AND if we may leaue to follow a Dutch guide, well acquainted in these parts, whereof he hath written a very large * Treatise, you may feast with them at their spousals, and againe, after a view of their liues, at their Funerals. At the marriages of their Daughters they giue halfe an ounce of Gold, to buy Wine for the Bridale; the King himselfe giueth no other portion. The Bride in the presence of her friends sweareth to be true to her Husband, which the man doth not. For Adulterie he may diuorce her, and the Adulterer payeth to the King foure and twenty Pesos of gold, and the husband also may driue him out of Towne: but the Dutchmen payd no fine therefore, the Women onely were blamed, and payd foure Pesos. If the husband suspects his wife, hee makes tryall of her honesty, by causing her to eate salt with diuers Fetisso [b] ceremonies hereafter mentioned, the feare whereof makes her confesse. They haue many Wiues, if they can buy and keepe them: each dwelleth in a house by her selfe, though there be ten of them: they eat and lodge asunder: sometimes they will bring their cheere together. The Husband closely takes which he will haue lye with him to his roome, where their bed is a Mat. The Women after trauell wash themselues, and accompany not with their husbands for three moneths after. The Child newly borne hath a cleane cloath wrapped about the middle, and is layd downe on a mat. The Mothers vse to beare their Children at their backes, and so trauell with them, none proouing lame, notwithstanding that shaking of their bodies: they giue them the breſt ouer their shoulders. When it is a moneth old, they hang a net about the body, like a shirt, made of the barke of a Tree, hanged full of Fetissos, to secure it from the Diuell, who otherwise would (they thinke) carry it away. They hang the haire full of shels; and Corals about the necke, armes, and legges, applying diuers Fetissos or wreathes, with superstitious fancies, that one is good against Vomiting, a second for Falling, a third for Bleeding, a fourth to make it Sleepe, a fifth against wilde Beasts, and so on in the rest, giuing to each Fetisso a seuerall name. They quickly learne them to eate, and then leaue them about the house like dogs: they soone learne to goe, to speake, to swim. When they are first borne, they are not blacke, but reddish as the Brasilians. Each woman brings vp her owne: they teach them no ciuilitie, and beat them sometimes cruelly with staues. When they are eight, or ten, or twelue yeeres old, they learne them to spinne Bark-threed and make nets: after that, they goe with their Fathers to fish. At eighteene yeeres old they begin to set vp for themselues, two or three of them together hiring a house and Canoa: and then they couer their priuities, grow amorous, and their Fathers looke out wiues for them. They haue little haire on their face at thirty: they weare nayles as long as the joynt of a mans finger, as a token of Gentilitie: which is also obserued by Merchants: they keepe them very cleane, and as white as Iuorie. They are great in flesh beyond Men of these parts. At threescoore and ten, or fourescore, their blacknesse decaies, and they grow yellow. They haue small bellies, long legges, broad feet, long toes, sharpe sight, quicke wit, Estridge mawes; are spitefull, curiously neat, Drunkards, Theeues, Lecherous, and subject to the Pockes, whereof they are not ashamed, as neither of shewing their nakednesse. Yet it is holden shame with them to let a fart, which they wondered at in the Hollanders, esteeming it a contempt.

Their women in Guinea.

The Women goe long naked, are libidinous, and would boast of their filthinesse, if they could haue their pleasure with the Dutch, decking themselues of purpose. They weare beades about their neckes, and straw Fetissos about their feet. (The Mulato women in Mina cut their haire short for brauerie.)

Their ornaments.

They cut three gashes on their fore-head an inch long, and likewise on their cheekes neere their eares, which they suffer to swell and colour it with painting. They make also white strakes vnder their eyes. They curle and fold the haire of their head, making a hill in the middest like a hat, with frizzles round about. They vse long combes with two teeth onely, each a finger length: these they vse also for salutation, plucking them out and in, as heere, men put off or on their hats: they make also white spots on their faces, which afarre off shew like pearles. They raise their armes and brests with diuers cuts, on which euery morning they lay colours, which cause them to shew like blacke silke doublets cut and pinked. They haue earings and bracelets of Copper: the vnmarried Maides weare thirty or forty on each arme of Iron: the common Queanes weare copper rings with bels on their legs.

These women are strong, nimble, well proportioned, good house-wiues, home-keepers and cookes: not very fruitfull. The riches of the Guineans are store of Wiues and Children. They take great pride of white teeth, which therefore they rub with a certaine wood: they shew like Iuorie. Their garment is a fadome or more of Linnen cloth, which they weare about their bodies, from beneath the brests to the knees: vpon which they girt a piece of blue or yellow cloth, whereon hang their kniues and keyes, and diuers wisps of straw, or Fetissos. When they goe to Market, they wash them from top to toe, and put on other clothes. They buy no more but for that day, or meale.

Their bread.

They stampe their Milia as wee doe spice, fanne it in a wodden dish, steepe it ouer-night with a little Mais, and in the morning lay it on a stone, and (as Painters their colours) grinde it with another stone, till it be dowe, which they temper with fresh water and salt, and make rolls thereof twice as bigge as a mans fist, and bake it a little on the hearth. This is their bread.

Their dyet.

Their dyet is strange: as raw flesh, handfuls of graine, large draughts of Aqua-vitæ, Dogs, Cats, Buffles, Elephants, though stinking like carrion, and a thousand magots creeping in them. There are little birds like Bulfinches, which make their nests on small ends of twigs for feare of Snakes: these they eat aliue with their feathers. The Moores say that within land they eat dried snakes: and these will eat dogs guts raw, which our Author hath seene: and a Boy left in pawne on shipbord for debt, which had meat enough, yet would secretly kill the Hens, that he might eat their raw guts. They will eat old stinking fish dried in the Sun: yet can they be daintie if they may haue it. Some make a kind of Ale of Mays and water sodden together, called Beton. Sometime foure or fiue together will buy a pot of Palme-wine, which they powre into a great Cabas, which groweth on trees, and some of them are halfe as big as a kilderkin, round about which they sit to drinke, each sending a little pot-full to his best wife.

Drinking.

When they first drinke, they take it out with a small Cabas, & laying their hands on the head of him which first drinketh, crie aloud Tautosi, Tautosi: he drinkes not all off, but leaues a little to throw on the ground to the Fetisso, saying I.ou. spouting out some on their Fetissos on their armes, and legs, otherwise thinking they could not drinke in quiet. They are great Drinkers, and feed as vnmanerly as Swine, sitting on the ground and cramming, not staying till the morsell in the mouth be swallowed, but tearing their meat in pieces, with the three mid-fingers casking it into their mouthes ready gaping to receiue it. They are alway hungry and would eat all day long; yea the Dutchmen had great stomacks whiles they were there. He that gets most must be most liberall, industrious to get, and as prodigall in spending vpon their liquor.

Before the Portugals trade they had no Merchandise, but went naked: and the people within Land were afraid of them, because they were white and apparelled. They come to trade in the ships in the morning: for about noone the wind (before blowing from land) comes from Sea, and they are not able to endure the roughnesse thereof.

Set-windes.

They beleeue, that Men, when they die, goe into another World, where they shall haue like need of many things, as heere they haue, and therefore vse to put with the dead Corpes some parts of housholde. And if they lose any thing, they thinke that some of their friends, which in the other world had need thereof, came thence and stole it.

* The Religion of the Guineans.

Of * God being asked, they said he was blacke and euill, and did them much harme; their good, they had by their owne labour, and not by his goodnesse.

goodneſſe. Circumciſion they vſe, and ſome other Turkiſh Rites. They hold it vnmeet and irreligious to ſpit on the ground. They haue no Leters, nor Bookes. They obſerue a Sabbath, herein agreeing, and yet diſagreeing, with Turke, Iew, and Chriſtian, for they obſerue Tueſdayes Reſt, from their Fiſhing and Husbandrie. The Wine (of the Palme-tree) which is that day gathered, may not be ſold, but is offered to the King, who beſtoweth it on his Courtiers to drinke at night. In the midſt of the Market-place they had a Table ſtanding on foure Pillars, two elnes high, whoſe flat couer was made of Straw and Reedes wouen together. Hereon were ſet many ſtrawne Rings, called Fetiſſos or Gods, and therein Wheat, with Water and Oyle, for their God, which they thinke eates the ſame. Their Prieſt they call Fetiſſero, who euery Feſtiuall day placeth a Seat on that Table, and ſitting thereon, Preacheth to the people, the contents whereof I could neuer learne: which done, the Women offer him their Infants, and hee ſprinkleth them with water, in which a Newt or Snake doth ſwim, and then beſprinkleth the Table aforeſaid with the ſame water, and ſo vttering certaine wordes very loude, and ſtroking the Children with certaine colour, as giuing them his bleſſing: hee drinketh of that water, the people clapping their hands and crying Lon, Lon, and ſo he diſmiſſeth his deuout aſſembly.

Tueſday Sabbath: they call it Dia Fetiſſos.

Many weare ſuch Rings of Straw next their bodies, as preſeruatiues from thoſe dangers, which elſe their angry God might inflict on them. In honour of the ſame Deitie (or Deuill, as it ſeemes they conceiue him to be) they bechalke themſelues with a kind of chalkey Earth, and this is vnto them in ſtead of their Morning Mattens. The firſt bitte at meales, and firſt draught, is conſecrate to their Idoll, and therefore they beſprinkle therewith thoſe Rings, which I ſaid they weare on their bodies. If Fiſhers cannot ſpeed at Sea, they giue a piece of Gold to the Fetiſſero, to reconcile their frowning Saint. He therfore, with his Wiues, walkes a kind of Proceſſion thorow the Citie, ſmiting his breſt, and clapping his hands with a mightie noiſe, till hee come at the ſhore: and there they cut downe certaine boughes from the Trees, and hang them on their neckes, and play on a Tymbrell.

Then doth the Fetiſſero turne to his Wiues, and expoſtulates with them, and withall hurleth into the Sea Wheat and other things as an offering to Fetiſſo, to appeaſe his diſpleaſure towards the Fiſhermen. When the King will ſacrifice to Fetiſſo, hee commands the Fetiſſero to enquire of a Tree, whereto he aſcribeth Diuinitie, what he will demand. Hee with his Wiues, come to the Tree, and in a heape of aſhes, there prouided, prickes in a branch, plucked off the Tree, and drinking water out of a Baſon, ſpouts it out on the branch, and then daubeth his face with the aſhes: which done, he declareth the Kings queſtion, and the Diuell out of the Tree makes anſwer. The Nobles alſo adore certaine Trees, and eſteeme them Oracles: and the Diuell ſometimes appeareth vnto them in the ſame in forme of a blacke Dog, and otherwhiles anſwereth without any viſible apparition. There are which worſhip a certaine Bird, * which is ſpotted and painted (as it were) with Stars, and reſembleth the lowing of a Bull in her voyce. To heare this Bird lowing in their journey, is to them a luckie boding, ſaying, Fetiſſo makes them good promiſes, and therefore ſet him, in that place where they heare it, a Veſſell of Water and Wheat. And as the Earth and Ayre yeeld them Deities, ſo the Sea is not behinde in his liberalitie, but yeelds certaine Fiſhes to their Canonization. In this reſpect they take not the Tunie at all, and the Sword-fiſh they take, but eate not till his ſword bee cut off, which is dryed, and holden in great veneration. The Mountaines would bend their ſullen browes, if they ſhould not haue ſome redde letters in their Kalender, to which their toppes aſpire, threatning to ſcale Heauen, or ouer-whelme the Earth, if the Fetiſſan portion did not pacifie their angry moode, by daily preſents of meate and drinke ſet thereon. Neither can Nature alone vſurpe this Praxilege, but Art, in other things her emulous corriuall, and farre vnequall competitor, in this matter of God-making, commonly gets the vpper hand. And therefore they with their ceremonious Art can make them Fetiſſos, or Gods, at pleaſure. Principally in their Funerals they obſerue it: for when one is dead, they make a new Fetiſſo, or Ring of Straw, and pray it to beare the dead partie companie, and protect him in his iourney into the other World. They lay the dead body on a Matte on the ground, wind it in a Wollen cloath, ſet a ſtoole vnder the head, which is couered with a Goates skinne, the body is ſtrawed ouer with aſhes, his armes layd by his ſides, his eyes open: and ſo continueth halfe a day, his beſt-beloued wife ſitting by (as the Husband doth alſo at the death of his wife) crying Aury, and wiping her face with a wiſpe of ſtraw. Women goe round about the houſe ſinging and beating on Baſons, and about the corpſe likewiſe, and then againe about the houſe. The eldeſt Morimi or Gentlemen, goe about from houſe to houſe with a Baſon, wherein each puts the value of twelue-pence in Gold, with which they buy a Cow, with whoſe bloud the Fetiſſero appeaſeth the Fetiſſo. The friends and kinſfolkes aſſembling, prepare a Henne, and then ſetting themſelues in a corner of the dead mans houſe, they place all his Fetiſſo's on a row, the greateſt in the middeſt, adorning the ſame with Funerall rites.

Garlands of Peaſe and Beanes, like to the Popiſh praying-Beads. Then they ſprinkle the ſame with the bloud of the Henne, and hang a chaine or Garland of herbes about their neckes. After this, the women ſet the Hen, now ſodden, in the middeſt of the Fetiſſo's, and the Fetiſſero takes water in his mouth, which amidſt his Exorciſmes and Charmes he ſpoutes on thoſe Fetiſſo's, and taking two or three herbes from his necke, he rols the ſame in forme of a ball, which after certaine ceremonies he layeth downe, and ſo doth, till all his Herb-garland bee ſpent; and then makes them all into one great ball, and therewith beſmeareth his face, and thus is it made a Fetiſſo; and the partie deceaſed is now at reſt. In the meane time the deareſt of his Wiues filleth all the houſe with mourning, the neighbours and friends with Songs and Muſicke (ſuch as they haue) and Dances. And at laſt they take vp the Corps, and carrie it to the Graue, which is foure foot deepe, and couer it with ſtakes, that nothing may fall therein. The Women creeping about the Sepulchre, expoſtulate with him, Why hee would leaue them? Then doe they hurle on earth, ſo that none can get in to the Corpes; for hee hath with him his Houſhold, Armour, and whatſoeuer he vſed in his life time; Wine alſo (if before he loued it) to drinke in the other World. Laſtly, they couer the Sepulchre with a Roofe, to defend all from Raine. If the King dies, not onely greater ſolemnitie is vſed: but the Nobles (thinking it neceſſarie for ſo great a Perſonage to haue attendents) offer vnto him, one, a Seruant; another a Wife; a third, his Sonne or Daughter, till there be many of both Sexes in that other life to attend him. All which are ſuddenly ſlaine at vnawares, and their bloudie carkaſſes, buried together with the King. Yea, the Kings wiues which loued him beſt, refuſe not this laſt and euerlaſting ſeruice, as they ſuppoſe; but yeeld themſelues to die, that they may liue with him. The heads of all theſe, thus ſlaine, are ſet vpon poles round about the Sepulchre: Meate, Drinke, Rayment, Armes, and other Vtenſils are added for their vſe, and buried with them. After the buriall they goe to the Sea, or Riuer, and there obſerue other Rites: ſome waſhing, while others play on Baſons and Inſtruments. The Widow or Widower is layd backward on the water with diuers wordes of complaint. At laſt they cloath them, returne to the dead-mans houſe, make great cheere, and drinke themſelues drunke.

They, in vncertaintie of criminall accuſations, as of Adulterie, Murther, and ſuch like, haue a certaine water [a] offered them to drinke by the Fetiſſero, made of thoſe Herbes whereof their Bal-Fetiſſo is made, and in effect like the curſed water, Numb. 5. none daring to drinke, for feare of ſudden death thereby, if hee be guilty. They dare not come out of their houſes in Thunder: for then, they ſay, many of them are carried away by the Deuill and throwne dead on the ground. When they pray for Raine, they waſh themſelues, and caſt Water ouer their heads with diuers words, and ſpitting in the water.

Their Kings are Electiue, and muſt be liberall, or elſe are expelled. Once a yeere he makes a great feaſt for the common people, buying to that end all the Palme-wine, and many Kine, the heads of which are painted and hanged in the Kings chamber, in teſtimonie of his bounty. Hee inuiteth alſo his neighbour-Kings, Captaines and Gentlemen, and then prayeth and ſacrificeth to his Fetiſſo, which is the higheſt Tree in the Towne. The men with Fencing, Drumming, Singing, Leaping; the Women with Dances, honour this feaſt. Euery King holdeth his feaſt apart, one ſoone after another, in the Summer-time. The King comes little abroad. In the Morning and Euening, his Slaues blow or ſound certaine Trumpets made of Elephants teeth: his Wiues doe then waſh and anoynt his body. He hath alſo his Guard. Hee ſits [b] (in ſtate) on a ſtoole, holding in his hands the tayle of a Horſe or Elephant to driue away Flies: gallantly adorned with Rings of Gold on his Armes and legges and necke, with corall Beads alſo, wherwith likewiſe he maketh diuers knots on his beard. His Children [c] (if they will haue any thing) when they are of age muſt get it: the common people would not like that he ſhould maintaine them idle. Onely he beſtowes on them their marriage gift, and a Slaue. They chuſe by moſt voyces [d] a ſucceſſour in another kindred, who inheriteth the treaſure of the dead King, and not his owne Children.

Controuerſies are tried [e] by the Fetiſſeros Pot, as is ſaid: if it be for Murther, hee may redeeme his life with money, one moity to the King, the other to the Courtiers: if he cannot, the Executioner [f] bindes his hands behind him, couers his face, leades him to a place alone, and cauſing him to kneele downe, thruſts him through, and then (for before they thinke him not dead) cuts off his head: and quarteſing the body, leaues it to the Fowles ond Beaſts. His head is boyled by his friends, and the broath eaten, and then they hang it by the Fetiſſo. They make ſolemne oathes and promiſes on this manner: they wipe their faces, ſhoulder, breſts, and all their bodies, on the ſoles of your feet, thrice ſaying, Iau, Iau, Iau, ſtamping, kiſſing the Fetiſſos, on their armes, and legs. The land is all the Kings, and therefore they firſt till his land, and then by compoſition for themſelues. They begin on a Tueſday, and when the Kings worke is done, haue a feaſt in honour of their Fetiſſo to proſper their Husbandrie.

Obseruations of the Coast and In-land Countries, out of BARRETVS and LEO; and of the cause of the Negros Blacknesse.

IN Anno 1604. certaine Iesuites were sent into these parts, the chiefe of which was Balthasar Barrerius, who conuerted some of those Negro's to the Romish Christian profession. One of which was the King at Sierra Liona, Christened with the name Philip, his Father a man of an hundred and thirtie yeeres, about the same time finishing his life. A Letter of this Philip vnto King Philip of Spaine, is published by Farria, in which hee desireth more Priests to bee sent into those parts, offers him to build a Castle at the Cape, and concludeth with wishing him as many yeeres as the Heauen hath Starres, and the Sea Sands. The King of Bena gaue great hopes of his Conuersion, which were suddenly dashed, by meanes of a certaine Mahumetan (for so farre hath that Pestilence a infected) who making a flattering Oration of two houres long, inclined the King to his faithlesse Faith. This Kings Dominion extendeth nine dayes journey, and containeth seuen of their petrie Kingdomes. Wee haue before spoken of the Mandingæ, neere to Gambea. These haue of late yeeres embraced Mahomet, and by Armes and Merchandize (the vsuall meanes) sought to propagate it to others, beeing excellent Horse-men, and couragious, vsually placed in the fore-front. Their Priests are called Bexerini, which write Arabicke Amulets to secure such as weare them in battell. These Preach to the people, and drawinge forth parchment rolls, spread them with great deuotion on the Pulpit, and standing a while with eyes fixed to Heauen, as it were in Diuine conference, presently will them to thanke GOD, and his Prophet for the pardon of all their sinnes: then reades hee his Scrolls, the people rending two houres together without once stirring their bodies, or turning away their eyes. One of them is chiefe ouer the rest, who hath taught the King of Bena a certaine Inchantment of Witchcraft, to make the Deuill the instrument of his Reuenge vpon any offender; which makes him dreadfull to all; Two of the Portugals confessing the experiment thereof vpon themselues. The like appeared in a huge Serpent, which they call the King of Serpents, of most beautifull colours, as bigge as a mans thigh, which the King played withall without any harme. The Iesuite speakes of one Man which had threescore and twelue Sonnes, and fiftie Daughters, which multiplied beyond credit. All the kindred mourne at the death of the great Men, assemble to the corpse, and offer; of which offerings one third is the Kings, the second the neerest kinsmans which is charged with the Funerall, the third is put into the Graue, together with all that Gold which they haue treasured for this purpose through their whole life, hiding it closely from the knowledge of all, so that if they die suddenly, their Gold is perished with them. Yea their Sepulchres (the Iesuites report) are kept secret, and made in the channels of Riuers, diuerting the streame, till it bee made, to preserue these treasures to the vse of the dead. At the yeeres end they renue the memorie of the deceased with mourning and festiuall-solemnitie, the more drunkennesse, the greater honour. They haue Idols of wood and straw, and their Chinas before mentioned, made of Poles in forme of a Pyramis, within which are many white Pismires that come not forth, and it is vncertaine what they eate. Before these they will adiure their Seruants to fidelitie, wishing that Serpents, Lizards, or Tygres may teare them if they runne away, which they feare with religious awe, and dare not flee vpon any hard vsage. Euery Kingdome hath a place sacred to the Deuill: such an one was the Iland Camasson a league from the shore, where all that sayled by offered Rice, Oyle, or some other thing. The King once a yeere sacrificed Goates and Hens, which were there kept, there being no feare of stealing them, where none durst aduenture to set foot on land.

Barrer. Epist.

Philippi Leonis Lit. Feb. 5. 1606

a At the first comming of the Portugals, all these parts were Ethnikes with some little Saracenicall aspersion amongst the Ialophs, Berbecines, Mandingæ, which now are all Mahumetans.

And now leauing the Coasts of Guinea, Benin, Melegete, and the other Regions of the Negros adioyning to the Sea, we will looke backe againe into the In-land Countries: whereof Gualata is an hundred miles distant from the Ocean, and hath already beene mentioned. The next thereunto, in * Leos Relations, is Gheneoa, which is not the same with Guinea before mentioned, if Leo had true intelligence, but is situate betwixt Gualata, Tombuto, and Melli, and in one place bordereth on the Ocean, where Niger falleth into the Sea. They had great Traffique with the Merchants of Barbarie. They haue Gold vncoyned, and vse also Iron money. There is neither Towne nor Castle, but one, where the Prince, with Priests, Doctors, and Merchants reside. Those Priests and Doctors goe apparelled in white, the rest in blacke or blue Cotton. In July, August, and September, Niger ouer-floweth it. Izchia, the King of Tombuto, conquered it, and kept the King prisone rat Gago, till his death, Melli is the head Citie of a Kingdome, which hence taketh name, and hath in it great store of Temples, Priests and Readers or Professours, which reade in the Temples, becauſe they haue no Colledges. They are more ingenious then other Negros, and were the firſt that embraced the Mahumetan Law. Izchia alſo ſubdued them.

Tombuto was founded in the yeere of the Hegeira 610. And it is ſituate within twelue miles of a branch of Niger. There are many Wells to receiue the ouerflowing waters of that Riuer. Salt is brought them fiue hundred miles from Tagazza, and is very deare. I, at my being there (ſaith Leo) ſaw a Camels burthen ſold for foureſcore Duckats. The King had many Plates and Scepters of Gold, ſome whereof weighed thirteene hundred pounds. They which ſpeake to him, caſt Sand ouer their heads, as Cadamoſto obſerued at Budomel. The King would admit no Iewes into his Citie, and hateth them ſo extreamely, that hee would confiſcate the goods of ſuch Merchants, as held Traffique with them. Hee greatly honoured men of Learning, and no Merchandize yeelded more gaine then Bookes. There were many Iudges, Doctors, and Priests, to whom hee allowed their ſtipends. The people vſed much Dauncing in the ſtreets, from tenne to one of clocke at night. They mingle Fiſh, Milke, Butter, and Fleſh together in their Gallimaufrey kinde of dyet, neither toothſome nor holſome. Hamet, King of Marocco [b], conquered the ſame Kingdome 1589. and alſo Gago, and other Countries of the Negros, extending his Empire ſixe moneths journey from Marocco, by Camels; whoſe riches thereby acquired, appeare in the Letters of Lawrence [c] Madoc; and wee before haue touched.

Gago is much frequented by Merchants, and things are ſold at exceſſiue rates. In an hundred miles ſpace you ſhall ſcarce find one in thoſe parts that can reade, or write: and the King accordingly oppreſſeth them with taxations.

In Guber they ſow their Corne on the waters, which Niger, with his ouerflowings brings vpon the Countrey, and haue aboundant recompence. Izchia, King of Tombuto [d] conquered the King of Guber; of Agadez alſo, and of Cano, which haue great ſtore of Merchants: Likewiſe of Caſena, and Zegzeg, and Zanfara; in which I finde little worth the remembrance. Cano hath ſome Relikes of Chriſtianitie, and they are named by the Apoſtles names. Guangara was not onely oppreſſed by the ſaid Izchia of Tombuto, but by Abraham King of Borno.

Borno confineth with Guangara on the Weſt, and extendeth Eaſtwards fiue hundred miles. The people haue no Religion, neither Chriſtian, Iewiſh, nor Mahumetane; but like Beaſts liue with their Wiues and Children in common: and as a Merchant which liued long amongſt them, and learned their Language, told Leo, they haue no proper [e] names, as in other Nations, but as they giue him ſome name of diſtinction by his height, fatneſſe, or other peculiar accidents. The King warreth with his neighbours: hee is deſcended of the Libyan people Bardoa. For maintenance of his Warres he will giue great prices for Horſes, exchanging fifteene or twentie Slaues for one, which Slaues he tooke from his enemies. When I was in this Kingdome, I found there many Merchants that were wearie of this Traffique, becauſe they ſtayed for their Slaues till the King returned from his Warres. Yet the King ſeemes to bee rich: all his Horſe-furniture, Stirrops, Spurres, Bridles, Bits, were all of Gold; and his Diſhes, Platters, or whatſoeuer he did eate or drinke in: yea, his Chaines for his Dogges were for the moſt part of moſt fine Gold. He hath many both white and blacke people, ſubiect to him.

Gaoga bordereth Weſtward on Borno, and thence trendeth to Nubia, betweene the Deſarts of Serta on the North, and another Deſart confining on a winding crooke of Nilus, about fiue hundred miles ſquare. It hath neither Ciuilitie Letters, nor Gouernment. The Inhabitants haue no vnderſtanding, eſpecially they which dwell in the Mountaines, who goe naked in the Summer-time, their priuities excepted. Their houſes are made of boughes, which eaſily take fire. They haue ſtore of Cattell. A hundreth yeeres before Leo's time they were brought in ſubiection by a Negro ſlaue, who firſt ſlew his Maſter, and by helpe of his goods made preyes in the next Regions, exchanging his Captiues for Horſes of Ægypt: and ſo became King of Gaoga. His Nephewes Sonne Homara then raigned, and was much reſpected by the Soldan of Cairo. Leo was at his Court, and found him a man paſſing liberall. He much honoured all that were of the linage of Mahomet.

The Nubæ in olde times were many Kingdomes, as [*] Strabo affirmeth, not ſubiect to the Æthiopians: and were then Nomades, or Wanderers, and Robbers. As it is now taken (Iohn Leo being our Author) Nubia ſtretcheth from Gaoga vnto Nilus, hauing the Ægyptian Confines on the North; and the Deſarts of Goran on the South. They cannot ſaile out of this Kingdome into Ægypt. For the Riuer Nilus, whiles it is couetous of largeneſſe, loſeth his deepneſſe, and couering certaine Plaines, becommeth ſo ſhallow, that both men and beaſts may wade ouer. Dangala is their chiefe Towne, and hath ten thouſand Families, but ill built, their houſes being Chalke and Straw. The Inhabitants with their traffique to Cairo become rich.

There is in this Kingdome great store of Corne and Sugar, Ciuit, Sandall, and Iuorie. They haue strong poyson, one graine whereof giuen to ten persons, will kill them all in a quarter of an houre; and one man, if he alone take it, presently. An ounce hereof is sold for an hundred Ducats. It is not sold but to strangers, which first take their oath that they will not vse it in their Countrey. And if any sell thereof secretly, it costs him his life: for the King hath as much for Custome, as the Merchant for price.

Some [b] Portugals trauelling thorow Nubia, saw many Churches ruined by the Arabians, and some Images. The Iewish and Mahumetan Superstition haue there almost preuailed. In old time they had Bishops sent them from Rome, which by meanes of the Arabians was after hindered.

The Nubian King warreth with the Inhabitants of Goran, called Zinganj; who speake a Language that none else vnderstand; and with others in the Desarts, on the other side of Nilus, towards the Red Sea, whose Language seemes to be mixt with the Chaldæan, and resembles the speech of Suachen, in the Countrey of Prester Iohn. They are called Bugiha, and liue very miserably. They had once a Towne on the Red Sea, called Zibid, whose Port answereth directly to that of Zidem, which is forty miles from Mecca. This Zibid for their robberies was destroyed by the Sultan. Ortelius [c] saith, that in Nubia they were sometimes Christian, and now are scarcely of any Religion at all. They sent into Prester Iohns Countrey for Priests, when Aluares [d] was there to repaire their almost ruined Christianitie, but without effect.

Sanutus [e] reckons here other Kingdomes, Gothan, Medra, Dauma, whereof becaus wee haue little but the names, I can write nothing.

Now if any would looke that we should heere in our Discourse of the Negro's assigne some cause of that their Blacke colour: I answere, that I cannot well answere this question, as being in it selfe difficult, and made more, by the varietie of [f] answeres, that others giue hereunto. Some alleage the heate of this Torrid Region, proceeding from the direct beames of the Sunne; and why then should all the West Indies which stretch from the one Tropike to the other, haue no blacke people, except a few in Quareca, which haply were not Naturals of the place? And if this were the cause; why should Africa yeeld white people in Melinde, and neere the Line? blacker at the Cape of Good Hope in fiue and thirtie, then in Brasill vnder the Line? Some leauing the hot impressions in the Aire, attribute it to the drinesse of the Earth: as though the Libyan Desarts are not more dry (and yet the people no Negro's) and as though Niger were heere dried vp. Some to the hidden qualitie of the soyle; and why then are the Portugals children and generations white, or Mulatos at most, that is, tawnie, in Saint Thomee, and other places amongst them, as also the Inhabitants of Melinde, Madagascar, and other places, in the same height, in and adioyning to Africa? Some ascribe it (as Herodotus) to the blackenesse of the Parents Sperme or Seed; and how made they the search to know the colour thereof, which if it hath (a thing by others denied) by what reason should it imprint this colour on the skinne? And how comes it that they are reddish at their birth, yellowish in age? Some ascend aboue the Moone, to call some heauenly Constellation and Influence into this Consistorie of Nature; and there will I leaue them: yea, I will send them further to Him that hath reserued many secrets of Nature to himselfe, and hath willed vs to content our selues with things reuealed. As for secret things, both in Heauen and Earth, they belong to the Lord our God, whose holy Name be blessed for euer, for that he hath reuealed to vs things most necessary, both for body and soule, in the things of this life, and that which is to come. His incomprehensible Vnitie, which the Angels with couered faces in their Holy, Holy, Holy-Hymnes resound and Laude in Trinitie, hath pleased in this varietie to diuersifie his workes, all seruing one humane nature, infinitely multiplied in persons, exceedingly varied in accidents, that we also might serue that [h] One-most God: that the [i] tawnie Moore, blacke Negro, duskie Libyan, Ash-coloured Indian, Oliue-coloured American, should, with the whiter Europæan become one sheep-fold, vnder one Great Sheepheard, till this mortalitie being swallowed vp of life, wee may all [k] bee one, as Hee and the Father are one; and (all this varietie swallowed vp into an ineffable vnity) only the Language of Canaan bee heard, onely the Fathers name written in their foreheads, the Lambes song in their mouthes, the victorious Palmes in their hands, their long Robes being made white in the bloud of the Lambe, whom they follow whither soeuer He goeth, filling Heauen and Earth with their euerlasting Halleluiahs, without any more distinction of Colour, Nation, Language, Sexe, Condition, all may be One in him that is One, and only blessed for euer. RELATIONS OF THE REGIONS AND RELIGIONS IN AFRICA.

OF ÆTHIOPIA, AND THE AFRICAN ILANDS; AND OF THEIR RELIGIONS.

THE SEVENTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Of Æthiopia Superior, and the Antiquities thereof.

§. I.

Of the name and diuision of Æthiopia.

WE of Nubia we needed neither Palinurus helpe, nor Charon, to set vs on the Æthiopian Territory: the Sea is farre distant, and the Riuer Nilus which parteth them (whether loth to mixe his fresh waters, with the Seas saltnesse, or fearing to fall downe those dreadfull [a] Cataracts, or dreading the multitude of Pits, which the Egyptians make in his way to intrap him) heere sheweth his vnwillingnesse to passe further forward; and distracted with these passions, hath almost lost his Channell, diffusing himselfe in such lingering and heartlesse manner, as Man and Beast dare here insult on his Waters; and I also haue aduentured to take the aduantage of these shallowes, and wade ouer into this anciently renowmed Æthiopia. The name Æthiopia came from Æthiops, [b] the sonne of Vulcan: before, it had beene called Ætheria, and after that Atlantia. [c] Lydiat deriueth Æthiopia of Ai, and Thebets, the Land of, or beyond Thebais, which was called Ægyptus Superior, next to Æthiopia. Chytræus saith, it is deriued of ἀιθω, splendeo, and ὄψις visus, of the Sunnes burning presence. Two Æthiopia's are found in Africke, as Plinie [d] witnesseth out of Homer (so ancient is the diuision) the Easterne and Westerne. And this partition is by some still followed, as namely by [e] Osorius. Others diuide the same into the Asiatike and African. Author hereof is Herodotus [f] in his Polyhimnia, which reckoneth two sorts of Æthiopians in Xerxes huge Armie; the Easterne mustered vnder the Indian Standards; the other of Africa by by themselues, differing from the former in Language, and their curled haire. Ensebius [g] mentioneth Æthiopians neere the Riuer Indus. And to let passe Pausanias [h] his search among the Seres, or Philostratus [i] at Ganges, for some Asian Æthiopians; the Scriptures seeme to mention an Æthiopia in Asia. For Cush, the sonne of Cham (of whom Iosephus [k] saith the Æthiopians called themselues, and were called by others, Chusæi) was Author not onely of the Æthiopians in Africa, but of many peoples of Arabia also in Asia, as Moses [l] relateth. And hence perhaps it was that Miriam [m] and Aaron contended with Moses for his Wife Zippora, because she was an Æthiopian. And yet was she a Midianite: but called an Æthiopian, in respect of the neighbour-hood which Midian had to Æthiopia Orientalis, as Vatablus [n] obserueth out of the Iewish Writers; or for that Midian is also assigned to Æthiopia, taken in a larger sense, as saith [o] Genebrard. Iunius saith, because the Midianites dwelt in that Region which was assigned to Cush. Æthicus in his Cosmography [p] affirmeth, that Tygris burieth it selfe, and runneth vnder ground in Æthiopia; which Simlerus interpreteth of Arabia: for otherwise Tygris washeth no part of Africa.

Saint Augustine [q] affirmeth, that the Region Northwards from the Red Sea, and so euen to India, was called Æthiopia Orientalis. This distinction is still acknowledged by later [r] Writers. And therefore it is needlesse to fetch Moses a Wife out of Æthiopia beneath Egypt to interpret that place. For so [s] Iosephus as wee shall after see, telleth of a Wife which Moses in his prosperitie, before his flight, married from thence.

This obseruation is very necessary, because the Scriptures often mention Æthiopia, when no part of Africa can be [t] vnderstood, as *Genes.*2.13. where one of the Riuers of Paradise is said to compasse the whole Land of Cush, or Æthiopia. And so in other places, Cush, or Æthiopia. Learned Iunius [u] obserueth, that Cush is either a proper name, as *Genes.*10. or common to the people that came of him: it is also a name attributed to the three Arabia's, to the two (African) Æthiopia's, and to all the Southerne tract by the Persian Gulfe.

Leauing that Asian Æthiopia, which already wee haue handled vnder other names, wee will now proceed in our African iourney, where we find in [x] Ptolemie not so exact description thereof, as in later Geographers, being then in the greatest part vnknowne. [y] Maginus maketh Æthiopia to containe two of those seuen parts, whereinto he diuideth Africa: one of which he calleth Æthiopia Superior, and Interior, which for the most part is subiect vnto the Christian Prince, called in Europe Priest or Prester Iohn: the other, Inferior and Exterior, is all that Southerly part of Africa, which was not knowne to the Ancients. This doth not altogether agree with Homers [z] diuision (whose Geographie [a] Strabo hath so largely trauersed and admired.) For how could Homer, or any in his time attaine to the knowledge of those remote parts? Neither yet may we reiect that renowmed Poet, seeing this partition may serue vs now in the better discouerie of places, where we may reckon all that to the Westerly Æthiopia, which from Guinea stretcheth to the Cape of Good Hope; and thence to the Red Sea Northwards, to the Easterly; Nilus, and a line from the head thereof vnto the aforesaid Cape, being the Arbiter in this diuision. But to let passe this curiositie in caruing, when all is like to be eaten, we will begin at Æthiopia vnder Egypt, and so take the Countries in our way, going from the Red Sea, till hauing doubled the Cape, we come from the Abassine Christians, to those of Congo on the Æthiopian Ocean.

Æthiopia sub Ægypto (so the Geographers [b] call this part) hath on the North, Egypt; on the West, Libya Interior; on the South Æthiopia Agisimba; on the East, the Red and Barbarian Seas, to the Promontory Raptum, which Ortelius [c] placeth about Quiloa, Porie [d] cals it Quilimanci: Mercator interprets Magala. The Abissine Empire is by our late [e] Writers intended further, receiuing for the Southerne limits, the Mountaines of the Moone; and for the Westerne, the Kingdome of Congo, the Riuer Niger and Nubia: and therefore contayneth Æthiopia sub Ægypto, and besides Troglodítica, Cinnamomifera Regio, and part of the inner Libya. True it is, that the Great Neguz his titles comprehend thus much, yet rather as a monument of what he hath had, then an euidence of what hee hath: The Turkes in the North, the Mores on the West, & others other-where circumcising this circumcised Abissine: and now according to [f] Boterus and Barrius, the Lake Barcena is the Center of his Dominion. But euen still Frier [g] Luys de Urreta, giues him both all before named and more. The name Abissine or Abassine, which is giuen to this Region, Niger [h] deriueth from the Egyptian word Abasses, which (Strabo [i] reporteth) they gaue to all inhabited places, compassed with great Desarts, and situate therein, in manner as the Ilands in the Sea: three of which Abasses, he saith, were subiect to the Egyptians. Scaliger [k] saith, that the Arabians call these Æthiopians Elhabaschi, whence they are vsually named Abassines; and this with him is an argument, that they are not Natiues of the place, but thither deriued out of Arabia. For the Abaseni are by Uranius (in Stephanus) placed in Arabia Thurifera: whose words are these; [l] Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβίας, οἰκοῦσιν ἐν Ἀραβίᾳ τῇ πρὸς Σαβαίους καταμῶται καὶ Ἀβασηνοὶ, καὶ ἐστὶν, ἡ χεῖρ ἀπὸ ἀγκῶνος σμίκρυνε φέρει ἢ ὄσον, &c. This haue I inserted out of Stephanus for satisfying the more iudicious. Scaliger addeth that the Language in which their Ecclesiasticall and sacred Bookes are written, is as farre from the true Ethiopicke, as the Dutch or Italian. The tongue is most elegant, if care and diligence be added: and is called Libertie, because the Arabian Conquerors (therefore only free) did vse it. The Ethiopians themselues call it Chaldee; yet is it neerer the Hebrew then the Chaldee: it is onely learned by Bookes, and of their Priests. They indeed haue other Histories of themselues, from the flood downewards, but whereto a man must not rashly giue credit. They call themselues Ethiopians.

19 To take now some exacter view of these parts, leauing those [m] Iewish monstrous Fables of Monkees of threescore and ten cubits, & their great lyes of the little Pigmey-Christians with such other stuffe, fit for them to write, who are iustly credulous of [n] lyes, because they beleeued nothing: let vs see what others haue written, both of the people and place; and first of the first, and most ancient Relations.

§. II.

Of the Nations neere the Falls of Nilus, and of Meroe.

20 THe Cataracts or Falls of Nilus, which separate Ethiopia from Egypt, are by the most Authors reckoned two, the greater and the lesse: Stephanus addeth a third at Bonchis, an Ethiopian City. These are Mountaines which incroch vpon the Riuer, and with their loftie lookes and vndermining trecherie, hauing drawne vp the Earth, which should affoord him a Channell, into their swelling and ioynt conspiracie, as with a mixt passion of feare and disdaine, make the waters in their haste and strife ouerthrow themselues downe those steepe passages: the billowes bellowing and roaring so terribly with the Fall, that the Inhabitants (as some affirme) which dwell neere, are thereby made deafe: and the Riuer amazed and dizzie, whirles it selfe about, forgetting his tribute to Neptune, till forced by his owne following waters, hee sets, or rather is set forward on his iourney.

30 They are [p] now called Catadbi, which signifieth noyse, of those dreadfull and hideous out-cries, which there are caused. Thus saith Bermudesius of those Falls in the Kingdome of Goiame, which rush downe from a Rocke almost halfe a league high, and steepe, sounding like Thunder.

p Ioan. Bermudesius in Legat. Æthiopica.

Betwixt these Falls and Meroe, Strabo [q] placeth the Troglodytæ, of which we haue already spoken: and the Blemmyes Nubæ and Megabari. They are Nomades, without Towne or habitation, and addicted to robbery. Procopius [r] testifieth, that these were accustomed to 40 doe much damage on the Romane Confines: and therefore Diocletian brought them out of their barren Territories, and gaue them Elephantina, and the Region adioyning for habitation, communicating to them the Roman Rites and Superstitions, and built the Citie Philas, in hope of future friendship. Cœlum non animam; they changed the Soyle not the Soule, but were no lesse iniurious to Oasis, and other the Romane subiects. They worshipped some Gods, borrowed of the Græcians; Isis, and Osiris, of the Egyptians; and Priapus. The Blemmyes also offered humane Sacrifices, with cruell inhumanitie, to the Sunne, till Iustinians time, who tooke away those bloudie deuotions. As for the tale that those Blemmyes wanted heads, and had their eyes and mouthes in their brests, the Authors had either no eyes to 50 see the truth, or more head then they should to deuise lyes: as we may say of other shapelesse and monstrous shapes of people, which [s] Plinie and Solinus, out of other Authors report, to inhabit these vnknowne parts: some wanting lips, some nostrils, some tongues, or mouthes, &c. indeed all wanting truth. Rather would I counsell the studious of Geographie, to learne the names of the Peoples and Nations of these Regions, of Plinie and Solinus: which because we haue but names of them, I forbeare to name.

Meroe doth inuite mee to a longer entertainment, being an Iland which Nilus with louely embraces claspeth about, according to Iosephus and Cedrenus, sometimes called Saba, as now also the Abissines name it: the Egyptians call it Naule Babe; the Inhabitants, Neube; our Maps, Guegere; to which Thenet addeth more, [t] if not more then truth. The Iland, after 62 [u] Heliodorus (the Bishop of Tricca) his description, is three square, each of which triangle limits are made by three Riuers, Astaboras, and Asasoba; (Strabo cals it Astapus, and Astosabus) this from the South, that from the East drowning their names and waters with Nilus; it

It receiued that name [y] of Meroe, sister of Cambyses, or after [z] Eusebius, of Merida, the Mother of Chenephris, King of Egypt. They worshipped a Barbarian God, and besides, Pan, Hercules, and Isis. [a] They cast their dead into the Riuer, others reserued them at home in glasse shrines, others in earthen receptacles buried them neere to their Temples. They esteemed them for Gods, and sware by them. They ordained him King, who excelled in strength, or in person, or in husbandry of cattell, or in wealth. Their Priests enioyed the chiefe ranke of honour, who sending their Herald or Messenger, enioyned the King his death, and set vp another in his roome. At length a certaine King abolished this custome, and rushing with his armed Souldiers into their Temple, where was a golden Chappell, slue all those Priests. This was at Meroe the head Citie of the Iland, where (Pausanias [b] sayth) they shewed the Table of the Sunne, and that they were the iustest men of all the Ethiopians.

Concerning that Table, and the expedition of CAMBYSES into these partes, HERODOTVS [c] relateth, that CAMBYSES designed at once three inuasions; against the Carthaginians, the Ammonians, and Macrobians (all in Africa.) These last haue their names of their long liues, which they draw forth farre beyond the vsuall course. Hee placeth them on the South shores of Africa, but Mela [d] in Meroe: Seneca, Plinie, and Solinus beyond. That Table of the Sunne, Herodotus and Mela thus describe. Neere to the Citie was a place alwayes furnished with varietie of rosted meates, there set in the night by the Magistrates, and eaten on the day by such as listed, and therefore of this open feasting, called the Suns Table: whom the ignorant people also thought to be the Cater of these dainties. Cambyses sent an Embassage vnto the King with presents, but principally to espie the Countrey; whom the Ethiopian requited with a Bow, and bade that the Persians should then inuade the Macrobians, when they were able to shoot in such Bowes: thanking God that hee was contented with his owne. And because he had sent him golden Chaines, he asked to what vse they were; they said, for ornaments: hee answered with smiling, thinking them to bee Chaines for punishment, That he had stronger fetters then those. The like account hee made of his Purple Robes, Oyntments, and Wine: and asked further what the Persians eate: and when they told him bread made of Wheate (the nature whereof they declared) and withall, that the oldest Persians exceeded not fourescore yeeres: hee said, that it was no maruell of their short life, that fed vpon dung: neither could they liue so long, were it not for that drinke of Wine which they vsed; it was not extraordinary [e] there to attaine to a hundred and twenty yeeres, their meate was boyled flesh, and their drinke Milke. Hee brought them to a Fountaine, wherein being bathed, they smelled as of Violets, it was so subtile that nothing could swimme thereon, not wood, or other lighter matter: this water was supposed to lengthen their liues. He brought them also to the Prisons, where they saw many manacled and bound with Chaines of Gold. Lastly, hee shewed them their Sepulchres made of Glasse, in this manner: After they haue embalmed the dead Corps, they anoint it with a kind of pargetting mortar, and then put it in a case or coffin of Glasse, through which it shineth, and is apparant without any ill sauour. This they keepe one yeere in the house, offering thereto Sacrifices, and the first fruits of all things: and then carrie it out of the Citie. Thus farre Herodotus. Wherein, that which some Penny-father would most admire, their golden fetters how common and rife is it in another sort with vs? euery couetous Miser, manacling, fettering, strangling himselfe with his Gold, in shew his ornament, in affect his God, in effect his Deuill, Iaylor, Chaines, and Hell. Of the Table of the Sunne before mentioned, thus writeth Friar Luys de Vrreta, [f] in that his large History which hee hath composed in Spanish, of Ethiopia: that the King in a curious brauerie, and sumptuous vanitie, caused there to bee set by night in a certaine field store of white bread, and the choysest Wines, hanged also on the Trees; great varietie of Fowles, rost and boyled, and set on the ground, Mutton, Lambe, Veale, Beefe, with many other dainties ready dressed. Trauellers and hungry persons which came hither and found this abundance, seeing no bodie which prepared, or which kept the same, ascribed it to Iupiter Hospitalis his bounty and hospitality, shewing himselfe a Protector of poore Trauellers, and called this field the Table of the Sunne. The report hereof passed through the World, and brought many Pilgrims from farre Countries, to visit the same. King Cambyses sent his Embassadors to see it. Plato the Prince of Philosophers hauing trauelled through Asia as farre as Gaucasus and gone also to the Brachmanes, to see and heare Hiarebas in a Throne of Gold, amongst a few Disciples, disputing of Natures Mysteries, and discoursing of the Starres and Planets, returned by the Persians, Babylonians, Arabians, and other Nations, and entred into to Æthiopia, led with desire to see this renowmed Table, and to eate of those delicacies. The Æthiopians, since their Christianity, in zealous detestation of Idolatry, will not so much as name this field, and these ancient Rites, and giue in charge to the Priests at this day, that they handle not or meare of the like vanities, because they were inuentions of Idolaters. Cælius g Rhodiginus affirmeth, that this Table of the Sunne grew into a Prouerbe, to signifie a House well furnished and prouided. Thus farre Fryer Luys: I doubt, farther then wee may safely follow in that of Plato's Pilgrimage hither.

g cæl.Rhod l.10

Of the Pillar of Semiramis is before spoken out of the relation of Xenophon de Æquinoctis: concerning which, and his other companions and brethren, howsoeuer Possevinus, Goropius, and others doe reproue Annius for abusing the World with those glorious Titles h and Ancient names, and proue them to bee counterfeit: yet in my mind that of Xenophon seemeth to fauour of some truth (whether of antiquity or no, I meddle not) and that more then others of the same Edition. In that Pillar consecrated to the memory of Ninus the Inscription testifieth, that Cush or Cuz was the Æthiopian Saturne; as Cham the Egyptian; and Nimrod the Babylonian. When Cush i was dead, they say, Regma his Sonne succeeded in the Æthiopian Kingdome, and after him Dodan, after whose time is no record of certaine succession. Diodorus sayth, they chose him which was most comely of personage for their King. Memnon is chanted by Homer and the Poets, which lost his life at Troy in defence of Priamus, and was (some say) King of Æthiopia. Of the speaking Image of Memnon, yee haue seene in our Egyptian Relations. As for the wife of Moses, whereof Iosephus k sayth, That the Æthiopians hauing ouer-runne, and almost subdued Egypt, and none daring to make head against them, Moses (whom Thermutis Pharaohs daughter, had brought vp) was chosen Generall of the Egyptian Army, which he conducted into Æthiopia, and comming to the siege of Saba, Tharbis the Æthiopian Kings daughter fell in loue with him, and sent her Seruants to intreat of a Marriage with him: which hee accepted, vpon condition of deliuering the Towne vnto him; and that being done, married her: all this seemeth rather to be a Iewish Fable, thinking thereby to credit their Law-giuer, then agreeing to Moses, the Truth, and Scripture; and might haply arise from that speech, That Moses l his wife was an Æthiopian; of which wee haue spoken alreadie. Neyther is it likely that Moses would accept of Treason for the dowry with his wife, sealed with the bloud and ouerthrow of her Countrey and Citizens. And yet from hence doe some deriue m the originall of their Nation. After the Father of this supposed Tharbis, Derianus is said to raigne, who valiantly withstood Bacchus (which is thought to be Osiris, the Egyptian King, and after, their God) when he inuaded Egypt with an Army. Diodorus mentioneth Actisanes, a King of Æthiopia. Cepheus also is numbred in that Royall Catalogue: but of all, n Ganges was most famous, who with his Æthiopian Armie passed into Asia, and conquered all as farre as the Riuer Ganges, to which hee left that name, being before o called Chliaros. Hee conquered as farre also to the West, vnto the Atlantike Ocean, & gaue name to the Country of Guinea; which name, some p say, is corrupted of Gangina, the name it had receiued of Ganges. These things are written by some, & I will not swear for the truth, as safely we may do for that which the Scripture mētioneth of some of their Kings, in the dayes of Asa and Hezekiah, Kings of Iuda; whose puissance then was such, that q Zerah brought into the field a Million of men: and Tirrhaca was Corriuall vnto proude and r blasphemous Sennacherib, in sute for the Monarchy of the World. But whether he came out of this Æthiopia, or any other parts of Asia or Africke, is not very certaine. Before that time the Æthiopians had warred vnder Shishak King of Egypt, whom some take s for Sesostris. The Babylonians in Nabuchodonosors time conquered Egypt and Æthiopia, as t some expound the Prophesie of Ezechiel. And the Persian Empire extended from India to Æthiopia. u Agatharchides writeth, that the Inhabitants on both sides the Riuer Astabara, liue on Roots dryed in the Sunne: they are much infested with Lions, and not lesse with a lesse creature, but greater Enemy, the Gnats, which driue them to hide themselues in the waters from their fury, when the Dogge-starre ariseth; which, with these his Armies of Gnats bayteth the Lions also, whom their buzzing and humming noyse chase out of the Country. He speaketh of other their Neighbours which feed on the tops of twigs, running and leaping on the trees, and from bough to bough with incredible agility: others dwell on trees for feare of wild beasts, on whose flesh and in want thereof, on their hides, they liue; as Ostriches, Elephants; Grashoppers are the daily dyet to others: to which he addes the Cynamolgi, which are nourished with the Milke of Bitches of which they haue great Heards; which perhaps our Reader will not beleeue, neyther can I force him.

CHAP. II.

A continuation of the Æthiopian Antiquities and of the Queene of Saba.

Eliodorus in his Hiſtorie (which although for the ſubſtance it be fayned, as a loue Diſcourſe, yet muſt hold reſemblance with things done) and for the variety and conceit thereof, commended by that learned [a] German Philip; and by our Engliſh [b] Philip (the Prince of Poeſie) imitated in his Arcadia; telleth of Hydaſpes his Ethiopian King, that after his victory at Syene, and hauing there performed his deuotions, and ſeene their Niloſcopium (like to that at Memphis, and now at Cairo) and enquired the originals of their Feaſts, and holy rites done in honour of that Riuer: when [c] he came to the Cataracts, hee ſacrificed to Nilus, and the Gods of the Borders. He then ſent Meſſengers to the Wiſemen, whom hee calleth Gymnoſophiſtes, which are the Kings Counſellers, at Meroe, to certifie them of his victory, and to call a publike Aſſembly wherein to gratifie the Gods for the ſame, with Sacrifices and ſolemne pompes, in the field conſecrated to the Sunne, the Moone, and Bacchus. Perſina, the Queene, deliuered thoſe Letters to the Gymnoſophiſtes, who dwelt by themſelues in a Groue, conſecrated to Pan: and before they would giue anſwere, conſulted with the Gods by prayer, and then Siſimitres the chiefe of them promiſed all ſhould bee fulfilled. The Sacrifices were to be done to the Sunne and Moone, and therefore, except Perſina the Queene, which was Luna's Prieſt, no woman, for feare of contaminating the Holies of thoſe Pure and Bright Deities, might be preſent. Hydaſpes was Prieſt of the Sunne. Much preparation was made of Beaſts for their Hecatombe's and much concourſe of people croſſing the Riuer in thoſe Boats of Canes or Reeds. There were preſented the Images of their Gods, Memnon, Perſeus, and Andromeda: and nigh to them ſate the Gymnoſophiſta. Three Altars were erected; two ioyntly to the Sunne and Moone, a third to Bacchus by himſelfe; to him they offered all ſorts of Beaſts; to Sol, white Chariot-horſes; to the Moone, a yoke of Oxen. And when all things were ready the people with ſhouts demanded the Sacrifice, which vſually was accuſtomed for the health of their Nation: That was, ſome of the ſtrangers taken in the wars to be offered: Firſt, triall [d] was made by Spits of Gold, heated with fire, brought out of the Temple, whether the Captiues had euer knowne carnall copulation, for treading on the ſame with their bare feete, ſuch as were pure Virgins receiued no harme, others were ſcorched. Theſe were offered in Sacrifice to Bacchus; the other, to thoſe purer Deities. Theſe things haue I here inſerted, not as done, but as like to ſuch things, which among the Meroites were vſed to be done, and agreeing with the generall deuotions of thoſe Æthiopians. Philoſtratus [e] reporteth like matters of their Gymnoſophiſts, and of the Groue where they kept their generall conſultations: otherwiſe, each of them by themſelues apart, obſeruing their ſtudies and holies. They worſhipped Nilus, intending in their myſticall interpretation the Earth and the Water. They entertayned ſtrangers in the open Ayre. Theſpheſion was then (in Apollonius his time) chiefe of their ſocietie. At his command, an Elme did ſpeake. They held the Immortality of the ſoule. The Æthiopians ſacrificed to Memnon and to the Sunne.

Lucian, after his ſcoffing manner gratulates the Æthiopians that fauour, which Iupiter vouchſafed them, in going on feaſting, accompanied with the reſt of the Gods, and that twelue dayes together, if Homer [f] reckoned truly. But more [g] ſeriouſly elſewhere hee vnfoldeth that Myſtery, ſhewing that the Æthiopians were Inuenters of Aſtrologie, helped therein by the cleereneſſe of the Skie in that Region, and like temperature of the ſeaſons. Of them the Egyptians learned, and furthered that Science. In his Treatiſe [h] of Dancing, he affirmeth, that the Æthiopians vſed their haire in ſtead of a Quiuer, and neuer drew Arrow from thence to ſhoot in battle, but with a dancing geſture.

Diodorus [i] Siculus telleth, that the Æthiopians were accounted moſt ancient of all other men: and that not onely Humanitie, but Diuinity, was borne and bred amongſt them: Solemnities, Pompes, Holies, and Religious Rites, were their Inuention. And therefore (ſaith he) Homer brings in Iupiter feaſting with the Æthiopians. The reward of their pietie, was the Immunity of their Region from forreine Conqueſts. [k] Macrobius interpreteth Iupiters Banket with the Æthiopians, of that Ocean, which Antiquitie imagined to bee vnder all the Torrid Zone, that the fiery bodies of the Starres, ſuppoſed to bee nouriſhed with moyſture, might there quench their thirſt. So would thoſe good men drowne a great part of the African African and American World, in hospitality to the Starres, by their imagined middle-earth Ocean: which experience hath now sufficiently confuted.

Cambyses attempted and lost his Armie, and Semiramis entred, but soone returned. Hercules and Dionysius ouer-ran the rest of the World; the Æthiopians eyther for their deuotion they would not, or, for their strength, could not conquer. The Egyptians, some say, were Colonies from hence; yea, Egypt it selfe the dregges of that soyle, which Nilus carrieth out of Æthiopia.

The Egyptians borrowed of the Ethiopians, to esteeme their Kings as Gods, and to haue such care of their Funerals, the vse of Statues and their Hieroglyphicall Letters. Pierius and others haue written thereof at large. Their best men they chose for their Priests: & he among them, who, when the God is carried about, shall be possessed with some Bacchanall furie, is chosen King as by diuine appointment, and is of them worshipped as a God. His gouernment is gouerned by Lawes. They doe not put a Malefactor to death, but an Officer is sent to him with the signe of death, [m] whereupon he goeth home and slayeth himselfe. One would haue fled out of his Countrey, but the Mother of the Malefactor killed him, because he would not after his Country manner kill himselfe.

m The like is vsed in Iapan.

The Priests in Meroe exercised this authoritie (as is before said) ouer their Kings, and would send them word, that the Oracles of the Gods commanded them to die, neither might they reiect the diuine dispensation: and thus with arguments, not with armes, they perswaded them to a voluntary death. But in the time of Ptolomeus Secundus, King of Egypt, King Ergamenes well skilled in the Greeke Sciences, and Philosophie, reiected that Superstition. They say, that the custome yet (till Diodorus time) remayneth, that if the King bee maymed, or by some accident want any member, his Courtiers also will deprive themselues of the same. Yea when the King dyed, his friends thought it good fellowship to dye with him, esteeming that death glorious, and the surest testimony of friendship.

The Æthiopians [n] dwelling neerer to Arabia, armed their women in their warres, till they attained to a certaine age: the most of which ware a Ring of Brasse in their lip. They which dwelt further vp into the Countrey, were diuersly conceited of the Gods. For some they thinke immortall, as the Sunne, Moone, and the World: some mortall, as Pan, Hercules, Iupiter, for their vertues exalted to that dignitie. Strabo tels it in the singular number, that they thought that God to bee immortall, which is the cause of all things. Their mortall God was vncertaine, and wanted name; but they most commonly esteemed their Kings and Benefactors, for Gods. Some that inhabit neerer the Line, worshipped no Gods: and were much offended with the Sunne, and hiding themselues in the Fennes, cursed him when hee did rise. These things you may reade gathered out of Diodorus, and Strabo, [o] in Cornibius, Boemus, Draudius, and Thamara, with some other additions. Sardus saith, [p] that the Æthiopians were Circumcised; as were also (besides the Iewes, Egyptians, and Arabians) the Troglodita, Macrones Creophagi, and Inhabitants of Thermodoon.

As we haue shewed of the Macrobij, or long-liued Æthiopians, so there were others called Brachobij, of their shorter liues, whereof were reckoned two sorts: the Sidonij neere to the Red Sea, and the Erembi, which some [r] take for the Troglodita. They liue not aboue forty yeeres. Plutarch [q] out of Asclepeiades reporteth the like, saying, that they were old men at thirty yeeres. The same Author [s] telleth that they and the Arabians could not indure Mice: and that the Persian Magi did likewise, esteeming them Creatures odious to God. Alexander [t] ab Alexandro writeth, concerning the education of their Children, that, the Æthiopians seared their new borne Infants in the foreheads, to preuent the distillations of Rheumes from the braine. And when they are somewhat growne, they make tryall of their forwardnesse, by setting them on the backes of certaine Fowles, on which if they sit in their flying, without feare, they bring them vp very carefully: but if they shrinke and quake with feare, they expose them as a degenerate issue, vnworthy education: Their Letters they wrote not side-wayes, after the Greeke or Hebrew manner, but after the present Chinian custome, downwards. They had seuen Characters, euery of which had foure significations. What manner of writing they now vse, appeareth in [u] Damianus à Goez, or of Zaga Zabo rather, an Æthiopian Bishop, in his Treatise of their Religion, done into Latine by Damianus: but more fully in Iosephus [x] Scaliger de Emendatione Temporum, who hath lent vs a long Tractate in that language and writing, with the same words expressed in Hebrew and Latine Characters, and the interpretation of them also into Latine, in foure seuerall Columnes. He that listeth to reade some Philosophicall speculations of Nature in these Æthiopians, wherein they differ, and wherefore, from others, let him reade Cœlius [y] Rhodiginus of that Argument: hee sayth, that they were expert in naturall Magicke. Nicephorus [z] writes, that Alexander the Great sent Assyrian Colonies into Æthiopia, which many Ages after kept their owne Language, and like enough their Religion. * Dom. Niger. are farre distant from Nilus, are * said to liue a miserable and beastly life, not discerning in their lust, Mother, Daughter, or any other name of kinred. Of their ancient exploits, wee haue no continued Historie.

About the time of Christ, it appeareth that Candace was Queene of Ethiopia. Shee was a manly Virago, as Strabo testifieth, who liued at the same time, and followed Ælius Gallus in this Expedition. Hee forced Candace to send her Ambassadours to Augustus for peace, which shee obtayned. Sextus [a] Victor mentioneth this Ethiopian ambassage. Plinie saith, the name Candace continued to the Ethiopian Queenes many successions; whence perhaps Diesserus collecteth, that Ethiopia was gouerned onely by Queenes. Diocletian relinquished that part of Ethiopia, which the Romanes held beyond Egypt, as not able to beare the charges. Iustinian [b] sent his Ambassadours vnto Helliſtæus the Ethiopian King, and to Esimiphæus King of the Homerites, his Arabian neighbour, to aide him against the Persian. This Hellisthæus had warred against the Homerites for quarrell of Religion, because they were many of them Iewes, and others Gentiles, himselfe being a Christian, and because they made many forrages into the Christian Countries. He so farre preuailed, as hee made that Esimiphæus, a Christian, their King: whose yoke they shooke off soone after: and Abram, a slaue, vsurped the State. He had beene seruant to a Romane at Adulis, a Citie of Ethiopia, worthy mention especially in this matter for the ominous prosperitie of seruants. For the Citie it selfe was built by fugitiue seruants, which ranne from their Egyptian Masters: and this Abram a seruant there, obtayned to be a King: neither could the Ethiopian with all his might depose him. The like [c] ambassage to Archetas King of Ethiopia was sent by Iustinus for and against the Persian: both which I mention, to shew the greatnesse at that time of his State, nothing comparable notwithstanding to that which after befell them. Among the Ethiopian Antiquities, Plato testifies, as Orosius [d] cites him, that many plagues and vncouth diseases infested, and almost altogether destroyed Ethiopia, about that time that Bacchus inuaded India. If any delight himselfe in such Legendarie drosse as the counterfeit [e] Abdias, set forth by Wolfgangus Lazius, hath in it, touching the Magicians and Enchantments, and some other ceremonies of Ethiopia, I am loth to blot my paper with them: not because we are not certaine of the truth (for in others we may be deceiued) but because wee are certaine of the errors, so grosse, that they may be seene and felt. Maruell that [f] Lazius an Historian, would with his Notes illustrate such a hotchpotch of darknesse. And yet our Countriman [g] Harding leauing the cleare waters of Truth, hath swallowed the same swill, as the Iewell of our Church hath taught him. The Eunuch of Candace was the first Ethiopian Christian, as Luke Act. 8. and Eusebius [h] doe shew.

But before we come to their Christian conuersion, wee are first to declare their conuersion to Iudaisme (if it bee true which the Ethiopians write) in the time of Salomon. The Ethiopians hauing liued before a vagrant life, like the Nomades of old; and the Arabians, and other Libyan Nations, not farre from them in Asia and Africa at this day; Aruc the Ethiopian King first fixed a settled abode at Axuma, and made it the Royall Citie; [i] after whom followed Agab, and in the third place Ghedur, or Sabanut, which subdued all Ethiopia, and left the Kingdome to his daughter Makeda, that reigned eightie yeeres. Anno 50. of her reigne shee visited Salomon. After her they reckon these Kings till Christs time, Melic, Audedo Anda, Gigasio, Zangua, Guasio, Antet, Bahara, Canada Chanze, Endur, Guaza, Endrath, Chaales, Setija, Aglaba, Anscua, Breguas, Guase, Beseclugna, Baazena, in whose time they say Christ was borne. Genebrard sets downe the times of their Reigne, which hee confesseth, and it selfe conuinceth to be false. This Queene of Saba before mentioned in our discourse of Arabia (of which Countrie * I thinke shee then was, and these Abassens since that time thence descended, and transplanted) is by [k] Iosephus called Nicaule, the Queene (saith he) of Ethiopia and Egypt. But Zaga Zabo [l] in the Ethiopian Historie which hee wrote, and caused to be done into Latine by Damianus a Goes, calls her Maqueda, whose Historie the Ethiopians haue written in a Booke as bigge as all Pauls Epistles. The summe of his report is this: Shee was a worshipper of Idolls as her Ancestors had beene, when as fame filled her eares with the renowme of Salomons name: and then sent a messenger to Ierusalem, to learne the truth, who at his returne confirming those former reports, shee went her selfe to visit him. Of him, besides many other things shee learned the Law, and the Prophets. By him shee conceiued also a sonne, of whom shee was deliuered in her iourney homewards, and named him Meilech. After twentie yeeres education in Ethiopia, shee sent him to Salomon his father, to be instructed of him in wisdome, desiring him to consecrate her sonne King of Ethiopia, before the Arke of the Couenant; shee ordayned also, that women should not henceforth inherit, as before had bin accustomed. Salomon did this, and changed his name to Dauid: and after long instruction, sent him back to his mother, attended with many noble compa-

companions, among whom was Azarias the sonne of Zadok the Priest. This Azarias caused Tables to be made like to those in the Arke; and pretending to sacrifice for the good successe of his iourney, went in and stole the Tables of the Law, leauing in their roome these later counterfeits, which he reuealed not to any, till he came to the borders of Ethiopia. Then Dauid being made acquainted with the fact, danced for ioy, as his Grandfather Dauid had done before the Arke wherein the Tables were inclosed, his people making great ioy. His Mother resigned to him the Empire, and from that time to this, the Kingdome hath passed in a right Line, from male to male: Circumcision also with the Law of Moses hath beene obserued. The Officers which Salomon appointed his Sonne, are still continued in the same Families and order; nor may the Emperour chuse them out of any other stocke then those of the Iewes. This long Legend I report, not for the truth, but for that Religious conceit wherewith it is accepted in Ethiopia: for who knowes not, that none but the High Priest, and that but once a yeere, entred into that holy place, where the Arke was, that I speake not of Nadabs and Abihu's fire, with other diuine Iudgements? Vzzahs touching; and the Bethshemites viewing the Arke at so deere a rate; could but make dreadfull so damnable an attempt. Besides, wee should haue looked for our blessed Sauiour out of Ethiopia, where Salomons Heires still reigne (if these say true) and not goe to Salathiel and Zorobabel, descended of another brother, and therefore further off from the throne of their Father Dauid, on which Christ was to sit, and to which he was borne, next and apparant Heire, euen according to the flesh. And yet doth Genebrard credit these reports, and Baronius also in part, as Luys de Vrreta reporteth. This Luys hath written three large Bookes in Spanish, collected (as he sayth) out of Don Iuan de Baltasar, an Ethiopian of great account, who had beene Embassadour from his Master Alexander the Third, the great Negus, into Persia and other places, and came into Spaine with his licence to imprint his Ethiopian History. Out of him Luys reporteth, that the former Booke, whence Zago Zabo the Bishop, Embassadour to the King of Portugall, had taken those things, is Apocrypha: yet so, as that it is true concerning that report of Maquedas conception, and the Royall Discent from thence till these times. The stealing of the Tables hee denieth; and affirmeth, that the truth was, that Salomon had bestowed on the Queene of Saba a fragment of the Tables, which Moses brake in his zeale for the Israelites Idolatrie with the Golden Calfe. For that conception by Salomon, hee proueth it by the Ethiopian Records, the title of their King, and his Armes; which are the same, which the Tribe of Iuda gaue, viz. a Lion rampant, crowned, in a field Or, with this Inscription, The Lion of the Tribe of Iuda hath ouercome. Since they were Christians they haue added to this Armes a Crosse, which the Lion holdeth in his right foot. And in this right they lay challenge to Ierusalem for their Inheritance. Now for the fragment of the Table which Moses brake, it is receiued for a truth throughout Ethiopia, and it is still preserued in the Hill Amara as the greatest Iewell in the World. Baltasar had often seene and handled it. It seemeth to be of the Chalcedonie stone, shining, and transparent; and is a corner of a square Table, the broken edges yet being manifest, with the letters, some broken, some whole, much differing from the common Hebrew (which Genebrard sayth the Iewes inuented, thereby to differ from the Schismaticall Kingdome of the Israelites, of the ten Tribes; the Samaritans still retayning the former, as both hee and Scaliger affirme.) But these letters cannot bee read; for hee brought a learned [n] Iew, skilfull in all the Easterne Languages, Persian, Arabike, Indian, Chinois, &c. yet knew them not. This relique is with such deuotion admired of the Iewes, that when they passe but within sight of that Hill Amara, they prostrate themselues on the ground with reuerence, and for this cause make much of the Ethiopians (whersoeuer they meete them) as a people beloued of God, to whom he hath imparted such a Relique. They [o] tell also a tale (I thinke so likewise of the former) of the Queene of Saba, that in her iourney homewards she had a reuelation concerning a piece of Wood which shee saw, that it should bee the same whereon Christ should after die for Mankind: wherefore adoring the same with much deuotion and teares, she wrote to Salomon thereof, who hid it in the earth foure [p] Stades, where the Poole of Bethesda was made afterwards, and by vertue thereof wrought Miracles. But the Ethiopian Superstition hath Fables enough of her owne, and needeth not the officious helpe of Romish Saints in this kind.

As for that succession of Iewish Officers; Luys denyeth it (himselfe therefore denyed by later examiners) and sayth, the Iewes are no where more hated then in Ethiopia: and Alexander the Third, late Emperour among them, banished all Iewes and Mores out of all his Dominions: The Officers of the Emperour are (sayth hee) the Sonnes of the Tributary King his Vassals, and the noblest of his subiects. And for the Iewes which came with Meilech, or Meilelec, (after called Dauid) his next successor Iosu (so hee calleth him) becomming an Apostata, reduced Idolatry: and whereas Dauid his Father had giuen them one of the Temples dedicated to the Sunne in mount Amara, to make it an house of Prayer, to the God of Israel, casting forth the Idols therein; now in this Iosues dayes some of them returned to Ierusalem, or to other Prouinces of Africa, and some inhabited the vtmost parts of Africa, neere the Cape of Good Hope, and Desarts not before inhabited. And the said Don Iuan de Baltasar, being sent by the Emperour into the Lands of Monopopata (so he calleth it) and of Galofes, of Barbiziu, of Mandinga, and of Zape, which are inhabited of Idolatrous Gentiles, hee found among them some of these Iewes descended of that exiled stocke (as themselues also hold) which had forgotten their Iudaisme, and all knowledge of the Scriptures, onely had retained some reliques of it, and abstinence from Swines flesh, differing also from those Gentiles, in worshipping one God, whereas the other acknowledge One great God, whom they call Caramias, but worship also Tigres, Lions, Flyes, Spiders, Snakes, Lizards, and whatsoeuer first meete them in the morning. These Gentiles [q] call the Iewes Tabayqueros, and will not admit them to purchase houses, or inheritance, but eyther vse them as Interpreters, or Factors for Merchants (which is the higest step they can attaine to) or else to employ them in base drudgeries, to be their porters, slaughter-men, and such like; that they seeme rather slaues to those barbarous Nations, then to enioy any liberty of freemen. Rightly may those Nations bee called Barbarous, which seeme rather to barke then to speake, and yet they scorne that any should abase them, with the basest of titles in their opinion, to call them Tabayquero, and reuenge it with the death of the wrong doer. But I feare me our Frier will be found a Lyer, howsoeuer I am forced to relate many things out of him, hauing written so largely of this Ethiopian subiect with such boldnesse, and pretending such assurance from reports of that Balthasar, as if no doubt were to be made of his assertions.

CHAP. III.

Of PRESBYTER IOHN: and of the PRIEST-IOHNS in Asia: whether that descended of these.

HAuing now declared the antiquities of Ethiopia, drawne out of ancient Authors, let vs neerer hand behold, what neerer our times, Others haue reported thereof. Wherein first we will heere insert out of [a] Scaligers annotation, vpon the Ethiopian Ecclesiasticall Calendar or Computation of times, somewhat remarkeable, and fitting to our present purpose. The name (sayth hee) of the Christian Ethiopians is not now first made knowne to vs. For their Church not onely at Ierusalem and Constantinople, but at Rome also and Venice, hath had liberty a good while to vse their owne Rites. The Portugals, and Francis Aluares haue further discouered them: Before, we onely heard the name of Ethiopia. A wonder it is, that some ages since, [b] their Emperours name was made knowne to vs out of Asia, rather then out of Ethiopia it selfe. Three hundred yeeres agoe, the Ethiopian Kings reigned in Asia, especially in Drangiana, the borders of Susiana, India, and China, vntill the Tartars dispossessed them of the Asian Empire. For Cingis first, the first Tartar King, slue Vncam, the Ethiopian Emperour: and his Posteritie chased the Abissines out of Moin and China, and forced them to flee into Africa. Often haue I maruelled that a people of no knowledge in these times of Sea-affaires, could atchieue so mightie exploits, as to propagate their Empire, from Ethiopia to China. Since that time the knowledge of that Emperour hath come to vs in the name of Prestegiano: (which in the Persian tongue (as much now of reckoning in Asia, as the Latine in the West) signifieth, [c] Apostolike, inferring thereby that he is a Christian King of the right faith. For Prestegan signifieth Apostles, and Prestegani Apostolicall; Padescha Prestigiani, the King Apostolicall, in Arabian Melich ressuli, in Ethiopian Negusch Chawariawi. Of this greatnesse of their Empire, in Asia are witnesses those Ethiopian Crosses, which are seene in Giapan, China, and other places. Yea, the Temple of Thomas the Apostle in the Region of [d] Malabar, hath nothing in it but is Ethiopian, the crosses, building, and name it selfe. It is called, [e] Hanarija, which in Ethiopian is as much to say, as, Apostle: which Marcus Paulus falsly expounideth, a Holy man. This name in the Author seemeth to be giuen not to the Church, but to the Apostle himselfe) Paulus addeth that the remainder of the Christians subiect to Prestegian abode in Tenduch. The neighbouring Arabians call them now Habassi, and wee from thence Abissines, or Abassenes: they call themselues Chaldæans: for their ancient and elegant Language, in which their Books are written, is neere to the Chaldæan and Assyrian. Moreouer, the Ecclesiasticall History testifieth, and out of the same Nicephorus, lib.9.c.18. that that many Colonies were sent out of Assyria into Ethiopia. They are there called Axumitæ, of their chiefe Citie, but by themselues, as Alaarez affirmeth, Chasebuno. More may we see hereafter of their Rites, and other things worthy of knowledge, in the Institutions [d] of that tongue which we haue diligently, and Methodically written.

These words of Scaliger haue made me take some paines in the search of the premisses; for, hee differeth from the opinion of others, which haue written any thing of Presbiter or Priest Iohn (as they terme him) in Asia, whom the Tartars subdued. Ortelius [e] maketh a Presbyter Iohn in Asia, and another in Africa, if I vnderstand him. As for that Vncam, William de Rubruquis, which trauelled those parts in the morning of the Tartar-greatnesse, Anno 1253. reporteth that one Con Can raigned in Kara-Cathay, or blacke Cathay, after whose death a certaine Nestorian Shepheard (a mightie Gouernour of the people called Tayman, which were Nestorian Christians) exalted himselfe to the Kingdome, and they called him King Iohn, reporting of him tenne times more then was true, as is the Nestorians wont. [f] For notwithstanding all their great boasts of this man, when I trauelled along by his Territories, there was none that knew any thing of him, but onely a few Nestorians. This Iohn had a brother, a mightie shepheard called Unc, which inhabited three weekes journey beyond him: hee was Lord of a Village called Cara Carum, his subiects called Crit or Merkits, were also Nestorians. But their Lord abandoning Christianitie, embraced Idols, and retained with him Priests of the said Idols. Tenne or fifteene dayes journey beyond his Pastures, were the Pastures of Moal, a beggerly Nation, and neere them the Tartars. Iohn dying, this Vnc became his Heire, and was called Vnc Can, (whom others call Vnc Can) and his droues and flockes ranged vnto the Pastures of Moal. About the same time one Cyngis a Blacke-smith in Moal, stole many of Vnc Cans Cattell: who in reuenge with his forces spoyled the Moals and Tartars. They agrieued, made Cyngis their Captaine, who suddenly brake in vpon Vnc, and chased him into Cataya; tooke his Daughter and married her, and had by her Mangu, that was then the Great Can when our Author wrote this. These Relations sauour not of any such Monarchie as should extend from Æthiopia, to those parts of Asia.

Marcus [h] Paulus telleth, that the Tartars were Tributaries to this Vncam, (so he calleth him) which saith hee, after some mens opinion signifieth in our language, Priest Iohn, but through his tyrannie prouoked to rebellion, they vnder the conduct of Cyngis, slue Vncam. And afterwards hee saith, that [a] Tenduc was vnder the subiection of Priest Iohn: but all the Priests Iohns that there raigned after Vncam, were tributarie to the Great Can: and in his time raigned one George, who was a Priest and a Christian, as were the Inhabitants. But hee held not so much as the [b] Priests Iohns had done: and the Great Cans did still ioyne in affinitie with this Familie, marrying their Daughters vnto these Kings. This George was the fourth after Priest Iohn, and was holden a great Seignior. Hee ruled ouer two Nations, called by some Gog and Magog, by the Inhabitans, Ung [c] and Mongul, where some were Mahumetanes; some Heathens, other Christians. It appeareth by their Histories, that Scaliger was deceiued, to thinke that this Priest Iohn had so large an Empire, seeing Rubruquis in the same Age, or soone after, could in his owne Countrey heare so little of him: and his posteritie in Marcus Paulus his time, continued tributarie Kings vnder the Tartar. The name Priest was giuen them of that function, which hee testifieth; George receiued, and Iohn perhaps of that first Shepheard that vsurped Con Cans estate. To let passe therefore that Presbyter Iohn in the North-east, we stumble on another mid-way betwixt that and Ethiopia. For so Ioannes [d] de Plano Carpini (sent Embassadour to the Great Can, from Pope Innocent, Anno 1246.) and Vincentius [e] in his Speculum, tell of the King of India Major, called Presbiter Iohn, being inuaded by the Tartars vnder the leading of Tossus Can, sonne of Cyngis, who before had subdued India Minor: Hee by a Stratageme acquitted his Realme of them. For making mens Images of Copper, he set each of them vpon a saddle on Horse-backe, and put fire within them, placing a man with a paire of bellowes on the horse-back behind euery Image. And so with many Images and Horses in such sort furnished, they marched against the Tartars: and when they were ready to ioyne, by kindling a fire in each Image, they made such a smoke, that the Indians wounded and slue many Tartars, who could not see to requite them thorow the smoke: but were forced to leaue that Countrey, and neuer after returned. Heere now wee meet with a new Presbyter Iohn in India Major, which whether he were the same with the Ethiopian, let vs a little examine.

India is by Marcus [f] Paulus diuided into three parts, the Lesser, Greater, and Middle: the first of them hee boundeth from Ciamba to Murfili, and saith, it had in it eight Kingdoms; the Middle called Abascia, had in it seuen Kingdomes, three whereof were Saracens, the rest Christians. Sixe of them were subiect to the seuenth. It was told me, saith hee, that after their Baptisme with water, they vsed another Baptisme with fire, branding three markes on their their forehead and both their cheekes. The Saracens vsed one brand from the forehead to the middle of their nose: They warre with the Soldan of Aden, and with the Inhabitants of Nubia, and are reputed the best warriours in India. The greater g India extendeth from Malabar, to the Kingdome of Chelmacoran, and had in it thirteene Kingdomes. This Abascia by the bordering enemies of Nubia and Aden is apparant to bee this Ethiopia where wee now are: euen by their Brands wee may know them: And this the Ancients called India. For Sidonius h calleth the Ethiopian Memnones, Indians: and Elianus i placeth Indians at Astaboras, one of the Riuers of Meroe: k Virgil also bringeth Nilus out of India. Vsque coloratis amnis deuexus ab Indis: which must needes be meant of Ethiopia. Nicephorus l reckoneth the Sabeans and Homerites people of Arabia vnto India. Sabellicus m complaineth of the confounding of these names India, and Ethiopia, saying, that most men did thinke Ethiopia next to Egypt, to bee that India, where Alexander ouerthrew Porus. This confusion of names, I thinke, did first grow from confusion of Nations. For as is before obserued out of Eusebius the Ethiopians arose from the Riuer Indus, and setled their habitation neere to Egypt. Perhaps they brought the Indian name also to these parts. Or else the ignorance of these remote Countries might doe it: in which respect, not onely a third part of the old World, but another new-found World, is now named India. Therefore Acosta and Adrianus Turnebus n esteeme India to be a generall name to all Countries which are farre off, and strange to vs, although it be properly attributed to the East Indies.

