ſuch as the Georgians and Perſians, together with the ſpoyle carried away. This was earneſt, the reſt was but ſportfull ſhewes of warre, in trayning his Souldiers; after which he returned. In 1583. Ferat Baſſa was ſent Generall: but little was done, till Oſman Baſſa, a new Generall, 1585. tooke Tauris, the ancient Ecbatana (as Minadoi is of opinion.) But the Perſian Prince carried with indignation, reuenged this loſſe on the Turkes with his owne hands, ſlaying Caraemit Baſſa, Generall in the place of Oſman then ſicke, and gaue his head (as opima ſpolia) to one of his followers: and afterwards at Sancazan ſlew twentie thouſand Turks. Oſman dyed of ſickneſſe; and the Perſian Prince (the Morning-ſtarre of that Eaſterne State) was ſoone after murthered. In that diſmall yeere 1588. Ferat tooke Genge: fifteene thouſand houſes, ſeuen Temples, and fiue and twentie great Innes were burned in Conſtantinople, the tumultuous Ianizaries not ſuffering the fire to be quenched. An Impoſt was leuied of the ſubiects, to ſatisfie the pay due to the Souldiers for the Perſian warre, which raiſed theſe ſtirres. Yea, the Prieſts diſſwaded the people from thoſe new payments, and perſwaded them to maintaine their ancient Liberties, ſhut vp their Meſchits, intermitted their Oriſons: and the great Turke was forced to call in his Mandates, and deliuer the Authors of that counſell, (wherof the Beglerbeg of Grecia was one) to the Ianizaries furie, who made Tennis-balls of their heads. In the 1592. Wihitz, chiefe Citie of Croatia, was yeelded to the Turke. The next yeere Siſeg was beſieged, but relieued by the Chriſtians, who ſlew eighteene thouſand Turkes, and tooke their Tents; yet was it ſoone after taken by the renewed forces of the Turkes. Sinan tooke Veſprinium in Hungarie, and Palotta, but their loſſe was farre greater then their gaines; which continuing, and a broyle of the Ianizaries added thereto, brought k Amurath into malancholy and ſickneſſe, whereof he dyed, the eighteenth of Ianuarie, 1595. Tranſyluania, Valachia, and Moldauia, hauing before reuolted from him to Sigiſmund, who was entitled their Prince. This Amurath, in a letter to Queene Elizabeth, entituleth himſelfe, *By the Mercie of God free from all ſinne, with all height of Grace made poſſeſſor of great bleſſedneſſe, aboue the 72. §. III.

Of MAHOMET the Third.

MAHOMET his ſonne ſucceeded: who inuiting his nineteene brethren to a Feaſt, ſent them to learne his fathers death in the other world, accompanied thither with ten of Amuraths women, from whom iſſue was feared, which, with drowning them he preuented. Much adoe he had with his Ianizaries at home, much loſſe in his Dominions abroad, for which cauſe he ſent for Ferat Baſſa out of Hungarie, and ſtrangled him, and ſent Sinan his emulous corriuall in his roome, whom the Tranſyluanian Prince ouerthrew in battell, and after chaſed him ouer a Bridge (which he made a mile in length for his Armie to paſſe ouer Danubius) with great loſſe of his people. His Bridge the fire and water diuided betwixt them; and the conceit of this ill ſucceſſe (as was thought) procured his death ſoone after. In the yeere 1597. Mahomet in his owne perſon enterpriſed theſe warres, and not farre from Agria, on the ſixteenth of October, fought a cruell battell with the Chriſtians, wherein (had not Couetouſneſſe, rightly called the root of all euill, hindered) had beene atchieued the moſt glorious victorie againſt thoſe Barbarians, that euer Chriſtendome was bleſſed with. Mahomet [a] himſelfe for feare, ſeeing his Ordnance (an hundred foureſcore and tenne great Peeces) taken, and his men ſlaine in multitudes, fled with Ibrahim Baſſa towards Agria, ſhedding teares by the way, which he wiped off his bloudie face with a piece of greene ſilke, ſuppoſed to be a piece of Mahomets garment, carried with him as a holy Relique. But whiles the Chriſtians were now halfe Conquerours, by greedie turning to the ſpoile, their victorie was wholly loſt, and twentie thouſand of them ſlaine, who had ſlaine threeſcore thouſand Turkes. Mr. Barton the Engliſh Embaſſador, was preſent in the fight, and Mr. Thomas Gloner alſo, who in a large iournall of this Expedition, teſtifieth that the great Turk was in great feare; but being animated by ſome about him, he tooke his bow and arrowes, and ſlew three Chriſtians therewith. Thoſe former reports hee mentioneth not. Not long after, the Baſſa of Buda was taken, and the Baſſa of Boſna, with ſome thouſands of Turkes ſlaine, Anno 1599. Yet did not all his loſſes in the Weſt, by the Chriſtians vexe the Great Sultan ſo much, as a rebellion [b] raiſed in the Eaſt, which many yeeres continued. Cuſabin Baſſa of Caramania roſe in armes againſt his Maſter, and hauing now done great matters, his Souldiers before falſe to their Prince, became now alſo falſe to him: hee flying, was after taken and tortured to death. His rebellion out-liued him, and was maintained by one, called the Scriuano, who ouerthrew Mehemet Baſſa in the field, and the ſecond time, in the yeere 1601. ouerthrew him with his Armie of fiftie thouſand, and foraged all the Countrey almoſt as far as Aleppo, proclaiming himſelfe the defender of the Mahumetan faith, and ſoon after gaue the Baſſa a third ouerthrow. The Turkes Embaſſadour, ſent into Perſia to demand the Sophies ſonne in hoſtage, for the aſſurance of the peace betweene [c] thoſe two Monarchs was for his proud meſſage put to the Baſtinado, and grieuouſly threatned, ſent backe to the Grand Signior. The Scriuano's proceedings was much furthered, by the diſſentions betweene the Ianizaries of Aleppo and Damaſco: but death ſtayed him, not his rebellion, which a younger brother of his proſecuted, againſt whom Haſſan Baſſa was ſent, but loſt himſelfe and his Armie. The Rebels beſieged Angole, and forced them to giue two hundred thouſand Duckets to buy their peace. Meane while the Ianizaries, after their inſolent manner, in a mutinie forced Mahomet to commit the Capi-Aga, one of his greateſt Officers, and ſome others, to whom the ſucceſſe of theſe Rebels was imputed, to their cruell execution. The Rebels ſacked Burze, one of the chiefe Cities, the Turkes Store-houſe for his Warres and and Treaſurie for his reuenues; and the great Shaugh of Perſia had taken Corberie alſo from the Turkes. The Gouernour of Babylon inclined now alſo to the Rebels. Mahomet not able with force to preuaile, by faire meanes ſought to winne them, and gaue them their demands, making Zellalie one of their Chiefetaines, Baſſa of Boſna. Whereupon his men of warre entered into a reſolution, to depriue him of the State, and to inueſt therewith Mahomet his eldeſt ſonne: about which an Aſtrologian being conſulted, promiſed all happie ſucceſſe: (vnhappie foole, that knew not his owne approching ruine, which Mahomet executed on him, together with young Mahomet the Prince, and fiftie other conſpirators.)

He ſent forth a Fleet of gallies againſt the King of Feſſe; which hauing encountred with a tempeſt, was forced with a great loſſe to retire to their former Port. The chiefe rebel making ſhew he would come into Europe, as Zellaly had done, Mahomet ſent certain gallies to receiue him, but hee receiued them, and poſſeſſing himſelfe of the gallies, ſlew the men, and mocked the Sultan. Haſſan, a great Baſſa, ioyned himſelfe alſo vnto them, about ſuch time as Tauris [d] was againe recouered by the Perſian. All theſe diſaſters draue Mahomet to his deuotions for refuge, accounting theſe croſſes to be inflicted for his ſinnes, and therefore appointed a Mahomets Armie was reported to be ſix hundred thouſand, ſaith M. Wrag. apud Hakl. tom. 2.

publike Prayers in all the Moſques of his dominion, and ſent two Prieſts bare-headed and bare-footed to Mecca, on pilgrimage to pray for him. But not Mahomet either had no eares to heare this, or elſe was ſo farre entreated, as to be better acquainted with this great Sultan in the place of his eternall reſidence, whither (about the yeere 1603.) Mahomet the Turke [a] was by death ſoone after ſent. His ſonne Achmat ſucceeded; for his eldeſt was ſtrangled in his ſight. He was buried in a faire Chappell, by himſelfe for that purpoſe built, about fiftie foot ſquare, with foure Turrets or Steeples: in the middeſt is his Sepulchre, in a great Coffin of white Marble: his Turbant at his head, two exceeding great Candles of white Waxe, (ſtanding but neuer burning) the one at his head, the other at his feet. The floore is couered with Mats, and faire Carpets on them. Round about are like Tombes for his wiues and children, but not ſo great and faire. Diuers ſuch Chappels there are neere to the Temple of Sophia, as of his father Amurath, with his fiue and fortie children, entombed about him, and of the other great Sultans, two Selyms, Solyman, Baiazet, Mahomet, each hauing a faire Hoſpitall for the reliefe of the poore adioyning. Some of the great Baſſaes imitate the ſame. No other Turkes are buried in the Cities, but in the fields, with ſtones laid ouer, or ſet vpright, faſhioned with ſome reſemblance of the head, which beareth enſigne of his dignitie, & whether it be a man or woman, with letters engrauen further to teſtifie the ſame.

§. IIII.

Of ACHMET.

ACHMAT [b] ſet a ſure guard about his brother, and to preuent the inſolencie of the Ianizaries and Souldiers, diſtributed amongſt them two millions and a halfe, and being fifteene yeeres old, was crowned Emperour. He is ſaid in behauiour and reſemblance much to reſemble Mahomet the Great, firſt Conquerour of Conſtantinople. At the ſame time the warres in Tranſyluania had procured ſuch famine, that rootes, herbes, leaues of trees were their food: yea, a mother is ſaid to haue brought backe into her wombe (by vnnaturall meanes ſatisfying Nature) her ſix children: two men to eate their mother: others to cut downe malefactors from the gallowes, and eate them. Horſes, Dogs, Cats, and ſuch like were rarities to the poore, and dainties beyond their reach. And if the State can be made worſe, theeues by robberies, and Souldiers by continuall ſpoyles, in taking away their goods, adde to their miſeries. Cicala Baſſa is ſent againſt the Aſian Rebels, and receiueth an ouerthrow: the ſecond time he reneweth his forces, with renewing his fortunes, namely, the loſſe of thirtie thouſand of his men. The Perſian recouered the Countrie of Sirvan, and the Citie of Aruſta, with the Countrie thereabouts, and all that from the daies of Solyman had beene taken from them, except two or three places. Haſſan Baſſa is ſent againſt the Chriſtians in Hungarie, aſſiſted with the Tartars, alwayes readie to helpe the Turkes, both becauſe they are linked in marriages, like in conditions, and that huge Empire, for want of heires male of the Ottomans, is entailed to the Tartar Cham: pay and ſpoile are no ſmall motiues alſo to fetch them into theſe Expeditions. Cicala Baſſa is ſent againſt the Perſians, but defeated with all his power by the Perſian.

[b] Achmat.

In Hungarie they doe more with their money, to maintaine rebellions, then with open force. In the yeere 1605. a tumult aroſe among the Ianizaries in Conſtantinople, and fiue hundred ſhops and ware-houſes, with two hundred Iewes, and other perſons to whom they belonged, were burnt: the Ianizaries enriched themſelues with the ſpoile. The Iewes haue made them Vaults, made fire-free to preuent the like danger from the Ianizaries, who are thought purpoſely to fire them ſometimes, and alway haue the office to quench it, or pull downe houſes in neere danger, which they willingly protract, or performe in places fitteſt for pillage: Ignis ruina extinguitur: the remedie no leſſe then the diſeaſe. Hungarie is at once vexed with forraine and ciuill warres: the mutinous Chriſtians doing more harme then the Turkes, and the people flee into Polonia, or the Mountaines for refuge. The Rebels take great Townes, yea, they ſpoyle Stiria and Auſtria. The German name growes odious to the Hungarian. Botſcay, chiefe of the Rebels, is aſſiſted by the Turkes, and called Prince of Tranſyluania; all Hungarie in manner following his enſignes. But the Rebels in Aſia, and the Perſian exploits, detained the Turkes from making vſe of theſe occaſions, elſe likely to haue ſwallowed Hungarie and Auſtria both: yet Peſth was before taken by them, and now Strigonium. Cicala Baſſa is againe ouerthrowne by the Perſian, and with three hundred flieth to Adena. The Baſſa of Trebezond is ſent to ſuccour him, but is diſcomfited, and almoſt all his Armie ſlaine. Achmat enraged, cauſeth Cicala Baſſaes houſe at Conſtantinople, full of wealth and treaſure, to be rifled. Adena is yeelded to the Perſian. The Baſſaes of Damaſco and Aleppo

Aleppo had before fallen out, & taken armes. Damasco had ouerthrown Aleppo in the field, besieged him, and forced him to composition. Now againe, Aleppo ouerthroweth him, and the Bassaes of Tripolis and Gazara his companions, with their Armie of threescore thousand men; tooke Tripolis; the Bassa whereof againe hee ouerthrew, and added to his garlands Damasco, the treasurie of the Turks reuenue, and chief Citie of Syria. The Beglerbeg of Natolia sent his Lieutenant with a great Armie against him, but to their own ruine. He intercepted a Ship laden with the tributes of Egypt. The Persian sent him, in token of loue, a present worth fiftie thousand Crownes. Achmat is hereby forced to peace with the Christians, and to recall his forces out of Hungarie for this employment, Anno 1606. The Emperour yeeldeth satisfaction to the Discontents in Hungary, with free vse of religion to all, and Transyluania to remaine to Botscay and his heires male for euer.

c Ciuill warres betweene the Bassaes of Aleppo and Damasco.

A fire at Constantinople kindled in a Iewes house by the Tartars, burnt many houses and Iewes, and foure millions of goods. Achmat in great magnificence went to his Moschee, to render thankes to Mahomet for a peace concluded with the Emperour. Hee now looketh Eastward with his power, and as Master Henrie Lello in his letter from Constantinople, dated April 2. 1606.) testifieth of him, he would needes at first be a Souldier, but the last Winter, hauing felt the cold windes from the tops of the hils in Bursia, which are all the yeere long couered with snow, and receuing some hurt in his stomacke by drinking those cold waters, hee proued stomack-sicke to this expedition also, and giuing ouer his enterprise against the Rebels, is become one of Venus Knights, therein surmounting his Grand-father Murad, or Amurath. Anno 1607. hee sent the Visier Bassa, with an hundred and thirtie thousand against the Rebels, who preuaileth more by discreet appeasing of them, then by force. The Bassa of Aleppo three times withstood his whole forces; the fourth time fleeth towards Persia with his treasure. Aleppo is left to be taken, and the Garrison put to the sword: But the Bassa himselfe obtained pardon, with restitution of his goods taken from him in Syria. Another fire arose at Constantinople, and consumed two millions of goods, and 3000. houses to the ground. The Duke of Florence doth much harme to the Turks by the sea, 1608. The rebels make new commotions in Asia. Matthias the Arch-Duke standeth out with his forces against the Emperor, and commeth with his army toward Prague, obtaineth the Crowne and Royalties of Hungarie by composition, comes King to Vienna; but the Protestants refuse to sweare alleageance, till free vse of Religion in Austria by King Matthias was granted. Hee was crowned at Presburg. And in the yeere 1612. the Emperour Rodolph being dead, he was chosen in his place. Anno 1610. the Persians [d] ouerthrew the Turkes in diuers battels, wherein many thousands of them were slaine. In the yeere 1613. The Turke [e] had prouided a great Army at Adrianople, to passe into Transyluania, and his Garrisons began some stirs in Hungarie, and a new warre was there feared: but new occurrents in Asia altered that course. For the people in Natolia rose againe in rebellion, committing spoile and rapine: and in Arabia a certaine Rebell vsurped the title of a King, and gathering together aboue fiftie thousand followers, had possessed himselfe of Aden, a commodious Citie for the Indian Merchandize, and fitly seated for the command of the Red-sea. The Persian King put his Embassadour to death, because hee had capitulated with the Turke, that his Master vnder colour of gifts should pay him a yeerely tribute: and sent the Turkish Legate, which was sent with the Persian Legate, backe to Constantinople, hauing first cut off his hands, and put out his eyes. Heereby the Turke was forced to employ his forces this way, which he had intended for Transyluania: and by the Bassa of Buda hath promised to keepe peace: hath sent also his Embassadour into Poland with a great present to the King, swearing by his God, his Horse, and Sword, to conserue the peace. This yeere also about April was a great fire at Constantinople, which burned two thousand houses: the Merchants meane while labouring to conuey and saue their goods, [f] the Bassa Nassuffensis pretended, that a certaine Merchant of Aleppo (whom vpon that occasion hee found there weaponed) intended violence against him, and confiscated his goods (the chiefe cause of the quarrell) which amounted to an hundred thousand Chekins: which I mention, to shew the miserie of Turkish subiection.

In September the Duke of Arragon (hauing intelligence that the Turkish Admirall had departed from Constantinople with seuentie Gallies, with intent to send aide against the Rebells in Syria) with his Nauie of ten Sicilian Gallies fell vpon ten of the Turkish, and tooke seuen of them, with three Bassaes, and the Beg of Cyprus: freeing out of seruitude a thousand Christian slaues. These at Palermo went in procession with Oliues in their hands, the Turkes also following chained: and the Beg of Cyprus (when a huge summe was not accepted for his ransome) killed himselfe.

Of the Emir of Said or Sidon [g] wee haue spoken elsewhere. Hee about the same time came with three Gallies to Liuorno, bringing with him his foure wiues, tenne children and much treasure. Hee presented the Great Duke at Florence a Turkish sword richly set with ſtones, and the Dutcheſſe with two Pearles eſteemed at 60000. Crownes. Newes alſo came from Cyprus, that the Baſſa of Damaſco making an expedition againſt the Emirs ſonne which he had left in Sayd, was by him ouerthrowne and forced to flee, leauing 20000. ſlaine in the field. The Emirs requeſt was aſſiſtance of ſhipping. Theſe broiles in Syria continuing, forced the Turke to ſeeke peace with the Emperour; the ſonnes of Emir hauing ſlaine the Baſſa of Damaſco, and receiuing ſuccour from the Perſian. The Heiducks alſo in Hungary in the yeere 1614. hauing done the Turkes much ſcathe: beſides the vprores in Tranſyluania, where the Prince Gabriel Bathorè was by a wile of the Imperials brought into an ambuſh and ſlaine, and Gabriel Bethlin Gabor obtaining to ſucceed, was by the Turke aſſiſted, moleſted by the Imperials. The Perſian alſo diſpoſſeſſing the Georgians of moſt of their country for taking part with the Turke: and the ſonne of the Baſſa Nuſſuffenſis before mentioned, (who was lately ſtrangled after the manner of the Turkiſh execution of their Great ones) aroſe in rebellion, and committed much ſpoile by fire and ſword in Aſia: the Coſſaks being as troubleſome in the European frontiers. All theſe things forced him to ſeeke concluſion of a peace, to which purpoſe the twelfth of May, 1615. Achmet Chiaia his Embaſſadour entred Vienna, with rich Preſents to the Emperour, and obtained a confirmation of the ſame for twentie yeeres enſuing.

G. Sandys.

The Turkes ſtrength at Sea is ſo ſmall, that the Florentine with ſix Ships onely, hath theſe three yeeres kept the bottome of the Streits in deſpight of them, the whole Armado not daring the onſet: the Admirall employing the Pyrats of Tunis and Algiers, who by our fugitiue Pyrats are inſtructed to the ſpoile of Chriſtian Merchants. One cauſe of this weakeneſſe is their want of ſlaues for their Gallies, thorow their peace with Chriſtendome.

§. V.

Of Sultan ACHMETS Person, Family, Gouernment, and Greatnesse of State.

SVltan Achmet is now Ann. 1616. eight, or twentie nine yeeres old, of a iust stature inclining to be fat, readie sometimes to choke as he feeds, some purposely attending to free him from that danger. He is full faced, and (which they esteeme a great beautie) great eyed. A little haire he hath on his lip, lesse on his chin. He is an vnrelenting punisher of vice. For Sodomie he caused some of his Pages to be drowned. He is now building a magnificent Moschee for the health of his soule, all of white Marble, himselfe first breaking the earth, and working three houres in person. Hee hath not so few as foure thousand which feed and liue in the Seraglio, besides fiue hundred Capagies, who wait by fifties at euery gate. He hath three thousand Concubines and Virgins for his lust, as Mr. Knolles; Mr. Sandys saith, seldome so few as fiue hundred Virgins in a Seraglio by themselues attended by Women and Eunuchs, taken in warre, or from their Christian Parents. They haue their purgations and dyets much like the Persian custome in the time of Esther. When it is his pleasure to haue one, they stand ranked in a gallery, and shee prepareth for his bed to whom he giues his handkerchiefe, then deliuered to the Aga of the women. Shee that beares the first sonne is honoured with the title of Sultana. He had but two sonnes and three daughters, A. 1610. and yet is that way vnsatiably addicted. He cannot make a free woman his Concubine, and therfore Roxolana procuring vnder colour of deuotion her freedome of Solyman, forced him to marry her, doting still on her. This also hath married the mother of his younger sonne (the mother of the eldest being dead) called Casek Cadoun, that is, the Lady without haire, nature both gracing and shaming her. His eldest sonne is about twelue yeeres old. He is much delighted with pleasures of the field, for which in Græcia and Natolia he hath sortie thousand Falconers: his Huntsmen are not much fewer. And whereas their Religion bindes them once euery day to practise some mutuall trade, as his father did, making of arrowes: This Sultan euery morning after his deuotions maketh horne-rings, which they weare on their thumbs for the better drawing of their bowes.

His Officers [a] are thus deliuered: the Capi Aga, by whom hee speakes to such as haue suites to him; Treasurer of the houshold, Cup-bearer, Steward, Ouer-seer of his women, and principall Gardner. These six are in great place: he hath Mutes (persons borne deafe and dumbe) which attend him; he hath fifteene hundred gelded men, from whom their priuities are wholly cut, and they make water thorow short quills of siluer, which to that end they weare on their Turbants. His Visier Bassa's, or Priuie-counsellers, whereof there are nine at Constantinople, and were wont to be much fewer, are now thirtie. The rest of them are in their charges, or Beglerbegs places abroad. They sit euery Saturday, Sunday, Munday, and Tuesday, in the Diuano or Counsell-hall. The Aga is Captaine of the Ianizaries. The Chiauses are his Pursuiuants. The Spahi his guard of Horse-men. The Ianizaries are his best Foot-men, who in their child-hood are taken from their parents, and brought vp in all hardnesse, and in the rules of their Religion. Then are they put to Schooles, where vnder most seuere Masters they are taught the vse of diuers weapons, and such as proue fit are enrolled for Ianizaries. Of whom in all are sortie thousand, and about sixteene thousand with their Aga, attend the Grand Seignior his person at Constantinople, where they are employed as Constables, Clerkes of the Market, Warders of the Gates, Sergeants for Arrests, to guard Embassadors, and other Offices. The Aga is the third place in repute through the Empire: to whom iealousie makes too much loue of the Ianizaries, fatall. The Ianizaries call the Great Turke Father, he reposing greatest trust in them, they acknowledging no dependance but on him. In their marches they carry certaine dayes prouision of victuall with them, which is no great cumber, being a small portion of Rice, with a little Sugar and Hony. The most of them that attend the Court, haue their being in three large Seraglios, where the Iuniors reuerence their Seniors, and all obey their Commanders with much silence. Some are married (a breach of their first institution) and liue in priuate houses. Many of them vndertake to guard such Christians as will be at the charge, both about the Citie and in their trauells, from violence and inciuilities, wherein they are most faithfull. This appeared in one of them of late, stricken by a swaggering Englishman, as they trauelled through Morea, whom yet with much patience and fidelitie hee brought safe to Zante. They are all of some trade: receiue but fiue Aspers a day (to which pension his eldest sonne is admitted from his birth) two gownes yeerely, one of violet the other of stammell: they beare in their hand a great tough reed tipped with siluer, wherewith they strike such as displease them. No iustice may bee publikely publikely adminiſtred on them: but priuately are by their Aga corrected, and ſometimes throwne into the Sea in the night. They are moſt tumultuous when the Emperour is dying, or dead: for which cauſe it is by all induſtrie concealed from them till the next bee eſtabliſhed, who muſt beſtow a largeſſe preſent, and encreaſe their penſions an Aſper a day. They haue lately admitted (beſides Renegados) naturall Turkes, of which one is now Baſſa of the Port, which was neuer before knowne.

He hath alſo in pay others, called Topegi, ſix thouſand which are Gunners; and twelue thouſand Gebegi, which haue charge of the powder and ſhot in the Armies. He hath Seminaries for the training vp of thoſe younglings, the one ſort of which are called Ieheoglani, whereof are fiue thouſand, which neuer goe out of the Seraglio in ſixteene or twentie yeeres, neuer ſee any but their Officers, where they are trained vp to future ſeruice. The Gemoglani (who are alſo tithed children of the Chriſtians) are brought vp with ſome more libertie, and to baſe offices of husbandrie, and ſuch like, and may alſo proue Ianizaries. Of theſe are twentie thouſaud. The Ianizaries and tithed children, with his Timariots, are the maine pillars of his Empire. His [b] Timariots, which hold land in Fee, to maintaine ſo many Horſmen in his ſeruice, are in Europe two hundred fiftie ſeuen thouſand; in Aſia and Africa foure hundred ſixtie two thouſand.

[b] Some ſay there are in all a million: euery one finding as many horſe, as his farme doth double the yeerely value of 60. Sultanies; readie to be commanded by their Sanıacks, theſe by their Baſſas: ſome Sanziack commands 5000. Timariots.

He hath thirtie or fortie thouſand Achingi, Hindes of the Country, which ſerue on horſebacke, without other pay then what they get by foraging; but of ſmall reckoning: as are alſo the Azapi which ſerue on foot (yet properly belonging to the Gallies) whoſe beſt ſeruice is, with their dead bodies to fill vp ditches, to make way for the Ianizaries, and to wearie the Enemy with multitude. Many voluntaries alſo attending the Campe, in hope to ſucceed the ſlaine Spahi or Ianizaries. When they march, the Tartars ſcowre the Countrey two dayes iourney before, then follow the Achingi, and after them the Timariots, next the Iemoglans, after them the Ianizaries, then the Chauſes on horſe-backe: the Sultan followes with the Officers of his Court, and Archers of his Guard foot-men, the ſtipendary Spahi marching on either ſide of him. His Coaches which carry the Pages and Eunuchs come after, and then the carriages and Voluntaries. The Royall Standard is a horſe tayle tied to the end of a ſtaffe. The Ianizaries haue woodden modells of Elephants, boots, ſwords, and the like, borne before them.

Beglerbeg ſignifieth Lord of Lords; of which were wont to be two; one in Europe, another in Aſia: but by Solyman increaſed, that though Romania and Natolia haue ſtill the chiefe titles, yet in Europe are foure others; in Aſia before theſe Perſian warres, nine and twentie, in Africa foure, in all nine and thirtie, which are as Vice-royes, and haue their Begs or Sanzacks vnder them. His Admiralls place is as great by Sea. If theſe great ones doe iniuſtice, the oppreſſed will ſometimes in troupes attend the comming forth of the Emperour, and by burning ſtraw on their heads, or holding vp torches prouoke his attention: who being brought by his Mutes deliuer their Petition, which often turnes to the ruine of the other. Bribery is but lately knowne, yet now the beſt Aduocate. Euery Baſſa keepes a Diuan or Court of Iuſtice in his Prouince: the chiefe is at Conſtantinople foure dayes of the weeke in the Seraglio, whence is no appeale but to the Muſti. The Great Viſier Baſſa is Preſident of the reſt: in three dayes all cauſes are determined. All they haue for aſſurances of purchaſes, is a little ſchedule, manifeſting the poſſeſſion of the Seller, which vnder-written by the Cadi fruſtrates all after-claimes: and as for law-querks they are vnknowne. Rebellions rarely happen, both becauſe the greateſt Commander ſubmits his necke to the Excutioners bow-ſtring, ſent with Commiſſion by the Tyrant encloſed in a boxe: neither may any hope for partakers in reſiſting, where one mans fall is anothers riſing: their kindred and alliance not ſo much as knowne to themſelues: to haue had eminent parents is argument of neglect; of ruine to be beloued: and for wealth they are but ſpunges, all which a greedie life hath ſucked, being ſtrained at their death, except what the Grand Signior pleaſeth to beſtow on their poſteritie. Neither may any ſlaue promiſe much to himſelfe, where damnable policie ſtrangleth the Imperiall bloud, if males: and the iſſue of the females by their ſlaues (for ſo is the greateſt Baſſa giuen by the Sultan, when made husband to his ſiſter or daughter) rarely attaine aboue the degree of a priuate Captaine. This great Empire may be coniectured to grow neere a period, in reſpect it hath lately decreaſed Eaſtward, and in the Sea-forces: their diſcipline is neglected, and not exacted to ancient rigour: their late Emperours effeminate: the bowells of the State much infeſted with rebellions, and it hath alreadie been a long-liued Tyrannie, out-liuing the wonted period. It may ſeeme the greateſt Empire now in being: yet is that of China farre exceeding in reuenues, in naturall ſituation for defence, in Prouinces better vnited, and better peopled, not inferiour in that kinde of policie which preuents alienations and rebellions: but in Souldiery not to bee compared, except we ſay herein he hath full recompence, that hee is ſtrong enough in that kinde, which cares not to conquer, nor need feare to be conquered. The Persian hath not so vast Countries subiect, but better subiection, and himselfe a better Commander, and his Souldiers better-disciplined and experimented. The Mogoll is great, wealthy, and mightie, but Asia is not comparable to European valour. But compare the Turkish greatnesse to that of some of the first Califas, which stretched from India to Spaine, France, and Barbary; or to the Tartarian, which awed more in Asia, then euer Turke possessed in the Vniuerse, perhaps twice told (for proofe read our Tartarian Relations) and yet they pierced as farre as Austria in Europe, ouer-running Russia, Polonia, Hungaria, and making Italy to quake with the rumour of their armes: or to the Roman, which held almost all the Turke hath, when it was better worth the holding, besides, this Westerne World which the Turke knowes not. Herein, I thinke, the Turke ouer-matched beyond comparison; nor any whit exceeding the power and possessions of Alexander; no, nor the Persian greatnesse before him, except in martiall discipline, wherein they now also degenerate. Thus much of Turkish affaires of state: if we adde also this Summa totalis for a conclusion, that the Turke commands on the Sea-coast (after some mens [b] Arithmetike) 11280. miles in Asia, Afrike, and Europe, and the superficies of all his Dominions come to a million two hundred three thousand, two hundred and nineteene miles euery way square. Let the Author answer it, if the summe be transcendent. The Turkes reuenues, besides his Timariots, are esteemed but fifteene millions of Sultanies [c]: which may seeme strange in so huge an Empire. But tyrannie in wasting and desolating Nations, and Lording ouer euery mans estate (none willing to toyle for that whereof he hath no certaintie, nay, which may procure him the greater danger) hath caused thin habitations (I except the Cities) and poor inhabitants. To this his reuenue may be added his taxes, customes, spoyles, and extortions: as the greater fish preying on the smaller, and pray to the greatest; so here, the great ones spoyling others, and themselues spoyled of all with their liues, or else necessarily leauing him their heire at their deaths.