Now if any wonder at such an extrauagant discourse of India heere, let him know that in our search for Presbyter Iohn, which then was knowne to withstand the Tartars in Asia, I cannot see how hee can bee the Abessine or Æthiopian: but rather thinke that when a mightie Christian Prince was found in Æthiopia, they did imagine him to bee that Presbiter Iohn, of which they had heard in Asia, being furthered in this errour by the name, India, which, as is said, did generally comprehend both the true India, and this, more truely called Ethiopia. Now for that Presbiter Iohn in India, I take him for some Christian King: for at that time there were many Christians, as appeareth by Venetus, in manner dispersed throughout Asia: and some, called Saint Thomas Christians, remaine in India to this day. Why I thinke it not to agree to the Abissine, my reasons besides the former, are, the distance of place: all that huge tract of Arabia, with the wide Seas on each side, separating India from Ethiopia: the vnpassable Desarts by Land: No mention in Historie who should dispossesse them of that India Maior, where the Tartar had neuer any great power: the Histories o which wee haue of those Indian Princes, the Kings of Malabar, of Decan, the Samorin, &c. are against it: the difference of Religion; for those Indian Christians of Saint Thomas, are not branded with hote p Irons, nor Circumcised, nor agree in other Rites with the Ethiopian: the Ethiopian Historie challengeth no such large extents to their Empire, except in Africa, where they seate them in a continuall descent, from the time of Salomon, till now, whereas those Presbiter Iohns, had their dwelling and abode in Asia, as their Stories signifie. And further, the name q Priest Iohn is a name vnknowne in Ethiopia, and by ignorant mistaking of the Europæans, applied to that Ethiopian Emperour when first they heard of him, as saith Zaga r Zabo his Embassadour to the King of Portugall, who reproueth the men of these parts; saying, that he is named of them Belul, which signifieth Excellent, or precious, and in the Chaldean tongue, Ioannes Encos, which signifieth the same. Sabellicus saith, the Ethiopians called him Gyan; Linschoten affirmeth, Bel Gyan: (Bel signifieth the highest, and Gyan, Lord.) But s Frier Luys out of Baltasar the Æthiopian, sheweth that in the hill Amara are ancient records which testifie that from the time of that Queene that came to Salomon, the Emperours haue beene called Beldigian, the signification whereof is, a precious Stone, or a thing of great value: which Title hath continued to those Emperours, as Pharao to the Egyptians, and Cæsar to the Romanes. Some also of the Royall bloud (which are vsually kept, as after shall appeare in the hill Amara) when they are elected to the Empire, if there bee many of that Imperiall issue take Orders, and become Priests, not procreating any Children. Such saith hee in our times haue beene Daniel the second, Paphnutius, that succeeded to Naum and Alexander the third his successour, all which were both Priests and Kings; and therefore by the Ethiopians which resort to the Holy Sepulchre at Ierusalem, and vsed to speake Greeke, were called Priest Beldigian. This by corruption of the name by Merchants, and such as knew not the signification and also for breuities sake, was pronounced Priest Gyan or Iohn.

Now for the Priest Iohn in Asia, hee tels that when Saint Thomas was martyred in India, the three t Mags, who had visited CHRIST, by the leading of a Starre, in his Infancie, and had after beene consecrated Bishops ouer their seuerall Kingdomes (you must not deny their royaltie) by the Apostle; chose one amongst themselues to bee Priest and King, who was called Priest Iohn. If you beleeue not Peter de Natalibus, out of whom the Frier cites this, I should bee too much troubled in perswading you. Hee telleth also out of Otho Frisingensis, that that about the yeere 1145. one Iohn a Christian, both King and Priest, reigning in the furtheſt parts of the East, warred vpon, and ouer-came the Medes, Assyrians, and Persians, and had intended to free Ierusalem out of Saracenicall seruitude, but not finding passage ouer Tigris, was forced to returne. This is like to bee that Presbyter Iohn, whose posteritie vsed that strategeme before mentioned against the Tartars. And to him, I thinke, might fitly agree that Title of Prestegian (easily deflected and altered to Priest Iohn) whereof you haue heard out of Ioseph Scaliger. I haue seene a Manuscript u in old French, pretended to bee a Letter from Prester Iohn, to the Emperour Frederike, wherein is discourſed of the ſite, greatneſſe, puiſſance, wealth, and other rarities of his eſtate: but finding ſo many monſters, and vncouth relations therein, I could not bee ſo prodigall of faith, or penurious of iudgement, as to value his authoritie at any high rate: wherein Sir Iohn Mandeuill ſeemes to haue beene a lender or borrower, ſo iuſtly doe they agree, in diſagreeing from both probabilitie and poſſibilitie of truth: yet both in the one and the other, wee may obſerue the like ſituation of Preſter Iohns dwelling in theſe parts of Aſia, neere Perſia: and that ſuch a multitude of fables could not but haue ſome truth for their ground. My concluſion is, That for that name of Preſtegian, I like well Scaligers interpretation, and thinke that it may agree either to this, or ſome other Chriſtian Prince at thoſe times in India, which is farre neerer to Perſia, and from whence the Indians borrowed their Royall Titles, both in thoſe times and ſince, as Garcias ab Horto x and Linſchoten ſhew. Idalham or Adelham, the Title of the King of y Goa, and the Countries about, commonly called Idalcan, is not a proper name, but a Title of honour, ſignifying (as Adonizedek; Ioſh. 10. 1.) Lord, or King of Iuſtice: Niſamaluco, the ſpeare of the Kingdome; and ſuch like: Iſmael the Sophi (which name alſo is by ſome interpreted Elect, becauſe they pretended to bee or doe ſo, and others, the reprobate followers of a reprobate Religion) added the Title of Xa or Sha, to ſuch as embraced his new Sect, as Niſomoxa, &c. If the borrowing of names from the Persian language (ſo generall in thoſe parts) bee ſtill obſerued: no maruell if ſome Chriſtian King in thoſe times might ſtile himſelfe Preſtegian, or Apoſtolicall (which others not vnderſtanding, called Prieſt Iohn, or Prete Ianni) as being compaſſed with ſo many Saracens, the enemies of the Apoſtles, beſides Heretikes and Heathens. At Moſul is yet a Patriake, who in Paulus z time was of farre greater iuriſdiction, and as an Eaſterne Pope, ordayned Archbiſhops and Biſhops, through all the parts of India, beſides Cairo, and Baldach: and therefore no maruell if in India there were ſome great Chriſtian Prince, able to make a head againſt the Tartars in thoſe times: For euen in Cranganor * are yet ſuppoſed to bee threeſcore and ten thouſand Chriſtians: beſides a great number in Negapatan, and in Malipur: and very many in Angamale, and fifteene thouſand on the North of Cochin, where the Archbiſhop that dependeth on the Patriarke of Babylon, or Moſul, reſided: All which haue no communion with the Greeke, Roman, or Ethiopian Churches. And for the Ethiopian names or croſſes, either their Merchants when their ſtate was great, or ſlaues, which taken from them are euen in theſe times ſold deareſt of any other, and mount to great preferments of warre, vnder theſe Lords, might leaue ſuch impreſſions: or, ſome other, which as they profeſſed one Chriſt, ſo might haue ſome wordes and ceremonies common with the Ethiopian: although I muſt needes acknowledge, that many of thoſe croſſes haue not croſſed my way, nor any other Ethiopian foot prints.

Pardon me, gentle Reader, if I ſeeme tedious in this diſpute, ſeeing it is neceſſarie both for the vnderſtanding of the extent of the Power and Religion of this Precious or Prieſt Iohn: and Scaliger hauing aſcribed ſuch large bounds to his Empire, I could not but examine the ſame, otherwiſe profeſſing my ſelfe (ſi non magis amica veritas) euen willing, if I muſt needs erre, to erre with him, who hath in many tongues, and arts, ſhewed himſelfe perhaps the worthieſt Generall, and generalleſt Worthy, againſt Error, that euer wee haue had, the Alpha of learned men in our Age, as our learned a Morton teſtifieth of him, and a great light of learning, acknowledged by b Royall teſtimonie. His authoritie I would not ſeeme to contemne, and therefore haue entred this long ſearch. But Scaliger himſelfe hath ſince altered his opinion in the laſt Edition of his Emendation; in which theſe later Editions of this worke, might haue excluded alſo this long diſpute, but that it may ſerue to illuſtrate both this and other parts of our Hiſtorie, and therefore doe ſtill ſuffer it to remayne.

Relations of the Æthiopian Empire, collected out of ALVARES, BERMVDESIVS, and other Authors.

TO come now to the Æthiopian Greatnesse of this great Æthiopian; his Title would be a sufficient Text for a more sufficient glosse, then we can giue. In a Letter[a] to King Emanuel, after diuers words concerning the Trinitie, follow; These Letters sendeth Atani Tinghill, that is, the Frankincense of the Virgin, which was his name in Baptisme, but at the beginning of his Raigne, [b] hee tooke to name Dauid, the beloued of GOD, Pillar of the Faith, descended of the Tribe of Iuda, Sonne of Dauid, Sonne of Salomon, Sonne of the Pillar of Sion, Sonne of the seed of Iacob, Sonne of the hand of Marie, Sonne of Nahu [c] according to the flesh, Emperour of the Greater and Higher Æthiopia, and of most large Kingdomes, Territories and Iurisdictions, the King of Xoa, Caffate, Fatigar, Angote, Baru, Baaliganze, Adea, Vangue, and Goiame, where Nilus springeth; Of Damaraa, Vaguemedri, Ambeaa, Vagne, Tigri-Mahon; Of Sabaym, the Countrey of the Queene of Saba, of Barnagasso, and Lord as farre as Nubia, which confineth vpon Ægypt.

c In a Letter to the Pope is added, Sonne of the Holy Apostles, Peter and Paul, according to grace.

Heere

Heere are names enough to skarre a weake braine, a great part whereof are now his (as some say) in Title onely. For at this present, if Barros and Botero bee beleeued, his Neighbours haue much encroched vpon him: as a little before we haue shewed (a thing wholly denied by the later Relations of Frier [d]Luys de Urreta:) Yet seeing we are to trauell through all these Countreys, we will leaue the question of dominion to him and his neighbours, to try it with the sword: Our pen shall peaceably point out the places, and after that, the conditions. Barnagasso [e] is the nigheſt to vs, at least, by the neere situation of the red Sea, nigheſt to our knowledge. It stretcheth from Suachen almost to the mouth of the Streyt, and hath Abagni, or Astapus, on the South. It hath no other Port on the red Sea, but Ercocco. Neither hath the Prete any other Port but this in all his Dominion, being Land-locked on all sides. Anno 1558. [f] The Turks committed heere great spoile: They haue since taken from the Prete, all on the Sea side, and specially that Port of Ercocco, and the other of Suachen or Suaquem, and forced the Gouernour or vnder-King of this Prouince, to compound for a yeerely summe of a thousand ounces of Gold: besides his Tribute to the Ethiopian. To him are also subiect the Gouernmenrs of Dasila, and Canfila. And the Turke hath a Bassa [g] at Suaquem, called by Ptolomey, Sebasticum. Tigri-Mahon lyeth betweene Nilus, Marabo, two Riuers, Angote, and the Sea. Tigrai hath in it Cazumo, which is supposed the Seat-Royall of that great Queen, which visited Salomon. Angote is between Tigre-Mahon & Amara. Heere in Amara [h] is a steepe Hil, dilating it selfe in a round forme, many dayes iourny in compasse, enuironing with the steepe sides, and impassible tops thereof, many fruitfull and pleasant Vallies, wherein the kindred of the Prete are surely kept, for the auoiding of all tumults and seditions. Xoa hath store of corne and cattell: Goiame hath plenty of Gold: as Baguamedri hath siluer. In Fatigar is a Lake on the top of a high mountaine, twelue miles compasse, abounding with great varietie of fish; and thence runne many Riuers, stored with the same fish.

Damut is ennobled with slauerie. For the slaues that are hence caried captiues, in Arabia, Persia, and Egypt, proue good souldiers. The greater part of this Kingdome are Gentiles, and the residue Christians. The Oxen (as Bermudez relateth) are almost as great as Elephants, their hornes very great, and serue for vessels to carie and keepe Wine and Water, as Barrels or Tankerds. There is found also a kinde of Vnicorne, wilde and fierce, fashioned like a horse, of the bigneſse of an Asse. Neere hereunto he addeth a Prouince of Amazons, whose Queene knoweth no man, and is honoured as a goddesse: they say, they were first instituted by the Queene of Saba: both like true, as that which followeth of Griffons, the Phœnix, and fowles so bigge, that they make a shaddow like a cloud. Couche is subiect to Damut: they are Gentiles: The Prince called Axgugce, that is, Lord of riches: he shewed vs (saith Bermudez) a Mountaine glistering in some places like the Sun, saying, all that was gold. More gold is said there to be, then in Peru, or in these parts iron. The head of the Monasteries of Amara Christned him, Gradeus the Emperour being his God-father, and named him Andrew. Gueguere was sometimes called Meroe: the Inhabitants are confederate with the Turkes and Moores, against the Abissines. Daneali and Dobas, are neere the red Sea, inhabited with Moores.

Io. Bermudez.

Many of these Countreys are diuersly placed by diuers: through ignorance of the exact situations: which Aluarez [i] in his so many yeares trauell in those parts, might well haue acquainted vs with, if he had first acquainted himselfe with rules of Art; to haue obserued by Instruments the true site and distances.

i Fr. Aluares.

In the Kingdome of Angole, iron, and salt is currant money. The Moores of Dobas haue a Law, prohibiting marriage to any, that hath not first slaine twelue Christians. The diuorces [k] and marrying the wiues of their brethren deceased, is heere in vse much like as with the Iewes.

k Aluar. c. 21.

In Bernagasso, Aluarez and his company, in their trauell were encountred with many great Apes as bigge as Weathers, their fore-parts hairie like Lions, which went not lesse then two or three hundred in a company: they would climbe any Rocke: they digged the earth, that it seemed as it had been tilled.

In the Countrey of the Giannamori, [l] as they trauelled, they crossed a certaine brooke or Riuer, that came downe from the Mountaines, and finding a pleasant place, shaded with the Sallowes, there they reposed themselues at noone: the water of the brooke was not sufficient to driue a Mill. And whiles the company stood, some on one side the brooke, some on the other, they heard a thunder, which seemed a farre off, but saw no likelihood of raine or winde; when the thunder was done, they put their stuffe in order to be gone, and had taken vp the Tent, in which they dined, when one of the company going by the brooke about his businesse, suddenly cried out, Looke to your selues: whereupon turning about, they saw the water come downe a speares depth with great furie, which caried away part of their their ſtuffe: and had they not (by good hap) taken vp their Tent, they together with it had beene carried away with the ſtreame. Many of them were forced to climbe vp the Sallowes. Such was the noiſe of water, and the rattling of ſtones, which came tumbling downe the Mountaines together, that the earth trembled, and the sky ſeemed to threaten a down-fall. Suddenly it came, and ſuddenly it paſſed. For the ſame day they paſſed ouer, and ſaw very many and great ſtones ioyned to thoſe which they had ſeen there before, d C. 135. ſee. c. 12. Some deriue Nilus from certain mountaines which are named mountaines of the Moone: but it comes firſt from the Lake Zembre, or Zaire: and paſſeth by this, where it is encreaſed. Berumdez.

In the Kingdome of Goyame, [d] the Riuer Nilus ſpringeth, it is there called Gion, and comes from two Lakes, which for their greatneſſe may ſeeme to bee Seas, in which, report goeth that Mermaydes, Tritons, or Men-fiſhes are ſeene, and ſome haue told me (ſaith Alua-rez) that they haue ſeene it. Peter Couillian a Portugall, which had liued a great part of his life in thoſe parts, told me, that he had been in that Kingdome by order from Queene Helena, to build there an Altar in a Church built by her, where ſhe was buried. Beyond that Kingdome, I was told, there were Iewes.

Don Iohn de Caſtro mentions a high Hill inhabited of Iewes, in theſe parts, which came, no man knowes from whence: but they defended the Prete againſt the Moores. Of the fals in Goyame, before is related out of Berumdez, that they make a noyſe like thunder. He ſaith ſaith that in Dembia Nilus runneth within thirty or fortie leagues of the Red-Sea, to which the Emperour purpoſed to cut a paſſage, as his Predeceſſor had begun. There is a great Lake thirtie leagues long, and twenty broad, with many Ilands, inhabited onely of Religious men. Agao is poſſeſſed of Moores and Gentiles mixed. He ſpeakes of the Kingdom of Ogliy, ſeuen or eight dayes iourney from Doaro, vnder which is a Prouince of Gentiles called Goragne, bordering with Quiloa and Mongalo, which are great Witches, and obſerue the entrails of ſacrificed Beaſts. They kill an Oxe with certaine Ceremonies, and anointing themſelues with the tallow thereof, make a great fire, ſeeming to goe into it, and to ſit down in a chaire therein; thence giuing Diuinations and anſwers, without burning. Their Tribute is two Lyons, three Whelpes, an Ounce of Gold molten, with certaine Hens and Chickens of the ſame metall. Sixe Buffes laden with Siluer, a thouſand Beeues, and the skinnes of Lyons, Ounces and Elkes. The Goffates are vulgarly reported to haue beene Iewes: they are hated in other Prouinces.

e C. 159.

The houſes of the Ethiopians [e] are round, all of Earth, flat roofed, couered with thatch, compaſſed with yards. They ſleepe vpon Oxe-hides. They haue neither Tables nor Table-cloathes, but haue their meat ſerued in on plaine woodden Platters. Some eate fleſh raw; others broyle it. Artillery they had not, vntill they bought ſome of the Turkes. Writing is little (and ſcarce a little) vſed amongſt them: the Officers diſpatch matters of Iuſtice by Meſſengers, and word of mouth. There is no wine made of the Grape (but by ſtealth) except at the Pretes and [f] Abunas: Others vſe Wine made of Raiſins, ſteeped ten dayes in water, and ſtrained, which is cordiall and ſtrong. They haue plenty and want of Metals; Gold, Siluer, &c. the ſoyle yeeldeth, but they haue not Art to take it. They haue no coine of Gold or Siluer; Salt is the moſt currant money. Sugar canes they haue, but want skill to vſe them. The Mountaines and Woods are full of Baſill and other odoriferous plants. They haue ſtore of Bees and Honey: but their hiues are placed in Chambers, where making a little hole in the wall, the Bees goe in and out. There are ſome places very cold. The Commons are miſerably oppreſſed by their ſuperiours. No man may kill an Oxe though it be his owne, without licence from the Gouernours: there were no Shambles but at the Court. The common people ſeldome ſpeake truth, no not vpon an oath, except they are compelled to ſweare by the head of the King; they exceedingly feare excommunication. Their oathes are in this ſort: The partie to bee depoſed goeth with two Prieſts, carrying with them fire and incenſe to the Church-dore, whereon he layeth his hand.

f Abuna is their Patriarch.

Then the Prieſt adiures him, ſaying: If thou ſhalt ſweare falſely, as the Lyon deuoureth the beaſts of the Forreſt, ſo let the Diuell deuoure thy ſoule: and as corne is ground vnder the Mil-ſtone, ſo let him grinde thy bones: and as the fire burneth vp the wood, ſo let thy ſoule burne in Hell: (the party anſwereth to euery of theſe clauſes) Amen. But if thou ſpeake truth, let thy life bee prolonged with honour, and let thy ſoule enter into Paradiſe with the Bleſſed, Amen. Then doth he giue his teſtimonie. They haue Bookes written in Parchment.

Let vs now come vnto the Court of their Emperour, which was alway mouing, and yet the greateſt Town that his whole Empire containes. For there are few which haue in them one thouſand and ſixe hundred Families, whereas this moueable Citie hath fiue thouſand, or ſixe thouſand Tents, and Mules for carriage about fifty thouſand. In his march from one place to another, if they paſſe by a Church, he and all his company alight, and walke on foot, till they be paſt. There is alſo carried before him a conſecrated ſtone or Altar, vpon the ſhoulders of certaine Prieſts appointed to that office. They call him Acegue, which ſignifieth Emperour, and Negus, that is, King.

By commandement of the Queene Maqueda, which visited Salomon, women c are (say they) circumcised: Both sexes are circumcised at eight dayes old: and the males fortie dayes after; the females foure score; (vnlesse sickenesse hasten the same) are baptized. As for the rites of their Christianitie, it belongeth not to this place to expresse. Their circumcision Zabo saith, is not obserued, as if it made them more worthy then other Christians, for they thinke to bee saued onely by Faith. They vse this and distinctions of meates, and Mosaicall rites, yet so, as he that eateth, should not despise him that eateth not, and not condemning others that refuse them: but yet thinking that neither Christ, nor the Apostles, nor the Primitiue Church had disannulled them, interpreting also the Scriptures to their purpose. Of their agreeing with other Churches in the most points of substance, the Author of the d Catholike Traditions hath written: and when I make a Christian Visitation of these parts, it shall bee further discouered.

The succession is not tyed to the eldest, but to him whom the father appointeth. For Dauid which sent his Embassage to Portugall, was the third sonne in order, and for modestie in refusing to sit in his fathers Throne, which in the same triall his other brethren had accepted, was preferred to that which he had refused: the other reiected for their forward acceptation. The King offered e the King of Portugall an hundred thousand drammes of gold, and as many Souldiers towards the subduing of the Moores, besides other things meete for the warre. It seemes, the difference of the Ethiopian, and Popish superstition was the chiefe hinderance in this businesse: neither partie being able (if willing) to reconcile their long-receiued differences from each other, and the truth. Eugenius the Pope, and the King, then named, The Seed of Iacob, f had written to each other; and Aluarez yeelded g obedience to the Pope, in the name of the Prete at Bologna, in the presence of Pope Clement the seuenth, and Charles the fift. But all this sorted to none effect. For Pope Paul the fourth sent an Ambassage to Claudius, then the Abassine Emperour, employing in the same thirteene Iesuites, one of which was made Patriarke, and two Bishops, in their hopefull Ethiopian Hierarchie. Ignatius, the Founder of the Iesuites, wrote a long Letter also, which Maffæus and h Iarric haue inserted at large. Thus in the yeere 1555. Iohn the third, King of Portugall, vndertooke the charges to conuey them thither: and sent i Consalaus Rotersgius, to prepare them way by a former Ambassage to Claudius, whose eares hee found fast cloied to such motions: Whereupon the new Patriarke stayed at Goa, and Ouiedus one of the Bishops, with a Priest or two went thither, where when they came, they found Claudius slaine, and his brother k Adamas, a cruell man, and an Apostata sometimes from his Faith, in the Throne. Hee cast the new Bishop into bands, and drew him into the warres with him, where the Emperour was discomfited, and he taken and stripped of all, and at last miserably dyed, and with him the hope of Romish Abassia. Iohn Nonnius Barretus, the designed Patriarke, refused (as Maffæus saith) the Archbishoprick of Goa, where his brother was Vice-roy, and remayned subiect to the Iesuiticall Societie to his death. In the yeere 1559. Ioannes Bermudesius l returned to Lisbone. He wrote a discourse of his Ambassage from the Ethiopian Emperour to Iohn the third, King of Portugall, and of his aduentures in those parts befallen him. In which he relateth, that Abuna Marcos being at the point of death, An. 1535. the Emperour willed him to nominate his Successor, whereupon hee appointed this Bermudez, and ordered him with all sacred Orders: which hee accepted vpon condition of the Popes confirmation, whereto the Emperour consented, desiring him to goe to Rome to giue obedience to the Pope, and from thence to Portugall to conclude Tagazano (so he calleth him) his Ambassage. Paul the third confirmed him Patriarke of Alexandria. Hee apprehended Tagazano, as Onadinguel enioyned, and clapt Irons on him. His Emperours request was a marriage to be had with the Kings sonne of Portugall, the Ethiopian succession to remayne his Dowrie: also to send men against Zeila; and Pioners to cut thorow a Hill, thereby to bring Nilus to annoy Egypt. Foure hundred and fiftie were sent accordingly by Garcia of Noronya. But Onadinguel was dead, and Gradeus was Emperour, who ouer-threw the Moores, and slue the Kings of Zeila and of Aden. This Emperour fell out with the Portugals, and sent to Alexandria for another Abuna, whose name was Ioseph, so that none acknowledged Bermudez but the Portugals. Sabellicus m saith, hee had conference with some Ethiopians, which said that their Lord ruled ouer threescore and two Kings. They called him Gyam, which signifieth Mightie. They wondered why the Italians called him a Priest, seeing hee neuer receiued Orders, onely he bestowed Benefices: and is neither called Iohn nor Ianes, but Gyam. Some report of him things incredible, as one Web n an English man in his Tales of his Trauels. Hee hath gold enough shut vp in a Caue, to buy the moytie of the world, as L. Regius o affirmeth, and can rayse an Armie of ten hundred thousand (saith Sabellicus.) Yet the Pesants are not employed in militarie seruice: but onely the Caias, which are men brought vp thereto. They warre not in the Lent, p except against themselues with extremitie

c Strabo, lib. 16. tells of circumcised women in these parts. Quemadmodum viri præputium habent, mulieres etiam habent quandam glandulosam carnem quam vocant, nisi inceptam accipiendo characteri Circumcisionis. Any one man may Circumcise, and it is done without solemnitie, or ceremonie.

tie of fasting, so weakning their bodies, that the Moores [q] make that their Harueſt of Abiſſine captiues. Of this their faſting, Aluares saith; that they begin their Lent ten dayes before vs: and after Candlemasse, fast three dayes in remembrance of Niniuehs repentance; many Friars in that space eating nothing: and some women refusing to suckle their children aboue once a day. Their generall fast is bread and water, for fish is not easily had, they being farre from Sea, and ignorant to take it. Some Friars eate no bread all Lent long for deuotion: some, not in a whole yeere, or in their whole life, but feede on herbes, without oile, or salt: that I speake not of their girdles of Iron, and other their hardships, which my pen would willingly expresse, if my method forbade mee not. This fasting (as exposing their State to hostile inuasions and insolencies) may finde place and mention here. Their Friars and Priests in Lent eate but once in two dayes, and that in the night. Queene [r] Helena, that sent her Ambassadour to King Emanuel, was reported to eate but three times a weeke, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. On Sundayes they fast not. In Tigray and Tigremahon they fast neither Saturday nor Sunday: and they marry (because they haue two moneths priuiledge from fasting) on Thursday before our Shrouetide. They that are rich, may there marry three wiues, and the Iustice forbids them not; onely [s] they are excommunicated from entring the Church.

Some [t] affirme, that the Princes of Egypt haue time out of minde payed to Prester Iohn a great tribute (continued by the Turkes, which Luys saith is three hundred thousand Zequis, euery Zequi being sixteene Rials, and with vs eight Shillings) for that by him the furious spirit of Nilus is slacked and cooled, being detayned in the way by many Sluces for that purpose made. The great Turke denying this, [u] the Abassine caused those Dammes to be broken, and by drowning Egypt in vncouth manner, forced that great Monarch to composition. Aluarez denies both the Mountaynes of Luna, and the melting of Snow, which is supposed the cause of this Riuers hastinesse, and ascribeth the ouer-flowing of Nilus to the extreme rainesin Ethiopia, whose Fountaynes diuers Portugals haue seene (hee saith) in Goyame. The Turke notwithstanding hath (by warring vpon him) erected a new Beglerbegship in his Dominions. Aluarez liued there sixe yeeres, and was once within thirtie miles of Nilus, but in all his trauels neuer saw that Riuer. So little accesse haue the Ethiopians (barred out by vnpassable passages) vsually to the same.

Andrea Corsali [x] reporteth, that the Prete Dauid was of oliue colour, but shewed his face but once in the yeere, hauing at other times his face couered for greater state, and therefore also spake to none, but by an Interpreter. The Inhabitants are branded with fire, which they vse not for Baptisme, but in obseruation of a custome of Salomon, who so marked his slaues, as they affirme. Friar Luys giueth another reason thereof, saying, that when the world groned vnder Arrianisme, the Abassine Emperour caused his Subiects to brand themselues with a threefold marke or stampe in the forehead, to testifie their faith of and in the Trinitie: which now since their commerce with the Roman Christians, is in manner wholly left, except in the ruder and more vnciuill parts of Barnagasso, the borders of the Empire. The same Author [y] saith, that in Ethiopia are Elephants, the Rhinoceros, and (besides other beasts) the Vnicorne in the Kingdome of Goyame, and in the Hills of the Moone, but seldome seene, onely the horne is found, which he casteth in manner as the Hart. There are also (he saith) birds of Paradise: and such store and varietie of flowers all the yeere long, that their Eunuchs are alway decked with them. There is one flower not any where else known, called Choyabula, much resembling a Mary-gold, but exceeding faire in varietie and excellency of colours, fragrant smell, abundance of leaues in the flower, and with a more rare qualitie; beginning to open at noone, and so by little and little opening more and more till midnight, alway the sent encreasing with the opening: after midnight it shuts by little and little, till noone; denying by the same degrees her pleasing offices to both senses, of Sent, and Sight. He tells also of a little Bird, to which Nature hath committed the tuition of this Flower, which all the time that it is open flyes about it, driues away things offensiue, sings sweetly, and spreads her selfe thereon, with other things very strange, I dare not affirme very true. He mentioneth [z] also a bird, called the Rhinoceros of the ayre, much bigger then an Eagle, and hauing a bow-fashioned bill or beake foure foot long, and a horne betweene the eyes, with a black line alongst it. It is a cruell fowle, and attends on battells and camps. The Portugalls had sight of one at the Red Sea, when Soliman the Eunuch had his Nauie in the Red Sea. The horne is of the same propertie with that of the Vnicorne and Rhinoceros. There are fishes also called Rhinocerotes of the Sea; many of which are paid the Prete for Tribute.

Many many other Ethiopian rarities wee might obserue out of this Authour; but (if it deserue credit) the Hill Amara after his description, may furnish you for and beyond all the rest of Ethiopia, as a second earthly Paradise.

CHAP. V.

Relations of Ethiopian rarities, collected out of Friar LVYS, a Spanish Author.

§. I.

Of the Hill Amara.

THe hill Amara hath alreadie beene often mentioned, and nothing indeed in all Ethiopia more deserueth mention, whether wee respect the naturall site, or the employment thereof. Somewhat is written thereof by Geographers, and Historians, especially by Aluarez whom we haue chiefly followed in the former Relations of this Countrie, as an eye-witnesse of the most things reported: but neither they, nor he, haue any thing but by relation, sauing that he passed two dayes iourney along by the said Hill, and that also had almost cost him his life. But Iohn de Baltasar (saith our Friar) liued in the same a long time, and therein serued Alexander which was afterwards Emperor, and was often by commandement of the same man, when he was Emperor, sent thither: out of his Relations, Friar * Luys saith hee hath borrowed that which here we offer you. And here we offer you no small fauour to conduct you into, and about this place, where none may come but an Ethiopian, and that by expresse licence, vnder paine of leauing his hands, feet, and eyes behind, in price for his curiositie, and not much lesse is the danger of such as offer to escape from thence: Aluarez himselfe being an eye-witnesse of some such cruell executions inflicted for that offence. This Hill is situate as the Nauill of that Ethiopian Body, and Centre of their Empire, vnder the Equinoctiall Line, where the Sunne may take his best view thereof, as not encountring in all his long iourney with the like Theatre, wherein the Graces and Muses are Actors, no place more graced with Natures store, or furnished with such a store-house of bookes, the Sunne himselfe so in loue with the sight, that the first and last thing hee vieweth in all those parts, is this Hill; and where Antiquitie consecrated vnto him a stately Temple: the gods (if yee beleeue Homer, b that they feasted in Ethiopia) could not there, nor in the world find a fitter place for entertainment, all of them contributing their best store (if I may so speake) to the banquet, Bacchus, Iuno, Venus, Pomona, Ceres, and the rest; with store of fruits, wholsome ayre, pleasant aspect and prospect; secured by Mars, lest any sinister accident should interrupt their delights; if his garrisons of Souldiers were needfull where Nature had so strongly fortified before; onely Neptune with his ruder Sea-deities, and Pluto with his black-guard of barking Cerberus, and the rest of that dreadful traine (whose vnwelcome presence would trouble all that are present) are all, saue Charon, who attends on euery feast, yea now hath ferried away those supposed deities with himselfe, perpetually exiled from this place. Once, Heauen and Earth, Nature and Industrie, haue all beene Corriuals to it, all presenting their best presents, to make it of this so louely presence, some taking this for the place of our Fore-fathers Paradise. And yet though thus admired of others, as a Paradise, it is made a Prison to some, on whom Nature had bestowed the greatest freedome, if their freedome had not beene eclipsed c with greatnesse, and though goodly starres, yet by the Sunnes brightnesse are forced to hide their light, when grosse and earthly bodies are seene; their nobleneſse making them prisoners, that one Sunne onely may shine in that Ethiopian Throne.

It is situate in a great Plaine largely extending it selfe euery way, without other hill in the same for the space of 30. leagues, the forme thereof round and circular, the height such, that it is a daies worke to ascend from the foot to the top; round about, the rock is cut so smooth and euen, without any vnequall swellings, that it seemeth to him that stands beneath, like a high wall, wherein the Heauen is as it were propped: and at the top it is ouer-hanged with rocks, jutting forth of the sides the space of a mile, bearing out like mushromes, so that it is impossible to ascend it, or by ramming with earth, battering with Canon, scaling or otherwise to win it. It is aboue 20. leagues in circuit compassed with a wall on the top, well wrought, that neither man nor beast in chase may fall downe. The top is a plaine field, onely toward the South is a rising Hil, beautifying this Plaine, as it were with a watch-tower, not seruing alone to the eye, but yeelding also a pleasant spring which passeth through all that Plaine, paying his tributes to euery Garden that will exact it, and making a Lake, whence issueth a Riuer, which hauing from these tops espied Nilus, neuer leaues seeking to finde him, whom he cannot leaue both to seeke and finde, that by his direction and conueyance hee may together with him present himselfe before the Father and great King of waters, the Sea. The way vp to it is cut out within the Rocke, not with staires, but ascending by little and little that one may ride vp with eaſe; it hath alſo holes cut to let in light, and at the foote of this aſcending place, a faire gate, with a Corpus du Guarde. Halfe way vp is a faire and ſpacious Hall cut out of the ſame Rocke, with three windowes very large vpwards: the aſcent is about the length of a lance and a halfe; and at the top a gate with another guard. The aire aboue is wholeſome and delectable; and they liue there very long, and without ſickneſſe. There are no Cities on the top, but palaces, ſtanding by themſelues, in number foure and thirtie, ſpacious, ſumptuous, and beautifull, where the Princes of the Royall bloud haue their abode with their Families. The Souldiers that guard the place dwell in Tents.

There are two Temples, built before the raigne of the Queene of Saba, one in honour of the Sunne, the other of the Moone, the moſt magnificent in all Ethiopia, which by Candace, when ſhee was conuerted to the Chriſtian faith, were conſecrated in the name of the Holy Ghoſt, and of the Croſſe. At that time (they tell) Candace aſcending with the Eunuch (whoſe proper name was Indica) to baptize all of the Royall bloud, which were there kept, Zacharie the eldeſt of them, was in his baptiſme named Philip, in remembrance of Philips converting the Eunuch, which cauſed all the Emperours to be called by that name, till Iohn the Saint, who would be called Iohn, becauſe he was crowned on Saint Iohns day: and while they were buſie in that holy worke of baptizing the Princes, a Doue in fierie forme came flying with beames of light, and lighted on the higheſt Temple dedicated to the Sunne, whereupon it was afterwards conſecrated to the Holy Ghoſt by Saint Matthew the Apoſtle, when he preached in Ethiopia. Thoſe two Temples were after that giuen to the Monaſticall Knights of the Militarie Order of Saint Anthonie, by Philip the ſeuenth, with two great and ſpacious Couents built for them. I ſhould loſe both you and my ſelfe, if I ſhould leade you into their ſweet, flouriſhing, and fruitfull gardens, whereof there are ſtore in this Plaine, curiouſly made, and plentifully furniſhed with fruits both of Europe plants there, as Peares, Pippins, and ſuch like; and of their owne, as Oranges, Citrons, Limons, and the reſt; Cedars, Palme-trees, with other Trees, and varietie of herbes and flowers, to ſatisfie the ſight, taſte and ſent. But I would entertayne you, onely with rarities, no where elſe to be found; and ſuch is the Cubayo tree, pleaſant beyond all compariſon in taſte, and whereunto for the vertue is imputed the health, and long life of the Inhabitants; and the Balme tree, whereof there is great ſtore here: and hence it is thought * the Queene of Saba carried and gaue to Solomon, who planted them in Iudæa, from whence they were tranſplanted at Cairo long after. The plentie of Graines and Corne there growing, the charmes of birds alluring the eares with their warbling Notes, and fixing the eyes on their colours, ioyntly agreeing in beautie, by their diſagreeing varietie, and other Creatures that adorne this Paradiſe, might make me glut you (as ſweet meates vſually doe) with too much ſtore. Let vs therefore take view of ſome other things worthy our admiration in this admired Hill, taking the Friar for our guide, whoſe credit I leaue to your cenſure.

His liberall reports of the Librarie, and incredible treaſures therein.

SVch is the ſtately building of the two Churches aforeſaid, with their Monaſteries, the pillars and roofes of ſtone, richly and cunningly wrought, the matter and the workmanſhip conſpiring magnificence; that of Iaſper, Alabaſter, Marble, Porpherie; this with painting, gilding, and much curioſitie; the two Monaſteries, containing each of them 1500. religious Knights and Monkes; each hauing alſo two Abbots; one of the militarie Knights; the other ſpirituall, of the Monkes, inferior to the former. In the Monaſterie of the Holy Croſſe are two rare peeces, whereon Wonder may iuſtly faſten both her eyes: the Treaſurie and Librarie [a] of the Emperor, neither of which is thought to be matchable in the world. That Librarie of Conſtantinople, [b] wherein were 120000. bookes, nor that at Pergamus of 200000. nor the Alexandrian Librarie, wherein Gellius [c] numbreth 700000. (had the fire not beene admitted, too haſtie a Student, to conſume them) yet had they come ſhort, if report ouer-reach not, of this whereof wee ſpeake; their number is in a manner innumerable, their price ineſtimable. The Queene of Saba (they ſay) procured bookes hither from all parts, beſides many which Salomon gaue her, and from that time to this, their Emperors haue ſucceeded in like care and diligence. There are three great Halls, each aboue two hundred paces large, with bookes of all Sciences, written in fine parchment, with much curioſitie of golden Letters and other workes, and coſt in the writing, binding, and couers: ſome on the floore, ſome on ſhelues about the ſides; there are few of paper, which is but a new thing in Ethiopia. There are the writings of Enoch copied out of the ſtones wherein wherein they were engrauen, which entreat of Philosophy, of the Heauens and Elements. Others go vnder the name of Noe, the subiect whereof is Cosmography, Mathematikes, Ceremonies and Prayers: some of Abraham, which he composed when he dwelt in the Valley of Mamre, and there read publikely Philosophy and the Mathematikes. There is very much of Salomon, a great number passing vnder his name: many ascribed to Iob, which he writ after the recouery of his prosperitie: many of Esdras, the Prophets and the High Priests. And besides the foure canonicall Gospels, many others ascribed to Bartholomew, Thomas, Andrew, and others: much of the Sibelles, in Verse and Prose: the workes of the Queene of Saba: the Greeke Fathers all that haue written, of which, many are not extant with vs; the Writers of Syria, Ægypt, Africa, and the Latine Fathers translated, with others innumerable in the Greeke, Hebrew, Arabike, Abassine, Ægyptian, Syrian, Chaldee farre more Authors, and more of them then we haue; few in Latine; yet Titus Liuius is there whole, which with vs imperfect; and some of the Workes of Thomas Aquinas; Saint Augustines Works are in Arabike: Poets, Philosophers, Physicians, Rabbines, Talmudists, Cabalists, Hieroglyphikes, and others would be too tedious to relate. When Ierusalem was destroyed by Titus; when the Saracens ouer-ranne the Christian world; many bookes were conueyed out of the Easterne parts into Æthiopia; when Ferdinand and Isabella expelled the Iewes out of Spaine, many of them entred into Æthiopia, and for doing this without licence, enriched the Pretes Library with their bookes: when Charles the fift restored Muleasses to his Kingdome, the Prete hearing that there was at Tunis a great Librarie, sent and bought more then three thousand bookes of diuers Arts. There are aboue two hundred Monkes, whose office is to looke to the Library, to keepe them cleane and sound, each appointed to the bookes of that language which he vnderstandeth: the Abbot hath straite charge from the Emperour, to haue care thereof; he esteeming this Library more then his Treasure.

And yet his Treasure is such, [c] as leaues all others of all Princes in the world behind, quite out of sight: it is a Sea, that euery yeere receiueth new Riuers, neuer running out: the Emperours, euen from the time of the Queene of Saba, laying vp part of their reuenue heere. And therefore [d] Dauid the Prete, in Letters to King Iohn the second of Portugall, said, that he had Gold as the sands of the Sea, and the Starres in the skie. The first that coyned money, was Alexander the third, which dyed in the yeere of our Lord 1603. stamping in the one side, the figure of Saint Matthew, the Æthiopian Patron, and on the other, the Lion and Crosse, which is the Armes of Æthiopia. His jewels, heere kept, are incomparable: Topazes, Amethists, Saphires, Diamonds, and others. Hee hath one jewell, which was found in the Riuer Niger (that brings forth more gemmes then any Riuer in the world) which is one piece of stone or rocke, diuersified with a thousand varieties of stone: it is square, about two palmes [d] and a halfe, and thicke withall: there are in it an hundred and sixtie Diamonds, one as large as the palme of ones hand, others of one, two, or three fingers, and some lesse: it hath about three hundred Emeralds; Rubies the greatest in the world: aboue fiftie Saphyres, Turqueses, Balazes, Amethists, Spinels, Topazes, Iacinths, Chrysolites, and all other kinds: Nature heere playing the Ieweller, & representing a Map of the worlds Gemmes in one jewell, without, and infinitely beyond all Arte of Man. Being set in the Sunne, it seemes a combined marriage of heauenly and earthly Excellence, that no mortall eye hath seene the like, nor is able to endure the sight of this. When Bernardo Vecheti, a Ieweller, was sent thither by Francis de Medicis Duke of Florence, hee accounted it beyond all estimation or value. The Emperour keepes it in a Boxe of Gold. By the perswasion of that Bernardo, hee hath made him Tables set with thousands of stones in them. Corrall is more esteemed in Æthiopia then Gold, and therefore Frier Luys denies that Corrals in the bottome of the red Sea, make it red, as some affirme: and that which Barros [e] saith, hath been found there, is vnperfect.

a Fr. Luys hath a very large catalogue of them, l. 1. c. 9. taken out (as he saith) of an Index, which Anthony Grieue and L. Cremenes made of them, being sent thither by the Pope Gregory 13. at the instance of Cardinall Garlet, which saw and admired the varietie of them, as did many others then in their company.

Of the Princes of the Blood there kept, and of the Election of the EMPEROVR.

BVt greater Iewels then those are kept in Amara, the Princes of the Blood Royall, which are sent to this hill at eight yeeres old, and neuer returne thence, except they be chosen Emperours. The first Author of this custome was Iosue the Nephew of Salomon, and sonne of Meilec or Melilec, to remoue all occasions of ciuill warres about Succession. And their continued succession in one Line, without alienation, is imputed to this. Some Emperours for a time had left it, till Abraham being Emperour had, or pretended to haue a Reuelation to renue that cuſtome, if hee would continue the Scepter in the Linage of Dauid. The Princes which liue there, are ſixe, eight, twelue, and ſometimes more. An. 1608. they were ſixe; euery of which liues by himſelfe, and that in great eſtate and maieſtie in royall Palaces, with ſpacious Hals richly hanged, remoued to another Palace at pleaſure: they meet alrogether when they will play, hunt, walke, and on Holy-dayes to Diuine Seruice: they take place according to their age; each hath his ten ſeruants for ordinarie attendance, which are the ſonnes, or deſcended of the Tributary Kings: for baſer offices, the great maſter or military Abbot employeth the Souldiers that guard at the foot of the Hill, which without licenſe may not aſcend. They haue other graue perſons to inſtruct them in vertue and learning. Euery Citie, that is, euery habitation of a thouſand houſes, is at their owne charge to ſend thither three men, a Gentleman, a Citizen, and a Plebeian, for the guard of the Hill, which make vp the number of ſeuen thouſand fiue hundred, there being two thouſand and fiue hundred Cities in the Empire. The militarie Abbots order them in their ſeuerall Wards, the baſer at the foot of the Hill, the Citizens at the middle, and the Gentlemen at the top; their Captaines changed at euery two moneths end. Beſides the Souldiers Tents, are many others of Merchants and Officers. No woman may aſcend, nor hath done ſince Queene Candace was heere baptized by her Eunuch: the Princes liue ſingle, and marrie not, as Aluares hath (ſaith our Frier) vntruely affirmed of them.

When the Emperor is dead, many ſolemne ceremonies are obſerued, both religious and ciuill about the Election of another, which is in the authoritie of the two militarie Abbots of S^t Anthonies Order in the Mount. Oathes are taken both of the Electors and Elected, the firſt to vſe ſinceritie, the other to raigne iuſtly, obſeruing, and cauſing in his Empire to be obſerued, the Lawes of God, Chriſtian Religion, the foure firſt Councels, of Nice, Epheſus, Chalcedon, and Conſtantinople: and (if the [a] Fryer reach not, for in their Holy Fathers caſe I relye not much on their Holineſſe) to acknowledge the Florentine Councell, and the Popes Supremacie, and laſtly, the Conſtitutions of Iohn the Saint, and Philip the Seuenth, ancient Emperours: which done, in ſolemne Proceſſion of all Eſtates they goe to Church, and hauing ſet the Emperor in his Throne, the Princes of the Blood are brought out of the Palace, where in the time of the Election they had been incloſed, to kiſſe his hand, and ſweare fidelity, cloathed in the habite of the Knights of S^t Anthony: the ſame oath is giuen alſo by the Kings his Vaſſals, (foure of which are preſent at the Election) the Counſellors, Prelates and others, according to their place. After this, fires are made on the Towres of the Mount, to giue notice of this Election, which being ſeene by the neerer Cities, they alſo by the like fires (as it were) proclaime the ſame in a moment through all the Empire: which is confirmed by Poſts ſent thence on Dromedaries, by the Abbot of the Abbey of the Holy Ghoſt, one of the Electors, and the Councell vnto the Citie of Saba, and the mother of the New-Elect, if ſhe be liuing, and to his neere kindred, to come and reioyce with him. The next day the Emperour goeth, in black habite to the Palace where the Princes are, and ſaluteth them with kinde embracements, one by one, with his Bonnet in his hand: which is done in the next place by the Prelates, whom in honour of their Eccleſiaſticall dignities the Princes re-ſalute ſtanding, with their heads vncouered. The tributarie Kings follow, not with embracements, but kiſſing their hands, rendring their ſalutations, and after them the Embaſſadors. The Emperour, hauing remained ſometime in priuate talke with them, goeth to the Abbey of the Holy Ghoſt, and putting off his black habite, is clothed in Scarlet; and being on horſebacke, attended with his Family, the Abbots and Counſellors, paſſeth to the Abbot of the Holy-Croſſe, where the two Abbots of that Abbey meet him; and after oath giuen to preſerue the ancient cuſtomes, preſent him with the keyes of the Treaſurie and Library: the Emperour beſtowing as much of the ſaid Treaſure as he pleaſeth. After all other ceremonies, the Counſellors of the Court come to the hill with 12000 Knights of Saint Anthonies Order (which are the Emperours Guard) and the eldeſt Sons of the King, to conuey him ſolemnly to Zambra the Citie, where Court and Councell reſide, where with all ſolemnity and magnificence he is likewiſe receiued, and conducted into the Palace, and placed on his Throne of twelue ſteps, with acclamations of long life and happineſſe on all hands. Fiue dayes Feſtiuall being here paſſed in al publike reioycings, he goeth to Saba to take the oaths of all his ſubiect Kings in perſon (whereof onely foure had been preſent at the Election) and one holding the Crowne, another the Scutchion of the Armes of that tributarie King, he ſweareth on the Scepter (which is a golden croſſe) true fidelitie and obedience, and the Emperour puts on the Crowne againe on his head; and the ſaid Scutcheon, with his Armes, he giueth into his hand, and licenceth him to depart to his Pauillion without the Citie. Theſe Kings are truely Kings, and ſucceed in the inheritance of their Fathers, receiuing the tribute of the ſubiects of their ſeueral Kingdomes, and are not Deputies, or Vice-Royes, at the meere pleaſure of the Emperour: but if one bee vpon iuſt cauſe diſplaced, his ſonne ſucceedeth; and therefore the Prete is called King of Kings Kings. The eldest sonne of euery of the Kings attend alwayes on the Emperour, and haue attending on them ten seruants of the sonnes of the Nobles of their Kingdomes.

The Emperour is bound by ancient custome to take a wife of the posteritie of those three Magi which adored Christ in his infancie, whom the Æthiopian and Romane Tradition calleth Kings by the names of Gaspar, Melchior, Balthasar; of which, the Æthiopians say, that Melchior was of Arabia, and Balthasar of Persia, which being forced by persecution of [a] Arrians, came into Æthiopia, in the time of Iohn the Saint, which raigned after Philip the 7, and receiued of his hands the Kingdomes of Fatigar, and Soa, the former giuen to the posterity of Balthasar, the other to the linage of Melchior. The Fryer addeth, That all the legitimate descendents of these three Families are born with a starre on one of their sides; and that at the Iubile, in the time of Gregory the thirteenth, 1575. there were three of those three Families at Rome, with that naturall ensigne of the supernaturall & miraculous Star. Yea, the legitimate Mahumetans in Arabia & Persia, remaining of those kindreds, haue the same signe, as Don Iohn sware to him, that he had seene. The Councell gouerneth according to the 127. Statutes, made by the first Philips, and Iohn the Saint. Nothing is punished with death but treason, vnder which name they also comprehend murther & adultery: of this mortall sentence the Lyons are the Executioners, which in euery Citie are kept for that purpose. Some Italians had been found guilty of the sin against Nature, a thing for which the Æthiopians (as some of the [b] ancients for Parricide) had no Law, as not thinking any would so far degenerate; and therefore knew not how to punish them: but it was committed to the Latine Councell, which adiudged them to bee burned; a punishment not knowne before in those parts, yet fitting to those vnnatutall burnings. The fault and punishment being of equall strangenesse, the Emperour would not haue it executed there, but sent them to Goa to the Portugall Viceroy for that purpose. Heresie and Apostasie are likewise punished with death. That Latine Councell was instituted by Alexander the third, for causes and persons of Europe to be tryed, and iudged by Iudges of their owne, resident at the Court (as the Grand Councell is) and chosen of each Nation two, of the Venetians, Florentines, and Portugals: the two former come thither by the way of Cairo. Andrew Oniedo a Iesuite, sent thither by the Pope with the title of Bishop of Hierapolis, and after Barretus his death, his Successor in the Patriarch-ship of Æthiopia, was Author and Counseller to the Emperour of this Institution, and by him made President of the same. This man (c Botero Maffæus, and others say) had miserable entertainment, with the residue of his society: but by Fryer Luys (from the relation of Don Iohn) tels, That he liued and dyed in great honour amongst them, as he doth elsewhere magnifie exceedingly their respect to the Romane Papacy and Religion. Credat Iudæus Apella. Cui bono [d] is the rule of my faith to Fryers and Iesuites in their Relations: In Naturall and Morall Histories, which serue not to the building of Babylons Towre, I receiue them with attention, with thanks, and if need be, with admiration in some things: but when them come with Slime in stead of Morter, and would get Rome a Name, I remember their Vowes and Profession, and yeeld no further attendance. That Claudius which was then Emperour, and his Successor Adamas, were of Scismaticall and Tyrannicall quality, as other Historians affirme, Frier Luys not onely denies, but extolleth their good parts.

He which now is Emperour, was elected An. 1606. and called himselfe Zaraschaureadis a sprout or bud of the linage of Dauid assister of Saint Peter, and Saint Paul. He is a man haughtie and valorous, and was therefore chosen, because the Turkish Empire was so full of seditions, and the Sophi had sent his Embassadour to them, to chuse a fit warrior, that they might with ioynt forces assault the Ottoman.

Of their Schooles and Cities.

THere are in all the Cities of Æthiopia two Schooles or Colledges, for the instruction of youth; one for the male sexe, the other for the female; each diuided into three parts, the first for the Gentlemens children, the second for Citizens, the third for the baser vulgar, with their seuerall instructers, and without communion, medling, or conuersing of the one with the other. the Seminarie or Colledge of Boyes is a quarter of a league without the City, the other within. There are they taught Letters and Religion. All, euen the Kings themselues, are bound to send their children thither to be instructed: and the Priests resort thither for Confession, and ministring the Sacrament to them. They may resort home at Festiuall times: otherwise they are there detained. The Virgins, from ten to twenty; the other, from ten to sixteene yeeres of their age. They haue not only this order in their wel ordered Schooles, but in their disordered misorderly Stews, the deuils workhouses, and suburbs of Hell, which yet in Rome, and places of that Religion, are permitted and and admitted the Cities, and his Holineſſe ſelfe is not a little enriched with (that which God a Deut. 23. 18. prohibited) a The price of the Dogge, and of the Whore. The Ethiopians permit not any to bee ſtrange women, but ſtrangers of other Countreys, which may not enter into their Cities: nor may the Nobles enter into the common houſes which belong to the Citizens, or theſe to thoſe of the Plebians, nor any but to thoſe peculiarly deſigned their ſtate, vnder paine of death, as adulterers, to bee caſt to Lyons. Theſe women are hired by certaine Officers at a common price, and are not to take any thing of particular men: they goe in pale-coloured garments, and if they diſtaſte and forſake that beaſtly trade, they ſend them to ſome places ſubiect vnto the Portugals, not admitting them to conuerſe with their women for feare of infection.

But to leaue theſe Beaſts, the Ethiopians giue great reſpect to their Phyſicians, which are onely of their Gentry, and that not all that will, but onely ſuch as certaine Officers ſhall chuſe, of euery Citie to be ſent to their generall Vniuerſities (of which there are ſeuen in Ethiopia) there to be taught naturall Philoſophy (Logicke and other Arts they know not) together with Phyſicke, and the Arts of the Apothecarie and Chirurgian. They are there maintained at the publike charge of the Cities that ſend them. When the Doctors and Inſtructers ſee them fit for Graduates, they go with them to the Monks of Alleluya, and of Plurimanes, who with a Monkes Cowle, or Hood, and other Doctoricall Enſignes, doe inueſt and inaugurate them in that Degree. They are great Herbariſts. They make b Mummia otherwiſe then in other parts, where it is either made of bodies buried in the Sands, or taken out of ancient Sepulchres, where they had been laid, being inbalmed with Spices: For they take a captiue Moore, of the beſt complexion; and after long dieting and medicining of him, cut off his head in his ſleepe, and gaſhing his body full of wounds, and therein all the beſt Spices, and then wrap him vp in Hay, being before couered with a Seare-cloth; after which they burie him in a moiſt place, couering the body with earth. Fiue dayes being paſſed, they take him vp againe, and remouing the Seare-cloth and Hay, hang him vp in the Sunne, whereby the body reſolueth and droppeth a ſubſtance like pure Balme, which liquor is of great price: The fragrant ſent is ſuch, while it hangeth in the Sunne, that it may be ſmelt (he ſaith) a league off. The priuiledges of Phyſicians are, that they are freed from the common cuſtome of giuing one in three of their ſonnes for the Emperors warres, that they may ride on Elephants in the Cities, which is allowed onely to the Emperors, Prelates, and Prieſts that are Virgins. They may alſo weare Miniuer-hoods, and are free from Subſidies and Paiments. Theologie and the Chaldee tongue is taught onely among their Prieſts and Eccleſiaſticall perſons in their Churches and Monaſteries. They reade Diuinitie in their natiue tongue: the Text is the foure firſt generall Councels: the Scripture they reade in Chaldee, c which is with them as Latine with vs. They handle not queſtions as the Schoolemen, in Logicall diſputations and Arguings, but copiouſly and eloquently interpret the Scriptures.

Becauſe we haue mentioned their Cities Saba and Zambra, let vs take ſome briefe view of them, and ſo leaue this Spaniard, whoſe Diſcourſe hath (I hope, not without ſome delight) thus long holden you. Beſides theſe two Cities, none haue aboue three thouſand houſes in them. But theſe are populous and magnificent, with Towers, Temples, triumphant Arches, Obeliskes, Piramides, and the like tokens of induſtry, Antiquitie, and Maieſtie. Saba was founded by that Queene which viſited Salomon, and was the mother-Citie of the Empire. It hath fiue thouſand houſes, great and ſumptuous, the ſtreets ſpacious, with Portals or Penthouſes, that men may walke ſafe from the Sunnes violence. It hath foure chiefe Gates, all of Alabaſter and Iaſper, wrought with Antique-workes; the Gate-doores of Cedar curiouſly carued. The wayes that leade to theſe Gates, for the ſpace of two leagues are ſet with Palmes, Planes, Oranges, Cedars, Cypreſſes, and other trees on both ſides, for ſhade & fruit: the foure high ſtreets goe thorow the Citie acroſſe, and where they meet, is an Arch or Vault erected on high Pillars, fairely wrought and gilded, with the brazen Image of S. Matthew, their ſuppoſed Patron, as bigge as a Giant, gilded alſo; the worke of Architects ſent by Francus Duke of Florence. Neere to this Citie are Mines of Gold, Gardens, and other places of pleaſure and profit.

Zambra is greater, containing thirty thouſand houſes, and innumerable concourſe of people. It ſtands in the Kingdome of Cafates, and nigh that great Lake, which hereof is called Zambra: where the Emperor, leauing his wonted maner of remouing vp & downe in Tents haue fixed his Court-royall: and yet without the Citie are many Tents that belong to the Court. Here the Prete liueth, with two and forty ſons of Kings, & with his great Councell, and the Latine. Alexander the third built the Palace here 1570. by the Duke of Florence his workmen. If I ſhould follow the Frier further, I could leade you on in a delectable way, but doubtfull, like the Poets writings, and bring you into Eliſian, but fabulous fields, fertile in al things but truth: wherein let the Reader pardon that I haue already been ſo long, rather then tedious, in this Vtopian Æthiopia: at the first much suspected by me, as by many passages in the Story is expressed: but since largely written against by Godignus, a Iesuit, and by latter Relations found eyther vncertaine or false; whose paines shall helpe make vp another Chapter, and then will we proceed in our Pilgrimage.

rather

§. I.

The seuerall Countreyes of Abassia, Their Situation, Inhabitants, Riuers and Lakes.

IF I should haue left out the former Chapter for the vncertaine truth or certayne falshoods therein contayned, some perhaps would eyther for the Pilgrims words, or the Friers inuention, haue desired it, were it but as a Comedie to delight our tyred Reader. For my selfe, had my Intelligence so well serued me at first, it had been easier then, not to haue admitted, then here now to haue omitted it. I haue therefore suffered it still to enioy a place, rather for your delight then credit, and here would giue you those things that are more likely; I hope, I cannot warrant more true, such as Nicolaus Godignus and others haue written, some things being the same, which before out of Aluares & others are mentioned, besides other things exacter or later. And first of the Countrey it selfe. * Ioannes Gabriel, Captayne of the Portugall Souldiers, in these parts, hath written, that the Abassine Empire contayneth sixe and twentie Kingdomes in ancient right, diuided in foureteene Regions: eight of these Kingdome lye in succeßiue order from Swachen towards to West; the first of which is Tigrai, contayning seuenteene great Tracts, vnder so many Lieutenants or Gouernours, which rule all affaires of Peace and War. The Turkes poßeße the Sea-parts, the Saracens the Coast adioyning; the Inland is inhabited promiscuously by Christians, and Ethnicks. They are blacke of hue, deformed in shape, in condition miserable, of conditions wicked. They haue goodly Riuers dryed vp in Summer, where yet with little digging, both water is found, and fishes, called Sagasi. The next Kingdome to Tigras, is Dancali, hauing the Red Sea on the East, thence extending Westwards, not farre nor fertile inhabited by Moores tributaries to the Abassine. Angote, Amara, Boa, Leca, are foure Kingdomes inhabited by Christians only. The seuenth Kingdome is very large, of seuenteene Tracts, partly inhabited by Ethnickes, partly Christians; it is called Abagamedri. Dambea hath also Ethnickes mixed with Christians, being but two Tracts. On the other side of Dancali towards the Red Sea, Aucaguerle trends alongst the Coast, poßeßed by the Moores, not subiect to the Abassine. Adel followeth in twelue degrees Northerly, in which is Zeila, sometimes called Aualites, a famous Mart: the whole Kingdome is inhabited by Moores, vnneighbourly Neighbours to the Abassines, whence came Gradagna, or Gradamar, the Mahumetan King, which had wel-nigh subdued all Æthiopia, when the Portugals oppoßed themselues, who after diuers ouerthrowes, tooke him, and cut off his head. After this is Dahali, which trendeth towardes Membaxas: the Inhabitants, some Christians, some Ethnikes, pay tribute to the Preto. Oecie followeth, more within land; the Inhabitants, Moores and Ethnikes, subiect to the Abassine. Arium and Fatigar the next Kingdomes are Christian; Zinger, Ethnicke. Rozanagum the sixteenth Kingdome is Christian, but not subiect to the Abassine Empire. From hence extend other Kingdomes towards the North; Roxa of Ethnickes; Goma of Christians and Ethnickes, Such is Nerea, a large Kingdome towards Monomotapa. Zethe is inhabited by Ethnickes subiect to the Emperour. The next are Conche and Mahaola small and altogether Ethnicke, Goroma a great Kingdomoe of twenty Tracts, Christians and Heathens, almost wholly compaßed by Nilus, able for plenty to feed many Armies, with which it is vsually infeßed. The Seedman followes the harueßt man, & presently after the reaping, sowes new Seed without other tillage. The three last Kingdomes lye towards Egypt, Damote, Sua, Iaiculum: through this euery Lent paße great troupes of Pilgrimes to Ierusalem. The foure-teene Regions or Prouinces I forbeare to mention. Of all these Kingdomes at this day onely Tigrai, Abagamedri, Dambea and Goroma, are obedient to the Abassine. There are foure principall Riuers in this Æthiopia: Taucea running from the South to the North, the sandy Earth in the way, continually stealing, and vnderearth passages robbing him of the watery Tribute which he intendeth to the Sea: neere it are high vnpassable Mountaynes, inhabited by Abassine Iewes, which still obserue the Mosaicall Law, fierce and terrible to their Neighbours, and could neuer be conquered by the Abassines. The second Riuer is Oara, exceeding Nilus in watery store, which he bestoweth in like manner on the Countrey by which he passeth into the Zeilan Sea. The waters are pleasant; but the Abassine Christians will not drinke thereof, because passing through the Countries of Mahumetans, it yeelds them nourishment. The third Riuer is Gabea, which neere to Mombaza visits the Ocean. The fourth is Nilus. There are as many Lakes: The first Aicha, in Angote: The second, Dambeabahar; that is, the Sea of Dambea, not farre from Gubbai, where the Emperours in these times reside, if they betake themselues out of their Tents into the City. This Lake is sixty miles long, and fiue and twenty broad, receiues on one side the waters of Nilus, is full of fishes, and Riuer-horses, which sometimes are dangerous to passengers; two Iesuits in one of their Boates made of Rushes, hardly escaping their assaults. Many small Ilands are in this Lake, in one of which is a Towre, their Treasury, and to which Malefactors are confined. The third Lake is Zella in Oecie: the fouth Xacala, not farre from it.

§. II.

Of the Soyle, Fruits, Creatures, Seasons, and Climate.

* Ant. Fernand. Soc. Iesu.

ANtonie * Fernandes in an Epistle dated here in Iune 1610. numbreth aboue fortie Prouinces in Abassia, but in substance agrees in the former. The Soyle (hee sayth) is hollow, and full of deepe Clifts: in the midst of the plaine fields you shall often see steepe and high Rockes of solid stone, which in time of warre serue them in stead of Forts. The whole Region is full of Metals, but neglected partly by the sloth of the Inhabitants, partly for feare to bring Turkish Inuasions vpon them, if such baits were discouered. They take so much Iron only, as they finde without digging on the face of the Earth. Corne, Herbes, Trees are there in variety, but these not excellent in their fruits, except one, the fruit whereof saues their liues by the vertue it hath against Wormes, whereto this people is much subiect by their eating of raw flesh, and therefore euery moneth purge themselues with this fruit: they haue Peaches, Pomegranates, Citrons, Indian Figges, but not in great plenty: They haue Hares, Harts, Goats, Swine, Elephants, Camels, Buffles, Lions, Panthers, Tigres, Rhinocerots, and other like Beasts. One so huge, that a man on horsebacke may passe vpright vnder his belly, feeding on leaues from the tops of trees, and formed like a Camell. Their Riuer-horses doe much harme to the fruits of the Earth, being of Vast bodies, and their mouth three quarters of a yard in the opening. In the night they come forth, and if the Husbandmen did not keepe diligent watch, would doe extreme harme to the Corne; they feed also on grasse. In the water they are very fierce, and like Dogges assault men and teare them. They are so afraid of fire, that one Boy with a burning firebrand will chase away thousands of them. Some there are which hunt these beasts with Launces and Arrowes, and liue on their flesh little differing from Beefe. There is also found in their Riuers and Lakes the Torpedo or Crampfish, of strange effect in Nature: if holden in the hand and not stirring, it makes no alteration; but if it moues it selfe, the arteries, ioynts, sinewes, and all the members of the body, suffer an exceeding torture and astonishment, which presently ceaseth with letting goe the Fish. The Æthiopians haue a superstitious conceit, that it is good to driue away Deuils out of Men, thinking it torments those Spirits no lesse then humane bodies. They say (I haue not made tryall thereof my selfe) that if this fish bee laid amongst dead fishes and there stirre it selfe, it makes them also to moue as if there were life in them. There are many of them in Nilus in the end of the Prouince of Goyama, where is a bottomlesse Lake (so the Portugall thought that could not sound the bottom with his Pike) whence continuallly springs abundance of water, being the head of that Riuer; little at the first, and after a dayes iourney and a halfe running to the East, and then entreth a Lake supposed the greatest in the World, passing swiftly through the midst thereof without mixture of waters, and casting it selfe ouer high Rockes, takes freer scope, but presently is swallowed of the Earth, so that it in some places it may be stepped ouer. After fiue dayes iourney towards the East, it winds it selfe againe to the West, and so passeth on in his way towards Egypt.

Egypt. The Æthiopians affirme, that it is easie to diuert the Riuers course, and to famish Egypt, but I thinke it farre easier to say then doe it. Low places in Abassia are intemperately hote. Their Winter continues from May to September: and then begins in the Red Sea, which I haue obserued (Fernandes reports it) to flow in all time of the Moones increase, and to flow continually out all the time of the decrease. In their Winter it rameth and thundreth commonly euery afternoone. In the Kingdome of Zambea in which we now liue, wee may see both the Poles, the Antarctike higher, with his Crosse-starres. In this Tract of Heauen there is as it were a cloud or blot, supposed more thinne then other parts: about it are many Starres lesse then those which illustrate the other Pole. They beginne their yeere with the Spring on the first of September, numbring twelue moneths, in each thirty dayes, reckoning the odde dayes betweene August and September by themselues. The Abassines expresse their ioy most by eating and drinking; and therefore on Holidayes resort to their Churches, which are shaded with trees, where are set Vessels full of a liquor, which they vse instead of Wine (which they make of Honey, adding Opium) and thereafter their holies, they serue their bellies, drinking to drunkennesse, quarrels, fighting. They haue Grapes, but (except in the Vintage season) they straine their dryed Raisons, insomuch that Peter Paez a Iesuite writ from thence, Anno 1604. that the Emperour desiring him to say Masse after the Romane rite, they could find no Wine to doe it.

§. III.

Of their Customes in priuate life and publike Gouernment, and their late miseries.

THey sow little more then they must spend. And for their apparell, the richer buy it of the Moores, attiring themselues after their fashion, the rest both Men and Women vse a skinne, or some course piece of linnen, without adorning by Arte. When they doe reuerence to any, they cast off this cloth from their shoulders to the Nauell, stripping themselues halfe naked. They weare their haire long, which serues them for a hat or head a-tire, and for greater neatnesse & gallantry they curle it in diuers manners, and anoint it with Butter, which in the Sunne shewes like dew on the grasse. So curious are they herein, that for feare of disordering their curles, they haue a crotch fastned in the Earth, whereon at night they lay their neckes, and so sleepe with their heads hanging. They brand themselues on the whole body, specially on the face. The nailes of their little fingers they suffer to grow to the greatest length, imitating, as much as may be, the spurs of Cocks, which also they sometimes fasten and fit to their fingers. Their hands and feet (which commonly are bare) they dye reddish with the iuyce of a certaine barke. They are a slothfull people, scarsely prouiding necessaries for life, not giuing themselues to hunting or fishing: and although the materials of Woollen, linnen, Cottons, are at hand, yet doe the most of them couer their bodies like beasts, with rude skins; each man commonly wearing a Rammes skin, the ends fastned at his hands and feet. They lye on the hides of their Kine, without other Beds. In stead of Tables they haue great troughes rudely hollowed wherein they take their meat without cloth or Napkin. Their vessels are of black Earth. Few of them are Merchants, besides the Mahumetans. They haue no great Cities, but many vnfortified Villages. Their greatest Towne hath scarcely sixteene houses. They vse little writing, no not in their publike Iudgements: they haue no Bookes, but for their Holies, and Officers for their accounts. And because we haue mentioned their Iudgements, it shall not be amisse to expresse their forme out of Fernandes. The Emperour hath a House called Cala, low, without any vpper storie. To the doore all such come as haue any suite, euery one according to their differing Language, crying, Lord, Lord; some also imitating the voyces of Beasts, whereby is knowne of what Prouince they are. Then doth the Emperour commit their case to the Vmbari (so are the Iudges called of the word Vmbare, which signifies a three-footed stoole, on which each of them sits, some on the right, others on the left hand.) In the Townes the Lords are Iudges, where when any one sueth, the Lord sends one of his Seruants to the Defendant, assigning him a time to make his appearance; and then the Plaintiffe and Defendant plead each his owne case (this is the fashion in Barbary also, and many other places:) and after they haue both said what they can, all that are present giue sentence. From this they may appeale to the Vmbares, from them to the Azages, or Supreme Iudges, and from these to the Emperour. Sometimes Iustices Itinerant or Visitors, are sent into the Prouince to enquire of Crimes, which places being bought, cause Iustice to be sold, and these to be Legall Theeues, more dangerous then Out-lawes.

In the flouriſhing ſtate of the Empire, they ſay, the Emperour was wont to hold a continuall Progreſſe in Tents, eſteeming it baſe to liue in any City: But whereſoeuer he abode, there was preſently a City of Tents, hauing due places aſſigned to all publike and priuate employments, Churches, Hoſpitals for ſicke, and for the poore, Victualling-houſes, Shops of ſeuerall Trades, and the like. They ſay alſo that this mouing City was thirty miles about, and that many thouſand Mules, beſides Camels, and innumerable Porters attended on the baggage at euery remoue. But if theſe things were euer true, the caſe is much altered in this laſt Age, and euery day growes worſe and worſe; thoſe things which yee haue heard out of the Frier being falſe: Neyther was there euer any ſuch Emperour as Alexander the third, by him ſo often mentioned; but what with the Turkes on the North ſide, the Moores on the East, the Gallæ from other parts, and inteſtine Rebellions, each challenging his right, not by Election or Inheritance, ſo much as by the Sword, all things are brought almoſt to nothing; and the Æthiopian greatneſſe is now in a great Eclipſe. And for that Balthaſar which the Frier pretends his Authour, Godignus ſayth, that he being examined hereof, affirmed them to be the Friers Inuentions: ſomethings he confeſſed he had publiſhed not true, but ſuch as hee thought could doe no man harme. Whatſoeuer therefore in this Booke is borrowed from that Spaniard, I doe neither in all things diſclaime; nor can exact credit thereto, this being the lyers reward, that euen in true reports he is doubted. More full Relations of the preſent State of this Empire, I referre to our next Æthiopian Viſitation. The Gallæ before mentioned, are a Nationleſſe Nation, eyther the ſame, or like in conditions to the Giacchi or Iagges, of which we ſhall anon ſpeake, which as in Congo and other parts, ſo heere alſo brought confuſion and deſolation where they came.

As for thoſe Patriarches, Barretus and Quiedus, Godignus hath beſtowed on each of them a Booke in Relation of their Liues: and inſerted Epiſtles of their owne, to prooue the Frier a Lier: Barrettus deſiring to be rid of that Title, which he could not make reall, and Quieda hauing a Briefe or Bull from Pius Quintus to free him, and ſend him to Iapan; which hee yet refuſed vpon hopes of better ſucceſſe eyther amongſt the Chriſtians, or Ethnickes in thoſe parts, many of which in Damut and Sinaxis had deſired Baptiſme, and by the wicked Emperour were reiected. He propoundeth alſo an Ouerture to ſend fiue hundred Portugall Souldiers into thoſe parts, by which ſtrength they might ſuccour themſelues and their followers; an argument of their weakneſſe, which could with ſo ſmall a handfull be awed.

See the Copie of this Bull, & Quiedos anſwer, God. l. 3. c. 12.

This may be added, that theſe Æthiopians haue their blacke colour in ſuch eſtimation, that they paint Chriſt, the Angels, and Saints blacke; the Deuill, Iudas, Caiphas, Pilate, and wicked perſons they paint white. They take Salt out of Minerals in pieces of halfe a foote, which ſerues there inſtead of money, ten or fifteene of thoſe pieces being the price of a ſlaue; the cauſe that when Paez the Ieſuit firſt entred theſe parts, his Gold could doe him little ſeruice, and when a Saracen in his company had dreſſed him a Hen, yet durſt not he taſte of it, for offending the ſcrupulous Abaſſines, who will eate nothing which a Turke hath killed. Hee writes that their houſes are baſe and little, round, of earth, couered with thatch, containing but one roome, except the Palaces of great Men. In that yeere 1603. the Graſſe-hoppers did great harme, which ate vp all that was greene where they came: a greater miſery of Ciuill Warre accompanying, the Emperour being depoſed and impriſoned, and another legitimate (for the former was a Baſtard) brought out of Priſon to the Throne. This new King * Malac Ceged wrote kind Letters to Paez, to bring him the Lawes of Portugal, and Quiedos Bookes, praiſing God, that after ſeuen yeeres impriſonment, The ſtone which the builders refuſed, was become the head of the corner. He was preſently aſſaulted and much diſtreſſed by the Gallæ, whom at that time hee ouercame. Not ſo other Traytors; the chiefe of which was Zezelazeus, who ſlue the Emperour Sauenquil, and erected one Iacobus, whom after hee relinquiſhed and tooke part with Sazinoſius which ouerthrew Iacobus, and after that impriſoned Zezelazeus, who eſcaped the Priſon, but not a Traytors reward, being ſlaine by Huſbandmen, whoſe Oxen hee would haue taken away. This Sazinoſius (ſtill infeſted with Treaſons for euen an Heremite or Anachoret, which had liued a ſolitary life twenty yeeres together, conſpired againſt him, aſpired to Souereignty, beſides many many Others and the Gallæ, and the effect of both, Robbers and Theeues through the Countrie) deuiſed of an vnion with the Romiſh Church, and writ Letters to the Pope, dated Octob. 14. and to the King of Spaine for ſupplies of Souldiers, Decemb. 10. 1607. the Copies of which, Iarric hath inſerted in his fift Booke. So farre from truth is that Frier which in theſe times proclaymes ſuch felicity in Æthiopia, vnder I know not what Alexander, the birth of his crowing braine.

V. III.

Of the Sabæans, and their Queene which visited SALOMON.

LEt vs conclude with Saba, and the Queene thereof, touching which (as elsewhere we haue [a] shewed) we rather beleeue that this Queene (the supposed founder) was of the Sabæans in Arabia, whose neighbours the Abasenes were, and both, as it is very probable, her subiects. These after many ages (it is the coniecture of great [b] Clerkes) passed into these parts of Africa, and seated themselues here by conquest, retayning their old language in their Lyturgie to this day. This Lyturgie (or Canon of their Masse, which with other their Formes and Rites of Baptisme, Confirmation, Purification, &c. is extant in Bibliotheca Patrum) doth call their Church, the Church of Sceua, or Sheba: and Stephanus placeth the Sabæans and Abasenes together, as before in this first Chapter of this Booke is shewed.

Tradition might well continue the memorie of this Queene amongst them, and Superstition might easily adde (where Diuine and Humane learning wanted) abundance of errours: which is not the Ethiopian case alone, but almost all Ecclesiasticall Historiies written of things done long before, and deliuered onely by Tradition, rolled like a Snow-ball by superstition of succeeding times, haue yeelded such Legendarie lumps, that neede much licking before any forme of Truth can appeare. As therefore I reiect not the Ethiopian Historie wholly, nor deeme it a meere changeling in this challenge of the Sabæan inheritance: so yet, I hold it needes iudicious examination and censure; the most whereof hath beene obtruded on that simple credulous Nation in later times, as our Monkes dealt in these parts many ages. Ptolemey calls the chiefe of Ethiopia Auxume, which Stephanus calls Ἀξωμίτης, Arianus [d] Axomite, Procopius [e] Auzomide, all of them giue it the Metropolitan honour: it is supposed to be the same which now is called [f] Chaxumo, whereof Barbosa, Corsali, and Aluares haue written: in witnesse whereof are many ancient buildings there yet remayning, and pillars (somewhat resembling the Egyptian Obeliskes) admirable for their height and workmanship, some aboue threescore yards high, full of Letters.

These Letters (of which are many there seene in many ruines) not one of all the Abassens can vnderstand, which argueth a greater antiquitie then the Abassens, and that these are more lately planted or ingrafted into the Ethiopian stock or stemme. Yea for their Christianitie also, howsoeuer the Eunuch of Candace was conuerted, and the Apostolicall labours in Ecclesiasticall Histories mentioned, might sort to good effect in this Ethiopian Haruest, yet it seemeth the conuersion of this Nation was not generall till the dayes of Iustinian. For so Nicephorus Callistus writeth, That Dauid the King of the Axumite Indians (why he calls them Indians you haue heard) warring vpon the Homerites which professed the Iewish Religion, vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his followers, if hee obtayned the victorie; which accordingly he did. For taking Danmus the Homerite King aliue, he sent to Iustinian to further him in the performance of his vow, who sent thither a holy Bishop, which baptized the whole Nation. It might be that the Ethiopians had before receiued the Gospell, after which time the Abassens out of Arabia might conquer them, and retayning their heathenish superstitions, vpon occasion of this warre might bee conuerted: as we reade of [h] Clodoueus the first christned King of France, and of the French, notwithstanding the Galli had long before receiued Christianitie: which might also bee paralleld in the Britans and Saxons inhabitants of this Land. Howsoeuer, it is likely that euer since, this Nation hath continued Christian. Of Helleslhæus, you haue seene [i] before Procopius his testimonie. As for their owne reports of themselues, Zaga Zabo tells one tale, Aluares another, Friar Luys a third: that we neede none other testimonie against them. Their exceeding store of zeale, and defect of learning, with the good intents of pia fraudes (to whet deuotion by any meanes) and that selfe-loue, which each, both Person and Nation beares [k] to it selfe; haue made, no doubt, readie Inuenters and Receiuers of fables, ascribing to themselues the stories of both the Queenes, mentioned in the Old and New Testament, the Sabæan and Ethiopian Antiquities, and a world of other fancies, which neuer in the world were done: whereto the names of later Workes, Cities, Temples, Orders, and other occurrents haue beene applyed. But it is time for our Pilgrim to passe further, where yet he is like to speed worse, and to find little truth of Ciuilitie or Religion.

CHAP. VII.

Of other Countries betweene the Red Sea and Benomotapa.

§. I.

Of Adel, Adea, Zanzibar and Melinde.

ETHiopia Exterior or Inferior, is that Southerly Tract of Africa, which to Ptolemey and the Ancients was vnknowne. It comprehendeth all that great wedge of Land (such is the forme) which beginning in the West, at the Countries aboue Zaire, stretcheth to fiue and thirtie degrees of Southerly latitude, and from thence Northwards, to the entrance or mouth of the Arabian Gulfe; all this way besieged and enuironed with the [a] Ocean. Maginus diuideth it into fiue parts, Aian, Zanguebar, Benomoptapa, Cafraria, and Congo: but Congo is here taken in a very large sense. Aian, after the Arabians account, containeth all that Region which lyeth betweene the mouth of the Red Sea, and Quilimanci; being, for the most part, on the Sea-coast inhabited by the said Arabians: but in the In-land parts thereof, are people which are a blacke heathenish Nation. It comprehendeth two Kingdomes, Adel and Adea; the former of which extendeth from that mouth of the Sea before mentioned, to the Cape Guardafu, by [b] Ptolemey called Aromata. South and West it bordereth vpon the Dominions of Prete Ianni, about the Kingdome of Fatigar. The chiefe Citie is Arar. Zeila also before spoken of, and Barbora pertayne to this Kingdome, Cities without the Streit, on the Sea, much frequented with Merchants. Zeila is situate in eleuen degrees, where Ptolemey placeth the Analites. It is stored with varietie of merchandize, and yeeldeth some representation of Antiquitie in the buildings thereof, consisting of lime and stone. The King is a Moore, and esteemed a Saint among the superstitious Mahumetans, for his continuall warres with the Christian Abassines, whence he transporteth innumerable slaues to the Arabians and Turkes, receiuing in exchange armour and other helpes for his warres. Anno 1541. Gradaameth the King before mentioned, or Gradagna, by the helpe of some Portugals, which Claudius the Abassine had in his warres, was slaine, and his Armie ouerthrown: but his successor, An. 1559. slue Claudius in battaile, and got (as Iohn de Castro affirmeth) the greatest treasure of the world: the Moore acknowledging diuine assistance in this victorie, triumphed on an Asse. Zeila was burnt and sacked by the Portugals, An. 1516. as Andrea [c] Corsali, who was then present in the action, testifieth.

Adea is situate betweene Adel, Abassia, and the Sea. The Inhabitants are Moores, descended of the Arabians, who many hundred yeeres agoe, partly by their rich traffique, and especially by force of armes, became Lords, not onely of Aian, but of all the Sea-coast, to Cape dos Corrientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Southerly Tropicke. In all which space, before the Portugall Discoueries, that part of the Cities which lay open to the Sea, was open and vnfortified, but toward the Land were walled for feare of the In-land people. Adea payeth tribute to the Abassian. In this Kingdome is Magadazzo, being it selfe a petite Kingdome of the Moores, which are of an oliue colour. [d] Braua was a free Towne, which, with Pate and Gogia, were taken by the Portugals, vnder Tristan de Cugna. All the Countries adioyning to Prester Iohn, as Dauid the Emperor in his Letter to King Emanuel relateth, are either Moores or Gentiles, of which some worship wood and fire, some the Sunne, others Serpents, &c.

Zanzibar, or Zanguebar, is a name by the Arabians and Persians giuen to that Tract, extending from the Riuer Quilimanci, which Ptolemey calls Raptus, to the borders of Benomotapa. Some in a larger extent, include Benomotapa and Cafraria. Sanutus affirmeth, That it is a lowe, fenny, and woody Countrie, with many Riuers, which by extremitie of moysture cause the ayre to bee intemperate. From the waste vpwards they goe naked. Herein are contayned the Territories of Melinde, Mombaza, Quiloa, Mosambique, and others. Melinde [e] is the name of a Kingdome, and of the chiefe Citie thereof: the Inhabitants especially neere to the Sea, are Moores, and build their houses after the manner of Europe. The women are white, and the men of colour inclining to white, notwithstanding the situation vnder the Line. They haue black people also, which are Heathens for the most part. Of like condition is [f] Mombaza (which is said to haue some resemblance with Rhodes) but enemie to the Christians, and was ruinated by Thomas Cotigno, in the yeere 1589. for receiuing Alebech the Turke; as Ampaza in the same Coast, by Alphonso Mello, a yeere or two before.

§. II.

The Portugals exploits in Mombaza, and of the Imbij.

THis Expedition deserues mention, because it giues light to the knowledge of other parts adioyning. The Portugals holding in manner all these Nations, which inhabit from the Cape of Good Hope hitherto, either in termes of friendship or subiection; this Alebech with Turkish Gallies infested these Seas, and made diuers of the Portugall vassals to wauer in their fidelitie, being of the Saracenicall faith or religion: whereupon the Vice-roy sent forth a Nauie vnder the command of Thomas aforesaid, his brother, which arriued first at Brana, and thence passed alongst the shore to Ampaza, still continuing almost desolate: thence to Lamus, by the helpe of the tyde passing vp the Riuer full of dangerous holds: thence they came to Melinde, and after that to Mombaza. This is a small Iland of a league circuit, the Citie then compassed with a wall. The Mahumetans had built a Castle on the Riuer which entreth the Citie, which was taken by the Portugals, and soone after fiue Gallies, which Alibech the Turke had there at that time, not without rich spoile. Here the Turkes and the Mombazan Inhabitants were now in a double distresse, by the Portugall forces from the Sea, and a more terrible enemie from the Land. These were the Imbij, impious and barbarous monsters, bred not farre from the Cape of Good Hope, tall, square, and strong men, addicted alwayes to warre and rapine, and feeding on the flesh, both of their captiued enemies, and of their owne people, in time of sickneſse, hastening their death for the shambles. The skulls of men serue them for drinking pots. Their weapons are poysoned arrowes, and poles burned at the ends: their shields are little, of wood, couered with a skin. They are supposed destitute of Religion, giuen to Incantations and Sorceries, and adoring their King with diuine honor, thinking him to be Lord of the whole Land, and the Portugals of the Sea. Such is his arrogance, that hee threatneth the destruction of all men, yea shootes his arrowes against the heauens, if wet or heate offend him. Some 80000. followed him in his warres, destroying Townes, Cities, and Beasts, together with the Men: in his march driuing many troopes of beasts before him, so to breake the assault of the enemie, and hauing fire carried before him, as menacing to boyle or roast, and eate all such as he shall take. It seemes that they are either the same, or of like condition to the Gallæ, which infest the Abassines, and the Iagges in other * parts of Africk, which also by a neere name call themselues Imbangolas, compounded of Imbij and Gallæ, a terrible rod of Gods anger, whereby he plagues and whips the barbarous Africans, with the worst of African barbarians. These Imbians had at this time approched to Mombaza, and the Turks with their Gallies did their best to hinder their entrance, the water encompassing, quenching the violence of that fire, which the Imbian beares before him, wherewith he had now burned a great wood. In this warre were the Mombazans and Turkes entangled, when the Portugals fleet came vpon them, those that escaped by flight the Portugals furie, falling into the bellies of the Imbians, which caused many to yeeld themselues voluntarily to the Portugall, as seeming the lesse of two euils. Many Turkes were slaine, others captiued, Christian Gally-slaues freed, three and twentie greater, and as many smaller peeces of Ordnance taken, the Citie (narrow built, that scarcely two could goe together in the streets, the houses of bricke built high, but with small lights, both to defend them against the Sunne) fired, the walls and Moschees razed; and the Nauie being readie to depart, they were haled by some Turkes on shore, and earnestly desired to admit them into their ships as slaues and captiues, Alebech himselfe being one, with thirtie others, besides two hundred Mombazans, hauing scarcely escaped the deuouring mawes of the Imbians, which had euen then buried the King and the chiefe Magistrate of Mombaza in their bowels, and taken innumerable captiues destined to the like Caniball disaster. The King of Lamus, called Panebaxira, the Portugals imprisoned and executed for betraying some of theirs to the Turkes, and conuented the neighbouring kings of Sian, Patus, Ampaza before them: they razed Mondra, and after other things set in order, returned to Goa.

They which haue desire to acquaint themselues with what Antiquitie hath deliuered of these parts, may resort to Arrianus his Periplus of the Erythræan Sea, and the labours of * Stuckius and Ortelius. For vs, to name you the Townes of ancient Trading (as Aualites, Malao, Mundi, Moylluur, Apocopon, Opone, Rhapta) which hee reckons on the African shore, with other Riuers and Promontories, would not much further vs in this our Pilgrimage-Mart of Religions.

§. III.

Of Quiloa, Sofala, and Ophir.

QViloa ſtands nine degrees to the South of the Line: the name of a City and Iland, which is a Kingdome of the Moores, and extendeth her Dominion farre in the Coaſt. It was built (as Marmolius affirmeth) about the foure hundreth yeere of the Hirara (ſo he nameth it) by one Ali, Sonne of Sultan Hoſcen, who not agreeing with his other brethren, by reaſon their Mothers were Perſian, and his an Abiſſine, ſought new Aduentures in theſe parts, and bought this Iland: the Hiſtory of whom, and of his Succeſſours, you may find in that Author.

d Marmol. l. 9. c. 39. & 40.

The King grew mighty by the Trade of Sofala, but it was made tributary to Portugall by Vaſcus Gamma, Anno 1500. In the yeere 1505. the Portugals for denyall of that Tribute, depriued Abraham, the Arabian King, of his Scepter, and built a Fort there; which the Moores ſoone after deſtroyed, together with the new King made by the Portugals. The people are whitiſh, their women comely, rich in attire: their houſes faire built, and richly furniſhed.

Betweene Coaua and Cuama, two Riuers which ſpring out of the ſame Lake with Nilus, are the Kingdomes of Mombaza, Mozimba, Macuas, Embeoe, and againſt them the Promontory Praſſum. Heere is Moſambique, e by which name is ſignified a Kingdome in the Continent, and an Iland alſo, with a ſafe Harbour, which with two other Ilands are in the mouth of the Riuer Moghincats, in fifteene degrees South. Moſambique is inhabited by Portugals, which haue there a ſtrong Caſtle: here the Portugals Shippes winter. In this Iland are Sheepe, with tayles of fiue and twenty pound weight (a beaſt common in Africa:) Hens blacke both in feathers, fleſh, and bone, and ſodden, looke like Inke, yet ſweeter then other in taſte: Porke very good, but for the deare ſawce. There are ſome Mahumetans, as they were all, before the Portugals arriuall there. They haue trade in the Continent, in Send, Macurua, Sofala, Cuama, a people for the moſt part differing in ſpeech and behauiour, each Village fighting with her Neighbour, captiuing them: and ſome (as at Macurua) eate them. Their chiefeſt liuing is by hunting, and by fleſh of Elephants. In euery Village is a new King. The Captaine of Moſambique, in his three yeeres gouernment, maketh three hundred thouſand Duckets gaine eſpecially, by Gold, from Sofala.

Vp, further within Land the people goe almoſt naked, and were ſo ſimple, when firſt the Portugals traded thither, f that Ludouico Barthema, or Vertomannus, for his Shirt, and another for a Razor, and a little Bell, bought fifteene Kowes of them; and then they were ready to fall together by the eares among themſelues for the Bell, who ſhould haue it. But they could not enioy their purchaſe, beeing driuen to their heeles by three Female Elephants, which hauing young ones, were very fierce, and made them leaue their Kine to ſaue themſelues. In theſe Seas the Moores ſayle in Veſſels ſowed with Leather, the ſayles of Palme-tree leaues calked with Gumme, gathered off the trees in the Woods.

Sofala.

Sofala lyeth betweene Cuama and Magnice, two Riuers. Heere the Portugals haue on a little Iland (whence the whole Kingdome hath his name) a Fort and Factory of very rich Trade, the people bringing great quantity of Gold (whereof they haue plentifull Mynes) for their Cloth and other Commodities: it is ſuppoſed amounteth two Millions yeerely. Ortelius g is of opinion, That this Cephala, or Sophala, is that which in Salomons time h was called Ophir, from whence ſo great quantity of Gold was brought by his Nauy. Ioſephus i ſeekes for it in India: Eupolemus k in the Red Sea, imagining it to be an Iland there placed: Dom. l Niger, Tremellius, and Iunius, in Aurea Cherſoneſus, where Malacca ſtandeth (although we reade not of any great quantity of Gold found in that ſoyle.) m Gaſpar Varerius is of the ſame minde, but reckoneth to the Cherſoneſus both Pegu and Samotra, with all that lyeth betweene them. And in Somatra they haue a Tradition, that Salomon had his Gold from thence: and in the Letter of the King to his Maieſtie, hee entitleth himſelfe King of the Mountaine of Gold, Solida, Curabia n with leſſe reaſon, applyeth it to Spagniola, diſcouered by Columbus, and by Columbus himſelfe ſo called. Arias o Montanus, Philip Mornay, Poſtellus, Goropius, would by their authority much moue vs to thinke with them, that Ophir is Peru, if the ignorance of the Load-ſtone, and thoſe huge Seas, eſteemed by Antiquity vnnauigable, did not deraine vs from conſent: & where ſhould Peru yeeld him Iuory, where neuer was yet ſeene an Elephant? Doctor Dee that famous Mathematician hath written a very large Diſcourſe of that Argument, which I haue ſeene with Maſter Hakluyt, much illuſtrating what the Ancients haue written of thoſe Seas and Coaſts, and concludeth that Hauila is the Kingdome of Aua (ſubiect to Pegu) and Ophir is Chryſe or Aurea before mentioned, firſt, poſſeſſed by Ophir, mentioned Geneſ. 10. that golden name eating vp the former of Ophir.

Iosephus p Acosta maketh Ophir and Tharsis to signifie no certaine places, but commonly to bee taken in a generall sense, as the word India is now with vs, a name giuen to all remote Countries East and West. He thinketh, that Salomons Gold, Iuory, &c. came from the East-Indies.

p Ios. Acosta, l. 1. cap. 14.

But some reasons doe yeeld great cause of coniecture for Sofala, both because of the plenty of the commodities which Salomons seruants are said to bring with them, and because of ancient buildings of stone-worke, which the q Inhabitants call, The worke of Deuils; supposing it impossible for men (ghessing of others by their owne ignorance) to haue built: which also haue strange Letters, that the Moores (though learned) could not reade: (and why might they not be the old Hebrew Letters, which the Phœnicians of old, and Samaritans to this day obserue, as elsewhere we haue shewed.) And further, Thomas r Lopez telleth, that certain Moores related vnto them of the riches of those Mines; that ships from Mecca and Zidem vsed to trade there; and that yearely there were taken forth of the Mines two millions of Mittigals, euery Mittigall being a Duckat of Gold, and a third part: That the Warres in those Countries at that time had ceased the Traffique: and that they had Bookes and Ancient Writings, which testified, That these were the Mines whence Salomon in his three Voyages fetched his Gold, and that the Queen of Saba was naturall of the parts of India. As for India, ye haue s euen now read that it was a name giuen to many Nations, and among the rest to Æthiopia. And if a man consider the small skill which that Age of the World had in Marine affaires, still as much as might be holding their course within the sight of Land, hee can scarce thinke, that long Nauigations could then be performed. Barrius accounteth all Sofala to the Empire of Benomotapa, of which we shall speake anon; wee haue now mentioned the same, by reason of the Isle which is subiect to the Portugals. These, besides Gold, here haue great Trade for Iuory of which Barrius saith, that in Benomopata are yeerely slaine foure or fiue thousands, and of Water-horses (whose teeth are accounted Iuory also) all the great Riuers in Africa are full. These feed sometimes on the Medowes, where the Mariners haue chased them, as Lopez t reporteth: and after long chasing by Land, they haue taken the water; where, in reuenge, they haue assaulted the Mariners in their Boats, and bitten chips off the same, being, by the thicknesse of their Hides armed against their Pikes, and haue made them afraid, that they would ouer whelme the Boat.

§. IIII.

Of Monoemugi, the Moores, Baduines, Caphars, in these parts.

WIthin the Land, behinde these parts, is the Kingdome of Monoemugi, a which is rich in Gold: their vnfortunate Warres with Monomotapa haue made them knowne. Nilus is their Westerne border, and Abassia on the North. They haue little red Bals made of a kinde of Clay in Cambaya, and resembling Glasse, which they weare for ornament, and vse for money. This King warreth with the Benomotapa, and hath terrible Souldiours, called Giacqui, or Agah, or Agog, who inhabite between the Lakes whence Nilus and Zaire take their beginnings; which liue a wandering life, like the Nomades, in Cottages which they make in the fields. They are of stature tall, and of countenance terrible, making lines vpon their cheekes with certaine iron Instruments, and turning their eye-lids backward, eating their enemies.

a Monoemugi.

These not long since (as b some say) inuaded the Kingdome of Congo, and forced the King to keepe in a small Isle, where himselfe was taken with a Dropsie, and his people famished, as after shall follow in due place. The Amazones of Monomotapa are euery way equall vnto them in prowesse. Little is knowne of the Religion of these Heathenish Nations nor of other Kingdomes, whereof we haue little but the names to relate, Goroua, Colta, Anzuga, Moneulo, Baduis.

b Od. Lopez. l. 2. c. 5.

Now, for those Moores which inhabited the Sea-coasts as we haue said, they are dispersed as farre as Benomotapa, but are not all c Catholike Mahumetans, especially such of them as haue conuersed, and taken their habitations further within Land. And the first Moores or Arabians that came to inhabite those Coasts, were banished persons, called as the Chronicles of Quiloa is reporeed, Emozaidin of Zaide, the Nephew of Hocem the sonne of Hali, whose Doctrine they followed in some opinions, contrary to the Alcoran, and therefore esteemed Heretikes.

c Io di Barros, Dec. 1. l. 8. c. 4.

Long after them came three ships with great multitudes of Arabians, that fled from the King of Laza their enemy, vnder the conduct of seuen Brethren, which built Magadazzo, and after that, Braua; which in manner of a Common-wealth, was till the Portugals time gouerned by twelue Aldermen, or chiefe Gouernours, that descended of the seuen Brethren.

Baduini. These Moores and the former differing from each other in their ſuperſtitions, could not agree, and therefore the Emozaidin were forced vp higher into the Countrey, and thereby mariages mixed themſelues with the Cafers (ſo the Arabians call all Heathen people) and became Mungrels in a Galli-maufrey of Deuotions, whom therefore the Sea-coaſt-Moores called by a generall name, a Baduini, which in Arabia and Egypt, is the title of the people that liue in the Champaine, and In-land Countreys: and thoſe that liue neere the Sea-coaſt are called Arabians.

b In a great written Booke giuen by Sir W Ral. to M. Hak.

They make no difference of meats, Don Iohn of Caſtro [b] writeth, that Badoil ſignifieth a man that liueth onely by cattell: and that the Troglodites, and Nations from Melinde and Magadoxa to Cape Guardafu, and on both ſides of the ſtraits, and on the Arabike Sea, to Ormuz (occupying rather then inhabiting the ſoyle) are called Badoies. They are (ſaith he) ſauage, without truth or ciuilitie, they are Mahumetanes, but accounted badde Moores, Theeues and Robbers, eating raw fleſh, drinking milke, their habite filthy; very ſwift, holding warre with all men; (as was prophecied of Iſmael their Progenitor) from Zeila to Suachen with the Abexijs, from thence to Alcocer with the Nobijs, from thence to Soez with the Ægyptians, from Soez to Ormus with the Arabians. They haue no King nor great Lord, but liue in troupes and factions; permit no Towne in their fields, haue no certaine habitation, but wander from place to place with their cattell. Their Xeque determineth ſuits as hee liſteth. Their lodging is in Caues and holes, of the moſt in Tents, their colour very blacke, their Language Arabicke.

The Heathens in thoſe parts are giuen to Auguries and Witcheries: and in their higheſt attempts and greateſt reſolutions, yet will leaue off, if any of theſe phantaſies bode vnluckineſſe. The fruits, birds, beaſts, and ſeeds, are in manner like to the people, all wilde. The ayre is vnholeſome. But what vnhealthſomeneſſe can there be found, where gold is found? which makes men commit themſelues (no maruell what they commit with others) to the moſt ſcorching heats, to contagious ayres, to tempeſtuous Seas, and the darkeſt priſons of the diſembowelled Earth.

Modeſty had almoſt forbidden me to recite that, which may with ſome eaſily obtaine a Plaudite, in the laſt Act and finiſhing of this Chapter, concerning the Caffares. Linſchoten ſhall recite it for me. They liue, ſaith he, like beaſts (he ſpeaketh of thoſe which liue neere Moſambique, and thoſe eſpecially more within the Land) they are blacke as pitch, with flat noſes, thicke lips, ſome haue holes both aboue and vnder in their lips, and, as it were, other mouthes in their cheekes, wherein they thruſt ſmall bones to beautifie themſelues: for which cauſe they raze and ſeare their bodies with Irons. If they will make a diuelliſh forme and Picture, they repreſent a white man in his apparell, as thinking nothing more vgly. Some alſo file their teeth as ſharpe as Needles. They haue Villages wherein they dwell together, and in euery Village a Lord or King, to whom they are ſubiect. Religion and Faith are vnknowne to them. They vſe mutuall warres, and ſome eate mans fleſh. When they take Priſoners in warre, or kill their Enemies, they obſerue a more then beaſtly teſtimony of their great valour, which is after this manner.

c Linſchot. c. 41.

They cut off their priuy members (to depriue them of all hope of generation) and then dry them well for preſeruation: after which they come before the King with great reuerence, in the preſence of the principall men of the Villages, and there take theſe members, ſo dryed, one by one in their mouthes, and ſpit them on the ground at the Kings feet, which the King with great thankes accepteth; and the more to honour them, cauſeth them all to be taken vp and giuen to them againe, which is from thenceforth an Enſigne of their Knight-hood. For they take all thoſe members, and tye them on a ſtring like a bracelet or chaine; and at all ſolemne meetings, as when they marry or goe to a wedding or feaſt, the Bride, or wiues of theſe Knights, doe weare that chaine about their necks, being, ſaith our Author, among them as great an honour as the Golden Eleece, or the Renowned GARTER with vs, and their wiues as proud thereof, as if ſome Crowne or Scepter had befalne them.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Benomotapa, and the parts adioyning.

§. I.

Of the Empire of Monomotapa.

BEnomotapa, [a] called also Benomotaxa, and Monomotapa, is a large Empire, so entituled after the name of the Prince thereof. (for Benomotapa is with them a Title, as Cæsar or Emperour with vs, the Portugals call him Emperour of the Gold) extendeth after some mens reckoning almost a thousand Leagues in compasse, betweene the great Lake, whence Nilus springeth on the North-East, Magnice and Toroa on the South, and the Sea-coast of Sofala on the East. It is betweene the Sea and the fresh waters, accounted a huge Island. Betweene Cuama and Corrientes it is pleasant and wholesome and fruitfull: and from the Cape Corrientes to Magnice, it abounds with beasts; but it is cold. Their principall Cities are Zimbas (haply the same which Ptolomey [b] cals Agisymba) and Benamataza; that one and twenty, this fifteene dayes iourney, from Sofala. Of the abundance of Elephants in Benomotapa is said before; whereof Æthiopia is euery where stored with manifold herds: [c] although I dare not subscribe to their opinion that esteeme Elephants as common there, as heere we haue Oxen. It is a creature nine cubits high (in their largest stature) and fiue cubits thicke: with long and broad eares, little eyes, short tayles, and great bellies. Of their disposition is spoken already. Some say fiue thousand are yeerely slaine in these parts.

The Mines neerest to Sofala, are those of Manica, which are in wide Champaines compassed with mountaines, ninety miles in circuit. The places where the Gold is, appeare and are knowne by the drinesse and barrennesse of the soyle, as if Nature it selfe could not hord vp Gold in her spacious chest, but she must needs proue bare and barren of her wonted good works; and how much lesse vnnaturall and degenerate mankinde? The Prouince is called Matuca, the people Boconghi (which although they are betweene the Line and the Tropike) yet in Winter haue such snowes in the mountains, that if any abide there, they dye frozen in them: and in Summer-time the ayre in the tops of those hils is so cleare and pure, that some of our men, which were then there, saw the New-Moone, the same day that shee had kissed her bright and bountifull Brother.

Vid. Marmol. l. 9. c. 32. & seq. See sup. c. 7.

And who can now charge that bright Eye of the World, with the obscure darkenesse of this Peoples hue, which so cold Winters, nor pure Summers, can lessen or lighten? Yea, euen in the cold Countries neere the Cape of Good-hope, the Æthiopians haue no hope or hap of good colour; whereas the hotter Countreys of Libya, and in manner all America (notwithstanding the Sunnes strait looking, and neerenesse, not allowing them a shaddow to attend them in the greatest height of his bounty) know not this blacke tincture in the Naturals thereof.

But to returne (and who will not returne?) to the Mines: There are other Mines in the Prouinces of Boro and Quiticui, in which and in the Riuers, is found Gold not so pure. The people are careless and negligent to get, and the Moores which traded with them, were faine to giue their wares in trust, with promise by such a time to pay them in Gold, and the people would not faile in their word.

Other Mynes are in Toroa, wherein are those buildings which Barrius attributeth to some forren [d] Prince, and I, for the reasons before alledged, to Salomon. It is a square Fortresse of stone; the stones of maruellous greatnesse, without any signe of morter or other matter to ioyne them. The wall fiue and twenty spannes thicke, the height not holding proportion. Ouer the gate are letters, which learned Moores could neither reade, nor know what letters they were. There are other buildings besides, of like fashion. The people call them the Court, for an Officer keepes it for the Benomotapa, and hath charge of some of his women, that are there kept. They esteeme them beyond humane power to build, and therefore account them the workes of Deuils and the Moores which saw them, said the Portugals Castles were no way to bee compared to them. They are fiue hundred and ten miles from Sofala, Westward, in one and twenty degrees of Southerly Latitude: in all which space is not found one building ancient or later; the people are rude, and dwell in Cottages or Timber.

[d] As the Portugals haue their Castles of Mina, Sofala, &c. so some Prince, Master sometimes of those Mines.

are against Mosambique, Quiloa and Melinde, among whom are many that eate mans flesh, and let their Kine blood to satisfie their thirst. These seeme prone to receiue the Faith: for they beleeue in One GOD, whom they call Mezimo, and haue no Idols, nor worship other thing: They punish nothing more seuerely then Witchcraft, whereunto other Negros are exceedingly addicted; no such person escapeth death. The like detestation they conceiue against Adultery and Theft. Euery one may haue as many wiues as they will: but the first is principall the other serue her; and her children are heires. A woman is not mariageable with them, till her naturall purgation testifie for her abilitie to Conception: and therefore they entertaine the first fluxe thereof with a great Feast.

In two things they are Religious; in obseruation of dayes, and Rites concerning their dead. Of dayes, they obserued the first day of the Moone, the sixt, the seuenth, the eleuenth, the sixteenth, the seuenteenth, the twentieth, and the eight and twentieth, because in that day their King was borne. The Religion is in the first, sixt, and seuenth, all the rest are repetitions, aboue ten. When any is dead, after his bodie is eaten, his neere kindred, or his wife which hath had most children by him, keepe the bones, with some signes whereby to know, whose they were: and euery seuenth day they obserue Exequies in the same place where they are kept: They spreade many clothes, and set thereon tables furnished with bread and sodden flesh, which they offer to the dead with prayers and supplications. And the principall thing they request of them, is, the good successe of their Kings affaires. These prayers they make, being cloathed in white garments: after which the good man and his family eate their offerings. The Benomotapa must weare cloathes of the same Country, for feare of infection; others may weare forren cloth. He is serued on the knee, and when he drinketh or cougheth, all they which are about him make a shout, that all the Towne may know. None may cough in his presence: also, euery one must sit in token of reuerence, to stand, is a signe of dignity which he affordeth the Portugals and Moores, and is the chiefe honour can bee yeelded any. The second honour is to sit on a cloth in his house: the third, that a man may haue a doore in his house, which is the dignity of great Lords. For meaner persons, they need not feare to haue any thing stolne, out of their open houses seeing the seuerity of Iustice doth secure them. Doores are not for necessity, but for honour. Their houses are of pyramidall or steeple forme, all the timbers meeting in the middest at the top: couered with earth and straw. Some of them are made of timbers, as long and as bigge as a great ships mast: the greater they are, the more honorable.

The Benomotapa hath musicke whithersoeuer he goeth, with singers: and more then fiue hundred iesters, which haue their Captain or Master of Reuels. The royall Ensigne is a little plow-share, with an Iuory point, which he carrieth alway at his girdle; by which is signified peace, and husbanding of the ground. He beareth likewise one or two swords in token of Iustice, and defence of his people. The Country is free, and giues him no other payments, but presents when they come to speake with him: and certaine dayes seruice. No inferiour comes before his superiour without some present; in token of obedience and courtesie. The Captaines of warre with all theirs, bestow seuen dayes in thirty in his husbandry or other businesse. Hee must confirme all sentences of Iudgement in his owne person: there needs no Prison, for matters are presently dispatched, according to the allegations and testimonies, that are brought. And if there bee not sufficient testimonies, then the matter is tryed by oath, in this manner. They beat the barke of a certaine tree, and cast the powder thereof in water; [b] which the party drinketh, and if he doe not vomit, he is cleared; if he vomit, he is condemned. And if the accuser, when the accused party vomiteth not, will drinke of the same, and doth not vomit, he is then acquitted, and the matter dispatched. If any sue to him, he speedeth not, but by mediation of a third person, which also sets down the summe that the King must haue, somtime at so deare a rate, that the suter rather refuseth the Kings grant. They haue no Horse, and therefore warre on foot: the spoyles are generally shared amongst all. When he marcheth, in the place where he is to lodge, they make a new house of wood, and therein must continuall fire be kept, without euer going out; saying, that in the ashes might be wrought some witcheries to the indamagement of his person. And when they goe to the warres, they neuer wash their hands nor faces, till they haue obtained victory. They haue their wiues with them, which are so loued and respected, that if the Kings sonne meet with one of them in the street, hee giues her way. Benomotapa hath more then a thousand women; but the first is principall, although she be inferiour in bloud, and her sonne succeeds. And in seed-time and harueſt, the Queene goeth to the field and ouerseeth the stuffe, esteeming it a great honour. Thus farre out of Barrius.

Iohannes Boterus [c] tels, that his chiefe warriours are women, namely, certaine Amazones, which seare off their left paps, as Odoardo [d] Lopez reporteth, lest they should hinder their shooting, after the manner of the ancient Amazones: they are quick, bold, couragious, and con-constant in battaile, and most constant in inconstancie: for when they make shew of flight, they will returne (espying their aduantage) with the greatest fury. They dwell in certaine Countries by themselues, and at certaine times haue men to accompany with them for generation, to whom they send their Males, reseruing all the Female Children which they haue. Thus we find Amazons, which the Ancients reported in Asia, and Diodorus in Libya, now in these times, if this report bee true, in Æthiopia: and Huldericus [u] Schmidel hath told of the like in America. Others [x] deny it: and none hath yet written of them from his owne sight. For my part, no Amazonian hath yet conquered my credit.

In the yeere 1560. Consaluus [y] Silueria, with two other Iesuites, went from Goa to the Kingdomes of Inhamban, and Monomotapa: and comming to Inhamban, they went to Tonge, the City Royall, where they baptized the King and all his people in a short space, naming the King Constantine, the Queene Mary. Thence went Consaluus to Monomotapa, and so preuailed with his Images, Preaching, and contempt of the World, that he wanne the King and his Mother, with multitudes of others to Baptisme. But soone after, the King, by suggestion of the Moores, slue him. Sebastian in reuenge raysed an Armie of sixteene hundred, [z] most of them being Gentlemen, which he sent vnder the conduct of Francis Barretto. The Benomotapa fearing the Portugals forces, offered reasonable conditions, which Barretto refusing, was discomfited, not by the Negro, but by the Ayre; the malignity whereof (the sowre sauce of all these Golden Countryes in Africa) consumed his people. There are other Kingdomes adioyning to Monomotapa, and the Mountaynes of the Moone, Matana, Melemba, Quinbebe, Berteca, Bauagul, of which I can giue you but the names.

Of Caphraria, the Cape of Good Hope, and Soldania.

CAphraria, or the Land of the Caphars is next to bee considered, which Maginus boundeth betweene Rio di Spirito Sancto, and Cape Negro, extending to the Cape of Good Hope Southwards. Why hee should call this part the Caphars, I know not: for the Arabians, of whom this word is borrowed, giue that name to all the Heathen people in Africa, yea both the Arabians, and all of their Religion, call all such as receiue not that Superstition, Caphars, euen Christians also, as Master Ienkinson [*] long since told vs. And for the Heathens in Africa, Barrius affirmeth, that it is by the Moores giuen to them all: signifying, Without Law, or lawlesse people. Zanguebar is in this respect called Cafraria. It should seeme it is appropriated to these the Southerliest Nations of Africa, for want of other the more true proper names which were vnknowne. With the names of the Capes, and other places of note, Master Pory [a] hath already acquainted his English Reader: Onely that notable and famous Cape of Good Hope, (so named [b] by Iohn the Second, King of Portugall, for that hope which he conceiued of a way to the Indies, when it was first discouered) deserueth some mention. It hath three head-lands, the Westermost beareth name of Good Hope: the middlemost Cabo Falso, because they haue sometimes in their returne from the Indies, mistaken this for the former: betweene which two Capes runneth into the Sea a mighty Riuer, called by the Portugals Rio dulce, which springs out of a Lake called Gale, situate among the Mountaynes of the Moone, so much celebrated by the ancient Geographers: The third and Eastermost, is that of Agulhas or Needles about fiue and twenty leagues from the first; both which seeme as two hornes, wherewith it [c] threatens the Ocean, which in these parts is found oftentimes tempestuous, and when it cannot preuayle against this rough-faced and horned Promontory, it wreakes the whole malice vpon the ships, whose ribs in the enraged fits, it would breake if they were of Iron; as Linschoten [d] testifieth of his owne experience. True it is, that sometimes it is passed with more ease, but not so usually: and Linschoten tels, that at his returne from India, the Saint Thomas, a new Carricke, was heere cast away, [e] and their ship wherein he sayled, in such danger, that one while they prayed, another while murmured, another time would returne backe, and the Captaine professed no small maruell, why our Lord suffered such good Catholikes to indure such torments, and the English Heretickes and Blasphemers to passe so easily. The whites there (sayth hee) strike against a ship, as if they strucke against a Hill, that if it were of stone it would at last be broken.

Capaine [f] Lancaster traded with the people neere these parts, and for two Knines bought an Oxe, for one, a Sheepe, &c. in good quantity. Their Sheepe are great, with great tailes, but hairy, not woolled. Their Oxen great, not fat, but well fleshed. The Captaine killed there an Antelope as bigge as a Colt. There were diuers great beasts vnknowne to them. When they had passed this Cape, they lost their Admirall, Captaine Raimond, and neuer saw them, or heard of them more. And foure dayes after they found as terrible an Enemy from aboue, and encountred with a Thunder clap, which slue foure of their men out-right, their neckes being wrung asunder: And of fourescore and fourteene men there was not one vntouched; but some were blind, others brused in their legs and armes, or brests, others drawne out, as if they had beene racked; which all yet, God be thanked, did after recouer.

The same Sir Iames Lancaster was after this sent Generall for the East India Company; which hauing made a stocke of threescore and twelue thousand pound, bought the Dragon of sixe hundred tunnes, the Hector of three hundred, the Ascension of two hundred & fourescore, the Susan of two hundred and threescore, and sent in them in Merchandize and Spanish Money, to the value of seuen and twenty thousand pound. The Scorbute so weakened their men, that they were not able to hoyse out their Boates, except in the Generals ship, whose men (drinking euery morning three spoonefuls of the juyce of Limons) were healthfull. He bought a thousand sheepe in Soldania g and forty two Oxen as bigge as ours, the sheepe greater, but hairy, and might haue bought more, for old Iron. The people, he sayth, are tawny; Cornelius Houtman sayth, Oliue blacke, blacker then the Brasilians, their haire curled and blacke, as in Angola, not circumcised, clocke like a brood-hen in speaking, paint their faces with diuers colours, strong, actiue, swift, subiect to Monomotapa: they slue some Flemings for wrongs, which made the English warie in trading with them. Sir Edward Michelborne h found here great reliefe. Besides great Herds of Oxen and Flocks of Sheepe, heere is abundance of Deere, Antilopes, Baboones, Foxes, Hares, Ostriches, Cranes, Pellicans, Herons, Geese, Duckes, Pheasants, Partridges, &c. A great Bullocke they might buy for an old Iron hoope not worth two pence, a Sheepe for a piece not worth two good Horsenayles. The people liued on the guts and filth of the meate which our men cast away, not so much as washing the same, but couering them ouer with hot ashes, before they were through hot, pulled them out, and shaking them a little with their hands, did eate both guts, excrements, and ashes. They liue vpon raw flesh and certayne Roots. Sir Henry Middleton, i a Generall of the foure ships aboue-named, found (in his returne) three and fifty men dead in the Hector at this Bay, and but ten left: The Susan was lost, it was thought for want of men. And long before the Trade of the English (which is now very much increased in the Easterne parts) Giouanni da Empoli k telleth, That neere the Cape, the Countrey people would giue them a Kow for a little Bell. The men and women were clothed, or rather a little couered with hairy skinnes, the women beautifying this their beastly habits with the tayles of the beasts, hanging downe before and behind to couer their shame. These women had large and deformed paps. Religion they could obserue none amongst them, and thought that they eat their flesh raw.

The Hollanders also in the yeere 1595. trafficked with these Cafres, which were valiant, but base in apparell, couered with Oxe or Sheep-skins wrapped about their shoulders, with the hairy side inward, in forme of a Mantle; their priuy parts couered with a Sheepes tayle, fastened before and behind with a Girdle. But now we see it made a daily matter to the Portugall, English and Dutch, so capable of Hope of Good, that the Cape of Good Hope is nothing feared: although at home many take exceptions as if there were no good hope of publike good, & wish that they would carry out of Europe lesse Mony, & bring home more men: but of this elsewhere is spoken at large. I cannot omit, m that vpon the top of this Promontory, Nature hath as it were framed her selfe a delightfull Bower, here to sit and contemplate the great Seas, which from the South, East and West beat vpon this shore: and therefore hath here formed a great plaine, pleasant in situation, which with the fragrant herbes, variety of flowers, and flourishing verdure of all things seemes a terrestriall Paradise. It is called the Table of the Cape. That which from hence lyeth to Cape Negro, hath not to our purpose any thing notable. This also deserueth mention, that notwithstanding all the damages of this dreadfull Promontory, and the Seas on this side and beyond, n Iames Botellius, a Portugall, to recouer the fauour of his Prince, Iohn the third, by the first bringing newes of a happy accident that then befell in India, in a little Boat or Vessell scarce eighteene foote long, and six broad, sayled from Cochin to Dabul, and from thence alongst the Arabian and African shores, doubling this terrible Cape, and missing Saint Helena, came yet safe to Lisbone, worthily welcomed both for his message, and the messenger, that durst aduenture to encounter Neptunes strongest forces, notwithstanding so weake furniture.

The Hollanders o at the Cape of Good Hope, (if you will heare other testimonies) had of the Inhabitants two Kine for two rusty Kniues, and one much greater for a new one: two fat Buls and three Sheepe for a barre of Iron, weighing threescore and ten pound. The people make make much account of Iron: they are of short stature: darkish colour: their armes are adorned with Copper and Iuory, their fingers with Rings of Gold, and with Beads of bone and wood. They brand their bodies with diuers markes: And because they alway anoint themselues with grease and fat, they yeeld a ranke smell. If wee killed a beast for our vse, they would aske the inwards, and eate them raw, the filth being not well clensed from them. At their Feasts they would seethe a beast in his hide, fastned on foure sticks with fire vnderneath. They liue miserably, yet for gallantry weare bones and pieces of dryed flesh about their neckes. Neere this Cape are weeds growing in the Sea fiue and twenty fathome long.

The Ascension [p] built their Pinnasse, Anno 1608. at Soldania, about fifteene or sixteene leagues from the Cape of Good Hope, and there tooke in for their prouision about foure hundred head of Cattell, as Oxen, Steeres, Sheepe, and Lambes, together with fowles and fresh water. They filled their Boat with Seales at the Ile Pengwin, a little from thence. Such was the brutish nature of the Inhabitants, that when the English had cast out of their ship one of those Seales, and the same had lien fourteene dayes, and now swarmed with crawling Maggots, they would take them vp and eat them; as they would also doe the guts, garbage, and panch of the beast. They more esteemed Iron, then Gold or Siluer. Heere the first night after they weighed Anchor. The Ascension lost the Vnion, and the Good Hope their Pinnasse (so neere the Cape of Good Hope) which, mee thinkes, obseruing what after befell them, seemes an ominous presage, written in these names, of their other losses which followed, concluded with the losse of their ship on the Coast of Cambaya. It is morally true, that ascending and aspiring minds lose Vnion [q] (for onely by pride doth man make Contention) Vnion being gone, Good Hope followeth, Quæ concordiâ crescunt, discordiâ & res & spes pereunt: and so it befell in this their Tragedie, after the losse of those Vessels which bare such names. The ship was lost by the Masters indiscretion, but yet hath the honour (suruiuing her fates) that shee was the first English ship that euer sayled on those Seas.

[q] Prou. 13. 10.

Although we haue beene tedious in this Cape and the Bay of Soldania, yet I haue thought it not amisse to adde somewhat out of later Relations. Master Copland writes that the Ayre here is so wholesome, and the Earth so fertile, as might with helpe of Art become a Paradise. Euen Nature it selfe hath diuersified the Soyle in an entercourse of Mountaynes, Plaines, Woods, Medowes, Streames, as intending so pleasant a variety, in a seeming artificiall Order. Their many sicke men, exposed on shore in Tents, within twenty dayes were all (one excepted) found as at first day. They bought nine and thirty Beeues, and one hundred and fifteene Sheepe for a little [r] Brasse or Copper cut out of two or three old Kettles. The people are louing, but were at the first afraid by reason of some vnkindnesses receiued from the Dutch, which had beene there to make trane, and had killed and stolne their Cattell. They are of of middle size, well limmed, very nimble and actiue, dance in true measure: weare short Clokes of Sheepe or Seales skings to their waste with a Cap of the same, the haire [s] inwards, a Rats skin about their priuities, some of them haue soles tyed about their feet, their neckes adorned with Chaines of greasie Trypes (or guts also in many doubles) which they would sometimes pull off and eate stinking and raw; they did also eate the entrayles by vs throwne away, halfe raw (and would scramble for it like hungry Dogges) lothsomely besmeared with the bloud: they weare Bracelets of Copper or Iuory about their armes with Ostrich feathers and shels. The habit of women is like the former, which at our first comming seemed shamefast, but at our returne would impudently vncouer that which here must bee couered with silence; their brests hang downe to their middles; Their haire is curled: Copper with them is Gold, and Iron Siluer: their Houses little Tents in the Fields, made of skins, at their pleasure remoued. On the high Hill called the Table may be seene an hundred miles about: some ascended and thence tooke obseruation of many Bayes and Riuers. Hee thinkes these parts might be profitably planted with an English Colony.

Patt. Copland. In the Dragon 1611.

[r] Samuel Castleton saith, that Copper is in request with them and not Brasse.

[s] It was then Iune, which is their Winter. The people are said to haue their heads lothsome, as if they were couered with Kow dung, which is done by the iuyce of herbs.

One [t] sayth of this people, that they are idle, not so much as hauing a Canow, nor knowing to take eyther fowle or [u] fish, whereof they haue store; theeuish and swiftly running away with that which they haue stolne. By trading with the Dutch and English, their prices of things are raysed, as you here see, to some more Copper or Iron, then at the first Discoueries. Their Beasts are large, their Sheepe smooth and short haired (not woolly) like a young Calfe, with long and broad eares, hanged like Hounds; their hornes short and tender, easily broken; their tayles greater then any part of a mans legge, some weighing 40. pounds. Their Beeues are large, and most of them leane. The men haue but one stone, the other being cut away when they are young; the reason seemes to bee some reasonlesse Superstition towards the Sunne, which they point vnto being demanded thereof. The Hector brought thence one of these Saluages, called Cory, which was [x] carryed againe, and there landed by the Newyeeres gift, Iune 21. 1614. in his Copper Armour, but returned not to them whiles the the Ships continued in the Road, but at their returnes in March was twelue-moneth after, he came, and was ready to any seruice, in helping them with Beeues and Sheepe. The wilde beasts are dangerous in the night, as Lions, Antilopes and others, some of which in one night, carried away twelue pieces of meate, laid in the Riuer to water, couered with a stone of two hundred weight, which was remooued also a very great distance. The Pengwins in the Iland neere to Soldania, haue stumps in stead of wings, and with their feet swimme fast. There are Seales a thousand sleeping in an Heard, on the Rockes: Myce, and Rats, and Snakes innumerable. The weather in the midst of Winter is there temperate. Penguin Iland is North Northwest and an halfe West, three leagues from Soldania: and this fourteene leagues North Northeast from Cape Bona Speranza, and ten leagues North by West from Cape Falso, which is Eastwards from the former. The habitation of the Soldanians seemes moueable, and following the best pastures. There are fallow Deere, Porcupines, Land Tortoyses, Snakes, Adders, wild Geese, Duckes, Pellicans, Crowes with a white band about their necks, Pengwins, Guls, Pintados, Alcatrasses, Cormorants, Whales, Seales, &c.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Kingdome of Congo, and the other Kingdomes and Nations adioyning.

Of Angola.

THE Kingdome [a] of Congo (vnderstanding so much by the name, as in times past hath beene subiect thereto) hath on the West, the Ocean; on the South, the Caphars, and mountaynes of the Moones; on the East, those hills from which the Riuers issue and runne into the Fountaynes of Nilus; and on the North, the Kingdome of Benin. Of these Countries, Pigafetta, [b] from the Relation of Odoardo Lopez, a Portugall, hath written two bookes, out of whom P. du Iarric, Botero, and others, haue taken most of their reports.

And in this we will begin with the most Southerly parts; in which we first come into the Kingdome of Matama (this is the Kings proper name) who being a Gentile, ruleth ouer diuers Prouinces, named Quimbebe. This is a Kingdome great and mightie, extending from Bruuagal to Bagamidri: the ayre thereof is wholsome, the earth outwardly furnished with store of fruits, inwardly with mines of Crystall, and other metalls. The Signiories toward the Sea-coast are very meane, and want Hauens.

Angola sometime a Prouince of the Kingdome of Congo, is now a great Kingdome it selfe and very populous. They speake the same language (with small difference of dialect) that is vsed in Congo, whose yoake they cast off since the Congois became Christians. Diego Cam [d] first discouered these parts for the Portugals An. 1486. And the Portugals vsed to trade quietly with the Angolans: but some of them trading as high into the Countrey as Cabazi, the Royall Citie, which is an hundred and fiue miles from the Ocean, were there by order from the King put to the sword, vnder pretence of intended treason. This was done 1578. Paulo Dias (to whom the King Sebastian had giuen the gouernment of these parts: with licence to conquer three and thirtie leagues alongst the Coast to him and his heires) to reuenge himselfe for this despight done to his people, armed such Portugals as hee had, and with two Gallies and other Vessels, which he kept in the Riuer Coanza, hee went on both sides the Riuer, conquering and subduing many Lords vnto him. The King of Angola raysed a mightie Armie of a million of men, [e] as is supposed. For they vse to leaue none at home that is fit to carrie a weapon: and make no preparation for victuall, but such as haue any, carrie it vpon the shoulders of their seruants, and therefore no maruell if their foode being soone consumed, their camps be soone dissolued. Small likewise is their prouision of armour for offence, and for defence much lesse. Dias sent to the King of Congo for aide, who lent him sixtie thousand men: with which, and his owne Nation, he made his partie good, against the confused rabbles of the Angolans. The trade of Angola is yet continued, and from thence the Portugals buy and carry to Brasil and other parts yeerly, a world of slaues which are bought within the Land, and are captiues taken in their warres. Paulo Dias at his death bequeathed to the Iesuites as much as might maintayne fiue hundred of that Societie in these parts. Master Thomas [f] Turner, one that had liued a long time in Brasil, and had also beene at Angola, reported to me, that it was supposed eight and twentie thousand slaues (a number almost incredible, yet such as the Portugals told him) were yeerly shipped from Angola and Congo, at the Hauen of Loanda. He named to me a rich Portugall in Brasil, which had ten thousand of his owne, working in his Ingenios, (of which he had eighteene) and in his other imployments. His name was Iohn du Paus, exiled from Portugall, and thus inriched in Brasil. A thousand of his slaues at one time, entred into conspiracie with nine thousand other slaues in the Countrey, and Barricadoed themselues for their best defence against their Masters, who had much adoe to reduce some of them into their former seruitude.

To returne to Angola, we may adde the report of another of our Countrey-men, [g] Andrew Battell (my neere neighbour, dwelling at Leigh in Essex) who serued vnder Manuel Siluera Perera, Gouernour vnder the King of Spaine, at his Citie of Saint Paul: and with him went farre into the Countrey of Angola, their Armie being eight hundred Portugals, and fiftie thousand Naturals. This Andrew Battell telleth, that they are all Heathens in Angola. They had their Idolls of wood in the midst of their townes, fashioned like a Negro, and at the foot thereof was a great heape of Elephants teeth, containing three or foure tuns of them:

e P. Diaz (as some report) sent a present to Spaine of two Butts of Negros noses, which were slaine. A. B. Iarric. hath 1200000.

g Andrew Battell was taken by the Portugals on the coast of Brasil, and shipped ouer to Congo, where (and in the Countries adiacent) hee liued very many yeeres, and was Sergeant of a Band, &c.

theſe were piled in the earth, and vpon them were ſet the ſculls of dead men, which they had ſlaine in the warres, in monument of their victorie. The Idoll they call Mokiſſo, and ſome of them haue houſes built ouer them. If any be ſicke, he accounteth it Mokiſſo's hand, and ſendeth to appeale his angrie god, with powring wine (which they haue of the palme-tree) at his feet. They haue proper names of diſtinction for their Mokiſſo's, as Kiſſungo, Kalikete, &c. and vſe to ſweare by them, Kiſſungo wy, that is, by Kiſſungo. They haue another more ſolemne oath, in triall of Controuerſies: * for which purpoſe they lay a kinde of Hatchet, which they haue, in the fire, and the Ganga-Mokiſſo, or Mokiſſo's Prieſt taketh the ſame red hot, and draweth it neere to the skinne of the accuſed partie; and if there bee two, hee cauſeth their legges to bee ſet neere together, and draweth this hot Iron without touching betweene them; if it burnes, that partie is condemned as guiltie, otherwiſe hee is freed.

* This triall is called Motamba.

For the ceremonies about the dead, they firſt waſh him, then paint him, ſtirdly apparell him in new clothes, and then bring him to his graue, which is made like a vault, after it is digged a little way downe, vndermined, and made ſpacious within, and there ſet him on a ſeate of earth, with his beades (which they vſe in chaines and bracelets for ornament) and the moſt parts of his goods, with him in his laſting home. They kill Goats, and ſhed the blood in the graues, and powre wine there, in memoriall of the dead.

a Od. Lopez.

They are much giuen * to diuination by birds. If a bird flie on their left hand, or crie in ſome manner which they interprete ominous and vnluckie, they will ceaſe from the enterpriſes which they haue in hand. Their Prieſts are b called Ganga, and ſo highly reputed, that the people thinke it in their power to ſend plentie or ſcarcitie, life or death. They are skilfull in medicinall herbes and in poyſons; and by familiaritie with the Deuill foretell things to come.

In Angola euery man taketh as many wiues as he will. There are mines of ſiluer, and of moſt excellent copper. They haue many Kine, but loue dogs better then any other fleſh, and fat them to the ſhambles. Andrew Battell ſaith, that the dogs in thoſe Countries are all of one ſort, prick-eared Curres of a meane bigneſſe; which they vſe alſo to hunt with, but they open not; (for they cannot barke) and therefore they hang clappers made of little boords about their necks. Hee hath ſeene a Maſtiffe ſold for three ſlaues. Lopez affirmeth, that a great dogge was exchanged for two and twentie ſlaues; which might happen vpon ſome extraordinarie occaſion. The money in Angola is glaſſe-beades, which they vſe alſo, as is ſaid, for ornament. The King of Angola hath ſeemed willing to become Chriſtian, and hath ſent to the King of Congo for that purpoſe, but could not obtayne any Prieſts in that ſcarcitie to inſtruct him.

Andrew Battell.

This Kingdome hath many Lordſhips ſubiect thereto, as farre on the Sea-coaſt as Cape Negro. Towards a Lake called Aquelunda, lyeth a Countrey called Quizama, the Inhabitants whereof being gouerned after the manner of a Common-wealth, haue ſhewed themſelues friendly to the Portugals, and helped them in their warres againſt Angola. The houſes in Angola are made in faſhion like a Bee-hiue. The women at the firſt ſight of the newe Moone, turne vp their Bummes, in deſpight, as offended with their menſtruous courſes, which they aſcribe vnto her. The men ſometimes in a valorous reſolution, will deuote themſelues vnto ſome haughtie attempt in the warres: and taking leaue of the King, will vow neuer to returne, till they bring him a horſe-head, or ſome other thing very dangerous in the enterpriſe, and will either doe it, or die. Horſe-tayles are great jewells, and two ſlaues will bee giuen for one tayle, which commonly they bring from the Riuer of Plate, where horſes are exceedingly increaſed and growne wilde. They will by firing the graſſe round about, hemme the horſes about with a fierie circle, the fire ſtill ſtreightning and approching neerer, till they haue aduantage enough to kill them: Thus haue the Europæan Cattell, of horſe and kine, ſo increaſed in that other World, as they ſpare not to kill the one for their hides, and the other for their tayles.

§. II.

Of Congo.

* Od. Lopez.

NExt to Angola Northwards, * is the Kingdome of Congo, the weſterne Line whereof Lopez extendeth three hundred threeſcore & fifteen miles, the Northern fiue hundred and fortie, the Eaſtern, fiue hundred; and the Southern three hundred and threeſcore. The breadth thereof from the mouth of Zaire, croſſing ouer the Mountaynes of the Sunne, and the Mountaynes of Cryſtal, is ſix hundred miles: And yet is it much ſtreightned of the ancient bounds, only the title except, which ſtil holdeth the old ſtile;

Don ALVARO King of Congo, and of Abundos, and of Matama, and of Quizama, and of Angola, and of Cacongo, and of the seuen Kingdomes of Congere Amolaza, and of the Langelungos, and Lord of the Riuer Zaire, and of the Anziques, and Anziquana, and of Loango. The present Kingdome is diuided into sixe Prouinces, Bamba, Songo, Sundi, Pango, Batta, Pemba. Bamba is the chiefe for greatnesse and riches, then gouerned by Don Sebastian Mani-Bamba; the word Mani is a title of honour, and signifieth a Prince or Lord: when need requireth, the Mani-Bamba may haue in campe foure hundred thousand men of warre. Therein are mines of siluer: and on the Sea-coast a kinde of shells which they vse for money; for siluer and gold is not vsed for money amongst them. In this Prouince are yeerely bought by the Portugals about fiue thousand Negros. There are among them very mightie men that will cleaue a slaue in the middle, or cut off a Bulls head at one blow. Yea, one of them did beare on his arme a vessell of wine, containing the fourth part of a Butt, and might weigh three hundred and fiue and twentie pound, vntill it was cleane emptied. There are certaine creatures as bigge as Rammes, and haue wings like Dragons, with long tayles and chaps, and diuers rowes of teeth, and feede vpon raw flesh. Their colour is blue and greene, their skinne be-painted like scales, and they haue but two feet. These the Pagan Negros doe worship for gods, and at this day many of them are kept for a miracle. And because they are very rare, the chiefe Lords doe curiously preserue them, and suffer the people to worship them, in regard of the profit which accrueth to them, by the offerings which the people make vnto them. Other creatures of these parts are mentioned in the first Chapter of the former Booke. Peacocks are not common, and are very deare, their feathers being vsed for Royall Ensignes. The King of Angola bringeth vp some in an inclosed wood, and suffereth none to keepe them but himselfe. To speake at large of the other fiue Prouinces, would bee tedious to the Reader, and Master * Hartwell hath taught Lopez to speake English, of whom such as are desirous, may be further satisfied. Ouer-against the Ile Loanda, where the shell-money is gathered, is vpon the Continent, the Towne of Saint Paul, inhabited with Portugals and their wiues.

* Historie of Congo translated by Abraham Hartwell.

The Riuers of Congo are many, Bengo, Coanza, Dande, Lembe, Ozone, Loze, Ambriz, and the greatest of all, Zaire: all which haue some, either affinitie in mutuall marriages of their streames, or consanguinitie in the Fountaynes from whence they flow, which are certayne Lakes, one of which is Zembre, the other Aquelunda. In all these Riuers are common the rarities of Nilus, the ouer-flowing of the waters, Riuer-horses, Crocodiles, and such like. Andrew Battell told mee of a huge Crocodile, which was reported to haue eaten a whole Alibamba, that is, a companie of eight or nine slaues chayned together, and at last payed for his greedinesse; the chaine holding him slaue, as before it had the Negroes, and by his vndigestible nature deuouring the Deuourer; remayning in the belly of him after he was found, in testimonie of this victorie. Hee hath seene them watch and take their prey, haling a Gennet, Man, or other Creature into the waters. A Souldier thus drawne in by a Crocodile, in shallower waters, with his knife wounded him in the belly, and slue him. In their Summer it rayneth not, and then the places in their Winter (the time of the Sunnes neerest presence, attended with daily raynes) couered with water, doe grow thicke, and matted with abundance of little trees, herbes and plants, which the fatned wombe of that moist soile conceiueth by the directer beames of the Sunne, and the ouer-flowing waters in the Winter carry away, as it were small * Ilands; lifting them vp together with the rootes and soile, the young Trees and Deere standing and growing thereon, carried captiue vnto Neptunes eternall prisons. In Bengo and Coanza they are forced to set vp, for a time, houses vpon cratches, their other houses being taken vp for the Riuers lodgings. Zaire is of such force, that no ship can get in against the Current, but neere to the shore: yea it preuailes against the Oceans saltnesse threescore, and as some say, foure score miles, within the Sea, before his proud waues yeeld their full homage, and receiue that salt temper in token of subiection. Such is the haughtie spirit of that streame, which ouer-running the low Countries as it passeth, and swollen with conceit of daily Conquests, and daily Supplies, which in Armies of showres are by the clouds sent to his succour, runnes now in a furious rage, thinking euen to swallow the Ocean, which before he neuer saw, with his mouth wide gaping, eight and twentie miles, as Lopez affirmeth, in the opening; but meeting with a more Giantlike enemie, which lyes lurking vnder the cliffes to receiue his assault, is presently swallowed in that wider wombe; yet so, as alwayes being conquered, hee neuer giues ouer, but in an eternall quarrell, with deepe indented frownes in his angrie face, foaming with disdayne, and filling the ayre with noyse (with fresh helpe) supplies those forces which the Salt-Sea hath consumed. In this Riuer is a fish called Ambize Angulo, or Hog-fish, that hath, as it were, two hands, and a tayle like a target, which eateth like a Porke, and whereof they make Lard, and hath not the sauour or taste of fish. It feedeth on the grasse that groweth on the bankes of the Riuer, and neuer goeth out: it hath a mouth like the moozell of an Oxe: there are of them that weigh fiue hundred pound a piece. Obſeruing where it feedes, with weapons in their boats, they hinder it from taking water, and hauing taken it, preſent it to the King (it is vpon perill of life) they ſmoke it as wee doe Bacon, and reſerue it for dainties.

About the yeere 1490. Iohn the ſecond, King of Portugall, ſent Conſaluo di Soſa, with three ſhips, and Prieſts in them, to bring the King and people of Congo to Chriſtian Religion, * which was effected: and although hence aroſe ciuill warres amongſt them, yet the matter was at laſt ended to the aduancement of the Chriſtian Religion (ſuch as the Portugals taught, and no doubt, infinitely better then their Pagan ſuperſtition, howſoeuer ſpotted with many Romiſh ſtaines) and from that time to this, now an hundred and twentie yeeres, hath Congo continued Chriſtian, vnder Iohn, Alfonſo, Piedro, and the reſt of their Kings.

When the firſt Biſhop of Saint Thomas went into Congo, to take poſſeſſion of his Paſtorall charge there (for the Kingdome of Congo was annexed to the Biſhoprick of Saint Thomas) from the Sea-ſide to the Citie, which is an hundred and fiftie miles, King Piedro cauſed the wayes to bee made ſmooth and trim, and couered ouer with mats, that the Biſhop ſhould not ſet his feet vpon any part of the ground, nor adorned: all the wayes, trees, and higher places ſwarming with people, offering Lambes, Kids, Chickins, Partridges, Veniſon, Fiſh, and other neceſſaries, to teſtifie their zeale. And at laſt arriuing at the Citie of Saint Sauiours (before called Banza, which ſignifieth a Court, and is commonly attributed to all the chiefe Cities, where the King of any of thoſe Countries holdeth his reſidence) hee was there receiued by the King and his Nobles, and ordayned the Church there to bee the Cathedrall Church of his See, which had belonging to it eight and twentie Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments vſuall.

§. III.

Of their Heatheniſh rites: Alſo of their ſtrange Trees, and of the Ile Loanda.

AFter Don Piedro ſucceeded Franciſco, and after him, Diego: who being dead, his ſonne and two other Competitors of the Kingdome were ſlaine, and Henrico brother to Diego, was made King, and after his death, Aluaro, whom the Giacchi draue out of his Kingdome, till King Sebaſtian ſent Franciſco di Gouea to expell them.

The greateſt, and moſt zealous Prince for Chriſtian Religion, was Alphonſo, who, on paine of death, forbade to all his ſubiects the hauing, or worſhipping of Idols, which he commanded ſhould be all brought, and deliuered to the Lieutenants of the Countrie, together with their Characters and Witcheries. For before euery * man adored that which beſt liked him: ſome, thoſe Dragons before ſpoken of: others, Serpents, which they nouriſhed with their daintieſt prouiſions. Some worſhipped the greateſt Goats they could get; ſome, Tigres; and the more vncouth and deformed any beaſts were, the more in their beaſtly and deformed ſuperſtition were they obſerued. Bats, Owles, and Scritch-owles, birds of darkneſſe, were the obiects of their darkned deuotions: Snakes and Adders enuenomed their ſoules, with a more deadly poyſon, then they could doe their bodies. Beaſts, Birds, Herbes, Trees, Characters, and the formes of thoſe things painted and grauen, yea the skinnes of them, being dead, ſtuffed with ſtraw, had their ſhares in this diffuſed varietie, and confuſed maſſe of irreligious religion. The ceremonies they vſed to them, were, kneeling on their knees, caſting themſelues grouelling on the earth, defiling their faces with duſt, vetball prayers, reall offerings. They had their Witches, which made the people beleeue that their Idols could ſpeake: and if any man had recouered of any ſickneſſe, after hee had recommended himſelfe to them, they would affirme that the angrie Idoll was now appeaſed. All theſe Idols King Alphonſo cauſed to be burned in one heape, in ſtead whereof, the Portugals gaue them Images of Saints and Crucifixes to worſhip. This may ſeeme an exchange rather, then a ceaſing from ſuperſtition, were not ſome fundamentall ſubſtance of Truth communicated (beſides thoſe blinde ſhadowes) wherewith, no doubt, God draweth ſome out of darkneſſe (this darkneſſe notwithſtanding) in a true and ſauing, though a dim and ſhadowed light; wherewith as farre going before vs in affection, as we before them in knowledge; I dare not but in the hope of ſaluation of ſome, thanke God for this glimpſe of heauenly light, rather then raſhly to cenſure and ſentence them to a totall and helliſh darkneſſe.

Emanuel since sent supplies of religious persons, to confirme them in their Christianitie; and his sonne, Iohn the third sent also Iesuites to that purpose; who erected Schooles among them: and they also send their sonnes into Portugall to learne the Sciences and knowledge of Europe. God Almighty grant that those Fountaines may be clensed of all Popish mire, that thence more wholesome waters may flow, to the watering of this Ethiopian Vineyard.

They vse in Congo [b] to make cloathes of the Enzanda tree, of which some write the same things that are reported of the Indian Fig-tree, that it sends forth a hairy substance from the branches, which no sooner touch the ground, but they take root and grow vp, in such sort, that one tree would multiply it selfe into a wood (if Nature set not some obstacle.) The innermost barke of the Inzanda, by beating, is made excellent cloth. Other trees there are, which the Tides couer, and are discouered by the Ebs, laden at the roots with Oisters. But more admirable is that huge tree called Alicunde, of which my friend Andrew [c] Battell supposeth some are as bigge (besides their wonderfull tallnesse) as twelue men can fathome. It spreds like an Oake. Some of them are hollow, and the liberall clouds into those naturall Caskes disperse such plenty of water, that one time three or foure thousand of them, in that hote Region, continued foure and twenty houres at one of those trees, which yeelded them all drinke of her watery store, and was not emptied. Their Negros climed vp with pegs (for the tree is smooth, and therefore not otherwise to be climbed, and so soft, that it easily receiued pegs of a harder wood, driuen into her yeelding substance with a stone) and dipped the water, as it had been, out of a Well. He supposed that there is forty tunne of water in some one of them. It yeeldeth them good opportunitie for honey, to which end the Countrey-people make a kinde of Chest, with one hole into the same, and hang it vpon one of these trees; which they take downe once a yeere, and with fire or smoke chasing or killing the Bees, take thence a large quantitie of honey. Neither is it liberall alone to the hungry and thirstie appetite, but very bountifully it cloathes their backs, with the barke thereof, which being taken from the yonger Alicundes and beaten, one fathome which they cut out of the tree, will by this meanes extend it selfe into twenty, and presently is cloth fit for [d] wearing; though not so fine as that which the Inzanda tree yeeldeth. It ferues them also for boats, one of which cut out in proportion of a Scute, will hold hundreths of men.

Of their Palme-trees, which they keepe with watering and cutting euery yeere, they make Veluets, Sattens, Taffatas, Damasks, Saroenets, and such like, out of the clensed and and purged leaues thereof, drawing long and euen threds for that purpose.

And for their Palme-wines, which they draw out of the top of a kind of Palme, which at first is strong and inebriating wine, and in time declineth to a sowre and holesome vineger: of the stone of the fruit, which is like an Almond, they also make bread, of the shale of the fruit, Oyle, which also serueth them for Butter: Lopez distinguisheth this tree from the Coco tree, which is there also growing: and another Palme that beareth Dates: others that beare Cola, like a Pine-apple, excellent for the stomacke, and for the Liuer most admirable: it being supposed that the Liuer of a Hen or other Bird, putrified, sprinkled with this matter, recouereth the former freshnesse and soundnesse. Other sorts of Palmes yeeld other fruits, and of their leaues they make Mats, wherewith they couer their houses. Lopez saw a Pomecitron, the kernell whereof left within the rinde, yeelded a pretty tall sprigge in foure dayes.

Of stones they haue such store to build with, that in some places they may cut out a Church of one piece. There are whole Mountaines of Porphorie, of Ialpar, of white Marble, and other Marbles: one especiall, that yeeldeth faire Iacinths, that are good Iewels, straked like as it were with naturall veines.

The Port and Ile of Loanda lying ouer against the Portugall Towne of Saint Paul, (about twenty miles in circuit) famous for many things, deserueth especiall mention for this, that it yeeldeth, in lesse then halfe a yard digging, Waters very sweet: but of so contrarie a Nature to the Sea, her mighty neighbour, that when the Sea ebbeth, the water is Salt, and when it floweth, the same is sweet and fresh: as if the Sea imparted that which it selfe hath not, or rather enuied that which he hath, and therefore alway at his comming, re-demandeth that saltnesse from those springs to attend vpon their Ocean-mother. So doe wee see the Siluer Lampes of Heauen in the Sunnes absence to lighten the World, which yet want light, when it is most plentifull, to shew themselues. Euen Nature sealeth and confirmeth Monopolies to her principall Courtiers, alwayes prouided, that it thereby better serueth for the Common good, and therefore no precedent to such Dropsie and Spleen-like Monopolies, Mony-pollings, with which some exorbitant members burthen themselues, and make others by lighting, heauy, worthily therefore by the Sun of our Great Britaine, at the first rising of his morning brightnesse, dispersed from our Horizon. But how farre is Loanda from Britaine? And yet our scope is to bring Loanda and all the

AT followeth in the course of our Discouerie, to set you on shore in Loango, the Northerly neighbour of Congo, right vnder the Line, a whose Countrie stretched two hundred miles within Land. The people are called Bramas, the King, Mani Loango; sometimes, as report goeth, subiect to the King of Congo. They are Circumcised after the maner of the Hebrews, like as also the rest of the Nations of those Countries vse to be. They haue aboundance of Elephants, and weare cloathes of Palme. Andrew b Battell liued amongst them two yeares and a halfe. They are, saith he, Heathens, and obserue many Superstitions. They haue their Mokisso's or Images, to which they offer according to the proportion of their sorts and suits: The Fisher offereth fish, when he sueth for his helpe in his fishing; the Countrey-man, Wheat; the Weauer, Alcomgo's, pieces of cloth: other bring bottles of wine: all wanting that they would haue, and bringing what they want, furnishing their Mokisso, with those things, whereof they complaine themselues to be dis-furnished.

b Andrew Bat.

Their Ceremonies for the dead are diuers. They bring Goats and let them bleed at the Mokisso's foot, which they after consume in a Feasting memoriall of the deceased party: which is continued foure or fiue dayes together, and that foure or fiue seuerall times in the yeere, by all of his friends and kindred. The dayes are knowne, and though they dwell twenty miles thence, yet they will resort to these memoriall Exequies, and beginning in the night will sing dolefull and funerall songs till day, and then kill, as aforesaid, and make merry. The hope of this, maketh such as haue store of friends, so contemne death; and the want of friends to bewayle him, makes a man conceiue a more dreadfull apprehension of Death.

Their conceit is so rauished with superstition, that many dye of meere other death. Kin is the name of vnlawfull and prohibited meat, which according to each kindreds deuotion, to some Family is some kinde of Fish; to another, a Hen; to another, a Buffe; and so of the rest: in which, they obserue their vowed abstinence so strictly, that if any should (though at vnawares) eate of this Kin, he would dye of conceit, alway presenting to his accusing conscience the breach of his vow, and the anger of Mokisso. Hee hath knowne diuers thus to haue died, and sometimes would, when some of them had eaten with him, make them beleeue, that they had eaten of their Kin, till hauing sported himselfe with their superstitious agony, he would affirme the contrary. They vse to set in their Fields and places where Corne or Fruits grow, a Basket with Goats-hornes, Parrats feathers, and other trash: This is the Mokisso's Ensigne, or token that it is commended to his custodie; and therefore the people very much addicted to theft, dare not meddle, or take any thing. Likewise, if a man, wearied with his burthen, lay it downe in the high-way, and knit a knot of grasse, and lay thereon; or leaue any other note (knowne to them) to testifie, that hee hath left it there in the name of his Idol, it is secured from the lime-fingers of any passenger. Conceit would kill the man that should transgresse in this kinde.

In the Banza, or chiefe Citie, the chiefe Idol is named Chekoke, Euery day they haue there Market, and the Chekoke is brought forth by the Ganga, or Priest, to keep good rule, and is set in the Market-place, to preuent stealing. Moreouer, the King hath a Bell c; the strokes whereof sound such terrour into the heart of the fearfull thiefe, that none dare keepe any stolne goods after the sound of that Bell. Our Author inhabited in a little Reed-house, after the Loango manner, and had hanging by the wals, in a Cloth-case, his Piece, wherewith hee vsed to shoot Fowles for the King, which, more for loue of the Cloth then for the Peece, was stolne. Vpon complaint, this Bell (in forme like a Cowbell) was carried about & rung, with proclamation to make restitution; and he had his Peece the next morning set at his doore. The like another found, in a bagge of Beads of a hundred pound weight, stolne from him, and recouered by the sound of this Bell.

They haue a dreadfull and deadly kind of tryall in Controuersies, after this manner: There is a little Tree, or Shrub, with a small Root (is called Imbunda) about the bignesse of ones thumbe, halfe a foot long, like a white Carrot. Now when any listeth to accuse a Man, or Family, or whole Street, of the death of any of his friends, saying, That such a man bewitched him, the Ganga assembleth the accused parties, and scrapes that Root, the scrapings whereof he mixeth with water, which makes it as bitter as gall (hee tasted of it:) one Root will serue for the tryall of a hundred men. The Ganga brewes the same together in Gourds, and with Plantine stalkes hitteth euery one, after they haue drunke, with certaine words. Those that haue receiued the drinke, walke by, till they can make Vrine, and then they are thereby freed. Others abide till either Vrine frees them, or dizzinesse takes them: which the people no sooner perceiue, but they cry Vndoke, Vndoke, that is, naughty Witch: and hee is no sooner fallen by his dizzinesse, but they knocke him on the head, and dragging him away, hurle him ouer the Cliffe. In euery Liberty they haue such Tryals, which they make in cases of Theft, and death of any person. Euery weeke it fals out that some or other vndergoes this tryall, which consumeth multitudes of people. a Tryall of suspected persons.

There be certaine persons called Dunda, which are borne of Negro-Parents, and yet are, by some vnknowne cause, white. They are very rare, and when such happen to be born, they are brought to the King, and become great Witches: They are his Councellors and aduise him of lucky and vnlucky dayes for execution of his enterprises. When the King goes any whither, the Dundas goe with him, and beat the ground round about with certaine Exorcismes, before the King lies downe, and then sit downe by him. They will take any thing in the Market, not daring to contradict them.

Kenga is the landing place of Loango. They haue there an Idol called Gumbiri, and a holy House, called Munsa Gumbiri, kept and inhabited by an old woman; where once a yeere is a solemne Feast, which they celebrate with Drummes, Daunces, and Palme-wines: and then they say hee speaketh vnder the ground. The people call him Mokissa Cola, of a strong Mokisso, and say, That he comes to stay with Chekoke, the Idol of Banza. That Chekoke is a Negro-Image, made, sitting on a stoole: a little house is there made him. They annoint him Toccola, which is a red colour made of a certaine Wood b ground on a stone, and mixed with water, wherewith they dayly paint themselues, from the waste vpwards, esteeming it great beauty: otherwise they account not themselues ready. It is for like purpose carried from hence to Angola. Sometimes it fals out, that some Man or Boy is taken with some sudden Enthusiasme, or rauishment, becomming mad, and making a whooping, and great clamours.

b This seemeth to be Red Sanders. A Bat, saith it is Log-wood.

They call them Mokisso-Moquat, that is, taken of the Mokisso. They cloath them very handsome, and whatsoeuer they bid in that fit (for it lasteth not very long) they execute as the Mokissos charge.

Morumba is thirty leagues Northwards from hence, in the Mani Loango's Dominion; where he liued nine moneths. There is a House, and in it a great Basket, proportioned like to a Hiue, wherein is an Image called Morumba, whose Religion extendeth far. They are sworne to this Religion at ten or twelue yeares old: but for probation are first put in a House, where they haue hard diet, and must be mute for nine or ten dayes, any prouocation to speake notwithstanding. Then doe they bring him before Morumba and prescribe him his Kin, or perpetuall abstinence from some certaine meat. They make a cut in his shoulder like to an halfe Moone, and sprinkle the bloud at Morumbas feet, and sweare him to that Religion. In the wound they put a certaine white powder, in token of his late admission; which so long as it continueth, doth priuiledge him to take his meat and drinke with whomsoeuer he pleaseth, none denying him the same, at free cost. They also haue their fatall Tryals before this Image, where the accused partie kneeling downe, and clasping the Hiue, saith Mene quesa cabamba Morumba, signifying: That he comes thither to make tryall of his innocence; and if he be guiltie, he fals downe dead; being free, he is freed. Andrew Battell saith, hee knew sixe or seuen, in his being there, that made this tryall.

§. II.

Of the Anzigues.

a Od. Lopez. l.1. cap.5.

BEyond the Countrey of Loango are the Anzigues[a], the cruelleſt Canibals which the Sunne looketh on. For inother places they eate their enemies, or their dead; but here they take and eate their kinsfolkes and Country-folkes. They keepe Shambles of mans fleſh, as with vs of Beefe and Muttons. They eate their enemies: Their ſlaues (if cut out, they will yeeld them more in the ſeuerall Ioynts, or Pieces, then to bee ſold aliue) they kill, though it be but to ſaue a halfe-peny. Some, of them for wearineſſe of life, and ſome (oh crueltie of vaine-glory) euen for valour of courage, in contempt of Death, and eſteeming it an honorable proofe of their fidelitie and manhood, will offer themſelues to the Butcherie, as faithfull ſubiects vnto their Princes, of them to bee conſumed and eaten, that with their death, and after their death, they may doe them ſeruice.

These Anzichi ſtretch from Zaire to Nubia. They haue many Mines of Copper, and great quantitie of Sanders, red and gray; wherewith (mixed with the Oyle of Palme-tree) they anoint themſelues. The Portugals temper it with Vineger, for the healing of the French Pocks: by the ſmoke thereof they driue away the head-ache. It is incredible, or at leaſt would ſo ſeeme to vs, which Lopez reporteth, that they carrying their arrowes (which are ſhort and ſlender, of very hard Wood) in the Bowe-hand, will ſhoot off eight and twenty (ſo many they hold at once) before the firſt of them fall to ground; and with a ſhort Hatchet, with a ſudden whirling themſelues about, breake the force of the enemies Arrowes, and then hanging this Hatchet on their ſhoulder, diſcharge their owne Arrowes. They are of great ſimplicitie, loyaltie, and fidelitie, and the Portugals more truſt them then any other ſlaues. They are yet ſauage and beaſtly, and there is no conuerſing with them: but they bring ſlaues of their own Nation, and out of Nubia to Congo to ſell; for which they recarrie Salt, and Shels, which they vſe for Money; Silkes. Linnen, Glaſſes, and ſuch like.

b All the Heathen Nations in theſe parts of Africa are circumciſed.

They [b] circumciſe themſelues, and beſides that, both men and women, of the Nobility and Communaltie, from their childhood marke their faces with ſundry ſlaſhes made with a knife. I asked (ſaith [c] Lopez) of their Religion, and it was told mee that they were Gentiles; which was all I could learne of them. They worſhip the Sunne for the greateſt God, as though it were a man; and the Moon next, as though it were a woman. Otherwiſe euery man chuſeth to himſelfe his owne Idol; and worſhips it after his own pleaſure. The Anzichi [d] haue one King principall, which hath many Princes vnder him.

c Cap.10.

Of Ambus and Medera, Northerne Regions, little beſides the names is knowne. Biafar is inhabited with people much addicted to Enchantments, Witchcrafts, and all abominable Sorceries.

§. III.

Of the Giucchi or Iagges.

c Lopez l.1.c.13. & l.2.c.9.

OF the Giacchi we haue made often mention, and of their incurſions into Congo. Theſe, in their owne Language, are called Agag, as Lopez [c] teſtifieth, and liue on both ſide of Nilus, in the borders of the Empire of Mohenhe-Muge. They vſe to marke themſelues about the lip, and vpon their cheekes, with certaine lines which they make with iron inſtruments, and with fire. Moreouer, they haue a cuſtome to turne their eye-lids backwards, ſo that their blacke skins, white eyes, and cauterized markes ſeeme to conſpire a dreadfull and gaſtly deformitie in their faces. They hold warre with the [d] ſuppoſed Amazones; and of late yeeres haue inuaded the neighbour-Nations. Their weapons are Darts, their food humane fleſh, without all humanity deuoured.

e Theſe Amazones are (as we haue obſerued (doubted of in other places: and And. Battel, which trauelled neere to thoſe parts, denyeth this report o' Lopez as vntrue.

Thus Lopez reporteth by reports. Andrew Battel liued (by occaſion of the Portugals treachery) with the Iagges a longer time then euer any Chriſtian, or White Man had done: namely, ſixteene moneths: and ſerued them with the Muſket in their warres: neither could Lopez (ſaith he) haue true intelligence whence they came. For the Chriſtians at that time had but vncertaine coniectures of them: neither, after had the Portugals any conuerſing, but by way of commerce: but he being betrayed, fled to them for his life, and after by ſtealth eſcaſcaped from them: the onely European that euer liued in their Campe.

He ſaith; they are called Iagges by the Portugal, by themſelues Imbangolas (which name argues them to be of the Imbij & Galæ before mentioned) and came from Sierra Liona: That they are exceeding deuourers of mans fleſh, for which, they refuſe Beefe and Goats, whereof they they take plenty. They haue no setled habitation, but wander in an vnsetled course. They rise in Harueſt, and inuading some Country, there ſtay as long as they find the Palmes, or other ſufficient meanes of mayntenance, and then ſeeke new aduenture. For they neyther plant or ſowe, nor breed vp Cattle: and which is more ſtrange, they nouriſh vp none of their owne children, although they haue ten or twenty wiues a man, of the propereſt and comelieſt ſlaues they can take. But when they they are in trauell, they digge a hole in the Earth, which preſently receiueth in that darke priſon of death, the new borne Creature, not yet made happy with the light of life. Their reaſon is, that they will not bee troubled with education, nor in their flitting wanderings be troubled with ſuch cumberſome burthens.

Once, a ſecret Prouidence both puniſheth the Fathers wickedneſſe, and preuenteth a viperous Generation, if that may bee a preuention where there is a ſucceſſion without Generation: and as Plinie c ſaith of the Eſſoni, Gens æterna eſt in qua nemo naſcitur. For of the conquered Nations they preſerue the Boyes from ten to twenty yeeres of age, and bring them vp, as the hope of their ſucceſſion, like Negro Azimogli, d with education fitting their deſignes. Theſe weare a Collar about their necke, in token of ſlauery, vntill they bring an Enemies head ſlaine in battaile, and then they are vncollared, freed, and dignified with the title of Souldiers. If one of them runnes away, he is killed and eaten. So that hemmed in betwixt hope and feare, they grow very reſolute and aduentrous, their Collars breeding ſhame, diſdaine, and deſperate fury, till they redeeme their freedome, as you haue heard. Elembe the great Iagge brought with him twelue thouſand of theſe cruell Monſters from Sierra Liona, and after much miſchiefe and ſpoyle ſettled himſelfe in Benguele, twelue degrees from the Line Southwards, and there breedeth and groweth into a Nation. But Kelandula, ſometime his Page, proceeds in that beaſtly life before mentioned, and the people of Elembe by great troupes runne to him, and follow his Campe in hope of ſpoyle. They haue no Fetiſſo's, or Idols. The great Iagge or Prince, is Maſter of all their Ceremonies, and is a great Witch. I haue ſeene this Kelandula, (ſayth our Author) continue a Sacrifice from Sun to Sun, the rites whereof are theſe: Himſelfe ſat on a ſtoole in great pompe, with a Cap adorned with Peacockes feathers (which fowles in one Countrey called Shelambanca, are found wild, and in one place empaled, about the graue of the King, are fifty kept and fed by an old woman, and are called Iugilla Mokiſſo, that is, Birds of Mokiſſo.) Now, about him thus ſet, attended forty or fifty women, each of them weauing continually a Zebras tayle in their hands. There were alſo certaine Gangas Prieſts or Witches. Behind them were many with Drummes and Pipes, and Pungas (certaine Inſtruments made of Elephants teeth, made hollow a yard and halfe, and with a hole like a Flute, which yeeld a lowd and harſh ſound, that may bee heard a myle off.) Theſe ſtrike, and ſound, and ſing, and the women weaue (as is ſaid) till the Sunne be almoſt downe. Then they bring forth a pot, which is ſet on the fire with leaues and roots, and the water therein: and with a kind of white powder, the Witches or Gangas, ſpot themſelues, one on the one cheeke, the other on the other; and likewiſe their foreheads, temples, breſts, ſhoulders, and bellies, vſing many inchanting tearmes, which are holden to be Prayers for Victory. At Sun-ſet a Ganga brings his Kiſſengula, or War-hatchet, to the Prince (this weapon they vſe to weare at their girdles) and putting the ſame in his hand, bids him be ſtrong, their God goes with him, and he ſhall haue victory. After this they bring him foure or fiue Negros, of which, with a terrible countenance, the great Iagge with his Hatchet kils two, and other two are killed without the Fort. Likewiſe, fiue Kine are ſlaine within, and other fiue without the Fort; and as many Goats, and as many Dogs, after the ſame manner. This is their Sacrifice, at the end whereof all the fleſh is in a Feaſt conſumed. Andrew Battle was commanded to depart when the ſlaughter began; for their Deuill, or Mokiſſo (as they ſaid) would then appeare and ſpeake to them. This Sacrifice is called Kiſſembula; which they ſolemnize when they attempt any great enterprize. There were few left of the naturall Iagges, but of this vnnaturall brood the preſent ſucceſſion was rayſed.

§. IIII.

Of the Lakes and Riuers in theſe parts of Africa.

NOw, that we haue thus diſcourſed of theſe former Nations, let vs take view of the more in-land and Eaſterly borders, which abut on Congo: where wee ſhall finde the great Lake Aquilunda, which, with her many Riuers aforeſaid, watereth all that great Countrey aſſiſted therein by a farre greater Lake, called Zembre, great Mother, and chiefe Ladie of the Waters in Africa. As for the Mountaynes of the Moone, now called Toroa, there is a Lake called Gale, of no great quantity, whence issueth a Riuer named Camissa, and by the Portugals, the sweet Riuer disemboquing at the False Cape, an arme whereof had before entred the Sea (in 32. degrees 40. minutes) of Infante [t] one of Dias his companions, in the first Discouery of those parts, called Infante, because hee there went first on Land. But from those Hils of the Moone, the Lake whence Nilus springeth hath no helpe. Neyther are there two Lakes, East and West, distant from each other about foure hundred and fifty miles, as Ptolemey describeth; for then the one should be in the Confines of Congo and Angola, the other about Sofala and Monomotapa: where is found but one Lake (for Aquilunde is no tributary to Nilus.) This Lake is betweene Angola and Monomotapa, and contayneth in Diameter 195. miles. There is indeed another Lake, which Nilus maketh in his course, but standeth Northward from the first Lake Zembre, and not in East or West parallel. Neyther doth Nilus (as some affirme) hide it selfe vnder the ground, and after rise againe, but [u] runneth through monstrous and Desart Valleyes, without any setled channell, and where no people inhabited, from whence that fabulous opinion did grow. This Lake is situate in twelue degrees of Southerly Latitude, and is compassed about like a Vault with exceeding high Mountaynes, the greatest whereof are called Cafates, vpon the East; and the Hils of Sal-Nitrum, and the Hils of Siluer on another side, and on the other side with diuers other Mountaynes. The Riuer Nilus runneth Northwards many hundred miles, and then entreth into another great Lake which the Inhabitants doe call a Sea. It is much bigger then the first, and contayneth in breadth two hundred and twenty miles, right vnder the Equinoctiall Line. Of this second Lake, the Anzichi giue certaine and perfect intelligence: for they traffique into those parts. And they report, That in this second Lake there is a people that sayleth in great ships, and can write, and vseth number, weight and measure, which they haue not in the parts of Congo; that they build their Houses with Lime and Stone, and for their fashions and qualities may be compared with the Portugals. This seemeth to be in Goiame, where the Abassine entitleth himselfe King, and in his title (as [x] before you haue read) cals it the Fountayne of Nilus: which Aluares [y] also mentioneth, that Peter Conilian saw. He affirmeth, That there are Iewes about those parts, which, perhaps are the people that the Anzichi speake of.