The Persians and Mogol; haue no power by sea.

c The Turkes haue but two sorts of coyne. The Sultanie equall to the Venice Zeccene, and the Asper of siluer, of which 120. make a Sultanie about eight shillings six pence.

§. VI.

An Appendix touching the succession of MVSTAPHA twice, and of OSMANS murther, and other ciuill, vnciuill late Combustions.

ACHMET before he [a] died, to make all sure, resolued to strangle his brother Mustapha, and according to custome will leaue no Competitors in such an Empire. For which purpose a Guard of Capagies attend at the Iron gates of the Seralio, and the Mutes are placed in a roome accordingly. Thus is Mustapha to be dispatched, but see how the stronger arme puts out the strong men? The same night Achmet had a dreame or fearefull vision, which some of the Deruices would needs presume to rumor abroad, in this manner; that he thought, as hee was entring into the seuen Towers, the Princely prison of his predecessors, his brother kneeled downe before him, and cried out, Oh when shall we leaue this horrible custome of shedding innocent bloud? Looke among all the heathens, and see, how quickly they loathed and cast away that crying Sin of sacrificing of humane flesh? But in stead of replying he drew his Semiter to strike off his head, had not one (as hee conceited) held it fast, that hee could not strike; whereupon hee demanded angerly, What art thou? I am the good Genius of Mustapha, and will not suffer him to perish, therefore leaue: and very shortly shall strange things happen in the Empire. Achmat contrary to all expectation the next morning after his Dreame, sent for him into the roome of State, where he lay on a stately Pallet, with all his Vice-Roys and Bashaws groueling on the ground, and the principall Mustie kneeling before him reading on a booke. It should seeme that glad tidings came first to the Citie; For he was taken out of the prison with great respect and obseruation: he was admitted to his galley with high Ceremonies, and yet solemne countenances: hee was accompanied on the Sea with thousands of boats, and ten thousand of weeping eyes: hee landed at the Emperours owne Caska, with great respect and modest stilnesse: hee walking through the Garden of Cypres trees, and at last came to an Iron gate, where his owne company left him, except two Bashawes, who led him by the armes: the gate opens and he must through a Guard of Cupogies; they bend to the ground, and yet looke cheerefully: they brought him into the roome where the Mutes stood; whose presence did more appale him then the rest, but that hee saw the crueltie confirmed, and their very sight was worse then an vnreuersable iudgement: but when he perceiued no violent hands laid vpon him, and that he must yet goe further, he was the more astonished, and the more vexed to endure such a procrastination.

a This is taken out of a booke written of that argument. Achmet reigned about fifteene yeeres.

At laſt he came where the Emperour lay ſicke on his Pallet, before whom his proſtitution was as the ordinary ſlaues: but contrary to all expectation he bad him riſe, and commanded certaine Perſian Carpets to be ſpread, and rich Cuſhions to be laid; on which, according to their manner, hee ſate croſſe legg'd by him, and when the Muftie had raiſed the Emperour vp a little, with a faint voyce he diſcouered an vnlookt for louing heart, and bequeathed to him the ſucceſſion.

He had no ſooner done, but he began to faint, and ſo read them all a leſſon of mortalitie by opening a booke, wherein they ſaw death writ in Capitall letters, and himſelfe ſinking paſt recouery, which made them recouer new Spirits, and preſently bring his brother out into the Sophia, where the principall Muftie proclaimed Muſtapha Emperour, intimating to the Ianizaries the charge of Achmat, to the diſcharging their duties: and the pleaſure of Muſtapha to giue them a larges, which equalling the bountie of other Princes, ouerſwayed nicer exceptions, and ſo with great acclamations they ratified the Election, and cried out, Liue and raigne great Muſtapha. Thus is Muſtapha Emperour, and they had two yeeres triall of his diſpoſition, whereby they found him harmeleſſe (if innocent in both ſenſes) Encomions of no great and ſtirring Spirit.

Scander, and Mehemet Baſhaw take the young Oſman after this out of the Seralio, and preſent him to the Ianizaries, a comely ſweet young youth of nine or ten yeere old, demanding withall, if ſuch an heire of the Othoman Family were to bee reiected without cauſe, or why they ſhould bring an harmeleſſe Prince (as they reputed Muſtapha) into the danger of vſurpation, and differing no further from a Traytor, but that it was not imputed to him, as for Achmats Will? Empires are not ſo tranſlated, and what could they tell, but priuate men for their owne ends had wrought vpon his weakneſſe, making a diſeaſed tongue ſpeake that, which a healthfull heart, and perfect ſenſe would not conſent to: For it was probable, that a Father would diſinherit his children for any brother in the world: Beſides, there was no triall or cauſe either of inſufficiencie, or diſabilitie, and therefore they could not beleeue it. Laſt of all, for any thing they ſaw, Muſtapha himſelfe was not ſtirring or ſtrong enough to play the Steeres-man in ſuch an high built Ship, conſidering the Seas were tempeſtuous, and many dangerous ſhores and rockes were to be paſſed by.

Theſe ſpeeches to the turbulent Ianizaries, were like fewell to fire, and the preſence of the louely youth, made them amazed at their inconſtancie: ſo that by way of penitencie and ſatisfaction, they quickely altered the acclamation of Liue Muſtapha, into the cries of, God ſaue young Oſman, and ſo without further diſputing, hee was aduanced into the Throne, and brought into the Seralio, when Muſtapha leaſt thought of the alteration. But now there is no remedie, hee muſt needs bee depoſed, and ſent priſoner once againe into the ſeuen Towers.

Now doth Oſman begin his Phaetons flouriſh, and runneth the courſe of pleaſures with his youth, ſpending foure or fiue yeeres in wantonneſſe and iollitie, while his Baſhawes ſpent the time in couetouſneſſe and ambitious ouer-ruling others: yet not without careſull ouer-looking the Ianizaries, and prouident preuenting their diſcontents, & turbulent diſpoſition: but all doth helpe; for they ouer-accuſtomed to actiue imployment, and liuing vpon the ſpoile of forraine Nations, as much as the Emperours entertainment, cried out to the warre, and when anſwer was made, that the Perſians had contracted a new league, and the Emperours of Germanies old couenants were not yet determined or ended. They preſently replyed, the indignities which the Ruſſians had offered vnto their neighbors the Tartarians, were not to be endured, for they need goe no further then the piracies of the blacke Sea, and the iniuries of the Coſſacks and Polonians: Nay, why ſhould they not march to the expugnation of Loepolis, and the foraging of the Countries of Moldauia and Bogdonia, and ſo forward to teach Poland a better leſſon, then to diſpleaſe the Othoman Family and mightineſſe.

The Baſhawes knew there was no replying, nor now the fire was kindled no other quenching it, then letting it conſume to cinders, whereupon they preſently anſwered, they were glad that the Souldiers were ſo memorable of the glory of the Empire, and ſo readie to imploy themſelues for the dignitie of the Nation, and therefore they would not by any meanes hinder them, or the cauſe. But they ſhould finde the Emperour as carefull to ſatisfie their demands, as they were willing to augment his Greatneſſe: ſo that if they would giue way vnto time for the preparing of all things fit for the Armie, and the ſending for the Tartarians to accompany them in the iourney, the Emperour ſhould goe in perſon into the field, and Poland ſoone finde, what it was to exaſperate ſuch a Maieſtie.

The King of Poland ſent to the Emperour, to the French King, to the Pope for aſſiſtance; as alſo to his [e] Maieſtie of England with intimation of the terrour, and his well deliuered diſcourſe made ſuch impreſſion on his Maieſties Princely heart, that he had a preſent ſupply:

In a word, his Armie was soone readie, and his Cossacks prepared: by the end of Iuly hee was encamped in the fields of Bogdonia, and within eighe dayes entrenched with twentie Peeces of Ordnance mounted: but the Cossacks quartered by themselues, and after their accustomed manner lying between two Riuers, were the more emboldened to make their daily excursions vpon the Tartars: For hauing a bridge in the reare of their Campe, with which the Turkes were vnacquainted, they quickly transported their men, and as quickly endamnified their enemies.

When the Grand Signeur was made acquainted with the forwardnesse of these Polonians, and vnderstood they were alreadie encamped, and expected his comming, hee was too young to apprehend any feare, and not old enough to lay the blame of his retardance where it was: therefore they made the more haste, when he vnderstood the occasion, and so according to former preparation, the establishment of diuers Gouernments, the ordering the Prouinces, the settling the great Citie; the mustring his Gallies, the guarding of his Castles, and the watching of the Blacke Sea: the Tartars vnited themselues to his Armie, and both together made a bodie of 200000. which with all magnificent preparation hee presented in the same Fields, and within sight of the Polonians; where hee pitched his Imperiall Tent. The Tartars thought to haue made but one battell, and day of triall of the businesse, but when they came to passe ouer Riuers, and assaile Trenches: they knew not what to say, and lesse to doe, though the Ianizaries came as a second vnto them; whereupon they retreated, and were altogether appauled to be so disappointed: Both they & the Ianizaries were glad to retire with losse, & the yong Emperor vnacquainted with the war, was yet acquainted with Oathes and Curses, to chide both himselfe and Fortune. At last the Bashawes seeing no remedie, and finding so great obstacles of their attempt, proiected the preseruation of the Emperours person; but it may bee to secure their liues, and so entrenched themselues, being (as they said) the first time that euer so great an Armie of Turkes was enclosed within walles.

The Polonians also endured both hunger & cold, slacknesse of payment, and their entertainment came many times short: The Noble Generall died in the Campe, the Prince lay sicke of a Feuer, their horse miscarried, and other lamentable effects taught them extraordinary patience, which made them attend good conditions of peace, and secret workings of more nimble spirits. A Priest of Moldauia was set on worke to go among the Polonians, and by way of generall complaint against the outragious effects of warre, to enlarge the happinesse of peace, and inferre what a blessing it were to procure the same: whereupon hee was brought to the young Prince of Poland, and Commanders of the Armie, with whom hee at last preuailed so well, and so farre, that they sent a solemne Embassie to the great Turke, as hee lay entrenched in the fields, to entreate a peace, and desire the renouation of the antiqua pacta, which had beene euer betweene the two Nations. The Turke had learned his lesson so well, that he seemed to make the matter strange and of great humiliation, if hee should consent thereunto, and rather a courtesie granted, then a necessitie imposed, and so deferred them awhile, till at last (as if he had beene ouer-wrought by the intercession and mediation of his Bashawes) he was contented to capitulate the matter, and after many meetings, and a great deale of conference, Articles were drawne and confirmed, with a kinde of solemnitie, and proclaimed by sound of trumpet in both the Campes, and so brake vp the Campe with a kinde of murmuring and repining.

Of these and other occurrents in the Polish warres, are tractats & letters printed.

The Great Turke tooke easie iourneys toward Adrinopolis, where he discharged the Tartars, and sent most of his Ianizaries before hand to Constantinople. Sigismond King of Poland raised his Armie, and rewarding the Cossacks, dismissed them home againe into their Countrey: he went in person to Leopolis, from whence (by this time Osman was come to the Great Citie) hee sent a solemne Embassadour to be there a Leiger, as it had beene in former times.

By Christmasse, Osman comes home, and had the accustomed acclamations of the people, with all the Ceremonies of his returne, whereupon he goes in great pompe to the Sophia, and had the vsefull Guard of his Court Ianizaries to attend him: but within short space many fearefull accidents appalled them all. First, they were astonished at a blazing Comet. Secondly, they were affrighted at a great fire hapning amongst the Iewes, which they presaged ominous to the gouernment. Thirdly, a sore Earth quake made their hearts quake for feare: but this is vsuall in those parts, by reason of the ascending vp the Hills, and many Cauerns vnder ground. The Sea also swelled extraordinarily. And a great dearth hapned. These might bee concurring Symtomes: the disease was Osmans great spirit, emulous of his Ancestors glory, and ambitious to adde the rest of Europe to their Conquests; but hereto his owne auarice, and the decrepit, or at least that vndisciplined age of that Empire were agreed correspondent; and this first disastrous Polonian attempt, filled him with repining indignation.

dignation. He is said to vndertake that warre against the will of his Souldiers, and without the aduice of his Viziers, and his gaines to be the losse of 100000. horses for want of fodder, and 80000. men for want of fighting, to which hee could neuer incite his Ianizaries, though he hazarded thereto somewhat farre his owne person. Hereupon he complained hee was no King, subiect thus to his owne slaues, which would neither fight in war, nor obey in peace, without exacting new bounties and priuiledges.

Delauir Bassa. Delauir Bassa, a man of great courage, lately called from the Easterne parts was suddenly made Vizier; and wrought vpon the Kings discontent, giuing him counsell to prouide a new Souldiourie about Damasco, and from the Coords in stead of these degenerate Ianizaries,

A new militia. and of them to entertaine 40000. for his Guard, and that the Begh-lerbegh of euery Prouince should traine vp some of the inhabitants in Martiall discipline, with which men of new spirits and hopes, hee might be able to doe something. Osman extreamely pleased with this deuice consented and left all to his discretion. Hereupon it was concluded that the King should pretend to goe in person against the Emirde Zaida; and after interceding against that, a pilgrimage to Mecca was pretended. May seuen, 1622. he began to passe his Tents to Asia side with great store of treasure, to the defacing of his Palace, and of Churches. The Ianizaries had secret intelligence, and vpon a word giuen met at the Hippodrome, and thence ranne to the Seraglio in tumult, taking order to stop the passage by water. There they cried out for the King; who appearing, they first demanded his continuance in the Citie: Secondly, the chiefe Officers to be deliuered to them; Delauir the great Vizier, the Hoia or Confessor, the Treasurer, the Gouernour of the Women, the Cadileskar, or Chiefe Iustice, and others as enemies to the State, and authors of that iourney. Hee granted the first, but stucke at the second, and they returned discontent.

Mustapha restored. The next day they renewed the mutinie, slew the Vizier and the Gouernour of the Women, and not finding the King, they called for Mustapha before deposed, a man esteemed holy (or frantike) and fitter for a Cell then a Scepter. Him they found almost starued in a Vault, where in the beginning of these tumults hee had beene put; who first feared death, and the next thing was hee begged water; whom they presently proclaimed Emperour.

Osman consulted with Huzein Bassa, late Vizier in the Polish warre, and the Aga of the Ianizaries, both faithfull to him: sent to haue strangled Mustapha in the Seraglio, but a new vproare happened, and hee was remoued and guarded. The next day the King, with the Mufti went to them, where after much intreatie, their hearts somewhat relenting, yet with new furie possessed, they slew Huzein Bassa, and the Aga; the Mufti was conueyed away secretly; and Osman led to Mustapha, pleads for his life, and at last is cast into the Seuen Towers prisoner.

Osmans brethren & death. Daout Bassa, the new Vizier, enquires and findes that Osman had two brothers liuing, one about twelue, the other seuen yeeres old, and thereupon goes to the prison with a packe of executioners, which finde him new falne asleepe, and by their intrusion awaked and discontent. At first they are amazed, and hee made shew to defend himselfe, till a strong knaue strooke him on the head with a battle axe, and the rest leaping on him strangled him with much adoe. And soone after they mourned for their dead King, as freshly as they had raged vnseasonably, this being the first Emperour they had betrayed, and hauing set vp one, which in all likelihood they must change for disabilitie.

New broiles. The first of Iune following, the Capiaga had receiued secret order to strangle Osmans brethren, which going to doe, they cry out, and he by the Pages was slaine. The Ianizaries mutinie afresh, and will haue account of this treason, whereof the King denies knowledge; so did Daout (who was suspected) but to please them is degraded, and Huzein Bassa late Gouernour of Cairo put in his place.

Const. Lett. Febr. Daout strangled. There is later report of the said Daout, to bee strangled in the same place where hee had caused Osman to die. Neither can wee expect otherwise then monstrous and portentuous births, after such viperean conceptions.

CHAP. X.

Of the Opinions holden by the Turkes in their Religion, and of their Manners and Customes.

HOw the Turkes from so small beginnings, haue aspired to this their present greatnesse you haue seene; bought indeed at a deare price, with their temporall Dominions accepting of a spirituall bondage, becomming the Lords of many Countries, and withall made subiect to those many Mahumetan superstitions. The occasion and chiefe cause of Sects in the Saracenicall deuotions, yee haue heard in the fourth and seuenth Chapters: to which wee may adde here out of [a] Bellonius. He saith, that besides the Alcoran, they haue another booke called Zuna, that is, the Way, or Law, or Councell of Mahomet, written after his death by his disciples, but the readings thereof being diuers and corrupt, the Caliph assembled a generall Councell of their Alphachi, or learned men at Damasco, wherein six Commissioners were appointed, namely, Muszlin, Bochari, Buborayra, Annecey, Atermindi and Dent, to view and examine these bookes, each of which composed a booke, and those six bookes were called Zuna; the other copies (being two hundred Camels-lading) were drowned in the Riuer; those six onely made authenticall, esteemed of equall authoritie among the Turkes, with the Alcoran, and after by one of their Diuines contracted into an Epitome; which booke was called the Booke of Flowers. But this Zuna, being not Una (one as the Truth is) but full of contrarietie, hence haue risen Sects amongst them, the Turkes differing from other Mahumetan Nations, and diuided also amongst themselues.

§. I.

Of their Eight Commandements.

ANTHONY [a] MENAVINVS (who liued a long time in the Turkish Court) saith, that the Booke of their Law is called Musaph, or Curaam, which Georgiouitz reckoneth another booke; not the Alcoran: it is in Arabike; and they hold vnlawfull to translate it into the vulgar. If any like not of Georgiouitz his opinion, but thinke it to be the Alcoran (for al is but the Article, and the name little differs, as before is shewed) I could thinke it likely that this containeth some Extracts and Glosses thereof; or is to their Alcaron, as our Seruice booke to our Bible; hauing some sons and proper methodes, but grounded on the other. Some things I finde cited out of the Curaam, that are not in the Alcoran, as that of the Angels mortalitie, which perhaps may bee the mistaking of the Interpreter. The ignorance of the Arabike hath caused much mis-calling of words and names. They haue it in such reuerence, that they will not touch it, except they be washed from top to toe: and it is read in their Churches by one with a loud voyce, the people giuing deuout attendance without any noyse: nor may the Reader hold it beneath his girdlested; and after he hath read it, he kisseth it, and toucheth his eyes with it, and with great solemnitie it is carried into the due place. Out of this booke are deriued eight principall Commandements of their Law. The first is, GOD is a great God, and one onely God, and MAHOMET is the Prophet of God: this Article of the Vnitie (they thinke) maketh against vs, who beleeue a Trinitie of Persons: in detestation whereof, they often reiterate these words, [b] Hu, hu, hu, that is, He, he, he, is onely GOD, who is worthy to be praised for their limbes, health, &c. and for that he hath prouided sustenance for euery one fortie yeeres before his birth.

b The Turkes vse to repeate one word of their prayers so often, and with such continued feruor, that sometime they fall down with wearines, or seeme rauished in a trance and deuout extasie.

c Policie of the Turkish Empire, Biddulph.

The second Commandement is, Obey thy Parents, and doe nothing to displease them in word or deed: they much feare the curses of their parents. 3. Doe vnto others, as thou wouldest bee done vnto. 4. That they repaire to the Meschit or Church at the times appointed; of which after. 5. To fast one moneth of the yeere, called Romezan, or Ramadan. 6. That they giue almes to the poore liberally and freely. 7. To marry at conuenient age, that they may multiply the sect of Mahomet. 8. Not to kill. Of these Commandements is handled at large in Menauino, and in the booke [c] of the Policie of the Turkish Empire, and in others.

Their times of prayer, according to the fourth precept, are [d] in the morning, called Sala- d Some say that the Turks now vse to resort to their Oratories but three times a day, and Busbequius saith foure, omitting that in the night Busbeq. Epist. 1. They measure the time of prayer by houre-glasses of water. Some say six, and the deuouter sort, seuen.

namazzi, before Sun-rising: the second at noone, called Vlenamazzi. The third, about three houres before Sun-set, called Inchindinamazzi. The fourth at Sun-set, Ascannamazzi. The fifth, two houres within night, before they goe to sleepe. Master Sandys nameth seuen times of prayer enioyned daily: the first Tingilnamas, two houres before day, not mentioned by Septemcastrensis; and another Ginmanamas at ten in the morning, duely obserued on the Fridayes by all, at other times by the more religious. When the Priest calls to prayer, they will spread their garments on the earth, though they bee in the fields, and fall to their deuotions. Moreouer, I haue seene them conioyntly pray in the corners of the streets, before the opening of their shops in the morning. They spend but a part of Friday (their Sabbath) in deuotion, and the rest in recreations: but that so rigorously, that a Turke had his eares nayled to his shop-boord for opening it too soone. Their seruice is mixed with Songs and Responds. They neuer looke backe till they come to the salutation of Mahomet; whom they expect to come againe, and thinke it will be behinde them: They hearken to the Priest reading the Alcoran, or Legend, or intermixing instructions and expositions, with such attention and such steadie postures of bodie, as if they were intranced. They number their often repetitions of the names of GOD, with short eiaculations of prayer and praise vpon beades. If they finde a paper in the streets, they will thrust it in some creuise of the adioyning wall, lest the name of GOD may be therein, and prophaned. Of their publike prayers you shall see more after. They which meane to goe to prayer, goe first to the house of Office, and there purge their bodie: they wash their priuie parts: and then going thence, wash their hands, their mouth, their nose, their countenance, and their wrists, each of them three times, and after their eares and neckes, saying a certaine Psalme, and then wash their feet to the midlegge, saying another Psalme; and after all this, with a graue pace, walke to Church: without these washings they hold their prayers vnprofitable, Septemcastrensis saith, That for this cause of washing they cut their nayles, and all their haire; except on their heads and beards (which yet they combe, and bestow curious paines about, that the water may haue free passage to all parts) yea for this cause he thinketh they obserue Circumcision, that nothing be left couered and vnwashed. They haue three kindes of washings: the first of all the body, no part being left free, called Zcoagirgmeg, which is necessary after any pollution. The second is called Tachrias, of the priuities and hinder parts after stoole, vrine, or breaking of winde. The third, Aptan, or Abdas, in the instruments of the fiue senses, beginning at the hands, from thence the wrists to the elbowes, then the mouth and nostrils; then all the face; with the eyes; then the eares, and from thence to the feet, which he washeth as hie as the ankles. This is not necessary before euery Prayer, except some vncleanesse happen, but may serue for all day.

Their Almes, enioyned in the sixth Commandement, are publike or priuate. Their publike Almes is a sacrifice (if we may so call it) or offering of some beast once euery yeere. For whereas of old they should haue giuen a certaine pension of money to the poore; namely, two in the hundreth, Mahomet vpon their complaint eased this heauy burthen, and conuerted it into this sacrifice. This beast must bee cut in pieces, and giuen to the poore; neither must they themselues eate of it, yet may each man eate of his neighbours offering: and this sacrifice ought to be of the fairest and best Horse, Veale, or Mutton. The place for this sacrifice is called Canaara: where are many Butchers, which cutting the throat thereof, say; In the name of him which hath made heauen and earth, and all things else; this sacrifice be to his honour and worship, and let his infinite bountie accept the same. They vse the like vpon occasion of vowes, if any of their house be sicke. As for their priuate Almes, they hold it necessarie: hauing a vaine conceit, that it freeth them from all imminent misery, which (they say) together with the Almes, turneth from them to the poore man; whence it commeth that the poore are so full of diseases. But for all this charitable Precept, many poore people die amongst them for want of relieue: and [c] if the poore pay not their head-money to the King yeerely, they are beaten, and their women and children sold to pay it: and yet I haue seene (saith Mr. Sandys) but a few beggers amongst them: sometimes you shall meet with couples chained together, begging to satisfie their Creditors.

c Biddulph.

Marriage ought to be sought (they say) for procreation, not for lust. They which liue vnmarried (after fit time, which is about fiue and twentie yeeres of age) are not iust, nor please GOD. Their Law enioyneth them to performe their marriage-ceremonies, with praiers and praises, and modest shamefastnesse; and they ought to learne each other to read, if either partie be ignorant. But their marriage is now farre degenerate from that ancient simplicitie: [d] For if a man like a young woman, hee buyeth her of her Father, and then enrolleth her in the Cadies booke; the marriage following with all Bacchanall solemnities. Many women are inuited by the Brides mother the night before, when after the feasting they bathe her, and the next morning tricke her in her richest ornaments, tying on her silken buskins buskins with knots easily not vnknit (which the Bridegroome must vntie, though with his teeth,) after that with much solemnitie, his companions on horsebacke, riding two in a ranke,& conducted by the Sacdich,who is neereſt of his kindred haue fetched her home: The Bride being deliuered with her face close couered, set astride on horsebacke,with a Canopie ouer her,and receiued of him at his doore, thence led (if shee be of qualitie by an Eunuch to the Bride-chamber. The guests honour him with Presents, yet come not in. The Father also giueth onely some pieces of houshold, carryed openly by particulars through the streets. Now hee is to entertaine the Wiues with an equall respect: alike is their dyet, apparell, yea and beneuolence (vnlesse they consent to change or giue turnes) or else they may complaine to the Cadi, and procure a diuorce: but the husband may put away his wiues at pleasure, who may marry vnto another within foure moneths after, except shee proue with childe, and then shee must stay so long after her deliuerie. But if hee will haue her againe, hee must buy her; and if after the third diuorce, another is first to lye with her, as a punishment for his leuitie. They will sell some of them, or giue them to their slaues. The wiues giue him the reuerence of a Master. They are at no time to deny him their embracements, whom hee toucheth not againe, vntill they haue beene at the Bath. They hold their chastisement, which they receiue from him, as an argument of affection. They intermeddle not with houshold affaires: onely it is required of them to content their husbands, to nurse their owne children, and to liue peaceably together, which also they do without iealousie or enuy. They are exceeding beautifull, for the most part ruddy, cleere and smooth as the polished Iuory; tender and soft, as frequenting the Baths daily, and neuer open to the weather: but wither quickly. Great and blacke eyes are the greatest fayre to the eyes of a Turke. They sit not at Table with their husband, but waite and serue them; and then they dine by themselues, admitting no mankinde with them aboue twelue yeeres old. And they neuer go abroad without leaue,except to the Bath, and on Thursday to weepe at the graues of the dead: They rise to their husbands,and stand while they are in presence; and besides them, come in no company of men, nor doe they speake with a man, or in any part of their body are seene of any man, because they thinke sight, especially where beautie or comlinesse is, cannot bee without sinne. Onely the brother may bee permitted to see the sister, but not the husbands brother. Yea, their sonnes when they come to growth, are separated from them. For this cause that sexe is not suffered to buy and sell, but is closely mewed, saue that their law alloweth them to frequent the publike Baths. The wife and Concubine differ in the right to a dowrie, which the later wanteth; but the wife must cause the other to bee her husbands bed-fellow, when hee commandeth, without gainesaying, except on their Sabbath, or Friday night, which is the wiues peculiar. Yet are the Turkes giuen in both Sexes to vnnaturall lust (in these times) euen the women in publike Baths, sometimes are so enflamed in that filthinesse, as is intollerable. Busbequius tells of one woman, which falling in loue with a young maide, and no way else preuailing, clothed her selfe in mans apparell, and hyring a house neere, procured the fathers good will to haue that his daughter in marriage; which being solemnized betweene them, and the truth discouered (which the blacke mantle of night could not couer from Hymæneus) complaint was made, and the Gouernour quenched the hot flames of this new Bridegroome, causing her to bee drowned for that offence. If the man abuse the wife to vnnaturall lust, shee may haue her remedie by diuorce, if shee accuse her husband: which modestie forbiddeth to bee done in words, and therefore shee puts off her shooe, and by inuerting the same, accuseth her to her husbands peruersenesse. One Master Simons, which liued amongst them, told me,that there are some which keepe boyes gallantly arraied,to serue for the worse then beastly lust of such as will hyre them. He affirmed also, That they haue this lothsome punishment for that lothsome sinne of whoredome,to take the paunch of a beast new killed, and cutting a hole thorow, to thrust the adulterers head in this dung-wallet, and so carrie him in pompe thorow the streets. It is death, either to the bodie by iudiciall sentence, or the soule by turning Turke, for a Christian to haue carnall dealing with any of their women. A Iew which had dealing with a Turkes wife, with her hushands consent, could not escape hanging therefore, (this indeed was a fauour, for hee should haue beene burned) notwithstanding his rich countrey-men offered 2000. Duckets to saue him:Her husband was hanged for his wittoldly permission, and she her selfe drowned. George Dousa reporteth the like danger, which an Armenian hardly escaped, but for talking with a Turkish woman, both of them being therefore imprisoned, and thence deliuered at a deere rate. Hee telleth of their Pæderastie that they buy boyes at an hundred or two hundred Duckets, and mew them vp for their filthy lust, till they proue bearded; they will also steale boyes for that villanie, as hee instanceth of one which came with the Polonian Embassadour so stolne,and neuer could after bee heard of.

Murther (prohibited in their eight Commandement) they hold vnpardonable, if it bee done wilfully. Often will the Turkes braule, but neuer in priuate quarrels ſtrike one another for feare of this Law, and the ſeueritie of the Magiſtrate. And if one bee found dead in a ſtreet or houſe, the Maſter of the houſe, or the Pariſh, muſt finde out the murtherer; otherwiſe hee himſelfe ſhall be accuſed of it, and the whole Contado ſhall be fined, and likewiſe in caſe of robberie. During the time that I remained amongſt them (you heare Mr. Sandys) it being aboue three quarters of a yeere, I neuer ſaw Mahometan offer violence to a Mahometan, nor breake into ill language: If any giue a blow, hee hath many gaſhes made in his fleſh, and is led about for a terrour; but the man-ſlayer is deliuered to the friends of the ſlaine, to bee by them tortured to death. For publike puniſhments (to mention that heere) they haue impaling on ſtakes, thruſt in at their fundament; ganching on hookes, on which they are caſt from ſome high place, there to hang till famine (if ſome more gentle cruelties haue not made a ſuddenner diſpatch) conſumed them: they alſo haue another inuention to twitch the offender about the waſte with a towell, enforcing him by often prickings to draw vp his breath, till they haue drawne him within the compaſſe of a ſpanne: then tying it hard they cut him off in the middle, and ſetting the bodie on a hot plate of copper, which ſeareth the veynes, vp-propping him during their cruell pleaſure: who not onely retaineth ſenſe, but diſcourſe alſo, till hee be taken downe, and then departeth in an inſtant. Little faults are chaſtiſed by blowes on the ſoles of their feet, by hundreths at a time. Parents correct their children by ſtripes on their bellies.

§. II.

Of other their Opinions and Practices in Religion.