From this second Lake in Goiame, the Riuer which is there called Gihon passeth through the Pretes Dominion to Meroe, and so to Egypt, as elsewhere is shewed. In these two great Lakes are diuers Ilands, that we speake not of the Tritons, and other I know not what Monsters, there reported to be found. The Lake Zembre yeeldeth not Nilus alone, but Zaire, a farre more spacious Riuer in wideneſſe, and more violent in force then Nilus, or any other Riuer in Africa, Europe, or Asia, of which wee lately related. And, besides her Northerne and Westerne Tributes carried by those two Riuers to the Mediterranean and Ocean Seas, shee sendeth her great streames of Magnice, Coaua, and Cuama, into the inner or Easterne Ocean.

Magnice [z] springing out of Zembre, receiueth in his Voyage to the Sea three other Riuers; Nagoa, called Saint Christophers; and Margues, which both spring out of the Mountaynes of the Moone, by the people there called Toroa; the third is Arroe, which, besides his waters, payeth to Neptune, which neyther needs nor heeds it, a great quantity of Gold, which it washeth from the Mountaynes of Monomotapa (a Countrey extending it selfe betweene Magnice and Cuama) whose seuen mouthes seeke to swallow vp many Ilands, which they hold in their jawes, but through greedineſſe loſe that which greedineſſe makes them seeke, not able to swallow so great morsels, which therefore remayne and are inhabited with Pagans. Boterus sayth, That this Riuer runs out of that Lake, a great space in one Channell, and then is diuided into two; the one called Spirito Santto, running into the Sea, vnder the Cape Couenti; the other Cuama, receiueth the Riuers Panami, Luangua, Arruia, Mangiono, Inadire, Ruina, and is sayled more then seuen hundred miles.

Coaua is also a great Riuer The Inhabitants within Land, about these Riuers, are (as you haue heard) Pagans and rude people. Let me now haue leaue to conuey my selfe downe this Riuer Coaua into the Ocean, and there take view of the many Ilands with which Nature hath adorned this African World, as with many Brooches and Iewels set and hanged about the fringes of her garments: and first, learning what we can of the Ilands in and from the Red Sea hither, we will in some Portugall Carricke sayle round about the African Coast, and acquaint you with what we shall find worthiest obseruation: and then not willing as yet to set foot in Lisbone, as we meete with the Fleet of Spaine sayling to the New-found World, will passe with them for further Discoueries. For, to goe into the Mediterranean to discouer the African Ilands there, will scarce be worth the while. To heare a little of those few, may content vs.

Thus Authors haue written of the Riuers, which they neuer saw: but Iohn dos Santos, a Por-Portugall Frier which liued many yeeres in those parts, hath giuen a full description of the Riuers and Coasts in those Eastern shores of Afrike. By whose narration it appeareth that Ciama and Nilus come not out of one and the same Lake: for Ciama ouerflowreth in March and Aprill (not as Nilus in July and August) and makes the Country at that time sickly, and driueth the wild beasts to the higher parts, where Lions, Tygres, Elephants, Merus (a kind of horned Asses), Ounces, Rhinocerotes, Buffals, wilde Kine, and Swine, and Horses and Dogs, Zeutas & other creatures of those parts are assembled in a peaceable Parliament by the Riuers forcible summons, which so awes them all (as sometime in Noahs Arke) that they forget their preying nature, and quietly expect their dimission with that of the waters. Riuer horses there abound and Crocodiles: other strange Beasts, Birds, Fishes, and Wormes they haue with Manna and other naturall rarities, touching which I referre the Reader to the second part of my Pilgrimes, where the Relations of Santos and Iohson, will entertayne him frankly.

Santos also will there acquaint you with the description of the Riuers, Countrey, Mynes and people of those parts: their Kingdomes, Warres, Customes Politike, Oeconomike and Religious: the Portugall Forts of Sofala, Sena, Tete, and the Marts of Massapa, Inhame, Manzono: the strange Rites of the Kings of Monomotapa, Quiteue, Sedanda and their Neighbours. The Quiteue is King of Sofala, and on that side of Ciama, & had about 100. wo-men, amongst which his Aunts, Sisters, Daughters whom he carnally vseth (which incest to a subiect were death) & when he dyeth, the Successor is he to whom those women giue peaceable and quiet possession of the Kings Houle and themselues. No force is made nor subiection yeelded vpon forced possession. The King thus by them receiued is not only admired of the rest, but adored: yea, they aske of him raine, seasonable Haruest and all things they need, not without great Presents. He hath his Oracle consultations with the Deuill, and euery yeere on the Obit day of the former King, the Deuill then entring into some one of the Assembly and giuing answers. Euery New Moone is a holy day, and the Musimos or Feast dayes which the Quiteue appoints by Proclamation, which they obserue without working. They otherwise worship no God, nor haue any Idoll, Image, or Temple, Priest or Sacrifice. They call the Quiteue by prodigious titles, Lord of the Sunne and Moone, and especially entitle him in all things Great, as great Thiefe, great Witch (none else are permitted to bee Witches) great Lion, &c. good or bad, so as Great be the Epithete. The name Quiteue is common to all their Kings successiuely in that Countrey and to the Countrey it selfe. Their Oathes by Poyson, licking of hote Iron, &c. and other strange customes you shall find in the place aforesaid.

Of the Seas and Ilands about Africa: the Ancient and Moderne Obseruations, Nauigations, and Discoueries.

§. I.

Of the Red Sea, and why it is so called.

AFter this long and tedious journey ouer Land, where the steepe and snowie Mountaynes, the myrie and vnwholesome Vallies, the vnpassable Wildernesses, swift Riuers, still Lakes, thicke Woods, and varietie of the Continent-obseruations, haue thus long whilld vs; let vs now by a swifter course take view of the African Seas, and those Ilands which they hold alway besieged, but neuer conquer. In the first place presents it selfe to our Discouery, that Sea which separateth (after the Moderne reckoning) Africa and Asia alunder. This is called the Red Sea; which name (sayth [a] Plinie) the Grecians call Erythraeum (this word signifieth Red, and is ascribed by some to a King named Erythras (whom Postellus [b] and some others thinke to be Esau or Edom, which, the like signification of his name signifying Red, and habitation not very farre distant, make enough probable) by others to the repercussion of the Sunne-beames; by others, to the colour of the Sand and Earth (in the bottome;) and by others to the nature of the Water it selfe. Solinus [c] affirmeth, it is called Erythraeum, of King Erythrus, the Sonne of Perseus and Andromade, and not only of the colour, alledging [d] Varro, that learned ned Romane, for his Authority; who also mentioneth a Fountayne on the shoare thereof, which changeth the colour of the Sheepes fleeces which drinke thereof, into a duskish and darker colour. Strabo [e] citeth the testimony of Nearchus and Orthagoras, concerning the Ile Tyrina, two hundred furlongs from Carmania, in which the Sepulchre of Erythras is shewed; being a great Hill, planted with trees: and that he raigned in those parts, and left his name thereunto; which they learned of Mithropastes, who flying from Darius, had lived in that Iland. Barrius [f] writeth, That Alfonso Dalboquerque (that victorious Portugall, who subdued so many Ilands, Seas, and Kingdomes to that Crowne) in a Letter to King Emanuel affirmeth, That it may be called the Red Sea, of certayne red spots or staines which are seene therein; and when he entred into the Streits, he encountred a great veine of red water, extending it selfe from Aden as farre as they could see from the ships tops. These red veines of water the Moores ascribed to the ebbing and flowing of that Sea. John de Castro [g] (afterwards Viceroy of India) sayled to the bottome of Streit, as farre as Suez; and much laboured to find the cause, why it should be called the [h] Red Sea: there knowne only by the name of the Sea of Mecca: and they inquired much at our name Red. He, or Gaspar Aloisius which pennes the Booke of this Voyage, whibh my friend Master Hakluyt communicated to mee, sayth, that the colour of this Sea is as of other Seas, neyther is there red dust blowne in by the winde: but the Land generally on both sides is browne and very darke, as if it were scorched in some places blacke, and in some white: the Sands are of ordinary colour; onely, in three places were certaine Mountaynes with veines of red, which were hard Rocke. In many places the waues seeme very red by accident: but taking vp the water in a Vessell, out of the Sea, it seemed cleerer and more Crystalline then that without the Straits. Hee caused also some to dive, which did bring him out of the sandy bottome a red matter, branched like Corall. In other places where were greene spots in the Sea, were taken out greene branches: and where the Sea was white, the sand there vnder was very white: and though the depth in some places amounted to twenty fathome, yet the purity of the Chrystalline waters caused this transparent colour. Neere to Suachen he found most of those spots, and from thence to Aleder, the space of one hundred thirty six leagues. The Sea in this space hath many shelues, the ground whereof is Coral stone, of which one sort is red, the other very white. The white Sands in the bottome make it seeme white, the Ooze greene, that Corally substance red; which in that space was the most of the three.

But neerer the bottome, towards Suez, in a great space hee saw none. Further without the Strait, he saw such red spots or veines of water at Cape Fartach, as if Oxen had beene slaine there, yet, the water taken vp in a Vessell seemed cleere; and hee supposed that this redneſſe proceeded of the Whales bringing forth their young. Barrius misliketh that coniecture, and those other of Antiquity, in searching the cause of this name of Red, and is of opinion, That the violent currents of the Tydes, assisted with some tempestuous winds, rayse vp from the bottome that red floore, whereof we haue spoken, and cause, by the motion of the same vnder the water, that redneſſe in the vpper face thereof: which is in more spacious quantity neere the Straits, where there is greatest force of the Tydes; and the threeds or straines of this redneſſe are lesse in the greater and more spacious Sea-roome. The Portugall Pilots first thought, that the winds brought out red dust from the dry soyle of Arabia, which no mans experience hath confirmed. Andrea [k] Corsali, which sayled and warred vnder the Portugals in these Seas, Anno 1516. sayth, hee knowes not why it should be called red, for the water is coloured as in other Seas: which seemeth to crosse the former reports: and may eyther bee construed of the water generally not discoloured, or perhaps while hee was there, the Tydes and Winds did not conspire so boysterously, as at some other times they doe, against the yeelding and weaker soyle in the bottome thereof.

Our English Pilots haue giuen later and better light in their Trade at Mocha and other places, as in the first and second parts of our Bookes of Voyages is euident. But the most Learned Pilot for the Erythraan Antiquities is Master Fuller, who in the last Chapiter of his fourth Booke examineth the Græcian Fables of Ayathurchides, Ctesias, Ourainus, Pausanias, of Boxus also, Mela, Plinie and the rest, and at last concludeth that, of Esaus name Edom, the Countrey was called Edumæa, (farre larger then that of Ptolomey, besides it containing a great part of Petræa, and all Nabathea) and of that Countrey coasting so great a part of that Sea (as appeares by Salomons and Iehoshaphats Ophyrian Navies built at Exion-Geber in Edumæa their owne Countrey) the Sea adioyning was called Edumæan, or in Greeke interpretation Erythraan, that is, Rubrum or Red: as Cephas the name properly by Christ giuen to the first of the Apostles, is commonly in a Greeke interpretation called Peter.

Howeuer it be for this redneſſe, many deceiue themselues in streitning this name to the Arabian Gulfe, which the Ancients [l] gaue vnto all the Seas from Ægypt to India: and reckon the Persian and Arabian Gulfes, armes of the Red Sea. Yea, Arrianus (not hee that writ

§. II.

Of the chiefe Townes and Ilands in the Red Sea.

SVes is neere the beginning of the Sea, which some suppose to bee that which the Ancients call Arsinoe, after others Heroum: here is the place where the Turke hath his Arsenal and Gallies, for those Seas, the matter whereof is brought out of Caramania, by Sea, by Nilus, and by Camels ouer Land the rest of the way, at incredible charges. Here in old times was a Channell which conueyed the waters of Nilus to this place, where they had Cisternes to receiue it; all destroyed by the Mahumetans: and now the Inhabitants fetch the water, which they vse, six miles off. Some thinke that Pharaoh was here drowned: which passage others set downe at Tor, where the Sea is straitned, and is not aboue nine miles ouer. It seemeth that the prints of the Chariot-wheeles, which Orosius q affirmeth, still remayned as testimonies of Pharaohs ouerwhelming vnder those waues, and could not by any industrie of man be done out, but by the mightie hand of God, were soone restored in the same forme, are not now there to bee found: for they would soone end the controuersie.

q Oros. l. 1. c. 10.

Asion Gaber r was a Port hereabouts, whence Salomon sent his Naue to Ophir, and after him Iehoshaphat s, but not with like successe: which (Iosephus t saith) was Berenice, not farre from Elana. Hierome calls it Essia. Doctor Dee writes that Ezion Geber was neere Eloth, or Elana, or Ilor, the East end of the Bay: the other which some call Suez, is higher.

Bernice u was the Port of the Red Sea, where the Indian drugs and spices in the time of the Roman Empire were vnladen and landed, to be carried thence to Alexandria, the whole course whereof Plinie x describeth. Agatharchides y reckoning diuers Etymologies of the Erythræan title, liketh best of that which ascribes it to one Erythræ, who first built a ship to saile in those Seas, altogether disallowing that it should be so called of the colour. Hee hath written strange things of the people adioyning. Hee nameth foure sorts of Ethiopians, according to their dwelling neere the Riuers, or Lakes, or Sea-coast, or wandring. Those on the Sea-coast, he saith, liue altogether on fish, which the Tide brings vp, and leaues on the hollow places or plashes neere the shore: which they cast vpon hot Rocks, which cause the fishie substance to fall from the bones; this they treade with their feet, mixing the seede of Paliurus, and then make cakes thereof, which they drie in the Sunne, and eate all in common: and on the fift day goe to drinke, laying their mouthes to the water like Oxen, and sup in as much as their skins will hold, not able scarce to breathe, nor eating any thing one day after. Some of those Ichthyophagi or Fish-eaters, which haue store of this prouision, content themselues with the moysture of their diet, and drinke not at all. Some of them seeme subiect to an Apathie, not of Stoikes, but of stocks, not shunning or complayning for blowes or wrongs. But mee thinkes I see my Reader haue sense, and (not without reason) make complaint of wrong done him in these Relations: and therefore will referre them that will, to our Authour himselfe.

Don Iohn de Castro can better acquaint vs with the later, then Agatharchides with the ancient state. Hee ascribeth to Toro, which he maketh the same with Elana 28. ½. degrees. They are Christians, and haue a Grecian Monasterie. He reporteth the Moores tradition, that Moses smote the sea twelue times, & thereby opened twelue paths for the Israelites: 600000. Egyptians were drowned: the Iewes arriued where Toro now is. At Bohalel Xame they found a Towne, within a house like a Chappell, where was hanging a Banner of silke, and many Arrowes or Darts round about the graue: at the head of the graue was a table with an Epitaph, testifying that there lay buried one of Mahomets kindred: and great indulgence was granted to such deuout Pilgrimes as to that place resorted. But the Portugals burnt it.

Jo. di Cast.

Hieronymo da Santto Stephano, relateth his voyage from Cairo in fifteene dayes to Cariz, and a good Port called Cane, finding many buildings and Temples ruined by the way: seuen dayes iourney they went from hence by land to Cosir a Hauen of the Red Sea. Pronapides saith,

But the Turkes after obtayned it.

e Ptol. lib. 4. cap. 1. Paſſing by the Ile Mehun, the Ile Camaran is famous by the diuers ſpoiles there made by the Portugals: it is in fiftie degrees. This Iland (ſaith Corſali) is the hotteſt place that euer I ſaw: not one of vs, but had our ſecret parts chafed and ſlayed with heate: and many of our companie dyed. Betweene it and Abex (ſaith Aloiſius in the Relation of Caſtros voyage) are fiue Ilands, one of which is called Kamoa, the land of which is red, the King a Moore. Suachen is the beſt harbour in all the Gulfe, which the Turkes haue taken from the Abaſſine: it ſtands in nineteene degrees, and a third. Mazzua is an Iland which makes Ercocco a good Hauen. But of the Hauen and Ports on both ſides the Gulfe, Barrius f relateth more largely. Of the Iles Achafas and Tuicce wee haue but names: likewiſe of others; whereof Ptolemey g doth number a great multitude. The people of theſe parts are Mahumetans, and many Baduini, hereticall and theeuiſh Moores. Many Iewes are in Aden, the chiefe Towne of merchandize in theſe parts: the King whereof (after much kinde gratulation) Salyman Baſſa hung vp at the yards arme: and at his returne dealt the like dole to the King of Zibit, ſubiecting their States vnder treacherous pretences to his Great Maſter. Scaliger h tells of Samaritans dwelling in an Iland of the Red Sea, which, when any man landed there, would religiouſly forbid to touch them: but wee haue before mentioned both them and their Letters, ſuppoſed the moſt ancient in the world, howſoeuer Poſtellus calleth the preſent Hebrew letters eternall, and ſaith, that the Law was written in them: but that they were ſacred, and not publikely knowne till the time of Ezra, who excommunicated the Samaritans and their Letters, firſt publiſhing (not inuenting) theſe which now are in vſe.

Of Socotora, Madagaſcar, and other Ilands on the Eaſterne coaſt of Africk.

* Dio. Sic. lib. 3. cap. 13. a Ramuſ. part. 1. by Ortelius Map of Arriani Periplus. Iamboli Inſula ſeemeth Iaua maior. IN the Ocean without the Strait, neere to the African ſhore, are not many Ilands mentioned by the Ancients. Arrianus in his Periplus ſpeaks of ſeuen Ilands, called Pyralaon: & of another great Iland neere to them, called Menuthesias, or Menuthias, now called Madagaſcar, & Saint Laurence: ſome take it for the Iland of Iambolus, whereof Diodorus * hath largely related, and Ramuſius a hath diſcourſed thereon: other ſeeke for that Iland in Sumatra. That Iambolus was a Merchant, which trading in Arabia for ſpices, was taken by theeues, and made a shepheard: after carried away by Ethiopians, who tooke these forrainers according to their Rites, to expiate their Countrey. For they were enioyned by Oracle to make such expiation once in six hundred yeeres, with two men that were forrainers. For the fulfilling whereof they were put in a Boat, fit for two men, with six moneths victuall: and commanded to saile southwards, and they should come to a happy Iland, where the men liued a blessed life. And if they came safe thither, their Countrie should enioy prosperitie six hundred yeers: if they turned back, they should bring vpon them much trouble. The Ethiopians meanewhile kept holy-dayes, and offered sacrifices for their good voyage, which in foure moneths they atchieued: and were exceeding courteously vsed and entertayned of the Ilanders. These were foure cubits higher then other men, very nimble and strong. The reports of this his voyage sauour more of an [a] Vtopia, and Plato's [b] common-wealth, then of true Historie. Yet is it thought (as Ramusius discourseth) not altogether fabulous, but that he was indeed in some remote Iland, to which he applyed such fancies, as Diodorus reporteth. To leaue there the certaine fictions and vncertaine coniectures of Antiquitie: and come to more certaine Relations; the onely Iland of name without the Streit is, Socotora, in thirteene degrees; of which we haue spoken largely alreadie; speaking of the Ilands of Asia; yet if any will suffer vs to remember it againe amongst those of Africa (for it lies betweene both), we may here mention what others, and somewhat otherwise, haue related. Sanutus calls it Zacotora, and affirmeth that the Sands on the tops of the high Hills therein haue no exemption from the windes: that the people are Nestorian Christians, which obserue the Crosse with much deuotion, otherwise wanting Christian both Baptisme and Doctrine, and are circumcised: that the Moores say it belonged to the Amazons, in testimonie whereof the women still weare the breeches, and gouerne amongst them. Corsali [c] thinkes it vnknowne to Ptolemey (which others suppose to be his Insula Dioscoridis) hee saith that it was inhabited of Christian shepheards, which liued on milke and butter: their bread was of Dates: like to the people of Prester Iohn, but their haire was longer, clothed with one onely peece of cloth about their priuities: the Land barren, as in all Arabia fœlix, and the Seacoasts gouerned by the Arabians. Hence commeth, and is named the Aloe Socotrina [d]. They are Iacobites, and haue Churches with Altars, and obserue the Crosse with great reuerence: they enter not their Churches, but stand in the Church-yard or Porch. Their Abuna, or Priest, ruleth them. Other Gouernour they haue none of their owne. The Portugals haue two Townes there, Coro and Benin. They [e] hold opinion that Saint Thomas here suffered shipwrack: and that of his ship was built an ancient Church, which is yet to be seene, walled about with three partitions, and three doores. They liue for the most part in cabbins of boughs, or in caues: their women are as good Souldiers as the men. They are much addicted to magick, and bring to passe matters incredible, although the Bishop excommunicate such as vse it. They will with contrarie winde hinder men that indamage them, from sayling away. Conceited they are exceedingly of their owne excellence. The English haue often traded in this Iland. Master Downton writes, that Mully Amore Bensaide hath long gouerned there, as Vice-roy to his father the King of Fartac in Arabia, not farre from Aden. His strength consists in his Arabs, the rest being slaues, which haue beene banished people. In August they make their Aloes Socotrina of an herbe like Semper viua in Spaine, but bigger, about a tun in a yeere. Their bread is Dates. This Iland, saith Beniamin Day, is in twelue degrees, barren, all rocks and stones, almost no greene thing in the whole Iland, but Date-trees, and some few shrubs and small trees, and Aloes. Out of the barke of a small tree being cut, issueth a red gum, called Sanguis Draconis. The people the most obedient that euer he saw: all the profits of the Iland is the Kings. Hee seemes kinde to the English, but no great trust (if we trust Captaine Saris) to be reposed in him, as falsifying both word and weight. They bought Goats there, which they found after to bee abused by the buggering-beastly people. They bought Aloes 2720. pounds, as Master Pring reporteth, at thirtie Rials of eight their hundreth, which makes of ours but 97. pounds. This was An. 1614. This Iland, hee saith, is twentie leagues long: their Kine at ten Rials of eight: their Goats, Sheepe, Hens, all very leane. The Inhabitants of a Mullato colour, and some Negros, apparelled with a peece of Calico about their wastes, and Turbants on their heads. The King in Turkish habit. He had fiue Camels, and fiue Horses, which were all in the Iland. Tamarin and Delisha are harbours and places of Trade there. Abadalenry is an Iland, fourteene leagues from Zacotora, from whence it is fifteen leagues to Cape Guardafu. At Tamarind they had no raine in two yeers together. Two small Iles lie to the North of Socotera, called the two Sisters: the Inhabitants of an oliue colour, without Law among themselues, or commerce with others. There [f] are also those two Iles, the one of men, the other of women, which wee mentioned in our fift booke, a matter, how true I know not, but very strange. They are Christians, subiect to the Bishop of Socotera, and he to the Zatoia in Baldach.

Many other Ilands there bee of no great name in that Sea, called Sinus Barbaricus: as of Don Garcia; the three and the seuen brethren of Saint Brandon; Saint Francis, Mascarenna, Do Natal, Comoro, and many other: besides those of Quiloa, Mosambique, and some other for their vicinitie to the Land before handled. The Ile [b] of Saint Laurence (so called by the Portugals, by themselues, Madagascar) is meetest in all those parts, to entertayne the Readers obseruation, as being one of the greatest Ilands of the world. It contayneth in breadth foure hundred and fourescore miles, in length a thousand and two hundred. M. Polo [c] saith, the Inhabitants were Saracens, and were gouerned vnder foure Lords, eate Camels flesh, vse merchandize or artes. Thus farre did the Great Can stretch his Tartarian Dominion: and sent hither to spie the Land. That which Polo saith he heard of a bird in this Iland, called Ruch, so bigge as it could take vp an Elephant, hath no likelihood of truth. He calls it Magalcar. It is distance from seuenteene to six and twentie ½. of Southerly [d] latitude. Onely vpon the coast they are Mahumetans: within Land Idolaters, black, and like the Cafres: the soile yeeldeth Cloues, Ginger, and Siluer. It deserueth to haue better Inhabitants, if Linschoten [e] iudge rightly, hauing many faire and fresh Riuers, safe Harbours, plentie of fruite and cattell: therein are foure gouernments, each fighting against other. They vse not themselues to trade with others, nor suffer others to traffique with them. The Portugals haue some trade with them, but goe not on land. In the first discouerie of them by [f] the Portugals, 1506. they shewed themselues inhospitall and trecherous, rewarding receiued kindnesse, in their Canoas or Boats, made of the body of a tree, with shot. There [g] are said to bee some white people, supposed to be of Chinian off-spring.

Of the people of Madagascar the Hollanders [h] report, that they are of colour blacke, strong, and well made: they couer their priuities with cotton: they haue large holes in their eares, in which they weare round sticks. They acknowledge one Creator, and obserue Circumcision, but know nothing of praying or keeping festiuals. They haue no proper names, whereby to distinguish one day from another: neither doe they number weekes, moneths, or yeeres. Nor doe they number aboue ten. They are exceedingly afraid of the deuill (whom they call Tainuaddes) because he vseth often to affright them. They liue most-what on fishing. They marrie but one wife: their time of marriage is, for the men at twelue; the women at ten yeeres of age. Adulterie and Theft are punished with death. The men vse to hunt abroad, the women spin their Cottons at home, whereof they haue trees yeelding plentie. If any man kill any of his Kine, all his neighbours may challenge part. Cornelius Houtman saith, they are sweet-spoken men. They haue a kinde of Beanes or Lobos growing on trees, the cod whereof is two foot long. They haue a kind of seed, whereof a little makes foolish, a greater quantitie kils: herewith they betrayed and killed threescore and eight Hollanders, with their Captaine. The English haue had some knowledge of this Iland to their cost, as those of the Vnion before mentioned. But not trusting them too farre, they here finde good refreshing. Captaine Downton arriued there in the Bay of Saint Augustine, Aug. 10. 1614. and bought of them diuers Beeues at a reasonable rate. The people are tall and swart, their haire smooth and finely plaited: their weapons are darts, neatly headed with Iron. Their cattell fairer then any [i] I haue seene, hauing on their fore-shoulders a lumpe of fat like the pomell of a saddle. Here were Tamarin trees, with greene fruit vpon them, the pulpe whereof boyled, cured our men of the Scorbute. They haue store of cotton, whereof they make striped cloth of diuers colours. Another, then in companie [k], reports them to bee a strong actiue people, not fearefull of gunnes or other weapons, ciuill, honest, and vnderstanding; their weapons small Lances, Bowes, Arrowes, and Darts: their Kine sold at three, foure, or fiue shillings a peece, as sweet and fat as ours. That bunch on the shoulder is very sweet in taste. And (as one reporteth, he had seene) the skin that compassed one of them, contayned six or eight gallons. Here are many Crocodiles. The Vnion comming to Gungomar, in the North-west corner of Madagascar, was assaulted by a Naue of an hundred Canoes by water, arranged in order of a halfe moone; the King trecherously assaulting them out of the woods, and tooke Captaine Michelborne with other Merchants.

In Saint Maria, an Iland by Madagascar, they met with the King, which was obserued of his subiects with great reuerence. Here they buried one of their dead men, the Ilanders being present, who signified by signes, that his soule was gone to heauen: and would haue had them to cut off his legs by the knees. The Ile of Cerne, they called Maurice Iland. They found excellent Ebon trees there, the wood whereof is as black as pitch, and as smooth as Iuorie, inclosed with a thick barke. They found of the same kinde some red, some yellow. There were Palme-trees like the Cocos. They found store of birds, whereof they might take some in their nests with their hands. There were no people inhabiting. In the Ile of Bata our men killed a Bat as great as a Hare, in shape like a Squirrill, with two flaps of skin, which hee spred forth when he leaped from tree to tree, which they can doe nimbly, often holding only by their tailes.

The Hollanders in the Bay of Anton Gil Southwards from Madagascar in sixteene degrees, saw the King, blacke of hue, weating two hornes on his head, and many chames or bracelets of Brasse on his armes. This place is fertile, the people valiant. Holl. Nau. 1595.

Of Saint Helena, Thomee, Cape de Verd, and diuers others betwixt them, and of the weeds and calmes of those Seas.

IN this side the Cape [i] is the Iland of S. Helena, in 16 degrees and one quarter of Southerly latitude. It is very high and hilly: the name was giuen of the Saint, on whose day it was discouered. It hath in it store of goats, hogs, hens, and other creatures, which the Portugals haue there left to multiply; for before there was none of them: there also they haue planted Figs, Oranges, Limons, and such like, whereof the Vallies are full; that it seemeth an earthly Paradise, the Fruit growing all the yeere long. They haue great store of Fish, of which with crooked nayles they take great plenty: the Rocks yeeld salt for the furthering of their prouision. It seemes God hath planted it in conuenient place, for the long and dangerous Indian Nauigations. There the Portugals leaue their sicke, which stay till other ships come the next yeere to take them. It was neuer inhabited: onely an Hermite dwelt there, who vnder pretence of mortifying his flesh by penance, butchered the flesh of the Goats and Bucks so fast for their skins, that the King sent for him home, and will suffer none to dwell there. Abraham Kendall put in there about the yeere 1591. and left on shore, one Segar, a sicke man, whom [k] Edmund Parker eighteene moneths after found in good plight; but their vnexpected comming, as it seemeth, so rauished his weake spirits with ioy, that it distracted him, and being otherwise of bodily constitution very wel, he dyed eight dayes after. The like I haue read of a Portugall in the same place. In Iune [l] 1613. the Dutch set vpon two Carricks in this roade, but with ill successe, one of their ships with nine and forty men being casually blown vp. North-west from hence are the Iles of Ascension, not inhabited. Of Loanda, nigh to, or rather a piece of Congo, is already spoken. Ouer against the Cape of Lopo Gonsalues, is the Ile of Nobon: and not farre from thence [m] Saint Thomas: an hundred and fourescore miles from the shore, and so much also in compasse, right vnder the Line. At the first discouerie it was a Wood: Now inhabited by Portugals and Negro's. These liue an hundred and ten yeeres: but few borne in Europe exceed fifty. It is vnwholsome, through exceeding heat, vnto Europeans especially, which in December, Ianuary, and February [n], can scarcely walk vp and downe for faintnesse. In the middest is a wooddy Mountaine, continually ouershadowed with a thicke cloud, which so moistens the Trees that grow in great abundance thereon, that from hence droppeth water sufficient for the watering of all their fields of Sugar-Canes. They haue threescore and ten Ingenios or Sugar-houses, each of which hath two or three hundred slaues belonging thereto.

They grind the Canes, and boyle the iuice to make it into Sugar; but by no meanes can they make it so white heere, as in Madera and other places. The refuse of their Canes they giue to their Hogs, which are heere very many, fat, and delicate as the flesh of a Hen. They are some yeeres exceedingly plagued with Ants, and also with Rats, White men which liue there, are visited two houres in euery eight or ten dayes with an Ague, but strangers haue more shrewd entertainment, and scarcely in twenty dayes, with great care, can shake off this Shaker. The chiefe Citie is Pouoason, an Episcopall Sea. The Negro's worke sixe dayes for their Masters, and the seuenth day for themselues in setting and planting their seeds, fruits, and

It standeth in three degrees of Northerly Latitude. Iulian Glerehagen tooke the same, An. 1598. The Iles p of S. Matthew, Santa Cruz, S. Paul, and Conception, yeeld small matter of History. Next to Cape Verde stand seuen Islands, full of Birds, empty of Inhabitants, called Barbacene. But those that are called the Iles of Cape Verde are nine, situate betweene the Greene and White Capes: Linschoten reckons ten. They were first discouered by Antoni di Nolli, a Genoway, An. 1440. None of them are inhabited, but the Isles of Iago, and Del Fogo: both which were taken, An. 1596. by Sir Anth. q Sherley, who had one nights showre of Ashes from that Island of Fogo or Fuego, or of Fire, so called, because it continually burneth, which fell so thicke on their ship, that you might write your name with your finger vpon the vpper decke. Saint Iago was taken and burnt by Sir Francis r Drake, An. 1585. Brana and Buena Vista, haue brauer and goodlier names then Nature. Maio yeelds salt in a Lake of two leagues long, the Sun congealing and turning the waters into Salt. From thence is passed into the Sea, called Sargasso s, because it is couered with herbs, like to the herbe Sargasso in the Portugall Wels, not vnlike to Samper, yellow of colour, with empty Berries like Goose-berries, but lesse: which beginneth at twenty degrees, and continueth till thirty foure, farre off in the Sea: for the ships in their going to India, keeping neere the shore, meet not with any. The Sea seemeth as a greene field, so thicke that a man cannot see the water, and hindereth the ships passage, except they haue a strong winde. Ralph Wilson hath told vs of a new Iland, discouered by the Salomon in 19. 34. to the South, Anno 1612.

The Coast of Africa is foure hundred miles distant, neither is any Iland neere: saue that these weeds seeme to make many Ilands. Thus doe men in ships behold the wonders of the Lord in the deepe, no Land being nigh, nor no ground to be found, although it is thought to come from the ground. Some t thinke it growes on the Rocks, and is thence beaten off by the Sea. And indeed, all those Seas are full of wonders, as they passe along the Coast toward the Indies. Thomas u Steuens complaineth of the continuall Thunders, Lightnings, and vnwholsome Rainos which there they met: the raine-water, if it stand a little, conuerting presently to Wormes, and filling the meat, hanged vp, with Wormes. An herbe also swamme vpon the face of the waters like a Gocks Combe, so venemous, that it can scarce bee touched without perill: Fishes, called Sharkes, most rauenous deuourers, which had other sixe or seuen smaller fishes, garded with blue and greene, attending like Seruing-men. Fishes also (as big as a Herring) with wings which doe not so much helpe them by flying to escape another greater fish that pursueth them by Sea, as endanger them to a Sea-Fowle, which waits that opportunitie. Neither can it fly high or farre, or longer then the wings are wet: nor swimme fast, hauing exchanged finnes for wings. So haue I seene men thriue worse that haue two Trades, than such as haue been skilfull and thriftie in one. Lerius x addeth the like wonder of certaine Birds, so tame that they would light vpon the hatches, and suffer themselues to bee taken. These are the same Birds which pursue those flying fishes, wiser to hunt them, then to saue themselues: as bigge as Crowes in feathers, in flesh little bigger than a Sparrow, and farre lesse then the fish which they take and deuoure.

These Seas are also subiect to great and tedious calmes, which not onely hinder the Voyages, but end the liues of many. Giouanni da Empoli saith, in his returne out of India, they were heere detained foure and fifty dayes, in which they scarce sailed aboue sixe leagues; and in thirty fiue dayes they cast ouer-boord threescore and sixteene of their company, very few suruiuing in their ship: which likewise happened to other ships, their Consorts, so that they had vtterly despaired, had not God sent a Portugall ship, that way bound, to relieue them. And would God the like examples many might not be produced amongst our own. Betweene y 17. and 32 degrees of Northerly Latitude, men are subiect to gripings, and haue need to keepe themselues warme.

§. II.

Of the Canaries, Madera, and Port Santo.

FVrther into the Sea are the Canaries[a]: which are commonly reckoned seuen: Canaria, Teneriff, Palma, Gomera, Hierro, Lanzarrotte, and Fuerte Ventura: Thauet addes three, others, more: Lobos, Roca, Gratiosa, S. Clara, Alegrança and Infierno. The Inhabitants were so grosse before they were discouered, that they knew not the vse of fire. They beleeued in one Creator of the World, who puniſheth the euill, and rewarded the good: herein they all consented, in other things disagreed: their weapons were stones and staues. They shaued their heads with sharpe stones like flints. Iron they had not: Gold they respected not. The women nursed not their children, but commonly committed that office to their Goats. They as much delighted in dancing, as the birds[b], which beare their name, in singing. They were vnknowne from the times of the Romane Empire,[c] at which time they were called Fortunatæ, till either an English or French ship by mis-fortune lighted on them. An. 1405. Io. Bentacor conquered them, and after him, Anno 1444. Henry, the Infanta of Portugal, that Day-starre, which by his industry made way to the present Sun-shine of Discoueries whereby the World in her last dayes hath fullest view of her selfe. Galuano[d] calleth that Frenchmen Io. Betancourt, and saith, hee was sent by Iohn the second of Castile, An. 1417. who being slaine in the action, his sonne sold them to Peter Barba a Spaniard, and hee to Don Henry. Hee saith, the people were Idolaters, and did eate their flesh raw for want of fire. They tilled their ground with Oxe and Goats-horns, They had many wiues, but deliuered them to their Superiours to haue the first vse of them, before they lay with them. Don Henry conquered the rest which Betancourt had not possessed. Their former gouernment was by an hundred and ninety persons, which ruled also in matters of Religion, prescribing to the people their faith, and worship. They had in highest name of authoritie a King, and a Duke. To slay a beast was esteemed the basest office in the world, and therefore committed to their prisoners: they which did this, liued separate from the people: Thus was it in the Gran Canaria. In Gomera[e] they vsed for hospitality to let their friends lye with their wiues, and receiuing theirs in like courtesie: and therefore, as in India, the Sisters Sonne inherited.

In Tenarife they had two Kings, one dead & another aliue: when a new King was crowned, some man, to honour his entrance, offered himselfe to voluntary death: when the King was buried, the noblest men caried him on their shoulders, and putting him into the graue, said, Depart in peace, O blessed soule. Thauet[f] affirmeth, that the Canaries are so called of the Canes and Reeds that grow there: that they worshipped the Sun, Moone, and Planets. Of these Ilands, Thomas Nichols[g] an Englishman, hath composed a Treatise extant, in M^r Hakluyts Voyages. Tom. 2. Part. 2. He saith they dwelt in Caues, supposed to descend of such as the Romans in Africa had exiled, and cut their tongues out for blasphemie against their gods. The Pike or high Hill of Tenarife, is after Thauets measure foure and fifty miles. Tho. Byam, [h] a friend of mine told me, that he had seene it eight and forty leagues into the Sea, in cleere weather. One of our Nation hath written a Tractate of his obseruations of these Ilands. Heere before the conquest were seuen Kings, which with their people dwelt in Caues. Their buriall was, to be set vpon their feet naked in a Caue, propped against the wall: and if hee were a man of authoritie, he had a staffe in his hand, and a vessell of milke standing by him. I haue seene (saith Nichols) three hundred of these corpses together, the flesh dryed vp, the body light as parchment. I my selfe saw two of those bodies in London.

Canaria, Tenerife, and Palma, haue one Bishop, who hath twelue thousand Ducats Reuenue: which place was not long since possessed by Melchior[i] Canus a great Writer in defence of the falling Babylon. They pay to the King fiftie thousand Ducats. Hierro, or the Iland of Iron, is by a multitude of Authours[k] affirmed to haue it in no fresh water, but what falleth from the leaues of a certaine Tree, which is alwayes greene, and couered with clouds, and vnderneath the same is a Cisterne to receiue the water, for the vse both of men & beasts throughout that Iland. A whole wood of such Trees wee mentioned in Saint Thomas Iland, which yeeld from their dropping leaues Rilles of water downe all sides of the Hill, where they grow. In this Iland heere is but one: and that very ancient, differing in this (if we beleeue Sanutus) from those of S^t Thomas, they alwayes, this onely afternoone, being couered with that cloud, which continueth till two houres before day, and then the bodie, boughs and leaues of the tree sweat out that liquor till two houres after Sun-rising, it is in 27. degrees. Lewis Iackson saith that he saw this tree being in this Iland, Anno 1618. that it is as bigge as an Oake, the barke like hard beame, six or seuen yards high, with ragged boughs, boughs, with the leafe like that of the Bay-tree, white on the bottome, greene on the other side. It beareth nor flower nor fruit: situate in the declinitie of a Hill, withered in the day, dropping in the night (a cloud hanging thereon) yeelding water sufficient for the whole Iland, which (he saith, if report deceiued him not; Sir Edward Skory heard of many fewer) 8000 soules, and aboue 100000 beasts. It fals into a Pond made of Bricke floored thicke with stone, by pipes of lead conuayed from the tree thither, and thence diuided into diuers Ponds thorow the Iland; fetched vp hill by barrels. The Pond holds 20000 tunnes, and is filled in a night. Thus he related to me, Hierro, and Gomera, and Lancarato, are in the hands of priuate men.

Madera standeth in two and thirty degrees: it is the greatest of all the Atlantike Iles.* It was discouered by one Macham an Englishman, who arriued there by tempest, Anno 1344 together with a Woman, whom he there buried, and on her Tombe did write his comming and the cause thereof, with his and her names, and was occasion to the King of Spaine to discouer that and the Canaries. It was called Madera, of the wilderneses of Trees there growing. Heere is a Citie called Fouchal. The Ile containeth in compasse a hundred and forty miles. The woods [a] which gaue name to the Iland were fiered, and burnt so furiously, that the people for a time were forced to go some space into the Sea from the violent heat; which caused such fatnesse to the soyle, that at first it yeelded threescore fold: since, halfe so much. The excellent Wines were of Vines, first brought from Candie. They bring foorth more grapes (saith he) than leaues, and Clusters of two, three, and foure [b] spans long. At first, the Pigeons suffered themselues to be taken, not knowing, and therefore not fearing a man.

Forty miles from the Ile of Madera [c] is the Ile of Puerto, or Porto Santo, called of all Saints day, in which it was first discouered, Anno 1428. It was taken by Sir Amias [d] Preston, 1596. Heere are such store of Conies, bred of one shee-Cony brought hither great with yong, that the Ilanders were out of hope almost to withstand and amend their damages by them sustained. A little Iland, neere to this, breedeth nothing else. And now we can accompany our Portugals no further. But before I left these Ilands, I thought fit to feast you, with some obseruations of an eye-witnesse (elegant spectator) and learned Gentleman Sir Edmund Scory.

§. III.

Extracts taken out of the Obseruations of the Right Worshipfull Sir Edmund Scory, Knight of the Pike of Tenariffe, and other rarities which hee obserued there.

TEneriffe is the pleasantest of the Canary Ilands. This Iland hath beene called Niuaria, by reason of the Snow which like a Collar enuironeth the necke of the Pike of Teyda. The name of Tenariffe was imposed by the inhabitants of the Palme Iland, for Tener in the Palmesian language signifies Snow, and Iffe an Hill. It is situate in the Atlanticke Ocean foure score leagues from the Coast of Affricke. It is in forme triangular, extending it selfe into three Capes, and stands within eight and twenty degrees of the equinoctiall. The great mountaine of Teyda, commonly called the Pike of Tenariffe, is a Mountaine which begets I know not whether a greater attention, when you come to it, or when you behold from a farre off: bnt in both very great. The Base of it beginneth at the Port-towne of Gara-chico, from whence it is two dayes iourney and a halfe to the top of it. The point of which, though it seeme as sharpe as a Sugar-loafe (which figure, of all other it doth most resemble) yet is there a flat of an acre in breadth on the top of it: & in the midst of that flat a gulph, out of which great stones are with like noise fire and smoke many times cast forth. Seuen leagues off this way, may bee trauelled vpon Asses or Mules; the rest on foot, and with great difficultie. All the Countries lying about the ascent of the Hill, for ten miles vpwards are ouer-growne, or rather adorned with the goodliest trees in the world of diuers sorts; by reason of the multitude of Springs which intermingling one with another, and with the addition of the violent winter, Raines descend in huge torrents downe into the Sea. In the midst of this hill is the cold intolerable; in the top the heat, and so likewise in the bottome. Through all the cold Region, you must cast your iourny to trauel on the South side, and in the day time; through all the hot Region (which is within two leagues of the top) on the North side, and in the night time. Euery man carrieth his owne portion of victuals, and Borrachocs of Wine. Your time of approach to the top must bee about Midsommer (for the auoiding of the torrents caused by the snowes, and about two of the clocke in the morning, and so you may abide there vntill sun-rising, but no longer.

The Sun being exalted aboue the Horizon of the Ocean seemeth far lesse, then when you are on the lower ground, and seemes to whirle it selfe about in manner of a Gyre. The streame that commeth out of the East a little before his rising can be compared to nothing more properly then to the breath of an hot Ouen, and so commeth on his course through an vnclouded Heauen being of a pure blue Christalline colour without the least spot in it. When you are on the top of this Hill all the Iland lyeth subiected like a plaine and leuell plot of ground vnder you, although there are in this Iland not so few as twenty thousand sharpe deformed and vneuen Rockes, and all the edges of that plaine ground seemeth to bee lifted or fringed with Snow, which indeed is nothing else but the white Cloudes which are many furlongs below you. Neere the top of this Mountayne it neuer reigneth, neyther was there euer any wind stirring thereupon. The same is reported of the Hill Olympus.

Rarity of the Sunne. Hote breath. Clouds beneath them. No wind nor raine.

All the vpper part of this Mountayne is afflicted with barrennesse, wanting the generatiue benefit of the lower and middle Regions of the Aire: for no manner of tree, shrub or leafe beautifieth the head thereof, but it resteth disgraced with an vnseemely baldnesse: out of which towards the South side doe the veines of Brimstone issue downe into the necke thereof, where the Region of Snow is, among which the Brimstone is interueined in diuers places. In the Summer time the fires doe often breake forth from out the hole in the top of this Hill, into which if you throwe a great stone it soundeth as if a great weight had falne vpon infinite store of hollow Brasse. The Spaniards merrily cal it the Deuils Caldron, wherein the whole prouision of Hell is boyled. But the naturals (the Guanches themselues) do say that it was hell, and that the soules of their wicked Ancestors went thither to be tormented: and that those who were good and valiant men went downe into the pleasant Valley where the great City di Laguna now standeth: then which & the Towns adioyning to it, there is not in any place of the World a more delicater temperature of Ayre, nor a goodlier Obiect for the eye to make a Royall Landskip of, as to stand in the Centre of this Plaine, and to behold how nature hath delineated all earthly beauty in the great. On the North side of the Iland are many fresh waters with falling downe from the top of exceeding high Mountaynes refresh the Plaines and City di Laguna; and are afterwards by the greatnesse of their torrent carried into the Ocean. The Iland is parted in the midst with a ridge of Mountaynes like the roofe of a Church; hauing in the midst of it (like a steeple) the Pyke of Teyda, if you diuide the Iland into twelue parts, ten of them are taken vp in impassable Rocky Hils in Woods & in Vineyards: and yet in this small remaynder of arrable ground, there was gathered as I saw vpon their account in the yeere of our Lord 1582. 200. and 5000. Hannacks of Wheat, besides infinite store of Rie and Barley. One of our English quarters make foure and a halfe of their Hannacks. The soyle is delicately temperate, and would produce all the most excellent things the earth beareth, if the Spaniards would seeke and labour them. The Vineyards of account are in Buena Vista, in Danto, in Oratana, in Tigueste, and in the Ramble which place yeeldeth the most excellent Wine of all other. There are two sorts of Wines in this Iland Vidonia and Maluesia. Vidonia is drawne out of a long Grape, and yeeldeth a dull Wine. The Maluesia out of a great round Grape, and this is the only Wine which passeth all the Seas of the World ouer, and both the Poles without sowring or decaying; whereas all other wines turne to Vineger, or freeze into Ice as they approch the Southerne or Northerne Pole. There are no where to be found fairer or better Mellons, Pomegranates, Pomecitrons, Figs, Orenges, Limons, Almonds and Dates, Honey, and consequently Waxe and Silke though not in great quantity yet excellent good, and if they would plant there store of Mulberry trees, the ground would in goodnesse and for quantity equall (if not exceed) eyther Florence or Naples in that commodity. The North side of this Iland aboundeth aswell with wood as with water. There grow the Cedar, Cypresse and Bay tree, the wild Oliue, Masticke and Sauine; goodly procerous Palme and Pine-trees which shoot vp into a beautifull streight talnesse. In the passage betwixt Oratana and Garachiro, you ride through a whole Forrest of them, the strong sauour of which perfumeth all the Aire thereabouts, of these there are such abundance all the Iland ouer, that all their Wine Vessels and woodden Vtensils are made of them. There are of these Pine-trees two sorts, the strait Pine, and the other growing after the manner of our spreading Okes in England, which wood the Inhabitants call the Immortall tree, for that it rotteth neyther aboue nor below the ground, nor in the water. It is neere as red as Brasill, and as hard but nothing so vnctuous as the other kind of Pine. Of these they haue such great ones, that the Spaniards doe faithfully report that the wood of one Pine-tree alone couered the Church of los Remedios in the City of Laguna, which is 80. foote in length, and 48. foote in breadth. And that one other Pine-tree couered the Church of S. Benito in the same City, which is 100. foot in length, and 35. in breadth. The noblest and strangest tree of all the Iland is the tree called Draco: his body riseth into an exceeding height and greatnesse. The barke is like the scales of a Dragon, and from thence I suppose it had his name. On the very top of the tree doe all his armes cling and interfold together by two and by two like the

Man-

Mandragoras: they they are fashioned euen like the arme of a man round and smooth, and as out of their fingers ends groweth the leafe about two foote in length, in fashion like to our greene wild water seggs. This tree hath not wood within its barke, but only a light spongious pith, and they commonly make Bee-hiues of the bodies of them. Towards the full of the Moone it sweateth forth a cleane Vermilion Gumme which they call Sangre de Draco, more excellent and astringent by farre, then that Sanguis Draconis, which wee haue from Goa, and from other parts of the East Indies by reason the Iewes are the only Druggists of those parts, and to make mony they falsifie and multiply it with other trash foure pound waight for one. The first that were knowne to inhabit this Iland are called Guanches: but how they came thither it is hard to know, because they were and are people meerely barbarous & voyd of Letters. The language of the old Guanches (which remayneth to this day among them in this Iland in their Towne of Candelaria) alludeth much to that of the Moores in Barbary. When Betanchor (the first Christian Discourrer of these parts) came hither, he found them to be no other then meere Gentiles ignorant of God. Notwithstanding, I doe not find that they had any manner of commerce with the Deuill, a thing not vsuall among the Indian Gentiles. They held there was a power which they called by diuers names as Achuhuranan, Achuhucanar, Achguayaxerax signifying the greatest, the highest, and the mayntayner of all. If they wanted raine or had too much, or any thing went ill with them, they brought their sheepe and their Goats into a certaine place, and seuered, the young ones from the Dams, and with this bleating on both sides, they thought the wrath of the Supreme Power was appeased; and that he would prouide them of what they wanted. They had some notion of the immortality and punishment of Soules, for they thought there was a Hell, and that it was in the Pike of Teyda, and they call Hell Echeyde, and the Deuill Guayota. In ciuill affaires they were somewhat Regular as in acknowledging a King, and confessing vassalage in contracting Matrimony, reiecting of Bastards, succession of Kings, making of Lawes, and subiecting themselues to them. When any childe was borne, they called vnto them a certaine woman, and shee did with certaine words powre water vpon the childes head, and euer after this woman was assumed into the number of that kindred, and with her it was not lawfull euer after for any of that race to marrie or vse copulation. The exercises which the young men vsed were leaping or running, shooting the Dart, casting of the stone, and daunsing, in which, to this houre, they do both exceedingly glorie and delight. And so full of naturall vertue and honest simplicitie were these Barbarians, that it was an inuiolable law amongst them, that if their Souldiers did in any place publicke or priuate, offer any licentious or iniurious behauiour to a woman, he was assuredly put to death. The people of this countrie were of a goodly stature, well formed and of a good complexion. There were among them Giants of an incredible greatnesse: the skull of one of them is remaining, in which there are eightie teeth, and his bodie (which was found buried in the Sepulchre of the Kings of Guymur, of which race he was) measured fifteene foot. The people that dwell on the South-side of the Iland, were of the colour of an Oliue, but those that dwelt on the North-side were faire, especially their women, hauing bright and smooth haire. Their common apparell was a certaine garment made of Lambes skins like a short coate, without pleate or collor or sleeues fastned together, with straps of the same leather. The ordinarie garment for men and women of the common sort was called Tomarco, onely the women for modesties sake had another couering vnder their Tomarco, which was a side coate downe to the knees made of skins which reached downe to the ground, for they held it an vnseemely thing in a woman to haue her breasts or her feete vncouered. In this garment they liued, and in this they dyed, and in this they were commonly buried. For their dyet they sowed Barly and Beanes: Wheate was vtterly vnknowne to them. They toasted their Barly by the fire, then did grinde it in certaine hand-mils, such as are now in Spaine. The floure so made they called Giffio, wetting it with water, milk or butter. It serued instead of bread also, and was their greatest and most Generall sustenance. They eat the flesh of Sheepe, of Goats, and Pork, but not commonly, for they haue certaine assemblies, like our festiuall Wake-dayes in England, at which times the King in person with his owne hands did giue to euery twentie of them three Goates, and a proportion of their Giffio. After which Feast, euery companie came before the King, shewing their agilitie in leaping, running, wrastling, darting, dancing, and other sports. They haue a certaine kind of hony out of a fruit, called Mozan, of the greatnesse and bignesse of a pease. Before they are ripe, they are very greene, when they beginne to ripe they are red, and when they are ripe are blacke, nothing vnlike our blackberries, saue in their taste which is exceeding pleasant. They eat no more but the iuyce of them which they call Toya, and the Hony which they make of them they call Chacerquem. They gather these Mozans very ripe, and do put them into the Sun for a weeke, then they breake them in pieces, and put them into water to bee boyled vntil they come to a sirrope, and this is their Physick for the fluxe, and the griefes in the backe: and for both these diseases they did did also let bloud in the armes, head, and forehead with a flintstone. At their time of sowing, the King hauing appointed to euery man his portion of ground that was to bee sowne, they digged vp the earth with Goats hornes, and with certaine words threw their seed into the ground. All other works appertained vnto, and were performed by their women. The King did make his habitation in naturall caues or hollow rocks, of which there are infinite store remayning to this day. When there was any Feast made in any Kingdome, their Feasts had the priuiledge that men might with immunity passe to and fro through the enemies Countrey: yea, & many times the enemies would feast one with another. In their Marriages the men vsed to aske the consent of the Widdowes or Maids parents (if there were any) which being granted they were married with little or no ceremony that I could learne. And the marriage was not so soone made, but it might be as quickly broken: for if the husband or wife were disposed to be separated they might be so, and both of them marry again with others at their pleasures. Notwithstanding all the children of the separated begotten afterwards were esteemed as bastards, the King only for succession sake exempted from this custome, & to whom for that respect it was lawfull to marry with his own sister. For many yeeres this Iland was subiect to one only King whom they called Adexe, who being growne old, his Sons (which were nine in number) conspiring against him, parted the Iland into nine seuerall Kingdomes. All their war was to steale cattle one from another, and especially the spotted Goats, which amongst them are in great and religious estimation; there is very little difference betwixt the body, colour and smothnesse of our English fallow Deere and their Goat. The ancient Guanches of this Iland had an appointed Officer or Embalmer answerable to the sex (man or woman) who washing the dead corps did put into its body certaine Confections made of Goats Butter melted, the powder of Furzes, and of a kind of ruffe stones, the rindes of Pine-trees and other herbs, and did stuffe the body with this euery day for 15. dayes together, putting the body against the Sun, now on the one side, now on the other, vntill it were stiffe and dry. All this space their friends bewayled their death. At the end of 15. dayes they wrapped their body in Goats skins so cunningly sowed together that it was maruellous, and so they carried the body to a deepe caue where none might haue accesse. There are of these bodies remayning yet which haue been buried these 1000. yeeres. The neerest port towne to the City called Cidade de Laguna, is Santa Cruz, from thence you ascend vp the steepe Mountaynes to the City, which you shall finde to bee most miraculously seated in the midst of a flat of ten miles in compasse, as if nature had prepared that place for man to build a City vpon, & being walled about with hils of wonderfull height on al sides sauing to the Northwest (from whence there being a leuel tract of land euen to the Seaside which is seuen leagues distant) there doth continually arise from the Sea a vapour, which being circulated among so many and intricate Mountaines groweth to be a wind, and taketh his passage through those channels of Mountaynes to the City, to its great refreshing, and in this great Plaine (like Enuy) for want of opposition dieth. And let the wind blow full Southeast at Sea, yet shall you alwayes haue the wind full Northwest at the City like a true friend when you most need him from twelue a clocke in the day vntill night. The extreame dew which falleth doth sufficiently coole the night. Their buildings are all of an open rough stone nothing faire: they are very plaine in their buildings, two or three stories high and no more, and commonly but one story high in the remoter parts of the City. It is not walled, they haue no chimneyes, no not so much as in their kitchins. They make only a flat hearth against a wall, and there they roaste their meate rather then roast it. The decency of their streets is commendable, for when you are in the centre of the City, your eye reacheth almost to the extreamest parts thereof. They haue no want of water. The City hath its name from a great standing Lake at the West end of it, vpon which there are cõmonly diuers sorts of fresh water-fowles. The haggard Falcons doe euery euening flye vpon this Lake, and the Negros with slings beate them, which is the noblest sport of that kind in the world for the stoopings are many, and at one time, and the Hawkes the strongest and best mettalled of all others, of a greater kind then the Barbary Falcons. The Viceroy being one euening to see this naturall sport, and he demanding of me what I thought thereof, and I iustly commending the strength and mettall of the Hawkes, assured me vpon his honour, that a Falcon bred in that Iland (which hee had formerly sent to the Duke of Lerma) did at one flight (except she rested vpon ships by the way) passe from Andaluzia to Tenariff (which is 250. Spanish leagues) and was there taken vp halfe dead with the Dukes Varuels on. And the time from her going out to her being taken vp, exceeded not sixteene houres, &c.

§. IIII.

Of Malta and the Nauigations about Africa.

WIthin the Straits are no great Ilands belonging to Africa, Pennon, or the Rock against Velles de Gumera, the Ile of Gerbi, & some others. Malta is the most famous, where in old time was the Temple of Iuno, spoyled by [a] Verres, supposed to be that Melita, [b] where Paul suffered [c] shipwrack: although there be another Melita in the Adriatike Sea, neere to Dalmatia: Polybius [d] calleth it Melytusa, as Volaterranus [e] writeth. Ptolomie and Cicero name Melita, now called Malta, in this Ile of Malta. This Malta is distant from Sicilia 60. miles, from Africa, 190. It hath bin sometime subiect to the Carthaginians, as may appeare by diuers Monuments with Inscriptions of Carthaginian Letters: and the Islanders (if our Authour [f] say truely) can vnderstand that Scene in Plautus before mentioned. Eloi, Effetcha, Cumi, words vsed in Scripture, are likewise vsed in the Maltese. Their manner of life is Sicilian. But we may not dwell here. Some [g] ascribe Pauls shipwracke to Melita in the Adriatike, neere to Dalmatia, whom Beza [h] learnedly confuteth: and prooueth it to bee that Malta, which now the Knights hold against the Turke: whose valour and successe, in resisting that mighty Turkish Aduersary, [i] Curio, and Io. Antonius Viperanus in their Bookes of that Argument, Knolles in his Turkish History, Ri. Carre, and others relate at large. It was An. 1565. That which deceiueth those Men in Malta, is the name of the Adriatike Sea, which now is giuen to the gulfe of Venice, but then, as Beza & Aretius shew out of Strabo l. 3. was giuen to the Ionian Sea also, and further Southwards, where Malta standeth: and Ortelius out of [k] Ouid, and others, proueth the same, as doth also that Epitome of all Learning Io. Scaliger.

That learned Gentleman M. Sandys in the fourth Booke of his Iournall hath largely related of this Iland. It containeth after his description sixty miles in circuit; a Countrey altogether champaine, being no other then a Rock couered ouer with earth, but two foot where deepest; hauing few trees but such as beare fruit, whereof all sorts plentifully: so that their wood they haue from Sicilia. Yet there is a great Thistle which together with Cow-dung serues the Countrey people for fewell, the lesse needfull by the immoderate heate, there exceeding far any other seated in the same parallel, yet sometimes tempered by the winds to which it lies open. Riuers here are none, but sundry Fountaynes. The soyle produceth no graine but Barley: bread made of it and Oliues is the Villagers ordinary dyet, and with the straw they sustayne their Cattle, Cummin-seed, Annis-seed, and Hony, they haue here in abundance, and an indifferent quantity of the best Cotton Wooll. The Inhabitants dye more by Age then Diseases, and heretofore were reputed fortunate for their excellency in Arts & curious weauing. This Iland was giuen by Charles the Fift to the Knights Hospitalers after their losse of Rhodes; whose first seat was the Hospitall of S. Iohn in Ierusalem, built by one Gerard, at such time as the Holy Land became famous by the successeful expeditions of the Christians, whose rites are recorded by many Authors, but by vs to be reserued for another taske. There are sixty Villages in the Iland vnder the command of ten Captaines, and foure Cities. Old Malta (supposed the worke of the Phœnicians) is seated on a Hill in the mids of the Iland, kept with a Garrison though of small importance. In it is a Grot of great veneration, because they suppose that Paul lay there after his shipwracke. The other three Cities (if they may so bee termed) are about eight miles distant, and not much without a Musket shot each of other, neere the East end and on the North side of the Iland; where there is a double Hauen, diuided by a tongue of a Rock. On the top of this tongue stands the Castle of S. Hermes, after 20000. shot and the losse of 10000. liues taken by the Turks. But so could they not that of S. Angelo, which onely & Burgo escaped their fury in that their siege. After their departure, when the Knights had thought to haue abandoned the Iland, by the helps of the Pope, Florentine, and especially the Spaniard, they were furnished with prouisions for new fortifications; and added a new strong City, called Valetta, in honour of him that then was their Great Master, Iohn de Valetta. The Great Masters Palace is a princely structure, the market place spacious, the Church of S. Paul magnificent, as that also of S. Iohn; the houses vniforme of free stone, two stories, flat roofed. S. Iohns Hospitall giues entertaynment to all that fall sick, the attendants many, the beds ouer-spred with faire Canopies, euery fortnight hauing change of linnen, serued by the Iunior Knights in siluer, and euery Friday by the Great Master accompanied with the great Crosses, a seruice whereto they are obliged, as their name of Hospitular Knights also importeth. It is victualled for three yeeres, supplied from Sicilia. The Iland hath not of liuing soules aboue 20000. Their expeditions are vsually but for booties. The people almost as tawny as Moores: the heat makes them sleep at noone These Votaries haue store of Curtizans for the most part Greeks, which sit playing in their doores on Instruments, by their eyes bewitching vnstable soules, their vow rather prohibiting (if the practice interpret) Mariage then incontinencie. Their markets are on Sundayes. The Knights come hither exceeding yong, the sooner to attaine taine Commendams at home, which goe by Senioritie. There are resident about fiue hundred, and as many abroad to repaire vpon summons. Sixteene of them are Counsellors of State, called Great Crosses. There are seuen Albergs or Seminaries, one of which was of England, till in the generall Deluge vnder Henrie the eight, Saint Iohns without Smithfield, sometime the Mansion of the Grand Prior of England, was hooked into that crooked streame, though still that Title continue, an Irish man now enioying it. Euery Nation feed by themselues in their seuerall Alberges, and sit at table like Friars. But how doe I pre-occupate my Christian Relations, and fall into a Lethargie, hauing opportunitie of such an Hospitall and such Hospitulars?

Now a word of the ancient Nauigations about Africa. Hanno his voyage, set forth by the Carthaginians, seemed fabulous, but Ramusius sheweth euery place by him mentioned, to agree with the later Discoueries of the Portugals, and thinketh (guided by a Portugall Pilot, skilfull of those Seas, which skanned this Nauigation of Hanno) that hee went as farre as Saint Thome. Long before this, Homer reporteth of Menelaus compassing the Ethiopians from Egypt, which some interprete of sayling by the Cape of Good Hope, as the Portugals. Of this minde Strabo citeth Aristonichus. Of Salomon and Iehoshaphat is said before. Herodotus affirmeth the Phœnicians sayling in the Red Sea in Cambyses time: but this was vsuall and yeerly, as Plinie sheweth lib.6. cap.23. The same Plinie alledgeth out of Cornelius Nepos, the sayling of Eudoxus out of the Red Sea, round about Africa to Cales, which Strabo relateth otherwise and refuteth.

The like may be shewed in some other instances, of which reade Master Hakluyt his Epistle Dedicatorie, Tom. 1. *Ramusius part.*1. *pag.*111. and Galuanus in his Discoueries of the World. Which I mention, not to disparage or weaken the Portugals praises, but to giue Antiquitie their due; which, I thinke, [a] could not ordinarily (if at all) compasse so long a Nauigation for want of the Compasse: yet we should iniurie our Authors, if wee should not beleeue somewhat: although not so much as they report. And this agreeth with the Greeke prouerbe of Hanno's Discoueries, and Iubas Historie: that hee which findeth sweetnesse in the one, may swallow the other, and as well entertayne Banius as Manius: the Periplus of the one, and Libyke Histories of the other not obtayning full credit, nor wholly meet to be reiected.

a See Panciroll. to.2.c.1. & ad eum Salmath. Causaub. ad Athen. l.3.7. Λίβυκοι βίβλοι καὶ Ἀννωνος περίπλους, figuratæ sunt, ἐν ἄλλῳ δ' ἐροῦμεν.

And thus much of this African part of the World, the Regions and Religions thereof: the one most subiect to the burning beames of the heauenly Sunne, the other least enlightning by the comfortable warmth of the Sunne of Righteousnesse; blacke in body, but more darkned and deformed spiritually, as hauing onely some parts of Habassia entirely possessed with Christians, besides what in Congo hath of later yeeres beene effected by the Portugals, and that little which is subiect to them and Spaine: all the rest being Pagan, or Mahumetan. And would God this were the case of Africa alone; seeing that if we diuide the knowne Regions of the world into thirtie equall parts (it is Master Brerewoods [b] Computation.) The Christians part (vnderstand it in all Sects and Professions bearing that name) is as fiue, the Mahumetans as sixe, and the Idolaters as nineteene; besides that huge heathenous Tract of the vnknowne South Continent, which by probable reasons is by him coniectured to bee no lesse then Europe, Africa, and Asia, together. So farre is it from truth, which one [c] of our Country-men hath lustily bragged on behalfe of his Romish Mother, That the Catholike Roman Religion hath had, and hath yet a farre greater sway in the world, then any other Religion euer had or hath: whereas this our Africa hath more Mahumetans [d] in two or three Cities, then Romish Catholikes perhaps in her whole compasse. And for Asia, how pitifully doth he tumble together some names of a few Townes or little Ilands (it seemeth vnknowne to himselfe) as monuments of Romish Conquests? What their American Conuersions [e] are, is touched elsewhere. Yea, euen in our Europe, where this mysticall Babylon is situate (the mother of the whoredomes and abominations of the Earth) the number of Protestants [f] is not much inferiour vnto them. But his reasons haue beene alreadie proued vnreasonable, by him, whose Pen then, and Prelacie since, wee with all dutie acknowledge a pillar to the Truth, and Ornament to our Church and State. For my part, I am sorrie his assertion is no truer, as one seeing, χάσμα μέγα, betweene Catholike and Roman, a great gulfe, not easily (without many prouisoes) passable: but betweene Heathen and Heauen, a bottomlesse depth, the way impassable, and life impossible. Let vs pray to him which is the Way, the Truth, the Life, to make and be the Way, by reuelation of his Truth, vnto euerlasting Life, to these poore Africans, that as they are almost wholly (in all professions, Christian Iewish, Morish, Ethnike) circumcised in the flesh, so they may receiue that Circumcision of the Spirit, not made with hands, which may cut away this superfluitie of superstitions (wherein they seeme more deuout then any part of the World) and make them with meekenesse to receiue that Word, which being grafted in them, is able to saue their soules. Amen, Lord Iesus.

RELATIONS OF THE DISCOVERIES, REGIONS, AND RELIGIONS, OF THE NEW WORLD.

THE EIGHTH BOOKE.

CHAP. I.

Of the New World, and why it is named AMERICA: and the West Indies: with certaine generall discourses of the Heauens, Ayre, Water, and Earth, in those parts.

§. I.

Of the names giuen to this part of the World, and diuers opinions of the Ancients concerning the Torrid Zone.

NOw are wee shipped for the New World, and the New Discoueries. But seeing this Inkie Sea, through which I vnder-take a Pilots office to conduct my Readers, is more peaceable then That, which on the back-side of this American World, was called the * Peaceable, by Magellane the first Discoueret: it yeeldeth vs the fitter opportunitie to contemplation and discourse, in such Philosophicall subiects, as [a] the best Authors haue thought worthy the first place in their Histories of these parts. Yet, before we prie into Natures mysteries, the better to know our intended voyage, let vs enquire somewhat of the Names, [b] if any notice may thence arise, of the places thereby knowne.

The New World, is the fittest name which can be giuen to this vast and huge Tract; iustly called New, for the late Discouerie by Columbus, An. Dom. 1492. and World, for the huge intention thereof; (as [c] Master Hakluyt hath obserued.) A new World it may bee also called, for that World of new and vnknowne Creatures, which the old World neuer heard of, and here onely are produced: the conceit whereof moued Mercator to thinke (which I dare not thinke with him) that the great Deluge in the dayes of Noah, drowned not these parts, because men had not here inhabited, who with a deluge of sinne, might procure that deluge of waters.

AMERICA is a more common then fitting name, seeing Americus Vespucius the Florentine, from whom this name is deriued, was not the first Finder, nor Author of that Discouerie: Columbus will challenge that, and more iustly, with [b] whom, and vnder whom Americus made his first voyage, howsoeuer after that, hee coasted a great part of the Continent which Columbus had not seene, at the charges of the Castilian and Portugall [c] Kings. But so it might more rightly be termed Cabotia, or Sebastiana, of Sebastian Cabot a Venetian, which discouered more of the Continent then they both, about the same time; first employed by [d] King Henrie the seuenth of England, and after by the Catholike King.

Columbus yet, as the first Discouerer, deserueth the name, both of the Countrey, for the first finding, and of modestie, for not naming it by himselfe, seeking rather effects, then names of his exploits. But leaue we these Italian Triumviri, the Genuois, Venetian, and Florentine, to decide this question among themselues. And why now is it called the West Indies? To this [e] Acosta's exposition of the word Indies, that thereby wee meane all those rich Countries, which are farre off, and strange, is too generall an answere, and giueth not the true cause of the name. Gomara saith, that a certaine Pilot, of whom Columbus receiued his first instructions, tooke it to bee India: or else Columbus himselfe, thinking by the West to finde a neerer passage vnto the East, by reason of the Earths roundnesse, sought for Cipango, or Iapan, and Cathay, when he first discouered the Ilands of the New World. And this opinion is probable, [f] both because hee named Hispaniola, Ophir, whence Salomon fetched his gold: and Sebastian Cabot in the first voyage, which he made at the charges of King Henrie the seuenth, intended (as himselfe [g] confesseth) to finde no other Land but Cathay, and from thence to turne towards India: and the opinions of Aristotle [h] and Seneca, that India was not farre from Spaine, confirmed them [i] therein.

Now that we may descend from the Name, to the Nature of this New World: a World it is to see how Nature doth deflect and swarue from those grounds and principles, which the Naturalists [k] and Philosophers, her forwardest Schollers, haue set downe for Rules and Axiomes of Natures working. For, if we regard the ancient Poets, Philosophers, and Fathers, we shall see them deceiued, and that not in few opinions, which they seemed to haue learned in Natures Sanctuaries and inmost Closets. In the Heauens, they supposed a burning Zone; in the Earth, a Plage, plagued with scorching heates.

The sense whereof is, that those parts of the World next the Arctike or Antarctike Poles are not habitable, by reason of extreme cold; nor the middle part, by reason of vnreasonable heate: the two other parts temperate, and habitable.

The Philosophers accounted this no Poeme, or rather were more Poeticall themselues: For that which those accounted a Torrid and scortched earth, these [m] made to bee a spacious and vnpassable Ocean, where the Starres, hot with their continuall motions, and the Sunnes thirstie Steedes, wearied with their daily iourney, might finde moysture to refresh and nourish their fierie constitutions. And therefore they diuided the Earth into two habitable Ilands, compassed about, and seuered in the midst with a huge Ocean: On this side whereof wee are situated, and beyond, the Antipodes. Some Philosophers [n] indeede held otherwise, but with greater errors, as Leucippus, Democritus, Epicurus, Anaximander, which multiplyed Worlds according to their fancie. Rawe and vncertaine were the coniectures of the [o] best. Yea those whom wee reuerence, as better then the best Philosophers, had no lesse errour in this point. The Golden-mouthed [p] Doctor had a Leaden conceit, that the Heauens were not round, whom Theodoret is said to follow. Theophilact [q] alleageth Basil for this his assertion, Nec mobile esse cœlum, nec circulare, That heauen is neither moueable nor round. How firmly, and confidently doth Firmianus [r] Lactantius both denie and deride the opinion, that there are Antipodes: But easier it was for him with a Rhetoricall flourish (wherein, I thinke, of all latine Fathers, [s] he deserueth highest prize and praise) to dash this opinion out of countenance, then to confute the Arguments and Allegations, which he there citeth in the Aduersaries name. But hee that surpassed Lactantius no lesse in knowledge of truth, then he was surpassed by him in smoothnesse of Stile, herein holdeth equipage, and draweth in the same yoke of errour. That vpon Boniface his complaint, the Pope writeth to him to cast out this Virgil the Philosopher (so doth that ἄσοφος call him) out of the Temple and Church of God, and to deprive him for this peruerse Doctrine (that there were Antipodes) of his Bishopricke: and Virgil must packe to Rome to giue account of this Philosophy to the Pope. Minerua sus. Let the Reader here iudge betweene the Philosophy of the one, and the Foole-asse-O-phy of the other: and let our Catholike Parasites tell vs, whether their not-erring Father pronounced this sentence of errour as a Pope, or as a priuate Doctor. Some f also alleadge Nazianzen, Hierome, and Procopius, for this or the like opinion. But Poets, Philosophers, Fathers, (in other things worthy our loue, for their delightfull Poems; our admiration, for their profound Science; our awfull respect and reuerence, for their holy learning: and learned holinesse) herein we bid you farewell: magis amica veritas; our America, subiect to that supposed burning Zone, with clouds and armies of witnesses in her well-peopled Regions, can auerre, that the parts betwixt the Tropikes are both habitable and inhabited: and for the Perioeci, g Antœci, Antichthones, and Antipodes, the worlds roundnesse, and other things of like nature, this America yeelds, and is sufficient proofe: and the yeerely compassing the world (which the Spaniards and Portugals diuide betwixt them) makes more then euident. And let those two English Ships, the onely two of one Nation which euer haue sailed, and that with admirable successe and fortune, about the Globe of the earth, tell Lactantius ghost, whether they dropped into the clouds (as hee feared) there to become new constellations, which Antiquitie would easily haue attributed to them. The Golden Hinde (which trauersed the world round, and returned a Golden Hind indeed, with her belly full of Gold and Siluer) is yet at Debtford, there resting after her long iourney, offering vp her selfe to Time, her deeds to eternitie. The causes of the Temperature and habitableneesse of those parts. That which beguiled the Ancients, was the neerenesse of the Sunne, his direct beames, and the swift motion of the heauens, which they coniectured, did chase away cold, and moisture out of all those parts. And hardly could reason otherwise ghesse, till experience h shewed the contrary. For neuer is it moister in those parts betweene the Tropikes, then when the Sunne is neerest, causing terrible stormes and showers euery day: as if hauing drunken too much in his long and hote iourney ouer the Ocean, hee did there vomit it vp againe. Once, the people of those parts reckon it Winter, when the Astronomer would call it Summer: because of this tedious weather which euery day happening cannot but coole the Ayre and Earth, with a maruellous temper: and on the other side, they call the time of the Sunnes absence, Summer, because of the perpetuall cleareneesse, which continueth those sixe moneths; the Sunne then exhaling no more vapours then his hote stomacke can digest, which with his directer beames being drawne vp, surcharge him with abundance; and in the middle Region of the Aire, by the then stronger Antiperistasis are thickened into raines, and (attended with Thunder and Lightnings) proclaime dayly defiance to the earth: threatning harme, but doing good: cooling the same, after the morning Sun hath heated it, the showres then falling, when the Sunne threatens his hottest fury and violence.

g Perœci are those which dwell in the same paralels, but contrarie Meridians. Antichthones, which dwell in the opposite Zone or plage of the world. The Perœci haue Summer and Winter, but not day and night alike: The Antœci haue day and night alike, but not the seasons of the yeere. The Antipodes differ in both.
h That all the world is habitable, see the Discourse of George Best, in a Preface to the Northwest Discouerie of M. Frobisher, and inserted Hak. Voyag. to. 3. page 48.

These Raines make the like inundations and ouerflowings of Riuers in America, (as before wee haue obserued in Nilus, Niger, and Zaire in Africa (which breaking their bounds, and driuing the Inhabitants, sometimes to dwell on trees growing, sometimes in their carkasses framed into Boats or Canoes, therein to retire themselues, till the waters are retired, cause a cooling and refreshing to the Earth, which they couer and shield by their inundations from the Sunnes angry arrowes. As in a Limbeck, a strong fire causeth abundance of vapours to be extracted out of herbes, or other matter, which being pressed, and finding no issue, turn into water: and if the fire be smal, it exhausteth the vapors, as fast as it raiseth them: So the Sun (in his greatest strength) exhaleth these plentifull vapours and distilleth them, in ſhowers, which in leſſe heat are of leſſe quantitie, and more eaſily conſumed. Without the Tropikes it is contrary: for the Summer is dry, the Winter moiſt; the cauſe being the Suns weakneſſe, not able to concoct and diſperſe the vapours, by the moiſt earth then eaſily yeelded: which in his greater force in the Summer ſeaſon wee ſee effected: the like wee ſee in greene wood and dry on the fire.

Raines fall about 3 afternoone euery day, when the Sun is ouer their heads.

It is no leſſe worthy note, that no part of the World hath ſo many, ſo great Lakes, and Riuers: the vapours and exhalations whereof, cannot but coole and moiſten the neighbouring Elements of the Ayre and the Earth. Againe, the equall length of the Dayes and Nights perpetually ſharing the time in equall portions, cauſeth [a] that the heat is not ſo vnequall as the Ancients dreamed. The great Dewes alſo in the night, which are greater then wee would thinke, and comparable for wetting to pretty ſhowers, encreaſe the freſhneſſe and coolenеſſe.

[a] Quodque die, Solis violento incanduit æſtu: Humida Nox reficit, paribuſq; refrigerat horis. Honterus.

Wee may adde hereunto the neighbour-hood of ſo huge an Ocean, the proprietie of the Windes, which in moſt places betweene the Tropikes are ſet, and certaine, no leſſe then the Sunne and Tides, and bring with them much refreſhing. Further, the ſituation of the Land doth further the cold not a little, in thoſe hot Regions; Contrariwiſe, neere the Poles, the continuance of the Sunne, and long dayes make is hotter then in parts neerer the Sunne; as in Ruſſia [b], then in England. Yea the high ridges and tops of ſome Mountaines in the burning Zone, are vnſufferable for cold, alwayes hauing on them, ſnow, hayle, and frozen waters, the graſſe witherd, and the men and beaſts which do paſſe along that way (for heere is no conuenient dwelling) benummed with the extremity of cold.

[b] D. Fletcher, Deſcription of Ruſſia.

——— Paries cum proximus ardet.

When the Mountaines are ſubiect to this degree of cold, it cannot but temper the Neighbour Regions, with ſome coolenеſſe at leaſt. Now to all theſe Reaſons of the Temperature, vnder the Line, and betweene the Tropikes ſome adde the influence of ſome vnknowne Conſtellations. Onely let this be remembred, that the former hold not equally in all parts of the Torride Zone, ſeeing that Nature hath diuerſified her ſelfe in diuers places, and by naturall exceptions hath bounded and limited thoſe generall Rules.

In ſome places, vnder the Line, it raineth not at all: in other ſome, thoſe cooling Windes are wanting: neither hath euery Region, Lakes, Riuers, or Mountaines to refreſh them. But of theſe particulars, we ſhall take better view in their peculiar places. In the ſame ſpace the Windes are moſt what Eaſterly, and without the Tropikes Weſterly: ſo that the Mariners vſe not to goe and returne the ſame way, but obſeruing the generall Windes, ſeeke to make vſe thereof accordingly. The reaſon of this Eaſterly Winde vnder the Zodiake, [c] is aſcribed to the motion of the Heauens: the firſt Moueable drawing (ſaith Acoſta) with his owne motion the inferiour Orbes, yea, euen thoſe Elementarie of the Fire, Ayre, and (where it findes no other obſtacle, of the Water alſo, as [d] ſome ſuppoſe. But for the Ayre (whereof wee now ſpeciall ſpeake) the motion of the Comets, circularly carried in the Ayre, (where alſo their motion is diuers, as is obſerued in the Planets) doth ſufficiently prooue. Without the Tropikes from ſeuen and twentie to ſeuen and thirtie Degrees, the Windes are ſaid to be for the moſt part Weſterly, mooued, as ſome thinke, by the repercuſſion of the Ayre, heere preuailing againſt that force of the Heauens, which maſtereth it within the Tropikes: euen as wee ſee Waters, being encountered with more force, returne with an Eddie in a manner backe. This of the Eaſterly Winds is to be vnderſtood of the Sea: for at Land, though winds bee (as before is ſaid) certaine and ſet, yet that which is the generall Winde of one Country, is not generall to all: yea, in the ſame Countrey they haue a ſet Winde in ſome places for the day, and another quite contrary bloweth in the night. [e] Alſo, neere vnto the Coaſts they are more ſubiect to calmes in this burning Zone, than further off in the Sea, the groſſer vapours which ariſe out of the Earth, and the diuers ſituation thereof being the cauſe of theſe differences.

Such is the force of this naturall ſituation, that in ſome places it is ſtrange what effects it produceth. There is in Peru an high mountaine called Pariacaca, whereupon Ioſeph. Acoſta ſaith, he aſcended as well prouided as he could, being fore-warned and fore-armed by men expert. But in the aſcent he and all the reſt were ſurpriſed with ſo ſudden pangs of ſtraining and caſting, and ſome alſo of ſcowring, that the Sea-ſickneſs is not comparable hereunto. He caſt vp Meat, Flegme, Choler, and Blood, and thought hee ſhould haue caſt out his heart too. Some thinking to dye therewith, demanded Confeſſion: and ſome are ſaid to haue loſt their liues with this accident. The beſt is, it laſteth but for a time, neither leaueth any great harme behinde. And thus it fareth in all the ridge of that Mountaine, which runnes aboue a thouſand and fiue hundred miles, although not in all places alike. In foure different paſſages thereof, thereof, hee found the like difference and distemper, but not so grieuous as at Pariacaca. Hee ascribeth it to the subtiltie of the Aire in those high Hils, which he thinketh are the highest in the world: the Alpes and Pirenees, being, in respect hereof, as ordinarie houses, compared to high Towers. It is Desart, the grasse often burnt and blacke, for the space of fiue hundred Leagues in length, and fiue and twenty or thirty in breadth. There are other Desarts in Peru, called Punas, where the Aire cutteth off mans life without feeling: a small breath, not violent, and yet depriuing men sometimes of their liues, or else of their feet and hands, which fall off as a rotten Apple from a Tree, without any paine. This seemeth to be done by the force of cold, which in the Northerne, and Northeasterne parts of Europe worketh like effects: some [a] being found dead suddenly in those sleds in which they came to market, sitting therein as if they were aliue, and some losing their ioynts by the like cause. But this maketh vp the strangenesse of these mortall accidents, that this piercing cold Ayre both killeth and preserueth the same bodie, depriuing it of life, and yet freeing it from putrifaction. A certaine Dominike passing that way, fortified himselfe against the cold winds, by heaping vp the dead bodies which here hee found, and reposing himselfe vnder this shelter, by these dead helpes saued his life. The cause is, Putrefaction cannot be procreated, where her Parents, Heate and moisture, are confined, and haue little or no force. The Seas which compasse this Westerne India, besides the Magellane Streits, and the Northerne vnknowne, (for the knowledge whereof our Countrey-men, [b] Frobisher, Danis, Hudson, and others haue aduentured their liues and fortunes, and at last haue giuen vs more hope then euer of the discouerie) are the great and spacious Ocean, which on this side is called the North Sea, and on the other side of America, is named the South Sea. The qualities thereof will better appeare, when we come to speake of the Ilands therein.

a This Master George Barkley, a Merchant, which liued long in Liuonia, told me of his owne sight.

§. III.

Of the nature of metals in generall, of Gold, Siluer, Quick-siluer, and the plenty and Mines thereof in America.

CONcerning the Land of the New World, Acosta diuideth it into three parts; High, Low, and Meane: which hold almost the same proportion that Master Lambert [c] obserueth of Kent, the first hauing some wealth, by reason of the Hauens, and Ports therein, and of the Vines that grow there, but are very vnholesome: the Hils are healthfull, but not fertile, except in the Siluer bowels, and Golden entralls thereof: the third is the most commodious habitation, where the soile yeeldeth Corne, Cattle, and Pasture, and the Ayre, health. The principall thing that hath brought this Westerne India into such request, is, the Mines and Metals therein. The Wisedome of God [d] hath made Metals for Physicke, for defence, for ornament, and specially for instruments in the worke which God hath imposed vpon man, That in the sweat of his browes he should eate his bread. The industry of man hath added another vse of Metals, by weight or stampe, conuerting it to money, which the Philosopher [e] calleth the measure of all things. And a fit measure might it haue beene, if the minde of man were not vnmeasurable, and vnsatiable in measuring his measure. Metals naturally grow (as some [f] obserue) in land naturally most barren: Nature recompensing the want of other things with these hidden treasures: and the God of Nature enriching the Indians with this substance, otherwise barren of Humane and Diuine knowledge, that might as a rich Bride (but withered and deformed) make her finde many suters for loue of her Portion. And would God, they which reape heere these Temporall things, would sowe Spirituall, and giue them [g] Gold tried in the fire, and that which is as Siluer tried seuen times, I meane the Word of God sincerely preached, without the drosse of their owne superstitions. And would they gaue them not Iron for Gold, an Iron Age for a Golden, imposing a heauy yoke of seruitude, [h] which hath consumed worlds of people in this New-World, and made the Name of Christ and Christian to stinke amongst them: yea they abhorre the Sea it selfe for bringing forth such monsters, as they thinke the Spaniards: whom for their execrable wickednesse, they esteemed, not to come of humane generation, but of the froth of the Sea, and therefore call them Viracochie, or Sea-froth. That which one saith of Religion, I may apply to this American World, Peperit diuitias, & filia deuorauit matrem. Shee brought forth rich metals, and the Daughter hath consumed the Mother: her Gold that should haue beene a price in her hand to buy Wisedome, hath to these importunate Chapmen sold her freedome. It is [i] a Golden and Siluer Age indeed to the Spaniards, for the condition and state which hereby accrueth to them, not for the conditions and state of life which they obserue.

In the yeare 1587. when Acosta came to Peru, eleuen millions were transported in the two Fleets of Peru and Mexico, almost one halfe thereof for the King. In the time when Pollo was Gouernour of Charcas in Peru, from the Mines of Potozi alone were drawne and customed euery day thirty thousand Pezos of Siluer, euery Peso amounting to 15. Rials, and a fourth part: and yet it is thought the one halfe was not customed: or as Oviedo [b] reckoneth, one fourth part more then a Spanish Ducket. Hee writeth, that Anno 1535. three or foure ships came to Sivil, laden with none other commodities but Gold and Siluer. Miles Philips recordeth, that when he returned out of the Indies, 1581. there were seuen and thirty sayle, and in euery of them, one with another, thirtie pipes of siluer, besides great store of Gold, Cochinile, Sugars, Hides, &c. And at this day, saith [i] Acosta, the Mines of Potozi yeeld the King a million of Siluer, for his fift yeerely, besides the wealth that groweth by Quicke-siluer, and other Prerogatiues. In the yeere 1574. were entred threescore and sixteene millions. That which is wrought in the Countrey is not entred, besides priuy conueyances. How much differeth Potozi from the Mine Bebello in Spain, one thousand and fiue hundred paces deepe, admired, and that iustly, by [k] Antiquitie, for yeelding three hundred pounds weight of Siluer a day to Hannibal, but with much more charges, by reason of the intolerable paines in drawing out the waters, which therein flowed, and in Potozi are wanting. But what will not this vnlouely loue of money doe? Hereby Man encountreth the vast Ocean, passeth the farthest and most contrarie Climates, drowneth Bootes, and all his Teame, buryeth himselfe in the bowels of the Earth, raiseth new Heauens, and seeketh his heauen where he cannot see heauen or light, neere the bottomlesse bottomes of Hell: remoueth Fountaines and Mountaines, reduceth a new Chaos, in the confusion of Elements; the Earths intrals being towred in the Ayre, and sacrificed to his hotter brother in Fiery purgations; the Aire filing the darke hollowes and hels which it cannot see; the Waters forced out of those possessions wherein they challenged succession and inheritance after the decease and remouing of the Earth: all filled with Darknesse, to bring to light those metals, which possessing the possessors, depriue them of the highest Light, and brand them for the lowest Darknesse. Precious perils, [l] where so many bodies are pined, so many soules endangered, so much Good lost for goods; and Man, for price, setteth himselfe at the worst and basest price of all that hee hath. How happy and golden was the outward state of these Indians, before they accounted gold any part of their happinesse, and found it the cause of their ruine?

Of metals, Gold is esteemed most precious, as most enduring both Age and Fire, and least subiect to rust: according to those Verses,

——— vni quoniam nil deperit Auro
Igne, velut solum consumit nulla vetustas,
Ac neq; rubigo aut aerugo conficit vlla.

Their Gold [m] is found either in Graines, which they call Pippins, because they are like the Pippins, or Seeds of Melons; which is pure, and hath no need of melting: or in powder, which is found in Riuers, mixed with the soyle and sands, for which Tagus, Pactolus, and Ganges haue been famous; or else in stone, being a veine that groweth and ingendereth, intermixing it selfe with the stones. Those Pippins, or pieces of pure Gold, found among the Rocks or Hils, are sometimes very great. Peter Martyr [n] tels of one that weighed three thousand three hundred and ten Pezos, and was with much people and treasure drowned, in the ship called Boadilla, being therewith surcharged, in the returne homewards: A fit Embleme for Christians, which when they will [o] lade themselues with this thicke clay, [p] drowne the soule in perdition and destruction. [q] Oviedo (who a long time held the Office of Proueditor for the Mines) saith, that hee saw two Graines of Gold, one of which weighed seuen pounds, and was in value 700. Castilians or Pezos; the other fiue pounds, & was worth fiue hundred; and many other of one, two or three hundred. Yet are not these Graines so welcome to the Miners, as that in powder, because this continueth (and therfore in fine containeth) more then the former. He obserueth, that Gold hath a farre brighter lustre in the naturall virginitie, then when it hath passed the fire & mans industry: and that coles are often found very fresh, where they find Gold, which place he thinkes was sometimes the face of the Earth, and by Time (which conserueth coles as well as gold vnder the earth without corruption) couered through showres, bringing the earth from the higher places, whereby hee supposeth it came to passe, that in a virgin-Mine fifteene foot vnder the earth, he once found two rings of the Indian fashion: he addeth, that the gold in stone will runne as small as a pin or threed, and meeting with a hollow place, filleth it, and so guideth the Miner by thick and thin, but alway pliant & flexible like liquid waxe, till the first sight of our aire breathes (as from the couetous hard hearts of men) this naturall hardnesse, which it presenteth to vs.

The wild Indians had the Art of gilding their works with such dexterity, that they seemed pure gold: which mystery they performed with certayne herbs, but would neuer teach it any Europæan. The Indians [a] in Hispaniola obserued a kinde of Religion in gathering their Gold (as the Arabians in their Frankincense) fasted, and for twenty dayes space came not at their wiues, otherwise thinking they should find none. Columbus imitating the like superstition, would suffer none to seeke this golden Idoll, without those gilded Ceremonies of Confession, and their Sacrament before receiued. The greatest quantity is drawne at the Indies in the powder-gold. The gold in stone is drawne out of the Mynes or Pits, with great difficulty. They refine powdred Gold in Basons, [b] washing it in many waters, vntill the sand fall from it, and the Gold, as more heauy, remayneth in the bottome. They haue other meanes of refining it with Quick-siluer and strong Waters. In the fleet 1585. the declaration of the firme land was twelue Cassons or Chests, which was so many hundreth weights of Gold: besides one thousand fifty and sixe Mares from New Spaine, which was for the King only, not mentioning that which came for Merchants and priuate men.

For the Siluer: the second place is giuen to it among metals, because next to Gold it is the most durable, and least endammaged by the fire, and in the sound and colour passeth the Gold. The Mynes thereof are commonly in Mountaynes and Rocks, seldome in plaines, and Champaines. Sometimes they find find it [c] straggling, in pieces, not holding any continuing Veine: sometimes it is fixed, and spreadeth it selfe in depth and length like to great branches, and armes of trees. Strange it is that in some places the fire, kindled with blowing of bellowes, will not serue to refine the Siluer, but they vse Furnaces called Guayras, set in such places, where the wind continually bloweth. Thus in Peru, the Mynes of Porco stoupe to artificiall fires, which those Potozi scorne and contemne. Potozi is a dry, cold, barren, and vnpleasant soyle, if the rich Mynes did not more then supply all those defects, and make it a plentifull both habitation and Mart; not fearing the Heauens disasters, the cold Ayre, the frowning Earth, the fell Showres, so long as the Siluer hooke can be sufficient attractiue for forreine store. Hence it is, that they feele no want of store, and yet haue no store but of want, the Mynes excepted, which (I know not how) are both store and want according as mens minds in a second refining can digest and dispose them. They which worke in the Mynes, see no Sunne nor light, by absence whereof they find both extreame cold, and dreadfull darknesse, and an Ayre so vnholesome, as makes them no lesse sicke, then men tossed at Sea. They [e] breake the Metall with Hammers, and split it by force, and then carry it vp on their shoulders, by Ladders made of Neats Leather twisted like pieces of wood, which are crossed with staues of wood: at the end of one Ladder begins another with seats of wood betweene, to rest them. They mount three and three. Hee that goes before, carries a Candle tyed to his Thumbe: they haue their metall tyed in a cloth like a Scrip, each man bearing about fiftie fifty pound weight, and that commonly aboue an hundred and fifty [f] Stades in height. The most vsuall manner of refining in these times is by Quick-siluer, and therefore there are not now aboue two thousand Guayras in Potozi, which haue beene in times past six thousand: a pleasant sight to such, whose darkned conceits make their Heauen vpon Earth, to see such a resemblance of the Starry Heauen, in the night, dispersing such a manifold light. The Siluer swimmes on the top, the other Metals vnder, and the drosse in the bottome.

c Plin. sayth (but not truly) that siluer is neuer found pure.

d I haue seene some mal proportion resembling Plants, with leaues spread, and diuided & a stalk descending, as if it promised a flowre, much like the Rubwort.

f A Stade is the height of a man.

The Quick-siluer [g] is admired for his naturall properties, that being a metall, it is liquid (not by Art as other metals, or by expence, in which respect the other may no lesse be called Quick-siluer, but) by it owne nature, and being a liquor, is more heauie then those which haue a naturall subsistence; this subsisting and sinking to the bottome, when the other swim aboue it. God onely challengeth preheminence, if Pliny [h] be beleeued. Nothing in this admirable liquor is more to bee admired, then the naturall loue, and sympathy which it hath to Gold: as appeareth in such, as for the French Disease vse Oyntments of this composition, [i] if they weare a Gold-ring in their mouth, it attracteth this quicke and willing metall to it, from the veines and inward parts, into which it hath secretly and dangerously conueyed it selfe: the Ring plucked out of the mouth is of a Siluer complexion, which mutuall copulation nothing but fire can diuorce, or restore the same to the former colour. In their gildings of curious workes, it hath bin obserued, that the workmen which vse Quick-siluer to that purpose, to preuent the secret and venemous exhalations thereof, haue swallowed a double Ducat of Gold rolled vp, which drawes that fume of this liquor which enters in at the eares, Eyes, nose, and mouth, vnto it in the stomacke. [k] And for this fume, Lemnius telleth, that the Gold-smiths hanging a cloth ouer the place where they gild, which receiueth the fume of the Quick-siluer, find that smoke in the cloth, recouering againe his former nature in drops of that liquid metall. Venenum rerum omnium est, sayth Pliny, it is a venome to all things, and yet a greater venome is in the mouth of man. I meane not that [l] poyson of Aspes vnder the lips of many, as the Prophet speaketh in a spirituall sense, but euen in naturall operation, the Spettle of man enuenometh, with a stronger poyson, this poyson of Quick-siluer; and eyther killeth it, [m] or at least depriueth it of the motion and quicknesse, and maketh it pliant to Medicines and Oyntments. Yea, some [n] report that this Spettle of man, arising of secret vapors out of the body, as infectious exhalations out of vnwholsome Lakes, especially when a man is fasting, killeth Scorpions, and other venemous beasts, or at least doth much hurt them. Quick-siluer disdayneth other metals, only it is thus rauished with Gold, and not a little affected to Siluer, for the refining of which, it is principally in vse: it corrupteth, forceth, consumeth, and flyeth the rest, as much as may bee, and therefore they vse to keepe it in earthen Vessels, Bladders, Skins, Quils, and such vnctuous receptacles. It hath pierced and eaten thorow the bodies of men, and hath beene found in their graues. Quick-siluer is found in a kind of stone, which doth likewise yeeld Vermillion. At Amador de Cabrera, is such a stone or Rocke, foure score yards long, forty broad, interlaced with Quick-siluer, with many pits in it, threescore Stades deepe, and is able to receiue three hundred workmen: it is valued worth a Million of Gold. From the Mynes of Guancauilca, they draw yeerly eight thousand Quintals of Quick-siluer. As for the manner of refining Siluer by Quick-siluer, their Engines and Mils, with the tryall of their metall, I referre the Reader to [o] Acosta.

Spettle

Atabaliba maruelled why the Europæans hauing such Chrystaline and pure Glasses, would expose themselues to those dangers by Sea and Land, for those metals which he thought not comparable to the same. Well indeed might hee haue wondred, if that Arte had remayned, which [p] (I know not how truly) Plinie, Petronius, Isidorus, and others report, to haue beene in Tiberius his time; to whom one presented a faire Glasse, which being cast on the ground, was bowed, but not broken: & being taken vp by the same Artificer, was with his hammer brought to the former forme and beauty. His reward, besides the wonder and astonishment of the beholders, was that which precious things often procure their owners. For the Emperour asking whether any other knew this Mystery, this being denied, he caused his head (the only work-house of this secret) to be smote off, least Gold and Siluer should giue place [q] to Arte. The Emeralds grow in stones like Chrystall, and there are many of them in the Indies. But of these and other Gemmes it would be too tedious to write.

Pedro Ordonnes a Spanish Priest hath written of the profits which the Spaniards reape of Peru and the Indies. He sayth, that the Kings Reuenue thence accrueth to twelue Millions, which ariseth out of ten Springs, his fifths of the Gold and Siluer Mynes, great Meltings, Customes of Ports, Indian Tributes, Sale of Offices, the Cruzada, Tribute of Rents, Quick-siluer, Fines of Courts, and the ninth part of Ecclesiasticall Rents. Of these Rents and other things worthy knowledge See himselfe in the seuenth Booke of the last part of our Pilgrimes. Of the first Knowledge, Habitation, and Discoueries of the New World, and the rare Creatures therein found, Beasts, Birds, Trees, Hearbes, and Seeds.

§. I.

Whether the Ancients had any knowledge of America, and whence the Inhabitants, first came.

AFter these generall Discourses of the Americans, some other of like nature I hold not vnmeete to be handled, before wee come to the particular Regions: and first of the Men, whether the Ancients had any knowledge of them: how Men first came into these parts, and of the first Discoueries in the former Age. Concerning the first knowledge of these parts, it may iustly bee a question whether the Ancients euer heard thereof. For to say nothing of that opinion, that the Torrid Zone was not habitable in the opinion of the most, as wee haue shewed in the former Chapter: the allegations [a] are not such as can force vs to beleeue that, whereto by

As for Plato's [d] Atlantis, and Tertullians [e] Æon borrowed of him; Acoſta alledgeth diuers Platonikes, Proclus, Porphyrie and Origen, which interpret Plato after a myſticall ſenſe: and proueth by the words of Plato himſelfe, that they can be no true Hiſtory. The like allegations hath Marſilius Picinus in his Commentaries vpon Timæus and Critias, howſoeuer hee alledgeth Crantor, and ſome others which eſteeme it a bare Hiſtory: to which yet his thouſands of yeeres before the Floud, deny truth and credit, although we interpret them of the yeeres of the Moone. Ficinus ſheweth both their Allegoricall and his Anagogicall interpretation. But the Diſcourſe of Plato cannot agree, if it were a Hiſtory, to America, both becauſe it placeth Atlantis at the mouth or entry of the Straits by Herculeſ Pillars, whence this is by a huge Sea ſeparated: and that is not ſaid ſtill to continue land, but by an Earth-quake to haue ſunke and become Sea. That which is cited out of Ariſtotle his Admiranda auditiones, if any reade the place, may appeare to be ſome neerer Iland, and neyther Iland nor Continent of America. Neyther can I credit that which [f] Oniedo ſuppoſeth of the Heſperides Ilands, cited out of Pliny, Mela, Solinus, dawbed ouer with Morter, borrowed of fabulous Beroſus, and the Poets, as if in thoſe firſt Ages of the World they had beene Spaniſh Inheritance, and none other then Hiſpaniola, or ſome other of the Ilands or mayne land of this New World; the Hiſtories whereof might perhaps moue Columbus to theſe Diſcoueries.

Out of Plutarch and other Hiſtories of the Carthaginian, Phœnician, and Tyrrhenian Nauigations they haue coniectures, but very vncertaine, and obſcure: and thoſe things, which Diodorus reports of that Iland, agree nothing to the New-World which had not attayned to that ciuility he there mentioneth, before the Spaniards arriuall. And by his diſcourſe it ſeemes rather to be ſome of the Ilands of Africa, then America, if the Hiſtory be true. Neyther could [g] ſuch long Voyages ſo farre off from any land, be performed without the helpe of the Compaſſe, which was firſt found thirteene hundred yeeres after Chriſt, by Iohn Goia of Melfi, according to that Verſe of Panormitan, [h] Prima dedit nautis vſum Magnetis [i] Amalphis. Gomara [k] citeth Blondus, and Maffæus, Girardus, witneſſes of this Melfian inuention, ſaue that hee cals him not Iohn, as Ortelius doth, but Flauius di Malphi. Yet I will not ſay, but that in former times, ſome ſhips might come ſometime by caſualty into thoſe parts [m] but rather forced by weather, then directed by skill; and thus it is likely that ſome parts of America haue beene peopled. This I much doubt; whether their Science in Nauigation was ſuch, as that they would voluntarily aduenture, and could happily effect this Voyage to and from the Weſt Indies. The moſt probable Hiſtorie in this kind is (in my minde) that of [n] Madoc ap Owen Guyneth, who by reaſon of ciuill contentions, left his Countrey of Wales, ſeeking aduentures by Sea, and leauing the Coaſt of Ireland North, came to a Land vnknowne, where he ſaw many ſtrange things.

n D. Powell hiſtory of Cambria, p. 227 A.D. 1170.

This by D. Powell, and Maſter Humfrey Lhuyd, is thought to be the Continent of the New World, World, confirmed herein by the speech of Mutezuma, professing his Progenitors to be strangers; and so were all the Mexicans to those parts, as the History in the eight Chapter following will shew: and by the vse of certaine Welch words, which [o] Dauid Ingram obserued in his trauell through those parts. The History addeth that hee left certayne of his people there, and comming home for more people, returned thither with ten sayle. Howsoeuer; it is certayne, that the prints of Brittish Expedition are in manner worne out, and no signe thereof was found by the Spaniards: Onely [p] they vsed a Crosse in Cumana; in the Hand of Acuzamill, the same was worshipped: but without any memory of Christ, or any thing sauouring that way: & might as well be there without any Christians erecting, as those Crosses which in the sixt Booke we haue shewed, were in the Temple of Serapis, at Alexandria.

Moreouer some Authours deny that any such Crosses were there found, and brand the report for a Fiction. As for Mutezuma being a stranger, it might be so, and yet his Progenitors of some other parts of America. And the words of Welsh are [q] very few, which, as it happens in any other Language, might by some chance come to passe. But if any be desirous to beleeue, that this Madoc peopled the Continent or Ilands of America, rather then the Terceras, or some of the African Ilands, I will not hinder, nor will I runne too much out of compasse, in pleading for the Compasse, as which onely can direct in such spacious Seas. Yet of this opinion is that Learned and iudicious Author, Iosephus Acosta, who diligently discussing this question, How men passed first to the Indies; largely, and learnedly contendeth, that they came not thither purposely, if they came by Sea, but by distresse of weather; and yet finds no lesse difficulty (that way) in the transporting beasts; especially wilde, and vnprofitable beasts, which is not like any would take into the ship with them, much lesse conuey them ouer so huge an Ocean. At last hee concludeth, that although some might arriue there by shipwrack, & tempest of weather, yet is it most likely that the first Inhabitants (descended of Adam & Noah, of which one [r] blond God hath made all Mankind, to dwell on all the face of the Earth, and hath assigned the bounds of their habitation) passed thither by some place where the Continent of our World ioyneth with America: or where the Ilands thereof are found fit Mediatours for this passage, being not farre distant from the Land. And this on the North parts of the World (where they place that fabulous Streight of Anian, not yet certaynly discouered) may be so: besides that, on the South, men might passe from the Coasts of Malacca to Iaua, and so to the South Continent, and from thence by the Magellane Streights into America. Groneland is found to bee the same Continent with Estotiland on the North. Some Negro's by force of tempest, it is probable, haue passed hither, because in Careca some haue beene found, betweene Saint Martha and Cartagena. Of whom Iohn [s] di Castellanos writeth.

Son todos ellos Negros comocueros, &c. They are all (sayth hee) as blacke as Rauens. And of this minde is Botero, [t] and those French Worthies, [t] Du Bartas and Philip Morney. It is not likely that the beasts could otherwise passe, but by the Continent, or by Ilands not farre off from the Continent, or from one another. Master Brerewood, a man learned and iudicious, in his Posthume worke [u] of Languages and Religions, affirmeth that America receiued her first Inhabitants, from those parts of Asia where the Tartars first inhabited. For those parts of America being most repleniſhed which respect Asia; and there being no token of the Arts or industry of China, India, or Cataya; in many things also they seeming to resemble those old Tartars: and their Countrey being eyther not at all, or least of all other, seuered from the North parts of America: he concludeth as aforesaid. A man may with like probable coniecture bring them from the Samoyeds bordering Northward from Russia, and the Laplanders, which by Northerne Ilands (whereof there are some daily discouered) might by passing from one to another, seate themselues in Greenland, Gronland, Estotiland and other parts, neere to, or vpon America. For the Inhabitants of the one are much like to the other. And thus by many wayes Gods Prouidence might dispose Inhabitants to these parts; that wee speake not of the South vnknowne Continent, which is supposed to extend it selfe to the Line, and from the Ilands of Asia might easily receiue and conuey Inhabitants hither. As for Genebrards deriuation of the Americans from the ten Tribes, prooued by the dreames of Esdras, elsewhere alledged with like truth for the Tartars, and some inscriptions out of Thenet, they which will may beleeue.

Heere also ariseth another question, how these beastes could passe from the parts of the knowne World, where none such are knowne? to which it may be answered, That God hath appointed to euery Creature his peculiar nature, and a naturall instinct, to liue in places most agreeing to his nature: as euen in our World, Non omnia fert omnia tellus: Euery Countrey hath not all Creatures: the Elephant, Rhinoceros, Riuer-horse, Crocodile, Camell, Camelopardalis, and others, are not ordinarily, and naturally in Europe: nor the Zebra in Asia or Europe: and the like may be said of many other Creatures.

Now, as in the Arke it selfe, (the Cradle of Man, and stall of Beasts,) wee must not onely obserue Nature and Art, for the making and managing thereof, but a higher and more powerfull hand: euen so in dispencing the creatures which came from thence, they chose places by their owne naturall instinct, and man disposed by his industrie, according as he had vse of them; but most of all, the secret and mighty prouidence of God co-working in those works of Nature and industry, and (in likelihood) infusing some more speciall and extraordinarie instinct in that replenishing and refurnishing of the World, [x] Assigning them their seasons and bounds of habitation, hath thus diuersified his workes, according to the diuersities of places, and sorted out to each Countrey their peculiar creatures. As for the comming by ship, it is for the beasts improbable, for the men (by any great numbers, or of any set purpose) vnlikely (except as before is said) seeing in all America they had no shipping, but their Canoes. The beasts also haue not bin found in the Ilands, which are in the Continent. And if any hereunto will adde a supposition, that there might be some Ilands or parts of the Continent in times past, which is now swallowed by the mercilesse Ocean, so that then there might be a way, which now is buried in the waues: (as some [y] suppose) of Plato's Atlantis, placed at the mouth of the Streits, or Hercules Pillars, which yet they would haue to be America, and some of the [z] Sea betwixt Douer and Callis, once one firme Land (as they doe imagine) I list not to contradict them.

As for the [*] Indians owne report of their beginning, which some ascribe to a Fountaine, others to a Lake, others to a Caue, or what other opinion they conceiue thereof, we shall more fitly obserue in their proper places, discoursing of their Religions and Opinions. Now for the first certain Discouery of this New World, the World generally ascribeth it to Columbus, and worthily: but Columbus himselfe is said to haue receiued his instructions from another.

§. II.

Of Christopher Colon, or Columbus, his first Discouerie, and three other Voyages.

THis Historie is thus related by Gomera, and Ioannes Mariana: A certaine Caruel, sayling in the Ocean, by a strong East winde long continuing, was carried to a Land vnknowne, which was not expressed in the Maps and Cards. It was much longer in returning, then in going: and arriuing, had none left aliue but the Pilot, and three or foure Mariners, the rest being dead of famine and other extremities; of which also the remnant perished in few dayes, leauing to [a] Columbus (then the Pilots host) their Papers, and some grounds of this Discouerie. The time, place, countrey, and name of the man is vncertaine: some esteeme this Pilot an Andaluzian, and that he traded at Madera, when this befell him: some a Biscaine, and that his trafficke was in England and France; and some a Portugall, that traded at the Mina: some say hee ariued in Portugall; others, at Madera; or at one of the Azores: all agree that he dyed in the house of Christopher Columbus. It is most likely at Madera. This Relation (as it hath no witnesses to proue it, the whole company being dead; nor any good circumstances, so) Benzo and Ramusius [b] plainely affirme it to be a fable, and a Spanish tricke, enuying a Forrenner and Italian that glory, to be the first finder of the Indies. And the most sincere and iudicious of the Spaniards themselues esteeme it but a tale, as appeares by the testimonie of Gonzalo Fernando de Oniedo in his Summary, and more fully in his generall Historie of the Indies. They shew, and so doth he which then liued in the Court of Spaine, Peter Martyr, another cause that moued Columbus to this Discouery, and not that Pilots papers or [d] reports. For, he being a Mariner vsed to the Sea from his youth, and sayling from Cales to Portugall, obserued, that at certaine seasons of the yeere, the windes vsed to blow from the West, which continued in that manner a long time together. And deeming that they came from some coast beyond the Sea, he bussled his minde so much herewith, that he resolued to make some triall and proofe thereof. When he was now forty yeeres old, hee propounded his purpose to the Senate of Genua, vndertaking, if they would lend him ships, he would find a way by the West, vnto the Ilands of Spices. But they reiected it as a dreame.

Columbus frustrate of his hopes at Genua, yet leaues not his resolution, but goeth to Portugall, and communicates this matter with Iohn the second King of Portugall: but finding no entertainment to his suites, sendeth his brother Bartholomew Columbus to King Henry the seuenth of England, to sollicite him in the matter, whiles himselfe passed into Spaine, to implore the aide of the Castilians herein.

a Columbus was borne at Cugureo, or (as some say) at Nerui in the Territorie of Genua: hee was a Mariner from a child, and traded into Syria, and other parts of the East. After this he became a Master in making Sea-cards, he went to Portugall, to learne their Nauigations on the coast of Africa, and there married. Gom. cap. 14. R. Eden.

h Gomar c.15. Herera saith he first sollicited the Catholike Kings but receiuing an answere to his discontent, hee made offer to the Dukes.

Bartholomew s vnhappily lighted on Pirats by the way, which robbed him and his company, forced him to sustayne himselfe with making of Sea-cards. And hauing gotten somewhat about him, presents a Map of the World to King Henry, with his Brothers offer of Discouerie: which the King gladly accepted, and sent to call him into England. But hee had sped of his suite before in Spaine, and by the King and Queene was employed according to his request. For comming h from Lisbone to Palos di Moguer, and there conferring with Martin Alonso Pinzon, an expert Pilot, and Fryer Io. Perez, a good Cosmographer, hee was counselled to acquaint with these his proiects, the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, and of Medina Cæli: which yeelding him no credit, the Fryer counselled him to goe the Court, and wrote in his behalfe to Fryer Fernand di Telauera, the Queenes Confessor.

Christopher Columbus came to the Court of Castile, Anno 1486. and found cold welcome to his suite, at the hands of the King and Queene, then busied with hot warres in Granada, whence they expelled the Moores. And thus remayned hee in contempt as a man meanely clothed, without other Patron then a poore Fryer, saue that Alonso di Quintaniglia gaue him his Dyet who also at last procured him audience with the Archbishop of Toledo, by whose mediation he was brought before the King and Queene, who gaue him fauourable countenance, and promised to dispatch him, when they had ended the warres of Granada, which also they performed. Thus Columbus is set forth with three Caruels at the Kings charges, who because his treasure was then spent in the warres, borrowed sixteene thousand Duckets of Lewes de Sanct' Angelo: and on Friday the third of August, in the yeere of our Lord 1492. in a Vessell called the Gallega, accompanyed with the Pinta and Ninna, in which the Pinzons, Brethren, went as Pilots, with the number of an hundred and twenty persons, or thereabouts, set sayle for Gomera, one of the Canary Ilands, and hauing there refreshed himselfe, followed his Discouery. After many dayes hee encountred with that Hearbie Sea (whereof before we haue i spoken) which not a little amated and amazed the Spaniards, and had caused their k returne, had not the sight of some Birds promised him land not farre off. He also first taught the Spaniards to obserue the Sunne and Pole in their Nauigations, which till this Voyage they had not vsed, nor knowne.

But the Spaniards, after three and thirty dayes sayling, desperate of successe, mutined, and threatned to cast Columbus into the Sea: l disdayning much, that a stranger, a Genuois, had so abused them. But he pacified their enraged courages with milde speeches, and gentle promises. On the eleuenth day of October, m one Rodrigo di Triana, espyed and cryed, Land, Land; the best Musicke that might be, especially to Columbus, who to satisfie the Spaniards importunity, had promised the day before, that if no Land appeared in three dayes, hee would returne. n One, the night before, had descryed fire, which kindled in him some hope of great reward at the Kings hand, when hee returned into Spaine, but beeing heerein frustrate, hee burnt into such a flame, as that it consumed both Humanitie and Christianitie in him, and in the agony of indignation made him leaue his Countrey and Faith, and reuolt to the Moores. But thee, Columbus, how can I but remember? but loue? but admire? Sweetly may those bones rest, sometimes the Pillars of that Temple, where so diuine a Spirit o resided: which neyther want of former example, nor publike discouragements of domesticall and forren States, nor priuate insultations of proud Spaniards, nor length of time (which vsually deuoureth the best resolutions) nor the vnequall Plaines of huge vnknowne Seas, nor grassie fields in Neptunes lap, nor importunate whisperings, murmurings, threatnings of inraged companions, could daunt. O name p Colon, worthy to be named vnto the Worlds end, which to the Worlds end hast conducted Colonies; or may I call thee Colombe, for thy Doue-like simplicitie and patience? thy true Columna or Pillar, whereon our knowledge of this New World is founded: the true Christopher, which with more then Giant-like force and fortitude hast carried Christ his Name and Religion, through vnknowne Seas, to vnknowne Lands: which we hope and pray, that it may be more refined, and reformed, then Popish superstition, and Spanish pride will yet suffer. Now let the Ancients no longer mention Neptune, or Minos, or Erythræus, or Danaus: so all which diuers authors diuersly ascribe the inuention of nauigation, Mysians, Troyans, Tyrians, vaile your bonnets, strike your top-sayles to this Indian Admirall, that deserueth the top-saile indeed, by aspiring to the top that sayling could aymeat, in discouering another World. Let Spaniards, French, English, and Dutch resound thy name, or His Name rather, q whose Name who can tell? that would acquaint Thee, and the World by thee, with newes of a New-World,

But lest we drowne our selues in this Sea of Extasie and Admiration, let vs goe on shoare with Columbus in his new discouered Iland. And first mee thinkes I see the Spaniards, yesterday in mutinie, now as farre distracted in contrary passions, some gazing with greedie eyes eyes on the desired Land, some with teares of ioy, not able to see that, which the ioy of seeing made them not to see: others embracing, and almost adoring Columbus, who brought them to that sight: some also with secret repinings enuying that glory to a stranger, but byting in their byting enuie, and making shew of glee & gladnesse: all new awaked out of a long trance, into which that Step-mother-Ocean, with dangers, doubts, dreads, despaires had deiected them, reuiued now by the sight of their mother-earth, from whom in vnknowne armes they had beene so long weaned and detayned. On shoare they goe, and felling a tree make a Crosse thereof, which there they erected, and tooke possession of that New World, in the name of the Catholike Kings. This was done on the eleuenth of October, Anno 1492. in the Iland Guanahani, one of the Lucai, which Columbo named San Saluadore: from whence hee sayled to Baracoa, a Hauen on the North side of the Ile Cuba, where hee went on Land, and asked of the Inhabitants for Cipango (so doth Paulus call Iapan.) They vnderstanding him of Cibao (where are the richest Mynes of Hispaniola) signed him, that it was in Haiti, (so was the Iland then called) and some of them went with him thither.

What worldly ioy is not mixed with some disaster? Their Admirall heere splitteth on a Rocke, [a] but the men are saued by the helpe of the other ships. This fell out in the North part of Hispaniola (so named by them) where they had sight of Inhabitants, which seeing these strangers, ranne all away into the Mountaynes. One woman the Spaniards got, whom they vsed kindly, and gaue her meate, drinke and clothes, and so let her goe. She declaring to her people the liberalitie of this new people, easily perswaded them to come in troupes to the ships, thinking the Spaniards to be some Diuine Natron, sent thither from Heauen. They had before taken them for the Caribes, which are certaine Canibals, which vsed inhumane huntings for humane game, to take men for to eate them; Children likewise, which they gelded to haue them more fat, and then to deuoure them: the women they are not, but vsed them for procreation, and if they were old, for other seruices. The Islanders had no othe defence against them but the wooddy Hils, and swifteſt heeles to which they betooke them at the Spaniards arriuall, thinking them (as is said) to be Canibals. And such haue they since proued in [b] effect, not leauing of three Millions of people which heere they found, 200. persons, and that long since.

The Deuill had forewarned them of this by [c] Oracle, that a bearded Nation should spoyle their Images, and spill the bloud of their children, as wee shall see in the particular Tractate of Hispaniola. Nothing more pleased the Spaniards then the Gold, which the naked Inhabitants exchanged with them for Bels, Glasses, Points, and other trifles.

Columbus obtained leaue of Guacanarillus, the Caelke or King, to build [d] a Fort, in which he left eight and thirty Spaniards, and taking with him sixe Indians, returned to Spaine, where he was highly welcomed of the King and Queene. Some controuersie fell out betweene Columbus, and one of the Pinzons, Master of one of the Caruels, about leauing these men behind; but Columbus sent a Letter to reduce him vnto peace by the Indians, who held the Letter in almost religious regard, thinking it had some Spirit or Deitie, by which they could vnderstand one another being absent.

The Pope [e] (then a Spaniard) Alexander the Sixt, hearing of this, diuided the World, by his Bull, betwixt the Portugals and Spaniards: bearing date the fourth of May, Anno 1493. drawing a Line a hundred leagues beyond the Ilands of Azores and Cape Verde, this Alexander giuing (more then Great Alexander could conquer) the East to the one, and West to the other. The Bull is become an Vnicorne, and his two hornes are now growne into one, in the vniting of those two States.

Columbus, graced with the the title of Admirall, & enriched with the tenths of the Spanish gaines in the Indies, is sent a second [f] time, with his brother Bartholomeus, who was made Adelantado, or Deputie of Hispaniola. They had allowed them for this Expedition, small and great, seuenteene Sayle, and fifteene hundred men. The first Iland, hee espyed in his second Nauigation, he called Desseada, or Desired, because he had longed to see land. Arriuing in Hispaniola, he found the Spaniards which he had left there, that they were now not left, nor anywhere to be found. The Indians had murdered them, and laid the blame on the Spanish insolencies.

Hee now built and peopled the Towne of Isabella, which was their chiefe place of Residence and gouernment, which is in the yeere a thousand foure hundred ninetie eight, were remoued to the City of San Dominico. They built also the Fort of S. Thomas: but both in the one and the other, the Spaniards died of famine through the Indians wilfulnesse, who, vnwilling to haue such Neighbours, would not plant their Maiz and Iucca, and so starued both themselues and their guests. As for the Pockes, the Spaniards in this Voyage got them of the Indian women, and brought them into Spaine, as Ouiedo of his owne knowledge rea Some thinke Columbus did run on ground of purpose, that he might leaue some behind.

a reporteth of his owne Country-men: and they, after paid the Indians b (in recompence) with a disease as deadly and infectious to them, which consumed thousands, and was neuer before knowne amongst them: I meane, the small Pocks. The other were improperly named of the French, or of Naples, seeing that in those wars of Naples, which the Spaniards mayntayned against the French, some carryed this disease with them thither out of Spaine, and communicated the same both to the French and Neapolitans, hauing beene vsuall and easily curable, in the Indies. Another Disease also assaulted them of a little kinde of Fleas called Niguas, which would eate into, and breed in the flesh, and haue made many lose their toes.

Columbus at this time discouered Cuba and Iamaica with the Neighbour-Iles. Returning to Hispaniola, he found his Brother and the Spaniards in dissention and separation, and punishing the Authours of sedition, returned home. In the yeere of our Lord, 1497. hee made his third Voyage, and then touched on the Continent; discouered Cubagua, Paria, and Cumana.

But Roldanus Ximenius raysing a Rebellion, and accusing the Columbi to the King, effected that Bouadilla was sent Gouernour into Hispaniola, who sent the two Brethren bound as Prisoners to Spaine: vnworthy recompence of the worthy attempts of these Worthies. The King freeth them, and employeth Christopher in a fourth Voyage, Anno 1502. in which Ouandus the Gouernour forbade Columbus the first finder to land on Hispaniola. c Hee then discouered Guanaxa, Higuera, Fondura, Veragua, Vraba, and learned newes (as some say) of the South Sea. He stayed at Iamaica to repaire his Fleete, where some of his men were sicke, and they which were found in body, were more then sicke, froward and tumultuous in behauiour, and many left him. Vpon this occasion the Ilanders also forsooke him, and brought in no victuall. Herewith Columbus, neyther able to abide nor depart, was driuen to his shifts, no lesse admirable for subtlety then resolution. d He told the Ilanders, that if they did not bring him in prouision, the Diuine Anger would consume them: a signe whereof they should see in the darkened face of the Moone within two dayes. At that time hee knew the Moone would bee eclipsed: which the simple Islanders seeing, with feare and griefe humbled themselues to him, and offered themselues readie to all kinde and dutifull Offices.

At last, returning into Spaine, hee there dyed, Anno 1506. His body was buried at Siuill in the Temple of the Carthusians. This was the end (if euer there can bee end) of Columbus. Pinzonus e one of Columbus his Companions, by his example inuited, made new Discoueries, and Vespucius, and Cabota and many other, euery day making new searches and plantations, till the World at last is come to the knowledge of this New World almost wholly. The particulars will more fitly appeare in our particular Relations of each Countrey.

§. III.

Of the Beasts, Fowles and Plants in America.

AFter this Discourse of the men in those parts, let vs take some generall view of the other Creatures, especially, such as are more generally dispersed through the Indies. I haue before noted, that America had very few of such Creatures as Europe yeeldeth, vntill they were transported thither: and therefore they haue no Indian names for them, f but those which the Spaniards that brought them, giue vnto them: as Horse, Kine, and such like. They haue Lions, but not like in greatnesse, fiercenesse, nor colour to those of Africa. They haue Beares in great abundance, except on the North parts. They haue store of Deere, Bores, Foxes, and Tygres, which (as in Congo) are more cruell to the Naturals then to the Spaniards. These beasts were not found in the Ilands, but in the Continent; and yet now in those Ilands, Kine are multiplyed and growne wilde, without other Owner then such as first can kill them: g the Dogges likewise march by troupes, and endammage the Cattle worse then Wolues. Their Swine did multiply exceedingly, but (as an Enemy to their Sugars, a great commoditie in Hispaniola, where Anno 1535. Oviedo reckons almost thirty Ingenions, the number daily increasing) they were forced to root out this rooting kind of beasts. This Iland hath stored the other about it with store of Horse and Mares which are sold very cheape. For Kine, the Bishop of Venezuola had sixteene thousand head of that kind of beasts, and more: others possessed thousands also, and some killed them only for their Hides, of which were shipped from hence for Spaine, Anno 1587. 35444. and from New Spaine 64350. as Acosta relateth.

f A rule to know what beasts were here naturall (for to such they haue names in their own language) and what transported: for these the Indians call by their Spanish names.

The Lyons are gray, and vse to clime Trees: The Indians hunt and kill them. The Beares and Tygres are like those in other parts: but not so many. Apes and Monkies they haue of many kinds, and those admirably pleasing in their Apish tricks and imitations, seeming to proceed from Reason. A Souldier leuelling at one of them to shoot him, the silly beast dyed not vnreuenged, but hurling a stone as the other aymed at him, depriued the Souldier of his eye, and lost his owne life. They haue Monkies with long beards. Acosta [a] tels of one Monkie that would goe to the Tauerne at his Masters sending, and carrying the pot in one hand, and money in the other, would not by any meanes depart with his money, till he had his pot filled with wine: and returning home, would pelt the boyes with stones, and yet haue care to carie his Wine home safe to his Master, neither touching it himselfe till some were giuen him, nor suffering other. They [b] haue a monstrous deformed beast, whose forepart resembleth a Fox, the hinder part an Ape, excepting the feet which are like a mans; beneath her belly she hath a receptacle like a purse, wherein she bestowes her yong vntill they can shift for themselues, neuer comming out of this naturall nest, but to sucke.

Sheepe haue much encreased, and by good husbandry, in that plenty of pasture, would be a great commoditie: but in the Ilands the wilde Dogges destroy them: and therefore they that kill these Dogges, are rewarded for it, as they which kill Wolues in Spaine. The Dogges [c] which the Indians had before, were snowted like Foxes; they fatted them to eat, and kept them also for pleasure: but they could not barke: Such Dogges (we haue shewed) are in Congo. Their Stagges and [d] Deere in the South parts of America, haue no horns. They haue store of Conies. The Armadilla is an admirable creature, of which there bee diuers kinds: they resemble a [e] barded Horse, seeming to be armed all ouer, and that as if it were rather by artificiall Plates, opening and shutting, then naturall scales: it digs vp the earth as Conies and Moules.

The Hogs of the Indies haue their nauill vpon the ridge of their backs. They go in heards together and assaile men, hauing sharpe talons, like razors, and hunt their Hunters vp the tops of trees, whence they easily kill these enraged Sainos (so they call them) biting the tree for anger. The Dantes resemble small Kine, and are defended by the hardnesse of their hydes. The Vicugne somewhat resembleth a Goat, but is greater: they sheare them, and of their fleeces make Rugs and Couerings, and stuffes. In the stomacke and belly of this beast is found the Bezar-stone; sometimes one alone, sometimes two, three, or foure: the colour of which is blacke, or gray, or greene, or otherwise; it is accounted souereigne against poisons and venemous diseases. It is found in diuers sorts of beasts: but all chew the cud, and commonly feed vpon the snow and Rockes. The Indian sheepe they call Lama, it is a beast of great profit, not onely for food and raiment, but also for carriage of burthens: they are bigger then sheepe, and lesse then Calues: they will beare a hundred and fifty pound weight. In some places they call them Amydas, and vse them to greater burthens. Hulderike Schmidel [f] affirmes, that hee liuing in the parts about the Riuer of Plate, being hurt on his legge, rode fortie leagues vpon one of them. They will grow restie, and will lye downe with their burthen, no stripes nor death able to assuage their mood: onely good words, and faire dealing, with gentle entreatie, sometimes diuers houres together, can preuaile.

f Hul. Schmidel cap 44. A. Do. 1548.

Of fowles they haue many kinds which we haue, as Partridges, Turtles, Pidgeons, Stock-Doues, Quailes, Faulcons, Herons, Eagles: and a World of Parrots, which in some places fly by flockes, as Pidgeons. There are also Estridges. Hens they had before the Spaniards arriued. They haue other kinds peculiar: The Tominejos [g] is the least in quantitie, the greatest for admiration and wonder. I haue oftentimes doubted (saith Acosta) seeing them fly, whether they were Bees or Butter-flyes; but in truth they are Birds. Thevet [h] and Lerius call it Gonambuch, or Gouanbuch. They affirme that it yeelds nothing in sweetnesse of note to the Nightingale, and yet is not bigger then a Beetle, or Drone-Bee. One would say, Vox es, praterea nihil: but so could not any truely say, for euen otherwise it is almost miraculous: Nature making this little shop her great store-house of wonder and astonishment, and shewing [i] her greatest greatnesse in the least Instruments. The Prouinciall of the Iesuites in Brasil, affirmeth as [k] Clusius testifies, that the Brasilians called it Ouriffla, which signifyeth the Sun-beame, and that it was procreated of a Fly: and that he had seene one, partly a Bird, and partly a Fly: first, coloured blacke, then ash-coloured, then rose-coloured, then red: and lastly, the head set against the Sunne, to resemble all colours, in most admired varietie. It flyeth so swift (saith [l] Ouiedo) that the wings cannot be seene. It hath a nest proportionable. I haue seene (saith he) one of those birds, together with her nest, put into the scales wherein they vse to weigh Gold, and both weighed but two Tomins, that is, foure and twenty graines. Haply, it is therefore called Tominejos, as weighing one Tomin. The feathers are beautified with yellow, greene, and other colours: the mouth like the eye of an Needle. It liueth on [m] dew, and the juice of herbs, but sitteth not on the Rose. The feathers, specially, of the necke and brests, are in great request for those feather-pictures, or portraitures, which the Indians make cunningly and artificially with these natural feathers, placing the same in place and proportion, beyond all admiration: The Indian Bats should not flee your light, and are for their rarity worthy consideration, but that wee haue spoken before somewhat of them.

They haue [n] Birds called Condores, of exceeding greatnesse and force, that will open a sheepe, and a whole Calfe, and eate the same. They haue abundance of Birds, in beautie of their feathers farre surpassing all in Europe, wherewith the skilfull Indians will perfectly represent in feathers, whatsoeuer they see drawne with the Pensill. A figure of Saint Francis, made of feathers, was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus, whose eye could not discerne them to be naturall colours, but thought them pensill-worke, till he made tryall with with his fingers. The Indians vsed them for the ornaments of their Kings and Temples. Some Birds there are of rich commoditie, onely by their dung. In some Islands ioyning to Peru, the Mountaines are all white, like Snow, which is nothing but heapes of dung, of certaine Seafowle which frequent those places. It riseth many Ells, yea, many Launces in height, and is fetched thence in Boats, to hearten the Earth, which hereby is exceeding fertile.

To adde somewhat of the Indian Plants, and Trees. [o] Mangle is the name of a Tree, which multiplyeth it selfe into a wood (as before we haue obserued of it) the branches descending and taking root in the Earth. The Plane-tree of India hath leaues sufficient to couer a man from the foot to the head: but these, the Coco, and other Indian Trees, are in the East-Indies also, and there we haue mentioned them. Cacao, is a fruit little lesse then Almonds, which the Indians vse for money, and make thereof a drinke, holden amongst them in high regard. They haue a kinde of Apples [p] called Ananas, exceeding pleasant in colour and taste, and very wholesome, which yet haue force to eate iron, like Aqua fortis. The [q] Mamayes, Guayanos, and Paltos be the Indian Peaches, Apples and Peares. But it would bee a weary wilderneſse to the Reader, to bring him into such an Indian Orchard, where he might reade of such varietie of fruits, but (like Tantalus) can taste none: or to present you with a Garden of their Trees, which beare flowres with other fruit, as the Floripondio, which all the yeere long beareth flowres sweet like a Lilly, but greater: the Volusuchil, which beareth a flowre like to the forme of the heart, and others, which I omit: The flowre of the Sunne is is now no longer the Marigold of Peru, but groweth in many places with vs in England. The flowre of the Granadille they say (if they say truely) hath the markes of the Passion, Nayles, Pillar, Whips, Thornes, Wounds, exceeding stigmaticall Francis.

For their Seeds and Craines, Mays is principall, of which they make their bread, which our English ground brings forth, but hardly will ripen: it growes, as it were on a Reed, and multiplyeth beyond comparison; they gather three hundred measures for one. It yeeldeth more blood, but more grosse, then our Wheat. They make drinke thereof also, wherewith they will be exceedingly drunke: They first steepe, and after boyle it to that end. In some places they first cause it to be champed with Maids, in some places with old women, and then make a leauen thereof, which they boyle, and make this inebriating drinke. The Canes and leaues serue for their Mules to eate. They boyle and drinke it also for paine in the back. The buds of Mays serue in stead of Butter and Oyle.

In some parts they make bread of a great root called Yuca, which they name Caçani. They first cut and straine it in a Presse, for the iuyce is deadly [r] poison: the Cakes dryed, are steeped in water before they can eate them. Another kinde there is of this Yuca or Iucca, the iuice whereof is not poison. It will keepe long, like Bisket. They vse this bread most in Hispaniola, Cuba, and Iamaica, where Wheat and Mays will not grow, but so vnequally, that, at one instant, some is in the grasse, other in the graine. They vse in some places, another root called Papas, like to ground Nuts, for bread, which they call Chuno. Of other their roots and fruits I am loth to write, lest I weary the Reader with tedious officiousnesse. Spices grow not there naturally: Ginger thriueth well, brought and planted by the Spaniards. They haue a good kinde of Balme, though not the same which grew in Palestina. Of their Amber, Oiles, Gums, and Drugs, I list not to relate further. Out [s] of Spaine they haue caried great varietie of Plants, herein, Americo exceeding Spaine, that it receiueth and fructifieth in all Spanish Plants that are brought thither, whereas the Indian thriue not in Spaine: as Vines, Oliues, Mulberies, Figs, Almonds, Limons, Quinces, and such like. And, to end this Chapter, with a comparison of our World, with this of America; Our aduantages and prefermentsare many. [t] Our Heauen hath more Starts, and greater, as Acosta by his owne sight hath obserued, challenging those Authors which haue written otherwise, of fabling. Our Heauen hath the North-Starre, within three degrees, and a third of the Pole: their Crosier, or foure Stars set a-crosse, which they obserue for the Antarticke, is thirtie degrees off. Of the Diſcoueries of the North parts of the New-World, and toward the Pole, and of Greene-Land, or New-Land, Groen-Land, Eſtoti-Land, Meta Incognita, and other places vnto New-France.

Of the Diſcoueries made long ſince by Nicolo and Antonio Zeni.

AMerica is commonly diuided by that Iſthmus, or necke and narrow paſſage of Land at Darien, into two parts; the one called Northerne America, or Mexicana; the other Southerne, or Peruana. This trendeth betwixt the Darien and Magellan Straights: that from thence Northwards, where the Confines are yet vnknowne. For it is not yet fully diſcouered, whether it ioyneth ſomewhere to the Continent of Aſia, or whether Groen-land, and ſome other parts, accounted Iſlands, ioyne [x] with it. Theſe were diſcouered before the dayes of Columbus, and yet remaine almoſt couered ſtill in obſcuritie, and were therefore iuſtly termed [y] Meta Incognita, by Great ELIZABETH the beſt knowne and moſt renowned Lady of the World. The firſt knowledge that hath come to vs of thoſe parts, was by Nicholas and Antony Zeni, two Brethren, Venetians. tholike and Spanish Sword makes way for the Catholike-Roman Crowne and Keyes: Neither the Sword of Paul, nor the Keyes of Peter; for both these were a spirituall. But to returne to our Venetians. b In the yeere a thousand three hundred and fourescore, M^r Nicolo Zeno being wealthy, & of a haughty spirit, desiring to see the fashions of the world, built and furnished a Ship at his owne charges, and passing the Straits of Gibralter, held on his course Northwards, with intent to see England and Flanders. But a violent Tempest assailing him at Sea, he was carried hee knew not whither, till at last his Ship was carried away vpon the Ile of Frisland; where the men and most part of the goods were saued. In vaine seemes that deliuerie that deliuers vp presently to another Executioner. The Ilanders like Neptunes hungry groomes or his base and blacke gard, set vpon the men whom the Seas had spared: but here also they found a second estape, by meanes of a Prince named Zichmni, Prince of that and many Ilands thereabours: who being neere hand with his Armie, came at the out-cry, and chasing away the people, tooke them into protection.

b The discoueries of M. Nic. and Ant. Zeni, gathered out of their letters by Francisco Marcolina. They are related by M. Hakluyt, in his 3. vol. pa. 121.

This Zichmni had the yeere before giuen the ouerthrow to the King of Norway, and was a great aduenturer in feates of Armes. Hee spake to them in Latine; and placed them in his Nauie, wherewith he wonne diuers Ilands. Nicolo behaued himselfe so well, both in saiuing the Fleet by his Sea-skill, and in conquest of the Ilands by his Valour, that Zichmni made him Knight and Captaine of his Nauie,

S. Thomas Monasterie in Groenland.

After diuers notable Exploits, Nicolo armed three Barkes, with which he ariued in Engroneland: where hee found a Monasterie of Friers of the Preachers Order, and a Church dedicated to S^t Thomas hard by a Hill, that casteth out fire like Vesuuius and Ætna. There is a Fountaine of hote water, with which they heat the Church of the Monasterie, and the Friers chambers. It commeth also into the Kitchin so boyling hote, that they vse no other fire to dresse their meat; and putting their Bread into Brasse Pots without any water, it doth bake as it were in an hot Ouen. They haue also small Gardens, which are couered ouer in the Winter time, and being watered with this water, are defended from the violence of the Frost and Cold, and bring forth Flowers in their due seasons. The common people astonished with these strange effects, conceiue highly of those Friers, and bring them presents of flesh and other things.

They with this Water, in the extremitie of the Cold, heat their Chambers, which also (as the other buildings of the Monasterie) are framed of those burning stones, which the mouth of the Hill casts forth. They cast Water on some of them, whereby they are dissolued, and become excellent white Lime, and so tough, that being contriued in building, it lasteth for euer. The rest, after the fire is out, serue in stead of stones to make Walls and Vaults, and will not dissolue, or breake, except with some iron toole.

Their Winter lasteth nine moneths; and yet there is a faire Hauen, where this water falleth into the Sea, not frozen: by meanes whereof there is great resort of wilde fowle and fish, which they take in infinite multitudes. The Fishers Boats are made like to a Weauers Shuttle, of the skins of fishes, fashioned with the bones of the same fishes, and being sowed together with many doubles, they are so strong, that in foule weather they will shut themselues within the same, not fearing the force either of Sea, or Winde. Neither can the hard-hearted Rocks breake these yeelding vessels. They haue also as it were a Sleeue in the bottome thereof, by which with a subtill deuice, they conuey the water forth, that soaketh into them. The most of these Friers spake the Latine Tongue.

A little after this Nicolo returned, and died in Frisland, whither his brother Antonio had before resorted to him, and now succeeded both in his goods and honour; whom Zichmni employed in the Expedition for Estotiland: which happened vpon this occasion. Sixe and twenty yeeres before, foure Fisher-Boats were apprehended at Sea by a mighty and tedious storme; wherewith after many dayes, they were brought to Estotiland, aboue a thousand miles West from Frisland: vpon which, one of the Boats was cast away, and sixe men that were in it, were taken and brought to a populous Citie; where, one that spake Latine, and had beene cast by chance vpon that Iland, in the name of the King asked them what Country-men they were: and vnderstanding their case, he acquainted the King therewith. They dwelt there fiue yeeres, and found it to bee an Iland very rich, being little lesse then Iseland, farre more fruitfull. One of them said he saw Latine Bookes in the Kings Librarie, which they at this present doe not vnderstand. They haue a peculiar Language, and Letters or Characters to themselues. They haue Mines of Gold, and other Metals, and haue trade with Engroneland. They sow Corne, and make Beere and Ale. They build Barks (but know not the vse of the Compasse) and haue many Cities and Castles. The King sent these Fisher-men with twelue Barkes Southwards, to a Countrey which they call Drogio: in which Voyage escaping dreadfull Tempests at Sea, they encountred with Canibals at Land, which deuoured many of them. These Fishers shewing them the manner of taking Fish with with Nets, escaped: and for the presents which they made of their fish to the chiefe men of the Countrey, were beloued and honoured. One of these (more expert, it seemeth then the rest) was holden in such account, that a great Lord made warre with their Lord to obtayne him: and so preuayled, that he and his company were sent vnto him. And in this order was he sent to fiue and twenty Lords, which had warred one with another to get him, in thirteene yeeres space: whereby hee came to know almost all those parts; which, hee said, was a great Country, and (as it were) a New World. The people are all rude, and void of goodnesse: they goe naked, neyther haue they wit to couer their bodies with the Beasts skins, which they take in hunting, from the vehement cold. They are fierce, and eat their Enemies, hauing diuers Lawes and Gouernours. Their liuing is by hunting.

Further to the South west, they are more ciuill, and haue a more temperate Ayre: They haue Cities and Temples dedicated to Idols, where they sacrifice men, and after eate them; and haue also some vse of Gold and Siluer.

He fled away secretly, and conueying himselfe from one Lord to another, came at length to Drogio, where hee dwelt three yeeres. After this time finding there certaine Boates of Estotiland, he went thither with them: and growing there very rich, furnished a Barke of his owne, and returned into Frisland: where hee made report vnto his Lord of that wealthy Countrey. Zichmni prepared to send thither: but three dayes before they set forth, this Fisherman dyed. Yet taking some of the Mariners which came with him, in his stead, they prosecuted the Voyage, and encountred, after many dayes, an Iland; where ten men, of diuers Languages, were brought vnto them, of which they could vnderstand none, but one of Island. He told them, That the Iland was called Icaria, and the Knights thereof called Icari, descended of the ancient pedigree of Dedalus, King of Scots, who conquering that Iland, left his Sonne there for King, and left them those Lawes, which to that present they retayned. And, that they might keepe their Lawes inuiolate, they would receiue no stranger. Onely they were contented to receiue one of our men, in regard of the Language, as they had done those ten Interpreters.

Zichmni sayling hence, in foure dayes descried Land, where they found abundance of Fowle, and Birds Egges, for their refreshing. The Hauen they called Cape Trinity. There was a Hill, which burning, cast out smoake: where was a Spring, from which issued a certaine water like Pitch, which ranne into the Sea. The people of small stature, wilde, and fearefull, hid themselues in Caues. Zichmni built there a Citie, and determining to inhabit, sent Antonio backe againe, with the most of his people, to Frisland.

This History I haue thus inserted at large, which perhaps, not without cause in some thinges, may seeme fabulous; not in the Zeni, which thus writ, but in the Relations which they receiued from others. Howsoeuer; the best Geographers * are beholden to these Brethren, for that little knowledge they haue of these parts; of which none before had written: nor since haue there beene any great in-land Discoueries.

Discoueries made by SEBASTIAN CABOT, CORTREGALIS, GOMES, with some notes of Groenland.

SOmewhat since there hath beene discouered by Gasper Corteregale, a Portugall; Stephen Gomes, a Spaniard, and Sebastian Cabot: and more by later Pilots, of our Nation, but little of the disposition of the In-land people. Yea, it was thought to be all broken * Ilands, and not inhabited, but at certayne seasons frequented by some Saluages, which come thither to fish. Such as we can, in due order we here bestow.

Sebastian [a] Cabot reported to Ramusio, that in the yeere 1497. at the charge of King Henry the Seuenth, he discouered to the 67. degree and a halfe of Northerly latitude, minding to haue proceeded for the search of Cathay, but by the mutiny of the Mariners was forced to returne. The Map of Sebastian Cabot, cut by [b] Clement Adams, telleth, That Iohn Cabot, a Venetian, and his Sonne Sebastian, set out from Bristoll, discouering the Land, called it Prima Vista, and the Iland before it, Saint Iohns. The Inhabitants weare beasts skinnes. There were white Beares and Stags farre greater then ours. There were plenty of Seales, and Soles aboue a yard long. He named (sayth Peter [c] Martyr) certaine Ilands [d] Baccalaos, of the store of those fish, which the Inhabitants called by that name, which with their multitudes sometimes stayed his ships. The Beares caught these fish with their clawes, and drew them to land, and ate them. In the time of [e] Henry the Seuenth (William Purchas being then Maior of London) were brought vnto the King three men, taken in the New-found Iland: these were clothed clothed in beasts skins, and did eate raw flesh. But Cabot discouered all along the Coast to that which since is called Florida; and returning, found great preparations for warre in Scotland, by reason whereof, no more consideration was had to this Voyage. Whereupon he went into Spaine; and being entertayned by the King and Queene, was sent to discouer the Coasts of Brasill, and sayled vp into the Riuer of Plate, more then six score leagues. He was made Pilot Maior of Spaine: and after that, Anno 1549. was constituted Grand-Pilot of England, by King Edward the Sixt, with the yeerely Pension of an hundred threescore and sixe pounds, thirteene shillings, foure pence: Where, in the yeere 1553. hee was chiefe dealer and procurer of the Discouery of Russia, and the North-east Voyages, f made by Sir Hugh Willoughby, R. Chancelour, Stephen Burrough, and prosecuted by Pet, Iackman, and others, towards Noua Zemla, Persia, Tartaria, as in Master Hakluits first Tome appeareth. Perhaps this Voyage of Cabot was the same which is mentioned by Master Robert Thorne in a Treatise of his written 1527. that his Father and Hugh Eliot, a Merchant of Bristow, were the Discouerers of the New-found-lands: and if they had followed their Pilots minde, the Lands of the West Indies had beene ours.

Anno 1500. g Gasper Corteregalis, a Portugall minding new Discoueries, set forth a ship at his owne charge from Lisbone; and saying farre North, at last came to a Land, which for the pleasantnesse thereof, he called Greene. The men, as he reported, were barbarous, brown-coloured, very swift, good Archers, clothed in Beasts skins. They liue in Caues or base Cottages, without any Religion, but obserue Sooth-sayings. They vsed Marriages, and were very iealous. Petrus Pasqualigi in a Letter concerning this Voyage, sayth, they brought from thence a piece of a gilded Sword, which seemed to be of Italian workmanship: a child also amongst them ware two siluer-earings, which by the workmanship appeared to bee brought from these parts, perhaps belonging to some of Cabots company. Returning into Portugall hee sayled thitherward againe, Anno 1501. But what became of him, none can tell. His Brother Michael Corteregalis the next yeere set forth two ships to make search for his Brother; but he also was lost. The King Emanuel grieued herewith, sent to enquire of them; but all in vaine. Their Brother Vasco would haue put himselfe on this aduenture, but the King would not suffer him. The name Greene vpon this occasion was withered, and the land was called h Terra Corteregalis. Thus farre Osorius. It reacheth, according to Boterus reckoning to the 60. degree. But finding nothing to his expectation, he laded his ship with slaues, and returned. k At his returne, one that knew his intent was for the Moluccas by that way, inquiring what hee had brought home, was told Esclauos, that is, slaues. Crosses being yet seene on their Graue-stones: Corsehought, where, by authority from the Bishop, they hunted for white Beares: from hence Eastward nothing but Ice and Snow. Westward stood Rodesford, a Dorp well built with a great Church, Waroldale, Peterswicke, Saint Olaffs Monastery, and another of Saint Benets Nuns: here were many warme waters, in the Winter intolerably hot, and medicinable. There was also a Church of Saint Nicholas and many other Parishes and Villages. Discoueries by Sir MARTIN FROBISHER.

SIr Martin Frobisher [n] deserueth the first place, as being the first that in the dayes of Queene Elizabeth, sought the Northwest Passage in three seuerall Voyages. The first whereof was written by Christopher [o] Hall; the second, by Dionise Settle; the third by Thomas Ellis; and all in one Discourse by M. George Best: all which at large, the Reader may find in M. Hakluyts laborious Discouery of Discoueries. To speake briefly what may best befit vs in our Pilgrimage: Sir Martin Frobisher sayled from Blackewall, Iune the fifteenth; and the seuenth of Iuly, [p] had sight of Frisland, but could not get on shore for the abundance of Ice, which was also accompanyed with an extreame fogge, as double gard to that Hand (vncertaine whether to fortifie it, or to imprison them.) The twentieth of Iuly he had sight of and high Land, which he named [q] Queene Elizabeths Fore-land. Here was he much troubled with Ice: but sayling more Northerly, descryed another Fore-land, with a Great Gut, Bay, or Passage, which he entred, calling it Frobishers Straits, supposing it to be the diuision of Asia and America. Hauing entred threescore leagues, hee went on shore, and was encountred with mighty Deere, which ranne at him, with danger of his life. Here had he sight of the Saluages, which rowed to his ship in Boats of Seales skinnes, with a Keele of wood within them, like a Spanish Shallop, saue onely they be flat in the bottome, and sharpe at both ends. They eat raw flesh and fish, or rather deuoured the same; they had long blacke haire, broad faces, flat noses, tawny of colour, or like an Oliue (which neyther Sunne or Wind, but Nature it selfe, imprinted on them, as appeared by their Infants, and seemeth to be the generall Liuery of America.) Their apparell was Seales skins: their women were painted or marked downe the cheekes and about the eyes with blue strakes. These Saluages intercepted fiue of our men, and the Boat: Ours also tooke one of theirs, which they brought into England, where they arriued the second of October [r] 1576. Hee had taken possession of the Countrey in right of the Queene, and commanded his company to bring euery one somewhat, in witnesse of the same. One brought a piece of blacke stone, like Sea-coale, which was found to hold Gold in good quantity. Whereupon a second Voyage was made the next yeere 1577. to bring Ore. And comming to those Straits in Iuly, found them in manner shut vp with a long Mure of Ice, which sometime indangered their ships, especially on the nineteenth of that moneth. They found a great dead fish, round like a Porcpis, twelue foot long, hauing [s] a Horne of two yards, lacking two inches, growing out of the Snout, wreathed and straight, like a Waxe Taper, and might bee thought to be a Sea Vnicorne. It was broken in the top, wherein some of the Saylers said they put Spiders, which presently dyed. It was reserued as a Iewell by the Queenes commandement, in her Wardrobe of Robes, and is still at Windsore to bee seene. They went on shore, and had some encounter with the Inhabitants, which were of so fierce and terrible resolution, that finding themselues wounded, they leapt off the Rockes into the Sea, rather then they would fall into the hands of the English. The rest fled. One woman, with her child, they tooke and brought away. They had taken another of the Sauages before. This Sauage in the ship seeing the Picture of his Countriman taken the yeere before, thought him to be aliue, and beganne to be offended, that he would not answere him, with wonder thinking, that our men could make men liue and dye at their pleasure. But strange were the gestures and behauiour of this man and the woman, when they were brought together; which were put into the same Cabbin, and yet gaue such apparant signes of shamefastnesse and chastity, as might bee a shame to Christians to come so farre short of them.

Where they could haue any Trade with the Sauages, their manner of Traffique was to lay downe somewhat of theirs, and goe their way, expecting, that our men should lay downe somewhat in lieu thereof; and if they like of their Mart, they come againe and take it; otherwise, they take away their owne, and depart. They made signes, that their Catchoe, or King, was a man of higher stature then any of ours, and that he was carried vpon mens shoulders.

They could not learne what became of the fiue men they lost the yeere before; onely they found some of their apparell; which made them thinke they were eaten. They laded themselues with Ore, and so returned. And with fifteene Sayle the next yeere 1578. a third Voyage for Discouery was made by the said Captayne and Generall. Hee went on shore the twentieth of Iune on Frisland, [t] which was named by them West England, where they espyed certayne Tents and People like those of Meta Incognita. The people fled, and they found in their Tents a boxe of small nayles, Red Herrings, and Boords of Firre-tree well cut, with other things artificially wrought: whereby it appeareth, that they are workmen themselues, or haue trade with others. Some of them were of opinion, This was firme land with s Such a horne was brought home two yeeres since, found on shore in Greenland by the Carpenter of Ionas Pooles ship 7. foote & a halfe long, & sold since at Constantinople, reported to be good against poysons: and such a one was taken vp Anno 1588. in the Coast of Norfolke, and sold by an ignorant woman for 18. pence, which was also said to be effectuall against poysons, and was told by M. Rob. Salmon of Leegh, who had a piece of it.

Meta Incognita, or with Gronland; whereunto the multitude of Ilands of Ice, betweene that and Meta Incognita induced them. In departing from hence, the Salamander (one of their Ships) being vnder both her Courses and Bonets, happened to strike on a great Whale with her full stemme, with such a blow, that the Ship stoode still, and neither stirred forward nor backeward. The Whale thereat made a great and hideous noyse, and casting vp his body and tayle, presently sanke vnder water. Within two dayes they found a Whale dead, which they supposed, was this which the Salamander had stricken.

The second of Iuly they entred in with the Straits, the entrance whereof was barred with Mountaines of Ice, wherewith the Barke Dennis was sunke, to the hinderance of their proiects. For in it was drowned part of a house, which they had intended to erect there for habitation. The men were saued. The other Ships were in very great danger, the Seas mustering Armies of ycie souldiers to oppresse them, vsing other naturall stratagems of Fogges and Snowes to further these cruell designes.

These ycie Ilands seeme to haue bin congealed in the winter further North, in some Bayes, u or Riuers, and with the Summers Sunne being loosed, and broken out of their naturall prisons, offer themselues to all outrages, whereto the swift Currents and cold Windes will conduct them. Strange it is to see their greatnesse, some not lesse then halfe a mile about, and fourescore fathomes aboue water, besides the vnknowne depth beneath, (the vsuall rule being, that onely the seuenth part is extant aboue the waues:) strange the multitude; strange the deformed shapes: if this be not more strange, that they sometimes saue with killing, and suffer men to moore their Anchors on them, and to get vpon them to worke against them, for the safegard of their Ships: That bloody enemies should entertaine them with disports, to walke, leape, shout, fortie miles from any Land, without any Vessell vnder them (according to M. Best's Riddle) and a hundred and ten miles from Land, should present them with running streames of fresh Waters, able to driue a Mill. The Flood was there nine houres, the Ebbe but three. A strong Current ranne Westwards. The people resemble much the Tartars, or rather the Samoeds, in apparell, and manner of liuing. It is colder here in 62. then 9. or 10. degrees more Northerly toward the Northeast, which (it seemeth) comes to passe by the Windes, East, and Northeast, which from the ycie bring so intolerable a cold. The people are excellent Archers; a thing generall throughout America. Besides Seales-skins, they vse the skinnes of Deere, Beares, Foxes, and Hares, for apparell, and the cases also of Fowles sowed together. They weare in Summer the hairy side outward; in Winter, inward; or else goe naked. They shoote at the fish with their darts. They kindle fire with rubbing one sticke against another. They vse great blacke Dogs, like Woolues, to draw their Sleds, and a lesse kinde to eate. They haue very thin beards. In the best of Summer, they haue Haile and Snow (sometimes a foote deepe, which freezeth as it falles) and the ground frozen three fathome deepe. They haue great store of Fowle, whereof our men killed in one day fifteen hundred. They haue thicker skins, and are thicker of Downe and Feathers then with vs, and therefore must be flayed. The Sunne was not absent aboue three houres and a halfe: all which space it was very light, so that they might see to write and reade.

Hence is it, that those parts neere the Pole are habitable: the continuance of the Sunnes presence in their Summer, heating and warming with liuely cherishment all Creatures: and in the Winter, by his oblique motion, leauing so long a twilight; and the increased light of x the Moone, the Sunnes great and diligent Lieutenant, the brightnesse of the Starres, and whitenesse of the Snow, not suffering them to be quite forlorne in darkenesse. The Beasts, Fowles and Fishes, which these men kill, are their houses, bedding, meat, drinke, hose, thread shooes, apparell, and sayles, and boates, and almost all their riches. Besides their eating all things raw, they will eate grasse and shrubs, like our kine; and morsels of Ice, to satisfy thirst. They haue no hurtfull creeping things but Spiders; and a kinde of Gnat is there very troublesome. Timber they haue none growing, but as the vndermining water doth supplant & bring them from other places. They are great Inchanters. When their heads ake, they tye a great stone with a string into a sticke, and with certaine words effect, that the stone with all a mans force wil not be lifted vp, and sometimes seemes as light as a feather, hoping thereby to haue help. They made signes, lying groueling with their faces vpon the ground, making a noyse downward, that they worship the Deuill vnder them. There is no flesh or fish which they find dead (smel it neuer so filthily) but they wil eat it, without any other dressing. Their Deere haue skins like Asses, and feet large, like Oxen, which were measured 7. or 8. inches in breadth. There are no Riuers or running Springs, but such as the Sun causeth to come of snow. Sometimes they will perboyle their meate a little, in kettles made of beasts skins, with the bloud & water which they drinke; & lick the bloudy knife with their tongues: This licking is the medicine also for their wounds. They seeme to haue traffike with other Nations: from whom they a small quantity of Iron. Their fire they make of heath & mosse. In their leather Boats they row with one oare faster, then we can in our Boats with all our oares.

u It seemeth they are of fresh waters, because the Ice is fresh, and the Sun melting the tops, causeth rils of fresh water to runne downe, which meeting together, make a prettie streame.

x The Moone setteth not nor the Sun in the Polar regions; being in Cancer. See the Relations of the Dutch wintering in Noua Zembla; in the third part of my Pilgrimes, & W. Hely his reports of lighting Tobacco by the Sun with a Glasse at mid night.

CHAP. III.

Discoueries by IOHN DAVIS, GEORGE WEYMOVTH, and IAMES HALL to the North-West.

MAster Iohn Dauis in the yeere 1585. made his first voyage for the North-west discouery, and in 64. degrees, and 15. minutes, they came on shore on an Iland, where they had sight of the Sauages, which seemed to worship the Sunne. For pointing vp to the Sunne with their hands, they would strike their breasts hard with their hands: which being answered with like action of the English, was taken for a confirmed league, and they became very familiar. They first leaped and danced with a kind of Timbrel, which they strucke with a sticke. Their apparell was of beasts and birds skins, buskins, hose, gloues, &c. Some leather they had which was dressed like the Glouers leather. The 6. of August they discouered land in 66. deg. 40. min. They killed white Beares, one of whose fore-feet was fourteene inches broad, so fat, that they were forced to cast it away. It seemed they fed on the grasse, by their dung, which was like to Horse-dung, they heard Dogs howle on the shore, which were tame: They killed one with a Collar about his necke: hee had a bone in his pisse; these it seemed were vsed to the Sled, for they found two Sleds.

a The voyage of M. Dauis written by Iohn Iames. Hak. fol. 3. p. 800

The next yeere he made his second voyage, wherein hee found the Sauage people tractable. They are great Idolaters, and Witches. They haue many Images which they weare about them, and in their Boats. They found a graue, wherein were many buried couered with Seales skinnes, and a Crosse laid ouer them. One of them made a fire of Turfs, kindled with the motion of a sticke in a piece of a boord, which had a hole halfe thorow, into which hee put many things, with diuers words and strange gestures: our men supposed it to be a sacrifice. They would haue had one of the English to stand in the smoke, which themselues were bidden to doe, and would not by any meanes; whereupon one of them was thrust in, and the fire put out by our men. They are very theeuish. They eate raw fish, grasse, and Ice: and drinke salt-water. Heere they saw a whirlewinde take vp the water in great quantitie, furiously mounting it vp into the ayre, three houres together with little intermission. They found in 63. degrees, 8. minutes a strange quantitie of Ice in one entire masse, so bigge, that they knew not the limits thereof, very high, in forme of land, with Bayes and Capes like high-cliffe-land; they sent their Pinnasse to discouer it, which returned with information, that it was onely Ice. This was the 17. of July, 1586. and they coasted it till the thirtieth of July. In the 66. deg. 33. min. they found it very hot, and were much troubled with a stinging Fly, called Muskito. All the Lands they saw seemed to bee broken, and Ilands; which they coasted Southwards, till they were in foure and fifty and a halfe, and there found hope of a passage. In the same voyage [b] he had sent the Sun-shine from him in 60. degrees which went to Iseland, and on the seuenth of July had sight of the Gronland, and were hindered from harbour by the Ice. They coasted it till the last of July. Their houses neere the Sea-side were made with pieces of wood, crossed ouer with poles, and couered with earth. Our men played at foot-ball with them of the Iland.

b Hen. Margit.

The third voyage was performed the next yeere, 1587. wherein M^r Dauis discouered to the 73. degree, finding the Sea all open, and forty leagues betweene land and land, hauing Groenland (which hath an Iland neere it to the West, for the loathsome view of the shore couered with snow, without wood, earth, or grasse to be seene, and the irkesome noise of the Ice, called Desolation) in 59. on the East, and America on the West. The Spanish Fleet, and the vntimely death of Master Secretarie Walsingham, (the Epitome and summary of Humane worthinesse) hindered the prosecution of these intended Discoueries.

c Iohn Dauis in his Hydrographicall description.

In the yeere 1602. Captain George Weymouth made a voyage of Discouery to the North-west, with two Fly-boats, set forth by the Muscouy Company: saw the South part of Gronland, and had water in 120. fadome, blacke, as thick as puddle, and in a little space cleere, with many such enterchanges. The breach of the Ice made a noise as a thunder-clap, and ouerturning had sunke both their Vessels, if they had not with great diligence preuented it. They had store of Fogges, some freezing as they fell. In 68. deg. 53. min. they encountred an Inlet forty leagues broad, and sailed West and by South in the same, 100. leagues.

Iames Hall An. 1605. sailed to Groenland from Denmarke, and had like encounters of Ice, yeelding in the breach no lesse noise, then if fiue Canons had beene discharged with people also like those, which in Frobishers Voyage are mentioned; they make sailes of guts sowed together, for their fishing Boats, and deceiued the Seales with Seales-skin garments. Groenland is high, Mountainous, full of broken Ilands alongst the Coasts, Riuers nauigable, and good Bayes, full of fish. Betweene the Mountaines are pleasant Plaines and Vallies, such as a man would scarce beleeue. He saw store of Fowle; no beasts but blacke Foxes, and Deere. The people seemed a kind of Samoydes, wandering in Summer by companies for Hunting and Fishing, and remouing from place to place with their Tents and Baggage: they are of reasonable stature, browne, actiue, warlike, eate raw meat, or a little perboyled with bloud, Oyle, or a little water which they drinke: their apparell, beasts of fowles skinnes; the hairy or feathered side outward in Summer, in the Winter inward: their arrowes and darts with two feathers, and a bone-head: they haue no wood but drift: they worship the Sunne.

Anno 1606. He made a second Voyage thither: found their Winter houses built with Whales bones, couered with Earth: and Vaults two yards deepe, vnder the Earth, square. They call Groenland in their language Secannuna. Vp within the Land they haue a King carried on mens shoulders. The next yeere he sailed thither the third time: [a] and in a fourth Voyage [b] 1612. was slaine there by a Sauage, in reuenge (as was thought) for some of the people before shipped from thence. They haue Hares white as snow, with long furre: Dogs which liue on Fish, whose pisles, as also of their Foxes, are bone. Their Summer worke is to dry their Fish on the Rocks. Euery one, both man and woman, haue each of them a Boat, made with long pieces of Firre, couered with Seales skins, sowed with sinewes or guts, about twenty foot long, and two and a halfe broad, like a shittle, so light, that one may carry many of them at once; so swift, that no ship is able with any winde to hold way with them, and yet vse but one oare which they hold by the middle, in the middest of their Boat, [c] broad at both ends, wherewith they row forwards, and backwards at pleasure. Generally they worship the Sunne, to which they pointed at our approach (saith Baffin) striking on their brests, and crying Ilyout, not comming neere till you doe the same. [d] They bury in out-lands on the tops of Hils in the heapes of stones to preserue from the Foxes, making another graue hard by, wherein they place his Bow and Arrowes, Darts, and other his vtensils. They bury them in their apparell, and the cold keepes them from putrefaction.

Anno 1606. Mr Iohn Knights made a North-west voyage, lost his Ship, sunke with Ice, and was with three more of his company surprised by the Sauages: of whose language hee wrot a pretty Dictionary, which I haue seene with M. Hakluyt.

§. V.

Of King IAMES his Newland, alias, Greeneland, and of the Whale and Whale-Fishing.