Menauinus reckoneth ſeuen mortall ſinnes; Pride, Auarice, Lecherie, Wrath, Enuie, Sloth, and Gluttonie. The firſt, they ſay, caſt Lucifer out of heauen. The ſecond is the root of many other ſinnes. The third is moſt rife amongſt them, and that in the moſt filthy and vnnaturall kinde of Sodomie; their Law to the contrarie notwithſtanding. Their fourth maketh a man a beaſt. The fifth ſhutteth men out of Paradiſe, and ſo forth of the reſt. Wine [a] is alſo forbidden them; but yet they will bee drunke with it, if they can get their fill of it. And Mahomet the third (Anno 1601.) imputing diuers inſolencies of the Ianizaries to their exceſſiue drinking of Wine (by the Mufties perſwaſion) commanded on paine of death, all ſuch in Conſtantinople and Pera, as had Wine, to bring it out and ſtaue it (except Embaſſadours onely) ſo that the ſtreets ranne therewith. One drinking Wine [b] with Busbequius, made great clamors; being asked the cauſe, hee ſaid hee did it to warne his ſoule to flee into ſome corner of the bodie, or elſe be quite gone, leſt it ſhould bee polluted with that ſinne. Yet in their Faſt or Lent they abſtaine very religiouſly. [c] If it be proued againſt a Prieſt, that he hath drunke wine but once, hee ſhall neuer be beleeued as a witneſſe after it. Swines fleſh is prohibited too; in abſtaining from which they are more obedient; it being vtterly abhorred.

a Drinking of Greeke wine, is too great a ſinne for the Turkes to forbeare.

The Turkes [d] generally hate (ſaith Septemcaſtrenſis) that lightneſſe in apparell, ſpeech, geſture, &c. vſed of the Chriſtians, whom for this cauſe they call Apes and Goates. Likewiſe they are not ſumptuous in their priuate buildings. They go to the warre as it were to a wedding, eſteeming them bleſſed which are therein ſlaine. The wiues and women-ſernants agree in one houſe, without iealouſie and grudging; they are in their habite and behauiour modeſt: and, where himſelfe dwelt, the Father-in-law had not ſeene the face of his Daughter-in-law, liuing in the ſame houſe with him, in twentie yeeres ſpace; ſo religiouſly doe they veyle themſelues.

d The Turkes are no faſhion-mongers.

On Friday they pray more deuoutly, but (as the Alcoran alſo permitteth) they abſtaine not from all labour. He ſaw the Grand Signior himſelfe goe to their Church, and likewiſe to the Bath, attended onely with two youths; none vſing any acclamation to him. And in the Church he praied on the pauement couered with a carpet, like to the reſt, without any throne or enſigne of royaltie. And hee obſerued the like modeſtie in his other behauiour. But this (as other things from their ancient ſimplicitie) is now altered. Thus Mr. Sandys of Achmet. Euery other Friday lightly (beſides at other times on occaſions) hee goeth abroad to the Moſque: and when in ſtate, there is not in the world to bee ſeene a greater ſpectacle of humane glory, or (if ſo I may ſpeake) of a ſublimated manhood. For although the Temple of S[t]. Sophia, which hee moſt vſually frequenteth, bee not aboue a ſtones caſt from the vtmoſt gate of the Seraglio, yet hath he not ſo few as a thouſand horſe, beſides the Archers of his guard foot-men, in that ſhort proceſſion: the way on each ſide enclоſed with Cappagies Cappagies and Ianizaries in Scarlet. The Aga, Captaines, Baſſaes, Beglerbegs, and the reſt attending in exceeding pompe, and yet (which is the greater maruell) in exceeding ſilence, the eares diſcerning no more then in midnight ſleepe, except when they ſalute him with a ſoft and ſhort murmur: So likewiſe in entertainment of Embaſſadors, he ſits in a rich roome vpon a low Throne, the Baſſaes ſtanding by like Statues without ſpeech or motion. The ſtranger is led betweene two, and goes backward from him, neuer putting off his hat: for to ſhew the head they hold it an opprobry.

The Turkes are ſo zealous in their ſuperſtition, that they will rather loſe their life then Religion: as among other examples in Scanderbegs time at Dibra, many Turkes choſe rather to die Turkes, then to liue Chriſtians; yea ſome, as it is reported, rather to kill themſelues, then to leaue their ſuperſtition: and in the yeere 1568. The Perſian Embaſſador was ſhot at, and one of his followers hurt by a Turke, who being apprehended, confeſſed that hee did it becauſe he was an Heretike, and ſent from an Heretike: for which fact he was drawne at an horſe-tayle thorow the Citie, and then had his right hand cut off, and after his head. They hate the Perſians, as Ruſtan Baſſa told Busbequius, more then they doe the Chriſtians: like as the Traditionarie Iew doth the Textuarie, and the Papiſt the Proteſtant. Busbeq. Epiſt. 3.

Images they haue in ſuch deteſtation, that (beſides the ſcratching out the eyes of thoſe in the Muſaique worke of Saint Sophies Temple) when Solyman ouerthrew King Lewis of Hungary, he carried away three Images of cunning worke in Braſſe, repreſenting Hercules with his Club, Apollo with his Harpe, Diana with her Bow and Quiuer, and placed them in the Tilt-yard at Conſtantinople: but by the perſwaſion of the Mufti, they were molten into great Ordnance. They haue no Scutchions or blazing of Armes: nay, they vſe no ſeales in their letters or other writings, which ſeeme to them to ſauour of ſuperſtition, or ſuperfluitie.

When they conquer any Citie, they turne the Temples into Moſques, and ſacrifice there. Thus did Solyman [e] at Buda, and Amurath ſacrificed ſixe hundred captiues to his Fathers ghoſt. e Knolls.

They are moderate in their priuate buildings, and deteſt [f] the Chriſtians for their exceſſe and ſuperfluous expences that way: What (ſay they) doe thoſe Pagans thinke they ſhall liue euer? They often lodge (ſaith [g] Villamont) at the Signe of the Moone; and the like moderation they vſe in diet and apparell. They haue a braſſe pot, and their other meane houſhold implements with them in the warres, which they vſe in peace. Readie money is their ſureſt riches, becauſe the Grand Siguior is their ſureſt Heire. f Septemcaſt. M. Simons told me that now they are herein more ſumptuous. g Voyag. du Villamont. l. 3. c. 6.

They haue the riſing of the Sunne in great reuerence; and eſpecially the appearing of the new Moone: as [h] when Mahomet the great beſieged Scodra, the new Moone beginning to ſhew her ſelfe, the Mahumetane Prieſts, going about the Armie, gaue the Souldiers warning thereof, as the manner is, by ſinging of a Song in manner of a Proceſſion; whereunto the whole Armie anſwered with a ſhort reſpond, and at the ſame time bowing themſelues to the ground, ſaluted the Moone with great ſuperſtition. h Knol. p. 421.

They may [i] haue twelue lawfull Wiues, and as many Concubines as they will (ſome ſay, but foure Wiues.) The children of the one are equally legitimate as well as the other, and inherite alike: yet few of them keepe two Wiues together in one houſe: but in ſeuerall places where they haue dealings, they haue ſeuerall Wiues, which they diuorce at pleaſure. Some ſay, but foure Wiues are allowed them: no great matter, where all their owne are allowed to their vſe, with others they may not meddle. The offending man they ganſh, the woman they drowne. i Septemcaſt.

They tell many things of Antichriſt (whom they call [k] Tethſchel) and of the Reſurrection, and of the laſt Iudgement, of Hell, and Purgatorie: And that Mahomet after Iudgement ſhall deliuer all of all Religions from thence. k Leunclau. ſaith Degnal.

They haue no knowledge of liberall Arts, of caſes of Conſcience, of Originall ſinne, or of actuall, further then the outward act.

Their reſpects to Reliques appeareth by Mahomet [l] the third, 1597. who in the diſcomfiture of his Armie fled towards Agria, ſhedding ſome teares as he went, and wiping his eyes with a piece of Mahomets garment, which he carried about him as a Relique. l Knoll.

The Turkes may neither eate, drinke, nor make water, ſtanding.

In their aduerſitie they ſeeke with earneſt prayers to their Prophets; and publike ſupplications are ſometimes decreed. At [m] the taking of Alba Regalis, 1601. the Baſſa of Buda (then priſoner at Vienna) hearing of it, abſtained from meate, with his two ſeruants a whole day, proſtrate vpon his face, praying vnto his Prophet Mahomet, who hee ſaid had beene angrie all that yeere with the Turkes. They [n] endure puniſhments inflicted by the Magiſtrate with great patience, thinking they ſhall eſcape all torment in thoſe parts in the World to come: they therefore reward the whipper, and eſteeme the whip (which I enuie not to them) ſacred. m Kn. p. 1136. n Busbeq.

They are (but contrarie to the Alcoran) addicted to ſorceries and dreames: their Prieſts write them letters or ſpells, to keepe them from danger and harme of ſhot, &c. called f Haymayly. They will write any thing for money, as letters of freedome for ſeruants to run away from their maſters, and ſuch like. They make a ſhew of holineſſe, but are cloſely wicked, ignorant of their owne law (to couer which, they anſwere in darke ſentences) and the people much more. Nothing is ſinne, to count of, but that which endamageth ciuill ſocietie.

They eſteeme for good workes, g the buildings and endowings of Hoſpitals, making Bridges and High-wayes, digging of Pits and Wells, and conueying waters to High-waies and Cities, building Bathes, and founding of Churches, and ſuch like publike workes. Roſtan h Baſſa left his wife, the Daughter of Solyman, at his death fifteene millions of gold, and ſhee had of yeerely reuenue halfe a million; ſhee, amongſt other her workes, attempted one moſt famous, which was a conduit to conuey water, for the vſe of the Pilgrims betwixt Gairo and Mecca, fortie dayes iourney, and for the ſame intent procured the Sultan Selym her brother, to write to the Venetians for a licence to extract out of Italy an hundred thouſand pound of Steele, only to make Chizzells, Hammers, and Mattocks, for the cutting of certaine Rockes, by which this water muſt paſſe.

Their i Oathes (eſpecially of their Emperours) are of many cuts, and varietie of faſhion. And for Vowes; in neceſſities and dangers, they wil promiſe vnto God the ſacrifices of beaſts in ſome holy places, not vpon Altars, but k hauing flaied off the skin, they giue it with the head, feet, and forth part of the fleſh to the Prieſt; another part to the Poore; the third to the Neighbours; the fourth is for the Gueſts.

i Their oathes and vowes.

k Andr. Arzuabene.

They are ſo addicted to the opinion of Fate, that God is eſteemed to bleſſe whatſoeuer hath ſucceſſe, as namely, Selyms murthering his Father; and to deteſt what wanteth good euent, whatſoeuer ground it had. They feare not the Plague, accounting euerie mans time limited by Fate, and therefore will wipe their faces with the cloathes of ſuch as haue dyed thereof.

They hold l it alike acceptable to God, to offer almes to beaſts, and to beſtow it on men, when it is offered for the loue of God. Some there are, which will redeeme birds, impriſoned in their cages or coopes, and hauing payed their price, let them flie. Others (for the loue of God) caſt bread into the water to feed the fiſhes, eſteeming it a worke greatly meritorious; but Dogges are accounted vncleane, in ſtead whereof they delight in Cats, following (they ſay) their Prophet Mahomet, who falling aſleepe at table, and awaking to goe to his deuotions, rather cut off his ſleeue, whereon he found his Cat faſt aſleepe, then he would diſturbe her. Maſter Simons told mee, that he hath ſeene them at Cairo feed Dogges with baskets of bread, one ſtanding by with a club to keepe them from fighting: and one gaue almes for a Bitch which had Whelps vnder a ſtall. Herein perhaps (as in other things) the Egyptians are more ſuperſtitious then the Turkes, eſpecially in this of Dogs, which ſauours of their old Anubis and dog-worſhipping. Yea, and in Conſtantinople, m though they ſuffer them not as vncleane creatures, to come into their houſes, yet they thinke it a deed of pietie to feed them, and buy bread therefore, prouiding them kennells alſo: moſt of them haue no particular owner: they repaire to the Sea-ſide nightly, where they keepe a grieuous howling, heard (if the winde be Southward) to Pera.

m M. G. Sandys.

They ſay Moſes was the firſt great Prophet, to whom was giuen the booke of Teſrit, that is, the Law, and they which obſerued it in thoſe times were ſaued. But when men grew corrupt, God gaue Dauid the booke Czabur, or the Pſalter: and when this preuailed not, Ieſus was ſent with the booke Ingil, or the Goſpel, whereby in that time men were ſaued. They hold that Chriſt was borne of the Virgin Marie, at her breaſts, hauing conceiued by the ſmell of a Roſe, which the Angell Gabrel preſented her. And preferring Chriſt before Moſes, they admit not a Iew to turne Turke, but hee muſt firſt be a Chriſtian, and eate Swines-fleſh, and after two or three dayes abiuring Chriſt, hee is made Muſulman. For ſo Mahomet came laſt in order of the Prophets with his Alcoran. This Law and Lawgiuer is ſo ſacred to them, that in all their prayers, euen from their mothers breaſts, they obſerue this forme: La illah, illelah Mehemmet irreſullellah tanre rirpeghamber hace: That is, there is no God but one, and Mahomet his Prophet: one Creator, and more Prophets. This they ſucke in with their milke, and in their firſt learning to ſpeake, liſpe out this deuotion. The infants goe with the reſt to their Moſquees or Meſchits, but are not tied to other ceremonies, ſauing waſhing, till they are circumciſed. Euery man n hath (in their opinion) from his birth to his death two Angels attending him; the one at his right hand, the other at his left. At foure or fiue yeere old they ſend him to the Schoole to learne the Curaam, and the firſt words which their Maſters teach them are to this ſenſe; God is one, and is not contained in any place, but is through all, and hath neither father nor mother, nor children, eateth not, nor dinketh, nor ſleepeth, and nothing is like to him. The two Angels before ſaid, are called Chiramim and Chiratibin, which write the good or euill that men doe against the day of Iudgement. The Turkes [o] abhorre blasphemie not onely against God and Mahumet, but also against Christ and the Virgin Marie, and other Saints: and they punish blasphemers of whatsoeuer Sect: they account it a sinne for a man to build a house which shall last longer then a mans life: and therefore howsoeuer they are sumptuous and magnificent in there publike buildings, yet are their priuate dwellings very homely, and ill contriued. They eate much Opium, thinking it maketh them couragious in the warres. They [p] haue a remedie for paine in the head or elsewhere, to burne the part affected with the touch-boxe (which they alway carry with them) or with some linnen cloth, whereby they haue many markes on their foreheads and temples, witnesses of their needlesse and heedlesse respect to Physicians.

As the Scripture containeth some Prophecies [q] of the arising and proceedings of the Turkish Nation, the rod of God, whereby hee scourgeth his Christian people; so haue they also prophecies amongst themselues of their end and ruine, when God in his mercie to Christians shall execute iustice vpon the Turkes, and cast the rod into the fire, wherewith he had chastised his children. Such an one is that which Georgiovitz [r] translateth and expoundeth: and such is that which [s] Leunclavius hath transcribed out of their Booke called Messabili, wherein is written, that Constantinople shall be twice taken before Degnal Lain, that is, the cursed Antichrist, shall come; once by the Sword, another time by the force of the praiers of the sonnes of Isahac. Lain [t] is an Epithete which they giue to Degnal, signifying wicked or mischieuous. Of this Degnal the Turks fable, that before his comming, shall Mechdi enioy the Empire. This Mechdi, they say, [u] was descended of their Prophet Mahumet, and walketh inuisible: one day he shall come into light, and raigne for a time: and after him shall Degnal their Anti-Prophet, or Antichrist, come. A certain Deruise offered to assault & murther Baiazet the Great Turk, professing himselfe to be that Mechdi, and was slaine by one of the Bassas.

§. III.

Of the Turkish Manners, their Ciuill and Morall behauiour.

AS for the bloodie practises, which each Emperor vseth in murthering his brethren to secure him in his Throne, in rooting out of the Nobilitie of the Countries which they conquer, in rasing the Wals & Fortresses of the Cities, least they should be receptacles for conspiracie, in translating people from one Countrie to another, with other their practises and policies of state, I purpose not to adde any more: but refer the Reader to others Treatises. But to present vnto you a Turke set forth in the ordinary Turkish disposition, manners, and fashions, will not (I thinke) seeme tedious. Thus therefore haue wee viewed him with others [a] eyes. They be generally well complexioned, of good statures, and full bodies, proportionably compacted. They nourish no haire about them, but a locke on their crowne, and on their faces onely, esteeming it more cleanely: and to bee better prepared for their superstitious washings. But their beards they weare at full length, the marke of their affected grauitie, and token of freedome (for slaues haue theirs shauen) scoffing at Christians which cut or want them. All of them weare on their heads white Shashes and Turbants, the badge of their Religion: as is the folding of the one, and size of the other, of their vocations and qualitie. Shashes are long Towells of Callico wound about their heads. Turbants are made like great Globes, of Callico too, and thwarted with rolles of the same; hauing little copped caps on the top, of greene or red veluet; being onely worne by persons of ranke, and he the greatest that weares the greatest, except the Mufties, which ouer-sizeth the Sultans. Some Christians (Turkising in fashion) are permitted as a great fauour to weare white heads in the Citie. The next, that they weare is a smocke of Callico with ample sleeues, much longer then their armes: vnder this, a paire of Calsouns of the same, which reach to their ankles, the rest naked: their slip-shooes yellow or red, picked at the toe, and plated on the sole: ouer all a halfe-sleeued coate, girt vnto them with a Towell: their necke all bare: and this within doores is their Summer accoutrement. Ouer all, when they goe abroad, they weare gownes buttoned before, vngathered in the shoulders. In the Winter they adde to the former, Calsouns of cloth, which about the small of the legge are sewed to short smooth buskins of leather without soles, lining their gownes with Furres, as they doe their coates. They weare no gloues, nor alter their fashions, which (except in richnesse) are alike in all. They retaine the old worlds custome in giuing change of garments, one vest fitting all. The Clergie goe much in greene, as Mahomets colour: whose kinsmen weare greene Shashes, and are called Emers, or Lords, as doe their women also somewhat of greene on their heads: an il-fauoured race, seeming branded of God, for their hereditarie presumption of holinesse from so vnholy a stocke. If a Christian weare greene, they will teare off his clothes, if not beate him. They carry no weapons about them in the Citie: only they thruſt vnder their girdles great crooked kniues of a dagger-like ſize, in ſheaths of mettall, the hafts and ſheaths ſometimes richly ſet with ſtones. They beare their bodies vpright, of a ſtately gate, and elated countenance. In their familiar ſalutations they lay their hands on their boſomes, and a little decline their bodies, almoſt to the ground, if to a Great man, with kiſſing the hemme of his garment. The ornaments of their heads they neuer put off vpon any occaſion. They affect cleanlineſſe euen religiouſly, neuer making water, but they waſh their hands and priuities: this they doe ſecretly and couching, reuiling the Chriſtian, or ſtriking him for piſſing againſt a wall. This they doe alſo, leſt they ſhould pollute their garment, which might fruſtrate their prayers. They neuer walke vp and downe for recreation, nor vſe any other exerciſe but ſhooting, and then alſo ſit on carpets in the ſhadow, and ſend their ſlaues for their Arrowes. Theſe pierce deepe, through Targets of Steele and pieces of Braſſe two inches thicke: the Bow for forme and length like the lath of a Croſſe-bow, of Buffolos Horne, intermixed with ſinewes of admirable workmanſhip. Wreſtling and rope-walking are profeſſions, not recreations. Of Cardes and Dice they are happily ignorant: at Cheſſe they will play all day long, auoiding yet the hazard of money. The better ſort delight in Horſes, which are quickly jaded if held to a good round trot (for amble they doe not) in an indifferent iourney. But they ride not ſo faſt to put them to it. They feed them in their ſtable with Barley, which there is very cheape, as onely ſeruing for that purpoſe.

They greatly reuerence their Parents and Superiours, and the young, the aged: the left hand as they goe, hath the prioritie of the right, in that they are made Maſters of the others ſword, and the chiefeſt place the furtheſt from the wall. They liue brotherly together, but come not, except on ſpeciall occaſion, in each others houſe, and then but into the more publike parts thereof. Their houſes and furniture are meane, hauing nothing on the inſide but white walles (except ſome ſpeciall roome) the roofes of many curiouſly ſeeled, the greater part of the floore, and that a little aduanced, couered with carpets, the cauſe they at entring put off their ſlip-ſhooes. They lie on Matreſſes of Silke, or ſtained Linnen, with Bolſters of the ſame, and Quilts ſutable, but much in their clothes: as for lowſineſſe which followes, it is no great ſhame. They haue neither Tables nor Stooles, but ſit croſſe-legged on the floore all in a ring. They haue a skinne ſpread before them in ſtead of a cloth. The better ſort ſit about a round boord ſtanding on a foot, halfe a foot high, and brimmed like a Charger. Rice ſod in the fat of Mutton is their ordinarie food; Pottage alſo, fried Eggs, Paſties, Tanſies, Fleſh little in gobbits, London ſpending as much fleſh in one day, as Conſtantinople in twentie. Fiſh they haue in indifferent quantitie. The Commons commonly feed on Herbes, Rootes, Onions, Garlick, Hodge-podges, &c. vile fare, and at as vile rate in ſo great plentie. They are attended by their ſlaues, of which to haue many is to bee rich. When one hath fed ſufficiently he riſeth, and another takes his roome, and ſo continue till all bee ſatisfied. They eate three times a day: but when they feaſt they ſit all day long, except they riſe and exonerate nature, forthwith returning. They abſtaine from Hoggs-fleſh, Bloud, and that which dies alone, except in neceſſitie. Their vſuall drinke is water: the richer infuſe diuers confections. Wine is prohibited, but ſo greedily ſwallowed where they can get it, that but few goe away vnled from the Embaſſadours table. Our Beere they preferre before all other drinkes, which would in all likelihood prooue exceedingly profitable to ſuch as would bring it in amongſt them, where wine is forbidden, and Barly is at nine pence a buſhell. They haue Coffa houſes more common then Ale-houſes with vs [b], in, or neere to which on benches in the ſtreet, they will ſit chatting moſt of the day, drinking their Coffa (ſo called of a berry it is made of) as hot as they can indure it. It is blacke as ſoot, and taſtes not much vnlike it, good (they ſay) for digeſtion and mirth. Of the boyes which ſome Coffa-men keepe as ſtales, wee haue ſpoken before. Optum they much vſe, it ſeemes for the giddineſſe and turbulent dreames it cauſeth, which they (as all kinde of ſtupifying, aſtoniſhment and madneſſe) religiouſly [c] affect. This perhaps the cauſe why Tobacco is ſo liked, a thing brought them by the Engliſh, the worſt here, paſſing currant, and excellent there. But Morat Baſſa, not long ſince, cauſed a pipe to be thruſt through the noſe of a Turke, and ſo be led in deriſion through the Citie. They take it through reeds with great heads of wood annexed.

The vnder garments of the women differ little from thoſe of the men. Theſe weare on their heads a cap ſugar-loafe-faſhion, the better ſort vſe Bracelets and Iewells. When they goe abroad they weare ouer all, long gownes of violet or ſcarlet cloth, tyed cloſe before, the large ſleeues hanging ouer their hands. They haue the ſweeteſt children that are lightly ſeen, which they carry aſtride on their ſhoulders. They anoint their bodies with the earth of Chios, which makes the skinne ſoft, white, and ſhining, freeing the face from wrinkles.

For the Readers further pleasure I haue here presented a Turkish Woman in Picture.

They vse their bond women with little lesse respect then their wiues. Their Markets yeeld Men, Women, Virgins, Children, to as ample tryall and full purchase as Horses with vs: saue that the Men-slaues may compell their Masters before the Cadi to limit the time of their bondage, or set a price of their redemption, or else to sell them to another. But Galley slaues are seldome released, or those that belong to great men beyond the Cadies authoritie. They buy little children, and geld many of them, as you haue heard, which some say was begun by Selym the second, after he had seene a Gelding couer a Mare: and by Menauinus his relation of himselfe, seemes not practised in his father Baiazets time. These are in great repute with their Masters: yea, the second Vizier of the Port is now an Eunuch.

Turkish women. Though they be courteous to each other, and will aske how himselfe, child, slaue, horse, cat, &c. doe: yet neuer of the wife: yea, if you aske a child how his mother does, he will throw stones and reuile you. Biddulph.

For Arts; some haue some little knowledge in Philosophie. Necessitie hath taught them the practise of Physicke, not the grounds of Arts. In Astronomie they haue some insight, and vndertake to tell fortunes. They haue a good gift in Poetrie. Their Musicke is very vile.

The Grand Signior was once perswaded to heare some Italian Musick, but while they spent much time in tuning, hee (perhaps esteeming that their Musick) commanded them to depart. Logick and Rhetorick they reiect. Some write Histories, but few read them, thinking none dare write the truth of the present, or can, of the times past. Printing they reiect, the most of their Priests liuing by writing. Euery one hath some trades, such lightly as serue their owne turnes; a lazie people, more esteeming ease then profit, yet very couetous, seldome holding compact with the Christians that holds not with their commoditie.

Of the Religious places amongst the Turkes: their Meschits, Hospitalls, and Monasteries: with their Liturgie and Circumcision.

§. I.

Of their Temples: A description of S. SOPHIES.

THE places [a] of most Religion to the Turkes abroad, are those which Mahumet himselfe polluted with his irreligion: as Mecca, Medina, &c. The places of most Religion amongst themselues are their Mosches, or Meschits [b]: that is, their Temples and Houses of Prayer (whereof they haue many in all Turkie) and next thereunto their Hospitals for the relieſe of the poore, impotent, and Pilgrims. Neither are the Turkes sparing in these or the like (seeming) charitable expences. For when a Turke falleth sicke, and thinketh he shall thereof dye, hee sends for his friends and kinsfolkes, and in their presence maketh his Testament: the greatest Legacies whereof are bequeathed to publike vses, which they thinke will be meritorious to their soules.

Such are the making and repayring of Bridges, Cawseyes, Conduits to conuey water to their Hospitalls or Temples. Some also giue to the Redemption of Captiues. Many of their Women (the deuouter Sexe, whether in Religion or superstition) bequeath money to bee distributed amongst such Souldiers as haue slaine any certaine number of Christians: a deed in their conceit very religious. These are the Wills and Deeds of the inferiour sort. But the Emperors, and great Bassaes, appoint Legacies to expresse a greater magnificence with their deuotion, as the building of Temples and Hospitalls.

Their Temples or Meschites are for the most part foure square, not much vnlike to our Churches, but larger in length then bredth. The Temple of S[t]. Sophie in Constantinople is of all other in the Turkes Dominion the most admirable, built long since by Iustinian, and (by Mahumet the Conqueror) peruerted to this Mahumetan vse aboue nine hundred yeeres after. Of this Temple they write, [c] that it was first built by Constantius, sonne of Constantine the Great, with a roofe of timber: and burnt by the Arrians in the time of Great Theodosius, who againe repayred it. Sozomenus [d] saith, that in the broyles, which hapned not long after in the raigne of Arcadius and Honorius about Chrysostome, the Church was fired, his enemies ascribing it to his partakers, and they againe to his Aduersaries. It is reported that Theodosius Iunior rebuilt it. But in the time of Iustinian, Procopius [e] testifieth, that base and wicked men burnt it againe, which Iustinian built a-new in such sumptuous and manificent sort, that in regard of this change it might haue beene wished that it had perished long before. His chiefe worke-men were Anthemius, and Isidorus, who raised it into a most goodly frame, which might amaze the beholders, and seeme incredible to the hearers. Both he and Euagrius [f] recite the particulars. The length was two hundred and threescore feet: the bredth one hundred and fifteene: the height a hundred and fourescore. Zonaras, Agathias, and Georgius Cedrenus, tell of the harmes it receiued by Earthquakes, whiles Iustinian liued, which yet he repaired, as did Basilius and Andronicus after him. Nicephorus [g] saith, that Constantine raised the Temple of Peace (which before was but small) to that large and stately greatnesse, which in his dayes it retayned: and his sonne Constantius finished the Temple of Sophia so neere it, that they seemed to haue but one wall. It was [h] founded by Constantine his father: and was burnt in a sedition of the people, in the raigne of Iustinian, in which rebellion thirtie thousand of the people were slaine, and partly to pacifie the wrath of GOD (saith hee) for so great a slaughter, hee built this Temple. From the side of the Temple hee tooke [i] foure hundred twentie and seuen Pillars or Images of Heathen gods, and of the twelue signes of the Zodiake: and fourescore Statues of Christian Emperours, which hee didistributed in the Citie. But more then enough of the ancient structure thereof.

As it is at this day, diuers haue described it: but of them all most diligently, Petrus [k] Gellius. The walls and roofes thereof are of Brick, the inner part lyned with Marble most excellent, and of diuers sorts, the roofe is set with Stones, and pieces of Glasse gilded: Nature and Art conspiring to breed the beholders both pleasure and wonder. It is so composed, and the Pillars and Arches so placed, that the middle Ile within (considered by it selfe) seemes seemes like the forme of an Egge, long and round: but the whole fabrick both within and without, yeeldeth to the curious obseruer a square forme. All the inner part hath Arches (in the top open to receiue light) which are sustained with Marble Pillars of diuers colours, and there are, saith Bellonius, (if one may say it) as many doores in that Temple, as are dayes in the yeere. It is farre more admirable then the Roman Pantheon: The worke of that being grosse, solid, and easie for a workeman to conceiue. But this Sophian Temple is more subtle to the view of the eye and minde. It hath two rewes of Pillars each ouer other, those vpper ones supporting the hemisphere, louuer, or steeple, which is wrought all with Musaike worke, garnished with gold and azure. The doores or gates are couered with fine Latten of Corinth: one of which (they imagine) was made of the wood of Noahs Arke. And therefore there are in it three places left vncouered for the deuouter people to kisse, for the pardon of their sinnes. It had sometimes aboue three hundred thousand Duckets of yeerely reuenue. The Turkes, when they turkeised it, threw downe the Altars, turned the Bells into great Ordnance, and either tooke away the Images, or put out their eyes, for (say they) God, and not walls, and pictures, is to be adored. Nicolas [l] Nicolai saith, that it had in compasse more then a mile, within which were comprehended the houses of Canons and Priests: of the most part of the Cloyster (because it was neere the Seraile) they [m] made a stable for horses; as Constantines Palace for Elephants; and a Temple (neere the Tilt-yard, or Hippodromus) for wilde beasts, which are tied to the seuerall pillars thereof, Lyons, Beares, Wolues, wilde Asses, Ounces, &c. No Christian may enter into this Meschit, but he may put his bodie in at the doores and view it: But Master Simons saith, they are not now so scrupulous: for he hath beene suffered to goe in: as G. Dousa also reporteth of himselfe. There haue been at once (in the time of Baiazet) numbred [n] thirtie and sixe thousand Turkes assembled for deuotion at an Easter-solemnitie. Perhaps (it is Master Sandys his obseruation) the ancient fabrick then standing entire, whereof this remaining was little more then the channell. Better to be beleeued then Bellonius his report of so many doores, whereas if it hath fiue, it hath more by one, then by me was discerned. It is almost euery other Friday frequented by the Sultan. The Christian Emperours ascended the stately Galleries on horse-backe. Before the entrance there is a goodly Portico, where the Christians, that visit it on curiositie, as well as the Turkes, doe leaue their shooes before they doe enter. It had in Iustinians time Porches or Galleries on both sides, one of which it seemeth fell by some earthquake. The innumerable windowes, and vnspeakable ornaments of the Temple, would easily detaine our pen, as a willing prisoner in the relation thereof. But besides the ancient, P. Gyllius, Menauinus, Bellonius, Nicolai, Dousa, and many others haue done it alreadie: neither will my Pilgrimage suffer mee to stay long in one place, which am to visite so many, both heere and elsewhere in the World. Let vs proceed therefore to their other Temples: especially seeing this is such, that none is able to expresse the excellencie, nor could euer worthily expresse the least part thereof. Besides, what others haue reported, Dousa telleth of a Marble Pillar therein, which continually sweats forth a certaine liquor, which the Turkes wipe off with their handkerchiefs, as (in their opinion) profitable against diuers diseases.