I Will not heere beginne with records of Discoueries in these parts written two thousand yeeres since, out of which Mr Doctor Dee is reported to haue gathered diuers Antiquities, antiquated by Antiquitie, and rotten with age: nor to shew that King Arthur [e] possessed as farre as Greeneland; nor that Sir Hugh Willoughby discouered hitherto, as some coniecture: but content my selfe with later Discoueries and Obseruations. Much hath been spent both of Cost, Industrie, and Argument about finding a more compendious way to the Indies by the Northwest, and by the North-East, and by the North. Of the first somewhat hath been spoken. Of the second were the Voyages of Master Stephen Burrough, Pet. and Iacman, our Countrey-men, and of the Hollanders in the yeere 1594. and the three following before by vs mentioned in a duer [f] place, as appertaining to Asia: for they found themselues by Astronomicall obseruation in a hundred and twelue Degrees fiue and twenty minutes of Longitude, and threescore and sixteene of Latitude in the place where they wintered. They had touched more Northerly in some parts (as is thought) of Greene-land, sailing along by the Land from fourescore Degrees eleuen minutes, vnto Noua Zemla. I omit their red Geese in one place of this Voyage, their azure-couloured Ice in another place, and the losse of their Ship in the Ice which constrained them to set vp a house to Winter in that Land of Desolation. This building they beganne about the 27. of September (Stilo Nouo) the cold euen then kissing his New-come Tenants so eagerly, that when the Carpenters did but put a naile in their mouths (after their wont) the Ice would hang thereon, and the bloud follow at the pulling out. In December their fire could not heat them, their Sack was frozen, and each man forced to melt his share thereof before he could drinke it, their melted Beere drinking like water. They sought to remedie it with Sea-cole fire, as being hotter then the fire of Wood (which they had store of, though none there growing, by drifts) and stopped the chimney and doores to keep in the heat, but were suddenly taken with a swounding, which had soone consumed them, if they had not presently admitted the aire to their succor. Their shooes did freeze as hard as horns on their feet, and as they sate within doores before a great fire, seeming to burne on the fore-side, behinde at their backs they were frozen white, the Snow meane-whiles lying higher then the house, which sometimes in clearer weather they endeuoring to remoue, cut out steps, & so ascended out of their house as out of a Vault or Seller. They were forced to vse (besides store of cloathes and great fires) stones heated at the fire and applyed to their feet and bodies; and yet were frozen as they lay in their Cabins: yea the cold not onely staid their Clocke, but insulted ouer the fire in some extremities, that it almost cast no heat; so that putting their feet to the fire, they burnt their hose, and discerned that also by the smell, before they could feele the heat. They supposed that a barrell of water would haue been wholly frozen in the space of one night, which you must interpret of their twelue houres glasse; for otherwise they saw no Sunne after the third of November to the 24. of January, reckoning by the new Calendar; a thing strange to be without the Sunne fiftie dayes before the Solstice, which happened after their account on December 23. and yet within forty one dayes after might see the vpper circle of the Sun-rising aboue the Horizon; which made great question, whether their Eyes had deceiued them, or the Computation of time in that long Night: which both being found otherwise by their obseruation and experience, caused no lesse wonder whether this timely approach should be attributed to the reflexion by the [b] water, or the not absolute roundnesse of the Earth in those parts, or the false accounting of the Solstice (or, which some affirme, the falshood of their calculations.) But I leaue this to Philosophers. Our Author affirmes, that when the Sunne had left them, they saw the Moone continually both Day and Night, neuer going downe when it was in the highest Degree, the twi-light also remaining many dayes, and againe they might see some day-light sixteene dayes before they saw the returne of the Sunne. The Beares which had held them besieged, and often endangered them, forsooke them and returned with the Sunne; the white Foxes all that while visited them, of which they tooke many whose flesh was good Venison to them, and their skins in the linings of their Caps good remedies against that extremitie of Cold. As for their feet, they vsed Pattents of wood, with sheepe-skinnes aboue, and many socks or soles vnderneath: they vsed also shooes of Rugge and Felt. These Beares were very large and cruell; some of them yeelding skins thirteene foot long, and a hundred pounds of fat, which serued them for Oyle in their Lampes, the flesh they durst not eate; some of them forfeiting their whole skinnes after they had eaten of the Liuer of one of these eaters, which deuoure any thing, not sparing their owne kinde. For the Hollanders hauing killed one Beare, another carried it a great way ouer the rugged Ice in his mouth in their sight, and fell to eating it; they made to him with their weapons, and chased him from his purchase, but found it halfe eaten, and then foure of them could scarcely carry the other halfe, when as the whole body had been very lightly carried in his fellowes mouth. As for the thin Diet which these Hollanders endured, and other discommodities, together with their returne in two open Scutes, wherein they sailed aboue a thousand miles, after ten moneths continuance in this desolate habitation; their dangers in the Ice which somewhat besieged them like whole Tents, Townes, and Fortifications; and other the particulars of this Voyage, I referre to the Author himselfe. Here I remember thus much for Greene-lands sake, on which in this Nauigation they are said to haue touched. How euer that be, they continued no trade nor Discouerie thither, till the English diuers yeeres after had made a new Discouerie, and found there a profitable Whale-fishing.

[b] M. Scory told me that on the Pike of Tenariffe they might see the Sun an houre sooner by this meanes.

In the yeere 1607. Hen. Hudson discouered these parts to the Latitude of fourescore, there naming a point of Land, Hacklyts Head-land; which name it still beareth. And Ionas Poole in the yeere 1610. was set forth by the Muscouy Company in the Amitie, and discouered diuers Sounds and Harbours here, with the Sea-Horses he killed, and other things found on shore, giuing such good Content to the Aduenturers, that He was by them employed the next yeere in the Elizabeth, with Master Steuen Bennet in the Mary Margaret, both which Ships were vnfortunately cast away; the Men and part of the goods were brought home by Master Marmaduke then there in a Ship of Hull. Ex M.S. W. Baffin.

In the yeere 1612. were set forth three Ships from Holland, and one from Biscay, all hauing English Pilots, besides two sent thither by the Company, called the Sea-Horse and the Whale, vnder the Masters before mentioned. In the yeere 1613. many Ships were thither sent from France, Biskay, Holland, so that the Company addressed thither seuen warlike ships vnder the Command of Master Beniamin Ioseph, who without bloudshed disappointed those Strangers, ready to reape that which others had sowne, and either had not at all discouered, or wholly giuen ouer the businesse. The next yeere 1614. eleuen good Ships, and two Pinasses, were employed to Greeneland, and three more not then ready, appointed to follow vnder the same Generall, which Voyage is in my hands, communicated to mee by my industrious Friend, a skilfull Mariner and Discouerer both in these and other parts, William Baffin, entertained in this Fleet. But the particulars would be (how soeuer profitable to our Mariner) tedious to our ordinarie Reader. They then discouered wel-neere to 81. For beyond that degree, our Author beleeues not that any hath beene. The names of diuers places, as Saddle Iland, Barren Iland. Beare Iland, Red Goose Iland, all betwixt 80. and 81. and Sir Tho: Smiths Inlet, Maudlin Sound, Faire Hauen, Sir Thomas Smiths Bay, Ice Sound, Bell Sound, with other places on or neere the Greater Ile or supposed Continent, I forbeare to recite, as not intending to instruct the Mariner so much as the Scholler. This yeere 1616. were sent thither ten ships, which killed aboue a hundred Whales, as Master Thomas Sherwin imployed therein, related to me. Greeneland is now almost altogether discouered to bee an Iland, or rather many Ilands and broken grounds.

In the Greeneland voyage 1611. from Cherry Iland toward Greeneland, they met with a banke of Ice fortie leagues long: and ranne almost alongst another a hundred and twenty Leagues. At their first comming, all was couered with Snow, at their departure the tops of the Hils and Plaines had receiued a new liuerie of greene Mosse, and a little grasse. The Aire was mistie like night. They found many fat Deere, many white Beares, with white, gray, and dunne Foxes. There was a bird called an Allen, which beats the other birds till they vomit their prey for him to deuoure: and then dismisseth them with little meat in their bellies, or feathers on their backs. They finde Morses, Sea-Vnicornes hornes, white Partriches, Wilde-geese, but not a bush or tree.

In my Pilgrims I haue published many Voyages, and letters of Greenland, written by Ionas Pooley, Rob. Fotherby Tho. Edge, Will. Hely, Robert Salmon Thomas Sherwin, Iames Beuersham, Io. Chambers, I. Catcher, W. Goodiard, &c. Also to Cherry Iland in 74. by Ionas Pooley, Will. Gardin. &c. and to other Northerne parts by Hudson, Playse, Widhouse, &c. to which I referre the more industrious Reader.

I might heere adde diuers Voyages to Cherry Iland, where they haue thousands of Morses, the Teeth and Oyle whereof yeild them no small commoditie. There also are many Beares. I might here recreate your wearied eyes with a hunting spectacle of the greatest chase which Nature yeeldeth, I meane, the killing of the Whale. When they espy him on the top of the water, (which he is forced to for to take breath) they row toward him in a Shallop, in which the Harponier stands ready, with both his hands to dart his Harping-iron, to which is fastened a line of such length, that the Whale (which suddenly, feeling himselfe hurt, sinketh to the bottome, may carry it down with him, being before fitted, that the Shallop be not therewith indangered; comming vp againe they againe strike him with Launces made for that purpose about twelue foot long, the iron eight therof, and the blade eighteene inches: the Harping-iron principally seruing to fasten him to the Shallop: and thus they hold him in such pursuit, till after streames of water, and next that of blood, cast vp into the Aire and Water (as angry with both Elements, which haue brought thither such weak hands to his destruction) he at last yeeldeth his slaine carkasse as meed to the conquerors. They tow him to the Ship with two or three Shallops made fast to one another: and then floating at the sterne of the Ship, they cut the blubber or fat from the flesh, in pieces three or foure foot long, which after at shore are cut smaller, and boiled in coppers: which done, they take them out & put them into wicker baskets, which are set in Shallops halfe full of water, into which the Oyle runneth, and is thence put into buts. This Whale-fishing is yeerely now vsed by our men in Greeneland, with great profit. The ordinarie length of a Whale is sixty foot, and not so huge as Olaus hath written, who maketh the Mors also as bigge as an Elephant.

The proportion of this huge Leuiathan deserues description, as one of the greatest Wonders of the Lord in the deepe, whereon Himselfe so much insisteth (Iob 41. 12.) that he will not conceale his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion. The Whale that here we speake of, is the Great Bay-Whale: for there are many other kinds: the Trompe which hath two Trunkes or breathing holes on his head (whereas the Bay-Whale hath but one) whose braines are said to be the Sperma Cete; the Inbarte, which hath a Fin on his backe dangerous to boats, exceeding swift, and little profitable; besides other kinds. This is the most simple and vsefull; the greater and fatter, the more easily taken. His head is the third part of him; his mouth (O hellish wide) sixteene foot in the opening; and yet out of that belly of Hell yeelding much to the ornaments of our womens backs; the Whale-bones or Finnes being no other then the rough and inner part of the mouth, closing in the shutting thereof, as the fingers of both hands within each other. Of these Finnes are fiue hundred from the length of fourteene foot or more in lesse and lesse proportions; hee hath no teeth, his meat bee sucketh: his tongue is monstrous great, of deformed forme like a Wool-sacke, about eight Tunne weight, and one part thereof vsed to this purpose, yeeldeth from sixe to eleuen Hogs-heads of Oyle. His food (that Nature might teach the Greatest, to be content with little, and that Greatnesse may be maintained without Rapine, as in the Elephant and Whale, the Greatest of Land-Creatures, and Sea-monsters) is grasse and weeds of the Sea, and a kinde of water-worme like a Beetle, whereof the Fins in his mouth hang full, and sometimes little birds; all which striking the water with his Tayle, and making an Eddie, hee gapes and receiueth into his mouth, neither is any thing else (Master Sherwin hath seene them opened, and opened this vnto me) found in their bellies. This Great head hath little eyes like Apples, very little bigger then the Eyes of an Oxe, and a little throat, not greater then for a mans fist to enter; and

and that with huge bones on each side, not admitting it to stretch wider. His body is round, fourteene or sixteene foot thicke: his Pisle hangs from him as a Beasts: in Generation they draw to shallow waters neere the shore, and in the Act ioyne belly to belly as is also said of the Elephant. In their engendering season, much of that matter floteth on the water. They are Swallow-tailed, the extremes being twenty foot distant. They haue but one yong at a time, which is brought forth as in beasts, (Master Sherwin hath seene them in the belly being ripped) about the bignesse, but longer, of a Hogs-head: The Female hath two brests and teats, with white milke in them, not bigger then a mans head, wherewith she suckleth the yong, whereof she, as the Mors also, is very tender. They killed one, and could not get the yong one from it. There hath been made seuen and twenty Tunne, and a pipe of Oyle out of one Whale: ordinarily sixteene Tunnes, but much is wasted for haste in that store. The English are growne as expert in this businesse as the Biscainer. They neuer lost man in this action, but one onely this last yeere.

Of HVDSONS discoueries and death.

HEnry Hudson, 1607. discouered further North toward the Pole, then perhaps any before him. He found himselfe in 80. deg. 23. minutes, where they felt it hot, and dranke water to coole their thirst. They saw land (as they thought) to 82. and further: on the shore they had Snow, Morses teeth, Deeres hornes, Whale-bones, and tooting of other Beasts, with a streame of fresh-water. The next yeere 1608. he set forth on a Discouery to the North-east, at which time they met, as both himselfe and Iuet haue testified, a Mermaid in the Sea, seene by Thomas Hils, and Robert Rainer. Another voyage he made 1609. and coasted New-found-land, and thence along to Cape Cod. His last and fatall voyage was 1610. which I mentioned in my former edition, relating the same as Hesselius Gerardus had guided me, by his card and reports, who affirmeth that he followed the way which Captaine Winwood had before searched by Lumleys inlet, in 61. degrees, so passing thorow the strait to 50. &c. But hauing since met with better instructions, both by the helpe of my painfull friend Master Hakluit, [a] (to whose labours these of mine are so much indebted) and specially from Him, who was a speciall setter forth of the voyage, that learned and industrious Gentleman Sir Dudley Digges (how willingly could I heere lose my selfe in a parenthesis of due praises? to whom these studies haue seemed to descend by inheritance in diuers Descents, improued by proper industry, employed to publike good both at home and in Discoueries and Plantations abroad, and for my particular! but why should I vse words, vnequall pay to him, vnequall stay to thee?) from Him, I say, so great a furtherer of the North-west Discouerie, and of your Discouerer the poore Pilgrim and his Pilgrimage, hauing receiued full relations, I haue beene bold with the Reader to insert this Voyage more largely.

[a] He communicated to me Hudsons abstract Th. Wid. house. Abacuk Pricket, et this voyage.

In the yeare 1610. Sir Tho. Smith, Sir Dudley Digges, and Master Iohn Wostenholme, with other their friends, furnished out the said Henry Hudson, to try if through any of those Inlets, which Dauis saw, but durst not enter, on the Westerne side of Fretum Dauis, any passage might be found to the other Ocean called the South-Sea. There Barke was named the Discouerie. They passed by Island, and saw Mount Heela cast out fire (a noted signe of foule weather towards; others conceiue themselues and deceiue others with I know not what Purgatorie fables hereof confuted by Arngrin Ionas [b] an Islander, who reproueth this and many other dreames related by Authors, saying, that from the yeere 1558. to 1592. it neuer cast forth any flames) they left the name to one harbour in Island, Lousy Bay: they had there a Bath hot enough to scald a fowle. They raised Gronland the fourth of Iune, and Desolation after that; whence they plyed North-west among Ilands of Ice, whereon they might runne and play, and filled sweet water out of Ponds therein: some of them aground in sixe or seuen score fadome water, and on diuers of them Beares, and Partriches. They gaue names to certaine Ilands, of Gods mercy, Prince Henries forland, K: Iames his Cape, Q. Annes Cape. One morning in a Fogge they were carried by a set of the Tide from the N. E. into one of the Inlets aboue mentioned, the depth whereof and plying forward of the Ice, made Hudson hope it would proue a through-fare. After he had sailed herein by his computation 300. leagues West, he came to a small strait of two leagues ouer, and very deepe water, through which he passed betweene two Headlands, which he called, that on the South, Cape Wostenholme, the other to the N. W. Digges Iland in deg. 62. 44. minutes, into a spacious Sea, wherein he sayled aboue a hundred leagues South, confidently proud that he had won the passage.

Hudſons wintering.

But finding at length by ſhole water that he was embayed, he was much diſtracted therewith, and committed many errours, eſpecially, in reſoluing to winter in that deſolate place, in ſuch want of neceſſarie prouiſion. The third of Nouember, he moored his Barke in a ſmall Coue, where they had all vndoubtedly periſhed, but that it pleaſed God to ſend them ſeuerall kinds of kinds of Fowle; they killed of white Partridges aboue a hundred and twentie doozen: Theſe left them at the Spring, and other ſucceeded in their Place, Swan, Gooſe, Teale, Ducke, all eaſie to take; beſides the bleſſing of a Tree, which in December bloſſomed, with leaues greene and yellow, of an Aromaticall ſauour, and being boyled, yeelded an Oyly ſubſtance, which proued an excellent Salue, and the decoction being drunke, proued as wholſome a Potion, whereby they were cured of the Scorbute, Sciaticas, Crampes, Conuulſions and other diſeaſes which the coldneſſe of the Climate bred in them. At the opening of the yeere alſo, there came to his Ships ſide ſuch aboundance of Fiſh of all ſorts, that they might therewith haue fraught themſelues for their returne, if Hudſon had not too deſperately purſued the Voyage, neglecting this oportunitie of ſtoring themſelues with fiſh, which hee committed to the care of certaine careleſſe, diſſolute Villaines, which in his abſence conſpired againſt him; in few dayes, the fiſh all forſooke them. Once a Sauage viſited them, who for a knife, glaſſe, and beads giuen him, returned with Beuers skins, Deeres skins, and a Sled. At Hudſons returne, they ſet ſayle for England. But in few dayes, their victuals being almoſt ſpent, and hee out of his deſpaire, letting fall ſome words of ſetting ſome on ſhore, the former Conſpirators (the chiefe whereof, was Hen. Greene, none of their allowed Company, but taken in by Hudſon himſelfe; and one Wilſon) entred his Cabin in the night, and forced him the Maſter, together with his ſonne Iohn Hudſon, Tho. Widowes, Arn. Ludlo, Sidraoh Faner, Ad. Moore, Hen. King, Mic. Bute, to take Shallop and ſeeke their fortune. But ſee what ſinceritie can doe in the moſt deſperate tryals: One Philip Staffe, an Ipſwich man, who according to his name, had beene a principall ſtaffe and ſtay to the weaker and more enfeebled courages of his Companions in the whole action, lightening and inlightening their drooping darkened ſpirits, with ſparkes from his owne reſolution; their beſt Purueyor, with his Peece on ſhore, and both a skilfull Carpenter and lufty Mariner on boord; when hee could by no perſwaſions, ſeaſoned with teares, diuert them from their diuelliſh deſignes, notwithſtanding, they entreated him to ſtay with them, yet choſe rather to commit himſelfe to Gods mercy in the forlorne Shallop, then with ſuch Villaines to accept of likelier hopes.

A ſtrange tree.

These were the worſt, or weakeſt of the Company.

A few dayes after, their victuals being ſpent, the ſhip came aground at Digges Iland, and ſo continued diuers houres, till a great flood (which they by this accident tooke firſt notice of) came from the Weſtward, and ſet them on flote. Vpon the Cliffes of this Iſland they fonnd aboundance of Fowles tame, whereof they tooke two or three hundred, and ſeeing a greas long Boat with forty or fifty Sauages vpon the ſhore, they ſent on Land; and for ſome of their toyes, had Deeres skinnes well dreſſed, Morſe-teeth, and ſome few Furres. One of our men went on land to their Tents, one of theirs remaining for hoſtage, in which Tents they liued by hoords, men, women, and children; they are bigge-boned, broad-faced, flat-noſed, and ſmall-footed, like the Tartars: their Apparell of skinnes, but wrought all very handſomely, euen Gloues and Shooes. The next morning, Greene would needs goe on ſhore with ſome of his chiefe companions, and that vnarmed, notwithſtanding, ſome aduiſed and intreated him the contrary. The Sauages entertained him with a cunning ambuſh, and at the firſt onſet ſhot this mutinous Ringleader into the heart, (where firſt, thoſe thoſe Monſters of treacherie and bloody crueltie, now payed with the like, had beene conteiued) end Wilſon his brother in euill, had the like bloody inheritance, dying ſwearing and curſing: Perſe, Thomas, and Moter, dyed a few dayes after of their wounds. Euery where can Diuine Iuſtice finde Executioners.

A floud from the Weſt, a very proble argument of an open paſſage to the South Sea.

And ſo are their weapons, and arts, being farre beyond other Sauages.

See his Relation of the third part of my Pilgrims with others many for theſe parts.

The Boat by Gods bleſſing, with ſome hurt men eſcaped in this manner. One Abacucke Pricket, (a ſeruant of Sir Dudley Digges, whom the Mutiners had ſaued, in hope to procure his Maſter, to worke their pardon) was left to keepe the Shallop, where he ſate in a gowne, ſicke and lame, at the ſterne: vpon whom, at the inſtant of the ambuſh, the leader of all the Sauages leapt from a Rocke, and with a ſtrange kinde of weapon, a indented, broad and ſharpe, of bright ſteele, riueted into a handle of Morſe-tooth, gaue him diuers cruell wounds, before hee could from vnder his gowne draw a ſmall Scottiſh-Dagger, wherewith at one thruſt into his ſide, he killed this Sauage, and brought him off with the Boat, and ſome of the hurt company that got to him by ſwimming. Being got aboord with a ſmall weake and wounded company, they made from this Iſland vnto the Northerne Continent, where they ſaw a large opening of the Sea North-Weſt-ward, and had a great floud, with ſuch a large Billow, as they ſay, is no where but in the Ocean. From hence, they made all poſſible haſte home-wards, paſſing the whole Straits, and ſo home, without euer ſtriking ſayle or any other let, which might easily haue made it impossible. For their best sustenance left them, was Sea-weeds fryed with Candles ends; and the skins of the Fowles they had eaten. Some of their men were starued, the rest all so weake, that onely one could lye along vpon the Helme and steere. By Gods great goodnesse, the sixt of September 1611. they met with a Fisherman of Foy, by whose meanes they came safe into England.

Of BVTTONS and BAFFINS late Discoueries.

THis newes so incouraged the Aduenturers, that by the gracious assistance of that Starre of the North (Illustrious Sonne of Britaines brightest Sunne, and in his prescience shining with beauteous beames in this, and euen to that further Hemisphere; but with speedier setting, raised aboue the Sunne, and Spheres, and Starres, to discouer the Straits, and passage to a better World, there to shine with light vnspeakeable, in the fruition of that light inaccessible, with the Father of Lights and Sunne of Righteousnesse: For how could a worldly Kingdome, though the Kingdome of the World, deserue so good, so great a spirit to rule it? but these my words are too short an Epitaph; his owne Name, euen after death, speakes more, and proclaimeth in a few Letters al humane Greatnesse, Great Britaines great hope, PRINCE HENRY.) the Aduenturers I say (whom my weaker eyes, dazled with this greater Light, could scarce recouer) by this Princely assistance, pursued the action in more Royall fashion, with greater shipping, vnder the command of a Worthy Sea-man, seruant to Prince HENRY, Captaine Thomas Button, whose Discouerie of a great Continent, called by him New-Wales, and other accidents of his Voyage, I haue not seene: onely I haue seene a Chart of those discouered places, and I heare that he passed Hudsons Straits, and leauing Hudsons Bay to the South, sailed aboue two hundred Leagues South-West-Ward, ouer a Sea aboue fourescore fathoms deepe, without sight of Land, which at length, hee found to be another great Bay. And after much misery of sicknesse in his wintering, notwithstanding he was forced to quit the great ship, hee beat and searched the whole Bay, with very great industrie, euen backe againe almost to Digges Iland: neere which hee found the commingin of the great and strong tyde from the North-West; [b] which feeds both those huge Bayes. This seemed strange, that in this Voyage, as he searched many Leagues East & West, he found the variation of the Compasse to rise and fall in an admirable proportion, as if the true Magneticall Pole might be discouered.

Sir Th. Button is very confident of a passage by the North West into the South sea, as appeares by his Relations in the end of the fourth Booke of the third part of my Pilgrims. Where also Mr Brigs his Map, the letters of Mr Lock, and Iuan de Fuca, the testimonie of Th. Cowles, &c. further proue the same.

b This was after found otherwise, the error growing by his meeting of Bylet, and asking of the flood at this Iland, which hee said was eight of the clock, whereas it was about eleuen, Baffin & Ex Relat. W. Baff. 1625.

The commingin of the flood from the Northwest, giuing them hopes of a passage, in March 1614. Captaine Gibbins was employed on this Discouerie, in the Discouerie (so was the ship called) but without any great discouerie that I haue heard of. Persisting in their purpose, the next yeere [c] Robert Bylet, one which had beene in three former Voyages, was sent forth in that ship as Master, and William Baffin his Mate, with foureteene other Men and two Boyes; which hauing England about the latter end of March, stayed at Silly till the seuenth of April, and were forced to put backe to Padstow in Cornwall: but weighing Anchor on the nineteenth, on the sixt of May, saw land on the Coast of Groen-land, on the East-side of Cape Farewell. On the first of Iune, they came into a good Harbour, on the N. W. side of the Iland of Resolution (which is at the entrance into Hudsons Strait) in 61. degrees, 45. minutes. On the eight, they came to Sauage Ilands (in 62. degrees, 30. minutes, threescore Leagues from the entrance) so called of some people, they found in a Canow; they were at their Tents also, and found among other things a little bagge with many small images of men therein, and one of a woman with a child at her backe. The Tents were couered with Seales skinnes, and about them some forty Dogs ranne vp and downe, most of them muzzled, as bigge as Mungrel-Mastiues, of a blended blacke colour, looking almost like Wolues: these they vse to draw their sleds ouer the ice, with collars and furniture fitting, their sleds also being shod or lined with fish-bones. The people are like those in Groenland, but not so neat and cruill, ranging vp and downe, as their fishing is in season; vncertaine where they keepe in Winter. The Master was confident in this and other places, that the flood came from the West, which Baffin saith, by the floating of the ice, he obserued on land, to be contrarie: onely the Ilands caule by their diuers points, differing Sects and Eddie. On the two and twentieth of Iune, he obserued the Longitude, hauing faire light of the Sunne and Moone, and found himselfe by Astronomicall account, 74. degrees, 5. minutes West from the Meridian of London: which if some studious Mariners would practise in their remote Voyages, wee should soone haue a farre more perfect Geographie. ſieges, ſometimes ſcarſly leauing them ſpace to dip a paile of water. They called one place in 65. latitude, and 85. degrees and 20. minutes long. Cape Comfort, for the hopes they apprehended of a paſſage, which ſoone they found to be fruſtrate. Hence they paſſed to Sea-horſe Cape, (ſo named of the plenty of Morſes) and fifteene leagues thence to Nottingham Iland, and thence to Digs his * Iland, in all thoſe places obſeruing the floud come from the South-eaſt, Captaine Button and Hudſons men being all deceiued, as this our Authour affirmeth: other Ilands ſometimes keeping off the force of the tyde, or by eddies, cauſing an obſcurity and their errour. We will therefore leaue that ſpacious Sea called Buttons Bay, with the great Ilands, and ſome places not yet perfectly diſcouered, within and beyond that Streat of Hudſon, and come to Baffins Bay, ſo diſcouered to be.

* At this Ile are ſtore of fowles called Willockes, whereof they might haue killed thouſands.

1616. Sir T. Smith. Sir D. Digs. M. Woſtenholme. Ald. Ianes, &c. a W. Baffin.

This laſt yeere 1616. at the charges of the worthy Aduenturers before mentioned, in the ſame ſhip, by the ſame Maſter, a the ſame, both their Pilot and ours. The firſt land they ſaw, after their departure from England, was in Fretum Dauis on the Coaſt of Groenland, in 65. degrees 20. minutes. On the fourteenth of May, where they ſaw people. But they plyed to the North, till they were in 70. degrees 20. minutes. The people fled from them. Here they tooke in freſh water, but doubted the paſſage, becauſe the tydes were ſmall, not aboue eight or nine foot, and vncertayne, the floud from the South. On the ſix and twentieth day, they found a dead Whale floting, and got from the roofe of her mouth 160. of thoſe fynnes or Whale-bones, but could not get the reſt by reaſon of foule weather following. On the firſt of Iune, they put in among diuers Ilands; the people forſooke their Seale-skin-tents and fled; ſome women they found, whom they kindly intreated, giuing them pieces of Iron, for which they returned Seales skins and the fat or blubber of them: as for our meate, taſting, they would not ſwallow it. They called the place the Womens Ilands, in 72. degrees and 45. minutes, the floud comes from the South: and the moſt of their food is the fleſh of Seales dryed and eaten raw: they cloth themſelues with the skins, whereof they alſo make couerings for their Tents and Boats, dreſſing them very well. The Women differ in their apparell from the Men, razing their skins with ſharpe Inſtruments, and putting thereon an indelible blacke colour, marking their faces with diuers blacke lines. They haue a kind of deuotion to the Sunne, which continually they will point vnto, and ſtrike their hand on their breſt, Crying, Ylyout. They bury their dead on the ſide of the Hils where they liue, which is commonly on ſmall Ilands, making a pile of ſtones ouer them, yet not ſo cloſe but that the corps may be diſcerned the piercing ayre keeping them from ſtinke: their Dogges alſo they bury in the ſame manner. They came to other Ilands in 74. degrees, 4. minutes, which vſe to be much frequented with people in the latter part of the yeere, as it ſeemeth by the houſes made of ſtones and turfe, round like Ouens, with doores to the South; but they were not yet come, Iune the ninth. The floud ariſeth not aboue fiue or ſixe foot; the ebbe runnes ſtronger by the abundance of melted Snow.

Womens Ilands.

On the fifteenth day, in the latitude of 73. degrees 45. minutes, came forty two of the Inhabitants to them in Boats, and gaue them Seales skins, and many pieces of the bone or horne of the Sea-Vnicorne, and ſhewed them pieces of Morſes teeth. They receiued in exchange ſmall pieces of Iron, Glaſſe, Beades, and the like: thus they did foure times: the place they called Horne Sound.

On the third of July, they paſſed by a faire Cape in 76. degrees 35. minutes, which they named Sir Dudley Digs his Cape. Twelue leagues beyond is Wolſtenholme Sound, a fit place for killing of Whales. Proceeding a little further, they found themſelues embayed. One place they called Whale Sound of their abundance in 77. degrees and 30. minutes. Hakluyts Iland is neere, and Sir Thomas Smyths Sound in 78. degrees. The Compaſſe there varieth aboue 56. degrees to the Weſtward, ſo that a North-eaſt and by Eaſt of the Compaſſe is the true North; which hath not beene obſerued ſo much varied in any part of the World. Putting off to the Weſt ſide of the Bay, they gaue names to Alderman Ianes his Sound, and that of Sir Iames Lancaſter: and in their returne recouered their ſicke men, by Scuruy-graſſe or Cochlearia (which they found on a little Iland in great plenty) boyled in Beere, and eaten in Sallads with Orpine and Sorrell, and ſo returned home. Thus wee ſee, Fretum Dauis is no paſſage but a Bay, and vncertaine, what that of Hudſon is, the moſt of which is diſcouered impaſſible. Yet Hopes are not quite extinct: we muſt expect Gods pleaſure, and future Diſcoueries for this paſſage. It ſeemes that moſt of all thoſe Seas in the North parts beyond New-found-land are intermixed with Ilands, a Maze and Labyrinth to the Diſcouerer. In this Voyage and Bay they ſaw many of thoſe fiſhes called Sea-Vnicornes, ſuch as wee haue mentioned in Sir Martin Frobiſhers Nauigation; ſome of which fiſhes are twelue or ſixteene foot long, the horne ſeeming to hold the proportion of two thirds in length to their bodies: and of theſe, it ſeemes are thoſe in Venice and other places, reſerued as great Iewels. Greater Iewels are thoſe Merchants and Mariners, which to the glory of our Nation, ſpare no coſt, and feare no dan-danger in these their attempts: Resolute, gallant, glorious attempts! which thus seeke to tame Nature, where she is most vnbridled, in those Northeasterly, Northwesterly & Northerly Borders (where she shewes her selfe an Borderer indeed) and to subdue her to that gouernment and subiection, which God ouer all blessed for euer, hath imposed on all sensible creatures to the nature of Man, resembling in one Image and abridgment, both God and the World, consisting of a spirituall and bodily, visible and inuisible subsistence. How shall I admire your Heroike courage, yee Marine Worthies beyond all names of worthinesse? that neyther dread so long, eyther presence or absence of the Sunne; nor those foggie mysts, tempestuous winds, cold blasts, Snowes and Haile in the Ayre: nor the vnequall Seas, which might amaze the hearer, and amate the beholder, where the Tritons and Neptunes selfe would quake with chilling feare, to behold such monstrous Icie Ilands, renting themselues with terrour of their owne massines, and disdayning otherwise both the Seas soueraignty, and the Suns hotnest violence, mustering themselues in those watery Plaines, where they hold a continual ciuill warre, and rushing one vpon another, make windes and waues giue backe; seeming to rent the eares of others, whiles they rent themselues with crashing and splitting their congealed Armours: nor the riggid ragged face of the broken Lands, sometimes towring themselues in a lofty height, to see if they can find refuge from those snowes and colds that continuall beate them, somtimes hiding themselues vnder some hollow Hilles or Cliffes, sometimes sinking and shrinking into Valleyes, looking pale with snowes, and falling in frozen and dead swounds; [z] sometimes breaking their necks into the Sea, rather imbracing the waters, then the Ayres, cruelty; and otherwhile with horrible Earthquakes, in heat of indignation shaking asunder, to shake off this cold and heauy yoke. Great God, to whom all names of greatnesse are little, and lesse then nothing, let me in silence admire and worship thy greatnesse are little, and lesse then nothing, let mee in silence admire and worship thy greatnesse, that in this little Heart of man (not able to serue a Kite for a breake-fast) hast placed such greatnesse of spirit, as the World is too little to fill: only Thy selfe the Prototype, and Samplar of this Modell, canst with thine owne selfe, becomming all in all vnto vs, fill and more then satisfie. Thee I beseech, to prosper in this and like attempts, this Nation of ours, that as in greater light then to Others, thou hast giuen vs thy Sonne, so with him thou wilt giue all things; euen this among other blessings that thy Virgin Truth, by Virginian Plantation, or Northerly Discouery, may triumph in her conquests of Indian infidelity, maugre the brags of that Adultéresse, that vaunteth her selfe to be the only Darling of God and Nature.

y As borderers are most vnruly and lawlesse: so in these outborders of the World, the power of Natures greatest Officers, the Sun, &c. is least seene.

z These things agree with the Relations of those parts, which tell of Earthquakes, breaking of Cliffes, &c. Botcrus a zealous and slanderous Catholike, vseth these disgraceful speeches of this discouery. Ma pare, che la Natura si sia opposta à gli heretici, e à disegni loro, part. 1. lib. 5.

English Discoueries and Plantations in Newfoundland.

LEauing those vnknowne and frozen Lands and Seas; (although there is yet knowne no frozen [a] Sea, otherwise then as you haue heard) let vs draw somwhat neerer the Sunne, gently marching, as the situation of Regions shall direct vs, lest if we should suddenly leape from one extremitie to another, wee should rather exchange then auoid danger. And here we haue by Land Saguenay, and many Countries of Canada, which the French haue stiled by a new name of New France: and by the Sea the Ilands many in number, and much frequented for their plenty of fish, commonly called Newfoundland; which name some ascribe to an Ile, others to diuers Ilands, and broken Lands which the French call Bacalos, vpon the gulfe and entrance of the great Riuer called Saint Lawrence, in Canada. This Riuer some [b] call the Strait of the three Brethren, some [c] Saint Lawrence, and others [d] Canada. It farre exceedeth any Riuer of the elder World. It beginneth, sayth Iaques Cartier, beyond the Iland of Assumption, ouer-against the high Mountaynes, of Honbuedo, and of the seuen Ilands. The distance a The Northerne Seas may be called frozen, in respect of the Icie Ilands, which by their freshnesse manifest themselues to proceed of fresh waters: no experience yet shewing nor reason conuincing, that the ocean (alway salt and mouing) is any where frozen: as my Learned Friend M. Brigs (a great Mathematician) also affirmeth, and Merula Cos. l. 3. c. 5. b *Edw. ſtance from one ſide to the other, is about fiue and thirtie, or forty leagues. In the middeſt it is aboue [e] two hundred fathome deepe. There are great ſtore of Whales and Sea-horſes. From the entrance vp to Hochelaga is three hundred leagues. Many Ilands are before it, offering of their good nature to be mediators betweene this haughty ſtreame and the angry Ocean: many others all alongſt his paſſage he holdeth in his louing vnlouely lap, waſhing and hugging them with his ruder imbracings. The former are vſually frequented, and were firſt diſcouered by the Engliſh, the other by the French. Of Sebaſtian Cabot, his proceeding this way is ſpoken already.

Robert Thorne [f] in a Treatiſe of his before mentioned, affirmeth that his Father, and one Maſter Eliot were the Diſcouerers of the Newfoundland, and exhorted King Henry 10 vndertake the ſearch of the Indies by the Pole, which he held to be nauigable. Vpon this motion, 1527. the King ſent two ſhips (as Hall and [g] Grafton mention in their Chronicles) one of which ſhips was caſt away about the North parts of Newfoundland; the other ſhaping her courſe towards Cape Briton and the Coaſts of Arambec (or as ſome call it Norumbega) returned home.

Iohn Rut wrote a Diſcourſe hereof to the Honourable Kings Grace of England (that I may borrow his owne words) wherein he declareth their coaſting and the height of ſome places, as Cape Bas, in 52. degrees and 25. leagues; thence Cape Ras, &c. They found there eleuen Sayle of Normans, one Briton, and two Portugall Barkes fiſhing. Albertus de Prato, another of them, wrote another Iournall to Cardinall Wolſey. More tragicall was the ſucceſſe [h] of Maſter Hores company, which ſet out nine yeeres after in this Diſcouery, but by famine were brought to ſuch extremities, that many of the company were murthered and eaten by their fellowes. And thoſe which returned were ſo altered, that Sir William Buts, a Norfolke Knight, and his Lady, knew not their Sonne Maſter Thomas Buts one of this ſtarued number, but by a ſecret marke, namely a Wart, which Nature had ſealed on one of his knees. The commodities and qualities of Newfoundland, are related [i] by Maſter Parkhurſt, Maſter Hayes, Sir Geo. Peckham, Stephen Parmenius, Richard Clarke, Maſter Chriſtopher Carlile, all whoſe Diſcourſes and experiments hereof, Maſter Hakluyt hath collected and beſtowed on the World. The North-part is inhabited, the South is deſart, although fitter for habitation. Beſides the abundance of Cod, heere are Herrings, Salmons, Thornbacke, Oyſters and Muſkles with Pearles, Smelts and Squids, which two ſorts come on ſhore in great abundance, fleeyng from the deuouring Cod, out of the frying-pan into the fire. It is thought that there are Buffes, and certayne, that there are Beares and Foxes, which before your face will rob you of your fiſh or fleſh.

Before they come at Newfoundland by fifty leagues, they paſſe the banke: ſo they call certayne high ground, as a veine of Mountaynes, rayſing themſelues vnder the water, about ten leagues in breath, extending to the South infinitely, on which is 30. fathome water, before and after 200. Sir Hum. Gilbert tooke poſſeſſion thereof, by vertue of her Maieſties Commiſſion. Anno 1583. It is within Land a goodly Countrey, naturally beautified with Roſes, ſowne with Peaſe, planted with ſtately trees, and otherwiſe diuerſified both for pleaſure and profit. And now our Engliſh Nation doe there plant and fixe a ſetled habitation: a chiefe Actor and Author of which buſineſſe is Maſter Iohn Guy of Briſtow: who in the yeere 1608. ſayled from Briſtow in three and twenty dayes to Conception Bay [k] in Newfoundland. Of this Plantation and their wintrings, and continuance there I haue ſeene diuers Relations with Maſter Hakluyt, written by Maſter Guy, William Colſton, &c.

In the yeere 1611. in October and Nouember, they had ſcarſly ſixe dayes froſt or ſnow, which preſently thawed, the reſt of thoſe moneths being warmer and dryer then in England: December was alſo faire, with ſome Froſt, Snow, and Raine. The winde in theſe three moneths variable, from all parts. Ianuary and February was moſt part Froſt to mid-March: the wind moſt commonly Weſterly, and ſometimes from the North. The Sunne often viſited them with warme and comfortable rayes, chaſing away the Snow, and not ſuffering the Brookes to be frozen ouer three nights with Ice able to beare a Dogge. The Snow was neuer (except in drifts) aboue eighteene inches deepe. They had there, [l] Filberds, Fiſh, Makerels, Foxes, in the winter: Partridges, white in the winter, in Summer ſomewhat like ours, but greater; they are much afraid of Rauens: They killed a Wolfe with a Maſtiue and a Grey-hound. Eaſtons piracies were ſome trouble to them.

Anno 1612. They found houſes of Sauages, which were nothing but poles ſet round and meeting in the top, ten foot broad, the fire in the middeſt, couered with Deeres skins. They are of reaſonable ſtature, beardleſſe, and in conditions like to thoſe which Sir Martin Frobiſher diſcouered: broad-faced, ful-eyed, coloured on their faces and apparell with red Oker. Their Boats of Barke, as in Canada, twenty foot long, foure and a halfe broad, not weighing 100. weight, made in forme of a new Moone, which carry foure men, and are by them carried ried to all places of their remoouings. Their Patent was granted 1610. for Plantation betweene forty six and fifty two, to bee gouerned by a Councell of twelue and a Treasurer. There wintered 1612. 54. men, six women and two children. They killed there, Beares, Otters, Sables: sowed Wheat, Rie, Turneps, Coleworts. Their Winter till Aprill 1613. was dry, and cleere with some frost and snow. Diuers had the Scuruy, whereto their Turneps, there sowne, were an excellent remedie, no lesse then Cartiers Tree hereafter mentioned. April was worse then the midst of Winter, by reason of East-winds which came from the Ilands of Ice, which the current bringeth at that time from the North. The same I haue seene confirmed by a letter of Thomas Dermer, one of that Colony, dated at Cupers Coue, the ninth of September last, 1616. In other moneths, he saith, the temperature is as in England. He mentions Muske-cats and Musk-rats in those parts; the fertilitie of the soyle in producing Pease, Rie, Barly and Oates; probabilities of Metals; with promises of more ful Relations hereafter.

Master Richard Whitborne hath lately published a Book of his Voyages to Newfoundland and obseruations there, with certaine Letters also touching the new Plantations by English, therein at the charges of Sir George Caluard, written by Edward Winne, N.H. &c.

The Voyages and Obseruations of IAQVIES CARTIER in Noua Francia.

NEere to Newfoundland in 47. degrees, is great killing of the Morse or Sea-oxe. [a] In the Ile of Ramea, one small French ship, in a small time killed fifteene hundred of them. They are as great, or greater then Oxen, the Hide dressed, is twice as thicke as a Buls hide: It hath two teeth like Elephants, but shorter, about a foot long, growing downwards out of the vpper iaw, and therefore lesse dangerous, dearer sold then Iuory, and by some reputed an Antidote, not inferiour to the Vnicornes horne. The young ones are as good meate as Veale, which the old will defend, holding them in her armes or forefeet. And with the bellies of fiue of the said fishes (if so wee may call these Amphibia, which liue both on land and water) they make an Hogshead of traine Oyle. Their skins are short-haired like Seales; their face is like a Lions, and might more fitly haue bin termed Sea-Lions, then Sea-horses, or Sea-oxen; they haue foure feet; no eares; the hornes are about halfe an ell in length: they vse to lye on the Ice a sunning, and are sooneſt killed with a blow on the fore-head. Some of our English ships haue attempted this enterprize for the killing of the Morse, but not all with like successe, nor with so good as reported of Cherry Iland. At Brions Iland is such abundance of Cods, that Master [b] Leighs company with foure hookes in little more then an houre, caught 250. of them. Neere to the same in the Gulfe of S. Lawrence, are three, termed the Ilands of Birds: the soyle is sandy red, but by reason of many Birds on them, they looke white. The birds sit as thicke, as stones lie in a paued street: or to vse Iaques [c] Cartiers comparison, as any field or Medow is of grasse. Two of these Ilands are steepe and vpright as any wall, that it is not possible to clime them. On the other, which is in 49. degrees 40. minutes, and about a league in circuit, they killed, and filled two Boats [d] in lesse then halfe an houre. Besides them which they did eate fresh, euery ship did powder fiue or six barrels of them. There are an hundred fold as many houering about, as within the Iland. Some are as bigge as Iayes, blacke and white, with beakes like vnto Crowes: their wings are no bigger then halfe ones hand, and therefore they cannot flye high, yet are they as swift neere the water, as other Birds, they are very fat: these they called Aponatz, a lesser kind which there aboundeth, they named Godetz: A bigger, and white, which bite like Dogs, they termed Margaulx. Although it be 14. leagues from the Mayne, yet Beares swim thither to feast with these Birds. One they saw as great as a Kow, saith Cartier, and as white as a Swan, which they did kill and eate, and the flesh was as good as of a two yeere old Calfe. About the Port of Brest, they found so many Ilets, as they were impossible to bee numbred, continuing a great space.

The Iland of Assumption, [e] by the Sauages called Natiscotec, standeth in 49. degrees. The Sauages dwell in houses made of Fir-trees, bound together in the top, and set round like a Doue-house. This, as before is said, is at the entry of the Riuer into the Gulfe of Saint Lawrence. The bankes of this Riuer are inhabited of people that worship the Deuill, and sometimes sacrifice to him their owne bloud. [f] Francis the first, King of France, sent thither Iames Breton; and Henry his Sonne, Nicolas Villagagnon: but the greatest riches they found, were the Diamonds of Canada, and those of small value for their brittlenesse. Thus Boterus. Ia-

g Iaq. Cart. Iaques g Cartier made three Voyages into these parts. First, in the yeere 1534. Then was hee gladly welcommed of the Sauages, singing, dancing, and expressing other signes of ioy, as rubbing his armes with their hands, and then lifting him vp to Heauen, giuing all to their naked skin (though all were worse then nothing) for the trifles hee gaue them. They were naked, sauing their priuities which were couered with a skin, and certaine old skinnes they cast vpon them. Some they saw, whose heads were altogether shauen, except one bush of haire which they suffer to grow vpon the top of their crowne, as long as a Horse-tayle, and tyed vp with leather strings in a knot. They haue no dwelling but their Boats, which they turne vpside downe, and vnder them lay themselues along on the bare ground. They eate their flesh and fish almost raw, only a little heated on the coales. The next yeere Captaine h Cartier returned, and carried backe two Sauages, which hee before had carried into France to learne the language. He then passed vp to Hochelaga i. They found Rats which liued in the water, as bigge as Conies, and were very good meate. Hochelaga is a Croie round, compassed about with timber, with three courses of Rampiers one within another, framed sharpe, about two rods high. It hath but one gate, which is shut with piles and barres. There are in it about fifty great houses, and in the midst of euery one a Court, in the middle whereof they make their fire. Before they came there, they were forced to leaue their boats behind, because of certaine fals, and heard that there were three more higher vp the streame, towards Sanguenay, which in his k third Voyage were discouered.

Concerning the Religion in these parts of Canada, euen amongst the Sauages wee finde some tracts and foot-prints thereof, which neither the dreadfull Winters haue quite frozen to death, nor these great and deepe waters haue wholly drowned, but that some shadow thereof appeareth in these shadowes of Men, how soeuer wild and sauage, like to them which giue her entertainment. This people beleeueth, saith Iaques l Cartier, in one which they call Cudruaigni, who, say they, often speakes to them, and tels them what weather will follow, whether good or bad. Moreouer, when hee is angry with them, hee casts dust into their eyes.

l Iaq. Cart. 2. cap. 10.

They beleeue that when they die, they goe into the Stars, and thence by little and little descend downe into the Horizon euen as the Starres doe, after which they goe into certaine greene fields, full of goodly, faire, and precious trees, flowres, and fruits. The Frenchmen told them, Cudruaigni was a Deuill, and acquainted them with some mysteries of the Christian Religion, whereupon they condescended and desired Baptisme, the French excused, and promised after to bring Priests for that purpose. They liue in common together, and of such commodities as their Countrey yeeldeth, they are well stored. They wed two or three wiues a man, which, their husbands being dead, neuer marrie againe, but for their widowes liuery, weare a blacke weed all the dayes of their life, besmearing their faces with coale-dust and grease mingled together, as thicke as the backe of a Knife. They haue a filthy and detestable vse in martying their Maydens, first putting them (being once of lawfull age to marry) in a common place, as Harlots, free for euery man that will haue to doe with them, vntill such time as they find a match. I haue seene houses as full of such Prostitutes, as the Schooles in France are full of children. They there vse much misrule, riot, and wantonnesse.

They dig their ground with certaine peeces of wood, as big as halfe a Sword, where they sow their Maiz. The men also doe much vse Tobacco. The women labour more then the men in fishing and husbandry. They are more hardy then the beasts, and would come to our ships starke naked, going vpon Snow and Ice, in which season they take great store of beasts, Stags, Beares, Marternes, Hares, and Foxes, whose flesh they eate raw, hauing first dryed it in the Sun or smoke, and so they doe their fish. They haue also Otters, Weasils, Beauers, Badgers, Conies: Fowle and Fish great varietie: and one fish, called Adhothuis, whose bodie and head is like to a Greyhound, white as Snow. Their greatest Iewel is Chains of Esurgnie, which are shel-fishes, exceeding white, which they take on this manner. When a captiue or other man is condemned to death, they kill him, and then cut slashes in his most fleshie parts, and hurle him into the Riuer Cornbots, whence after twelue houres they draw him, finding in those cuts these Esurgnie, whereof they make Beads and Chaines. They are excellent for stanching of bloud. Thus much out of Cartier. In the yeere 1542. m Monsieur Roberual was sent to inhabit those parts. He saith that he built a Fort faire and strong: the people haue no certayne dwelling place, but goe from place to place, as they may find best food, carrying all their goods with them.

m M. Francis Roberual.

It is more cold in that, then in other places of like height, as Iohn Alphonse of Xanctoigne n affirmeth, because of the greatnesse of the Riuer which is fresh water, and because the Land is vntilled and full of Woods. We may adde the cold vapours which the Sunne exhaleth in that long passage ouer the Ocean, the abundance of Ice that commeth out of the North-seas, and the winds which blow from them, and from the cold snowie hils in the way.

§. III.

Late Plantations of New-France, and Relations of the Natiues.

Samuel Champlain made a Voyage to Canada 1603. and encountred with a banke of Ice eight leagues long in 45. degrees, two third parts, with infinite smaller. The Streits mouth from Cape Ray to the Cape of Saint Laurence, within the Gulfe of Canada, is eighteene leagues. He obserued a Feast made by Anadabijou the great Sagamo, in his Cabin: in which eight or ten Kettles of meat were set on seuerall fires, sixe paces asunder; The men sate on both sides of the roome, each hauing a dish made of the barke of a tree: one appointed to diuide to euery man his portion. Before the meat was boyled, one tooke his Dogge, and danced about the Kettles from one to another; and when he came before the Sagamo, cast downe his Dogge: and then succeeded another in the like exercise. After their Feast, they danced with the heads of their [b] enemies in their hands, some singing. Their Canoas are of the barke of Birch, strengthened within with little circles of wood, eight or nine paces long, fit for actiue and passiue carriage. Their Cabins are low, like Tents, couered with the said barke, the roofe open, a foot space vncouered to let in light, with many fires in the middest; ten households, sometimes together: they lye vpon skinnes one by another, and their Dogges with them.

Mounſ. Champlein.

b The Irocois, with whom these Eſtechemins, Algoumequins, and Montainers, haue warres.

After a certaine Feast, the Algoumequins (one of these three Nations in league) went out apart, and caused all their women and maids to sit in rankes; themselues standing behinde singing: suddenly all the women and maids cast of their Mantles of skinnes, and stripped themselues naked, not ashamed of their shame, keeping on still their Matachia (which are [c] Pater-nosters and chaines entetlaced, made of the haire of the Porkespicke, dyed of diuers colours.) Their songs ended, they cryed with one voice, Ho, ho, ho, and then couered themselues with their Mantles which lay at their feet, and after a while renued their former songs, and nakednesse. Their Sagamo sate before the Virgins and Women, betweene two staues, whereon were hanged those enemies heads: and hee exhorted the Mountainers and Estechemains to the like significations of ioy: which then cryed all together, ho, ho, ho. When hee was returned to his place, the great Sagamo and all his company cast off their Mantles, their priuities only remaining couered with a little skin: and tooke each what they thought good, as Matachias, Hatchets, Swords, Kettles, Flesh, &c. which they presented to the Algoulmequins. After this, two of each Nation contended in running; and the best runners were rewarded with presents.

c Beades.

They are well set, of Tawnie or Oliue colour, by reason of their paintings: they are lyers, giuen to reuenge, without law. When a maid is fourteene or fifteene yeares old, she hath many louers, and vseth carnall filthinesse with whom she pleaseth, so continuing fiue or sixe yeares; and then takes whom she likes for her husband, liuing with him chastely all her life after, except for barrennesse he forsake her. The husband is iealous, and giues presents to her parents. When one dies, they make a pit, and therein put all his goods with the corps; couering the same with earth, and setting ouer it many pieces of wood, with one stake painted red, and set vp on end. They beleeue the immortalitie of the Soule, and that the dead goe into farre Countries to make merry with their friends.

Their customs.

Monsieur [d] Champlein discourſed with certaine Sauages yet liuing, of whom hee learned touching their Religion, that they beleeue in one God, who hath created all things: that after God had made all things, he tooke a number of Arrowes, and did sticke them into the ground, from whence Men and Women sprung vp, which haue multiplyed euer since. Touching the Trinitie, being asked, a Sagamos or Gouernour answered, [e] There was one onely God, one Sonne, one Mother, and the Sunne, which were foure. Notwithstanding, [f] that God was ouer and aboue all: the Sonne was good, and the Sunne also: but the Mother was naught, and did eate them, and that the Father was not very good. Being asked, if they or their Ancestors had heard that God was come into the World: He said that he had not seene him: but that anciently there were fiue men, who trauelling toward the setting of the Sun, met with God, who demanded of them, Whither goe ye? They answered, We goe to seeke for our liuing. God said, You shall finde it heere: but they not regarding, passed further: and then God with a stone touched two of them, who were turned into stones. And hee said againe to the three other, Whither goe yee? They answered, and hee replyed as at first: they yet passing further, he tooke two staues, and touched therewith the two formost, and transformed them into staues. Asking the third man whither he went, he said, to seeke his liuing: whereupon he bade him tarry, and he did so, and God gaue him meat, and he did eat: and after he had made good cheere, he returned among the other Sauages, and told them all his tale.

d M. Champlein.

e The answere of a Sagamos in cases of Religion.

f This somewhat agreeth with the Manichean and Pythagorean errour.

This Sagamos also told, that at another time there was a man which had store of Tobacco, and God came and asked him for his pipe, which the man gaue him, and he dranke much of it, and then brake the pipe. The man was offended hereat, because he had no more pipes, but God gaue him one, and bade him carry it to his Sagamos, with warning to keepe it well, and then he should want nothing, nor any of his. Since, the said Sagamos lost the pipe, and found famine and other distresse: this seemeth to be the cause, why they say God is not very good. Being demanded what Ceremony they vsed in praying to their God, he said that they vsed no Ceremonie, but euery one did pray in his heart, as hee would. They haue among them some Sauages, whom they call Pilotons, who speake visibly to the Diuell, and hee tels them what they must doe, as well for warre, as for other things. And if hee should command them to put any enterprise in execution, or to kill a man, that they would do it immediately. They beleeue also that all their dreames are true. So farre Champlein.

M. de Monts.

In the yeere 1604. Monsieur de Monts (according to a Patent granted him the yeere before, for the inhabiting of Cadia, Canada, and other parts of New-France, from the fortieth degree, to the sixe and fortieth) rigged two ships, and bare with those parts that trend Westward from Cape Breton, giuing names to places at pleasure, or vpon occasion. One Port was named Saualet, of a French Captain, who was there a fishing, and had made his two and fortieth voyage hither: another was named of Rossignol, whose ship was confiscated for trading there with the Sauages (a poore preferment, to leaue name to a Port by his misery) another was named Port-Moutton, and within a great Bay; they named another Port-Royall, where after they fortified. The inhabitants of these parts were termed Souriquois. From them Westward are the people called Etechemins, where the next Port, after you are passed the Riuer of Saint Iohn, is Saint Croix, where they erected a Fort, and wintered. Threescore leagues West from thence is the Riuer Kenibeki; and from thence the Land trendeth North & South to Malabarre. Authors place in that former extention of Land betwixt East and West, a great Towne and faire Riuer, called Norombega, by the Sauages called Agguncia. These French Discouerers vtterly deny this History, affirming that there are but Cabans here and there made with Perkes, and couered with barkes of trees, or with skins: and both the Riuer and inhabited place is called Pemtegoet, and not Agguncia. And there can be no great Riuer (as they affirme) because the great Riuer Canada hath (like an insatiable Merchant) engrossed all these water-commodities, so that other streames are in manner but meere Pedlers.

Saualets two and forty voyages to Noua Francia.

Armouchiquois.

The Armouchiquois are a traitorous and theeuish people, next vnneighbourly neighbours to the Etechemins: they are light-footed, and lime-fingered, as swift in running away with their stollen prey, as the Grey-hound in pursuing it. Champlein testifieth, that the Armouchiquois are deformed with little heads, short bodies, armes small like a bone, as are their thighs also; their legges great and long, and disproportioned with likenesse of proportion: when they sit on their heeles, their knees are halfe a foot higher then their heads. They are valiant, and planted in the best Countrey.

M. du Point.

Monsieur du Point arriued in those parts in the yeere 1605. and du Monts remoued the French Habitation to the Port-Royall, Monsieur de Pourtrincourt sailed thither in the yeere 1606. and with him the Author of the Booke called *Noua Francia, who hath written the Rites and Customes of these Countries. Hee saith, that the Armouchiquois are a great people, but haue no adoration. They are vicious and bloudy. Both they and the Souriquois haue the industry of Painting and Caruing, and doe make Pictures of Birds, Beasts, and Men, both in stone and wood, as well as the workmen in these parts. They, as is said, ascribe not Diuine worship to any thing: but yet acknowledge some Spirituall and inuisible Power. I know not by what Diuine Iustice, and Iniustice of the Diuell, it comes to passe, that God hath giuen some men vp so farre vnto the Diuels tyrannie, that he hath banished out of their hearts the knowledge and worship of the True God: and yet the nature of Man cannot be without apprehension of some greater, and more excellent Nature, and rather then want of all Religion, they will haue a Religious-irreligious commerce with the Diuell. Yea, the more all knowledge of God is banished, the baser seruice doe Men, in doing and suffering, yeeld to the Diuell: as (to leaue other parts to their owne places) it falleth out in these Regions. The Prince and greatest Commander of Men among them, seemes by this meanes to bee the Diuels Vicegerent, and by wizardly and diuellish practices to vp-hold his owne greatnesse. So it was with Sagamos Memberton: if any body were sicke, he was sent for, he made inuocations on the Diuell, he bloweth vpon the partie grieued; maketh incision, sucketh the bloud from it: (a practice vsed in very many Countries of the Continent and Ilands of America) if it be a wound, he healeth it after the same maner, applying a round slice of Beauers stones. Some present is therefore made to him, of Venison or skinnes.

 Marke L'Escarbot.*

Souriquois.

If it be a question to haue newes of things absent, hauing first questioned with his spirit, he rendereth his Oracle, commonly doubtfull, very often false, and sometimes true. He rendered

rendered a true Oracle of the comming of Poutrincourt to du Pont, saying, his Diuell had told him so.

When the Sauages are hungry, they consult with Membertous Oracle, and he telleth them the place whither they shall goe: and if there be no game found, the excuse is, that the Beast hath wandered and changed place; but very often they finde. And this makes them beleeue that the Diuell is a God, and know none other, although they yeeld him no adoration. When these Aoutmoins (so they call these Wizards) consult with the Diuell, they fixe a staffe in a pit, to which they tye a Cord, and putting their head into the pit, make inuocations or conjurations, in a language vnknowne to the others that are about; and this with beatings and howlings vntill they sweat with paine. When this Diuell is come, the Master Aoutmoin makes them beleeue that hee holds him tyed by his cord, and holdeth fast against him, forcing him to giue him an answer, before he let him goe. That done, he beginneth to sing somethiug in the praises (as it seemeth) of the Diuel, that hath discouered some game vnto them, and the other Sauages that are there, make answer with some concordance of musicke among them. Then they dance with songs in another, not vulgar, language: after which, they make a fire and leape ouer it, and put halfe a pole out of the top of the Cabin, where they are, with something tied thereto, which the Diuell carrieth away. Aoutmoins.

Membertou carried at his necke the marke of his profession, which was a purse, triangle-wise couered with their imbroidered worke, within which there was somewhat as bigge as a Nut, which he said was his Diuell, called Aoutem. This function is successiue, and by tradition they teach their eldest sonnes the mysterie of this iniquitie. Euery * Sagamos either is, or hath his Aoutmoin.

* Sagamos signifieth a King, or Ruler.

The men and women weare their blacke haire long, hanging loose ouer the shoulder, wherein the men sticke a feather, the women a bodkin. They are much troubled with a stinging fly, for preuention whereof, they rub themselues with a certaine kinde of grease and oyles. They paint their faces with blue or red, but not their bodies.

For their marriages, they are contracted with the consent of Parents, who will not giue their Daughters in marriage to any, except he be a good hunter. The women are said to bee chaste, and the contrary seldome found: and though the husband hath many wiues, yet is there no iealousie among them. The widowes heere, if there husbands be killed, wil not marrie againe, nor eate flesh, till their death be reuenged. Otherwise they make no great difficultie (which Cartier reporteth of Canada) to marry againe, if they find a fit match. Sometimes the Sauages hauing many wiues, will giue one to their friend, if he likes her, so to disburden themselues. The women eate not with the men in their meetings, but apart. When they make feasts, they them end with dances all in a round; to which one singeth; at the end of euery long all make a loud & long exclamation: and to be the more nimble, they strip themselues starke naked. If they haue any of their enemies heads or armes, they will carry them (as a iewell) about their necks whiles they dance, sometimes biting the same.

After their Feasts they will diet themselues, liuing sometimes eight dayes more or lesse with the smoke of Tobacco. They are in nothing laborious but in hunting. They sow but so much as will serue them for sixe moneths, and that very hardly: during the Winter they retire, three or foure moneths space, into the woods, and there liue on Acornes, Fish, and Venison. They wash not themselues at meales, except they be monstrous foule, and then wipe on their owne, or their Dogs haires. Their entertainment is with small complement: the Guest sits downe by his Host, if it be the King, takes Tobacco, and then giues the pipe to him that he thinkes the worthiest person in the company. They are dutifull to their Parents, obey their commandements, and nourish their persons in age. They vse humanitie to the wiues & children of their conquered enemies, but the men of defence they kill. Their chiefe hunting is in winter; they carry alwaies tinder-boxes with them, to strike fire when hunting is done, or night takes them. For they follow the game sometimes three dayes together.

Their beasts and huntings.

Their Dogs are like Foxes, which spend not, neuer giue ouer, and haue rackets tyed vnder their feet, the better to run on the snow. They seethe the flesh in a tub of wood, by putting stones heated red hot therein. The womens duty is to flay the Beast, and bring it home. The Ellan, Deare, Stag, and Beare, are their game. They take also with their hands Beuers, which are of a chest-nut colour, short legged, his fore-feet haue open clawes, the hinder finnes like a Goose, the tayle skaled, almost of the forme of a Sole-fish: it is the delicatest part of the Beast. The head is short and round, with two rankes of iawes at the sides; and before foure great teeth (two aboue, and two beneath) with which he cuts downe small trees. Hee builds on the brinkes of a Lake, cuts his wood therewith raiseth a Vault; and because the waters sometimes rise, he hath an vpper story to betake himselfe to in such case: he builds it Pyramide-wise, sometimes eight foot high, and dawbs it with mud. He keeps his taile stil in the water. They take him with their hands in a frost, one fraying him on the Ice, whiles another seizeth on his necke. When one dies, they mourne for him long, euery Cabin his day by course: after that, they burne all his goods, and bury the body in a graue: where, when they haue placed him, euery one maketh a present of the best thing he hath: as skins to couer him, bowes, kniues, or the like.

They saw in forty fiue degrees a Lake fifteene Leagues long, and eight wide, with a Salt or fall not aboue three fadome, but very furious. The Sauages related to them of passages to a salt Lake, whereof they knew no end, reaching so farre Southerly, that the Sun set to the North thereof in Summer: it was foure hundred leagues from the place where the French then were. In the Additions to Nona Francia, mention is made of a Lake about threescore leagues long, with faire Ilands in it. The Iroquois haue no Townes; their dwellings and Forts are three or foure stories high, as in New-Mexico. Another lake is said to continue an hundred leagues in length, and some conceiue hope of passage to the South-Sea thereby.

The Scruie, or Scorbuch, much consumed the French in these parts, a disease that vsually attendeth euill Diet, and much salt meats; which, and want of exercise conuenient, are the Harbengers of this sicknes, in long sieges and Nauigations. Cartiers company were in a little time wonderfully cured hereof by a Tree like to Sassafras. CHAP. V.

Of VIRGINIA.

§. I.

The Preface, Sir WALTER RALEIGHS Plantation, and the Northerne Colony.

LEauing New-France, let vs draw neerer the Sunne to New-Britaine, whose Virgin soyle not yet polluted with Spaniards lust, by our late Virgin-Mother, was iustly called Virginia: Whether shall I here begin with Elogies or Elegies? Whether shall I warble sweet Carols in praise of thy louely Face, thou fairest of Virgins, which from our other Britaine World, hath won thee Wooers and Suters, not such as Leander, whose loues the Poets haue blazed for swimming ouer the Straits betwixt Sestos and Abydus, to his louely Hero; but, which for thy sake, haue forsaken their Mother-Earth, encountred the most tempestuous forces of the Aire, and so often ploughed vp Neptunes Plaines, furrowing the angry Ocean, and that to make thee of a rude Virgin, not a wanton Minion, but an honest & Christian Wife? Or shal I change my accent, and plaine me (for I know not of whom, to whom; to complaine) of those disaduentures, which these thy louely louers haue sustained in seeking thy loue? What enuie, I know not, whether of Nature, willing to reserue this Nymph for the treasurie of her owne loue, testified by the many and continuall presents of a temperate Climate, fruitfull Soile, fresh and faire streames, sweet and wholesome Aire, except neere the shore (as if her iealous policie had prohibited forreine Suters:) or of the Sauage Inhabitants, vnworthy to embrace with their rustike armes so sweet a bosome, and to appropriate with greatest disparagement so faire a Virgin to Sauage Loues: or haply some conceiued indignitie, that some Parents should thither send their most vnruly Sonnes, and that our Britannia should make her Virginian lap to be the voider, for her lewder and more disordered Inhabitants, whose ill parts haue made distastefull those kinder offices of other our Britaine Worthies, which else had been long since with greatest glad nesse, and the recompence of her selfe entertained: or whether it be Virginian modesty, and after the vse of Virgins, she would say Nay at first, holding that loue surest in continuance, which is hardest in obtaining: Whether any, or all of these, or what else hath hindered; hindered we haue been, and haue not yet obtained the full fruition of her Loue, and possession of her gainfull Dowry, which yet now (more then euer before) she seemeth to promise, and doubtlesse wil quickly performe, if niggardise at home doe not hinder. And should men be niggardly in this aduenture, where where Nabal must needs verifie his name, where keeping loseth, aduenturing promiseth so faire a purchase? Miserie of our times! that miserable men should here want what they already haue, & refuse to haue there, at no rate, abundant supply to their too miserable feares of want. Lift vp your eyes, & see that brightnesse of Virginia's beauty: which the Mountaines lift vp themselues alwayes with wild smiles to behold, sending downe siluer streames to salute her, which powre themselues greedily into her louely lap, and after many winding embracements, loth to depart, are at last swallowed of a more mighty Corriuall, the Ocean: He also sends Armies of fishes to her Coasts, to winne her Loue, euen of his best store, and that in store and abundance: the Mountaynes out-bid the Ocean, in offering the secret stores houses of vndoubted Mines: he againe offereth Pearles: and thus while they seeke to outface each other with their puffed bigge and swolne cheekes, who shall get the Bride; the one layes hold on the Continent and detaines the same, maugre the Oceans fury, and hee againe hath gotten the Ilands all along the Coast, which hee guardeth and keepeth with his watery Garrisons. Virginia, betwixt those two sowre-faced Suters, is almost distracted, and easily would giue entertainment to Englishloue, and accept a New Britan appellation, if her husband be but furnished out at first in sorts and sutes, befitting her Marriage solemnitie: all which her rich dowrie would mayntaine for euer after with aduantage.

And well may England court her, rather then any other Europæan louers in regard of his long continued amity, and first Discouerie of her Lands and Seas: this by Sebastian Cabot with his English Mariners, a hundred and fifteene yeeres since, and the other by Sir Walter Raleighs charge and direction, Anno Dom. 1584. *An.*1497.

Then first of all Christians, did Master Philip [a] Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow, take possession in Queene Elizabeths name. The next yeere that mirrour of Resolution, Sir Richard Greenuile, conuayed thither an English Colony, which he there left for Plantation, vnder the gouernment of Master Ralph Lane, which there continued vntill the eighteenth of Iune in the yeere following, and then (vpon some vrgent occasions) returned with Sir Francis Drake into England. Yet, had they stayed but a little longer, a ship of Sir Walter Raleighs had supplyed their necessities; and soone after Sir Richard againe repaired thither with three ships, and then also left fifteene men more to keepe possession. In the yeere 1587 a second Colonie were sent vnder the gouernment of Master Iohn White. To their succour Sir Walter Raleigh hath sent fiue seuerall times, the last by [b] Samuel Mace of Weymouth, in March, one thousand sixe hundred and two; but he and the former performed nothing, but returned with friuolous allegations. The same yeere, Captaine Bartholmew Gosnold, and Captaine Gilbert, discouered the North parts of Virginia, of which Voyage Iohn Brereton [c] hath written a Treatise.

c Ioh. Brereton, Gabriel Archer wrote notes thereof, & M. Gosnold himselfe in a Letter to his Father: they reffided in 41. deg. 20. minutes.

In the yeere 1603. [d] the Bristow men (by leaue of Sir Walter Raleigh) set forth a Voyage thither in 43. degrees. In this Expedition was Robert Salterne, which had beene the yeere before with Captaine Gosnold. They discouered Whitson-bay (so they termed it) in one and forty degrees twenty fiue minutes. The people vsed Snakes skins (of which some were six foot long) for Girdles: they were exceedingly rauished with the Musicke of a Gitterne-boy, dancing in a ring about him: they more feared two English Mastiues then twentie men. They had such Boats as before are mentioned, seuenteene foot long, foure broad, of Birch-barke sowed with Osyers, the seames couered with Rozen, almost as sweet as Frankincense, carrying nine men standing vpright, and yet not weighing aboue threescore pound. They brought one of them to Bristoll. This yeere Captaine Gilbert set forth againe for Virginia: at Meuis they laded twenty tuns of Lignum vitæ: hee had foure more were slaine by the Sauages. And in the yeere 1605. Captaine George Weymouth made thither a prosperous Voyage, and discouered threescore miles vp a most excellent Riuer. His Voyage was set forth in print by [e] Iames Rosier.

After this followed the plantation by the present Aduenturers, for the foundation of a New Britan Common-wealth: and the East and [f] West parts of England ioyned in one purpose of a two-fold Plantation, in the North and South parts of Virginia. Of the North parts our Method requires first mention. Mawooshen was many yeeres together visited by our men, extending betweene 43. and 45. degrees, 40. leagues in bredth, and 50. in length. They found therein nine Riuers, Quibiquesson, Pemaquid, Ramasson, Apanawapaske, Apaumensek, Aponeg, Sagadahoc, Ashamahaga, Shawokotoc. Sagadahoc is in 43. degrees, it is a mile and halfe at the mouth, holding the same bredth a dayes iourney, and then makes a found three dayes [g] iourney broad, in which are sixe Ilands: it hath two branches, the one from the Northeast 24. dayes iourney, the other North-west 30. dayes iourney. At the heads are two Lakes the Westermost 8. dayes iourney long and foure wide, the Eastermost halfe so large. This is Bashabaes his dominion. The Tarentines [h] country is in 44 deg. two third parts, where the Sauages tell of a Rock of Allum, neere the Riuer of Sasnowa. Captain [i] T. Hanham say-f Their Parents prescribe that they plant not within 100 miles of each other: & containe from 30. deg. to 45.

l Thomas Hanham sayled to the Riuer of Sagadahoc 1606. He relateth of their beasts, doggs like wolues, of colours blacke, white, red, grisled: red Deere, and a beast bigger, called the Mus, &c. of their fowles, fishes, trees: of some Oare proued to be siluer. Baskabes hath many vnder-Captaines, called Sagamos: their houses built with Withs, and couered ouer with Mats, sixe or seuen paces long. He expresseth also the names of their twelue Moones or moneths: as Ianuary Mussekeshos, February Gignokiakeshos, &c.

An. 1607. was settled a Plantation in the Riuer Sagadahoc, the ships called the Gift, and the Mary and Iohn, k being sent thither by that famous English Iusticer Sir Iohn Popham and others. They found this coast of Virginia full of Ilands, but safe. They chose the place of their Plantation at the mouth of Sagadahoc, in a Westerly Peninsula: there heard a Sermon, read their Patent and Lawes, and built a Fort. They sailed vp to discouer the Riuer and Countrey, and encountred with an Iland where where was a great fall of water, ouer which they haled their Boat with a Rope, and came to another fall, shallow, swift, and vnpassable. They found the Countrey stored with Grapes white and red, good Hops, Onions, Garlicke, Okes, Walnuts, the soile good. The head of the Riuer is in forty fiue and odde minutes. Cape Sinieamis in 43. deg. 30. min. a good place to fortifie. Their Fort bare name of Saint George. Fortie fiue remained there, l Captaine George Popham being President, Raleigh Gilbert Admirall. The people seemed affected with our mens deuotions, and would say, King IAMES is a good King, his God a good God, and Tanta naught. So they call an euill spirit which haunts them euery Moone, and makes them worship him for feare. Hee commanded them not to dwell neere, or come among the English, threatning to kill some and inflict sickneſse on others, beginning with two of their Sagamos children, saying he had power, and would doe the like to the English the next Moone, to wit, in December.

m Kal. Gilbert. n These seeme to be the deformed Armouchiquois made in the telling more dreadfull.

The peple m told our men of Canibals, n neere Sagadahoc, with teeth three inches long, but they saw them not. In the Riuer of Tamescot they found Oysters nine inches in length: and were told that on the other side there were twice as great. On the 18. of Ianuary they had in seuen houres space, thunder, lightning, raine, frost, snow, all in aboundance, the last continuing. On February the 5. the President died. The Sauages remoue their dwellings in Winter neereſt the Deere. They haue a kinde of shooes a yard long, fourteene inches broad, made like a Racket, with strong twine or sinewes of a Deere; in the mids is a hole wherein they put their foot, buckling it fast. When a Sagamos dyeth, they blacke themselues, and at the same time yerely renue their mourning with great howling: as they then did for Kassnrakeny, who died the yeere before. They report that the Canibals haue a Sea behinde them. They found a Bath two miles about, so hote that they could not drinke it. Master Patteson was slaine by the Sauages of Nanhoc, a Riuer of the Tarentines. Their short Commons o caused feare of mutiny. One of the Sauages, called Aminquin, for a straw hat and knife giuen him, stript himselfe of his cloathing to Beuers skinnes, worth in England 50. shillings, or three pound to present them to the President, leauing onely a flap to couer his priuities. He would also haue come with them for England. In winter they are poore p and weake, and do not then company with their wiues, but in Summer when they are fat and lusty. But your eyes wearied with this Northerne view, which in that Winter communicated with vs in extremitie of cold, looke now for greater hopes in the Southerne Plantation, as the right arme of his Virginian body, with greater costs and numbers furnished from hence.

p Other notes ap. Hak.

But first let me tell you that by some lately these Northerne Parts are stiled by the Name of New-England, as being supposed in the same Latitude with Noua Albion on the South Sea, discouered by Sir Francis Drake, hauing New France on the North, and the Southern Plantation of Virginia on the South; New Spaine, New Granado, New Andalusia, being in the same Continent. A Map and Discouerie hereof was set forth this last yeere by Captaine Iohn Smith, with new English Names exchanged for the Saluage. It lyeth betwixt 41. degrees, and 45. minutes. The harsh Names of the habitations of those parts, I forbeare to recite: the commodities are expressed by that Author. First for fish, (let not any thinke this contemptible, when, by his report, the Hollanders reape from three kinds, Herring, Cod, and Ling, fifteene hundred thousand pound yeerely; herevpon principally founding their greatnesse by Sea and Land.) In March, Aprill, May and halfe Iune here is Cod in abundance; in May, Iune, Iuly, and August, Mullet and Sturgeon, whose Roes doe make Cauiarie and Puttargo. Their store of Herrings they compare to the haires of their heads. In the end of August, September, October and Nouember you haue Cod againe to make Corfish or Poore-Iohn, wice as good as in New-found-land, where their fishing also is chiefely but in Iune and Iuly. Mullets are here taken by Nets, (which at Cape Blanke are hooked) and twice as large. He addes store of Red-berries called Alkermes, Muske-Rats, Beuers, Otters, Martins, Blacke Foxes, probabilities of Mines, and manifold commodities of the soile, the particulars whereof I referre to the booke it selfe, together with the arguments for a Plantation there there. There also you may reade his Obseruations and Discoueries, Anno 1614. with the successe of sixe ships that went the next yeere, and his disasters by French Pirats, and q English perfidie. This present yeere 1616. eight voluntarie ships went thither to make further tryall: and hereafter we hope to haue English Colonies renued, in this Northerly Plantation newly called New-England.

q See the examination of D. Baker, and others of his company.

They tooke one prize worth 200000. crownes, which was after split, the Captaine and halfe his company drowned.

§. II.

Of the Southerne Plantation and Colonies; and many causes alledged of the ill successe thereof at the first.

CAptaine Bartholomew Gosnold, hauing long sollicited many of his friends, at last preuailed with some Gentlemen, as Master Edward Maria Wingfield, Captaine Iohn Smith, and diuers others, with the helpe of some Noblemen and Merchants, his Maiestie granting Commission for establishing Councels to direct here, and to gouerne and execute there; so that December 19. 1606. they set saile, and after long contending with contrarie windes, and the windy inconstancie of some of the company that would haue returned for England before they had saluted their desired Port, they were by a storme forced into the same vnexpected; where, after some harme by assault of the Sauages, on the 13. of May, Master Wingfield was chosen President, their fort contriued, and the fals soone after discouered. Sixe weekes being thus spent, Captaine Newport returned with the ships, and Captaine Smith (before held in much iealousie) was by the paines of Mr Hunt the Preacher reconciled, and admitted of the Councell, a hundred being left there for the Plantation.

Richard Pots. Tho. Studley, &c.

Within ten dayes after the departure of this moueable Tauerne, as they called it, a more sauage enemy then the Sauages had assaulted them, and scarcely ten left vntouched with sicknesse, through want of conuenient lodging and diet, of which from May to September fifty dyed. Wingfield was deposed, and Ratcliffe established in his place, and by the industrie of Smith, Iames Towne was builded, the Sauages supplying their necessities: they failing, Captaine Smith sought trade abroad; others at home, intending a returne in the Pinace for England, by his vnexpected returning were forced to stay or sinke, which action cost the life of Captaine Kendall. Soone after, the like plot of the President, and Captaine Archer was discouered, and by him againe suppressed. The Winter approaching, the Riuers afforded them plenty of Cranes, Swannes Geese, Ducks, with which, and Pease, wilde Beasts, and other land-commodities they dayly feasted. But in the discouerie of Chickahamine Riuer, George Cassen was surprised, and Smith with two others, were beset with two hundred Sauages, his men slaine, and himselfe in a quagmire taken prisoner; but after a moneth he procured himselfe not onely libertie, but great admiration amongst them, and returning, once more stayed the Pinace from flight, and the Fort from being abandoned.

a M. Wingfield writes that one Read a Smith, escaped hanging by accusing Kendall, who was shot to death: and that Smith and he had followed if Newport had not come.

The Treasurer and Councell, meane-while carefull to supply their wants, sent two ships with neere a hundred men: Capt. Newport arriued safely, Captaine Nelson with the other ship by force of windes was driuen to shift as hee could, elsewhere. Now the Sauages enchanted by Smiths relations of God, Nature, and Art, were in manner at his command, till the ambition of some (by giuing foure times as much for their commodities as he appointed, seeking to seeme of so much greater magnificence and authoritie) made them prize their commodities dearer. Newport (whom Smith had called father, and extolled with Powhatan the Emperour) went with solemnitie to visit him, sending Smith before, who after his manner of State, gaue him b royall entertainment; sitting vpon his bed of Mats, his pillow of leather embroidered with pearle and white beads, attired with a robe of skins, large as an Irish mantle; at his head and feet sate a handsome yong woman, on each side his house twenty others, their heads and shoulders painted red, with a great chaine of white beades about their necks; before those sate his chiefest men in like order in his Arbor-like house. Newport gaue him a boy, for whom Powhatan gaue him Namontacke his seruant, which was after brought into England. Powhatan wittily cheated our men, and offering so much corne as they gaue copper, said he could eate that, not this. c Their gettings in this voyage, other commodities, and their townes, were casually consumed by fire: and the ship staying fourteene weekes, spent most of that prouision for the reliefe of the Colony: and by the bitternesse of that great Frost 1607. aboue halfe took their deaths. Wingfield and Archer were sent for England. Being busied in the Spring to rebuild their towne. Nelson arriued with his lost Phœnix (so they supposed his ship) and dealt honestlier then they report of the former Mariners.

Mariners. The second of Iune 1608. Smith left the Fort to discouer the Bay of Chesapeack: in the way, wanting of conuenient watering places, they were so thirstie, as they would haue refused two Barricoes of gold for one of water: and they arriued at Iames Towne in September, where they found some sicke, many dead, and the President prisoner: which place by election of the Councell and request of the company was bestowed on Smith.

Captaine Newport returned with rich presents of Bason, Ewer, Bed, Cloathes, with a Crowne for Powhatan, which made him ouer-value himselfe: some Poles and Dutch which were sent to make Pitch and Tarre, Glasse-mils and Sope-ashes, proued after treacherous. Powhatan minding murther and villany, at once sixteene of our men were beset with seuen hundred, which by the policy of Smith (seasing on Opechancanough their King) was preuented, and turned to their enriching with their commodities: and amongst other they vsed poison, which wrought not. After, Smith tooke the King of Paspaheigh prisoner, which forced the Sauages to peace. Thus haue we a little while beheld Tragicall, more then shewes, on this Virginian Theatre, those things which were well intended, being ill peruerted, and their greatest aduantages arising from casuall disaduantages: diuersitie of emulations beclowding that morning starre, a disastrous Comet, shining rather with fierie gleames of ciuill broiles and brawles in that Hemisphere, then comfortable illumination and influence to the common good.