Mahomet the Conquerour [o] built one in like fashion without any figures, which hath about an hundred houses couered with Lead for their Doctors and Priests, and for all Strangers and Pilgrims of any Nation or Religion, where they may refresh themselues, their seruants, and horses for three dayes, with meat and lodging at free cost. There are also without the precinct of the Mosche, an hundred and fiftie other Tenements for the poore of the Citie, which haue there an Asper a day, and as much bread as they need: but they account that kinde of life so vnhappy, that oftentimes those Tenements stand emptie: but the money which should this way be bestowed, is sent to the Hospitalls of the diseased. There are also fiue other Meschits, in forme resembling the former, but not so great nor so rich. The rest of [p] the Meschits are of diuers sorts, some high, some low, of seuerall fashions. The Turrets, vpon which their Priests call the people to prayers, are of a great height, made in manner of Watch-towers; their greater Churches hauing two, the lesser one of them. Vpon the top is set an halfe Moone or Crescent, which is the Turkes Ensigne, as the Crosse is vsuall to the Christians. Within their Temples they haue no kinde of ornaments; but bare wals, with Arabike Letters (some in gold) written thereon, saue onely their Bookes, and Lamps burning with oyle in great abundance, and clothes of Tapestrie, on the which being spread ouer Mats vpon the pauement, they prostrate themselues in prayer time.

Of their Hoſpitalls and Monaſteries.

THeir Hoſpitalls they call Imarets; of theſe there are great vſe, becauſe they want Innes in the Turkes Dominions. They found them for the reliefe of the poore, and of Trauellers, where they haue food allowed them (differing according to the vſe of the place) and lodging places, without beds. They are open for the moſt part to all men of all Religions. The chiefe Hoſpitalls in Turkie, are in Conſtantinople: two of which Mahomet and Baiazet his ſonne founded. Both theſe haue about fiue and twentie round Turrets couered with Lead; one of which, being in the middeſt of the other, is larger and greater then the reſt, and vnder are lodgings for the Prieſts: On one ſide are beds for Pilgrims and Trauellers, on the other for Lepers. Thrice a day may any man reſort thither into a certaine place for meate. There are maintained fourteene Doctors of their Law. Some ſay, that the reuenues of Mahomets Hoſpitall amount to an hundred and fiftie thouſand Duckets, and the other to as much or more. Each of which hath a little Chappel adioyning, in which the Founders are buried, who were at this great charge, that the Prieſts and ſuch as are there refreſhed, ſhould pray for their ſoules, and ſay, Alla Rahſmetileſon: that is, God haue mercy on them. Selym finiſhed that which Baiazet his father had begun to build. But his ſonne Solyman erected one farre ſurpaſſing the former. Orchanes was the firſt of theſe Ottoman Princes which founded Monaſteries. Mahomet the firſt, finiſhed [a] the great Temple at Hadrianople, the ſeat Royall of the Turkes in Europe before Conſtantinople was won. He built alſo, beſides a Palace, another Temple, with a moſt ſumptuous Abbey, and a publike Schoole adioyning, endowing the ſame with great reuenues. He alſo gaue great ſummes of money to be diſtributed yeerely at Mecca and Medina, for the reliefe of poore Pilgrims. [b] Solyman erected, in memoriall of Mahumet his eldeſt ſonne, a ſtately Tombe, a ſumptuous Church, a Monaſterie and Colledge, with other things for the health of his ſoule. He was buried himſelfe in a Chappell which hee had in his life time built moſt ſtately, with a Colledge and Hoſpitall; his wife Roxolana, and ſome of his murthered children lying intombed by him: his Scimatar alſo hanging by him, in token that hee dyed in warres, which honour they grant not otherwiſe to their Princes. The reuenues of the Country about Sigeth in Hungary (lately wonne from the Chriſtians) were giuen to the maintenance of thoſe houſes, which his deuotion had founded. Neither is it lawfull for them to conuert any Lands to ſuch ſacred vſes, except they haue firſt with their owne ſword wonne them from the enemies of their Religion; the moſt acceptable ſeruice to their Prophet. And therefore Selym the ſecond, ſonne and ſucceſſour of Solyman, intended to build a Magnificent Temple, and Munificent Colledge, Monaſterie and Almes-houſe at Hadrianople, where hee intended his Sepulchre, brake his league with the Venetians, & wan Cyprus from them, that thence he might endow the ſame with maintenance. But it were tedious to inſiſt further in declaring their expences, which deuotion in all Turky hath procured: their Emperors and Baſſaes eſteeming nothing of more honor in the world, or merit for heauen. Let vs come to their Church-rites and Ceremonies.

§. III.

Of their publike Prayers and Church-Rites.

THE Temples in Turkie are (as hath beene ſaid) innumerable, both publike, and priuate of meaner bauildings: on which is a Tower, as with vs a Steeple, whereupon on the [c] Muetden or Thaliſman aſcendeth: and it being open with Pillars or foure Windowes, firſt he goeth to that on the Eaſt-ſide, and calleth the people to prayer with a loud voyce, ſtopping his eares with his hands, crying: There is no God but one, and Mahumet his Meſſenger: come to make prayer for remiſſion of your ſins, and know that there is no ſtronger then the God of Mahumet his Meſſenger. This hee ſaith in order on euery ſide of the Steeple. If there be in the Citie any Moſchees, the Cathedrall beginneth, and then all other Pariſhionall follow. This they doe fiue times a day, and on Friday (their Sabbath) ſixe times. Firſt, at Sun-riſing, with foure bendings to the earth, and twice praying. The ſecond about noone, with ten bowings, and fiue prayings. The third, at afternoone before Sun-ſet, with eight inclinations, and foure prayings. The fourth, with fiue bendings and three prayings about Sun-ſet. The fifth, longer then the reſt, with fifteen bowings, and eight prayings. This bending or bowing they call Erket, which is a double bowing with with proſtrating himſelfe: their prayer they call Czalamet, which they make ſitting after euery Erket, with a ſalutation on the right hand and on the left, and the impreſſion or ſigne of peace, which is done with bringing both hands ouer the face. Euery Buſurman is bound to reſort to theſe their Liturgies, at his Pariſhionall Meſchit, except hee haue ſome lawfull impediment: and if not at all of them, yet at leaſt at one to be well waſhed, for which purpoſe they haue innumerable Baths in Turkie fairely built; nor may any enter into the Temple, eſpecially in the morning, but firſt well waſhed in the Bath, as is ſaid before: and if hee keepeth him not cleane the reſt of the day, that waſhing will ſerue: but [a] if he haue committed any carnall ſinne, or be any way ſoyled, or haue eaten any vncleane thing, then in ſome ſecret place he waſheth his hands and armes to the elbow, his hinder parts [b] and priuities; and this ſufficeth without going to Bath, except he be otherwiſe polluted. For defect herein they haue inquiſitions, and appointed penalties; reſpect or pardon being giuen to none that faile, eſpecially on Friday, and in their Lent: Such a one is carried about the Towne with a boord faſtned to his necke, all be-hanged with Foxe-tayles, beſides a penaltie according to his ſtate in money; and he that will not thus order himſelfe, ſhall not be allowed their buriall rites. After they are thus waſhed, they put off their ſhooes in imitation of Moſes, and then enter into the Meſchitta, where the floore is couered with Mats or Carpets, nor is any other thing ſeene but white walls, and great ſtore of burning Lamps, and in golden Arabike letters thoſe [c] words before mentioned.

There is a Pulpit, on which the Choza or Focqui aſcendeth, and the firſt thing he doth is to ſtretch out his hands at large, and then ioyning them together, he kneeleth and kiſſeth the ground: then he lifteth vp his head, and ſtopping his eares with his hands, ſtanding a good ſpace, as it were [d] diſtracted or rauiſhed in his prayers, after lifting vp his hands, hee againe kiſſeth the ground ſo many times, as the houre of prayer according to that former rule requireth; and then liſting vp himſelfe againe, he ſtretcheth out his hands againe, ſo ſtanding about a quarter of an houre, and againe kneeling with his mouth to the ground, ſo continueth mouing it euery way about a Pater noſter while, and then lifting vp his head, and ſetting his hands to his eares, falls to his praying another quarter of an houre, and then licenſeth the people to depart. There is no noyſe heard [e] as if there had beene nothing within. Not ſo religious is their courſe (and yet that religion admits it) which Martin Braidenbach reporteth to be practiſed by them in a Moſchee on Mount Sinai, where Moſes receiued the Law; for the Saracens vſe to get therein Prophets, thinking the iſſue there gotten is holy, and full of the Propheticall ſpirit.

Menauino thus deſcribeth their Rites. After their myſticall waſhing (as before) they goe with a ſober pace to the Meſchit (not like one which runneth away) and if he happen to breake winde by the way, his former waſhing is vnſufficient, and hee muſt returne to renue it. Being aſſembled in the Meſchit, they all turne their faces [f] Southwards, and the Meizin or Muetden, Clerke, Sexton, Prieſt, Bell-ringer, or Bell rather) ſtandeth vp and readeth that Pſalme, which before hee had cried to them in the ſteeple, and euery one ſtandeth vp, holding his hands faſtned to his waſte, and bow their heads to their feete with great reuerence, and without ſtirring. Then ariſeth another Prieſt of another order called Imam, and readeth a Pſalme aloud, the Meizin as his Clerke anſwering, which being ended they fall on the ground, and ſay, Saban alla, Saban alla, Saban alla, that is, God haue mercie on vs moſt wretched ſinners, abiding proſtrate till the Prieſt Imam ſingeth againe his Pſalme, and then they riſe. And this they doe foure or fiue times, according to the order of their ſeruice. After this they all kneele and proſtrate themſelues on the ground, the Meizin obſeruing a long Ceremonie, in which with a loud voyce hee prayeth GOD to inſpire the Chriſtians, Iewes, Greekes, and generally all Infidels to turne to their Law. This being ſaid, euery man lifteth his hand to heauen, crying aloud, Amin, Amin: and then they touch their eyes to wipe them with their hands, (which is, as croſſing among the Papiſts, a bleſſing of themſelues) bringing their hands ouer their face, and ſo they depart. In the Engliſh Treatiſe of the Turkiſh Policie theſe things are related, with ſome other Ceremonies; as that they ſay together with the Prieſt the firſt Azoara or Chapter of the Alcoran, &c. Bartholomæus [g] Georgiouitz ſaith, that onely the chiefe ſort are bound to aſſemble to the daily deuotions, which they obſerue fiue times a day; others, which cannot ſpare the times, are not tyed. On their Sabbaths it is otherwiſe.

b Menauino ſaith, that after the ſecret waſhing of their ſecrets, &c. They come forth and waſh their hands, face, and the reſt, each three times, obſeruing equally that vnequall number, and ſaying the Pſalme Eleache Motte chi aſſro, and after, another, Li illaphi Circiſon.
c La illah, illelah Mahomet irreſul alah tanre hir paganbet hach.
d Quaſi in aſtratto in oratione.
e Their deuotion, ſilence, honeſtie, and order is ſuch, ſaith Septemcaſt. that I cannot but admire comparing it with the contrarie in the Churches of Chriſtians.
f They pray towards Mecca, as the Iewes towards Ieruſalem.

§. IIII.

Of their Sabbaths, and of their Lent and Easter.

THE women enter not their Mesquitas, but on Fridayes at nine a clocke, or at Easter, and then they are in a Gallery or Terasse apart, where they may see and not bee seene, and this is not common to all, but the wiues and mothers of the chiefe of the place. And as we haue said of the Priest, so it is to be vnderstood, that all the men and women there doe the same without failing in any point. They suffer not [c] a Christian to enter therein: and yet will they enter into the Churches of the Christians to heare the Church-musicke. The women abide in their Churches from nine of the clocke to midnight, continually praying with certaine motions and strange cries, continuing so long in this act, that they fall vpon the ground as in a swoune through wearinesse: and if any feele her selfe at that time to bee with childe, the Turkes hold that they are conceiued by the holy Ghost, and presently vow that childe to God, and call such Nefecs Ogli, that is, sonnes of the holy Ghost. And on Friday at nine or ten of the clocke, the Priest vseth to preach to the people: and these their discourses last aboue two houres. That which is said is not verie manifest; yet they say, that he preacheth the miracles of Mahomet, sometime exalting their faith, sometime commending obedience, and sometime rehearsing fabulous tales to terrifie the bad, as that such mens soules are carried of certaine Camels (there being some sixe thousand flying about in the ayre for this purpose) into the Sepulchres of wicked Christians, and that the good Christians are put in their emptie Sepulchres, inueighing against the blasphemers of Mahomet, Christ and the Saints, exhorting to Almes, rehearsing their commandements of the law. And if they preach scandalous doctrine, the Mufti and the Cadlilescher depriue them, and correct them as Heretikes; yea, some of them, for preferring Christ before Mahomet, are put to death; of which one Ibraim Schec a Priest of Constantinople (reported to haue wrought miracles amongst the Turkes in the dayes of Soliman) was stoned to death, his head cut off, and his bodie burned; & of his Disciples some were beheaded, others thrust into the Gallies, for preferring Christ, and denying Mahomet. And were it not for the terrour of the sword, there would be more innouations of religion; and some haue perswaded the Grand Signior, not to suffer the Alcoran to bee so common to be read, and interpreted of euerie one; guiltie of the absurdities therein contained. But to returne. After this preaching ended, two young Clerkes goe vp to him, and sing certaine prayers, which ended, the Priest againe beginneth to sing with the people in a base voyce, with wrigling euery way for the space of halfe an houre, saying nothing but Lailla, illellah, that is, there is but one God. And these Ceremonies are done onely on their Lenten Fridayes. Their Lent is one Moone or Moneth in the yeere, which, if this yeere it be July, the next it shall bee August, and so in order: that in twelue yeeres they haue fasted all times of the yeere, making no other difference of meates, then at other times, but eating onely in the night. They prepare [d] themselues by diminishing their fare (not as the Christians at Shrouetide) that they may the better endure it: for on the day, in which they fast, they will not so much as taste a cup of water, or wash their mouthes therewith, till the Starres appeare: And eight or ten dayes after it beginneth, some Officers ride about the towne, crying; Such a day beginneth the Fast, prepare yee, prepare yee; and when it is begun, the Cadi and Subassi, if they finde any shops open, or any body eating in the day, set him on an Asse backwards, with the tayle in his hand, as Adulterers are punished: and to drinke wine at this time, is death. Neither will they suffer Iewes or Christians to scandalize their Turkes this way. And when their Lent is neere the end, they goe all to the Baths and plucke off all their haires, but of the head and beard, with an oyntment for that purpose: they colour their nayles red, with an enduring colour, called Chua, with which they dye also the tayles and feet of their horses; and the women their hands, feet, and priuie parts. This they doe in honour of their solemnitie, which lasteth three daies with great feasting, in which nothing else but meates and drinkes may be sold. They goe to the Sepulchres of the dead there to eate, full of gladnesse, and salute each other, saying; Baaram glutiotzong, that is, God giue you a good Feast: and if they meete with a Iew or a Christian, woe vnto them. On the first day of their Bairam, the Sultan rideth to S. Sophia with all pompe: and then did we see (saith Master Sandys) a sight full of horror, many mourne with age, yet dead before death, and reuolting from their Christianitie, therefore throwing away their bonets, and lifting vp their fore fingers, to which the Tyrant bowed himselfe, as glorying in such conuersions. The Turks keepe [e] another Easter, especially in Mecca, more solemne to the Tartars, Moores, and Arabians, then to the Turkes, except the Pilgrims, which resort thither.

c Some say they are now lesse curious in this point.

Of the Turkish Circumcision.

THE Turkes say they are [d] circumcised, because they are the sonnes of Ismael, and because they may be cleane when they goe to their Temples, no filth lying hid vnder the skinne. At seuen or eight yeeres of age, or later, this Ceremonie is performed. The first thing they doe, is, to inuite many thither, both Turkes, Iewes, and Christians, besides the friends and kindred, to make the greater gaine, euery one giuing somewhat according to his abilitie. When the day is come, they which are inuited mount on horse-backe, for else it is [e] no solemnitie, and goe to the house of the childe, who being mounted on a faire horse richly clothed, with a great Tulipant on his head is carryed to Church, with a long speare borne before him, hauing a torch on the top worth a crown, more or lesse, according to the state of the partie, adorned with roses and garlands, which with the speare is left a gift to the Church, the fees of the Priest: all the way they sound on instruments: after the sonne followeth the father, the kindred, and the rest of the friends, that sometimes there are a hundred horse; at Church they alight, and accompany the childe to the Priest, which wayteth for them. Here one of the friends sitteth downe, and on his lap the child is set: presently another pulleth off his shooes, another holdeth his hands, and others his feet, and many hold him in talke with words, and these are the Gossips. The Priest seeing all things readie, taketh the end of the skinne of his yard, and draweth it out, and nippeth it with siluer Pinsers, so to mortifie it, and cut it off with lesse paine: then making him beleeue he will deferre it till the next day, he ariseth, the other holding him fast: and after, as if he had forgot somewhat to be done about it, with sizzers, which he holdeth closely in his hand, suddenly cutteth it off, and another layeth thereon a certaine powlder to ease the paine, and in fiue and twentie dayes they looke to the curing of it, laying on it salt, and marmalade of Quinces, and thence forwards he is called a Musulman. But his name is not then giuen him, but at his birth, and that according to their qualitie. Bellonius writes, that they must answere the Circumciser to certaine questions (somewhat like it seemes to that, which in the Baptisme of elder persons is performed by themselues, of younger by their Godfathers) and therefore they are so old before they bee circumcised. Hee also affirmeth, that it is neuer done in the Meschit (wherein none vncircumcised may enter) but in the house. The name Mussulman, Musslimun, or Muslim, signifies an Orthodoxe Mahometan, as Christian or Catholike with vs: Verus Turca, saith Bellonius, Saluatus, or sanæ fidei homo, after Cantacuzenus.

After the childe is loosed (who to shew himselfe of courage, smileth, and lifting vp his greatest finger saith those former words of their profession) and is againe mounted, all the company, after a little prayer and offering at the Church, with like pompe conueigh him home, where is great feasting prouision; some feast it three dayes together.

Amurath circumcised his sonne Mahomet at sixteene yeeres old. Vnto which solemnitie many Christian Princes were solemnly inuited, who sent thither their Ambassadors with Presents, who had there their scaffols prepared for them, and furnished according to their states. The solemnitie lasted fortie dayes, and fortie nights, in the great Market-place of Constantinople. And to end these [f] solemnities, Mahomet the Prince was circumcised, not publikely, but in his Fathers chamber, by Mechmet one of the inferiour Bassaes, sometime the Emperour Solymans Barber. And it is done of other Turkes also most commonly in the Fathers house, not in the Church.

The women-children, about the same age among other women, without other solemnity, say ouer those words, La illah, &c. and likewise the renegado-Iewes; but the Christian renegadoes are carried about the streets of the Cities with much solemnity, and many gifts giuen them, besides freedome from tribute: many blinded by couetousnesse offer themselues to this circumcision. But if any for blasphemie against Mahomet, or iniurie to a Turke, be by force circumcised, they haue no such gifts: which punishment the Cadilescher (by the testimony of two accusing Turkes) inflicteth. And therefore to preuent the same, the Christians obtaine the Grand Seigniors safe conduct, that in cases of conscience they may not be iudged of any, except they were accused at the Court before the foure Bassaes, and the Cadilescher of Constantinople, and that by the witnesse of Priests onely, which had not in twelue yeeres drunke wine.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Sepulchres, Funerall-Rites, and Opinions touching the Dead, among the Turkes.

NOw if you be wearie of viewing their Temples, and their Prayers, and other Ceremonies seeme tedious, I haue thought fit to presente you with another sight, and to conclude with (that which is the conclusion of all flesh) a discourse of their Funerals. When [a] a Turke is sicke and like to die, his friends visite him, and putting him in minde of his sinnes, aduise him with a penitent heart to bewayle them. Then doe certaine of their Priests, or one of his kinsmen, read some Psalmes and Prayers. And if the pangs of death doe still continue, they bring him the Alcoran, or Curaam, wherein is one Legend, called Thebara Echelezi, which they read seuen times: and if hee shall die of that sickneſſe, they thinke hee will die before they haue thrice read it: and if they see breath still remaine, they read another Psalme, called Iasinnel Curanil Hecin, to the end that the Deuill cause no impediment to his soule. When hee is dead, they lay him forth in the middest of the house vpon Carpets, and place him on his right side, with his face towards the South. Then doe assemble certaine Priests to bury him, [b] who bring with them a string of Beades (such as the Papists vse in mumbling and numbring their deuotions) being a thousand of them, of lignum aloes, and therewith compasse the bodie, and then say to euery one Sababan alla, that is, God haue mercie on him, and turne it about foure or fiue times. After this, their Priests (which are twentie or more) carrie the corps into the Garden, and lay it on a Table two hands breadth from the ground, taking away his shirt, and couering his shame with a new cloth made of fine bombast, with warme water and sope washing him from top to toe: Then do they take two sheets of bombast, in which they wrap the corps, wetting the same with Rose-water, perfumes, and odoriferous things, and laying him on the Beere, couer him quite ouer with his best garments, placing his Turbant at the head thereof, all bedecked with flowers. This done, the Priests begin their deuotions, and some of the company take vp the Beere, carrying the same with the head forwards to the Meschit: the kinsmen follow, and the women remaine at home weeping, and make readie to eate for the Priests. When they come to the Church, they set him downe without doores, and goe and make an end of their seruice. After that, they carry him forth of the City to the buriall place: (for it is not lawfull to bury in their Cities.) Some prouide their Sepulchres in their life time, some haue them made after by their friends, either in their Gardens, or some solitarie place: They haue also common buriall places, as are our Church-yards, wherein are many Tombes of Marble, Brick, or other matter, according to the qualitie of the person.

If the deceased were a man of high condition, his horses are led with his corps, and his Tombe is adorned with many Epitaphs. And if he were a great Commander, those horses are sadled the contrary way, and richly furnished, hauing certaine things hanged at their noses, which cause them to neigh, as it were lamenting the losse of their Master. They carry also the truncheons of their Lances, with their Standards and Ensignes, trailing along the ground. There are planted also about their Sepulchres violets and other pleasant flowers. The common sort haue their Tombes of Marble engrauen with letters.

When they are come to the place, with those sheets they let the corps into the graue, couering him on euery side with boords, only on the face they lay a little earth, and there leaue him, and returne home, where they finde store of cheere, & there make a prayer for his soule. Georgiouitz [c] saith, that they make ouer the graue the forme of an Altar, lest the beasts should goe ouer it, and defile it. They also often repaire thither with teares, and set on the Monument flesh, bread, wheat, egs, milke, &c. which is done for the dead mans soule in almes to the poore, or to the birds, or ants, which they also account an act of mercy, no lesse meritorious then the other. The Priests haue fiue aspers a piece giuen them for their paines. And if the partie be poore, they gather money to pay the Priests, and to discharge the funeralls. They weare [d] blacks eight dayes in token of mourning: and those that are of great account, three dayes; at which time the friends of the dead assemble, and vsing some words of mutuall consolation from thenceforth resume their wonted habite. Howbeit their kindred, specially of the female sexe, often repaire to the graues to lament there.

Bellonius in his Obseruat. [e] obserueth, that they sew not the sheet at the head nor at the feet. The reason is their dreame of certaine Angels, sent in commission presently after the buriall, to examine the deceased partie, into whom they say GOD hath then put a new spirit. These Angels Menauino cals Nechir & Remonchir, who come with dreadful countenances and burning burning fire-brands, and examine him of his life, which if they finde wicked, they ſcourge him with fierie whips, if good, they become goodly Angels, and comfort him. *Belloniu*s a little otherwiſe telleth, that thoſe Angels (which hee calleth Guanequir and Mongir) come, the one with an yron hammer, the other with a hooke, which ſet the corps vpon his knees, and put a new ſoule into it; and then aske if he haue beleeued Mahomet and obſerued his precepts, if hee haue done good workes, kept their Lent, paied his Tithes, giuen Almes. Of which, if hee can giue good account, they depart from him, and two other Angels come in their places, white as ſnow, and one of them puts his armes, in ſtead of a pillow vnder his head, the other ſits at his feet, and defends him vntill the day of Iudgement. But if hee ſatisfie not the demands of thoſe blacke Angels, hee with the yron mallet ſtrikes him at one blow therewith nine fadome vnder the ground: and neither of them ceaſeth, the one with his hammer, the other with his hooke, to torment the deceaſed partie vntill the day of Iudgement. For this cauſe the Turkes write vpon the dead carkaſſes the name Croco, and make their Sepulchres hollow, that they may haue roome to kneele, and ſome lay boords ouer, that no earth fall in. The feare hereof makes them in their morning praier to ſay, Lord God, from the queſtioning of the two Angels, the torment of the graue, and euill iourney, deliuer me, Amin. Yea, hence are the praiers which the Turkes, men and women, ſay at the graues of the dead, for deliuerie from theſe Angels.

Concerning the day of Iudgement, they [a] hold that there is an Angel ſtanding in Heauen, named Iſraphil, holding alway a Trumpet in his hand prepared againſt Gods command, to ſound the conſummation of the World. For at the ſound thereof, all Men and Angels ſhall die, for ſo they finde it written in their Curaam, which Booke is of high authoritie with them. The Turkiſh Doctors would diſſent from that opinion of the Angels mortalitie, if this Booke would giue them leaue: for to contradict the authoritie thereof is puniſhed with fire, or elſe their tongues are pulled out of their heads. They hold, that after this diſmall ſound ſhall bee a great Earthquake, which ſhall tumble the Mountaines and Rockes from their places, and grinde them to meale. After this, God will returne to make anew the light, and the Angels as before, and will cauſe to fall a pleaſant raine, called Rehemet ſui, that is, the raine of mercie: and ſo ſhall the earth remaine fortie dayes, although thoſe dayes ſhall bee of a larger ſize then theſe. Many alſo hold, that from thenceforth there ſhall bee no darkneſſe of the night, as now, but that it ſhall be moſt cleere; neither ſhall there need any more ſleepe for the ſuſtentation of our bodies.

a Menauino.l.2. 20,21,22,23.

After fortie dayes God will command Iſraphil to ſound his Trumpet the ſecond time, at which ſound all the dead [b] ſhall bee raiſed againe by the will of God, the dead euen from Abel to the end of the world, throughout all the earth, hearing the ſound thereof, and riſing in manner as they were buried. Amongſt them ſhall be ſeene diuers faces and countenances, ſome ſhining as the Sunne, many like the Moone, many as the Starres. Others ſhall bee obſcure and darke, and others with hogges faces, with ſwolne tongues. Then ſhall euerie one crie Neſſi, Neſſi, that is, Woe is me wretch, who haue ſuffered my ſelfe to be ouercome with my filthy luſts. The Angels ſhall with their fingers point at the faces which ſhine, which are they that haue wrought good workes, and ſhall ſhew them to one another. The wicked ſhall haue enuy thereat. They ſay, that thoſe with faces like hogs, are ſuch as haue beene Vſurers; and thoſe with the ſwolne tongues, Liers and Blaſphemers. There ſhall be other trodden vnder foot, to wit, the proud perſons of this world. God, ſay they, will then demand account of the Kings, Princes, Emperors, and Tyrants, which vſe oppreſſion and violence. [c] Then ſhal God diuide this raiſed company into ſeuentie parts, all which ſhall be examined; preſenting their ſins before their eyes, and all that they haue in this world done well or ill: whereto hee ſhall need no teſtimony; euerie member bearing witneſſe againſt it ſelfe of the deeds, yea, and very thoughts. There ſhall be alſo Michael the Angel, holding in his hand the ballance of diuine Iuſtice, and ſhal weigh ſoules, and diſtinguiſh the good from the bad. There ſhal be Moſes with his Standard, vnder which ſhall all the obſeruers of his law bee aſſembled. Neere to him ſhall be Ieſus Chriſt, the Sonne of the Virgin Mary, with another great Standard, and all his Chriſtians, the obſeruers of his Faith. On the other ſide ſhall be Mahomet, with his Standard and faithfull Mahumetans: they which haue done good ſhall be all gathered vnder the ſaid Standards, where they ſhall haue a pleaſant ſhaddow; the reſt ſhall be extremely ſcorched by the heat of the Sun, according to the meaſure of their ſinnes. Thus ſhall both parts abide, till God ſhall pronounce his eternall ſentence. When that doome is pronounced, the Angels ſhall ſtand diuided into ſquadrons, all like adorned, the Seraphins on one ſide, the Cherubins on the other: of the which one part ſhal ſound Inſtruments of diuers ſorts, & other ſhall ſing hymnes: and many ſhall ſtand at the gates of Paradiſe, ſinging and gratulating the bleſſed ſoules which haue obſerued the diuine Precepts; Chriſtians, Iewes, Turkes, and Moores, being all of equall beautie and beatitude, if they haue done well. But ſinners ſhall be knowne asunder. They affirme also, that God will giue those soules of Paradise a large space in heauen for their euerlasting habitation, goodly and shining. They shall also haue Barachi, Sun-beames, on which they may ride and take their view round about Paradise, of the precious delights therein. There shall they haue pleasant fruits, and if they eate one apple, two shall grow in the roome; and to quench their thirst, they shall haue riuers cleere as Crystall, sweet as Sugar, by drinking of which their sight and vnderstanding shall increase in such sort, that they shall see from one Pole to the other. The meates which they eate, shall consume by a subtile kinde of sweat. Further they say, they shall haue their women called Vri, that is, shining, which shall euerie day be Virgins, with which they shall continue for euer. Neither shall there be any danger of olde age; the men alway being as of thirtie yeeres old, the women of fifteen or twentie. Those three Standard-bearers shall be the principall, each of them hauing a peculiar part of Paradise assigned him for his dominion.

Hell. Master Sandis saith, he was told by a Sicilian deuout Renegado, that the burning Globe of the Sunne, was the continent of the damned.