The Sauages were now in good termes with the Englishs their Plantation at Iames Town, where they had built a Church and many houses, in some reasonable manner flourished: the countrey was with great paines and perils of the President further discouered; their Swine, Hens, and other prouision nourished; and some quantitie of many commodities, as Furres, Dies, Minerals, Sassafrasse, Sturgeon, and other things sent hither, in testimonie of their industry and successe. And Virginia grew now in such request, [a] that nine ships were furnished with the better part of fiue hundred men, to inhabite there, in the yeere one thousand sixe hundred and nine, the gouernment being deuolued to the L. de la Ware.

a New life of Virginia.

Sir Thomas Gates was appointed Lieutenant Generall; Sir George Summers Admirall of Virginia, and were sent to reside there as Gouernours of the Colony. But the Sea-venture, wherein the two Knights, and Captaine Newport, with a hundred and fifty persons, sayled, after long conflict with the two angry elements, was sent to bee imprisoned in Bermuda, where betweene two Rocks the ship split, the people escaping to Land. In the meane time [b] three of the other ships [c] had landed their men in Virginia, some of whom [d] were such as had been the emulous and enuious corriuals of the President, which they then began to shew: and to second the same, a greater hurt by Gun-powder befell him, which forced him for his recouerie to set sayle for England, after hee had liued there three yeeres, maintaining himselfe and his that time principally, with such food as the Countrey yeelded. He saith, he left behinde at his returne fiue hundred men and women, three Ships, seuen Boats, two hundred expert Souldiers, thirtie nine of their Weroances or Kings, as Subjects and Contributers to the English, so farre subiect, that at his command they haue sent their subjects to Iames Towne, to receiue correction at his appointment for wrongs done; and their Countries were free to the Englishs for trauell or trade. But Necessitie forced him to leaue the Countrey, which it forced the other appointed Gouernours not to finde. Hinc illæ lachrymæ. Hence proceeded the disorder and confusion which after happened amongst them. A great bodie was heere, which acknowledged no head, and therefore grew vnweldie and distempered. Some sought for rule ouer others, which were ouer-ruled by vnruly passions of Ambition, and faction in themselues: others sought their ease, except sometimes they were ouer-busie in diseasing others, and deuouring that which others had carefully laboured for. Ruine seiseth on the Church. Rapine makes prey and spoile of the goods, Ruine deuoureth their beasts, Famine consumeth the men, Iniuries make the Indians their enemies; two of the ships perish vpon Vshant, and one man alone was left to bring home newes of their perishing: the rest returne laden with Letters of discouragement, painting out Famine, Sedition, and other Furies, which had broken loose amongst them, in the blackest colours: which were sealed with report of the losse of their Admirall, to make vp the measure of mischiefe.

c A Catch perished at S. a in a Hericano: the other came thither, but in the returne two of them (in one of which Capt. W. King was Master) perished on Vshant.

All this did not daunt the Noble Spirit of [e] that resolute Lord, appointed Lord Gouernour, who in the beginning of April, one thousand sixe hundred and ten, set sayle from the coast of England, and on the ninth of Iune arriued safely at the distortified Fort in Virginia, where he found the present State like to the Boxe [f] of Pandora, who being endowed with manifold good gifts (each of the gods bestowing one on her) was sent with a boxe full of euils to Prometheus, who refused the offer, but by Epimetheus was opened, whereby all euils were suffered to fly out, Hope onely remaining, which he shut fast in the bottome. And thus was it with this Virginian Pandora, enriched with the best offerings of Natures bounty, bounty, but by Epimethean careleſneſſe, all euils had now diſperſed themſelues, and made the Virginian Colony a ſtage of Miſery: onely Hope remayned. But alas, euen that alſo proued ſicke and was ready to giue vp the Ghoſt; in the dangerous ſickneſſe, which befell that Noble [c]Lord, which forced him after eight moneths ſickneſſe, to returne for England againe. He ſhipped himſelfe indeed for Meuis, an Iland in the Weſt Indies, famous for wholſome Bathes, but by Southerly winds was compelled to change his purpoſe, and at laſt to make home: hauing left Deputie Gouernour Captaine George Percie, a Gentleman of honour and reſolution, with vpward of two hundred perſons.

c Relation to the Councell of Virginia by the Lord de la Ware. 1611.

Almightie God that had thus farre tried the patience of the Engliſh, would not ſuffer them to be tempted aboue that they were able: and therefore in his ſecret Prouidence, before any knowledge was here had of his Lordſhips ſickneſſe, had ordayned Sir Thomas Dale ſhould be furniſht out with a good ſupply of three ſhips, men, cattell, and many prouiſions, all which arriued ſafe at the Colony the tenth of May, 1611. He by his Letters, and the Lord Gouernour by his Relations, did animate the Aduenturers; the one proteſting himſelfe willing and readie to lay all that hee was worth vpon the Aduenture of the action, rather then ſo honourable a worke ſhould faile, and to returne with all conuenient expedition, if their friendly endeuours would therein ſecond his reſolutions: the other [d] writing that foure of the beſt Kingdomes in Chriſtendome, put all together, may no way compare with this Countrey, either for commodities or goodneſſes of ſoyle. This ſparke kindled in their hearts ſuch conſtancie of zeale and forwardneſſe, that they furniſhed out Sir Thomas Gates (who had happily returned with the reſt from Bermudas) with ſix ſhips, 300. men, and a hundred Kine, with other Cattle, Munition, and prouiſion of all ſorts.

d Sir Th. Dales Letter to the Committies.

Sir Thomas Dale hauing newes that it was a Fleet of enemies, prepared himſelfe and the reſt to an encounter, but it ended with a common ioy, in the ſhaking of hands, and not of Pikes. Lawes are now made (for lawleſneſſe had marred ſo much before) for the honour of God, frequenting the Church, obſeruation of the Sabbath, reuerence to Miniſters, obedience to ſuperiours, mutuall loue, honeſt labours; and againſt Adultery, Sacriledge, wrong and other vices, Harbengers of Gods wrath and mans deſtruction. The Colony conſiſted of ſeuen hundred men of ſundry Arts and Profeſſions (few of them ſicke) which hauing left the Fort at Cape Henry, fortified and kept by Captaine Davies, and the keeping of Iames Towne, to that Noble and well-deſeruing Gentleman, Maſter George Percie, is remoued vp the Riuer foure-ſcore miles further beyond Iames Towne, to a place of higher ground, ſtrong and defencible by nature, with good Ayre, plenty of Springs, much faire and open grounds, freed from Woods, and wood enough at hand. Here they burnt brickes, cut downe wood, and euery man fals to ſomewhat: they haue built, they ſay, competent houſes, the firſt ſtory all of bricke, that euery man may haue his lodging and dwelling by himſelfe, with a ſufficient quantity of ground allotted thereto. Here alſo they were building an Hoſpitall with foureſcore lodgings and beds already ſent, for the ſicke and lame, as the Booke, called the New life of Virginia, relateth. Maſter Whitaker in his Letter and Booke from Henrico, 1612. teſtifieth the health and welfare of the Colonie. Samuel Argal in the yeere 1613. affirmed likewiſe that hee found the ſtate of Virginia farre better then was reported. In one Voyage they had gotten 1100. buſhels of Corne: they found a ſlow kind of Cattle, as bigge as [f] Kine, which were good meate: and a medicinable ſort of earth. They tooke Pokahuntis ([g] Powhatans deareſt daughter) priſoner, a matter of good conſequence to them, of beſt to her, by this meanes being become a Chriſtian, and married to Maſter Rolph, an Engliſh Gentleman.

f Alvaro Nunez ſpeaketh of ſuch Kine in Florida, which come hither from the North.

g Her true name was Matoaks, which they conceled from the Engliſh, in a ſuperſtitious feare of hurt by the Engliſh if her name were knowne: ſhe is now Chriſtened Rebecca.

Thus I haue beene bold ſomewhat largely to relate the proceedings of this Plantation, to ſupplant ſuch ſlanders and imputations as ſome haue conceiued or receiued againſt it, and to excite the diligence and induſtry of all men of ability, to put to their helping hand in this Action, ſo Honourable in it ſelfe, Glorious to God in the furtherance of his Truth, and beneficiall to the Common-wealth, and to the priuate purſes of the Aduenturers, if the blooming of our hopes be not blaſted with our negligence.

As for the want of ſucceſſe hitherto, Careat ſucceſſibus opto, Quiſquis ab euentu facta notanda putet. Reaſon ſhould preuaile with Men; leaue ſenſe and euent of things as an argument for Beaſts. That reaſon which ſheweth Virginia's more then poſſibilities & probabilities, doth alſo point out the cauſes of thoſe ill Succeſſes; [h] Diſcontents at Sea; Ignorance of the Country, and of their Language; Diuiſion in the Councell; Commanders (ſome of them) not skilfull Souldiers, nor forward Aduenturers; Care to relade the Ships before they could prouide Houſes or Victuals; Ambition; Cruelty; Neglect of the Seaſons for Fiſh, and Land-commodities; Brackiſh ſlimy Water at Iames Fort; Riot; Sloth; Falſe information in England; Sending ill People that conſumed the reſt with idleneſſe; Want of Authority to puniſh them; That kind of Ariſtocraticall Authority firſt eſtabliſhed, occaſion of their Quarrels; Iniuries to and from the Saluages, and yet a neceſſity of their vſe and helpe; Sickneſſe cauſed by the groſſe and and vaporous Aire and ſoyle about Iames Towne, and drinking water; The theeuiſh trucke and exchange which ſome ſecretly held with them; The treachery of Fugitiues; Falſhood of the Sauages; and the Many many faults (as they report) of Mariners in priuate truckings and night marts, both with our Men and Sauages; Their long ſtay and ſpending the Colonies reliefe; beſides Extraordinary caſualties of fire, cold, ſhipwracke; and (if wee beleeue [i] Ouiedo, and obſerue the like amongſt the Spaniards) the very Aire of the Indies ſeemes to be of inclination and diſpoſition to contentions, which eaſily ruine and diſſolue the greateſt and beſt enterpriſes; that I ſpeake not of the Deuils malice to Chriſtian hopes. Experience hath now made men wiſer, both to preuent and remedie theſe euils, and to order their proceedings accordingly. And although Fame fils not our eares with ſo often and many Virginian rumors, as aforetimes, yet we know that ſtill waters are deepeſt, and wee cannot but hope that thoſe worthy Virginian-Conſuls [k] cunctando reſtituunt rem, rather with carefull prouidence and watchfull diligence working ſure, then with humerous haſtineſſe, laying foundations to a leiſurely repentance, ſeeking more the common good there, then to be the common talke heere. Once, they there maintayne themſelues now a long time without the wonted charge to the Company, and diuers of our Nobility and Gentry doe now (as after a long ſlumber) while we are writing theſe things, againe bethinke them of this Virginian Plantation, whereunto the profitable Neighbour-hood of the Summer Iles, or Bermudas may be good furtherance. God Almighty proſper both, that the Word may goe out of Bermuda, and the Law of the Lord from Virginia, to a truer conuerſion of the American World, then hitherto Our Humoriſts, or Spaniſh inſolencies haue intended.

§. III.

Of the Soyle, People, Beaſts, Commodities and other Obſeruations of Virginia.

FOr the deſcription of the Countrey, Maſter Hakluyt from Others Relations in his third Volume of Voyages hath written largely of thoſe parts, diſcouered for Sir Walter Raleigh. Concerning the later, Captaine Iohn Smith, partly by word of mouth, partly by his Map thereof in print, and more fully by a [l] Manuſcript, which hee courteouſly communicated to mee, hath acquainted mee with that whereof himſelfe with great perill and paine had beene the Diſcouerer, being in his diſcoueries taken Priſoner, as is before ſaid, and eſcaping their fury, yea receiuing much honour and admiration amongſt them, by reaſon of his Diſcourſes to them of the motion of the Sunne, of the parts of the World, of the Sea, &c. which was occaſioned by a Diall then found about him. They carried him Priſoner to Powhatan, and there beganne the Engliſh acquaintance with that ſauage Emperour.

[k] Sir T. Gates. & Sir T. Dale.

The ſumme of his obſeruation in that and other Diſcoueries ſince, concerning the Countrey, is this: Virginia is ſituate betweene 34. and 44. degrees of Northerly latitude; the bounds whereof on the Eaſt ſide are the great Ocean, Florida on the South, on the North Nona Francia: the Weſterne limits are vnknowne. But that part which began to bee planted by the Engliſh Southerne Colony, in the yeere 1606. is vnder the degrees, 37. 38. and 39. The temperature agreeth with Engliſh bodies, not by other meanes diſtempered. The Summer [m] is hot as in Spaine, the Winter cold as in France and England: certaine coole Brizes doe aſſwage the vehemency of the heate. The great Froſt in the yeere 1607. reached to Virginia, but was recompenced with as milde a Winter with them the next yeere. And the Winter Anno 1615. [n] was as cold and froſty one fortnight as that.

[m] Al. Whitaker ſaith, not ſo hot as Spaine, nor Winter ſo cold as in England.

[n] Maſter Rolph.

There is but one entrance by Sea into this Country, and that at the mouth of a very goodly Bay. The Capes on both ſides were honoured with the names of our Britanian hopes, Prince Henry, and Duke Charles. The water floweth in this Bay neere two hundred miles, and hath a channell, for a hundred and forty miles of depth, betwixt ſeuen and fifteene fathome; of breadth, ten or fourteene miles. At the head of the Bay, the Land is Mountaynous, and ſo runneth by a Southweſt Line: from which Mountaynes proceed certaine Brooks, which after come to fiue principall Nauigable Riuers. The Mountaynes are of diuers compoſition, ſome like Mil-ſtones, ſome of Marble: & many pieces of Chryſtall they found throwne downe by the waters, which alſo waſh from the Rockes ſuch gliſtering Tinctures, that the ground in ſome places ſeemeth gilded.

The colour of the earth in diuers places reſembleth Bole-Armoniac, terra ſigillata, and other ſuch apparances; but generally is a blacke ſandy molde. The Riuer next to the mouth of of the Bay is Powhatan, the mouth whereof is neere three miles broad: it is Nauigable an hundred miles; falls, rocks, shoalds, prohibite further Nauigation: hence Powhatan their greatest King hath his Title. In a Peninsula on the Northside thereof is situate Iames Towne.

The people inhabiting which haue their Weroances, are the Kecoughtans, which haue not past twenty fighting men. The Paspahèghes, haue forty. Chichahamanias, two hundred. The Weanocks, an hundred. The Arrowhatocks, thirty. The Place called Powhatan, forty. The Appamatuks, threescore. The Quiyoughcohanocks fiue and twenty. The Warraskoyacks, forty. The Nandsamunds, two hundred. The Chesapeacks, an hundred. The Chickahamanians are not gouerned by a Weroance, but by the Priests. No place affordeth more Sturgeon in Summer (of which at one draught haue beene taken threescore and eight) nor in Winter more Fowle. Fourteene miles from Powhatan is the Riuer Pamaunke; nauigable with greater Vessels, not aboue threescore and ten miles. Toppahanok is nauigable an hundred and thirty miles, Patawomeke, an hundred and twenty. To speake of Powtuxunt, Bolus, and other Riuers on the East side of the Bay, likewise, of diuers places which receiued name by some accident, as Fetherstones Bay: so called of the death of one of ours there happening, and the like: or to mention the numbers which euery people can make, would exceed our scope, and the Readers patience. Captaine Smiths Map may somewhat satisfie the desirous, and his Booke now printed, further. This the Captaine saith, that hee hath beene in many places of Asia and Europe, in some of Africa and America, but of all, holds Virginia by the naturall endowments, the fittest place for an earthly Paradise. Alexander Whitaker the Preacher at Henrico, writes, that at the mouth of Powhatan, are the Forts of Henrico and Charles, two and forty miles vpward is Iames Towne, and threescore and ten miles beyond that the new Towne of Henrico, ten miles higher the fals (where the Riuer falleth downe betweene many mineral Rockes:) twelue miles beyond, a Chrystall Rocke, wherewith the Indians head their Arrowes: three dayes iourney from thence is a Rocke or Hill found couered ouer with a rich siluer Ore. Our men that went to discouer those parts, had but two Iron Pickaxes with them, and those so ill tempered, that the points turned againe at euery stroke; but tryall was made of the Ore, with argument of much hope. Sixe dayes iourney beyond this Mine, runs a ridge of Hils, beyond which, the Indians report, is a great Sea, which (if it bee true) is the South Sea. At Henrico they are exceeding healthfull, and more then in England.

Alex. Whitaker, now Preacher at Virginia.

Master Thomas Hariot [o] hath largely described the Commodities which the Water and Earth yeeld (set forth also in Latine with exquisite Pictures by Theodore de Bry) besides the relations of Brereton and Rosier, and others. There is a Grasse which yeeldeth silke, beside store of Silke-wormes. Hempe and Flaxe surpassing ours in growth and goodnesse, exceeded by a new found stuffe of a certaine sedge or water-flagge, which groweth infinitely, and with little paines of boyling yeeldeth great quantitie of sundry sorts of Skeines of good strength and length, some like silke, and some like Flaxe, and some a courser sort, as Hempe.

[o] Hak. vol. 3. pag. 267. Theod. de Bry. part. 2. America.

There is also a rich veine of Allum, of Terra Sigillata, Pitch, Tarre, Rozen, Turpentine, Sassafras, Cedar, Grapes, Oyle, Iron, Copper, and the hope of better Mines, Pearle, sweete Gummes, Dyes, Timber, Trees of sweet wood for profit and pleasure, of which kinde haue beene discouered fourteene seuerall kinds. Neither is it needfull that heere I relate the Commodites of Virginia for food in Fowles, Beasts, Fishes, Fruites, Plants, Hearbes, Berries, Graines, especially their Maiz, which yeeldeth incredible recompence for a little labour. One Acre of ground will yeeld with good husbandry two hundred Bushels of Corne. They haue two Roots: [p] the one for Medicinall vse to cure their hurts, called Weighsacan, the other called Tockahough, growing like a flagge, of the greatnesse and taste of a Potato, which purgeth a fiery purgation before they may eate it, being poyson whiles it is raw. Yet in all this abundance our men haue had small store but of want, and no fire nor water could purge that poyson which was rooted in Some, to the hinderance of the Plantation.

The chiefe Beasts of Virginia are Beares, lesse then those in other places, Deere like ours, Aroughcun much like a Badger, but liuing on trees like a Squirrell: Squirrels, as big as Rabbets, and other flying Squirrels, called Assepanicke, which spreading out their legs and skins, seeme to flye thirty or forty yards at a time. The Opassom hath a head like a Swine, a tayle like a Rat, as bigge as a Cat, and hath vnder her belly a bagge, wherein she carrieth her yong. Their Dogges barke not. Their Wolues are not much bigger then our Foxes. Their Foxes are like our siluer-haired Conies, and smell not like ours. Mussascus is otherwise as our Water-Rat, but smelleth strongly of Muske: Master Whitaker saith, they yeeld Muske as the Musk-Cats doe. Their Vetchunqueys are wild Cats. Their vermine destroyed not our Egges and Pullen: nor were their Serpents or Flyes any way pernicious. They haue Eagles, Hawkes, wild Turkeyes, and other Fowle, and Fish, which here to repeate, would to some nice fastidious stomacks breed a fulnesse, though with some of their Countrimen in Virginia, they would haue beene sauoury sometimes and dainty.

M. Whitaker & M. Hamor mention also Lions

q Tho. Hariot. They are a people q clothed with loose Mantles made of Deeres skins, and aprons of the same round about their middles, all else naked: of stature like to vs in England. They vse to paint themselues and their children, he is the most gallant which is most monstrous. Their women imbroder their legges, hands, &c. with diuers workes, as of Serpents, and such like, with blacke spots in the flesh.

r M. George Percie writeth that one with an Arrow of an ell length shot thorow a Target, which a Pistoll could not pierce. Their houses are made of small Poles, made fast at the top, in round forme, as is vsed in many Arbours with vs; couered with Barkes or Mats, twice as long as they are broad. They are exact Archers, and will with Arrowes kill Birds flying, Fishes swimming, Beasts running: one of ours by them hath beene shot thorow the body, and both r his armes thereby fastened and pierced. They speake of men two hundred yeeres old and more, as Master Wingfield reporteth. Their Bowes are of tough Hasill, the strings of Leather, Arrowes of Canes or Hasill, headed with stones or hornes, and artificially feathered. They are heartlesse, if they see defence to frustrate their Arrowes.

§. IIII.

Of the present estate of Virginia, and the English there residing.

THe last of May 1616. Sir Thomas Dale (that worthy Commander, and best establisher of the Virginian Plantation) came from thence into England, to procure and further the common good: partly by conference with Him, and chiefly by a Tractate and Relations of Master Rolph, the Husband of Pokahuntas, which came ouer with him, I haue learned, what here I deliuer you. The English doe now finde this Countrey so correspondent to their constitutions, that it is more rare to heare of a mans death in Virginia, then in that proportion of people in England. That Aristocraticall Gouernment by a President and Councell, s is long since remooued, and those hatefull effects thereof together: Order and diligence haue repayred, what confusion and idlenesse had distempered. The men haue beene employed in Palazading, and building of Townes, impaling grounds to keepe their Cattle from ranging, and to preserue their Corne; and a Peace concluded betwixt the English and Indians: For howsoeuer they could well before defend themselues and their Townes from them, yet not easily their Corne and Cattle. This peace hath yeelded many benefits, both opportunity of lawfull purchase of a great part of the Country from the Natiues, freely and willingly relinquishing and selling the same for Copper, or other Commodities (a thing of no small consequence to the conscience, where the milde Law of Nature, not that violent Law of Armes, layes the foundation of their possession) and quiet enioying thereof, yeerely planting and reaping without impediment; fowling, hunting, fishing, trauelling, as securely as in England; Plenty and Health attending their Peace and Industry. They haue Indian Wheate, called Mays, Pease and Beanes, and other the naturall Commodities; English Wheate, Pease, Barley, Turneps, Cabbages, Carrots, Parsneps, Herbes and Flowres for pleasure and vse, with other things as good as the best made English ground can yeeld. And that you may know what two mens labours with Spade and Shouell onely can manure in one yeere, they refused fifty pounds offered for their Crop. Hempe, Flaxe, Tobacco, (which with a little better experience in the curing, would be as good as any in America) Fish, Fowle, Deere and other Beasts, I need not mention. Sir Thomas Dale (whose Prudence, Fortitude, Temperance, Iustice in the well ordering and gouerning the English Virginian affaires, I cannot sufficiently honour) obserued two seasons for the taking of Fish, the Spring, and the Fall, himselfe taking no small paines in the triall: at one hale with a Saine, he caught fiue thousand; three hundred of which were as bigge as Cod, the least of the residue a kind of Salmon Trowt, two foot long: Yet durst he not aduenture on the maine Skul: for breaking his Net. Likewise two men with Axes and such like weapons haue taken and killed neere the shore, and brought home forty as great as Cod in two or three houres space. And whereas heretofore wee were constrayned yeerely to buy Corne of the Indians, which brought vs into base esteeme with them: now they seeke to vs, come to our Townes, sell the t skins from their shoulders (which are their best garments to buy Corne. Yea, some of their petty Kings haue this last yeere borrowed foure or fiue hundred bushels of Wheat; for payment whereof this Harueſt they haue Mortgaged their whole Countries, some of them not much lesse in quantitie then a whole Shire in England: So that Famine, the quondam deuourer of our Nation, is famished, and in it selfe deuoured.

s Twelue in all.

Peace betwixt ours and the Sauages.

t They can dresse Leather finely and quickly, but it will not hold out wet.

The places inhabited by the English are six, Henrico and the limits, Bermuda Neither Hundred, dred, West and Sherley Hundred, Iames Towne, Kequonghton, Dales Gift. The inhabitants are; Officers, Labourers, Farmers. The first haue charge and care ouer both the latter, watching and warding for their preseruations in the due execution of their employments and businesse. These are bound to maintaine themselues and their families with food and raiment by the industrie of them and theirs. The Labourers are of two sorts: some employed onely in the generall workes, fed and cloathed out of the store. Others are speciall Artificers, as Smiths, Shoomakers, Carpenters, Tailors, Tanners, &c. which worke in their professions to the Colony, and maintaine themselues with food and apparell, hauing time limited them to till and manure the ground. The Farmers liue at most ease, yet by their good endeuours bring much plenty to the Plantation. They are bound by Couenant, both for themselues and their seruants, to maintaine his Maiesties right and title in that kingdome, to watch & ward in the townes where they are resident; to doe one and thirtie dayes seruice for the Colony, when they shall be called thereunto; to maintaine themselues and theirs with food and raiment; to pay yeerely for themselues and each man-seruant two Barrels and a halfe a piece, of their best Indian wheat (this amounts to twelue bushels & a halfe English measure) that no Farmer nor other shall plant Tobacco (knowne to be a vendible commoditie) except he yeerely manure for himselfe; and euery man-seruant two acres of ground with corne, and then to plant as much as they please. Also the Company haue already sent a ship to Virginia with prouision of cloathing, housholdstuffe and other necessaries, to establish a Magazine there; to be bought at easie rates in bartar and exchange for their commodities, to a mutuall benefit of both parts.

I cannot heere omit the Christian care of his Maiestie, worthy the Defender of the Faith, in prouiding charitable collections and contributions in England, for the erecting and maintaining of a Colledge in Virginia to be a Seminarie and Schoole of education to the Natiues in the knowledge and perfection of our Religion, which I beseech Almightie God to prosper with answerable successe. They haue likewise brought thence children of both sexes here to be taught our language and letters, which may proue profitable instruments in this designe. As for the English there now residing (likely to bee much encreased by good supplyes now in sending) at Henrico and in the Precincts, which is seated on the North side the Riuer, ninety and odde miles from the mouth thereof (which somewhat differs from the number before mentioned) and within fifteene or sixteene miles of the Fals, being our furthest habitation within land, are eight and thirtie men and boyes: of which two and twenty Farmers: Captaine Smaley Commander in the absence of Iames Davies (who now is returning) Master William Wickham Minister. At Bermuda Nether Hundred (seated on the South side the Riuer, which almost encompasseth it, and with a pale on a short necke of land boundeth this peninsula) are a hundred and nineteene. These are incorporated to Bermuda Towne, which is made a Corporation, according to certaine Orders and Constitutions. Captaine Yeardly Deputy gouernour liues most heere: Master Alexander Whitaker is Minister. West and Sherley Hundred is three or foure miles lower on the North side the Riuer: here are twenty fiue men commanded by Captaine Maddeson, employed onely in planting and curing Tobacco to the publike benefit. Lower by thirty seuen miles is Iames Towne, where are fifty men vnder Captaine Francis West, Brother to the L. La Ware, and (in his absence) commanded by Lieutenant Sharp; Master Buck Minister. At Kequoughton thirty seuen miles lower, neere the mouth of the Riuer are twenty. Capt. Webbe commander, Master Mays Minister. Dales-Gift is vpon the Sea neere Cape Charles, where are seuenteene vnder Lieutenant Cradock; their labour to make salt, and catch fish. The numbers of Officers and Labourers are two hundred and fiue. The Farmers eighty one, besides sixty fiue women and children, in euery place some: in all three hundred fifty one persons. These I haue thus particularly related as a witnesse to after-Ages of their little (but now hopefull) proceedings after ten yeeres habitation; which as Iacobs little family in Egypt, and Gedeons small Armie, lesse then that which the Father of the Faithfull mustered in his owne household, I hope and pray, may grow into Townes, Cities, and Christian-English Churches, in numberlesse numbers, to the glory of God, and honour of our Nation. Euen in all the greatest workes of God, and exploits of Men, the beginnings are ordinarily slow and small. How many of the foure hundred and thirtie yeares were almost, if not more then halfe spent, when Iacob was but a little Family, and those in a strange land, there suddenly growing vnder the Crosse, into a multitude and great people? From her Village-foundation, how did Rome peepe and creepe forth by degrees vnto the height of Maiestie? So may wee say of the Spanish Plantations in this American continent, from contemptible and troublesome beginnings, to their present Splendor. Nor are our hopes lesse, if our hearts bee sincere, and minde, as wee professe the propagation of Christianitie. As for their transported Cattell, there were the last of May of Buls, Steeres, Cowes,

§. I.

Of the Virginian Rites, related by Maſter HARIOT.

NOw for the manners and Rites of the people, thus hath Maſter Hariot reported. They beleeue that there are many gods, which they call Manſoac, but of different ſorts and degrees: one onely chiefe and great God, which hath bin from all eternity. Who, as they affirme, when he purpoſed to make the world, made firſt other gods of a principall Order, to bee as meanes and inſtruments to be vſed in the Creation, and Gouernment to follow; and after, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, as petty gods, and the inſtruments of the other Order more principall.

a Tho. Hariot. Hak. to. 3. p. 277. Theſe people of Sir W. Rals his diſcouerie are ſomewhat more to the South, then the preſent Engliſh Colonie.

First, they ſay, were made Waters, out of which by the gods was made all diuerſitie of Creatures, that are viſible or inuiſible. For Mankinde, they ſay, a Woman was made firſt, which by the working of one of the gods, conceiued and brought forth children. And in ſuch ſort they ſay they had their beginning: But how many yeeres or ages haue paſſed ſince, they ſay, they can make no relation: hauing no letters, nor other meanes to keep records of times paſt, but onely tradition from Father to Sonne. They thinke that all the gods are of humane ſhape, and therefore they preſent them by Images, in the formes of men, which they call Kewaſowock; one alone is called Kewas. Them they place in Houſes or Temples, which they call Machicomuck, where they worſhip, pray, ſing, and make many times offerings vnto them. In ſome Machicomuck we haue ſeene but one Kewas, in ſome two, in other three. They beleeue the immortalitie of the Soule: that after this life, as ſoone as the ſoule is departed from the body, according to the workes it hath done, it is either carried to heauen the habitacle of Gods, there to enioy perpetuall bliſſe and happineſſe: or elſe to a great pit or hole, which they think to be (b) the furtheſt parts of their part of the World toward the Sun-ſet, there to burne continually. This place they call Popogueſſo. For the confirmation of this opinion, they tell tales of men dead and reuiued againe, much like to the Popiſh Legends.

Thus they tell of one, whoſe graue the next day after his buriall was ſeene to moue, and his body was therefore taken vp againe: who reported, that his ſoule had beene very neere the entring into Popogueſſo, had not one of the gods ſaued him; and giuen him leaue to returne againe, and teach his friends how to auoid that terrible place. They tell of another, which being taken vp in that manner, related, that his ſoule was aliue while his body was in the graue, and that it had trauelled farre in a long broad way, on both ſides whereof grew moſt delicate pleaſant Trees, bearing more rare and excellent fruits, then euer he had ſeene before, or was able to expreſſe: and at length came to moſt braue and faire houſes, neere which he met his father, that had been dead before, who gaue him great charge to goe back againe, and ſhew his friends what good they were to doe, to enioy the pleaſures of that place, which when he had done, he ſhould after come againe.

b Weroance is a chiefe Lord, or petie King, which ſometime hath but one Towne: and none that we had dealing with, had aboue eighteen Townes vnder him.

What ſubtiltie ſo euer be in their Weroances [a] and Prieſts, the vulgar are hereby very reſpectiue to their Gouernours, and carefull of their manners; although they haue alſo in criminall caſes, puniſhments inflicted according to the qualitie of the offence. This I learned by ſpeciall familiaritie with ſome of their Prieſts, wherein they were not ſo ſure grounded, but that they lent open eare to ours, with doubting of their owne.

c Tho. de Bry in Pictur.

The [b] Prieſts in Secota haue their haire on the crowne like a Combe, the reſt being cut from it: onely a fore-top on the forehead is left, and that Combed. They haue a garment of skins peculiar to their function. They are great Wiſards.

Our artificiall Workes, Fire-workes, Gunnes, Writing, and ſuch like, they eſteemed the workes of Gods, rather then of Men, or at leaſt taught vs by the Gods. They bare much reſpect to our Bibles. When the Weroans was ſicke, he ſent vs to pray for him. Some were of opinion that we were not mortall, nor borne of Women, but that wee were men of an old Generation many yeeres paſt, then riſen againe to immortalitie: ſome would likewiſe ſeeme to prophecie, that there were more of our Generation yet to come, to kill theirs, and take their places; which were now in the Aire inuisible, and without bodies, and that they by our entreatie did make men to die which had wronged vs.

They haue [i] their Idoll in the innermost roome of their house, of whom they tell incredible things. They carrie it with them when they goe to the warres, and aske counsell thereof, as the Romans did of their Oracles. They sing songs as they march towards the battell, in stead of Drummes and Trumpets: their warres are bloudy, and haue wasted much of their people.

[i] First voyage to Virginia. Hak.to.3.p.249.

A certaine King called Piemacum, hauing inuited many men and women of the Secotans to a Feast, whiles they were merry, and praying before their Idol, came vpon them and slew them. When [k] one of their Kings had conspired against the English, a chiefe man about him said, that we were the seruants of God, and not subiect to be destroyed by them: and that we, being dead men, could doe more hurt then while we were aliue. They vse to solemnize certaine months-minds, in their Sauage manner, for any great personage dead. Iames [l] Rosier, from the relation of Owen Griffin, an eye-witnesse, thus tels of their ceremonies. One among them, the eldest as hee iudged, riseth right vp, the other sitting still: and looking about, suddenly cryed with aloud voice, Baugh, Waugh: then the women fall downe, and lye vpon the ground: and the men all together answering the same, fall a stamping round about the fire, with both feet, as hard as they can, making the ground shake, with sundry out-cries, and change of voice and sound. Many take the fire-sticks and thrust them into the earth: and then rest a while. Of a sudden they begin as before, and continue so stamping, till the yonger sort fetched from the shore many stones, of which euery man tooke one, and first beat vpon them with their fire-sticks, then with the stones beat the earth with all their strength. And in this manner they continued about two houres. After this ended, they which had wiues, tooke them apart, and withdrew themselues seuerally into the wood. This seemed to be their euening deuotion.

When they [m] haue obtained some great deliuerance from danger, or returne from warre, they obserue a publike and solemne reioycing by making a great fire, encompassed with the men and women promiscuously, all of them with Rattles in their hands, making a great noise.

[m] Theod. de Bry Icone 17.18. & seq.

They hold one time in the yeere Festiuall, and then they meet together out of many Villages, euery one hauing a certaine marke or Character on his backe, whereby it may be discerned whose Subiect he is. The place where they meet is spacious, and round about are set posts, carued with the resemblance of a Nuns head: In the mids are three of the fairest Virgins louingly embracing and clasping each other: about this liuing Center, and artificiall Circle, they dance in their Sauage manner.

Their Idoll called Kiwasa, is made of wood foure foot high, the face resembling the Inhabitants of Florida, painted with flesh-colour, the breast white, the other parts blacke, except the legges, which are spotted with white; he hath Chaines or strings of Beads about his necke.

This Idoll is in Socota, as it were the keeper of the dead bodies of their Kings. In their Temples are houses of publique deuotion, they haue two, three, or more of them, set in a darke place. The dead bodies of their Werowances are kept on certaine Scaffolds nine or ten foot high, this Kiwasa their guardian being placed with them: and vnderneath dwelleth a Priest, which night and day there numbreth his deuotions.

§. II.

Obseruations of their Rites by Captaine SMITH and others.

BVt let vs take view of our last Colonies obseruations. Capt. [n] Smith was taken by the Virginians, and while hee stayed amongst them, obserued these their Magicall Rites. Three or foure dayes after his taking, seuen of their Priests in the house where he lay, each with a Rattle, (setting him by them) began at ten of the clock in the morning to sing about a fire, which they enuironed with a circle of meale, at the end of euery song, (which the chiefe Priest began, the rest following) laying downe two or three graines of Wheat: and after they had laid down sixe or seuen hundred in one circle (accounting their songs by Graines, as the Papists their Orisons by Beads) they made two, or three, other circles in like manner, and put at the end of euery song, betwixt euery two, or three, or fiue Graines, a little sticke. The High Priest disguised with a great skinne, his head hung round with little skins of Weasils, and other Vermine, with a Crownet of Feathers, painted as vgly as the Diuell, at the end of each song vseth strange and vehement gestures, casting great Cakes of Deere-ſuet, and Tobacco into the fire: thus till ſixe of the clock in the euening, they continued theſe howling deuotions, and ſo held on three dayes. This they pretended to doe, to know if any more of his Country-men would arriue, and what hee there intended. They ſo fed this our Author, that he much mis-doubted, that he ſhould haue been ſacrificed to the Quoyoughquoſicke, which is a ſuperiour Power they worſhip, then the Image whereof a more vgly thing cannot be deſcribed. To cure the ſicke, a certaine man with [a] a little Rattle, vſing extreme howlings, ſhouting, ſinging, with diuers anticke and ſtrange behauiours ouer the patient, ſucketh bloud out of his ſtomacke, or diſeaſed place.

[a] Their Rattles are of Gourds or Pompion rindes: of which they haue their treble, tenor, baſe, &c.

Not much vnlike to that rattling deuotion of their exorciſing Prieſts, (at leaſt in abſurditie) was that entertainment [b] which Powhatans women gaue the ſame Captaine then being free, and Preſident of the company, at Werowocomoco; where thirtie of them came out of the woods naked, onely couered behinde and before, with a few greene leaues, their bodies painted, but with ſome difference each from other: the Leader of theſe Nymphs reſembled both Actæon and Diana, hauing on her head a faire paire of Stagges hornes, and a quiuer of arrowes at her backe, with Bow and Arrowes in her hand: The reſt followed all horned alike, weaponed with vnlike inſtruments: theſe (as if they had beene the infernall guard, comming with Cerberus to welcome Proſerpina to her Palace) ruſhed from the trees with helliſh ſhouts and cryes, dancing about a fire, which there was made for that purpoſe: and after an houre thus ſpent, they departed.

[b] M.S. by W.S.

Then did they ſolemnly inuite him to their lodging, where he was no ſooner come, but all rounded about him with tedious kindneſſe, crying, [c] Loue you not me? This ſalutation ended, which Pan and all his Satyres would haue accepted, they feaſted him with plenty and varietie, ſome ſinging and dancing whiles others attended: and at laſt led him with a firebrand, in ſtead of a Torch, to his lodging.

[c] How could he chuſe.

When they [d] intend any wars, the Weroances or Kings conſult firſt with the Prieſts and Coniurers. And no people haue there beene found ſo ſauage, which haue not their Prieſts, Gods, and Religion. All things that are able to hurt them beyond their preuention, they after their ſort adore, as the Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, our Ordnance, Peeces, Horſes: Yea, I haue heard Captaine Smith ſay, that they ſeeing one of the Engliſh Bores in the way, were ſtriken with awfull feare, becauſe he briſled vp himſelfe and gnaſhed his teeth, and took him for the god of the Swine; which was offended with them.

Okee, or Okeeus.

The chiefe god they worſhip is the Diuell, which they call Okee. They haue conference with him, and faſhion themſelues vnto his ſhape. In their Temples they haue his Image ill-fauouredly made, [e] painted, adorned with Chaines, Copper, and Beads, and couered with a skinne. By him is commonly the Sepulchre of their Kings; whoſe bodies are firſt bowelled, then dryed on a hurdle, and haue about the ioynts chaines of Copper, Beads, and other like traſh; then lapped in white skinnes, and rowled in mats, and orderly entombed in arches made of mats, the remnant of their wealth being ſet at their feet. Theſe Temples and Bodies are kept by their Prieſts. For their ordinarie burials, they digge a deepe hole in the earth with ſharpe ſtakes, and the corps being wrapped in skins and mats, with their iewels, they lay them vpon ſticks in the ground, and couer them with earth. The buriall ended, the women hauing their faces painted with blacke coale and oyle, ſit foure and twenty houres in the houſes mourning and lamenting by turnes, with yellings and howlings. Euery Territory of a Weroance hath their Temples and Prieſts. Their principall Temple is at Vttamuſſack in Pamaunk, where Powhatan hath a houſe vpon the top of certaine ſandie hils in the woods. There are three great houſes filled with Images of their Kings and Diuels, and Tombes of their Predeceſſors. Thoſe houſes are neere threeſcore foot long, built, after their faſhion, Arbour-wiſe. This place is in ſuch eſtimation of holineſſe, that none but the Prieſts and Kings dare enter: yea, the Sauages dare not paſſe by in Boats, without caſting Copper, Beads, or ſomewhat into the Riuer.

[e] One of theſe painted on a Toadſtoole (fit ſhrine for ſuch a deitie) was by A. Whitak. ſent into England.

Heere are commonly reſident ſeuen Prieſts: the chiefe differed from the reſt in his ornaments: the other can hardly be knowne from the common people, but that they haue not ſo many holes at their eares to hang their Iewels at. The High-Prieſts head-tire is thus made: They take a great many Snakes skinnes ſtuffed with Moſſe, as alſo of Weaſils and other vermines skins, which they tye by their tayles, ſo that all the tayles meet on the top of their head like a great taſſell. The faces of their Prieſts are painted as vgly as they can deuiſe: in their hands they haue Rattles, ſome Baſe, ſome Treble.

Their deuotion is moſt in ſongs, which the chiefe Prieſt beginneth, the reſt following: ſometime he maketh inuocations with broken ſentences, by ſtarts and ſtrange paſſions, and at euery pauſe the other giue a ſhort grone. It cannot be perceiued that they haue any ſet Holy-dayes: onely, in ſome great diſtreſſe of want, feare of enemies, times of triumph, and of gathering their fruits, the whole Countrey, Men, Women, and Children, aſſemble to their ſolemnities. The manner of their deuotion is ſomtimes, to make a great fire, all ſinging and dancing about the ſame with Rattles and ſhouts, foure or fiue houres: ſometime, they ſet a man in the middeſt, and dance and ſing about him, he all the while clapping his hands, as if he would keepe time: after this, they goe to their Feaſts. They haue certaine Altar-ſtones, which they call Powcorances, ſtanding from their Temples, ſome by their houſes, others in the woods and wilderneſſes; vpon which they offer bloud, Deere-ſuet, and Tobacco. This they doe when they returne from the warres, from their huntings, and on other occaſions. When the waters are rough in ſtormes, their coniurers runne to the waters ſides, or paſſe in their boats, and after many helliſh out-cries and inuocations, caſt Tobacco, Copper, Pocones, or ſuch traſh into the water, to pacifie that god whom they thinke to be very angry in thoſe ſtormes. Before their dinners and ſuppers, the better ſort will take the firſt bit, and caſt it into the fire, which is all the grace they are knowne to vſe. In ſome part of the Countrey they are ſaid (which ſince is found falſe) to haue yeerely a ſacrifice of children: ſuch a one was performed at Quiyoughcohanock, ſome ten miles from Iames Towne in this manner: Rapahannock, [f] Werowance made a Feaſt in the woods: the people were ſo painted, that a Painter with his penſill could not haue done better. Some of them were blacke like Diuels, with hornes and looſe haire, ſome of diuers colours. They continued two dayes dancing in a circle of a quarter of a mile, in two companies, with antick tricks, foure in a ranke, the Werowance leading the dance; they had Rattles in their hands; all in the middeſt had black hornes on their heads, and greene boughes in their hands: next them were foure or fiue principall men diuerſly painted, which with baſtinadoes beat forward ſuch as tired in the dance. Thus they made themſelues ſcarce able to goe or ſtand. When they met together, they made a helliſh noiſe, and euery one flinging away his bough, ranne (clapping their hands) vp into a tree, and tare it to the ground, and fell into their order againe: thus they did twice. Fourteene well-fauoured children, or (if you had rather heare ſ Captaine Smith) fifteene of the propereſt yong Boyes, betweene ten and fifteene yeeres of age, they painted white: Hauing brought them forth, the people (ſaith he) ſpent the forenoone in dancing and ſinging about them with Rattles: in the afternoone they put theſe children to the root of a tree, all the men ſtanding to guard them, each with a Baſtinado of Reeds bound together, in his hand. Then doe they make a lane betweene them all along, thorow which there were appointed fiue yong men (White cals them Prieſts) to fetch theſe children. Each of theſe fetched a child, the guard laying on with their Baſtinadoes, while they with their naked bodies defend the children to their great ſmart. All this time the women weepe and cry out very paſſionately, prouiding moſſe, skinnes, mats, and dry wood vnknowne to what purpoſe. When the children are in this manner fetched away, the guard teares downe trees, branches, and boughes, making wreathes for their heads, or bedecking their haire with the leaues. What elſe was done with the children was not ſeene, but they were all caſt on a heape in a Valley, as dead, where was made a great feaſt for all the company.

William White relating this Rite, ſaith, That they remoued them from tree to tree three times, and at laſt carried them into a Valley where the King ſate; where they would not ſuffer our men to ſee, but feaſted there two houres. On a ſudden all aroſe with cudgels in their hand, and made a lane, as is before ſaid, and the children being laid downe vnder a tree (to their ſeeming) without life, they all fell into a ring againe, and danced about the children a good ſpace, and then ſate downe in a circle about the tree. Raphanna in the mids, cauſed burdens of wood to be brought to the Altar, made of poles ſet like a ſteeple, where they made a great fire, which our men thought, but were deceiued, was to ſacrifice their children to the Diuell (whom they call Kewaſe) who, as they report, ſuckes their bloud. They were vnwilling to let them ſtay any longer. They found a woman mourning for yong Paſpiha, ſacrificed at the Towne of Rapahanna: but this Paſpaiha is now aliue, as Mr Rolph hath ſince related to me: and the mourning of the women is not for their childrens death, but becauſe they are for diuers moneths detained from them, as we ſhall after ſee. Yea, the Virginians themſelues, by falſe reports might delude our Men, and ſay they were ſacrificed when they were not. For euen ſtill, they are very inconſtant (it is Mr Rolphs report) in all that they ſpeake of their Religion: one denying that which another affirmeth, and either not knowing, or nor willing that others ſhould know their diuelliſh myſteries. And hence perhaps it was, that (as Captaine Smith addeth) a Werowance being demanded the meaning of this ſacrifice, anſwered, that the children were not all dead, but that the Oke or Diuell did ſucke the bloud from their left breſt, who chanced to be his by lot, till they were dead, but the reſt were kept in the wilderneſſe by the yong men, till nine Moones were expired, during which time, they muſt not conuerſe with any, and of theſe were made their Prieſts, and coniurers. This Sacrifice they held to be ſo neceſſarie, that if they ſhould omit it, their Oke or Diuell, and their other Quiyoughcoſughes, or gods, would let them haue no Deere, Turkies, Corne, or Fish; and who would besides make a great slaughter amongst them. They thinke that their Werowances and Priests, which they also esteeme Quiyoughcosughes, when they are dead, doe goe beyond the Mountaines towards the setting of the Sunne, and euer remaine there in forme of their Oke, hauing their heads painted with Oyle and Pocones[a] finely trimmed with feathers, and shall haue Beades, Hatchets, Copper, and Tobacco, neuer ceasing to dance and sing with their Predecessors. The common-people, they suppose, shall not liue after death. Some sought to conuert them from these Superstitions: the Werowance of Quiyoughcohanock was so farre perswaded, as that he professed to beleeue that our God exceeded theirs, as much as our Guns did their Bowes and Arrowes: and many times did send to the President many presents, entreating him to pray to his [b] God for raine, for his God would not send him any.

a Pocones is a small Roote, which dried and beat into powder, turneth red: they vse it for swellings, aches, and painting.

b In that extremitie of miserie which ours since sustained, I haue been told that both the Sauages and Fugitiues would obiect our want, and their plenty, for theirs, and against our Religion.

William White reporteth these their ceremonies of honouring the Sunne. By breake of day, before they eate or drinke, the men, women, and children aboue ten yeeres old, runne into the water, and there wash a good space, till the Sunne arise, and then they offer sacrifice to it, strewing Tobacco on the land or water: the like they doe at Sun-set. Hee also relateth that one George [c] Cassom (before mentioned) was sacrificed, as they thought, to the Diuell, being stripped naked and bound to two stakes, with his backe against a great fire: then did they rip him, and burne his bowels, and dryed his flesh to the bones, which they kept aboue-ground in a by-roome. Many other of our men were cruelly and treacherously executed by them, though perhaps not sacrificed; and none had been left, if their ambushes and treasons had taken effect. Powhatan thus inuited [d] Captaine Ratliffe and thirty others to trade for corne, and hauing brought them within his ambush, murthered them.

c The cruell death of George Cassom.

d Declaration of Virginia.

Alexander Whitaker saith, That their [e] Priests (whom they call Quiokosoughs) are Witches, of whom the people stand in great awe. The manner of their life is Heremite-fashion, in woods, in houses sequestred from the common course of men, where none may come, or speake with them, vncalled. They take no care for victuals; for all such necessaries are set in a place neere his Cottage for his vse. If they would haue raine, or haue lost any thing, he at their request coniureth, and often preuaileth. He is their Physician if they bee sicke, and sucketh their wounds. At his word they make warre and peace, and doe nothing of moment without him. Master Rolph affirmes that these Priests liue not solitarily, and in other things is of another opinion, which perhaps our former Author at his first comming, might haue by relation of others.

e Priests in Virginia.

The Wirowance of Acawmacke told our men of a strange accident: two children being dead, and buried, being reuiewed by the parents, seemed to haue liuely and cheerefull countenances, which caused many to behold them, and none of the beholders escaped death.

§. III.

Of the Sasquesahanockes, with other, and later obseruations of the Virginian Rites.

THe Sasquesahanockes are a Gyantly people, strange in proportion, behauiour, and attire, their voice sounding from them, as out of a Caue; their attire of Beares skins, hanged with Beares pawes, the head of a Wolfe, and such like iewels: and (if any would haue a spoone to eate with the Diuell) their Tobacco pipes were three quarters of a yard long, carued at the great end with a Bird, Beare, or other deuice, sufficient to beat out the braines of a Horse (and how many Asses braines are beaten out, or rather mens braines smoaked out, and Asses haled in by our lesse Pipes at home?) the rest of their furniture was sutable. The calfe of one of their legges was measured three quarters of a yard about, the rest of his limbes proportionable. With much adoe restrained they this people from worshipping our men. And [f] when our men prayed (according to their dayly custome) and sung a Psalme, they much wondered: and after began in most passionate manner to hold vp their hands to the Sunne, with a Song, then embracing the Captaine, they began to adore him in like manner, and so proceeded (notwithstanding his rebuking them) till their song was ended: which done, one with a most strange action and vncomely voice began an Oration of their loues. That ended, with a great painted Beares skinne they couered the Captaine, another hung about his necke a chaine of white Beades. Others laid eighteene Mantles at his feet, with many other ceremonies, to create him their Gouernour, that hee might defend them against the Massawomekes, their enemies. As these are very great, so the Weighcocomocoes are very little.

f Discouerie of Chesipeack, 1608.

I may also heere insert the ridiculous conceits which some Virginians hold, concerning their their first originall, as I haue heard from the relation of an English Youth,[a] which liued long amongst the Sauages: that a Hare came into their Countrey, and made the first men, and after preserued them from a great Serpent: and when two other Hares came thither, that Hare for their entertainment killed a Deere, which was then the onely Deere that was, and strewing the haires of that Deeres hide, euery haire proued a Deere. He said they worshipped towards a certaine Hoope or Sphere doubled a crosse, which was set vpon an heape of stones in their houses. They had a house without the Towne for the Women, in the time of their naturall sicknesse to keepe in, where no men might come.

But of their opinions and ceremonies in Religion, who fitter to be heard then a Virginian, an experienced Man and Counseller to Opechancanough their King and Gouernour in Powhatans absence? Such is Tomocomo, at this present in London, sent hither to obserue and bring newes of our King and Country to his Nation; some others[c] which haue beene heere in former times, being more silly, which hauing seene little else then this Citie, haue reported much of the Houses, and Men, but thought we had small store of Corne or Trees: the Virginians imagining that our men came into their Countrey for supply of these defects. This Man therefore, being landed in the West parts, found cause of admiration at our plenty in these kinds, and (as some haue reported) began to tell both Men and Trees, till his Arithmetike fayled. For their numbring beyond an hundred is imperfect, and somewhat confused. Of Him (Sir Thomas Dales man being our Interpreter) I learned, that their Okeeus doth often appeare to them in His House or Temple: the manner of which apparition is thus. First, foure of their Priests or sacred Persons (of which he said he was one) goe into the House, and by certaine words of a strange Language (which he repeated very roundly in my hearing, but the Interpreter vnderstood not a word, nor doe the common people) call or coniure this Okeeus, who appeareth to them out of the Aire, thence comming into the House; and walking vp and downe with strange words and gestures, causeth eight more of the principall persons to be called in, all which twelue standing round about him, he prescribes to them what hee would haue done. Of him they depend in all their proceedings, if it bee but in a hunting Iourney,[d] who by winds or other awefull tokens of his presence, holds them in a superstitious both feare and confidence. His apparition is in forme of a personable Virginian, with a long blacke locke on the left side, hanging downe neere to the foot. This is the cause why the Virginians weare these sinister lockes; which some thinke (I haue heard Sir Thomas Dale and Master Rolph of that opinion) was first by our Men in the first Plantation, little aboue thirty yeeres since, borrowed from these Sauages: (a faire vnlouely generation of the Lonelocke, Christians imitating Sauages, and they the Deuill) this Virginian so admiring this Rite, that in arguing about Religion, he obiected to our God this defect, that hee had not taught vs so to weare our haire. After that he hath stayed with his twelue so long as he thinkes fit, he departeth vp into the ayre whence he came. Tomocomo auerred that this was Hee which made Heauen and Earth; had taught them to plant so many kinds of Corne; was the Author of their good; had propheſied to them before of our mens comming; knew all our Countrey; whom he made acquainted with his comming hither, and told him that within so many moneths he would returne: but the Deuill or Okeeus answered, that it would bee so[e] many more: neyther at his returne must he goe into that house, till Okeeus shall call him. He is very zealous in his superstition, and will heare no perswasions to the truth; bidding vs teach the Boyes and Girles (which were brought ouer from thence) Hee being too olde now to learne. Being asked, what became of the soules of dead men, he pointed vp to Heauen; but of wicked men, that they hung betweene Heauen and Earth? This Tomocomo hath Matachanna one of Powhatans Daughters to wife. The vulgar are held in great awe by their Ignorance; and when any of them haue got a good Deere, some of the greater will pretend Okeeus his name, and cause it to be brought to His House, and then share it at their pleasure. They hold it a disgrace to feare death: and therefore when they must dye, doe it resolutely; as happened to one which had robbed the English, and by Powhatan (vpon complaint made to Him) was fetched sixscore miles from the place where he lurked, and by this Tomocomo, in the presence of the English executed, his braines being knocked out, shewing no signe of feare or dismayednesse. They vse to make Blacke Boyes once in fourteene or fifteene yeeres generally, for all the Country (this hapned the last yeere, 1615.) when all of a certaine age, that haue not beene made Blacke Boyes before, are initiated in this Ceremonie. They vse to make some at other times by themselues, as before is shewed of Rapahannok out of Captaine Smith, and Master White, which then mistooke it for a Sacrifice. Some foure moneths after that Rite they liue apart, and are fed by some appointed to carry them their foode: they speake to no man, nor come in company, seeme distracted (some thinke by some Deuillish apparition scarred; certaine, to oblige them to that Deuillish Religion as by a Hellish Sacrament of the Deuils institution) and will offer to shoot at such as come nigh them. And when they they come into company, yet are for a certaine time of ſilent and ſtrange behauiour, and will doe any thing neuer ſo deſperate that they ſhall be bidden; if they tell them they ſhall bee old men if they goe not into the fire, they will doe it. There is none of their men but are made Blacke Boyes at one time or other. Let vs obſerue theſe things with pitty and compaſſion, and endeuour to bring theſe ſilly ſoules out of the ſnare of the Deuill, by our prayers, our purſes, and all our beſt endeuours. This may be added, that their young people haue in manner no knowledge, and the vulgar little, of their Religion. They vſe alſo to beguile them with their Okee, or Image of him in their houſes, into whoſe mouth they will put a Tobacco pipe kindled, and one behind that Image drawes the ſmoke, which the ſillier vulgar and children thinke to be done by their God or Idoll.

They haue [f] a certaine herbe called Weyſake, like Liuerwort, which they chew and ſpit into poyſoned wounds, that are thereby healed in foure and twenty houres. In finding out their medicinall Roote (it is the Relation of Maſter George Percie) ſix of them hold together by the armes, and ſo goe ſinging, and withall ſearching: and when they haue found it, ſit downe ſinging, crothing the Root with their hands for a good ſpace, then gather, chew, and ſpit. He thus deſcribeth their dances; One ſtands in the middeſt, ſinging and clapping hands; all the reſt dance about him, ſhooting, hollowing, ſtamping with antike geſture, like ſo many Deuils, their feet alwayes (and only) agreeing in one ſtroke. Landing at Kecoughtan, the Sauages entertayned them with a dolefull noyſe, laying their faces to the ground, and ſcratching the Earth with their nayles. The Werowance of Rapahanna, met them, playing on a Flute of a Reed, with a Crowne of Deeres haire coloured red, faſhioned like a Roſe, with a Chaine of Beads about his necke, and Braceletsof Pearle hanging at his eares, in each eare a Birds claw. The women are of a modeſt proud behauiour; with an Iron, pounce and raze their bodies, legges, thighes, and armes, in curious knots and pourtraytures of Fowles, Fiſhes, Beaſts, and rub a painting into the ſame, which will neuer out. The Queene of Apamatica was attired with a Coronet beſet with many white bones, her eares hanged with Copper, a Chaine thereof ſix times compaſſing her necke. The Maids ſhaue their heads all but the hinder part: the Wiues weare it all of a length: the Men weare the left locke long, as is ſaid already, ſometimes an ell, which they tye when they pleaſe in an artificiall knot, ſtucke with feathers, the right ſide ſhaven. The King of Paſpahey was painted all blacke, with hornes on his head like a Deuill. He teſtifieth of their hard fare watching euery third night, lying on the bare cold ground, what weather ſoeuer came, and warding the next day, a ſmall Can of Barley ſodden in water, being the ſuſtinance for fiue men a day: their drinke brackiſh and ſlimy water. This continued fiue moneths.

The Virginians [g] are borne white: their haire blacke, few haue beards, and they plucke out the haires which would grow: the women with two ſhels are their Barbers: they are ſtrong, nimble, and hardy, inconſtant, timorous, quicke of apprehenſion, cautelous, couetous of Copper and Beads; they ſeldome forget an iniury, and ſeldome ſteale from each other, leſt the Coniurers ſhould bewray them, which it is ſufficient that theſe thinke they can doe. They haue their Lands and Gardens in proper, and moſt of them liue of their labour. The cauſe of their blackneſſe Maſter Rolph aſcribes to their Oyntments which in their ſmokie Houſes they vſe; euen as Bacon with vs is ſo coloured: this within doores they vſe againſt the fire, abroad againſt the Sunne, Maſter Wingfield ſayth, they would bee of good complexion, if they would leaue painting (which they vſe on their face and ſhoulders.) He neuer ſaw any of them groſſe, [h] or bald: they would haue beards, but that they pluck away the haires: they haue one wife, many Loues, and are alſo Sodomites. Their elder women are Cookes, Barbers, and for ſeruice; the younger for dalliance. The women hang their children at their backes, in Summer naked, in Winter vnder a Deere-skin. They are of modeſt behauiour. They ſeldome or neuer brawle: in entertayning a ſtranger, they ſpread a mat for him to ſit downe, and dance before him. They weare their nailes long to flay their Deere: they put Bow and Arrowes into their Childrens hand before they are ſixe yeeres old.

In each eare commonly they haue three great holes, whereat they hang Chaines, Bracelets or Copper: ſome weare in theſe holes a ſmall Snake coloured greene and yellow, neere halfe a yard long, which crawling about his necke, offereth to kiſſe his lips. Others weare a dead Rat tied by the taile. Their names are giuen them according to the humour of the Parents. Their women they ſay are eaſily deliuered: they waſh in the Riuers their young Infants to make them hardie. The women and children doe the houſhold and field-worke, the men diſdayning the ſame, and only delighting in fiſhing, hunting, warres, and ſuch manlike exerciſes: the women plant, reape, beare burthens, pound their Corne, make baſkets, pots, bread, and doe their Cookery and other buſineſſe. They eaſily kindle fire by chaſing a dry pointed ſticke in a hole of a little ſquare piece of wood.

Powhatan had aboue thirty Commanders, or Wirrowances vnder him, all which were not in peace only, but seruiceable in Captaine Smiths Presidencie, to the English, and still, as I haue beene told by some, that haue since beene there they doe affect him, and will aske of him. Powhatan hath three Brethren, and two Sisters, to whom the Inheritance belongeth successiuely, and not to his or their Sonnes till after their death, and then the eldest Sisters Sonne inheriteth. He hath his treasure of Skins, Copper, Pearles, Beades, and such like, kept in a house for that purpose, and there stored against the time of his buriall. This House is fifty or threescore yards long, frequented onely by Priests. At the foure corners of this House stand foure Images as Sentinels, one of a Dragon, another of a Beare, a third of a Leopard, and the fourth of a Gyant. He hath as many women as he will, which when he is weary of, he bestoweth on whom he best liketh. His Will, and Custome are the Lawes. He executeth ciuill punishments on Malefactors, as broyling to death, being incompassed with fire, and other tortures. The other Wirowances, or Commanders (so the word signifieth) haue power of life and death, and haue some twentie men, some fortie, some an hundred, some many more vnder their command. Some were sent to inquire for those, which were left of Sir Walter Raleighs Colonie, but they could learne nothing of them, but that they were dead. Powhatan was gone Southwards when our men came last thence; some thought for feare of Opechancanough his younger Brother, a man very gracious, both with the people and the English, iealous lest Hee and the English should conspire against him, thinking that he will not returne; but others thinke hee will returne againe. His second Brother is decrepit and lame. His age is not so great as some haue reckoned: the errour arising [i] from the Virginian computation of yeeres; they reckoning euery Spring and euery Fall seuerall yeeres. So did Tomocomo at his comming into England, marke vp his time, accounting each day, and (because they sayled in the night, when hee thought they would haue anchored by the shore) each night another day.

CHAP. VII.

Of Florida.

§. I.

Of the Acts of the Spanish and French in Florida: And of the Soyle and Cities.

NExt to Virginia towards the South is situate Florida, [b] so called, because it was first discouered by the Spaniards on [c] Palme Sunday, or as the most [d] interprete, Easter day, which they call Pasqua Florida: and not, as Theuet writeth, for the flourishing Verdure thereof. The [e] first finder, after their account, was Iohn Ponce of Leon, in the yeere 1512. but wee haue before shewed, that Sebastian Cabota had discouered it in the name of King Henrie the Seuenth of England. This Region extendeth to the fiue and twentieth degree. It runneth out into the Sea with a long point of Land, as if it would eyther set barres to that swift current which there runneth out, or point out the dangers of these Coasts to the hazardous Mariners.

Into the Land it stretcheth Westward vnto the borders of New Spaine, and those other Countries which are not fully knowne: otherwhere it is washed with a dangerous Sea, which separateth Chicora, Bahama, and Lucaia from the same. Iohn Ponce [f] aforesaid, hearing a rumour of a prodigious Well, which (as the Poets tell of Medea) would make old men become young againe, plaid the yongling to goe search it sixe monethes together, and in that inquiry, discouers this Continent: and repayring into Spaine, obtayneth this Prouince with the title of Adelantado. He returned with a Nauy and band of Souldiers, but at his landing was so welcomed by the Floridians, that many of his men were slaine, and himselfe wounded vnto death. [g] Pamphilo de Narnaes had no better successe: hee entred Florida, 1527. Aluaro Nunnez called Capo di Vacca or Cabeça de Vaca, and some of his company, after long captiuitie, escaped.

Pamphilo carried with him sixe hundred men: about the Riuer of Palmes his ships were wracked, and most of the Spaniards drowned. A few escaped drowning, but twelue fell mad, and like Dogges sought to woorrie each other. Scarcely tenne returned into Spaine.

These

These comming to Mexico, reported that they had restored three dead men to life. I rather beleeue, saith Benzo, that they killed foure quicke men.

b The Expedition of Soto, is, by Mr Hakluyt set forth in English, being written by a Portugal Gentleman of Eluas, employed therein. It was Anno 1538.

Don Ferdinando de Soto [b] enriched with the spoiles of Atibaliba King of Peru, in which action he was a Captain and Horseman, heere found place to spend that which there hee had gotten. For hauing obtained the gouernment of Florida, and gathered a band of sixe hundred men for that Expedition, in it he spent fiue yeares searching for Minerals, till hee lost himselfe. Iulian Samado, and Abenmada made sute for the like grant, but could not obtaine it. Fryer Luys de Beluastro, and other Dominicks had vndertaken, by the way of preaching, to haue reduced the Floridians to Christianity, and the Spanish obedience, and were sent at the Emperours charge: but no sooner set foot on shore, then hee and two of his companions were taken by the Sauages, and cruelly slaine and eaten, their shauen scalpes being hanged vp in their Temple for a monument. This hapned in the yeere 1549. In the yeere 1524. Francis the first, the French King, had sent Iohn [c] de Verrazano hither, but, because hee rather sought to discouer all along the Coast, then to search or settle within Land, I passe him ouer. In the yeere, 1562. That Worthy of France, [d] Chastillon, Champion of Religion, and of his Countrey, sent Captaine Iohn Ribaults, to discouer and Plant in these parts, which his Voyage and Plantation is written by Rene [c] Laudonniere, one employed therein. Hee left Capt. Albert there with some of his company, who built a Fort called Charles Fort: but this Albert was slaine in a mutiny by his Souldiers, and they returning home, were so pursued by Famine, the Pursuiuant of Diuine Iustice, that after their Shooes and Leather Ierkins eaten (their drinke being Sea-water, or their owne Vrine) they killed and ate vp one of their owne company. Laudonniere was sent thither againe to inhabite, Anno 1564. and the next yeere Ribault was sent to supply his place.

c Iohn de Verrazz. ap. Hak. to. 3

d Of his life there is a speciall booke.

c Rene Laud. ap. Hak.

But vncouth [f] Famine had so wasted and consumed the French, before his arriuall, that the very bones of most of the Souldiers pierced thorow their starued skinnes in many places of their bodies, as if they would now trust the emptie hands no longer, but would become their owne Purueyers, and looke out for themselues. And yet, better it is to fall into the hands of God, then of mercilesse men: Famine being but a meere Executioner to Gods Iustice, but these executing also a Diuelish malice. Such were the Spaniards, who were sent thither vnder the conduct of Don Pedro Melendes, which massacred all of euery sexe and age, which they found in the fort: and Ribault being cast by shipwracke on the shore, and receiued of Vallemandus the Spaniard, with promises of all kindnesse, was cruelly murthered with all his company, except some few which they reserued for their owne employments. The manner of it is at large handled by [g] Laudonniere, [h] by Morgues, by [i] Challusius, which were as brands by diuine hand plucked out of the Spanish combustion. The Petition or Supplication put [k] vp by the Orphanes, Widowes, and distressed kindred of that massacred number to Charles the Ninth, mentioneth nine hundred, which perished in this bloudy deluge.

The Spaniards hauing laid the foundations of their habitation in bloud, found it too slippery to build any sure habitation thereon. For their cruelties both to the French and Floridians were retorted vpon themselues, in the yeere 1567. by [l] Monsieur Dominique de Gorgues, and his Associates, assisted by the Natiue inhabitants, and Florida was left destitute of Christian Inhabitants. Thus hath Florida beene first courted by the English, wooed by the Spanish, almost wonne by the French, and yet remaines a rich and beautifull Virgin, waiting till the Neighbour Virginia bestow on her an English Bridegroome, who as making the first loue, may lay the iustest challenge vnto her.

Her riches are such, that [m] Cabeza de Vaca, who was one of Naruaes wracked companie, and Sotos Corriuall in this Floridian sute, and had trauelled thorow a great part of the In-land) affirmed to Charles the Emperour, that Florida was the richest Countrey of the World, and that he had therein seene Gold and Siluer, and Stones of great value. Besides there is great varietie of [n] Trees, Fruits, Fowles, Beasts, Beares, Leopards, Ounces, Wolues, wilde Dogges, Goats, Hares, Conies, Deere; Oxen with woolly hydes, Camels backs, and Horses manes. Sir Iohn Hawkins his second Voyage, published by Master Hakluyt, mentioneth Vnicornes hornes amongst the Floridians, which they weare about their necks, whereof the French-men obtained many pieces: and that they affirme, there are many of those beasts with one horne, which they put into the water before they drinke. Haply, this might be a tale of the French, to sell such pieces deare to the English, or the horne of some other beast, or of the Sea-Vnicorne. Our Discourse hath most right vnto their Rites. For their many Cities, the manner of their building, the manners of their Inhabitants, I would not bee so long. Morgues [o] hath let vs see them in the Pictures.

They wall or impale them with posts fastned in the ground, the circle as of a Snaile, comming within that point where it began, and leauing a way but for two men to enter; at either ther end of that double empaling or entrance, ſtand two Watch-towres, one within, the other without the Citie, where Watch-men alway are ſet for defence: their houſes are rounds their apparell nakednesſe, except a beaſts skin, or ſome ornament of Moſſe about their ſecret parts. They paint and raze their skins with great cunning; the ſmart makes them ſicke ſeuen or eight dayes after; they rubbe ouer thoſe raſed workes, with a certaine herbe, which coloureth the ſame, ſo as it cannot be done away. They paint their faces, and their skins cunningly (this Morgues a Painter being Iudge) euen to admiration. They let the nailes on their toes and fingers grow long: they are tall, nimble comely.

§. II.

Of their Cuſtomes, Manners and Superſtitions.

THey warre [a] alway one Country vpon another, and kill all the men they can take; the women and children they bring vp: they cut off the haire of the head together with the skin, and dry it, to reſerue the ſame as a monument of their valour. After their returne from the warres, if they be victorious, they make a ſolemne Feaſt, which laſteth three dayes, with Dances and Songs to the honour of the Sunne. For the Sunne and Moone are their Deities. Their Prieſts are Magicians alſo, and Phyſicians with them. They haue many Hermaphrodites, which are put to great drudgerie, and made to beare all their carriages. In neceſſitie they will eate coales, and put ſand in their Pottage. Three moneths in the yeere they forſake their houſes, and liue in the Woods: againſt this time they haue made their prouiſion of victuall, drying the ſame in the ſmoke. They meete in conſultation euery morning in a great common houſe, whither the King reſorteth and his Senators, which after ſalutation, ſit downe in a round. They conſult with the Iawas or Prieſt. And after this they drinke Caſſine, which is very hote, made of the leaues of a certaine Tree, which none may taſte that hath not before made his valour euident in the Warres. It ſets them in a ſweat, and taketh away hunger and thirſt foure and twentie houres after. When a King dyeth, they bury him very ſolemnely, and vpon his graue they ſet the Cup wherein he was wont to drinke: and round about the graue they ſticke many Arrowes, weeping and faſting three dayes together without ceaſing. All the Kings which were his friends, make the like mourning: and in token of their loue, cut off halfe their haire (which they otherwiſe weare long, knit vp behind) both men and women. During the ſpace of ſixe Moones (ſo they reckon their moneths) there are certaine women appointed which bewayle his death, crying with a loud voyce thrice a day, at morning, noone, and euening. All the goods of this King are put into his houſe, which afterwards they ſet on fire. The like is done with the Goods of the Prieſts, who are buried in their Houſes, and then both Houſe and Goods burned.

a Laudonniere.

The women [b] that haue loſt their Husbands in the Warres, preſent themſelues before the King, ſitting on their heeles, with great lamentations ſuing for reuenge, and they with other Widowes ſpend ſome dayes in mourning at their husbands graues, and carry thither the Cup wherein he had wont to drinke: they cut alſo their haire neere the eares, ſtrewing the ſame in the Sepulchre, There they caſt alſo their weapons. They may not marry againe till their haire be growne that it may couer their ſhoulders.

b Morgues. Icon. 18. 19.

When any is ſicke, they lay him flat on a forme, and with a ſharpe ſhell raſing off the skin of his forehead, ſucke out the bloud with their mouthes, ſpitting it out into ſome Veſſell. The women that giue ſucke, or are great with child, come to drinke the ſame, eſpecially if it be of a luſty youngman, that their milke may be bettered, and the child thereby nouriſhed, may be ſtronger.

Ribault [c] at his firſt being there, had fixed a certaine Pillar of ſtone, engrauen with the Armes of France on a Hill in an Iland, which Laudonniere at his comming found the Floridians worſhipping as their Idoll, with kiſſes, kneeling, and other Deuotions. Before the ſame lay diuers Offerings of fruits of the Country, Roots (which they vſed eyther for food or Phyſicke) veſſels full of ſweet Oyles, with Bowes and Arrowes. It was girt about with Garlands of Flowres, and boughes of the beſt trees, from the top to the bottome. King Athore himſelfe performed the ſame honour to this Pillar, that hee receiued of his Subiects. The King Athore was a goodly perſonage, higher by a foot and halfe then any of the French, repreſenting a kind of Maieſtie and grauitie in his demeanure. He had married his owne Mother, and had by her diuers Children of both ſexes; but after ſhe was eſpouſed to him, his Father Satouriona did not touch her.

c Icon. 8.

This

This [d] Satouriona when he went to warre, in the presence of the French vsed these Ceremonies: The Kings his coadiutors sitting around, hee placed himselfe in the midst, at his right hand had a fire, and at his left two vessels full of water. Then did hee expresse indignation and anger in his lookes, gesture, hollow murmurings, and loud cryes, answered with the like from his Souldiers: and taking a woodden dish, turned himselfe to the Sunne, as thence desiring victorie, and that as he now shed the water in the dish, so he might shed the bloud of his Enemies. Hurling therefore the water with great violence into the Ayre, and therewith besprinkling his Souldiers, he said, Doe you thus with the bloud of our Enemies: and powring the water which was in the other vessell on the fire, So (saith hee) may you extinguish your foes, and bring backe the skins of their heads. Outina [e] or Vtina another King was an Enemie to this Satouriona: he in his expedition which hee made against his Enemies (wherein he was assisted by the French) consulted with this Magician about his successe. He espying a Frenchmans Target, demandeth the same, and (in the mids of the Armie) placeth it on the ground, drawing a circle fiue foote ouer about it, adding also certaine notes and characters: then did he set himselfe vpon the Target, sitting vpon his heeles, mumbling I know not what, with variety of gestures about the space of a quarter of an houre: after which he appeared so transformed into deformed shapes, that he looked not like a man, wreathed his limbes, his bones cracking, with other actions seeming supernaturall. At last he returnes himselfe as it were weary and astonished, and comming out of the Circle, saluted the King, and told him the number of their Enemies and place of their encamping, which they found very true. This King was called Holata Outina, which signifieth, a King of Kings, and yet had but a few hundreths of men in his Armie, which he [f] conducted in their rankes, himselfe going alone in the mids. They dry the armes and legges, and crownes of their Enemies which they haue slaine, to make solemne triumph at their returne, which they doe, fastning them on Poles pitched in the ground, the men and women sitting round about, and the Magician with an Image in his hand, mumbling curses against the Enemie: ouer-against him are three men kneeling, one of which beateth a stone with a club, and answereth the Magician at euery of his imprecations, the other two sing and make a noyse with certaine Rattles.

They sow or set their Corne rather, as in Virginia: and haue two Seed-times, and two Haruests, which they bring into a publike Barne or common Store-house, as they doe the rest of their victuals, none fearing to be beguiled of his Neighbour. Thus doe these Barbarians enioy that content, attended with sobrietie and simplicitie, which wee haue banished together out of our Coasts: euery one distrusting or defrauding others, whiles eyther by miserable keeping, or luxurious spending; he (which is [g] bad to all) is worst to himselfe. To this Barne they bring, at a certaine time of the yeere, all the Venison, Fish, and Crocodiles, (dryed before in the smoke for the better preseruation) which they meddle not with, til need forceth them, and then they signifie the same to each other. The King may take thereof as much as he will. This prouision is sent in baskets on the shoulders of their Hermaphrodites, which weare long haire, and are their Porters for all burthens.

They hunt Harts after a strange manner: for they will put on a Harts skinne, with the legges and head on, so that the same shall serue them to stalke with, and they will looke thorow the eye and the holes of the Hide, as if it were a Vizor, thereby deceiuing their Game, which they shoot and kill, especially at the places, where they come to drinke. Their Crocodiles they take in a strange manner. They are so plagued with these beast, that they keepe continuall watch and ward against them, as other-where against their Enemies. For this purpose, they haue a watch-house [h] by the Riuers side, and when hunger driues the beast on shore for his prey, the Watchmen call to men appointed: they come tenne or twelue of them, bearing a beame or tree, the smaller end whereof they thrust into the mouth of the Crocodile (comming vpon them gaping for his prey) which being sharpe and rough, cannot be got out, and therewith they ouer-turne him, and then being laid on his backe, easily kill him. The flesh [i] tasteth like Veale, and would be sauoury meate, if it did not sauour so much of a Muskie sent. Their sobrietie [k] lengtheneth their liues, in such sort that one of their Kings told me, saith Morgues, that he was [l] three hundred yeeres old, and his Father, which there he shewed me aliue, was fiftie yeeres elder then himselfe: when I saw him, mee thought I saw nothing but bones couered with skinne. His sinewes, veines, and arteries, (sayth Laudonniere, in description of the same man,) his bones and other parts appeared so cleerely thorow his skinne, that a man might easily tell them, and discerne the one from the other. He could not see, nor yet speake without great paine. Monsieur de Ottigni demanding of their age, the younger of these two called a company of Indians, and striking twice on his thigh, laid his hands on two of them, hee shewed that they were his Sonnes: and striking on their thighes, he shewed others which were their Sonnes, and so continued till the fift generation. And yet it was told them, that the eldest of them both might by the course of Nature liue thirtie or fortie yeeres more.

They haue a diuelliſh [a] custome, to offer the first-borne male-children to the King for a sacrifice. The day of this dismall Rite being notified to the King, he goeth to the place appointed, and sits downe. Before him is a blocke two foot high, and as much thicke, before which the mother of the child sitting on her heeles, and couering her face with her hands, deploreth the death of her sonne. One of her friends offereth the child to the King: and then the women which accompanied the mother, place themselues in a Ring, dancing and singing, and shee that brought the child, stands in the mids of them with the child in her hands, singing somewhat in the Kings commendation. Sixe Indians stand apart, and with them the Priest with a Club, wherewith after these ceremonies, he killeth the child on that blocke: which was once done in our presence.

a Morgues. Icon. 34.

Another [b] religious Rite they obserue about the end of Februarie: they take the hide of the greatest Hart they can get (the hornes being on) and fill the same with the best hearbs which grow amongst them, hanging about the hornes, necke, and bodie, as it were Garlands of their choisest fruits. Hauing thus sowed and trimmed it, they bring the same with songs and pipes, and set it on a high tree, with the head turned toward the East, with prayers to the Sunne, that hee would cause the same good things to grow againe in their land. The King and his Magician stand neerest the tree and begin, all the people following with their Responds. This done, they goe their wayes, leauing it there till the next yeere, and then renue the same ceremonie.

Ribault [c] at his first comming had two of the Floridians aboord with him certaine dayes, who, when they offered them meat, refused it, giuing them to vnderstand, that they were accustomed to wash their face; and to stay till sun-set before they did eate: which is a ceremonie common in all those parts. They obserue a certaine Feast called Toya, with great solemnitie. The place where it is kept, is a great circuit of ground, swept and made neat by the women the day before: and on the Feast day they which are appointed to celebrate this Feast, come painted and trimmed with feathers, and set themselues in order. Three [d] others in differing painting and gestures follow with Tabrets, dancing and singing in a lamentable tune, others answering them. After that they haue sung, danced, and turned three times, they fall to running like vnbrideled Horses, through the midst of the thicke Woods: the Indian Women continuing all the day in weeping and teares, cutting the armes of the yong Girles with Muskle-shels, with hurling the blood into the Ayre, crying out three times, He Toya. Those that ranne through the Woods returne two dayes after, and then dance in the midst of the place, and cheere vp those which were not called to the Feast. Their dances ended, they deuoure the meat, for they had not eate in three dayes before. The Frenchmen learned of a boy, that in this meane-while the Iawas had made inuocation to Toya, and by Magicall Characters had made him come that he might speake with him, and demand diuers strange things of him, which for feare of the Iawas he durst not vtter.

d These three are Iawas which are priests, magicians and physicians.

To prouoke them vnto reuenge against their enemies, they in their Feasts haue this custome: There is a Dagger in the roome, which one taketh, and striketh therewith one that is thereunto appointed, and then places the Dagger where he had it, and anon renueth the stroke, till the Indian falling downe, the women, Girles, Boyes, come about him, and make great lamentation, the men meane-while drinking Cassine, but with such silence, that not one word is heard: afterwards they apply Mosse warmed, to his side to heale him. Thus doe they call to minde the death of their Ancestors slaine by their enemies, especially when they haue inuaded, and returne out of their enemies Countrey without the heads of any of them, or without any Captiues.

§. III.

Of the more In-land parts of Florida, discouered by NVNEZ.

BVt let vs take view of the more Southerly and Westerly parts of Florida beyond the point. Of Pamphilo Naruaez his vnfortunate Expedition ye haue heard. The whole history written by one of his company, Aluaro Nunez, is extant in Ramusius, out of which I haue inserted such things as I hold most fit. At their landing in Cuba at la Trinita a tempest by land and sea assailed them, so furious, that it ouerthrew all the houses and Churches, making them to fly with no lesse feare of the Trees falling on them, and holding sixe or seuen together, lest the wind should haue lifted them into the aire: they heard also (or feare so phantasied) the noise of bels, cryes, flutes, and other instruments making this dreadfull musicke, to which the hils, trees, and houses thus danced: and after found one of the ship-Boats vpon the trees; the ships being perished. The first towne in Florida they came to, was Apalachen, which had not aboue fortie small low cottages, so built by reason of continuall tempests. From thence they trauelled to Aute, by the way encountring a Giant-like people, with bowes as big as ones arme, eleuen or twelue spannes long, where-with they shot both exactly and forcibly, piercing good armours. A long time they held on an vnprofitable march, till many of them were slaine or consumed by sickneſſe and famine, which made them bethinke them of building vessels there, to transport them. But their hard hap pursued them at Sea, and besides outward tempests, assaulted them with one inward (more implacable) of thirst, which forced them to drinke the sea-water, and that so greedily that some died therewith presently. Neither would the Sea continue this hospitalitie (how-soeuer inhospitall) but hauing satisfied himselfe in the persons of some, and goods of all, be-trayed the rest to the barbarous Indians, through many Nations of which they trauelled with as hard disaduentures as euer Virginia yeelded, euen when it was at worst; and let our most clamorous excepters bee Iudges. Cold, which then attended the Winter, was exceeding sharpe, and they naked: and yet Famine was more terrible then cold, which made fiue of their companie eate vp each other, till only one remayned. And no maruell; for famine which will be a trauceller and soiourner in all places, hath seemed to fixe his habitation in these, and to hold all the nations adioyning vnder his lawlesse law, and tyrannicall subiection.

q They called this place Malfata.