Those which for their bad deeds shall be condemned to hell, shall be all knowne by proper names, which they shall beare in their fore-heads: and they shall beare the number and greatnesse of their sinnes on their shoulders. Thus shall they bee led betweene two Mountaines where Hell is situate, at the mouth whereof is a most venemous Serpent: and from one Mountaine to another is a Bridge thirtie miles long, which is so made, that they ascend on the first part, the other part is plaine, the last descendeth. This Bridge (say they) is made of thin yron and sharpe: (they call it Serat Cupli∫∫i, that is, the Bridge of Iustice.) Vpon this shall passe the sinners with the heauie weight of their sinnes vpon their shoulders: and they which haue not beene altogether euill shall not fall into Hell, but into Purgatorie: but the other shall suddenly bee plunged into the bottome of Hell, where they shall burne, more or lesse, according to the quantitie of the fire of their sins, which they haue carried out of this world: and after the burning they turne to bee refreshed, and presently againe to the fire. In the midst of Hell they say is a tree full of fruit, euerie Apple being like to the head of a Deuill; which groweth greene in the midst of all those flames, called Zoaccum Agacci, or the tree of Bitternesse, and the soules that shall eate thereof, thinking to refresh themselues, shall so finde them, and by them and their paines in Hell, they shall grow madde. And the Deuils shall binde them with chaines of fire, and shall dragge them vp and downe through Hell. Those soules which sometime shall name God in their aide, they say, after many yeeres, shall goe into Paradise; and none shall remaine in Hell, but such as despaire of their saluation and Gods mercie. Thus farre Menauino. To this agreeth Bellonius, and addeth, that in the day of Iudgement, they beleeue a resurrection of the Birds and Beasts: and that the Rams which they kill at their Easter, shall goe into Paradise: and therefore, though one wou'd serue, they kill many. For the Booke of Zuna saith, that those Rams shall pray for their Sacrificers in the day of Iudgement. It telleth that the Starres are hanged in the ayre by golden chaines, to watch lest the Deuils should learne the secrets of Paradise, and reueale them to Sooth-sayers. Also, that the Ramme which Abraham offered in stead of his sonne, was a blacke one, which had been nourished fortie yeeres in Paradise; that Mahomet shall be turned at the end of the world into a Ramme; and the Turkes into Fleas; whom hee shall carrie sticking to him, out of Hell into Paradise, and there shake them off, where they shall againe receiue the formes of Turkes: That hee shall wash them with the water of that Fountaine in Paradise, to purge the blacknesse which they got by the scorching of Hell, from whence hee will deliuer all good Turkes.

Of the Religious Votaries amongst the Turkes, and of their Saints, Sects, Miracles, and Hypocriticall holinesse.

TO proceed vnto the differences of opinions amongst the Turks: Septemcastrensis (who liued verie many yeeres amongst them) saith, that although they consent against Christ, yet doe they much dissent among themselues, wresting the Alcoran to their purposes, and scarcely one of a hundreth agreeing with his fellow about Mahomet and their Law. And besides their differences in Ceremonies, there are, saith he, foure sects, differing in maine grounds of Religion; which would not be appeased without bloud, if they feared not the higher power, and were not thereby kept in awe. One of these sects is that of the Priests, holding that none can be saued, but by the Law of Mahomet. The second, of their religious Dermschler, reputed reputed the Succeſſors of the Saints, the friends of GOD and Mahomet, who are of opinion, that the Law profiteth nothing, but the grace of GOD: and theſe ground their opinions on miraculous illuſions, of which he reporteth one in the time of Amurath the ſecond, who examining this contention betwixt theſe Seculars and Regulars, and being purpoſed to giue ſentence in the behalfe of the Prieſts, and againſt the religious, one of theſe Dermſchler [a] appearing to him in a Viſion, (others alſo ground Faith on Viſions) and deliuering him out of a great danger, altered his minde: for going to ſtoole in the night, the boords gaue way, and he fell in, ſtaying on a croſſe Timber, where this religious man in their wonted habite appeared to him, and bid him now vſe the helpe of his Prieſts for his deliuerance. This after ſo affected the King, that himſelfe became a religious man, till the neceſſitie of State-affaires compelled him to reſume his gouernment. (Hee that liſteth may compare with this, Dunſtans deuices for his Regulars:) The third he calleth Czofilar ſpeculatiue men; which Sect is founded on Tradition, holding that they are ſaued by Merit, without Law or Grace. Theſe are verie earneſt in praiers, neuer ceaſing; and meeting in the night, and ſitting in a circle, they begin to ſay, Layla illalach, with ſhaking their heads till they fall downe ſenſeleſſe: theſe three ſorts are manifeſt to the people, and as it were of equall eſteeme with them. The fourth are called Horiſe, that is, Heretikes, holding, that euerie man is ſaued in his owne Law, and all Lawes to be a like good to the obſeruers; theſe are burned if they be taken.

Strange it is, that he reporteth of the miraculous workes of ſome of them, that they may ſeeme (as he ſaith) incarnate Deuils: Some going naked, with their priuities onely hidden, and ſome of theſe are impaſſible, beſides the violence of Winter and Summer, induring, like ſtones, the branding with fire, or wounding with ſword: ſome ſeldome eate or drinke, and ſome not at all: others, but from hand to mouth: ſome are perpetually ſilent, hauing no conuerſation with men, of which he ſaith he ſaw one; and ſome haue their ſupernaturall traunces or rauiſhments: ſome dwell amongſt men, ſome by themſelues apart, and ſome in Wilderneſſe: ſome keepe hoſpitalitie in Cities, at leaſt to harbour men, if they haue not food for them: ſome carrying about water in leather bagges, giuing it to all, and demanding nothing for the ſame, except any voluntarily gratifie them. Some inhabite at the Sepulchers of the Saints, keeping the ſame, and liuing on the vowes and offerings of the people, not obſeruing the waſhings and ceremonies of the Law. As concerning thoſe Water-carriers, Nicholas Nicholai ſaith, that he hath ſeene in a morning at Conſtantinople fiftie of thoſe Sacquas (ſo he calleth them) in a company, all furniſhed with their Scrips of leather, full of Ciſterne or Fountaine-water hanging on their ſide, with cups of fine Corinthian Latten, gilded and damaskined, bearing in the ſame hand a Looking-glaſſe, which they hold before their eyes of them whom they giue to drinke, admoniſhing them to thinke on death: and if any giue them any thing, they out of a Violl caſt on their faces ſweet ſmelling water. Hee telleth of ſome that would ſeeme to liue a ſolitarie life amongſt beaſts, but indeed liue in ſhops in moſt popular Cities, the walls whereof are couered with skins of diuers beaſts, and vpon the hornes thereof they hang Tallow Candles. In the midſt of this their ſacred ſhop ſtandeth a ſtoole couered with a greene cloth, and vpon the ſame a great Latten Candle-ſticke without any Candle. Moreouer, they haue painted a Cimitterre hung in the middeſt, in memorie of Haly, who forſooth with his ſword cut the Rockes in ſunder: and they breed vp with them beaſts, as Bulls, Beares, Harts, Rauens, Eagles; ſo that in ſtead of their liuing with beaſts, beaſts liue with them. And if ſufficient be not brought to their ſhops, they with one of theſe beaſts in their hand goe about the ſtreets begging.

Mock-eremites.

In the Armie of the Turkes that aſſaulted Malta, in the yeere 1565. were [b] thirteene thouſand of a certaine kinde of men amongſt the Turks, which liue of the reuenues of the Church, who had at Conſtantinople [c] vowed their liues for their ſuperſtition. Antonio Pigafetta [d] reporteth, that as the Emperours Ambaſſadors were conueyed from the preſence of the Great Turke to their lodging, by the Ianizaries and their Aga, there were amongſt them certaine Religious men, called Haagi, which vſe to follow the Ianizaries, who continually turning about, and in their going ſinging, or rather howling certaine Pſalmes or Prayers for their great Sultans welfare, made them wonder that they fell not downe for giddineſſe. And this my friend Maſter Simons hath ſeene them doe, taking one another by the hand in a ring; and ſo continuing their whirle-gigg-deuotions with continuall turnings (fitly agreeing to ſo giddie and brain-ſicke a Religion) till with the great applauſe of Turkes, and admiration of others, ſweat, and a long protracted wearineſſe makes an end of this dancing their round.

But amongſt all their orders of Religion, Nicholas Nicholai, [e] and before him Menauino, reckon foure which are moſt common amongſt them, the Giamailer, the Calender, the Derniſi, and the Torlachi.

The Giamailer, are for the moſt part faire young men, of rich houſes, which giue themſelues to trauell through diuers Regions, at other mens charges, vnder colour of Religion; carrying with them none other apparell then a little Cassocke of purple colour, girt with a girdle of silke and gold; vpon the ends whereof hang certaine Cymbals of Siluer, mixt with some other cleere-sounding metall: and they doe ordinarily weare sixe or seuen of these about their girdles, and vnder their knees. In stead of a cloake, they are couered with the skinne of a Lyon or Leopard, being whole and in his naturall haire, which they make fast vpon their breast, by the two former legges. All the rest of their bodies are bare; sauing that they weare great Rings on their eares, and a kinde of Sandalls on their feet; their haire groweth long like womens disheueled ouer their shoulders. They beare in one of their hands a Booke, written in the Persian language, full of amorous Sonnets. And thus with their Voyces and Cymbals, they make pleasant Musicke, especially if they meet some faire stripling, whom they set in the midst of them, and incompasse with their Morice-musicke. These are the Pilgrimes of Loue; and vnder pretext of Religion, doe draw vnto them the hearts of women and younglings, and are called the men of the Religion of Loue, vnto which order of Religion youth is prone more then enough. The partakers of their Musicke ordinarily impart to them of their Coyne.

f Nic. Nic.

The Calender [f] is of a contrarie profession to the former, glorying of abstinence and chastitie. They haue for their dwelling certaine little Churches, which they call Techie, ouer the gates whereof they doe write these or the like words, Cœda normas dil erſin cuſciunge al, cachecciur: that is, They which will enter into their Religion, must doe workes like theirs, and remaine in their Virginitie. These Calenders are clothed with a little short coat without sleeues, after the fashion of Haire-cloth, made of Wooll and Horse-haire, and doe not let their haire grow long, but cut the same, and couer their heads with felt Hats, like the Priests of Græcia, about which hang certaine strings, about the breadth of an hand, made of Horse haire: in their eares, and about their neckes and armes they weare great rings of Iron. They pierce their skinne vnder their priuy member, thrusting thorow the same a ring of an indifferent bignesse and weight, to barre them from venerie, if they were thereunto otherwise willing. They also goe reading of certaine Songs, made by one of their Order, called Nerzimi, the first Saint and Martyr, after their reckoning, of their Religion, who for certaine words spoken against the Law of Mahomet, was in Azamia flaid quicke. Menauino [g] saith, he had read some of his writings agreeing with the Christian Faith in many points. Some [h] say, he was martyred for confessing Christ.

g Lib. 2. c. 10.

h Policie of the Turkish Empire.

The Deruis goe bare-headed, and cause their head and beard to be cut with a razor, and all the hairie parts of their bodie: and burne also their Temples with a hot Iron, or an old piece of cloth burnt; hauing their eares pierced, wherein they doe weare certaine great rings of Iasper. All their clothes are two sheepes or goat skins, the haire thereof being dried in the Sunne, one before, and the other behinde, embracing the bodie in forme of a girdle, otherwise naked Winter and Summer. They dwell without the Cities, in Suburbs and Villages. Thus vnder the colour of Religion they roame vp and downe, and make no conscience to rob, kill, and murther (if they finde themselues the stronger, with a small Hatchet which they beare vnder their girdle) all men of whatsoeuer Law or Nation. They are fornicators, and most detestable in that most detestable sinne of Sodomie. For shew of holinesse they eate of a certaine herb [i] called Matslach, the violent operation whereof maketh them to become madde, so as through a certaine furie, they with a certaine knife or razor, doe cut their necks, stomacks and thighes, vntill they be full of most horrible wounds; which to heale, they lay vpon them a certaine herbe, letting it lie vpon their hurt, vntill it be altogether consumed into ashes, suffering in the meane time extreme paine with maruellous patience. Thus do they imitate their Prophet Mahomet, who, through abstinence in his den, fell into such a furie (say they) that hee would haue throwne himselfe from the top of it. And therefore fooles and madde men are in great reuerence; yea, they account such for Saints: and if such madde men strike or rob them, they take it in good part, and say they shall haue good lucke after it. They erect stately Monuments ouer such mad mens graues, as at Aleppo, one [k] Sheh Boubac (who being mad, went alwayes naked) being dead, they built a house ouer his graue, where to this day (saith our Author) there are Lampes burning day and night; and many of these Daruises there remained, to looke to his Sepulchre, and to receiue the offerings of such as come, as many do euery weeke out of Aleppo. If any be sicke or in danger, they vow to offer money or other things to Sheh Boubac if they recouer.

i This seemes to be the same herbe which Menauino calleth Asseral.

k Biddulph ep. Fooles are esteemed beloued of God: if such be Christians they circumcise them by force, and esteeme them Saints, saying, God hath made him a foole, thus to be saued by their meanes.

The same account they make of one Sheh Mahammet a mad man, yet liuing in Aleppo, going naked with a spit on his shoulder. Men and women will come and kisse his hand, or some other part of his body, and aske him counsell, for they hold that mad mens soules are in heauen talking with GOD, and that he reuealeth secrets to them. And euen the Bassaes themselues wil kisse and consult with this Oracle. Hard I deeme it to say whether is the mad man.

man. In a late victorie against the Christians, they affirme that this Sheh Mahammet was seene in the field many thousand miles distant, fighting against their enemies, whom by his helpe they ouercame.

But to returne to our Daruises, this our Author saith, that oftentimes great Bassaes, in displeasure with the Emperor, will retire themselues into this Order, as the Hospital and Sanctuarie of their diseased and dangerous state. Their witnesse is of better account then any other mans, although he were an Emir, or of the kindred of Mahomet. They liue of Almes, as the other Religious doe, which they begge in the name of Haly. They haue [l] in Natolia a Sepulchre of a Saint called by them Scidibattal, who (say they) conquered the most part of Turkie, and about the place of the Sepulchre is an habitation and couent, where aboue fiue hundred of these Deruises dwell: and there once in the yeere they keepe a generall assembly, in which their Superiour (whom they call [m] Assambaba) is present and President; their Counsell or Chapter consisting (saith Menauinus) of aboue eight thousand of their Order. One of these Deruisiars [n] drawing neere vnto Baiazet the second, as if he would haue receiued an Almes of him, desperately assailed him with a short Scimatar, which he closely hid vnder his hypocriticall habite. But Baiazet by the starting of his horse (afraid of this Hobgoblin) auoided the deadly blow, but not vawounded: neither had he so escaped, had not Ishender Bassa with his Horsmans Mace presently strucke downe the desperate villaine, as he was redoubling his blow, who was forthwith rent in pieces by the Souldiers. Baiazet thereupon proscribed all them of that superstitious Order, and banished them out of his Empire. The like (as Septemcastrensis saith) they had attempted against Mahomet his father in his youth, while Amurath was yet liuing. And in our daies Mehemet or Muhemet, the great Visier Bassa, who swayed almost wholly and onely their mightie Empire (as appeareth in the Historie of that State) in the dayes of Soliman, Selym, and Amurath, and as Master Harborne relateth, was esteemed to possesse two and twentie millions of gold, was not assaulted only, but murthered by one of these Deruisiers. For whereas it is a custome of the great men, that at ordinarie houres all their Chaplaines, or Priests, assemble themselues in the Diuano, there together mumbling their superstitions: and this Deruisier [f] ordinarily thither admitted, vpon an old grudge, for that Mehemet had before depriued him of a Souldiers place and pension, when the Visier sate there to giue publike audience, sitting right against him, after his Mumpsimus finished, the Visier reaching vnto him his wonted Almes, he with a dagger closely before prouided, stabs him into the breast, and was therefore of Mehemets slaues with exquisite torments done to death. In their great Counsell before mentioned, there are young men clothed in white, which tell the most memorable obseruations in their trauells, which they present to the Assambaba in writing, subscribed with their names. On the Friday they vse after praier and eating the herbe [o] Asseral, to read the same with dances, and after their dance (which is about a huge fire, made of as much wood as an hundred beasts can carrie) they cut the skin of their armes, legs, or breasts, engrauing some figure thereon, whereto they after apply ashes and vrine. In the doing hereof they vtter this speech: This I cut for the loue of such a woman. Vpon the last day of their Feast, they take leaue of their Gouernor, and depart in troupes like Souldiers with Banners and Drums; and so returne vnto their owne Monasteries.

o Asseral is an herb, that maketh men merrie, as if they were drunken.

The Torlaquis (by others called Durmisiurs) cloath themselues with sheeps and goats skins like vnto the Deruis: aboue the same they wrap about them in manner of a cloake the skinne of a great Beare, with the haire, made fast vpon their stomacke with the legs: vpon their heads they weare a white Bonnet of Felt folded with small plaits, hauing the rest of their bodies altogether naked. They also burne their Temples as the former. A beastly generation. For they know not, nor will not learne to read, write, or doe any ciuill profitable act, but liue idlely vpon almes, roaguing thorow the Countrey alone, and in troupes thorow the Desarts, robbing such as they meet handsomely apparelled, causing them to goe as they doe, naked. They professe palmistry and fortune-telling, the people seeing and feeding them for such vanities. And sometimes they carry with them an old man, whom they worship as a God: lodging themselues neere the best house of the Towne where they come. And there this new numen, and old impostor, faining himselfe rauished in spirit, pronounceth graue words and spirituall commandements; at sundry times lifting vp his eyes to heauen, and after turning to those his disciples, willeth them to carry him from thence, for some imminent iudgement there to be executed, as is reuealed to him. They then pray him to auert that danger by his prayer, which he accordingly doth: which the people (deluded by their hypocrisies) reward with a large benevolence, at which they after amongst themselues doe merrily scoffe. They eate also of the herbe Matslatz, and sleepe vpon the ground naked of clothes and shame, and commit also abominable Sodomitrie. And thus much of their misorderly orders of an irreligious Religion. He that will read more at large of them, let him read the Booke of the Policie Policie of the Turkish Empire, which out of Menauino discourseth more largely of these things, and other the Turkish Rites.

p Cap. 15. Septemcastrensis p telleth of certaine Saints of exceeding estimation for holinesse, whose Sepulchres are much frequented of deuout Votaries: as that of Sedichasi (which signifieth a holy Conquerour) in the confines oof Caramania. Another is called Hatschipetteschi, that is, The Pilgrims helpe. Another q Ascik passa who helpeth in loue-matters, and for children in barrennesse. Another Van passa, for concord: and Scheych passa, in trouble and affliction: and Goi or Muschin, or Bartschin passa, inuoked for their cattle: and Chidirelles for trauellers, to whom he sometime appeareth as a traueller; and any one that hath extraordinarily liued, is reputed a Saint after his death.

q Assich is the Goddesse of loue with the Georgiouitz.

They haue many whose names I remember not (saith hee) in like reuerence with them, as are the Apostles with vs. When they would seeke for things lost, they go to one Saint; when they are robbed, they goe to another; and for the knowledge of things secret, they repaire to a third. They haue their Martyrs, and Miracles, and Reliques. Thus they tell of certaine religious men condemned wrongfully, for suspition of treason, to the fire; which they entred without harme (as r those three companions of Daniel) and their shooes were hanged vp for a Monument. Their Nephes ogli, that is, soules or persons begotten of the holy Spirit (such is their fancie) without seed of man, they hold in such reputation, that they account themselues happy, which can doe them any good, yea that can touch them: and if their haires be laid vpon any, they say that their sicknesses are cured.

r Dan. 3. 27.

In this reputation of sanctitie, they haue a certaine old woman, which hauing a dog with her (in her pilgrimage to Mecca) readie to die for thirst, made water in her hand, and gaue it to the dog: which charitable act was so highly accepted, that a voyce was presently heard from heauen, saying, This day thou shalt be in Paradise. And at the same time shee was caught vp bodie and soule into heauen: and hereupon are they liberall to their dogs. If this crosse an opinion, which some Saracens hold, that women come not to Paradise, no maruell, seeing falsehood is commonly contrarie both to the Truth, and it selfe. He that would read the miraculous tales which they tell of their Saints, may haue recourse to that nameless Author, which of his Countrey is called, and heere often cited by name, Septemcastrensis: who telleth s of his Master and his Mistris their deuotion and vowes to Goi and Mirtschim, for preseruation of their cattell, sometimes miraculous (so readie is the Deuill with his sauing destruction, and destroying preseruation) yea hee saith, that the Deuill doth turne himselfe amongst them into an Angell of light, with such effectuall illusions, that there are seene, or (at least) beleeued amongst them, the dead raised to life, diseases of all sorts cured, secrets of the hearts disclosed; treasures, long before hidden in the ground, reuealed: and besides, such ostentation, and shew of dissembled holinesse, that they may seeme not to come short of the Fathers and Apostles in that behalfe: if bodily exercise were the triall of sanctitie.

s Septemcast. cap. 18.

Busbequius t tells, that they haue like conceit of one Chederles, amongst them, as some superstitious persons haue of S. George, and the Turkes affirme to bee the same: The Deruis haue a great Temple dedicated in his honor at Theke Thioi, not farre from Amasia, the chiefe Citie of Cappadocia. The Countrey and both Legends agree, for the killing of the Dragon, deliuering the Virgin, &c. They say that hee trauelled many Countries, and at last came to a Riuer, the waters whereof yeelded immortalitie to the drinker, and now cannot be seene. Chederles heereby freed from death, rides about euery where on his horse (which thence also dranke in immortalitie) and delighteth in battells, taking part with the best cause: and to make vp the tale, they say hee was one of the companions of u Alexander the Great; they affirme, that Alexander was Salomons chiefe Captaine, and Iob his high Steward. In that Moschee or Temple at Theke Thioi is a fountaine of water, which they say, sprang vp of the staling of Chederles horse. Like Stories haue they of his horse-keeper, and nephew, whose Sepulchres they shew, where deuout Pilgrims obtaine many blessings. They shew for relikes the pieces of the shooes which Chederles his horse brake in that Dragon-fight, & vse the same in drinke against agues and head-aches. These places are full of Dragons and Vipers. Sultan Murat Chan, x or Amurath the second in a battell against the Christians, vsed this prayer, O righteous God, giue vs strength and victorie, O Muhamet, O Mustapha the top of glory, by abundance of miracles, by the abundance of Gaiberenlers, which are friends to the Musulmans, and walke inuisible, by the abundance of the Cheders, grant vs victorie. In the time y of Vrchan, or Orchanes the sonne of Ottoman, they say these Gaib-erenlers appeared on white horses in a battell against the Christians, and slew them. These (they say) are friends to the Islams, that is, Catholike, or right beleeuing Musulmans, and are diuine protectors of the Imania or Mahumetan Law. Such tales you may read in the Spanish relations of the West Indies, as at the battell of Taueseo, z where a strange horse-man discomfited the Indians, &c. And our inuocation of God and Saint George, is rather Turkish, then truely Christian: For God

God alone [g] is our ſtrength, which teacheth our hands to fight, and our fingers to battell: and whom [h] haue I in heauen but thee, and I haue deſired none in earth with thee? As for George and Chederles, I know them both alike in matter of Inuocation, ſaue that it is worſe to abuſe to impietie a Chriſtian name then a Turkiſh: and King Edward the third ſeemed to inuoke Edward as much as George, Ha Saint Edward, Ha Saint George (ſaith Thomas Walſingham.) But that of George is rather an Embleme of euery Chriſtian, as not onely the Heroique Muſe of our Spencer, [i] in Poeticall fiction, but the Diuiner of great Diuines, [k] in their iudiciall cenſure haue manifeſted. It ſeemeth that the Chederles and Gaib-erenlers are diuers: and perhaps that Martiall Nation in conqueſt of the Chriſtians of thoſe parts, would ſoone reconcile themſelues to that Martiall Saint, and drinke in thoſe further deuotions which his horſe piſſed. Such Emblemes were thoſe of Chriſtopher, Catherine, George, which the Papiſts inuocate as Saints; an errour proceeding from thoſe pictures (as it ſeemeth) in Churches, according to that of the Prophet, [l] The ſtocke is a doctrine of vanitie, and [m] the image is a teacher of lies. The ruder poſteritie in that miſt of Antichriſt, and ſmoke from the bottomleſſe pit, not being able to diſcerne an Emblem and Hiſtorie aſunder, haue made Saint George the Mars [n] of the Chriſtians, quem noſtra iuuentus pro Mauorte colit. Bellarmine [o] ſtruggleth much, rather then hee will loſe his Saint, and yet confeſſeth the Hiſtorie Apocryphall. Baronius [p] his fellow Cardinall, but beyond in truth, acknowledgeth it an Image of a Symbole, rather then of a Hiſtorie, which Iacobus de Voragine without good authoritie, in his Golden Legend maketh hiſtoricall. He ſaith the Virgin repreſenteth ſome Prouince, which imploreth the Martyrs helpe againſt the Deuill. But Hyperius [q] and Villauicentius Poſſeuini interpret it more fitly, to ſignifie the Church aſſaulted by the Diuell, protected by the Chriſtian Magiſtrate: in which reſpect our Defender of the Faith, may iuſtly be termed the Patron of that renowned Order, which hath now learned their George to be Symbolicall, not a Cappadocian, and (as Princes, of [r] Gods husbandrie, which gaue name to Saint George) to fight againſt the Dragon, and the beaſt with hornes like the Lambe, but ſpeaking like the Dragon. As for the Popiſh George, Baronius alſo hath another originall from the Arrians, worſhipped of them for a Martyr. But if any would bee further acquainted with this Knightly Saint, let him reſort to Doctor Rainolds [s] his larger Diſcourſe touching theſe Romiſh Idolatries: which howſoeuer Serarius ſeekes to confute, muſtering a huge [t] Armie of eight and twentie Arguments to fight for this fighting Saint: Yet doe none of theſe Georgian Souldiers ſtrike one ſtroke to proue that their Legendary Martyr, nor ſo much as conclude his Horſe tayle, or Dragons teeth, or his owne ſword or ſpeare: no nor ſhew whether This George thus related, pointed, worſhipped, bee the childe of Hiſtorie or Myſterie; heire of the Painter, Poet, or Hiſtorian: Symbolicall or Hiſtoricall. As for George, Chriſtopher, Catherine, Hippolitus; that ſome Saints haue beene called by theſe names, wee much deny not, care not: if theſe thus deliuered in their Stories, bee but monſters, or myſteries.

CHAP. XIIII.

Of their Prieſts and Hierarchie: with a digreſſion touching the Hierarchie and Miſerie of Chriſtians ſubiect to the Turke.

AFter the diſcourſe of their Regulars (which in eſtimation of deuotion haue with the Turkes, and therefore in this Hiſtorie, the firſt place) their Secular Prieſts follow to be conſidered. Theſe are of differing degrees, which Menauino [a] thus reckoneth: firſt, the Cadileſcher, vnder which the Moſti or Mufti; the third, the Cadi; and after theſe (in ſubordinate orders) the Modecis, Antippi, Imam, Meizini, and beſides theſe the Sophi. A certaine Raguſian, [b] in an Oration before Maximilian the Emperour doth not much diſagree: but for Cadileſcher, he calleth the firſt Peſcherchadi whereof (hee ſaith) there are two, one in Romania, the other in Natolia, chiefe Iudges of the Armie, hauing power to reuerſe the ſentence of the Emperour, if it be againſt the law of Mahomet. A ſecond Magiſtrate (ſaith hee) is called Muchti, the chiefe Interpreter of the law, from whoſe ſentence is no appeale.

Nic. Nicolai [c] ſaith the ſame of their two Cadileſchers, and that they are choſen out of their moſt learned Doctors of their Law, and alway follow the Court, and with the conſent of the Baſſaes, conſtitute and depoſe the Cadi; hauing for their annuall ſtipend ſeuen thouſand or eight thouſand duckets, beſides their ordinary gaines. They haue tenne Secretaries kept at the Grand Seigniors charge, and two Moolorbaſſis, which are buſied about the horſes; horſes: they haue alſo two hundred or three hundred ſlaues. They vſe few words, but ſuch as are of their Law and Religion altogether, with very much ſhew of grauitie. Arinabene [d] (in his Preamble to the Italian Alcoran) maketh Cadileſcher [e] to be a generall name to all their Orders of Prieſts. Others doe place the Mufti in the higheſt place, and the Cadileſcher in the ſecond ranke: and perhaps others gaue the Cadileſcher the firſt place, becauſe their life was more in action and gouernment, as attending on the Court, and on the warres: but the Mufti being higheſt Interpreter of their law (though without gouernment) muſt indeed haue preeminence. And ſo Menauino [f] ſeemeth to affirme, who, though he placeth the Cadileſcher firſt, yet ſaith, that [g] when happily appeale is made from his ſentence, they haue recourſe to the Mophti. And this opinion is now generall and moſt current, which aſcribeth to the Mufti the chiefe place.

Maſter Harborn, ſometime Embaſſador into Turkie for Englands Queene (the worlds wonder, our Weſterne Heſperus, that ſhined ſo farre ouer and beyond all Chriſtendome, into the Eaſt; but my words are too baſe to vſher in that renowned name) ELIZABETH, thus [h] reporteth. The Turkes doe hold for head and chiefe of their Religion the Mufti (the choice of whom is made by the Great Turke himſelfe) ſuch a one as is knowne to be wiſe and learned, and chiefly of a good life. His authoritie is ſo eſteemed, that the Emperour will neuer alter a determination made by him. He intermedleth in all matters as beſt him liketh, whether they be ciuill or criminall, yea, or of State. And yet he hath no power to command; but is in each mans free libertie, when there happeneth any doubt of importance, to make in ſome few words by writing a declaration of his matter, in forme of a queſtion: to whom the ſaid Mufti, in writing likewiſe (called Zetſa) giueth a briefe anſwere containing his iudgement thereon. This Zetſa, brought to the Iudge, is the rule of his ſentence, prouided, that the declaration, made before to the Mufti, contained no vntruth. Alſo the Grand Signior, to ſhew that he is religious and iuſt, doth ſerue himſelfe of the authoritie of this Mufti, in affaires of warre and peace, demanding his iudgement (in manner aforeſaid;) by this courſe, the ſubiects being inclined to more forward obedience. But yet the Mufti will commonly flatter him, and leane to that part, to which he ſeeth him incline: as in the time of Selym the ſecond, the Mufti hauing diſcouered the Emperours intent to warre vpon Cyprus, approued the ſame in his Zetpha. But after, vpon great offers made to Mehemet the Viſier, to breake that reſolution, the Mufti, by him wonne to fauour the matter, affirmed ſtill, that the warre againſt Cyprus was good and iuſt, but that his Maieſtie had a greater obligation in conſcience, which hee was bound to take in hand, namely, to procure the reuolt of the Moores in Spaine, there oppreſſed by the Chriſtians, wherein hee was ſo bold with the Emperour, as to tell him to his face, that if hee did neglect the cauſe of thoſe Mahumetans, hee might be thereunto by his ſubiects compelled.

Concerning the Mufti, and other ſteps of their Hierarchy, Maſter [i] Knolles writeth, That the Turkes haue certaine Colledges, called Medreſſæ, at Conſtantinople, Adrinople, Burſia, and other places, in which they liue, and ſtudie their prophane Diuinitie and Law, and haue among them nine ſeuerall ſteps or degrees vnto the higheſt dignitie.

The firſt is called Softi, which are young Students. The ſecond are Calfi, who are Readers vnto the firſt. The third Hogi, Writers of Bookes (for they will ſuffer no Printing.) The fourth, are Naipi, or young Doctors, which may ſupply the place of Iudges, in their abſence. The fifth, Caddi, Iudges of their Law, and Iuſtices to puniſh offenders; of which there is one at leaſt in euery Citie through the Turkiſh Dominion: and are knowne from other men by their huge Turbants, two yards in compaſſe. The ſixth, are Muderiſi, which ouerſee the Caddies doings, and are as Suffragans to their Biſhops; who are the ſeuenth ſort, and are called Mulli, which place and diſplace Church-men at their pleaſure. The eight, Cadeleſcari, who are but two great and principall Iudges or Cardinals, the one of Græcia, the other of Natolia: and theſe two ſit euery day in the Diuano among the Baſſaes, and are in great reputation. The ninth is the Mufti, who is among the Turkes, as the Pope among the Roman Catholikes. When the Baſſaes puniſh any offence againſt their Law, they ſend to him. Hee may not abaſe himſelfe to ſit in the Diuano, neither when hee comes into the preſence of the Grand Seignior, will he vouchſafe to kiſſe his hand, or to giue any more reuerence, then he receiueth. The Great Sultan ariſeth to honour him, when hee comes vnto him, and then they both ſit downe face to face, and ſo talke and conferre together. No man can aſcend to this place, but by the dignities aforeſaid.

Mahomet [k] the third, forced by a tumult of the Ianizaries to preſent himſelfe vnto them, came accompanied with the Mufti, and ſome few others of the reuerend Doctors of their Law, who were by the Sultan commanded to ſit downe, whiles the great Baſſaes abode ſtanding. Such reſpect it had to theſe men. Thus much Knolles.

is like to that of the Iewish High Priest, or Roman Pope. I rather esteeme it like to that of the Patriarkes of Alexandria, Antioch, &c. as binding not all Mahumetans, but the Turkes onely: whereas the one had, the other challengeth a subiection of all, which professe their religion. That Author also affirmeth, that whensoeuer the Mufti goeth abroad forth of his own house (which he vseth to doe very seldome) his vse and custome is, first to goe and visit the Emperour; who as soone as hee seeth him comming to salute him, and doe him reuerence, presently ariseth out of his seat, and embracing him with great kindnesse, entertaineth him very friendly and louingly, causing him to sit downe by him, and giuing him the honour of the place.

His authoritie, saith [m] Seranzo, is so great, that none will openly contradict the Mufties sentence: but yet if the Emperour be setled in a resolution, the Mufti with feare or flattery inclines vnto him. m L. Seranzo. part. 2. cap. 61.

Next to the Mufti is the Cadilescher, who being also chosen by the Emperour, may bee compared to those, whom the Christians call Patriarches, or else to the Primats and Metropolitans of a Kingdome. Of these there are now in this encreased greatnesse of the Turkish Empire, three; whereas it seemeth that they had in the time of Baiazet but one, and long after (as before is said) but two. To one of these is assigned Europe, namely, so much thereof as is subiect to the Turke, for his Prouince: To the second, Natolia or Turky: to the third, Syria and Egypt, with the parts adioyning. There were but two Cadileschers, till Selym wan Syria and Egypt, and erected a third. But [n] Seranzo saith, that this third of Cairo is not rightly called Cadilescher, but should rather be called the great Cadi. Out of all which Prouinces, whatsoeuer causes come to be determined, by appeale or otherwise, they are brought to be decided before the Cadilescher of the same Prouince whence they arise: notwithstanding that the abode of each of them be continually, or for the most part, at Constantinople, or elsewhere, whereseoeuer the Emperour holdeth his Court. The honour done to them, is little lesse then to the Mufti, for that their authoritie is ouer Priest and people, temporall and spirituall: they are also learned in their law, aged and experienced. Of the Muderisi and Mulli, I can say no more then I haue done. Cadileschers. n Magin.

Next to these are the Cadi, which are sent abroad and dispersed into euery Citie and Towne of the Turkish Empire: which besides their [o] Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction (as I may terme it) in forcing man to their religious obseruations, are as it were, Iusticers and Gouernours of the places. So neere glued are the Offices and Officers, the religion and politie of the Turkes. There are other which are not sent forth, which are called Choza, that is, Elders. These, with the Talismans, haue the ordering of their Parishionall Churches: The Thalisman calling the people to prayer, and the Choza executing the Seruice and Preaching; and in absence, each supplying others Office. Menauino more distinctly, and in other names, numbreth those Church-officers. The Modecis is a Gouernour of an Hospitall, receiuing and disposing the rents, with the other customes thereof. Their Schoole degrees are before spoken of, out of Knolles. Some [p] adde to these former, these other Priests, of baser condition. The Antippi are certaine Priests, which vpon Friday (called of them Glumaagun, and is obserued as their Sabbath, because Mahomet (as some hold) was borne on that day) and on other their fasting and feasting-dayes, after they haue vsed diuers Ceremonies in a certaine place, in the middest of the Temple, about thirtie steps high, from thence read vnto the people something concerning the life of Mahomet. After which, two little boyes stand vp, and sing certaine Prayers: Which being ended, the Priest and all the people sing a Psalme with a low voyce, and then for halfe an houre together they cry Illah, illelah, that is, there is but one God. After all this, one of these Antippi, out of that high place, sheweth forth vnto the people a Lance and Scimitar, with exhortation to vse their Swords and Lances in defence of their Religion. Of the Imam and Meizin, is elsewhere shewed, that the one calleth the people to the Mosche or Meschit, the other there celebrateth publike Orisons. The Sophi also are certaine Clerks or Priests, employed in the singing of Psalmes and Hymnes, after their manner, in their Churches at the times of publike Prayers. Cadi. o Andr. Arino. Modecis. p Policie of the Turkish Empire. Antippi. Imam. Meizin. Sophi, perhaps the same with the Sofi before mentioned.

All these inferior Orders of Priests are chosen by the people, and haue a certaine stipend allowed them by the Emperour, which yet is so small, that many of them are driuen to vse either writing of Bookes, or Handicrafts and Trades for their liuing, and are clothed like Lay-men. They haue [q] no great learning, it is sufficient if they can read the Alcoran, which being written in Arabike, they are as loth to haue translated into the vulgar, as the Papists are to haue the Scripture. Hee which can interprete, and make some Exposition of the Text, is of profund learning. Yet are they reuerenced: and if a Turke doe strike or offer outrage to them, he loseth his hand; and if he be a Christian, his life; being sure to be burned. Some say, that now of late some of them are more studious of Astronomie and other Arts. As for those superiour rankes, no doubt may be made of their high account. The Chadilescher is clothed q *Bar. in Chamlet, Satten, Silke, Damaske, or Veluet of ſeemely colour, as Ruſſet, or Tawny, and in Purple-coloured cloth with long ſleeues. Their Tulipan on their head is of maruellous greatneſſe, ſharpe in the middeſt, of Purple Ruſſet colour, deeper and thicker then others; their beards great. They ride on Geldings, with Purple foot-cloths fringed; and when they goe on foot, they goe ſlowly, repreſenting a ſtately and ſacred grauitie.

There is another order of ſacred perſons, which yet are neither regular nor ſecular, by any vow or ordination, but had in that account for their birth, being ſuppoſed to deſcend of the line of Mahumet. The Turkes and Tartarians call them Seiti or Sithi, the Moores Seriffi. Theſe weare greene Tulipans, which colour none elſe may weare, and that onely on their head. Some Chriſtians, ignorant hereof, haue had their apparell cut from their backes, for wearing ſomewhat greene about them. Theſe they call Hemir. They enioy many priuiledges, eſpecially in giuing teſtimony, wherein one of theſe is as much as two other, which they abuſe to iniury and wrong. The moſt of them are Moores, which goe ten or fifteene in a company, with a banner on a ſtaffe, hauing a Moone on the top; and that which is giuen for Gods ſake, they ſit and eate in the ſtreet, where alſo they make their praiers, and are poorly clad. Like to theſe (in priuiledge and prauiledge) are the Chagi, or Fagi, which liue on almes like Fryers. They attend on the publike prayers, on the holy Reliques, on the Corpſes and Funerals of the dead, and to prey on the liuing by falſe oathes.

A digreſſion touching the Hierarchie, and Miſeries of Chriſtians vnder the Turke, &c.

AND thus we haue taken a leiſurely view of the Turkiſh Hierarchy, from the poore Softi to the courtly Cadileſcher and pontificall Mufti, flouriſhing and triumphing together with that Monarchy, which is exalted, and hath exalted them, with the power, not of the Word of GOD, but of the Sword of Man. But with what words meane whiles ſhall wee deplore the lamentable and miſerable eſtate of that Chriſtian Hierarchy and Eccleſiaſticall Politie, which ſometimes flouriſhed there with no fewer, nor leſſe titles of dignitie and eminence? Where are now thoſe Reuerend Names of Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Metropolitans, Patriarkes, and the ſwelling ſtile of Oecumenicall? Nay, where are the things, the life and huing? for the ſtile, names, titles, ſtill continue; continue indeed, but as Epitaphs and Inſcriptions on the Monuments of their deceaſed and buried power, as the ghoſts and wandring ſhadowes of thoſe ſometimes quicke and quickning bodies of rule and gouernment. Great Citie of great CONSTANTINE, ſeated in the Throne of the World, the fitteſt ſituation to command both Sea and Land, through Europe, Aſia, and Africa; at thy firſt Natiuitie honored with a double Diadem of Chriſtianitie & Soueraigntie; to which the Sea proſtrateth it ſelfe with innumerable multitudes of Fiſh, the Land payeth continuall tribute of rare fertilitie; for which old Rome diſrobed her ſelfe to decke this her New-Rome, Daughter and Imperiall heire, with her choiſeſt Iewels and Monuments: a Compendium of the World, Eye of Cities, Heart of the habitable earth, Academie of learning, Senate of gouernement, Mother of Churches, Nurſe of Religion, and (to ſpeake in the language of thine owne) [a] A new Eden, an earthly Heauen, modell of Paradiſe, ſhining with the varietie of thy ſacred and magnificent buildings, as the Firmament, with the Sunne, Moone, and Starres. This was thy ancient greatneſſe, great now, onely in miſerie and miſchiefe, which as chiefe ſeat of Turkiſh Greatneſſe, is hence inflicted on the Chriſtian Name. And thou, the Soule of this Bodie, the goodlieſt Iewell in this Ring of Perfection, which ſo many wonders of Nature conſpired to make the Miracle of Art, the TEMPLE of that WISDOME of GOD, which is GOD; called by him which ſaw thee both Chriſtian and Mahumetan, [b] A terreſtriall Heauen, a Cherubicall Chariot, another Firmament, beyond all names of elegance; which I thinke (ſaith another) [c] the very Seraphins doe admire with veneration, and (which hath here moued thy mention) high Seat and Throne of that Patriarchiall and Oecumenicall Highneſſe, which hence ſwayed all the Eaſt, and contended with Weſterne Rome for Soueraigntie; now excludeſt rule, rites, yea perſons Chriſtian, wholly hallowed, to the damnable holies of ridiculous and blaſphemous Mahometiſme: the multitudes of other Churches, as ſilly captiued Damſels, attending and following thee into this Mechiticall ſlauerie. O CITIE, which haſt beene (woe worth that word, that haſtie haſt-beene) which haſt been! but who can ſay what thou haſt beene? let one word, the ſum of all earthly excellence, expreſſe what flouds of words and ſeas of Rhetorick cannot expreſſe, which haſt beene CONSTANTINOPLE; which art (that one name may declare thy bottomleſſe helliſh downefall) indeed, though not in name, Mahometople; the Seat of Mahomets power, the ſettling of Mahumetan dregs: What words words can ſerue to preach thy funerall Sermon, and ring thy knell to ſucceeding ages? Sometimes the Theatre of worldly pompe, but then on that diſmal day of thy captiuitie, the ſtage of earthly and helliſh Furies, the ſinke of bloud, and ſlaughter-houſe of Death. What ſenſe would not become ſenſeleſſe, to ſee the breaches of the walls filled vp with the ſlaine? the gate by death ſhutting out death, cloſed [d] vp to the arch with confuſed bodies of Turks and Chriſtians? the ſhouts of men fighting? the cries, grones, gaſpes, of men dying? the manifold ſpectacles and [e] varietie of death? and yet the worſe eſtate, and more multiplied deaths of the liuing? women rauiſhed; maidens forced; perſons, vowed to ſanctitie, deuoted to luſt, ſlaughter, ſlauerie; reuerend age no whit reuerenced; greene youth periſhing in the bloome, and rotten before it had time to ripen; the father ſeeing the hopes of his yeeres, deare pledges of Nature, ſlaine or ſold before his face: the children beholding the parents paſſe into another captiuitie; all taking an euerlaſting fare well of all wel-fare, as well as of each other. Well may we in compaſſion weepe for thoſe miſeries, the bitter paſſion whereof, like a violent whirlewinde, did to them drie vp the fountaines of teares! Euen he which writ the Hiſtorie of theſe things, quorum pars magna fuit, George Phranza, Counſeller, and great Chancellor to the Emperour, might much moue vs with his owne particular; himſelfe ſold to one, his wife to another, his daughter (richly eſpouſed) now married to the Seraile-ſlauerie, his ſonne ſlaine with the Sultans owne hand, for not being obſequious to his beaſtly luſt: if particular and priuate caſes could finde any proper place in publike calamities; and if the Emperours owne Hiſtorie, were not (as ſome haue told it) more tragicall. O Sunne, how could thy brightneſſe endure to ſee ſuch hideous ſpectacles! but clouds of ſhot, duſt, and ſmoake, hid them from thee! O Earth, which otherwhiles at that time [f] of the yeere, deckeſt thy ſelfe with thy faireſt roabes, embroidered with varietie of flowers! how waſt thou then couered with dead carkaſſes, and furrowed with rills of bloud? O GOD, that the ſinnes of man ſhould thus prouoke thy iuſtice, by vniuſt and ſinfull inſtruments, to puniſh iniuſtice and ſinne! and to chaſtiſe thy Chriſtian ſeruants, by Antichriſtian and deuilliſh enemies! Iuſt art thou, O Lord, and iuſt are thy iudgements, which in iudgement remembreſt mercy, which ſaueſt the ſoules of thine, in and by the affliction of their bodies, but wilt caſt this Rod of thy wrath into a fire that neuer ſhall be quenched.

But mee thinkes I heare ſome excepting at this long digreſſion, and quarrelling at this Tragedie in ſtead of the proceeding Hiſtorie. Shall I craue pardon? Or ſhall I rather deſire the Reader a little to conſider with mee in this narration of Conſtantinople (as the Map and Epitome of Eaſterne Chriſtendome) the miſerable and perplexed eſtate of all Eaſterne Chriſtians, by like meanes brought and trampled vnder the feet of the Ottoman Horſe? The larger ſtorie of their rites and opinions is reſerued to another taske: this I haue propounded as the glaſſe of their miſeries, that being now to take leaue of the Turkes, wee might not ſo much honour them with this peale of Rhetorical Ordnance; as by this mirror of miſerie, be touched with feare in our ſelues for like puniſhments, if in time we meet not God with repentance; and remembring the afflictions of Ioſeph, to pray for thoſe our brethren, that God would haue mercy on them, and giue them patience, and (in his time) deliuerance. They which would take more view of the miſeries of Chriſtians vnder the Turke, may in Vines, Georgiouitz, Septemcaſtrenſis, and others, read them; for mee, the parallels of the Turkiſh and Chriſtian Hirarchy, was ſome occaſion of this digreſſion, touching which, let mee borrow a few words with our Reader.

Mahomet the Conqueror, for the repeopling of the Citie, pretended great fauour to the Chriſtians, gaue them licence to elect a new Patriarch, whom he honoured with the wonted rites and ſolemnities: and vouchſafed to conferre with him about the Chriſtian myſteries (for his mother was a Chriſtian, and he himſelfe addicted to ſtudies of learning, being [a] skilfull in the Greeke, Chaldee, Perſian, Latin, Arabike, beſides his Turkiſh, languages, profeſſing knowledge alſo in Aſtrologie) and receiued at the hands of this Patriarch, (his name was Gennadius) a large treatiſe thereof, [b] yet extant in Greeke and Turkiſh, and gaue him diuers priuiledges. But things fained cannot continue: and partly through his owne couetouſneſſe, partly through the ambition and diſagreeing of the Clergie, heauie fines were impoſed on them, and the Seat receiued in his time nine ſucceſſions, and eight in the raigne of Baiazet his ſonne, and ſo groneth vnder that burthen to this day. And howſoeuer the Patriarch enioyeth [c] Spirituall and Eccleſiaſticall reſpect amongſt the Chriſtians, yet is hee contemned of the Turkes, ſome of them vpbraiding both him and other Chriſtians, with the names of dogs, Ethnicks, vnbeleeuers, and the like zealous Rhetorick: nor is he admitted a roome amongſt the Baſſaes, except when he brings his tribute of 4000. duckets, with almoſt as much beſides to the Baſſaes and other officers. the Consecration of some Bishop or Archbishop: and very little preaching they haue amongst them, and that which is, in the old pure Greeke, which very few of them vnderstand, thinking it sufficient if two or three of their audience conceiue them, and very few can preach. They haue not the Scriptures in the vulgar Greeke. The reuenue of the Patriarch is about 20000. Dollers. They gather much in their Churches; and hee sendeth his Collector to gather abroad, and the other Prelates pay an annuitie to him. To preuent abuses from Turkes, he hath a Ianizarie or two at the Church-doore in the time of the Lyturgie. They reade in their Churches great Legends of the lies of Saints, as well as the Papists. Their Religion is almost altogether in rites, like the other. The difference betweene new and old Rome was one principall occasion of the losse of Constantinople, as appeareth p by the Emperour Iohn his going to Rome to sollicite ayde, (which had been giuen him but for refusing a Papall ceremonie) and the proceedings of the Councell of Florence. The Patriarkes of Alexandria, Antiochia, and Ierusalem, acknowledge this of Constantinople Oecumenicall: and his iurisdiction extendeth through Asia Minor, the Archipelago, Greece, Mysia, Walachia, Moldavia, Dalmatia, Russia, and Muscouia. The Calogeri or Monkes haue their Gardens and Vineyards, which they till and dresse with their owne hands to sustaine themselues. The other Patriarchs also pay a yeerely tribute to the Turke. The Priests are poore, and liue of Almes and the prices of their holies, which are most gainefull in exequies. The Laitie is no lesse miserable for the most part, of spare diet, but giuen to drinking. Both Iewes and Christians pay for themselues and euery of their Children aboue twelue yeeres old, a Ducket by the poll: and much more for the maintenance of the Nauie, besides their tribute-children for Ianizaries.

The Greekes are ignorant and vnlearned, and haue exiled (in a blinde zeale) Poeticall and Philosophicall Authors, for feare of pollution to their studies. And as Simeon Cabasilas writ to Crusius, they haue about seuentie Dialects of the Moderne Greeke tongue, the purest of which is at Constantinople, the most barbarous of all (O Times!) at Athens. O ATHENS, before called q Ἑλλὰς ὁ Ἑλλάδος, The Greece of Greece; and that which the sight is in the eye, that which the minde is in the soule, such was Athens in Greece, Seat of the Muses, Graces, Empire, Arts! O ATHENS! but I am forced silence. Let Zygomal, an eye-witnesse, speake; There now (saith hee) remaines no more but the skin thereof, her selfe is long since dead: the True Athens and Helicon are come into our Westene parts. And how can any of them labour in learning, which must labour to liue? Necessitie hath no law, no learning. Euen we here now behold a Brittish Athens, or rather an Attike Britaine, where whilome our Ancestors (euen after Learning and Religion had here now flourished) found through the Danish pestilence, a brutish barbarisme. Alfred, the sonne of a King, and after King himselfe, could not finde a Master in all his Dominions to teach him the Latin tongue: and procuring with care and cost, forreiners to teach him, first learned that language at sixe and thirtie yeeres of his age: hauing begun to reade the vulgar at twelue yeeres, which his elder and lesse studious brethren could not then doe. And himselfe in the Preface of Gregories Pastoralls, (to vse his owne words in our later English) saith, That *learning was so fallen in the English Nation, that very few were on this side Humber, which their seruice could vnderstand in English, or an Epistle from Latin into English declare: and I weene that not many beyond Humber were not. But I forget my Greekes, as they haue done their Greeke; I feare rather, I seeme to remember them too much, and that seuere Censors will iudge this an abortiue issue, borne before the time. The greateſt miſery which accompanieth the Turkiſh thraldome, is their [b] zeale of making Proſelytes, with manifold and ſtrong inducements, to ſuch as haue bin more nuzzled in ſuperſtitions, then trained vp in knowledge, and ſee ſuch contempt of Chriſtians, and honours which befall to many Renegadoes: and very many are peruerted and bewitched therewith.

[c] Septemcaſt. handleth this at large.

Yea, many voluntarily offer themſelues to Apoſtaſie; and others, by [c] hopes, feares, griefes, deſpaires, importunities, diſtracted: by that vizor of vertue in the Turkiſh grauity, ſobriety, bodily purity, and ſpirituall zeale (after their ſect) with whole rabbles of Satanicall miracles deluded: wanting all intercourſe of Sacraments, preaching, reading, and all Chriſtian holies: and full of wants in neceſſaries for this life; forget a better, and turne Turke. Thus do they ſell to the Deuil their ſoules, bought by the bloud of Chriſt Ieſus. We may well deſpaire of words to vtter this miſery, and to deſcribe this Mart of Hell; ſeeing it exceedeth all words to ſee the Markets made of Chriſtian bodies, the remainders of cruell and bloudy warres, chained together in more then beaſtly bondage, ſo brought to the markets: if any bee ſicke by the way, driuen on as long as they can goe, and when their feet faile, laid ouer a horſe, like as butchers deale with ſmall cattle, and if thy die, left for a prey to the fowles and beaſts: the places of their abode by the way, filled with cryes of younglings of both ſexes, abuſed to vnnaturall luſt. In the markets they are ſtripped, viewed, and (modeſtie forbids to ſpeake, O Image of God thus abaſed!) openly in the ſecreteſt parts handled, bee they male or female: forced to goe, runne, leape; and if ſhame or diſdaine make them vnwilling, by whips and ſtripes compelled: the infant plucked from the mothers breaſt and ſold from euer againe ſeeing her, or libertie: the wife thus openly deluded and dealt with before the huſbands face, and for a baſe price giuen by ſome baſer Turke, euerlaſtingly diuorced from his face: his daughters virginitie, openly, ſecretly! my words are ſwallowed vp with horrour of the fact: himſelfe, at home, reuerend for his yeeres, now in that reſpect contemned, and hanging long on hand as vnprofitable ware, before hee finde a buyer. Prieſt, Souldier, Merchant, Artificer, Husbandman, all equally ſubiect to this iniquity, ſaue that Gentlemen, and thoſe of moſt liberall education are leaſt eſteemed and moſt abuſed, becauſe they can bring leaſt profit to their Maſters. Where beſides filthy luſts, they ſuffer hunger, thirſt, cold, and ſtripes; and which redoubleth thoſe blowes, euen there is the paſſion of Chriſt, in this paſſion of their owne, vpbraided to them. Some in impatience reuolt, ſome runne away, and are brought backe to a worſe eſtate, if poſſible: ſome kill themſelues; and ſome! But I can ſay no more. Of the Regions and Religions of ASIA MINOR, ſince called Natolia and Turkie.

NExt after the Turkiſh Religion thus related, it ſeemeth fitteſt to diſcourſe of the ancient names and limits of Regions, and of the former Heatheniſh Religions of that part of the Turkiſh Dominion, which among Authors [a] hath ſince, in a ſingular eminencie, obtained the name of Turkie. And if it ſeeme ſtrange, that the Turkiſh Religion (a new vpſtart) be declared before thoſe former of the Pagans, the matter wee had in hand hath thus altered our methode, that after wee had deſcribed the deformed diſioynted lineaments of the Mother, an Arabian Saracen, her more miſ-ſhapen Daughter, this Turkiſh Mopſa, might attend her hard at her heeles. As for the Region, we haue followed the Turkiſh forces hither: and now that we haue glutted our ſelues with the view of their later affaires of State and Religion, let vs caſt our eyes about vs, and obſerue the Countrey it ſelfe, which becauſe of her long and entire ſubiection to this Nation, is ſtyled by [b] their name. The Greekes [c] called it Natolia, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνατολῆς, becauſe it was the Eaſterne part of that Empire, as they called Thracia, the Countrey about Conſtantinople (which was named Νέα Ρώμη) Romania. This Natolia, or Anatolia, is of others called Aſia Minor: and yet Aſia, in moſt proper and ſtrict account, is peculiarly applied to one Region in this great Cheroſoneſus, or Peninſula, which containeth neth besides that, the Regions of Pontus, Bithynia, Lycia, Galatia, Pamphilia, Paphlagonia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Armenia Minor. It was bounded on the East with Euphrates, (now Frat;) on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea: on the West, with the Archipelago: on the North, with the Black-Sea, stretching in length from 51. to 72. degrees of Longitude, and in breadth from 36. $\frac{1}{2}$. to 45. This Countrey hath beene anciently renowned for Armes and Arts: now the [d] graue of the carkasses, or some ruinous bones rather, and stonie Reliques of the carkasses of more then foure thousand Places and Cities, sometimes inhabited. Many changes hath it sustained by the Egyptian, Persian, Macedonian, Roman, Tartarian, and Turkish generall Conquests, besid s such exploits, as Cræsus and Mithridates of old, the Saracens, and the Westerne Christians of later times, haue therein atchieued. Let the studious of these things search them in their proper Authors: our taske is Religion, whose ouer-worne, and almost out-worne steps, with much curious hunting in many Histories, wee haue thus weakely traced. Of the Turkes we haue alreadie spoken, and we leaue the larger Relations of the Christians (for why should wee mixe Light with Darkneſse?) to their proper place. For euen yet, besides the Armenians, there remaine many Christians of the Greek Church in Cappadocia, and other parts of this Region. 10 with the Hills Anticaurus and Moschius, and part of Euphrates. Heere runneth Halys, the end of Crœsus Empire, both in the site and fate thereof; the doubtfull Oracle here giuing him a certaine ouerthrow. For when hee consulted with the same, touching his Expedition against Cyrus, he receiued answer, That passing Halys, hee should ouer-turne a great State; which he interpreting actiuely of his attempts against Cyrus, verified it passiuely in himselfe. And here, besides other streames, slideth Thermodon, sometime made famous by the bordering Amazons. Of which manly Fœminine people, ancient Authors disagree: Theophrastus deriuing them from the Sauromatæ; Salust fetching them from Tanais; P. Diaconus describing them in Germany; Trogus and Iustine reporting them Scythians; Diodorus crossing the Seas to finde them in Lybia, and thence also, in a further search, passing into an Iland in the Atlantike Ocean; Ptolomey and Curtius placing them neerer the Caspian Sea; Strabo [f] doubting whether there euer had beene such a people, or no. Some haue found them out a-new in the new World, [g] naming that huge Riuer of them. Goropius confidently auouched them to bee the Wiues and Sonnes of the Sarmatians or Cimbrians: who, together with their Husbands, inuaded Asia. And this hee proueth by Dutch Etymologies and other coniectures. Which, if it be true, sheweth, that their Religion was the same with the Scythian. They [h] are said to haue worshipped Mars, of whom they faine themselues to be descended. Religion it were, to speake of their Religion, of whose being wee haue no better certaintie. Strabo [i] writeth, That in the places ascribed to the Amazons, Apollo was exceedingly worshipped.

In Cappadocia was seated the Citie Comana, wherein was a Temple of Bellona, and a great multitude of such as were there inspired and rauished by deuilish illusion, and of sacred Seruants. It was inhabited by the people called Cataones, who being subiect to a King, did neuertheless obey the Priest that was in great part Lord of the Temple, and of the Sacred Seruants, whose number (when Strabo was there) amounted to sixe thousand and vpwards of men and women. The Priest receiued the reuenue of the Region next adioyning to the Temple, and was in honour next to the King in Cappadocia, and commonly of the same kindred. These Idolatrous Rites are supposed to haue beene brought hither out of Taurica Scythia, by Orestes and his sister Iphigenia, where humane Sacrifices were offered to Diana. Here, at the solemne Feasts of Bellona, those Sacred Seruants before mentioned, called Comani, wounded each other in an extaticall furie, bloudy Rites fitting Bellona's solemnities. [k] Argæus, whose hoary head was couered continually with snow, was reputed a religious Hill, and habitation of some God.

k Solinus.

Strabo [l] reporteth of the Temple of Apollo Catanius, in Dastacum; and of another of Iupiter in Morimena, which had three thousand of those Sacred Seruants or Religious Votaries, which as an inferiour Order were at the command of the Priest, who receiued of his Temples reuenue fifteene Talents, and was reputed in the next ranke of honour to the Priest of Comana.

Not farre hence is Castabala, where the Temple of Diana Persica [m], where the sacred or deuoted women were reported to goe bare-footed on burning coles without harme. It is reported [n], that if a Snake did bite a Cappadocian, the mans bloud was poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Many excellent Worthies hath this Region yeelded to the world. Mazaca (afterwards of Claudius called Cæsarea) was the Episcopall Seat of Great Basil. Cucusum, the Receptacle of exiled Chrysostome: Amasia (now a Prouinciall Citie of the Turkish Beglerbegs) sometime the Countrey of Strabo, to whom these our Relations are so much indebted: Nissa and Nazianzum, of which, the two Gregories receiued their surnames. But that Humane and Diuine learning is now trampled vnder the barbarous foot of the Ottoman-horse. Here is Trapezonde also, whilome bearing the proud name of an Empire. Licaonia, the chiefe Citie whereof is Iconium, celebrated in holy Writ, (and a long time the Royall Seat of the first Turkes in Asia, and since of Caramania, now Conia, or Cogne, inhabited with Greekes, Turkes, Iewes, Arabians and Armenians) is of Ptolomey adioyned to Cappadocia. And so is Diopolis, called before Cabira, since Augusta, which Ortelius placeth in the lesser Armenia.

Licaonia.

Diopolis.

In Diopolis was the Temple of the Moone had in great veneration, much like, in the Rites thereof, to that before mentioned of Comana: which although it bare [o] the surname of Cappadocia, yet Ptolomey placeth it in this Armenia; and Comana Pontica, in Cappadocia, of the same name and superstitious deuotion to the same Goddesse. Thence haue they taken the patterne of their Temple, of their Rites, Ceremonies, Diuinations, respect to their Priests. And twice a yeere in the Feasts, which were called, The Goddesse her going out, the Priest ware a Diademe. He was second to none, but the King: which Priest-hood was holden of some of Strabo's progenitors. Pompey bestowed the Priest-hood of this Temple vpon Archelaus, and added to the temples reuenue two Schœni, that is, threescore furlongs of ground, commanding the inhabitants to yeeld him obedience. Hee had also power ouer the Sacred Seruants, which were no lesse then sixe thousand.

Lycomedes after inioyed that Prelacie, with foure Schœni of land added thereto: Cæsar remoued him, placing in his roome Diteutus, the sonne of Adiatorix, whom (with his wife and children) hee had led in triumph, purposing to slay his elder sonne, together with him. But when the younger perswaded the Souldiers that he was the elder, and both contended which should die, Diteutus was of his parents counselled to yeeld to the younger, and to remaine aliue, to bee a stay to their family. Which pietie Cæsar hearing of, grieuing for the death of the other, hee thus rewarded. At the Feasts aforesaid, is great recourse of men and women hither. Many Pilgrims resort to discharge their vowes. Great store of women is there, which for the most part are deuoted; this Citie being as little Corinth. For many went to Corinth, in respect of the multitude of Harlots, prostituted or consecrated to Venus.

Zela. Zela, another Citie, hath in it the Temple of Anias, much reuerenced of the Armenians; wherein the Rites are solemnized with greatest Sanctimony, and Oathes taken of greatest consequence. The sacred Seruants and Priestly Honours are as the former. The Kings did sometime esteeme Zela, not as a Citie, but as a Temple of the Persian Gods: and the Priest had supreme power ouer all things; who, with a great multitude of those sacred Seruants inhabited the same. The Romans encreased their Reuenues.

a Lib. 4. In Cappadocia the Persian Religion was much vsed: but of the Persian Rites see more [a] in our Tractat of Persia. The [b] lewdnesse of the Cappadocians grew into a Prouerbe; if any were enormiously wicked, he was therefore called a Cappadocian.

GALATIA. 300000. Galli. GALATIA or GALLOGRÆCIA, so called of the Galli, which vnder the conduct of Brennus (saith Suidas) assembled an Army of three hundred thousand, and seeking aduentures in forraine parts diuided themselues: some inuading Greece; others Thrace and Asia, where they setled themselues betweene Bithynia and Cappadocia. On the South it is confined with Pamphilia, and on the North is washed with the Euxine Sea, the space of two hundred and fiftie miles. Sinope, the mother and nursing Citie of Mithridates, is heere seated: one of the last Cities of Asia that subiected it selfe to Turkish bondage, in the dayes of Mahomet the second. Of the Galatæ were three Tribes, Trogini, Tolistobogi, and Tectosages: all which Goropius deriueth from the Cimmerij. At Tavium, which was inhabited with the Trogini, was a brazen Statue of Iupiter, and his Temple was a priuiledged Sanctuarie. The Tolistobogi had for their chiefe Mart Pissinus, wherein was a great Temple of the Mother of the Gods, whom they called Andigista, had in great veneration; whose Priests had sometime beene mightie. This Temple was magnificently builded of the Attalian Kings, with the Porches also of white stone. And the Romans, by depriuing the same of the Goddesses Statue (which they sent for to Rome, as they did that of Æsculapius out of Epidaurus) added much reputation of Religion thereunto. The Hill Dindyma ouer-looketh the Citie, of which shee was named Dindymena, as of Cybelus (which Orletius supposeth to bee the same) Cybele. Of the Galatians, Deiotarus was King: but more fame hath befallen them by Paules Epistle to them.

c Plut. Sermo & Disputatio amatoria. Plutarch [c] tells of a Historie of a Galatian woman, named Camma, worthy our recitall. Shee was faire and noble (the daughter of Dianaes Priest) and richly married to Sinatus the Tetrarch. But Sinorix, a man richer and mightier then hee, became his vniust corriuall, and because he durst not attempt violence to her, her husband liuing, he slew him. Camma solaced her selfe as she could, cloystering her selfe in Dianaes Temple, and admitting none of her mightie suiters. But when Sinorix had also moued that suit, she seemed not vnwilling: and when he came to desire her marriage, she went forth to meet him, and with gentle enterrainment brought him into the Temple vnto the Altar, where shee dranke to him a cup of poysoned liquor; and hauing taken off almost halfe, she reached him the rest: which after shee saw he had drunke, she called vpon her husbands name aloud, saying; Hitherto haue I liued sorrowfull without thee, wayting this day, now welcome me vnto thee: for I haue reuenged thy slaughter on the most wicked amongst men, and haue beene companion and partner with thee in life, with him in death. And thus dyed they both. The like manly woman-hood (if a Christian might commend that, which none but a Christian can discommend) Valerius Maximus [d] sheweth of Chiomara her country-woman, wife of Ortyagon, a great man amongst the Tectosages: who, in the warres of Manilius the Consul, being taken prisoner, was committed to the custodie of a Tribune, who forc't her to his pleasure. After that agreement was made for her ransome, and the money brought to the place appointed, whiles the Tribune was busie about the receit thereof, shee caused her Gallo-græcians to cut off his head, which she carryed to her husband, in satisfaction of her wrong.

them into that lateſt and fatall fire, ſuppoſing that their deceaſed friends ſhould read them in the other world. At their ſacrifices [f] they vſed not an Aruſpex, or Diuinor, which gazed in the entrailes, but a Philoſopher, without whom they thought no Sacrifice acceptable to their gods. The Deuill certaine was the god to whom their humane Sacrifices were acceptable, which in deuilliſh inhumanitie they offered at their bloudie Altars [g], when they diuined of things to come, which they did by his falling, by the diſmembring and flowing forth of his bloud. [h] Athenæus out of Philarchus, telleth of one Arianes, a rich Galatian, which feaſted the whole Nation a whole yeere together, with Sacrifices of Bulls, Swine, Sheepe, and other prouiſion, made ready in great Caldrons, prouided of purpoſe for this entertainment, that he made them in ſpacious Boothes, which he had therefore built. Pauſanius ſaith, That the Peſinuntian Galatians abſtained from Swines fleſh. PONTVS and BITHYNIA.

Betweene [i] the mouth of Pontus, the Thracian Boſphorus, and part of Propontis on the Weſt, and Galatia on the Eaſt, part of the Euxine Sea on the North, and Aſia (properly ſo called) on the South, is ſituate the Prouince called by the double name [k] of PONTVS and BITHYNIA. There were ſometimes two Prouinces, diuided by the Riuer Sangarius: now they are called Burſia by Giraua; by Caſtaldus Becſangial. The moſt famous Cities therein are, or rather haue beene, NICE, famous ſometimes for Neptunes Temple, but more for the firſt Generall Councell therein celebrated, againſt Arrius, in defence of the Trinitie, and Chriſts Diuinitie: Nicomedia, ſometimes the Seat of Emperours, now ruinous: Apamia, and Pruſa or Burſa, nigh to the Mount Olympus, where the firſt Ottomans had their ſeat Royall, and all of that race, except the Great Turkes themſelues, are ſtill buried: Chalcedon, built ſeuenteene yeeres before Byzantium; and therefore the builders accounted blinde, which neglected that better Seat. Here was a famous Councell of ſix hundred and thirtie Biſhops, againſt the Hereſie of Eutyches: heere Iaſon had built a Temple to Iupiter, in the ſtraights which ſeuer Europe from Aſia, after Melas meaſure fiue furlongs. Of their ancient Kings others haue related: but one cannot paſſe this our Hiſtorie without obſeruation, and that is Mithridates [l], the ſixth King of that name; who looſing his father in the eleuenth yeere of his age, by his Tutors was trecherouſly aſſailed, but eſcaped, and by vſe of that antidote, which of him ſtill beareth the name Mithridate, out-liued their poyſoning conſpiracie. Hee liued indeed to the death of thouſands, which either his crueltie or his warres conſumed. Foure yeeres together (to auoid their Treaſons) he liued in the fields and woods, vnder a ſhew of hunting; both preuenting their deſignes, and inuring himſelfe to hardneſſe. Hee ſpake two and twentie languages, being Lord of ſo many Nations. Hee held warres with the Romans ſixe and fortie yeeres, whom thoſe renowned Captaines, Sylla, Lucullus, Pompey, did ſo conquer, as he alway aroſe againe with great luſtre, and with greater terror: and at laſt dyed, not by his enemies command, but voluntarily in his old age, and his own Kingdome, neuer made to attend the Roman triumphs; Syllaes felicity, Lucullus proweſſe, and Pompeyes greatneſſe notwithſtanding. His aſpiring thoughts had greedily ſwallowed the Soueraignty both of Aſia and Europe. He cauſed in one night, all the Romans in his Dominions to be ſlaine; in which maſſacre periſhed a hundred and fiftie thouſand, as ſome haue numbred. But it cannot be conceiued (ſaith [m] Oroſius) how many there were, or how great was the griefe both of the doers and ſufferers, when euery one muſt betray his innocent gueſts and friends, or hazard his owne life; no Law of Hoſpitalitie, no Religion of Sanctuary, or reuerence of Images, being ſufficient protection. And no maruell, if he ſpared not his enemies, when [n] he ſlew Exipodras and Homochares his ſonnes; and after the poyſonings and voluntary death of Monyma his wife, Statira and Roxane his daughters; his ſonne Pharnaces (like to taſte of the ſame cup) won to his part his fathers Armie, ſent againſt him, with which he purſued his father ſo hotly, that hee, hauing denounced a heauy curſe vpon him, entred amongſt his Wiues, Concubines, and Daughters, and gaue them poyſon, pledging them in the ſame liquor; which his body accuſtomed to his Antidotes, eaſily ouer-came, and therefore was faine to intreat another to open a bloudy paſſage for that his cruell ſoule. A man (ſaith Oroſius) of all men moſt ſuperſtitious, alway hauing with him Philoſophers, and men expert in all Arts, now threeſcore and foureteene yeeres old. The Religion in Pontus was little differing from the Greekes. Wee read of the Sacrifices of this King to Ceres, and to Iupiter Bellipotens, in which the King brought the firſt wood to the fire. He powred alſo thereon Hony, Milke, Wine, Oyle, and after made a Feaſt. In honour of Neptune they drowned Chariots, drawne with foure white Horſes, with which (it ſeemed) they would haue him eaſe himſelfe in his Sea-voyages. [o] At the mouth of Pontus was the Temple of Iupiter Iaſius, called Panopeum: and nigh thereto, a Promontory ſacred to Diana, ſometime an Iland, ioyned to the Continent by an Earthquake. Hereabouts was the Caue Acheruſium, whoſe bottomleſſe bottome was thought to reach to Hell.

PAPHLAGONIA.

I may in the next place set downe Paphlagonia, which, as it fareth with such as haue mightie Neighbours, can scarcely finde her proper limits. Some p reckon it to Galatia, before described; and sometimes Pontus hath shared it: and either the force of Armes, or bountie of Emperours hath assigned it at other times to Phrygia, Cilicia, or other parts, the bounds thereof are thus deliuered: Pontus confineth on the North; on the East, the Riuer Halys; on the South, Phrygia and Galatia; on the West, Bithynia. Of the people hereof, called Heneti, some q deriue the Veneti of Italy. They now call it Roni. It had the name Paphlagonia of Paphlagon, the sonne of Phineus. The Mount Olgasys is very high, and in the same are many Paphlagonian Temples. Sandaracurgium is another Mountaine, made hollow by the Metall-miners, which were wont to bee slaues redeemed from capitall Sentence, who heere exchanged that speedie death for one more lingring. So deadly is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and ending, of this Idoll of the World: which the Spaniards haue verified in the West, by the destruction of another world. Vitruuius tells of a Fountaine in Paphlagania, as it were mixed with Wine, whereof they which drinke without other liquor, proue drunken.

PHRYGIA.

PHRYGIA is diuided into the greater, which lyeth Eastward; and the lesse, called also Hellespontiaca and Troas, and of some Epictetus. The greater PHRYGIA hath not many Cities. Here stood Midaium, the Royall Seat of Mydas, and Apamia, the Phrygian Metropolis. d Phrygia is called of the riuer Phryx, which diuideth it from Caria. Herodotus telleth that e the Phrygians were accounted the most ancient of all people; for the triall whereof Psammetichus King of Egypt had shut vp, without societie of any humane creature, two children, causing onely goats to bee admitted to suckle them, who after long time pronounced bec, which they had learned of the goates; but because that (with the Phrygians) signified bread, therefore they accounted the Phrygians first authors of mankinde. Before Deucalions floud, Nannacus f is reported to raigne there, and foreseeing the same, to haue assembled his people into the Temple, with supplications and prayers. Hence grew the prouerbe to say, A thing was from Nannacus, which was exceeding old. Many antiquities are told of their gods; whose Theologie thus is recited g by Eusebius. The Phrygians tell, that Meon was the most ancient King of Phrygia, the Father of Cybele, who inuented the pipe called Syrinx, and was named the Mountaine mother, beloued of Marsyas. But when as Attis had raised her belly, her father slaying him, and his fellowes, shee enraged with madnesse, ranne vp and downe the countrey. Marsyas roamed with her, who after, being ouercome in a Musicall contention of Apollo, was flayed quicke. After these things did Apollo loue Cybele, with whom she wandred to the Hyperboreans: and by his command the bodie of Attis was buried, and Cybele obtained diuine Honours. Hence it is, that euen to this day the Phrygians bewayle the young mans death. In Pessinus a City of Phrygia (after reckoned to Galatia) they erected a Temple to Attis, and Cybele. After the death of Hyperion, the children of Cœlus parted parted the Kingdome amongst them, the most famous of which were Atlas and Saturne: to the first of which befell the parts adioyning to the Ocean. He had great skill in Astronomy. Of his seuen daughters were procreated many of the Gods and Heroes: and of Maia the eldest, and Iupiter, was Mercury begotten. Saturne the sonne of Atlas being couetous and wicked, married Cybele his sister, and had by her Iupiter. They tell of another Iupiter, brother of Cœlus and King of Crete (but there and here they are so intangled with Fables, that the least inquirie hath most ease, and no lesse certaintie.) This Cretan held the Empire of the World, and had ten Sonnes, whom they call Curetes; his Sepulchre they shew to this day. Saturne (the Brother of Atlas) reigned in Italy and Sicilia, till Iupiter his Sonne dispossessed him, who proued a seuere Prince to the wicked, and bountifull to the good. Thus much Eusebius of the Phrygian Diuinitie out of their owne Legends, the Mysteries whereof he after vnfoldeth. Other Tales they had, as that Minerua killed there a fire breathing beast; of Philemon and Baucis, and such like, mentioned by the Poets. Meander making Warres with the Pessinuntians, vowed for Sacrifice whatsoeuer he first met after hee returned with Conquest, which he performed on Archelaus his Sonne, ouercomming, [h] saith one, Pietie with Pietie. Impious is that Pietie which destroyeth Humanitie, and Deuillish crueltie both in the Idoll and Idolater; as appeared also in the euent (if our Story bee true) the father rewarding such Pietie with greater Impietie on himselfe, and casting himselfe into the riuer, left his name thereunto. The like is told of the Riuers Sagaris and Scamander. Hercules when he went with the Argonautes to Colchos, came on shoare on Phrygia to amend his Oare, and being thirstie sent his sweeting Hylas to the riuer for water, who falling therein was drowned, whereupon he (leauing his cõpanions) wandred in the woods, bemoning his Hylas.

h Gramay.

About these times Tantalus [i] liued in these parts, a man besides other vices exceedingly couetous, not sparing the Temples of the Gods. Hence arose the Fable, that he was punished in Hell with perpetuall hunger and thirst, whiles pleasant waters and dainty fruits did offer themselues to his mouth, but when he would haue tasted them, fled from him. So indeed doth Mammon torment his followers, making them to want as well that which they haue, as that which they haue not, the Medicine being the increaser of the Disease, as when fire is quenched with Oile: like Gardners Asses laden with good herbs (a burthen to them, food for others) themselues glad to feed on Thistles. And how many Tantali do we daily see enduring a hunger and thirst in the midst of their abundance? a monstrous and vnnaturall sickenesse, to hunger after that which they haue: yet cannot, yet will not feed on; a Dropsie-thirst, saue that they dare not drinke that, which they haue and thirst. Vnworthy of that life, which he sacrificeth to that, which neuer had the dignitie to be mortall: vnworthy that body, which he pineth with plenty; or that soule, which he damneth for a fancie of hauing; or that nature of man which he confineth to the Gallies, to the Mynes, in the seruice of a piece of earth, vnworthy of the name of Christian, whose Christ was, to one of his [k] Fore-fathers, worth thirty pence, but now this will sell him for three halfe pence, for a piece of bread; yea, like Æsops Dog, for the shadow of a piece of Bread: vnworthy of any thing, saue that his couetise, to be his Tempter, his Tormentor, his Fury, his Deuill: Once, pitty it is, that hee prizeth a Halter so deare, else would he rid the World of a burthen, and himselfe of his worthlesse life. But whither hath Tantalus carried me? Take heed (Reader) he doe not carry thee further, or thou him, beyond words: They say he would haue sacrificed his Sonne Pephilops, had not Diuine power releeued him: thou art like to find him Tantalus still. What the Poets tell of Ganymedes euery one knowes; of Niobe famous for her sonnes & daughters, which she lost all in one day: of Midas, (another Tantalus) whose couetousnesse became a new Alchymie [l] to turne all into Gold. And how doth this two-fold Alchymie gull the world? the one making with vaine hopes a rich estate become poore, the other with ful haps making all Gold but the Man; onely the Romane [m] Alchymist is Master of that Art which the former professe, that turnes so easily a little Lead into so much good Gold: onely the wiseman, wise in the latter to be Master of himselfe & his wealth, not a slaue to passion or pelfe. And yet Midas in a publike calamity (hapning by an Earthquake, which swallowed vp Houses) warned by an Oracle, to cast into those gaping jawes of the earth that which was most precious: hurled therein much treasure (what could hee thinke more precious: and how much more easily would many a Mydas haue hurled in himselfe?) But the Earth not yet satisfied, would not close vp her mouth, till his sonne Anchurus (esteeming man to be most precious) leaped in, and the reconciled Element receiued an Altar in witnesse of his haughty courage. There were many Phrygian Kings named Midas.

fetcheth out of Scythia, and maketh him Midas his Maſter in Geography and Philoſophy: The diligent attendance of the Scholer was occaſion to that Fable of his long eares: the learning of the Maſter gaue him diuine Honours.

p Ar. l. 2. In Phrygia on the riuer Sangarius ſtood Gordie (or as Arrianus p calleth it, Gordion) of which he reporteth, that when Alexander came thither, he had a great deſire to ſee the Tower, in which was the palace of Gordius & Midas, that he might behold the ſhafts or beame of Gordius his Cart, and the indiſſoluble knot faſtned thereto. For great was the fame thereof amongſt the next adioyning people: that Gordius was one of the ancient inhabitants of Phrygia, hauing a little place of ground, and two yokes of Oxen, the one hee vſed to the plough, the other to the Waine or Cart. And while he was one day at plough, an Eagle ſate vpon the yoke, and there continued till euening. Gordius aſtoniſhed at ſo ominous a token, went to the Telmiſſean Sooth-ſayers (for to the Telmiſſean, both men and women, this diuining ſcience ſeemed hereditarie) and there met with a Virgin, whom hee acquainted with this accident: ſhe counſelled him to returne thither, and to ſacrifice to Iupiter the King, for the augury was good. Gordius entreated her company with him, that ſhe might inſtruct him how to ſacrifice, which ſhee granted vnto him, and afterwards her ſelfe alſo in Marriage. Theſe had betwixt them Midas, a proper ſtripling. Now a ſedition hapning among the Phrygians, they conſulted with the Oracle, which anſwered that a Cart ſhould bring them a King, that ſhould end that ſedition. And whiles they were muſing on this anſwere, Midas came riding in his Cart (with his parents) into the throng, and was by the Phrygians forthwith acknowledged King. The Car in memory thereof, was hanged vp to Iupiter in the Tower (or Temple of Iupiter, ſo Curtius calleth it) with thankes for that Eagle (Iupuers bird) ſent before to foreſignifie thus much to his Father. The knot faſtned vnto it, was of the barke of the Cornell or dog-tree, wouen with ſuch Art, that a man could neither finde beginning nor end thereof. Bruted it was amongſt the Phrygians, that hee which could vntie it ſhould be Lord of all Aſia. Alexander turning it to and fro, and with vaine curioſitie ſearching how to looſen it, at laſt with his ſword chopped it in ſunder, leſt he ſhould otherwiſe leaue ſome ſcruple in the hearts of his Souldiers. Thus farre Arrianus.

In the LESSER PHRYGIA, (of a Hill therein, called Idæa; of a Riuer, Xanthe, of the Kings, Troas, Dardania, &c.) ſtood that eye of Aſia, and Starre of the Eaſt, called Ilium or TROY. Of which, all that I can ſay, will but obſcure the renowne and glory which all Heathen Antiquitie haue by an vniuerſall conſent of Poeſie and Hiſtory giuen to it. And what Greeke or Latine Author hath not mentioned her ruines, and done exequies to her Funerall? Dardanus is named her founder, after whom, and his ſucceeding ſonne Erichthonius, Tros ruled, who erected the Temple of Pallas, and reedified the Citie, leauing thereto his name. To him ſucceeded Ilus, and after him his ſonne Laomedon, whom Neptune and Apollo helped in repayring the Citie: which Hercules ſacked, and Priamus reſtored, but to a greater loſſe, by the Grecians tenne yeeres ſiege, and one nights ſpoyle. Dares, r and Dictys, ſuppoſed Hiſtorians of thoſe times, beſides Homer, and the Greekes and Latines his followers, haue more then enough related the particulars. Heſione, ſiſter to Priamus, was by Hercules giuen to Telamon for the firſt entring the walls. Her did Priam demand in vaine by Antenor, and Æneas his Ambaſſadours. Paris, otherwiſe called Alexander, one of the fiftie children of Priamus and Hecuba, was ſent in the ſame buſineſſe, and returned with Helena, the wife of Menelaus a Lacedemonian Prince, who conſulting with the other Grecian Lords for her recouery, firſt Diomedes and Vlyſſes were ſent to intreat; after a thouſand ſayle of ſhips, to force her reſtitution: which after a tedious warre, with much loſſe on the one ſide, and vtter ruine on the other, was effected. The league of the Greekes was made by Calchas, who diuiding a Boare in two parts, cauſed the Princes with their ſwords drawne, and beſprinkled with blould to paſſe betweene, ſwearing deſtruction to Priamus and the Troians. The Religion of Phrygia and Troy, and all theſe Grecian parts of Aſia were little, (if little) differing from the Greeke ſuperſtitions: of which in our Europe-diſcoueries wee are to relate. Therefore adiourning a larger diſcourſe till then, wee are a little to mention heere their deuotions. In Troy were the Temples of Iupiter, Herceus, at whoſe Altar Priam was ſlaine; of Iupiter Fulminator, of Iuno, Apollo, Minerua, Mercury, Neptune. To Neptune they which ſayled, did ſacrifice a Black Bull and Oxen, whoſe hinder parts were burnt, the inwards they taſted; Rams and Hogges were ſacrificed alſo to him. To Mercury clouen tongues hurled into the fire; To Venus, on the Hill Ida; To Scamander, to the Nymphes in caues. To the dead, alſo they ſacrificed Black Sheepe ouer a ditch or hole in the ground, with wine, water, and flower, thinking that the ſoules dranke the bloud. They had whole flockes ſacred to the Gods, vntouched by men. They obſerued auguries, thunders, dreames, Oracles of Apollo, and other ſuperſtitions. ſelues a little before in Scamander, vſing theſe words to the Riuer; Take, O Scamander, my Virginitie. This gaue occaſion to one Cimon to defloure Callirrhoe, hauing hidden himſelfe in the reeds, and vpon that watch-word lifted vp his Reedie-head, and forced his Maiden-head, which cauſed the ceaſing of that fooliſh and ſuperſtitious cuſtome. But of all their ſuperſtition, the moſt famous was their fatall Palladium (a name giuen to all Images, which ſuperſtition beleeued not made with his hand,) was ſaid to haue fallen from heauen a Peſſinus, or (as [t] Apollodorus witneſſeth) at Ilium, at the prayer of Ilus when he built it. For he hauing a pyed Oxe giuen him by the King of Phrygia, and warned by him to build a Citie where that Oxe ſhould lye downe, followed him to this place, where he built a Citie, which hee called of his owne name Ilium; and deſiring Iupiter to ſend him ſome ſigne, found this Palladium the next morning before his Tent. Some [u] ſay Aſius a Philoſopher made it by Magicall Art: Apollodorus addeth, that it moued vp and downe, holding in the right hand a Iauelin; in the left, a Diſtaffe. It was three cubits long. Apollo's Oracle fore-warned, that that Citie ſhould neuer be taken, in whoſe walls it was kept. They hid it therefore in a more ſecret part of the Tower, that it ſhould not be publikely knowne, making many other like it, to deceiue all future deceiuers. A woman-Prieſt attended the holy things in honour thereof, keeping fire continually burning. It was vnlawfull with common hands or eyes to touch or ſee it. And therefore when Ilus ſaued it from flames, the Temple being on fire, he was for his blind zeale puniſhed with blindneſſe; of which, ſoone after hee recouered by diuine indulgence. Vlyſſes ſtole it from them. And thus periſhed that famous Phrygian Citie, if that may be ſaid to periſh which ſtill continueth, farre farre more famous by Homers pen, then Priams Scepter, or Hectors valour.

The ruines thereof are as yet very apparant (according to Bellonius, [x] an eye-witneſſe, his report) the walls of the Citie yet ſtanding, the remnants of her decayed building ſtill, with a kinde of Maieſtie entertaining the beholder: the walls of large circuit, of great ſpongie blacke and hard ſtones, cut foure ſquare. There are yet to be ſeene the ruinous Monuments of the Turrets on the walls. They ſpent foure houres, ſometime on horſe, and ſometime on foot, in compaſſing the walls. Great Marble Tombes of ancient workemanſhip are ſeene without the walls, made cheſt-faſhion: and their couers yet whole. There are alſo extant the ruinous ſhapes of two great Towers; one in the top of the hill, (on the bending whereof the Towne ſtood) the other in the bottome: and another in the middle. Many great Ciſterns made to receiue raine water are yet whole. There are the ruines alſo of Churches built there, by the ſometime inhabiting Chriſtians. The ſoile about it is dry and barren: the Riuers (ſo much chaunted) Xanthus and Simois are ſmall rilles, in Summer quite dry: as alſo Mela teſtifieth, famâ quàm naturâ maiora flumina. A later Trauellers [y] ſaith, That they are not ſo contemptible as made by Bellonius, who perhaps miſtaketh others for them, there being ſundry riuolets that deſcend from the mountaines. He addeth that theſe ruines are ſtill ruined, and beare not that forme leſſened daily by the Turkes, who carried the pillars and ſtones vnto Conſtantinople, to adorne the buildings of the great Baſſaes, as they now doe from Cyzicus.

This Ilium (whoſe Sepulchre only Bellonius hath ſeene) is not in that place where old Ilium ſtood, but thirtie furlongs Eaſtward, if Strabo [z] be receiued, yea it changed the place and ſituation often, and here at laſt abode, by warning of the Oracle, which alſo now had his Fates as well as Ilium. A ſmall Towne was this later Ilium, hauing in it the Temple of Pallas, which Alexander in his time graced, enriching the Temple with offerings, and the place with name of a Citie, with building and immunitie. After his victory ouer the Perſians, hee ſent them a fauourable Epiſtle, with promiſe to build them a ſumptuous Temple, and there to inſtitute ſacred games, which Lyſimachus after his death in great part performed, peopling it from the neighbour Cities. The Romans alſo planted there a Colonie, when as Lyſimachus afore had walled it, and built the Temple. Fimbria, in the warres againſt Mithridates, hauing treacherouſly ſlaine the Conſull Valerius Flaccus, and ſeeking to enter, vpon deniall aſſailed it, and in the eleuenth day entred by force; glorying that he had done as much in eleuen dayes, as Agamemnon with a thouſand ſaile of Greeks, had done in ten yeeres. Not ſo much, replied an Ilian, for Hector was not heere to defend the Citie. Cæſar, emulous of Alexanders attempts, and deriuing his pedigree from Iulus, confirmed their former libertie, adding a new Region to their Territory. Mela telleth a ſtrange wonder of the Hill Ida: Soone after midnight they which looke from the top therof, diſcerne certain diſperſed fires, which as the light approcheth are more vnited, and at laſt gathered into one flame, like a fire, which by degrees groweth into a round and huge globe, and then the degrees diminiſhing in quantitie, but in qualitie of like increaſing, is at laſt taken vp into the Chariot of the Sunne.

Not farre hence is the Citie and Hauen Priapus, so called of the beastly God: like to Orthanes and Conisalus and Tychon, drunken Gods of the Athenians. This God or Deuill (of more iniquitie, then antiquitie) was not knowne of Hesiod. This Region was called Adrastia [h] of King Adrastus, who first built a Temple of Nemesis, calling it Adrastia. In the countrey adioyning was an Oracle of Apollo Actæus, and Diana: whose Oratorie being demolished, the stones was carried to Parium, where was built an Altar, famous for faireneſse and greatneſse. Of this Adastria was a Temple at Cyzicus.

This Cyzicus was a Citie of MYSIA-MINOR; (for there is another Mysia, called Maior, according to Ptolomeys [i] diuision:) the former is called Olympica, the later by [k] Galen Hellespontica: there is another Mysia in Europe, which Volateran distinguisheth, calling it Mæsia. Some ascribe this Cyzicus to Bithynia; We list not to vmpire betwixt Geographers, but to relate our Historie, [m] which telleth that this Citie was renowned for Antiquitie, giuen by Iupiter in dowrie to Proserpina; whom therefore the Inhabitants worship. The greatneſse, beautie, lawes, and other excellencies of Cyzicus let others shew you: their Temple I cannot but stay to view with wonder, [n] whose pillars are measured foure cubits thicke, fiftie high, each of one stone: in which, the whole building was of polished stone, and euerie stone was ioyned to his fellow with a thread [o] or line of gold: the Image of Iupiter was of Iuory, crowned with a Marble Apollo. Such was the beautie of the worke, and costlinesse of the matter, that the earth, whether with loue seeking to embrace it, or with iust hatred for the idolatrous curiositie, swallowed vp both it and the Citie in an Earthquake. The like befell to Philadelphia, another Mysian Citie (one of the seuen Churches [p] to which Iohn writ:) and to Magnesia [q] in the same Region. Neere to Cyzicus was the Hill Dyndima: and thereon Cybels Temple built by the Argonautes: who had also vsed a certaine stone for an anchor, which they fixed sure at Cyzicus with Lead, becausе it had often plaid the fugitiue, [r] called therefore the fugitiue Stone. The Mysians for their great deuotion were called smoke-climers, a fit name for all superstitious. They had in honour the [s] Nymph Brythia: vnder colour of religion the Parians cousened the Lampsacens of a great part of their territory. Of this City was Priapus aforesaid, a man monstrous in lusts, admirable in his plentifull issue; hated of the men, (howsoeuer of the women beloued) and by them exiled to a wilde life in the field, till a grieuous disease sent amongst them, caused them, by warning of the Dodonæan Oracle to recall him; Fit seruitour for such a god. Hence the tale of his huge Genitals, and of his Garden-deitie. Offering to rauish a Virgin at the time of her wedding, he was scared by the braying of an Asse, a creature for this cause consecrated to sacrifices. Lettice most sutable to such lips.

A little hence standeth Abydus, [t] where was a famous Temple of Venus, in remembrance of their libertie recouered by a Harlot. Here did Xerxes ioyne Asia to Europe by a bridge, professing warres not against the Greekes alone, but against the Elements. To Mount Athos [u] did this Mount Atheos write his menacing Letters. which after gathered themselues close into one top, two hundred foot high, and fifteene cubits. Apollo Cillæus had a Temple dedicated to him at Cilla; another was erected at Chrysa to Apollo Smynthius; and twentie furlongs thence, another to Diana Astirena; another (with a sacred Caue) at Andira to the mother of the Gods: this Caue reached vnder the earth to Palea, a hundred and thirtie furlongs. Attalus reigned in these parts, who furnished the Library of Pergamus with two hundred thousand Volumes, for the writing wherof those parchment skins were inuented, therefore called to this day Pergamenæ. Of this name Attalus were three of their Kings, the last of which made the Romans his heires. Heere was that cruell Edict of Mithridates published to murther the Romans, whereby many, driuen to seeke helpe of Æsculapius in his Temple at Pergamus, found him either vnmercifull, or vnskilfull to cure them, although his Physick-shop was in this Citie. Here were inuented (by King Attalus) Tapestrie hangings, called Aulæa of Aula his hall, which was hanged therewith. Here was also a yeerely spectacle of the Cock-fight. South-wards from hence along the Sea-coast, trendeth Æolis: whereunto adioyneth LYDIA, called [p] anciently Asia, and the Inhabitants, Asiones. It was called Mæonia of Manes their first King, who begat Cotys, and he, Attys, and Asius, of whom some say) Asia taketh name. Cambletes [q] a Lydian King (saith Athenæus) was so addicted to gourmandize, that in the night he did teare and eate his wife; and finding her hand (in the morning) in his mouth, the thing being noysed abroad, he killed himselfe. The same Author telleth [r] of King Andramytes, that he made women Eunuches for his attendants: that the Lydians were so effeminate, that they might not endure the Sun to looke vpon them, for which cause they had their shadie bowers: that in a place, therefore called Impure, they force women and maidens to their lust, which Omphale (who had indured this violence, comming after to bee their Queene) reuenged by as vniust iustice. For assembling all the seruants or slaues, shee shut vp among them their masters daughters, permitting them to their pleasures. Shee was daughter of Iardanus of the posteritie of Attis, who set Hercules his taske to spin amongst her maides. Her husband Timolus deflowred Arriphe in Diana's Temple. Of him haply was named the hill Timolus, which yeelded golden sands to the Riuer Pactolus. Halyattis [s] was after a long succession the Lydian King, father to Cræsus, whose Sepulchre was an admirable Monument, being at the bottome stone; elsewhere, earth: built by men and women, slaues, and hired persons. It is sixe furlongs in compasse, and two hundred foot; and a thousand and three hundred foot broad. All the daughters of the Lydians prostitute themselues, and thereby get their liuing and dowrie. These were the first inuenters of coyning money: the first Huesters and Pedlers: the first players at Dice, Balls, Chesse, in the time of Attys the first: driuen to this shift by famine, which when they knew not otherwise to redresse, they deuised these games, passing the time of euery second day with these pastimes, then beguiling their emptie bellies, and (according to their ominous inuention) now not so much the companions, as the harbengers and forerunners of emptinesse, although some contrarie to their first originall, vse them to ease their fulnesse. Thus did the Lydians liue (if Herodotus be beleeued) two and twentie yeeres, eating and playing by course, till they were faine to diminish their multitudes by sending Colonies vnder Tyrrhenus vnto that part of Italy, which [t] of him receiued that name. Here on the winding streames of Meander (or nigh thereto) was situate Magnesia, (not that by Hermus) whose Inhabitants worshipped the Dyndimene Mother of the Gods. But the old Citie and Temple perishing and a new builded, the Temple was named of Diana Leucophryne, exceeding that of Ephesus in workmanship, but exceeded in greatnesse and multitude of oblations. And yet this was the greatest in Asia, except the Ephesian and Dindymene. Of Tralles a neighbouring Citie was Metrodorus the Priest of Iupiter Laryssæus. In the way from thence to Nyssa, is a Village of the Nyssaens, Acharaca. There is the Plutonium (compassed with a Groue) and the Temple of Pluto and Iuno, and the Caue Charonium, admirable to the view, ouer-hanging the Groue, which it threatneth, seeming so deuoure it. They say, that sicke men, which are deuoted to those Gods, goe thither, and in a street neere the Caue, stay with such as are expert in those mysteries, who sleeping for them, inquire the course to cure them by dreames. These inuoking diuine remedies many times lead them into the Caue, where abiding many dayes with fastings, and sweatings, they sometimes intend to their owne dreames, by the counsells of the Priests. To others this place is pestilent and inaccessible. Here are yeerely festiuals solemnized, and then most of all are these deuotions practised. Youths and striplings naked and anoynted, draw or lead a Bull into the same Caue with great speed, who falls anon dead. After Omphale, Hercules posteritie, which he had by her, raigned: carrying for their royall Ensigne that Battle-axe, which Hercules had taken from Hippolita the Amazon. Candaules wearie of the burthen, gaue it to one of his Courtiers to beare, interpreted an ominous presage of that which happened. Easie to iudge his choyce, by which Hercules his race failed. Of him descended Crœsus, whose History is knowne. Him did Cyrus ouerthrow, [y] and had set him on a pyle of wood to burne him, who then cryed Solon, Solon, Solon: which Cyrus not vnderstanding, caused him to be asked, why he so called: he answered, That sometimes drunken with wealth and pleasure, he thought himselfe happy, but then was taught by Solon, not to iudge any happy till his end; which lesson hee now learned to his cost: to his good indeed; for Cyrus for this pardoned his life, now the second time saued: which a little before a Souldier in taking the Citie had bereaued, had not naturall affection in his sonne (before this time dumbe) violently inforced Nature to loosen the instruments of speech, and proclaime, It is the King. Thus had the Oracle propheſied, that the day would be dismall and disastrous to the father, when the sonne should speake (whereto hee had before in vaine sought helpe of God and men) and he could speake freely all his life after. And this was all that Crœsus by his sumptuous [z] presents, and superstitious deuotion could get of Apollo, which had foretold him, what he himselfe had no power to auert or alter, not to speake of his enigmaticall answeres, snares, not instructions; nocuments, not documents vnto him.

Of Ionia and other Countries in that Chersonesus.

IONIA.

IONIA is situate on the Icarian Sea, ouer against the Iland Chios. The Inhabitants are accounted Athenian Colonies (whereas Athens may rather seeme to bee Ionian) deducing their name from [a] Ion the sonne of Creusa and Xuthus. But more probable is [b] their opinion which deriue them from Iaman, as is [c] before obserued by vs. Of the Ionians in Asia, were reckoned ten principall Cities in the Continent, Miletus, Myus, Priene, Ephesus, Colophon, Lebedus, Teos, Clazomenæ, Phocæa, Erythræa, besides Chios and Samos in the Ilands, to which they imparted their names.

The Ionians had their common Sacrifices and Ceremonies at the Promontorie of Mycale, generally by all the Ionians dedicated to Neptune Heliconius, erecting there vnto him a Temple: the place was called Panionium, and the feast in which those sacrifices were offered, Panionia. To those twelue Cities, [d] Strabo mentioning the founders of them, addeth also Smyrna, and saith, that they were called to the Panionian solemnities by the Ephesians, who were sometime called Smyrnæans of Smyrna the Amazon, who is named the founder of Ephesus. Against those Smyrnæans the Sardians warred, and would on no condition raise their siege, except the Smyrnæan Matrons were permitted to their lusts. [e] The maide-seruant of one Philarchus amongst them deuised, that those of her condition might in their Mistresses habite be sent, to saue their Masters beds, which was accomplished.

EPHESVS.

As for EPHESVS, the place was designed by Oracle for the building thereof, which warned them there to build, where a Fish and a Bore should shew them. It happened, that as certaine Fishermen at the sacred fountaine Hypeleus were broyling their fish, one of them leaped with the coales into an heape of straw, which thereby was fired; and a Bore which lay couered therein, leaping out, ranne from thence as farre as Trachea, and there fell downe dead of a wound which they gaue him, grunting out his last gaspe, where Pallas after was honoured with a Temple. Greater then Pallas and her swinish deuotion, was that [f] Great Diana of the Ephesians, (so proclaimed in the madnesse of their zeale) and that Image which came downe from Iupiter, which all Asia and the world worshipped. This Image (as [g] Plinie writeth) was thought by some to be of Ebonie; but Mutianus thrice Consul, writ, That it was of the Vine, neuer changed in seuen alterations or restitutions, which the Temple receiued. It had many holes filled with Spikenard, the moysture whereof might fill and close vp the rifts. The doores of the Temple were of Cypreſſe, [h] which after foure hundred yeeres were as freſh as if they had beene new. The roofe of the Temple was Cedar. The Image, which ſuperſtition ſuppoſed came from Iupiter, was made (ſaith the ſame Mutianus) by one Canetia. The Temple (reputed one of the worlds ſeuen wonders) was firſt the building of the Amazons, as Solinus affirmeth. But [i] Pauſanias reproueth Pindarus, for affirming that the Amazons had built it, when they made their Expedition againſt Theſeus and the Athenians: for at that time (ſaith he) the women going from Thermodon, ſacrificed to the Epheſian Diana in their way, as they had done before in the times of Hercules and of Bacchus. Not the Amazons therefore, but one Cræſus of that Country, and Epheſus (ſuppoſed the ſonne of the Riuer Cayſter) founded it. Of him the Citie alſo receiued her name. About the Temple dwelt both diuers other ſuppliants, and women of the Amazonian race. Theſe were ſpared by Androclus the ſonne of Codrus, who here planted his Athenian Colonie, and chaſed out the Leleges, which before were the Inhabitants; who being ſlaine in this Expedition, his Sepulchre remained in Pauſanias his time, on which was ſet a man armed. Xerxes when hee burned all other Temples in Aſia, ſpared this, vncertaine whether for admiration or deuotion; moſt certaine, a bootleſſe clemencie. For [k] Heroſtratus, to lengthen the memory of his name with deteſtation of his wickednesſe, fired this Temple on that day in which Alexander was borne at Pella. Diana forſooth, (who in her Midwife-Myſterie is called alſo Iuno Lucina) in her officious care to helpe Olympias in her trauell, was then abſent. It was after reſtored to a greater excellencie by Dinocrates, or (as Strabo termes him) Chermocrates, who was alſo the Architect of Alexandria. Some [l] affirme, That two hundred and twentie yeeres were ſpent in building this Temple, by all Aſia: Plinie ſaith, foure hundred. It was built on a Mariſh, becauſe of Earthquakes (which are ſaid to be more common in Aſia then other parts) being founded on Coles, the ſecond foundation Wooll. There were therein an hundred twentie ſeuen Pillars, the workes of ſo many Kings, threeſcore foot in height, and ſixe and thirtie of them very curiouſly wrought. The Temple was foure hundred twentie fiue foot long, two hundred and twentie broad; of the Epheſians holden in ſuch veneration, that when Cræſus had begirt them with a ſtraight ſiege, [m] they deuoted their Citie to their Goddeſſe, tying the wall thereof with a rope to the Temple. It was enriched and adorned with gifts beyond value. It was full of the workes of Praxiteles and Thraſo.

The Prieſts were Eunuches, [n] called Megalobyzi, greatly honoured, and had with them ſacred Virgins. Some [o] call theſe, or elſe another order of Diana's Prieſts, Eſtiatores and Eſſenæ, that is, Good fellowes (after the appellation of this bad age) which by yeerely courſes had a peculiar diet aſſigned them, and came in no priuate houſe. All the Ionians reſorted to Epheſus, [p] at Diana's feſtiuall, which with daunces and other pompe they ſolemnized, with their wiues and children, as they had done before at Delos: the Temple had priuiledge of Sanctuarie, which Alexander extended to a furlong, Mithridates to a flight-ſhot, Antonius added part of the Citie: But Auguſtus diſanulled the ſame, that it ſhould no longer bee a harbour for villaines. This the Romans finde (ſaith a [q] Roman Pope relating this Hiſtorie) among whom are ſo many Sanctuaries, as Cardinals houſes, in which theeues and ruffians haue patronage, which make the Citie (otherwiſe quiet and noble) a denne of theeues. A lake named Selinuſius, and another which floweth into it, were Diana's patrimonie, which by ſome Kings being taken from her, were after by the Romans reſtored. And when the Publicans had ſeized the profits, Artimedorus was ſent in Ambaſſage to Rome, where hee recouered them to Diana, for which cauſe they dedicated to him a golden Image in the Temple. In the midſt of the lake was the Kings Chappell, accounted the worke of Agamemnon. Alexander [r] not onely reſtored the Epheſians to their Citie, which for his ſake they had loſt, and changed the gouernment into a popular ſtate, but beſtowed alſo the tributes, which before they had paied to the Perſians, vpon Diana, and cauſed them to be ſlaine which had robbed the Temple, and had ouerthrowne the Image of Philip his father therein, and ſuch of them as had taken Sanctuarie in the Temple he cauſed to be fetched out and ſtoned. While hee ſtaied at Epheſus, hee ſacrificed to Diana with very ſolemne pompe, all his Armie being arranged in battell array. But this Temple of Diana, together with their Diana is periſhed: But neuer ſhall that Truth periſh, which Paul writ in his Epiſtle to them; for obſeruing which by Chriſt himſelfe in another Epiſtle written by S. Iohn, they are commended; and which in a Councell there holden, was confirmed againſt the Hereſie of Neſtorius and Celeſtius. But alas, that golden Candleſticke (as was threatned) is now almoſt by Greekiſh ſuperſtition and Turkiſh tyrannie remoued thence: a Biſhop with ſome remnants of a Church ſtill continuing.

The Epheſians were obſeruers of curious Arts, which not onely Luke [s] mentioneth, but the prouerbe alſo confirmeth [t], Epheſiæ literæ: ſo they called the ſpells, whereby they made themſelues in wreſtling, and other conflicts, inuincible. The ſumme of thoſe Magicall bookes burned burned by them, Luke rateth at 50000. pieces of siluer, which Budæus summeth at 5000. Crownes. The many Temples [u] of Venus at Ephesus, are not worth memorie. Memorable is the History of an Ephesian maid, [x] who, when Brennus inuaded Asia, promised him her loue (which he much desired) and withall, to betray the Citie to him, if hee would giue her all the Iewels and Attire of the women; which the Souldiers were commanded to doe, who heaped their gold so fast vpon the Damosell, according to their command, that shee was therewith couered and slaine. The Asiarchæ, which Luke [y] nameth, Beza [z] saith were certaine Priests, whose office it was to set forth publike playes and games in honor of their Gods; as also were the Syriarchæ. The Ephesians, [a] as all other Ionians, were much addicted to nicenes and sumptuousnesse of attire, for which, & other their delicacies, they grew into a prouerbe.

The Ionians had other places and Temples amongst them, famous for deuotion and antiquitie, such as no where else are to be seene, as the Temple and Oracle of Apollo at Gemini. Myus [b] had a small arme of the Sea, whose waters by the means of Meander sayling, the soyle brought forth an innumerable multitude of fleas, which forced the Inhabitants to forsake their Citie, and with bagge and baggage to depart to Miletus. And in my time (saith Pausanias) nothing remaineth of Myus, in Myus, but Bacchus Temple. The like befell to the Atarnitæ neere to Pergamus. The Persians burnt the Temple of Pallas at Phocea, and another of Iuno in Samos, the remaines whereof are worthy admiration: the Erythræan Temple of Hercules, and of Pallas at Prienæ; that for antiquitie, this for the Image. The Image of Hercules is said to be brought in a ship which came (without mans helpe) to the Cape, where the Chians and Erythræans laboured each to bring the same to their owne Citie. But one Phormio a Fisher-man of Erythræa was warned in a dreame, to make a rope of the haires cut off from the heads of the Erythræan Matrons, by which their husbands should draw the same to the Towne. The women would not yeeld; but certaine Thracian women which had obtained their freedome, granted their haire to this purpose, to whom therefore this priuiledge was granted, to enter into Hercules Temple, a thing denied to all other the Dames of Erythræa. The rope stil remaineth: and the Fisher-man which before was blinde, recouered his sight. In this Towne also is Mineruaes Temple, and therein a huge Image of Wood, sitting on a Throne, holding with both hands a Distaffe. There are the Graces and Houres, formed of white Marble. At Smyrna was the Temple of Æsculapius: and nigh to the Springs of the Riuer Meles, a Caue, in which they say Homer composed his Poems. Thus much Pausanias. The Ionian [c] letters were more resembling the Latine, then the present Greeke are, and were then common, as in our first Booke is shewed in our Phœnician Relations.

At Miletus, a mad phrensie had once possessed their Virgins, where by it came to passe, that they in great multitudes hanged themselues. Neither cause appeared, nor remedie: Needs must they goe whom the Deuill driues. Whom [d] neither the sweetnesse of life, bitternesse of death, teares, intreaties, offers, custodie of friends could moue, Modestie detained from proceeding in this immodest butcherie: and which is more to be wondred at, a Posthume modestie, which could not be borne, till they were dead. For a Law was made, That the naked bodies of such as had thus strangled themselues, should bee drawne through the streets: which contumely, though it were but a Gnat to those Camels, which with the halter they swallowed, yet strained they at it, and it could not bee digested, but stayed their fury. Before the Troian warre, was Hercules famous at Militus. The Ionians were subiect to the Assyrians: after that to the Egyptians; next to the Lydians, Persians, and the other Empires, which successiuely followed.

From Ephesus to Colophon are seuentie furlongs. This Towne grew into a Prouerbe; for [e] though their excellencie in Horse-manship they vsually made the victorie (otherwise doubtfull) to bee certaine on that side which entertained them. Before Colophon was the Groue of Apollo-Clarius. And here dyed Calchas, that famous wizard for griefe, that when vpon his demand Mopsus had certainly answered how many Pigs were in the belly of a Sow, by him propounded: Calchas could not doe the like, when Mopsus asked of the number of Figs growing on a Fig-tree thereby.

Beyond Clazomenæ is the Temple of Apollo, and Smyrna famous in those blinde times, for the Temple and Statue of Homer; since, for the Prelacie of Polycarpus, whom our Lord himselfe so highly commendeth. Plinie [f] writeth of one in Smyrna, which being a maide, changed her sexe, and became a stripling: of which sort he affirmeth he had seene one in Africa, then liuing when hee writ, which on her marriage day sustained that alteration. Phlegon relateth of Philotis, another Smyrnæan maide, thus made a male. Pontanus telleth the like of a woman at Caieta, married to a Fisher foure yeeres, and of another the wife of Antonio Spensa twelue yeeres, which after married a wife and had children.

And in late times Spaine hath yeelded two such examples; of which I list not to play the Philosopher, whether they were imperfect males, or perfect Hermaphrodites. But to hold on our Asian iourney. Neleus builded Miletus (who also erected the Altar at Possidium.) The Milisian Oracle was sacred to Apollo Didymæus [g] amongst the Branchidæ, who betrayed the treasures of their God to Xerxes the burner of their Temple; and therefore for feare of punishment followed him after his flight. Afterwards the Milesians builded a Temple, which for the exceeding greatnesse remained without roofe, compassed with dwelling-houses, and a Groue, adorned sumptuously with gifts of ancient workemanship. Here was the Legend framed of Branchus and Apollo, whom they called Ulios and Artemis, of healing. Neere vnto the Temple of Neptune at Possidium was Heræum, an old Temple and Oratory, after conuerted into a Store-house, but then also retaining diuers Chappels full of old workes, as was also a Court-yard without, from whence when Antonius had taken three Colosses (the worke of Miro) standing on one basis, Augustus placed there againe Pallas and Hercules, but translated Iupiter to the Capitoll, and built him a Chappell.

Solmissus is not farre from hence, where the Curetes or Priests of Iupiter dulled the eares of Iuno with the sound of weapons, whiles Latona was deliuered. Heere were many Temples, some old, some new. The [h] Curetes or Corybantes, for so they were also termed, were a shauen order of Priests, who, rauished with a sacred fury, played vpon Cimbals, and danced, shaking their heads to and fro, drawing others into the same rage of superstition. These first began their deuotions at Ida, a Hill of Phrygia, and after sailed into Crete, and here with their furious sounds they deliuered Iupiter from Saturnes gullet (who had before couenanted with Titan to kill all his male children) while hee could not by meanes of their noyse heare Iupiters crying. Diodorus Siculus writeth, That Corybantus was the sonne of Iason and Cybele, and with Dardanus brought into Phrygia the rites of the Mother of the Gods, and calleth his Disciples in that sect Corybantes, Natalis Comes [i] trauerseth many opinions about their originall and rites: their dances were in armour.

In the Suburbes of Stomalymne was the Temple of Æsculapius of great reputation, and riches. In it was Antigonus of Apelles workmanship: there was also Venus naked, after dedicated to Cæsar at Rome, as the mother of that Generation by Augustus.

Neere to Bargolia was a Temple of Diana. Mylasa another Citie of Caria had many publike buildings and faire Temples; among the rest, two of Iupiter, (surnamed Osogo) in the one; and in the other, Labrandenus, of Labranda a Village, a little off, which had an ancient Temple of Iupiter Militaris much frequented. The way leading thither was called Sacred, paued sixtie furlongs, through which their Procession passed in pompous solemnitie. The noblest of the Citizens were ordained Priests, which function dured with their liues.

There is a third Temple of Iupiter Carius, common to all the Carians, of which also the Lydians and Mysians are partakers. Strabo reporteth of [k] two Temples, at Stratonica, one at Lagina, sacred to Hecate, where were celebrated yeerely solemnities; the other neere the City of Iupiter Chrysaoreus common to all the Carians, whither they resort to sacrifice, and to consult of common affayres: which their assembly is called Chrysaorean. In Caria was Alabanda, a Citie of no great note, except for that notorious, impious, and impudent flattery of theirs in building a Temple to ROME, and appointing anniuersary games to bee there celebrated, in honour of this new Goddesse; that Citie (since the mother of whoredome to the Christian world) euen then receiuing without scorne of the giuers, or shame of the present, the title of deitie (they are the words of a worthy [l] Historian of ours) at the gift of such a rascall Citie as Alabanda.

the mouth, and looke in, and diue in as long as they could hold their breath, without harme, but not without signes of working passions, whether of diuine inspiration, or reluctation of the naturall forces. No lesse maruellous then the dampe of the ayre, is the hardning qualitie of the waters, which being hot, doe harden themselues into a kinde of stone. [n] Warner mentioneth the like in Hungarie, and Acosta, in Peru. Those Galli heere mentioned with Priests of Cybele, so called of Gallus, a Riuer in Phrygia; [o] the waters whereof, temperately drunken, did exceedingly temper the braine, and take away madnesse; but being sucked in largely, caused madnesse. These Priests drinking heereof vnto madnesse, in that fury gelded themselues, and as their beginning, so was their proceeding also in madnesse, in the execution of their rites, shaking and wheeling their heads like mad-men. Volateran [p] out of Polybistor reporteth, that one Gallus the companion of Attys (both gelded) imposed this name on the Riuer, before called Teria. Of Cybele and Attys we haue spoken before. I adde, that after some, this Attys was a Phrygian youth, which when hee would not listen to Rhea in her amorous suites, gelded himselfe; so consecrating his Priesthood vnto Rhea or Cybele: others [q] affirme, that shee preferred him to that Office, first hauing vowed perpetuall chastitie, and breaking his Vow, was punished with madnesse, in which [r] hee dismembred himselfe, and would also haue killed himselfe, but that by the compassionate Goddesse hee was turned into a Pine-tree. That the Fable! this the History! that these gelded Priests wore also long womannish attire, played on Tymbrels and Cornets, sacrificed to their Goddesse the ninth day of the Moone; at which time they set the Image of the Goddesse on an Asse, and went about the Villages and Streets, begging with the sound of their sacred Tymbrell, corne, bread, drinke, and all necessaries, in honour of their Goddesse: as they did also in the Temples, begging money in her name, with some musicall Instruments; and were therefore called Matragyrtæ. Thus did the Priests of Corona also begge for the maintenance of their Goddesse, with promises of good fortune to their liberall contributors. Lucian in his Asinus relateth the like knaueries of the Priests of Dea Syria. Concerning his Image, Albricus thus purtrayeth it: A Virgin sitting in a Chariot, adorned with varietie of gemmes and metals. Shee is called Mother of the Gods and Giants: these Giants had Serpentine feet, one of which number was Titan, who is also the Sunne, who [s] ayned his Deitie, for not ioyning in conspiracie against the Gods with his brethren. This Chariot was drawne with Lions. Shee wore on her head a Crowne fashioned like a Tower. Neere her is painted Attys a naked boy, whom in iealousie shee gelded. Macrobius applies this to the Sunne: [t] Boccace to the Earth (Mother indeed of the Ethnike Deities, which were earthly, sensuall, deuilish) who addeth to that former description of Albricus, a Scepter in her hand, her garment embroydered with branches and herbs, and the Galli, her gelded attendants with Trumpets. The interpretation whereof, they which will may reade in him, as also in Phornutus, Fulgentius and others, with many other particulars of her Legend. Claudian calls her both Cybele and Cybelle, which name Stephanus thinketh she receiued of a Hil of that name in Phrygia (as doth Hesychius likewise) so was shee called Dyndimena of the Hill Dindymus. I could weary the Reader with long narrations out of Pausanias, Arnobius, Lilius Gyraldus and others, touching these things: but in part wee haue before shewed them in our narrations of Adonis in Phœnicia, & of the Syrian goddesse (to which Phornutus referreth this) and when we come to a larger handling of the Grecian Idolatries, we shall finde more fit occasion.

It is now high time to leaue this (properly called) Asia, and to visit LYCIA, washed by the Sea two hundred miles, wherein the mount Taurus ariseth, hence stretching it selfe Eastward, vnder diuers appellations, vnto the Indian Sea. They were gouerned by common Councell of three and twentie Cities, till the Romans subdued them. Here was Cragus, a Hill with eight Promontories, and a Citie of the same name, from whence arose the Fables of Chymæra. At the foot of the Hill stood Pinara, wherein was worshipped Pandarus: and a little thence the Temple of Latona; and not farre off, Patara, the worke of Patarus, beautified with a Hauen, and many Temples, and the Oracles of Apollo, no lesse famous (if Mela bee beleeued) for wealth and credit, then that at Delphos. The Hill Telmessus was here famous for Southsayings; and the Inhabitants are accounted the first Interpreters of Dreames. Here was Chymæra a Hill, said to burne in the night. PAMPHYLIA beareth Eastwards from Lycia, and now together with CILICIA of the Turkes, is called CARAMANIA. Herein was Perga, neere whereunto on a high place stood the Temple of Diana Pergæa, where were obserued yeerely Festiuals. Sida had also in it the Temple of Pallas.

There remaine of this Chersonessus, [t] ARMENIA minor, and Cilicia. Armenia minor, called also Prima, is diuided from the Greater, or Turcomania, by Euphrates on the East: it hath on the West Cappadocia; on the South Cilicia, and part of Syria; on the North the Pontike Nations. docia, till the Armenians by their inuasions and Colonies altered the name: As for their rites I finde little difference, but they either resemble the Cappadocians, or their Armenian Ancestors.

CILICIA abutteth on the Eastern borders of Pamphylia, and was diuided into Trachea, and Campestris; now hath in it few people, many great Mesquitaes, and well furnished; the chiefe Citie is Hamsa,[u] sometime called Tarsus, famous for the studies of learning, herein (saith Strabo) surmounting both Athens and Alexandria; but most most famous for yeelding him to the world, then whom the whole world hath not happily yeelded any more excellent that was meerely a man, that great Doctor of Nations, who filled these Countries and all Regions, from Ierusalem euen to Illyricum, (now full of barbarisme) by preaching, and still filleth the world by his writings, with that truth which hee learned, not of man, nor at Tarsus the greatest Schoole of humanitie, nor at Ierusalem the most frequented for Diuinitie, but of the Spirit of Truth himselfe: who both was at first from Heauen conuerted, and after in the third Heauen confirmed in the same. CILICIA. u Strabo.l.14.

Strabo mentioneth the Temple and Oracle of Diana Sarpedonia in Cilicia; where being inspired, they gaue answeres: The Temple of Iupiter also at Olbus, the worke of Aiax. From Anchiale, a Cilician Citie, Alexander passed to Solos, where hee sacrificed with prayses to Æsculapius, for recouery from a strong Feuer, gotten before in the waters of Cidnus, and celebrated Gymnicall and Musicall [x] Games. The Corycian and Triphonian Dennes or Caues were held in much veneration among the Cilicians, where they sacrificed with certaine Rites: They had their Diuination by Birds and [y] Oracles. Of the Corycian Denne or Caue (so called of the Towne Corycos, almost compassed with the Sea) Mela [z] writeth, that from the Hill which ascendeth the space of ten furlongs, this Caue or strange Valley descendeth by degrees, the further, the more spacious, enuironed with a greene circle of pleasant shadie Groues, filling the eyes and minde at once, with pleasure and wonder. There is but one passage into it, and that narrow and rough, which continueth a mile and halfe vnder delightfull shades, the Rills running heere and there, resounding I know not what strange noyse in those darkened Bowers. When they are come to the bottome, another Caue presently presents it selfe, which terrifieth those that enter, with the multiplied sounds of Cymbals and vncouth minstrelsie. And the light fayling by degrees, it brings them into a darke vault, where a Riuer riseth; and hauing runne a swift course in a short channell, is againe drunke vp of the earth: so soone dieth that streame which is yet immortall, the Earth dealing with this, that as some with their children begotten and borne in darknesse, smothering that breath which but euen now from them they receiued, alway bearing, and alway barren. There is a further passage, but none durst view it, possessed with a superstitious fancie of the Gods inhabiting; that conceit presenting all things to the minde as venerable and full of Deitie, which to the sense were dreadfull and full of horror. Beyond this was the Tryphonian, alway couered with a blacke mantle of darkenesse, fabulously supposed the bed of Typhon, and naturally extinguishing the naturall life of whatsoeuer entred. x Ar.lib.2. y Gramaj. z Mela l.1.c.13

Vnto these things which haue beene said of the Temples, Priests, and Rites, obserued in Asia, thus much may be added out of [a] Sardus, of their Sacrifices. The Phrygians sacrificed Swines bloud. This did the Galli, Priests of Cybele, and this did the Bedlem Votaries, to recouer of their madnesse. The Colophonians offered a dog to Enodia, which is Hecate, as did also the Carians to Mars. The Phaselites in Pamphilia sacrificed Fishes to Caber, the sonne of Vulcan; and the Lydians, Eeles to Neptune. The Cappadocian Kings in their Sacrifices to Iupiter Stratioticus, or Militaris, on a high Hill, built a great fire, the King and others bringing Wood thereto: and after that another lesser, which the King sprinkled with Milke and Hony, and after fired it, entertaining those which were present with good cheere. a Lib.3.c.15.