The first Indians they q met with, had one, and some, both of their teats bored thorow; in the hollow whereof (with no little gallantry) they weare a Reede, two spans and a halfe long, and two fingers thicke: and likewise for greater brauerie, weare another lesse Reede thorow their nether lip. They liued in these parts two moneths (which was the season of certaine rootes growing vnder the water, which they then liued on) at other times in other places, with fish, and what they can finde. When one of them hath a sonne dead, all of the kinred and people mourne for him a yeere, at morning and noone, & then burie him. These exequies they obserue to all but the old folkes, of which they hold no such account, as hauing alreadie liued out their time. They haue amongst them Physicians or Priests, whose dead bodies they burne with great solemnitie, and make powder of the bones, which the kins-men a yeere after drinke. These may haue more wiues, the rest but one. When any brother or sonne is dead, those of that house in three months space, seeke not abroad for their foode, though they die of famine, leauing that care to their kinsfolkes and neighbors, which some-times almost starue their cures. The Physicians vsed to heale with breathing on the sicke, and touching them, they beleeuing, that if stones and herbs haue such facultie being apply-ed, much more Man, as a more excellent creature: they would needes haue these Spaniards such Physicians, who (if you beleeue them) did many cures with great admiration, but could not cure their Famine and captiuitie in many yeeres.

r Al. Nunez. his peregrination thorow many sauage Nations.

This our r Author fled from these to the Queuenes and Marianes, which three moneths in the yeere leaue their former habitations, to goe seeke a kind of fruit called Tune, of the bignesse of an egge, blacke, and of good taste. These are festiuall moneths to these festiuall nations eating and drinking the iuyce of these Tune, yea, many months afore comforting their present famine, and pacifying their croking entrailes, with hope of the approaching Tune-season: and thus with words they solaced Aluaros impatient hunger sixe months be-fore he could thus indeed satisfie it. Their houses are Mats vpon foure Arches, shifted euery second or third day, to seeke foode. They sowe nothing, hauing as well a dogs ease, as hun-ger, yea, (like some of Duke Humfreys gallant guests) they set a good face on the matter and passe the time in mirth and dancing, when somtimes their teeth dance not in foure daies together. They doted so superstitiously on their dreames, that vpon this dreame-warning, they would kill their sonnes, and without so much, would leaue their daughters to be deuou-red of beasts, lest (said they) they should grow vp (as the times then were) by marriages with them, to increase the number of their enemies. They haue two or three kinder of bad Rootes, and sometime Fish, or Venison, but all rare. They eate Ants egs, Wormes, Serpents Frogs, Earth, Wood, Dung of wilde beasts, and keepe the Bones of Fishes and Serpents, to grinde, and eate afterwards. Their women and olde men are put to beare their burthens and drudgeries. They are molested with three sorts of flies, whose biting leaues a seeming leprie: they vse smokie fires in their roomes, almost with the price of their eyes, saue their skins: others carrie fire-brands in their hands, and therewith set all things as they passe, on fire, both to preuent them, & to hunt their game into fittest places for their taking the same. They haue Kine as big as in Spaine, with small hornes and long haire, 400. leagues along st the countrey.

Much like was the state of the Canagadi, Camoni, Auauares, Malicones and other Flori-dian nations. These keepe no reckoning of time by the Sunne or Moone, but (like Plautus his Parasite) by the bellie, which is Magister artis in obseruing the seasons of their fruits and and fish. They tell strange things of an euill Spirit, which in fearfull apparitions did astonish them, and cut their flesh. All these Indians haue a custome, not to lye with their wiues after they know them once conceiued, till two yeares after their deliuerie, and their mothers giue them sucke (he saith) till they be twelue yeeres old, and are able to get food for themselues: which they did because of the famine in those parts, whereby they would otherwise haue died. If any sicken by the way, they leaue him there to die, except he hath a father or brother which wil carry him (in this their fleeting habitation) on their necks. They vpon any discontent, diuorce themselues and marry to others, except they haue had children together: and in mutuall contentions they come to buffets and bastinadoes, till wearinesse, or their wiues part them: but neuer deale with deadly weapons, and sometimes separate themselues and their families, till time waste away their indignation, and then returne: yet are the fierce and politike in warre. a Great suckbigges.

These Nations, and the Susolas, Gomos, Camoles, Quitones, and other Names of Barbarisme, vse Tobacco, and a drinke made of the leaues of certaine trees boiled with water, and put vp into certaine vessels, which they drinke as hot as they can endure, crying meane-while, Who will drinke? And when the women heare this cry, they suddenly stand still, without stirring any way, although they be laden; they beleeuing that if any woman should then moue her selfe, some euill thing would enter into the drinke, whereof they must die soone after: and therefore if any such accident happen, they cast all away; and likewise if a woman passe by whiles they are brewing it, if the vessell be vncouered. When the women haue their naturall fluxe, they must be their owne Cookes, but for no body else. They haue some Men married to other Men, being attired in habit of Women, and performing onely womanly offices. In some places as they passed, their Physicians (which commonly are in sauage Nations, Magicians and Priests) had rattles of Gourds, which they suppose to come from heauen, and to haue great vertue, none other daring to touch them. Some vsed for boiling wild Gourds, not by putting fire vnder, but by heating stones continually in the fire, and putting them into the liquor till it seethe. Some people on the Mountaines, for a third part of the yeere eate nothing but a powder made of straw. In some places were trees of such venemous qualitie, that the leaues thereof in standing waters would poison whatsoeuer dranke thereof. Some acknowledged a certaine man in heauen called Aguar, who gaue them raine and all good things. All these people, as he passed with a Negro and two others, (after he had escaped some of his first Masters which held him in hard slauerie) held them for children of the Sunne, and therefore receiued them with great reuerence, and festiuall pompe, and conueyed them still to the next nation Westward towards the South Sea, till they came to Spaniards: alwayes vsing to rob those people to whom they deliuered them of their little wealth, which departed from the same with the greater content, because they serued the next people (and so successiuely) with like sawce. They found some rich Sables of muskie sent, and Emeralds. They were out in this Expedition and captiuity, ten yeeres before they could recouer Spaine, from 1527. to 1537. Sodomites.

§. IIII.

Other Obseruations of Florida.

These things following, Ortelius [b] saith, he had from his Nephew Celius Ortelius, by the relation of an eye-witnesse: The King giueth, or selleth rather, to euery man his wife. If a woman commit adulterie, she is bound to a tree, her armes and legges, stretched out all day, and sometimes whipped. A woman, three houres after she is deliuered of a child, carries the Infant to the Riuer to wash it. They obserue no discipline in their families with their children. They haue fleas, which bite so eagerly, that they leaue a great deformitie like a lepric after. They haue winged Serpents, one of which I saw, saith, [c] Nicolaus Challusius, the wings whereof seemed to enable it to fly a little height from the ground. The Inhabitants were very carefull to get the head thereof, as was thought, for some superstition. Botero [d] saith, that they haue three sorts of Harts, and of one of them make the same commodities which we doe of our Kine, keeping them tame, and milking them. The Spaniard hath three Garrisons on the coast of Florida, S. Iacomo, S. Agostino, and S. Philippo.

They are [e] much addicted to venery, and yet abstaine from their wiues after conception knowne. When [f] Ferdinando Soto entred Florida, he there found amongst the Indians one Iohn Ortiz a Spaniard, which by the subtiltie of the people, vnder colour of deliuering a Letter which they had fastened to a cleft Cane, was taken, and liued twelue yeeres with them. Vcita the Lord of the place made him his Temple-keeper, because that by night the wolues wolues came and carried away the dead corps. Hee reported that theſe people are worſhippers of the Deuill, and vſe to offer vnto him the life and bloud of their Indians, or of any people that they can come by: and when he will haue them doe that ſacrifice vnto him, hee ſpeaketh vnto them, and tels them that he is a thirſt, and enioynes them this ſacrifice. They haue a Prophecie, That a white people ſhould ſubdue them; wherein the French and Spaniſh haue hitherto failed in their attempts. Soto hauing in his greedy hopes neglected the many commodities he might haue enioyed, to finde greater, was brought to ſuch dumps, that hee thereon ſickened, and after died. But before he tooke his bed, he ſent to the Cacique of Quigalta, to tell him that he was the Child of the Sunne, and therefore would haue him repaire to him: he anſwered, That if he would dry vp the Riuer, he would beleeue him. And when he was dead, becauſe he made the Indians beleeue that the Chriſtians were immortall, the Spaniards ſought to conceale his death. But the Cacique of Guachoya buſily enquiring for him, they anſwered, that he was gone to heauen, as many times he did, and had left another in his place. The Cacique thinking he was dead, [b] commanded two yong and well proportioned Indians to be brought thither, ſaying, it was their cuſtome to kill men, when any Lord died, to wait on him by the way: which their eruell courteſie the Spaniards refuſed, denying that their Lord was dead. One Cacique asked Soto what he was, and why hee came thither? He anſwered, that he was the ſonne of God, and came to teach them knowledge of the Law. Not ſo, ſaith the Cacique, if God bids thee thus to kill, ſteale, and worke all kind of miſchiefe.

For their credulitie in like caſe, Laudonniere telleth, that a ſtrange and vnheard-of lightening hapned within a league of their Fort, which conſumed in an inſtant 500. acres of meadow, being then greene, and halfe couered with water, together with the foules that were therein. It continued burning three dayes together, and made the Frenchmen thinke, that for their ſakes the Indians had ſet fire on their dwellings, and were gone to ſome other place. But a certaine Paracouſſy, which is one of their petty Kings, or Caciques, ſent to him a Preſent, beſeeching him to command his men that they ſhould ſhoot no more towards his dwelling, thinking that the Ordinance had cauſed all this, which occaſion he vſed to his owne good, by arrogating that to himſelfe which he ſaw their ſimplicitie conceiued of him. Within two dayes after this accident, fell ſuch an heat, that the Riuer (I thinke) was ready to ſeethe: and in the mouth of the Riuer were found dead therewith, fiſhes enow to haue laden fifty Carts, whereof iſſued by putrifaction much ſickneſſe.

Calos is neere the Cape of Florida. The King thereof made his ſubiects beleeue, that his Sorceries and charmes were the cauſe that made the earth bring forth her fruit, and that he might the eaſier perſwade them, he retired himſelfe once or twice a yeere to a certain houſe, accompanied with two or three of his friends, where he vſed inchantments. If any man offered to ſee what he did, it coſt him his life. Euery yeere he offereth a man in the time of Harueſt, which was kept for that purpoſe, and taken of ſuch Spaniards as had ſuffered ſhipwrack on that Coaſt.

c Laudon. was told this of certain Spaniards which liued in thoſe parts.

They which further deſire to know the riches and commodities of theſe Countries, may reſort to the Authors in this Chapter mentioned. Sir Francis Drake, in the yeere 1586. beſides his worthy exploits in other places, tooke the Forts of S. Iohn, and Saint Auguſtine; whence he brought Pedro Morales, and Nicholas Burgoignon, whoſe relations concerning that Countrey Maſter Hackluit hath inſerted among other his painfull labours.

Dauid Ingram [d] reported many ſtrange things which he ſaith he ſaw in theſe parts, Elephants, Horſes, and beaſts twice as big as Horſes, their hinder parts reſembling Greyhounds; Buls with eares like Hounds, beaſts bigger then Beares, without head or necke, but hauing their eyes and mouthes in their breſts: and another beaſt, (Cerberus) he cals him Colluchio, which is (ſaith he) the Deuill in likeneſſe of a Dogge, and ſometimes of a Calfe, with many other matters, wherein he muſt pardon me, if I be not too prodigall of my Faith. He tels alſo of puniſhment of adultery by death, the woman cutting the adulterers throat, and the neereſt kinſman, hers, after many prayers to the Colluchio, and a further puniſhment, in that they haue no quicke bodie buried with them, to attend them into the other world, as all others haue. But they that liſt to beleeue, may conſult with the Author. Anthony Goddard, (another of Ingrams company, left by Sir Iohn Hawkins) going another way, at Panuco yeelded himſelfe to the Spaniards: with whom was Miles Philips, and Iob Hortop, whoſe diſcourſes of their diſaduentures with the Spaniards and Indians, Maſter Hakluit hath publiſhed: and hath Goddards alſo written.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Countreys situate Westward from Florida and Virginia towards the South-Sea.

§. I.

Of Cibola, Tigues, Quiuira, and Noua Albion.

WE haue hitherto discouered those parts of this Northerne America, which trend along the North Sea, which the English and French Nations haue most made knowne vnto vs: further Westward the mid-land countreys are not so well knowne; yet following our Spanish guides, wee here present them from their relations to your view. When as Cortez had conquered Mexico (as after followeth to be related) he was made Admirall of the South-Seas, but the gouernment of Mexico and New Spaine was, with the title of Vice-roy, giuen to Antonio de Mendoza. These two, partly in emulation of each others glory, partly in hope of enriching themselues, sought to discouer vnknowne Lands; the one by Sea; the later both by Sea & Land.

The Viceroy sent [d] as he himselfe testifieth, Francis Vasquez de Coronado, and Frier Marco de Nisa, with Stephen a Negro by land: out of whose relations we haue inserted that which concerneth our purpose. Marke [e] the Frier, and Stephen set forth with certaine Indians in this Discouerie: and Stephen going before, came to Ceuola, as Marke related, where hee was slaine: the Frier followed with his Indian guides, and passed thorow one place where was small store of Victuall, because it had not there rained, as the Inhabitants affirmed in three yeares space. The Indians call him Hayota, that is, a man come from Heauen. Hee passed on further, led by the fame of Ceuola, which with other sixe Cities were reported to be vnder the gouernment of one Lord, and to haue houses of stone, consisting of diuers stories, where were many Turqueses, with many other strange reports of their Markets, multitudes, and wealth. But because the Frier came not there for feare of the Negros entertainment, let vs listen to [f] Francis Vasquez, who came, saw, and ouercame. An 1540. He went with his Army from Culiacan, which is 200. leagues from Mexico, and after a long and tedious iourney, he at last arriued in this Prouince, and conquered (almost with the losse of himselfe) the first Citie of the seuen, which he called Granado. Twice he was striken downe with stones from the wall, as he offered to scale the same: He saith that their houses were of foure or fiue stories of lofts, to which they ascended on ladders; and that they had Cellers vnder the ground, good, and paued. But those seuen Cities were small Townes, all standing in the compasse of foure leagues, all called by that generall name of Ceuola, or Cibola, and none of them particularly so called, but hauing other peculiar names, they were of like building. In this Towne which he conquered, stood 200. houses, walled about, and 300. others not walled. The Inhabitants had remoued their wiues and wealth to the Hill. Hee reporteth of beasts there, Beares, Tygres, Lions, and Sheepe as bigge as horses, with great hornes, and little tayles, Ounces also; and Stagges. That which the Indians worshipped (as farre as they could learne) was the Water, which, said they, caused the Corne to grow, and maintained their life. Hee found there a garment excellently embroidered with needle-worke. Vasquez went hence to Tiguez, to Cienic, and to Quiuira, as [g] Lopez de Gomara reporteth. This way is full of crooke-backed Oxen. Quiuira is in 40. degrees, and the Countrey is temperate. They saw Ships in the Sea, which bare Alcatoazes, or Pelicans of Gold and Siluer in their Prowes, laden with Merchandise: which they tooke to be of China or Cathay.

The men in these parts cloath and shoo themselues with leather: they haue no bread of any kind of graine: their chiefe food is flesh, which they often eate raw, either for custome, or for lacke of wood. They eate the fat as they take it out of the Oxe, and drinke the bloud hot (which of our buls is counted poison) and the flesh they warme (for they seethe it not) at a fire of Oxe-dung. They rather may be said to rauin, then to eate it: & holding the flesh with their teeth, cut it with rasors of stone. They goe in companies as the Scythian Nomades, Tartarian floords, and many other Nations, following the seasons and best pasturings for their oxen. These Oxen [h] are of the bigneſſe and colour of our Buls, but their hornes are not so great. They haue a great bunch vpon their shoulders, and more haire on their fore-part, then on the hinder: and it is like wooll. They haue, as it were, a horse-mane on their backe bone, and much haire, and very long from their knees downwards. They haue great tufts of haire on their foreheads, and haue a kinde of beard vnder their chins and throats. the males haue very long tayles, with a great knob or flocke at the end: so that in some respect they resemble a Lyon, in other the Camels, Horses, Oxen, Sheepe, or Goats. They push with their hornes, and in their rage would ouertake and kill a horse; for the horses fled from them, either for their deformitie, or because they had neuer seene the like. The people haue no other riches: they are vnto them meat, drinke, apparell: their Hides also yeeld them houses, and ropes; their bones, bodkins: their sinewes and haire, thread: their horns, mawes, and bladders, vessels: their dung, fire: the Calues-skins, budgets, wherewith they draw and keepe water.

Gomara also mentioneth their sheepe, which they so call, because they haue fine wool and hornes: they are as bigge as horses; their hornes weigh fifty pound weight apiece. There are also Dogs which will fight with a Bull, and will carry fifty pound weight in Sacks, when they goe on hunting, or when they remoue from place to place with their heards.

The winter is long and sharpe, with much snow in Cibola, and therefore they then keepe in their Cellers which are in place of Stoues vnto them. In the height of thirty seuen degrees, at Tiguez, the cold was so extreme, that the horses and men passed ouer the Riuer vpon the Ice. They there tooke a towne after fiue and forty dayes siege, but with much losse, and little gaine. For the Indians killed thirty horses in a night: and in another slue certaine Spaniards; sent Onando vp into the countrey (they could not tell whether for sacrifice or for the shew) and wounded fifty horses: they drunke snow in stead of water: and seeing no hope to hold out, made a great fire, and cast therein all they had of worth, and then went all out to make way by force; where they were all in manner slaine, but not vnreuenged, forcing some Spaniards to accompany them into the Regions of Death, and wounding many more, both men and horses. The Snow continueth in these parts halfe the yeere. Quiuira is more Northerly, and yet more temperate. The Spaniards returned to Mexico in the end of the yeare 1542. to no small griefe of Mendoza, who had spent in this expedition six thousand Duckats. Some Friers stayed, but were slaine by the people of Quiuira, onely one man escaped, to bring newes to Mexico.

* Taking of Tiguez.

Sir Francis Drake sailed on the other side of America to forty degrees of Northerly Latitude, and with cold was forced to retire, although the Sunne followed him all the way from Guatulco hither (which he sailed from the 6. day of April, to the 5. day of Iune) as if that most excellent and heauenly Light had delighted himselfe in his societie, and acknowledged him for his Son, more truely then the Spaniards (whereof anon we shall heare) or that [b] Phaeton of the Poets, not able to compasse this compassing iourney: once, hee was so good a Scholler and learned the Suns instruction so well, that he followed him in a watery field, all that his fiery circle, round about this earthly Globe, carried with the mouing winde (as it were airie wings) new starres, Ilands, Seas, attending and admiring the English colours: and first of [c] any Generall, looseth the girdle of the world, and encompassing her in his fortunate armes, enioyed her loue. But I lose my selfe while I find him: and yet excellent names, I know not how, compell men to stand awhile, and gaze with admiration, if not with adoration. This our English Knight [d] landed on this coast in thirty eight degrees, where the inhabitants presented themselues vnto him, with presents of feathers, and balls of Net-worke, which hee required with great humanitie. The men went naked, the women knit loose garments of bull-rushes about their middles. They came a second time, and brought feathers, and bags of Tobacco; and after a long Oration of one that was Speaker for the rest, they left their bowes on a hil, and came downe to our men: the women meane-while remaining on the hill, tormented themselues, tearing the flesh from the cheekes, whereby it appeared that they were about some sacrifice. The newes being further spred, brought the King thither, which was a man of goodly stature: many tall men attended him: two Embassadours with a long Speech of halfe an houre, signified his comming before. One went before the King with a Scepter or Mace, wherein hanged two Crownes with three chaines: the Crownes were of knit-worke, wrought artificially with diuers coloured feathers, the chaines of a bony substance. The King followed cloathed in Cony-skinnes: the people came after, all having their faces painted with white, blacke, and other colours, euery one bringing his present, euen the very children also. The Scepter-bearer made a lowd speech of halfe an houre, taking his words from another, which whispered the same vnto him, which with a solemne applause being ended, they came all downe the hill in order without their weapons: the Scepter-bearer beginning a Song and dancing, wherein all the rest followed him. The King and diuers others, made seuerall Orations or Supplications to the Generall, to become their King: and the King with a Song did set the Crowne on the Generals head, and put the chaines about his necke, honouring him by the name of Hioh. The common sort leauing the King and his guard, scattered themselues, with their Sacrifices, among our people, taking view of all, and to such as best pleased their fancy, which were the youngest, offered their Sacrifices, with weeping, scratching and tearing their flesh, with much effusion of bloud. Engliſh miſliked their deuotions, and directed them to the liuing God: they ſhewed againe their wounds, whereunto the other applyed payſters and lotions. Euery third day they brought their Sacrifices, till they perceiued that they were diſpleaſing. And at the departure of the Engliſh, they (by ſtealth) prouided a Sacrifice, taking their departing very grieuouſly. They found heards of Deere feeding by thouſands, and the Country full of ſtrange Conies, headed like ours, with the feet of a Want, and taile of a Cat, hauing vnder their chins a bagge, into which they gather their meate when they haue filled their body abroad. There is no part of this Earth, wherein there is not ſome ſpeciall likelihood of Gold or Siluer. The Generall named the Country [a] Nona Albion.

§. II.

Of New Mexico and Cinaloa.

IN the yeere 1581. [b] Auguſtine Ruiz, a Frier, learned by the report of certaine Indians called Conchos, that toward the North there were certaine great Townes, not hitherto diſcouered by the Spaniards: whereupon, he, with two other companions of his owne Order, and eight Souldiers, went to ſeeke theſe parts, and to preach vnto them. They came vnto the Prouince de los Tiguas, two hundred and fiftie leagues Northwards from the Mynes of Saint Barbara, where one of the Friers was ſlaine by the Inhabitants. This cauſed the Souldiers to returne backe, but the Friers ſtayed ſtill behind. The Franciſcans fearing the loſſe of theſe their Brethren, procured Antonio de Eſpeio [c] to vndertake this Iourney, with a company of Souldiers. Hee paſſing the Conchos, the Paſſaquates, the Toboſes, came to the Patarabueyes, which is a great Prouince, and hath many Townes, their Houſes flat roofed, and built of lime and ſtone, their ſtreets orderly placed. The people are of great ſtature, and haue their faces, armes, and legges razed and pounced: Here [d] were many Lakes of ſalt-water, which at a certaine time of the yeere waxeth hard, and becommeth very good ſalt. The Caciques kindly entertayned them with victuals and other preſents, eſpecially hides, and Chamois skins very well dreſſed, as well as thoſe of Flanders: And paſſing many dayes Iourney further Northwards, they came where the Houſes were foure ſtories high, well built, and in moſt of them, Stoues for the Winter ſeaſon. The men and women weare Shooes and Boots with good ſoles of Neats Leather, a thing not elſewhere to be ſeene in the Indies. In this Prouince they found many Idols, which they worſhipped: and particularly they had in euery Houſe an Oratory for the Deuill, whereinto they ordinarily carry him meate: and (as the Papiſts erect Croſſes vpon high wayes) ſo haue this people certaine high Chappels, very well trimmed and painted, in which they ſay the Deuill vſeth to take his eaſe, and to recreate himſelfe as hee trauelleth from one Towne to another. In the Prouince of Tiguas there were ſixteene Townes, in one of which the Friers aforeſaid were ſlaine. Sixe leagues from thence was the Prouince Los Quires, which worſhip Idols as their Neighbours: they ſaw there certaine Canopies, wherein were painted, the Sunne, Moone, and many Stars. It is in 37. degrees and an halfe. Hence they paſſed, keeping ſtill their Northerly courſe, and found a Prouince called Cuuames, where were fiue Townes, one of which was Chia, which contained eight Market places, the houſes were playſtered and painted with diuers colours: they preſented them curious Mantles, and ſhewed them rich Metals. Beyond this they came to the Ameies, and fifteene leagues thence, to Acoma, which is ſituate vpon a Rocke: and hath no other entrance but by a Ladder, or paire of ſtaires, hewne in the ſame Rocke: all their water was kept in Ciſternes. They paſſed hence to Zuny, which the Spaniards call Cibola, and there found three Spaniards, left by Vaſquez forty yeeres before, which had almoſt forgotten their owne Language. Weſtward from hence they came to Mohotze, where were exceeding rich Mynes of Siluer, as likewiſe in ſome of the other. Theſe parts ſeeme to incline toward Virginia.

d New Mexico.

Martin Perez a Ieſuite writeth of theſe Inland parts, from Cinaloa 1591. that the flies about the Mountaine Tepeſuan (in 23. degrees) are ſo troubleſome, as no beaſt can abide there: the Cimmechi are warlike Indians. Some Spaniards kept there, which heard Maſſe ſcarſly once in a yeere. The Prouince of Cinaloa is watered with eight Riuers. The ſoyle fertile and ayre wholſome: extending three hundred miles Northwards, and within two dayes Iourney of new Mexico. The people weare many Earings in fifty holes which they make for that purpoſe, ſo that they are forced to ſleepe with their faces vpwards. The women are clothed beneath the waſte, aboue naked. Both they and the men weare long haire tied vp on knots, with Corals and ſhels therein: They are a handfull higher then the Spaniards, valiant, vſe poyſoned Arrowes, peaceable at home, terrible in warre, they haue many

Lan-

Languages. Some of them haue familiaritie and commit abominable sinnes with the Deuill. They vse Polygamy, and thinke it not vnseemely to vse the Mother, Sister, Daughter, as furthering domesticke peace. Thus respect they affinity, but of Consanguitie are very Religious. They correct not their children. Their Marriages are solemnized after content of Parents on both sides, with dances; the consummation is stayed till fit age of the parties, to whom they then leaue a House and houshold. They obserue a custome to make Gentlemen or Knights, giuing a Bow, and then setting him to fight with a Lion or wild beast, the death of which is the life of their Gentilitie. When one adopteth another, a stake is thrust into his throat, causing him to vomit all in his belly, and (as it were) his former birth together. They are great Gamesters, their play like that of Dice: in which they carry themselues very patiently without swearing or wording, and yet will lose the clothes from their backes, and goe home naked. If any be dangerously sicke, a Graue is digged and stands open, in which they bury him presently being dead, or else burne him together with his House and stuffe, and there couer the ashes: sprinkling the Sepulchre with certaine dust, whereof they make a drinke, and eate and drinke themselues drunke.

L.T. Toletus. Ludouicus Tribaldus Toletus in his Letter to Master Hakluyt 1605. writeth of one Iohn Onnate, who in the yeere 1599. trauelled fiue hundred leagues from the Old, to New Mexico. He sent his Nephew to Acoma (a Towne strongly fortified by Nature) to trucke with them, whom they deceitfully slue with his six companions. Onnate in reuenge, takes and kils the Indians and fires their dwellings: forced a great City to sweare obedience to the King of Spaine, and another Citie also greater then the former. They built a Towne named Saint Iohns: found Mynes of Gold and Siluer: hunted the heards of Cibola. In the yeere 1602. he made another Expedition to the Lake of Conibas, on the banke whereof was a Citie seuen leagues long, and two in breadth, the houses built scattering with Hils and pleasant Gardens betweene. The Inhabitants all had fortified themselues in the Market place which was very large: the Spaniards departed without assault. Neere California were found large Hauens, before vnknowne; and the Spaniards determined to build Forts.

Now that wee haue heard of the In-land Discoueries by the Spaniards, and that Nona Albion of Sir Francis Drake, let vs take some view of the Spanish Nauigation on these Coasts.

§. III.

The Discoueries of VLLOA and ALARCHON, on the Coasts of the South Sea.

[c] Ortes the Conquerour of Mexico sent Francis de Vlloa with a Fleet for Discouerie, in the yeere 1539. from Acapulco, which came to Santa Cruz in California. They sayled ouer the Gulfe, and came to the Riuer of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, where they beheld, on both sides, a goodly Country. I am loth to hold on with them in their Voyage, lest I saile from my scope, and leaue the offended Reader behind me. Here they found in their course burning Mountaynes, which cast vp fire, ashes, and smoke in great quantitie. They encountred with a cruell storme, and being almost out of hope, they saw, as it were, a Candle vpon the shrowdes of the Trinitie (one of their ships) which the Mariners said was Saint Elmo, and saluted it with their Songs and Prayers. This is the darkenesse of Popery, to worship a naturall light: yea that which hath little more then beeing, and is an imperfect Meteor, is with them more perfect then Humane, and must participate in Diuine worship. Without the Gulfe of California they found store of great fish, which suffered themselues to be taken by hand: also they saw weedes floating on the Sea, fifty leagues together, round, and full of gourds, vnder them were store of fish, on them store of fowle: they grow in fifteene or twenty fathome depth. They caught with their Dogges, a beast very fat, haired like a Goat, otherwise resembling a Deere: in this, neither, that it had foure Dugges like vnto a Cow full of Milke. But because they had little dealing with the Inhabitants, I leaue them, and will see what Fernando [f] Alarchon can shew vs of his Discouerie. Hee was set forth by Antonio de Mendoza, the Vice-roy, in the yeere of our Lord 1540. with two ships. He came to the bottome of the Bay of California, and there found a mighty Riuer, which ranne with such furious violence, that they could scarce saile against it. Here leauing the ships with some of his company, hee passed vp with some Peeces of Ordnance, and two Boats: and so drawing the Boats with halsers, they made vp the Riuer called Buena Guia: they were incountred with the Indian Inhabitants, who forbade them lanlanding: but Alarchon hurling his weapons downe, and pulling out certaine wares to giue them, appeased their fury, and caused them also to lay downe their weapons, and receiue of him some trifles, which he gaue them. Two leagues higher many Indians came and called to him: these were decked after a strange manner, some had painted their faces all ouer, some halfe way, others had Vizards on with the shape of faces: they had holes in their nostrils, whereat certaine pendants hung; others ware shels, hauing their eares full of holes, with bones and shels hanging thereat. All of them ware a Girdle about their waste, whereunto was fastned a bunch of Feathes which hung downe behind like a taile: they carried with them bags of Tobacco. Their bodies were traced with cole, their haire cut before, hung downe long behind. The women ware bunches of Feathers before and behind them. There were foure men in womens apparell. Alarchon perceiued by signes, that the thing they most reuerenced, was the Sunne, and therefore signified vnto them, that he came from the Sunne; whereat they maruelled, and tooke curious view of him with greater reuerence then before; brought him abundance of food first flinging vp part of euery thing into the Aire, and after, turning to him to giue him the other part; offering in their armes to carry him into their Houses, and doing else whatsoeuer he would haue them. And if any stranger came, they would goe and meet him, to cause him to lay downe his weapons, and if he would not, they would breake them in pieces. Hee gaue the chiefe of them small Wares. They needed not pray them to helpe draw the Boat vp the streame, euery one laboured to get hold of the Rope: otherwise it had beene impossible to haue gotten vp against the Current. Hee caused Crosses to be made and giuen them, with instruction to honour them, which they did with extasie of blind zeale, kissing them, and lifting them vp, euery one comming for them till he had not paper and sticks enow for that purpose.

And as he passed further, he met with one which vnderstood his Interpreter, and asked of him many questions, to which he answered, that he was sent of the Sunne; which the other doubting, because the Sunne went in the Skie, he said that at his going downe and rising, he came neere the Earth, and there made him in that Land, and sent him hither to visit this Riuer and the People, and to charge them not to make further warres one vpon another. But why saith the Indian, did he send you no sooner? he answered, Because before he was but a child. A long Dialogue thus passed betwixt them, the issue whereof was that the Indians cryed out, they would all receiue him for their Lord, seeing hee was the childe of the Sunne, and came to doe them good. This vse did hee make of their superstitious obseruation of the Sunne, which they worshipped because he made them warme (said they) and caused their crop to grow, and therefore of all things which they eate, they cast a little vp into the aire to Him. They warre one vpon another (a thing common to all Sauages) for small occasions: the eldest and most valiant guided the Armie (for in some places they had no Lord;) and of those which they tooke in the Warre, some they burned, and from some they plucked out the hearts, and ate them. Alarchon caused a Crosse to be made of Timber, commanding his owne people to worship it, and leauing it with the Indians, with instructions euery morning at the Sunne-rise to kneele before it. This they tooke with great deuotion, and would not suffer it to touch the ground, vntill they knew by questioning, how deepe they should set it, with what composition of gesture to worship it, and the like curiosities of Paganish Christianitie. He was told, that this Riuer was inhabited by three and twenty Languages, that they married but one woman to one man, that Maides before Marriage conuersed not with men, nor talked with them, but kept at home and wrought; Adultery was death; they burned the dead; Widdowes stayed halfe a yeere or a whole yeere before they married againe. Euery Family had their seuerall Gouernour; other Ruler they had none. The Riuer vsed at some times to ouerflow the bankes. These people told Alarchon, that in Ceuola they had many blue stones, or Turqueses, which they digged out of a Rocke of stone, and when the Gouernours dyed, all their goods were buried with them: that they eate with Napkins, many wayting at Table: that they killed the Negro before mentioned, because he said he had many Brethren, to whom they thought he would giue intelligence, and therefore killed him. An old man told him the names of two hundred Lords and people of those parts. This old man had a Son clothed in womans attire, of which sort they had foure: these serued to the [g] Sodomiticall lusts of all the vnmarried young men in the Country, and may not themselues haue to deale with any woman. They haue no reward for this beastiall trade, but haue libertie to goe to any House for their food: when any of them dye, the first Sonne that is borne after, succeeds in their number.

As for the more Northerly parts, both within Land, and the supposed Strait of Anian, with other things mentioned in Maps, because I know no certaintie of them, I leaue them. The way by Sea from these parts to the Philippinas, two of our owne Nation haue passed, whose Voyage, [h] as also that exact description of the same, by Francisco de Gualle, a Spanish nish Captaine and Pilot, Master Haklyt hath related; who hath in these, and other labours of like nature, deeply ingaged himselfe for his Countries good, and of his Countrimen meriteth an euerlasting name; and to me hath beene as Admirall, holding out the light vnto me in these Seas, and as diligent a guide by Land (which I willingly, yea dutifully, acknowledge) in a great part of this my long and wearisome Pilgrimage. And his helpes in the second Edition, haue much more obliged me (that I say not thee) vnto his laborious Collections; for which our English Nauigations, both for the memoriall of passed, incouragement of present, and instructions to the future, are (as to Neptunes Secretarie and the Oceans Protonotary) indebted beyond recompence: whereby he being [l] dead (whiles we write these things) yet speaketh. And although in this third Edition I could not obtaine like kindnesse from him, I know not how affected or infected with emulation or iealousie; yet shall his Name liue whiles my Writings endure, as without whose helpes and industrious Collections, perhaps I had neuer troubled the World in this kind. And this is my Epitaph in his memory; who hath yet a better, his owne large Volumes being the best and truest Titles of his Honour; and if some Iuno Lucina would helpe to bring forth the Posthume Issue of his Voyages not yet published, the World should enioy a more full Testimony of his paines in that kind.

CHAP. IX.

Of New Spaine, and the conquest thereof by HERNANDO CORTES.

§. I.

Of the first Discouerie by CORTES and others.

NOw are we safely arriued out of the South [k] Sea, and North vnknowne Lands, where we haue wildered our selues, and wearied the Reader in this great and spacious Country of New Spaine. New Spaine is all that which lyeth betweene Florida and California, and confines on the South, with Guatimala and Iucatan; how it came to be so called, asketh a long Discourse, concerning the Conquest thereof by Cortes, whose History is thus related.

k The Spaniards call all that the South Sea, which is on the further side of America.

Hernando [l] Cortes was borne at Medellin in Andulozia, a Prouince of Spaine, Anno 1485. When he was nineteene yeeres old, he sayled to the Iland of Saint Domingo, where Ouando the Gouernour kindly entertayned him. Hee went to the conquest of Cuba in the yeere 1511. as Clerke to the Treasurer, vnder the conduct of Iames Velasques, who gaue vnto him the Indians of Manicorao, where he was the first that brought vp Kine, Sheepe and Mares, and had heards and flockes of them: and with his Indians hee gathered great quantitie of Gold, so that in short time he was able to put in two thousand Castlins for his stocke, with Andres de Duero a Merchant. At this time Christopher Morante had sent (An. 1517.) Francis Hernandes de Cordoua, who first discouered Yucatan, whence he brought nothing (except the relation of the Country) but stripes: whereupon Iames Velasques in the yeere 1518. sent his Kinsman Iohn de Grijalua, with 200. Spaniards [m] in foure ships: hee traded in the Riuer of Tauasco, and for trifles returned much Gold, and curious workes of Feathers. Idols of Gold, a whole harnesse or furniture for an armed man of Gold thin beaten, Eagles, Lions, and other pourtratures found in Gold, &c. But while Grijalua deferred his returne, Velasques agreed with Cortes to be his partner in the Discouerie, which hee gladly accepted, and procured licence from the Gouernours in Domingo, and prepared for the Voyage.

l Gomara his third part, of the Conquest of the West Indies, translated into English by T. Nicolas.

m Of this Voiage, Reade P. Martyrs fourth Decade: and Gomara part. 1. and of all which followes in this Chapter. P. Mart. Dec. 5. Gom. vbi supra. and Cortes his owne large Narration to the Emperour. Ap. Ramus. Vol. 3.

Velasques afterward vsed all meanes to breake off, in so much that Cortes was forced to engage all his owne stocke, and credit, with his friends in the Expedition, and with fiue hundred and fiftie Spaniards in eleuen Ships, set sayle the tenth of February 1519. and arriued at the Iland of Acusamil. The Inhabitants at first fled, but by the kinde entertainment of some that were taken, they returned, and receiued him and his with all kinde Offices.

They told him of certaine bearded men in Yucatan, whither Cortes sent; and one of them Geronimo de Aguilar came vnto him, who told him, that by shipwracke at Iamaica, their Caruell being lost, twentie of them wandred in the boat without sayle, water, or bread, thir-thirteene or fourteene dayes, in which ſpace the violence of the Current had caſt them on ſhoare in a Prouince called Maija, where, as they trauelled, ſeuen died with famine; and their Captayne Valdiuia and other toure were ſacrificed to the Idols by the Cacike, or Lord of the Countrie, and eaten in a ſolemne banquet, and hee with ſixe other were put into a coope or cage to be fatned for another Sacrifice. But breaking priſon, they eſcaped to another Cacike, enemie to the former, where all the reſt died, but himſelfe and Gonſalo Guerrer a Mariner. Hee had transformed himſelfe into the Indian Cue, boring his Noſe full of holes, his eares iagged, his face and hands painted; married a wife, and became a Captaine of name amongſt the Indians, and would not returne with this Aguilar.

Cortes with this new Interpreter paſſed vp the Riuer Tauaſco, called of the former Diſcouerer, Grijalua; where the Towne that ſtood thereon, refuſing to victuall him, was taken and ſacked. The Indians herewith enraged, aſſembled an Armie of fortie thouſand, but Cortes by his Horſe & Ordnance preuayled; the Indians thinking the Horſe and Rider had beene but one Creature, whoſe gaping and ſwiftneſſe was terrible vnto them, whereupon they ſubmitted themſelues. When they heard the Horſes ney, they had thought the Horſes could ſpeake, and demanded what they ſaid: the Spaniards anſwered, Theſe Horſes are ſore offended with you, for fighting with them, and would haue you corrected: the ſimple Indians preſented Roſes and Hens to the beaſts, deſiring them to eate and to pardon them. Indian ſimplicitie.

Cortes purpoſed to diſcouer Weſtward, becauſe he heard that there were Mynes of Gold, hauing firſt receiued their Vaſſalage to the King his Maſter, to whom (hee ſaid) the Monarchie of the Vniuerſall did appertaine. Theſe were the firſt Vaſſals the Emperour had in New Spaine. They named the Towne, where theſe things were done, Victorie, before called Potonchan, containing neere fiue and twenty thouſand Houſes, which are great, made of Lime, and Stone, and Bricke, and ſome of mudwals and rafters, couered with Straw; their dwelling is in the vpper part of the Houſe, for the moyſtneſſe of the Soyle. They did eate mans fleſh ſacrificed. Potonchan called Victorie.

The Spaniards ſailed further Weſtward, and came to Saint Iohn de Vlhua, where Teudilli, the Gouernour of the Country, came to him with foure thouſand Indians. He did his reuerence to the Captaine, burning Frankinceenſe (after their cuſtome) and little ſtrawes, touched in the bloud of his owne bodie: and then preſented vnto him Victuals, and Iewels of Gold, and other curious workes of Feathers; which Cortes requited with a Collar of Glaſſe, and other things of ſmall value. A woman-ſlaue giuen him at Potonchan, vnderſtood their Language, and ſhe with Aguilar, were his Interpreters. Cortes profeſſed himſelfe the Seruant of a great Emperour, which had ſent him thither, whoſe power is ſo highly extolled, that Teudilli marueilled, thinking there had beene no ſuch Prince in the World, as his Maſter and Souereigne the King of Mexico, whoſe Vaſſal he was named, Mutezuma. To him he ſent the repreſentations of theſe bearded Men, and their Horſes, Apparell, Weapons, Ordnance, and other Rarities, painted in Cotton-clothes, their ſhips and numbers. Theſe painted Cottons he ſent by Poſts, which deliuered them from one to another with ſuch celeritie, that in a day and night the meſſage came to Mexico, which was two hundred and ten miles diſtant. Cortes had demanded, whether Mutezuma had Gold? Teudilli affirmed, and Cortes replyed, That hee and his fellowes had a Diſeaſe of the heart, whereunto Gold was the beſt remedie. Spaniſh incurable ſickneſſe.

Mutezuma ſent him many Cotton-clothes of diuers colours, many Tuffes of Feathers, two Wheeles, the one of Siluer, with the ſigne of the Moone, and the other of Gold, made like the Sunne; which they hold for Gods, and giue vnto them the colours of the Metals moſt like them. Each Wheele was two yards and a halfe broad. Theſe with other parts of the Preſent were eſteemed worth twenty thouſand Duckets. Mutezuma alſo profeſſed ioy, to heare of ſo great a Prince, and ſo ſtrange people, and promiſed prouiſion of all neceſſaries; but was very vnwilling that Cortes ſhould come to ſee him, as he pretended. Yet Cortes perſiſted in that his deſire of ſeeing Mutezuma, that hee might further acquaint himſelfe with the knowledge of thoſe parts.

The ſilly Indians hauing neuer ſeene ſuch ſtrange ſights, came daily to the Campe to ſee them: and when they heare the Ordnance diſcharged, they fell downe flat, thinking the Heauens had falne: the ſhips they thought were the God of the Ayre, called Quezalcouolt, which came with the Temples on his backe, for they daily looked for him. Amongſt the reſt, or rather aloofe off from the reſt, were certaine Indians of differing habit, higher then the other, and had the griſtles of their Noſes ſlit, hanging ouer their mouthes, and Rings of Iet and Amber hanging thereat: their nether lips alſo bored, and in the holes Rings of Gold and Turkeſſe-ſtones, which weighed ſo much, that their lips hung ouer their chinnes, leauing their teeth bare. This vglineſſe, they accounted gallantry, and ſuch vncouth deformity to be the only brauery. And thou Gallant, that readeſt and derideſt this madneſſe of Note for Fashion-mongers

Fa-

Fashion, if thine eyes were not dazeled with lightneſſe (light I cannot cal it) of ſelfe-reflected Vanitie, mighteſt ſee as Monſter-like faſhions at home, and a more faſhionly Monſter of thy ſelfe; thy Clothes and Othes, thy Geſtures and Veſtures, make thy naked Deformitie worſe then their thus deformed nakedneſſe: both indeed ſeeme to haue receiued ſome Helliſh Character (if there may be bodily repreſentation) of that olde Serpent in theſe new Faſhions, ſtriuing who ſhall ſhape himſelfe, neereſt to that miſhapen vglineſſe, wherein the Indian iagges himſelfe out of humane lineaments, the other ſwaggers himſelfe further out of all Ciuill and Chriſtian Ornaments. But theſe Faſhion-mongers haue made mee almoſt out of my faſhion, and to forget my ſelfe, in remembring their forgetfulneſſe.

Zempoallan. Theſe Indians of this New-cut, Cortes cauſed to come to him, and learned that they were of Zempoallan, a Citie diſtant thence a dayes Iourney, whom their Lord had ſent to ſee what Gods were come in thoſe Teucallis, that is Temples (ſo, it ſeemeth, that they called the ſhips:) which held no conuerſation with the other Indians, as being not ſubiect to Mutezuma, but onely as they were holden in by force. He gaue them certaine toyes, and was glad to heare that the Indians of Zempoallan, and other their Neighbors were not wel affected to Mutezuma, but readie, as farre as they durſt, to entertaine all occaſions of war with him. He ſayled from thence to Panuco, and paſſed the Riuer farther, till he came to a little Towne, where was a Temple, with a little Towre, and a Chappell on the top aſcended by twentie ſteps, in which they found ſome Idols, many bloudie Papers, and much Mans bloud, of thoſe which had beene ſacrificed; the blocke alſo whereon they cut open thoſe Sacrifices, and the Razors made of flint, wherewith they opened their breſts, which ſtrucke the Spaniards with ſome horrour and feare. They paſſed a little further, and there hauing taken poſſeſſion, in the Emperours name, of the whole Country, they founded the Towne De la vera Crux. Cortes reſigning his authoritie, and Officers being elected; and laſtly all with generall conſent appointing Cortes their Captaine.

§. II.

CORTES his Expedition to Mexico, and entertainment by MVTEZVMA.

CORtes went forward to Zempoallan; where hee was ſolemnely receiued and lodged in a great Houſe of Lime and Stone, whited with Playſter, that ſhined in the Sunne, as if it had beene Siluer; ſo did the Siluer-conceits of the Spaniards imagine, the deſire of that Metall hauing made ſuch an impreſſion in their imagination, that they told Cortes before he came at it, they had ſeene a Houſe with wals of Siluer. Here, and at Chiauiztlan, Cortes incited them to rebell againſt Mutezuma, and to become ſeruants to the Spaniards, which they did: and hee vnder-hand ſo wrought, that Mutezuma tooke him for his friend.

All his intent was to fiſh in troubled waters, and to ſet them both by the eares, that hee might watch opportunitie to benefit himſelfe. His owne people rebelled, ſome of whom he chaſtiſed with the halter and the whip for example to the reſt: and after cauſed all his ſhips to be ſunke cloſely, that they ſhould not minde any returne. Hee left an hundred and fifty men for the guard of the new Towne, vnder Pedro de Henrico, and with foure hundred Spaniards, fifteene Horſes, and ſixe Peeces of Artillery, and 1300. Indians, they went from Zempoallan, and came to Zaclotan, the Lord whereof was Olintler the ſubiect of Mutezuma, who to teſtifie his ioy, and to honour Cortes, commanded fifty men to be ſacrificed, whoſe bloud they ſaw, new and freſh.

They carried the Spaniards on their ſhoulders, ſitting on Beeres, ſuch as whereon they vſe to carry dead men. He bragged as much of the power of Mutezuma, as the Spaniards of their Emperour. Hee ſaid hee had thirty Vaſſals, each of which was able to bring into the field an hundred thouſand men of warre, and ſacrificed twenty thouſand men yeerely to the Gods: in this he ſomewat exceeded; the other was true, although ſome yeeres, the Sacrifices alſo were thought to amount to fifty thouſand. This Towne was great, and had thirteene Temples, in each of which were many Idols of ſtone, of diuers faſhions, before whom they ſacrificed Men, Doues, Quailes, and other things with great perfumes and veneration. Here Mutezuma had fiue thouſand Souldiers in Garriſon. Cortes paſſed from thence to Mexico by the Frontiers of Tlaxcallon, which were enemies to Mutezuma, whom he might eaſily haue ouercome, but reſerued, partly for the exerciſe of his ſubiects to the warr: partly for the Sacrifices to his Gods.

Bloudy Sacrifices.

Theſe ioyned an hundred and fifty thouſand men againſt Cortes, taking him for Mutezuma

ezuma's friend: and yet euery day sent him Guinny-cocks & bread, partly to espy his strength; and partly in a brauery, lest their glory should bee obscured in the conquest of men already starued. But when in many skirmishes and fights they could not preuaile against that handfull of Spaniards, they thought they were preserued from harme by inchantments: and sent him three presents with this message; that if he were that rigorous god which eateth mans flesh, he should eate those fiue slaues which they brought him, and they would bring him more: if he were the meeke and gentle God, behold Frankinsence, and Feathers: if he were a mortall man, take heere Fowle, Bread, and Cherries. At last they made peace with him, and submitted their Citie to him. Their Citie Tlaxcallan was great, planted by a Riuers side, which issued into the South-Sea. It had foure streets, each of which had their Captain in the time of Warre. The gouernment was an Aristocratie, hating Monarchy no lesse then tyranny. It had eight and twenty Villages, and in them an hundred and fifty thousand housholds, very poore, but good warriours. They had one market-place so spacious, that thirty thousand persons in a day came thither to buy and sell by exchange: for money they had none. Tlaxcallan a great Citie.

Mutezuma had sent before to Cortes, and promised tribute to the Emperour, whatsoeuer should be imposed; onely he would not haue him come to Mexico. And now he sent againe, that he should not trust that new friendship with the beggerly Nation of Tlaxcallan, and they againe counselled him not to aduenture himselfe to Mutezuma. Cortes held his determination for Mexico, and being accompanied with many of the Tlaxcantlexas, he went to Chololla, a little from whence Mutezuma had prepared an Army to intrap him in the way; but he finding the treacherie, it redounded vpon the Cholollois, the same day they had thought to haue executed the same vpon him. For this end they had sacrificed ten children, fiue males, and as many females, three yeares old, to Quezalcouatl their god, which was their custome when they began their Warres. He out-going them in their owne art of subtiltie, intrapped their Captaines in Councell, and sent his Armie to spoile the Citie, where were slaine thousands. There were twenty Gentlemen, and many Priests which ascended vp to the high Towre of their Temple, which had an hundred and twenty steps, where they were burned, together with their gods and Sanctuary. Cholollà.

This City had 20000. Housholds within the Wals, & as many in the Suburbs. It shewed outward very faire and full of Towres, for there were as many Temples as dayes in the yeere, and euery one had his Towre. The Spaniards counted 400. Towres. It was the Citie of most deuotion in all India, whither they trauelled from many places far distant in Pilgrimage. Their Cathedrall Temple was the best and highest in all New-Spain, with 120. steps vp to it. Their chiefe god was Quezalcouatl, god of the Aire, who was (they say) founder of their City being a Virgin, of holy life and great penance. He instituted fasting, and drawing of bloud out of their eares and tongues, and left precepts of Sacrifices. Hee neuer ware but one garment of Cotton, white, narrow, and long, and vpon that a Mantle, beset with certain red crosses. They haue certaine greene stones which were his, and are kept for great relikes: one of them is like an Apes head. Eight leagues from Chololla is the hill Popocatepec, or smoke-hill, which the earth seemeth to haue erected as a Fort to encounter and assault the Aire: now with smoky mists endeuouring to choake his purer breath, another while with violent flames, and naturall fire-works threatning to ioyne league with his elder and superiour brother to disinherit him: sometimes with showres of Ashes and embers, as it were, putting out the eyes, and sometimes with terrible and dreadfull thunders, rending the eares of that Airie Element; alwayes (such is the euent of warre) hurting and wasting it selfe, to indamage the enemy. The Indians thought it a place of Purgatory, whereby tyrannicall and wicked Officers were punished after their death, and after that purgation passed into glory. The Spaniards aduentured to see it, but two onely held on their journey, and had there been consumed, had they not by a Rock bin shadowed frō the violent eruption of the fire which then hapned. It chanced that the Earth, weary it seemeth of the Warre, as hauing spent her store and munition, agreed on a truce which continued ten yeares: but in the yeere 1540. it brake forth into more violent hostilitie then before, quaking and renting it selfe with vnbridled passion: and whereas the Aire had alwayes a snowy Garrison about her high tops and frontiers, to coole and quench her fiery showres, yet these did but kindle a greater flame, the ashes whereof came to Huexozinco, Quelaxcopon, Tepiacac, Chololla and Tlazcallan, and other places, ten, or as some say fifteene leagues distant, and burned their herbs in their Gardens, their fields of corne, trees and cloathes that they laid a drying. The Vulcan, Crater, or mouth whence the fire issued, is about halfe a league in compasse. The Indians kissed their garments (an honour done vnto their gods) which had aduentured themselues to this dreadfull spectacle. Store of Temples and deuotions. Popocatepet a burning Hill.

Cortes drawing neere to Mexico, Mutezuma feared, saying, These are the people which our gods said should come and inherit this Land. Hee went to his Oratory, and there shut Mutezumas Religion.

vp himselfe alone, abiding eight dayes in prayer and fasting, with Sacrifice of many men, to asslake the fury of his offended deities. The Diuell bids him not to feare, and that hee should continue those bloudy Rites, assuring him that hee should haue the gods Vitziliputzli and Tescatlipuca to preserue him, saying, That Quezalcouatl permitted the destruction at Chololla, for want of that bloudie sacrifice, Cortes passed a Hill six miles in height, where, by the difficultie of the passage, and of the cold (being alway couered with snow) the Mexicans might easily haue preuented his passing further. Hence hee espyed the Lake, whereon Mexico and many other great Townes did stand, Iztacpallapan a Towne of 10000 housholds, Coyocan of sixe thousand, Vizilopuchtli of fiue thousand. These townes are adorned with many Temples and Towers, that beautifie the Lake. From Iztacpalapan to Mexico is two Leagues, all on a faire causay, with many Draw-bridges, thorow which the water passeth.

Mutezuma receiued Cortes with all solemnitie on the eight of Nouember 1519. into this great Citie, excusing himselfe of former vnkindnesses the best hee could. Of his house, and Majestie and the diuine conceit the people had of him, we shall speake after more fully, as also of the Temples, Priests, Sacrifices and other remarkable things of Mexico.

Mutezuma prouided all things necessarie for the Spaniards and Indians that attended them: euen beds of flowres were made, in place of litter for their Horses. But Cortes disquieted with those thoughts which commonly attend Ambition (discontent in the present, hopes and feares of the future) vsed the matter so, that he tooke Mutezuma prisoner, and detained him in the place appointed for the Spaniards lodging, with a Spanish guard about him, permitting him otherwise to deale in all priuate or publike affaires, as before. Hereupon Cacama, Lord of Tezcuco, Nephew to Mutezuma, rebelled, but by treachery of his owne people was presented prisoner to Mutezuma. He, after this summoned a Parliament, where he made an Oration vnto his Subiects, saying, [f] That He and his Predecessors were not Naturals of the Countrey, but his Fore-fathers came from a farre Countrey, and their King returned againe, and said, he would send such as should rule them. And he hath now sent these Spaniards, saith he. Hereupon he counselled them to yeeld themselues Vassals to the Emperour, which they did at his command, though with many teares on his part and theirs, at this farewell of their libertie. Mutezuma presently gaue to Cortes, in the name of tribute, a great quantitie of Gold and other Iewels, which amounted to sixteene hundred thousand Castlins of Gold, besides Siluer.

[f] The like speech he had made at first to Cortes, who easily wrought on that aduantage applying this Tradition to the Spaniards. Cortes Narrat.

§. III.

The conquest of Mexico.

CORTES had hitherto a continuall victory in Mexico without any fight: but newes was brought him of Pamphilo de Narnaes, who was sent with eighty horse, and some hundreths of Spaniards by Velasques, to interrupt the proceedings of Cortes: who leauing two hundred men in Mexico, with 250. other came suddenly in the night, and took Nernaes prisoner, and returned to Mexico with Narnaes his company, now his followers also, where he found his men exceedingly distressed by the Citizens, for a murther committed in the great Temple at a solemn Feast, where in a religious dance they were slaine, for the rich garments and Iewels they ware, by the Spaniards. Cortes came in good time for the relieue of his men: and Mutezuma caused the Mexicans to bridle their rage, which presently was renued; and when Mutezuma was againe by his Guardians, the Spaniards, caused to speake to the people, a blow of a stone on his temples wounded him, whereof three dayes after he died.

Mutezumas death.

Cortes had some thousands of the Tlaxoltecas to help him, but was driuen to fly from Mexico with all his Spaniards and Indians, which he did closely in the night, but yet an all-arme was raised, and the bridges being broken, much slaughter of his people was made by the Mexicans, and all his treasure in manner lost. They pursued after him also, and had two hundred thousand in the field: when it was Cortes his good hap to slay the Standard-bearer, whereupon the Indians forsooke the field. This battell was fought at Otumpan.

At Tlazcallan, he and his were kindly entertained; they had prepared before 50000. men to goe to Mexico for his helpe, and now they promised him all offices of loyaltie and seruice. With their helpe he subdued Tepeacac; and built certaine Brigandines, and Frigats, which were carried many leagues on the backs of those Indians, and there fastned and finished, without which he could neuer haue wonne Mexico.

In Tezcuco certaine Spaniards had been taken, sacrificed and eaten, which Cortes now reuenged reuenged on them. Eight thousand men had carried the loose pieces and Timber of this Naule, guarded with twenty thousand Tlaxcalans, and a thousand Tamemez, or Porters (which carried victuals) attending. They calked them with Towe, and for want of Tallow and Oyle, they vsed Mans Greale, of such as had been slaine in the Warres. For so the Indians vsed, to take out the Grease of their Sacrifices. Cortes had here nine hundred Spaniards, of which fourescore and sixe were horsemen, three cast Peeces of iron, fifteene small Peeces of Brasse, and a thousand weight of Powder, and 100000 Indian Souldiers on his side. Hee made a sluce or trench aboue twelue foot broad, and two fathome deepe, halfe a league long, in which forty thousand men wrought fifty dayes. He lanched his Vessels, and soone ouercame all the Canoas of the Lake, or which were reckoned in all fiue thousand. The Spaniards brake the Conduits of sweet water, wherewith the Citie was wont to be serued.

Quahutimoc, now the new King of Mexico, receiuing incouragement from the diuelliſh Oracle, caused to breake downe the Bridges, and to exercise whatsoeuer wit or strength could doe in defence of his City, sometimes conquering, sometimes (as is the doubtfull chance of warre) conquered. Cortes had in Tezcuco ordained a new King, a Christian Indian, of the royall bloud, who much assisted him in this siege. The Spaniards being Lords of the Lake, and of the Causeys, by helpe of their Galliots and Ordnance, they fiered a great part of the Citie. One day the Mexicans had gotten some aduantage, and thereupon celebrated a Feast of Victory. The Priests went vp into the Towers of Tlalelulco, their chiefe Temple, and made there perfumes of sweet Gummes, in token of victory, and sacrificed forty Spaniards (which they had taken captiues, opening their breasts, and plucking out their hearts) sprinkling their bloud in the Aire; their fellowes looking on, and not able to reuenge it. They slew likewise many Indians, and foure Spaniards of Alnarado's company, whom they ate in the open sight of the Armie. The Mexicans danced, dranke themselues drunke, made bonefires, strucke vp their Drummes, and made all solemne expressings of ioy. Dread, Disdaine, and all the Furies that Passion or Compassion could coniure vp, had now filled the Spaniards hearts and their Indian partakers: and Cortes, that hitherto had hoped to reserue some part of the Citie, now did the vtmost that Rage and Reuenge could effect, helped no lesse within with Famine and Pestilence, then with Sword and Fire without. At last Mexico is razed, the Earth and Water sharing betwixt them what Fire had left, and all which had sometime challenged a lofty inheritance in the Ayre. Their King also was taken; all that mighty State subuerted. And as the Mexicans before had prophecied, That the Tlaxantlecal's should againe build the Citie, if conquered, for them; if conquerors, for the Spaniards; It was re-builded with a hundred thousand houses, fairer and stronger then before. The siege lasted three moneths, and had therein two hundred thousand Indians, nine hundred Spaniards, fourescore Horses, seuenteene Peeces of Ordinance, thirteene Galliots, and sixe thousand Canoas. Fifty Spaniards were slaine, and sixe Horses: Of the Mexicans, a hundred thousand, besides those which died of hunger and Pestilence.

This was effected Anno 1521. on the thirteenth day of August, which for that cause is kept festiuall euery yeere. For the Description of the Country wherein Mexico is situate, Cortes in his second Narration to the Emperour saith, it is enuironed with hils: (He telleth of some hils also in his iourney, wherein diuers of his people died with cold) in the middest is a plaine of 70. leagues compasse, and therein two lakes which extend the circuit of fifty leagues; the one salt, which ebbeth and floweth, (an argument for Patritius his opinion that saltnesse is a chiefe cause of that vicissitude of ebbing and flowing, in the Ocean) the other fresh: When the Water of the salt Lake increaseth, it runneth like a violent streame into the fresh Lake, which when it increaseth, is repaired againe by the like issue of this into the former.

Nunno di Gusman, p hath written his expedition into Mechoacan and other Countries of New-Spaine 1530. subduing and taking possession for the Emperour: Hee found some of them Sodomites, others Sacrificers of mens flesh, and some closely practising this butcherie after they had professed themselues Christians: none of them which durst looke a Horse in the face, but were afraid, that that Beast would eate them. The seuerall peoples by him reckoned, would heere be tedious to name: which we may say of the like made by Godoy and Alnarado. q Of the customes of the Ancient Mexicanes, one of Cortes his Gentlemen hath written a Treatise r extant in Ramusius, wherein are described their Citie, Temples, Rites of Sacrifice, and the like; as after followeth out of him and others.

CHAP. X.

Of the ancient Inhabitants of New-Spaine, and the Historie of their Kings.

§. I.

The Mexican Exodus and first founding.

HAuing now declared the subuersion of this State and Kingdome by the Spaniards, I hold it not amisse to looke backe vpon the first people which heere inhabited, with the beginnings and proceedings of the Mexican Empire. The [a] first Inhabitants of New-Spaine were very barbarous and sauage, which liued onely by Hunting, and for this reason were called Chichemecas. They liued naked, solitary in the Mountaines, without Tillage, Policie, or any religious Ceremonies: their wiues followed the same Hunting exercise, leauing their children tied in a Panier of Reeds to the boughs of some tree. They did eat what they got in hunting, raw. They ate also Snakes and Lizards, which they offered likewise in sacrifice to the Sunne, whom onely they worshipped, and that without any Image: they offered to him Fowles, from the Butter-fly to the Eagle. And some remnants of the like beastly men (as is said before) are yet found, which doe great hurt, and will not, by either cunning or force of the Spaniards, be reduced to any other course. They seeme to haue learned the Sauage nature of the wilde Beasts, of whom, and with whom they liue. By this meanes it came to passe, that this wilde Mountainous people left the best and most fertile part of the Country vnpeopled, which certaine remote Nations possessed, whom they called [b] Nauatalcas, for their ciuilitie. These came from those Northerne parts, which now they call new Mexico. The Nauatalcas paint their beginning and first Territorie in maner of Caues (because of their seuen Tribes, and men comming out of them. By the supputation of their Bookes, this departure was aboue eight hundred yeeres since, and (by reducing to our account) about the yeere of our Lord 720. Fourescore yeeres they stayed on the way, the cause whereof they ascribe to their Gods, which spake visibly to them, and bade them seek new Lands, that had such signes as they notified.

Thus they proceeded in seeking those signes, and peopled the best parts, still remouing their habitations as they found more fertile Countries, leauing onely the aged, sicke, and weary, with a few others, to remaine in the former. And by these leisurely proceedings, they entred the land of Mexico, about the yeere 902. after our account. Those seuen Nations came not all at once; but first, the Suchimilcos, next, the Chalcas, and thirdly, the Tepanetans, fourthly, those of Tescuco, after them the Tlalluicans; the sixt were the Tlascaltecans, which helped the Spaniards to conquer Mexico, and therefore are exempted from tribute to this day. These expelled, as their Histories say, certaine Gyants, whom in pretence of Friendship they had inuited to a banquet, and in their drunkennes stole away their weapons, and slew them. Neither doth this seeme a fable; for at this day are found dead mens bones, of incredible bignesse. I saw a tooth (saith Acosta) at Mexico, in the yeere 1586. as bigge as the fist of a man, and according to this, all the rest was proportionable. Three hundred and two yeeres after the first transmigration, those of the seuenth Caue or Line arriued, which is the Mexican Nation: they worshipped the Idoll Vitzliputzli, and the Diuel spake & gouerned this Nation: He promised to make them Lords ouer all, which the other six Nations possessed, and to giue them a Land plentifull in riches: whereupon they went forth carrying their Idoll with them in a Coffer of Reeds, supported by foure of their principall Priests, with whom he talked, and communicated his Oracles and Directions. He likewise gaue them Lawes, and taught them the Ceremonies and Sacrifices they should obserue. And euen as the pillar of Cloud and Fire conducted the Israelites in their passage thorow the Wildernesse, so this apish Diuell gaue them notice when to aduance forwards, and when to stay. The first thing they did whersoeuer they came, was to build a house or Tabernacle for their Vitzliputzli, which they set alway in the middest of their Campe, and there placed the Arke in the middest of the Altar. This done, they sowed the Land, and if their God commanded to gather, they did so, and if to raise their Campe, they obeyed, leauing the aged, sicke, and weary, to gather their fruits, and to dwell there. The chiefe Captaine whom they followed, was called Mexi, whence came the name of their [c] City and Nation. Their Idoll perswaded them, when some were bathing themselues in certaine Lakes, to remoue remoue the Campe closely, and steale away their clothes: whereat they which were thus forsaken, changed their language and manner of life, retayning alway their hatred to the Mexicans. They peopled the Prouince Mechouacan; from hence to Mexico is fifty leagues and vpon the way is Malinalco, which they say was peopled by a Witch and her familie, whom by the commandement of their God they left behinde, closly remouing the armie by night. They stayed in a place called Tula, where by stopping a Riuer, they drowned a Plaine, and planted it round with Willowes and other trees; and many liking the place, talked of staying there: whereat their God offended, threatned the Priests, and in the night slew those which had consulted of staying. Their hearts were found pulled out, and their stomackes opened; which, after that, they obserued in their Sacrifices. The Mexicans, by the aduice of their Idoll, proceeded, and by force made way thorow the Chalcas, and sent to the Lord of Culhuacan, who granted them the place of Tizaapan to dwell in, which was full of Snakes and venomous Beasts, which by the helpe of their God they tamed. He would not suffer them to stay there, but commanded them to proceed, and to seeke forth a Woman, whom they should name the Goddesse of Discord. Whereupon they sent to the King of Culhuacan, to demand his Daughter to bee Queene of the Mexicans, and Mother of their God, who easily condescended, and sent his daughter gorgeously attired. The same night she arriued, by order of their God, shee was murthered and flayed, and a yong man was couered with her skin, with her apparell thereon; and being placed neere the Idoll, she was consecrated a Goddesse and Mother of their God; they euer after worshipping the same, making an Idol which they call Teccy, that is, Our Grand-mother. The King of Culhuacan hereupon warred against them, and chased them out of those parts, by which meanes they came to the place where Mexico now is. Heere certaine old Priests or Sorcerers, entring into a place full of Water-Lillies, they met with a very faire and cleare current of Water, with Trees, Medowes, Fish, and other things: all very white, which were the signes their God had giuen them of their promised Land. In the night following, Vitzliputzli appeared in a dreame to an ancient Priest, saying, That they should goe seeke out a Tunall in the Lake, which grew out of a stone, vpon which they should see an Eagle feeding on small Birds, which they should hold for the place where their City should be built, to become famous through the world. Hereupon, the next day they all assembled, and diuiding themselues into bands, made that search with great diligence and deuotion.

Beginning of humane sacrifices.

In their search they met with the former Water-course, not white (as it was then) but red like bloud, diuiding it selfe into two streames, one of which was an obscure Azure. At last they espied the Eagle, with wings displayed toward the Sunne, compassed about with many rich feathers of diuers colours, and holding in his Tallons a goodly Bird. At this sight they fell on their knees, and worshipped the Eagle, with great demonstrations of ioy and thankes to Vitzliputzli. For this cause they called the Citie, which there they founded, Tenoxtitlan, which signifies Tunal on a stone; and till this day carry in their Armes an Eagle vpon a Tunal, with a bird in his Tallon.

g Mexico Tenoxtitan.

The next day following, by common consent, they made an Heremitage, adioyning to the Tunal of the Eagle, that the Arke of their God might rest there, till they might haue meanes to build him a sumptuous Temple. This they made of Flagges and Turfes, couered with Straw. Afterwards they consulted to buy of their neighbours Stone, Timber, Lime, in exchange of Fish, Fowles, Frogges, and other things which they hunted for in the Lake: by which meanes they procuring necessaries, buile a Chappell of Lime and Stone, and laboured to fill vp part of the Lake with rubbish. The Idoll commanded, that they should diuide themselues into foure principall quarters about this house, and each part build therein: to which he enioyned certaine Gods to his appointment, called Calpultecco, which is, Quarter Gods. This was the beginning of Mexico.

§. II.

The Historie of eight of their first Kings.

THis diuision seemed not equall to some of the Ancients, who valued their deserts farre aboue their allotted portion, who therefore separated themselues, and went to Tlatedulco: whose practices against the Mexicans caused them to chuse a King, to which Soueraignetie was chosed Acamapitzli, Nephew to the King of Culhuacan, and of the Mexican bloud by the Fathers side. Him by Embassage they demanded, and obtained in the name of their God, with this answere from the King of Culhuacan: Let my Grand-child goe to serue your God, and be his Lieutenant, to rule and gouerne his Creatures, by whom we liue; who is the Lord of Night, Day, and Windes: Let him goe and bee Lord of the Water and Land, and possesse the Mexican Nations, &c.

a Many of these Orations are expressed in Acostas seuenth booke at large, full of wittie inuentions and Rhetoricall flourishes.

Hee was solemnely welcommed by the Mexicans: welcome thou art (saith an [a] Orator vnto him in their name) to this poore House and City, amongst the Weedes and Mud, where thy poore Fathers, Grand-fathers, and Kinsfolkes endure what it pleaseth the Lord of things created. Remember, Lord, thou commest to bee our defence, and to bee the resemblance of Vitzliputzli, not to rest thy selfe, but to endure a new charge: with many words to that effect, expressed in the Mexican Historics, reserued by tradition, the children to that end learning them by heart, and these being as Presidents to them which learned the Art Oratorie. After this, they were sworne, and hee crowned. The Crowne was like that of the Dukes of Venice. His name Acamapitzly, signifieth a handfull of Reedes, and therefore they carue in their Armories a hand, holding many Arrowes of Reedes.

The Mexicans at this time were tributaries to the Tapanecans, whose chiefe Citie was Azcapuzalco: who iudging according to the nature of Enuie and Suspition, that they were so much weaker, how much the stronger they saw their neighbours, thought to oppresse them by a strange policie, in imposing an vncouth, and (in shew) impossible tribute: which was, that they should bring the Tapunecan King a Garden, planted and growing in the water. In this their distresse, Vitzliputzli taught them to doe it, by casting earth vpon Reedes and Grasse laid in the Lake, and planting in this mouing Garden, Maiz, Figs, Gourds, and other things, which at the time appointed they carried growing and ripe: a thing often since proued in that Lake, emulous no lesse of that glorie, to be accounted one of the Wonders in that New World, then those perfill Gardens, towred vp in the Ayre at Babylon, both heere and there the reason of Man according to his naturall priuiledge, subiecting to his vse the most rebellious Elements of Ayre and Water.

Mouing Gardens.

Acamapitzli, the Mexican King, after he had raigned fortie yeeres, dyed, leauing it to their choice to chuse his Successor. They chose his Sonne Vitzilovitli, which signifieth a rich Feather: they anointed him with an Oyntment, which they call Diuine, being the same wherewith they anointed their Idoll.

Vitzilouitli the second King.

Of their Coronation; thus [b] Lopez de Gomara saith, that this was done by the High Priest, attired in his Pontificalibus, attended with many others in Surplices; the Oyntment was as blacke as Inke. They blessed him, and sprinkled him foure times with Holy-Water, made at the time of the Consecration of their God. Then they put vpon his head a Cloth, painted with the bones and skuls of dead men, clothed him with a blacke garment, and vpon that a blue, both painted with figures of skuls and bones. Then did they hang on him Laces, and bottles of Powders, whereby he was deliuered from diseases and Witchcrafts. Then did he offer Incense to Vitzliputzli, and the High Priest tooke his Oath, for the maintenance of their Religion, to maintayne Iustice and the Lawes, to cause the Sunne to giue his light, and the Clouds to raine, and the earth to be fruitfull, &c. Lastly, followed the acclamations of the people, crying, God saue the King, with dances, &c.

[b] Lop. de Gom. part. 1.

He being crowned, and hauing receiued homage of his Subiects, obtained the King of Azcapuzalco his daughter to wife, by whom he had a sonne called Chimalpopoca, and procured a relaxation of Tribute from his father in Law. Hee was deuout in his Superstitions: hauing raigned thirteene yeeres, he dyed. His son then but ten yeeres old, was chosen in his roome, but was soone after slaine by the Inhabitants of Azcapuzalco. The Mexicans inraged with this iniury, assembled themselues, and an Orator, among many other words, tels them, That the Sunne is eclipsed and darkened for a time, but will returne suddenly in the choice of another King. They agreed vpon Izcoalt, which signifieth a Snake of Rasors, the sonne of Acamapixtli their first King. The common people were earnest with this new King, for peace with the Tapanecans, for the obtaining whereof, they would carry their God in his Litter for an intercessor. This was hindered by Tlacaellec the Kings Nephew, a resolute and valiant yong man, who also with perill of his life, vndertooke an Embassage to Azcapuzalco, and there defied the King, anointing him with the ointment of the dead, after their manner. The Commons of Mexico were herewith offended, and to pacifie them, the King indented with them, that if he lost the Field, they should eate him and his Nobles: they on the other side promising, if he did ouercome, to become his Tributaries (for before they enioyed much freedome) and to labour in his Fields and Houses, and to become his seruants in Warre & Peace. In fine, such was the valour of Tlacaellec the Generall, that the enemies were ouerthrowne, their Citie sacked, and the remainder of them made tributarie, the lands and goods of the conquered being diuided among the Conquerors, and some reserued to each quarter of Mexico, for the vse of their Sacrifices.

forced them to put on: but Izcoalt and Tlacaellec made them know, by their ruine, the Manhood of the Mexicans. They subdued also the Suchimilchos, and Cuitlauaca, a Citie in the Lake; Tescuco yeelded it selfe. Izcoalt after twelue yeeres died, and Motezuma the first was chosen in his stead. Motezuma the fift King.

Presently after his Election, they conducted him to the Temple with a great traine, where, before the Diuine Harth, (so called in regard of the continuall fire there kept) they enthronized him. The King there drew bloud from his eares and legs with a Griffons tallons, as a Sacrifice, and was congratulated with many Orations of the Priests, Ancients, and Captaines. And whereas before they had accustomed, in their Elections to make great Feasts and Dances, and wasted many Lights; He brought in the custome, personally to make Warre in some Prouince, thence to procure Sacrifices, to feast their Gods and Men. This he performed at Chalco, from whence he brought many Captiues, which on the day of his Coronation were sacrificed and eaten. At this Feast all his Tributes were brought in with great solemnitie, each Prouince marching by it selfe, besides innumerable Presents. All Commers were bountifully entertained, and the poore were clad with new garments, giuen them by the King. The Chalcas had taken a brother of Motezuma, and would haue made him their King, but he enioyning them to make a high Scaffold, ascended thereon, and telling them the Gods would not permit, that to be a King, he should be a Traytor vnto his Country, cast downe himselfe; whose death Motezuma reuenged, with the ruine of that whole Nation, conquering further vnto the North and South Seas, by the counsell and courage of Tlacaellec. This King instituted new Ceremonies, and encreased the number of the Priests: hee built the great Temple of Vitzliputzli, and sacrificed great numbers of men at the Dedication. Hauing raigned eight and twentie yeeres, he died.

Tlacaellec was chosen his Successor by the foure Deputies, and the two Lords of Tescuco and Tacuba (these were the Electors) but refused the Empire, as being fitter for the common good, as an instrument to another, then if himselfe weylded the Scepter. At his nomination they chose Ticocic, sonne of the late King, and piercing his nostrils, for an ornament put an Emerald therein. He, in seeking Captiues for the solemnitie of his Coronation, lost more of his owne people, and after foure yeeres was poisoned by his male-content Subiects. Ticocic.6.

Axayaca his brother succeeded, altogether of another spirit. In his time died Tlacaellec, chiefe Author of the Mexican greatnesse, whom before in his age, they vsed to carry in his Chaire, on mens shoulders, to Councell. Hee was buried more solemnely then any of the Kings, and his Sonne was made Generall for the warres. Axayaca conquered Tequantepec, two hundred leagues from Mexico, thence to furnish the bloudie solemnities of his Coronation. Hee added to his Conquests Guatulco on the South Sea: in single combate ouercame the Lord of Tlatelulco, and subdued those Mexican-enemies of the Mexicans, setting fire on their Citie and Temple. After eleuen yeeres hee died, and Antzol the eight King was chosen. Hee punished the pride of Quazulatlan, a rich Prouince, with those Captiues, to celebrate his Coronation-Feast, and extended his Dominion to Guatimala, three hundred leagues from Mexico. Hee much adorned his Royall Citie, pulling downe the old houses, and in their roome erected fairer. Hee let in a course of water to the Citie, because that of the Lake was muddie. But because they of Guyoacan vsed these waters, the chiefe man of that Citie, which was a great Magician, sought to hinder it, whereby the King being prouoked, sent to attach him: Hee escaped by his Protean Arts; now appearing like an Eagle, the second time like a Tygre, the third like a Serpent. But at last hee was taken and strangled, and the Mexicans forced a Channell, whereby the water might passe to their Citie, the Priests meane-while casting Incense on the bankes, sacrificing the bloud of Quailes; others winding their Cornets: and one of the chiefe went attired in a habit like to the Goddesse of the Waters, which was saluted and welcommed by all the people. All which things are painted in the Annales of Mexico: which Booke is now in the Vatican Librarie at Rome. Thus he enuironed the Citie with water, like another Venice; and hauing raigned eleuen yeeres, dyed. Axayaca.7. Antzol.8.

Of MOTEZVMA, and other Rarities of the Mexican Storie.

MOtezuma the second, was chosen, who before his Souereigntie, was of graue and stayed disposition, much addicted to his deuotions. Hee retired himselfe into a Chappell, appointed for him in the Temple of Vitzliputzli, where (they say) the Idoll spake to him; wherein also he hid himselfe, after hee had intelligence of this Motezuma.9.

this Election. From whence he was led to the Harth of their Gods, where hee sacrificed, with drawing bloud from his eares, and the calues of his legges. They attired him with the Royall Ornaments, and piercing his nostrils, hung thereat a rich Emerald. Being seated in his Throne, the King of Tescuco, one of the Electors, made an Eloquent Oration, which Ioseph b Acosta hath set downe word by word, and deserueth a roome here, if our hastie Pilgrimage would suffer.

b Lib. 7. cap. 20.

This Motezuma commanded, that no Plebeian should serue him in any Office in his house prouiding Knights and Nobles for that purpose. His Coronation was solemnized with Dances, Comedies, Banquets, Lights, and other pompe: the sacrificed Captiues were of a farre Prouince toward the North Sea, which he subdued. Mechouacan, Tlascalla, and Tepeaca, neuer yeelded to the Mexicans; which Motezuma told Cortes, that hee spared for the vse of his sacrifices, and the exercise of his Souldiers. He laboured to be respected and worshipped as a God. It was death for any Plebeian to looke him in the face; Hee neuer set his foot on the Ground, but was alwaies carried on the shoulders of Noble-men; and if he lighted, they laid rich Tapestrie, whereon he did goe. He neuer put on one Garment twice, nor vsed one Vessell, or Dish aboue once. Hee was rigorous in execution of his Lawes, and for that purpose would disguise himselfe, to see how they were executed, and offer bribes to the Iudges, to prouoke them to iniustice, which, if they excepted, cost them their liues, though they were his kinsmen or brethren. His fall is before declared: it shall not be amisse here to mention some prodigious fore-runners of the same. The Idoll of Cholola, called Quetzacoalt, declared, That a strange People came to possesse his Kingdome. The King of Tescuco, a great Magician, and many Sorcerers, told him as much. The King shut vp the Sorcerers in prison where they vanished presently: wherefore hee exercised that rage on their wiues and children, which he had intended against them. He sought to appease his angrie Gods by Sacrifices, and therefore would haue remoued a great stone, which by no humane industrie would be moued, as refusing his atonement. Strange voices were heard, accompanied with Earthquakes and swellings of the waters. A prodigious Bird, of the bignesse of a Crane, was taken; which on his head had (as it were) a Glasse representing armed men, and in the kings presence vanished. A stranger thing befell a poore man, who was taken vp by an Eagle, and carried into a certaine Caue, where he let him downe, pronouncing these words; Most mightie Lord, I haue brought him whom thou hast commanded. There he saw one like the King, lying asleepe; touching whom, hauing receiued threatning Propheſies, he was againe by that former Pursuiuant placed where he had bin taken vp. These things, as Diuellish illusions abusing GODS Prouidence and Iustice, and imitating his Power, to rob him of his glorie, deserue to be mentioned.

Ominous prodigies.

Mutezuma hauing intelligence of Cortes his arriuall, was much troubled, and conferring with his Councell, they all said, that without doubt, their great and ancient Lord Quetzacoalt, who had said, that he would returne from the East, whither he was gone, had now fulfilled his promise, and was come. Therefore did hee send Embassadors with presents vnto Cortes, acknowledging him for Quetzacoalt, (sometime their Prince, now esteemed a God) and himselfe his Lieutenant.

The Mexican Historie described in Pictures, and sent to Charles the fift, (which I haue seene with Master Hakluit) in the first part sheweth their first Expedition and Plantation in this place; then all drowned with water, with great bogs, and some drie bushie places: their Kalendar, and the names, yeeres, and conquests of their Kings. In the second part their tributes are described; the particulars whereof are, reparations of certaine Churches; so many baskets of Maiz grownd (holding halfe a bushell) and Almonds of Cacao, baskets of Chianpinoli, mantles, paid euery fourth day: and once a yeere Armours and Targets of Feathers; all this was paid by the Citie Tlatilulco. And in like proportion euery Towne and Nation subiect, was to pay the Naturall or Artificiall commodities thereof: as Armours garnished with feathers, rich mantles, white, or of other colours, Eagles aliue, beames of timber, boords, salt made in long moulds for the Lords of Mexico onely; pots of honie, Naguas and Huipiles (which were attire for women) Copale for perfume, Cotton, Wooll, Red-Sea-shels, Xicharas in which they drinke Cacao, others full of Gold in powder, each containing two handfuls, plates of Gold, three quarters of a yard long, and foure fingers bread, as thicke as parchment; Yellow Varnish to paint themselues, Bells, and Hatchets of Copper, Turkesse-stones; Chalke, Lime, Deere-skins; Cochinile, Feathers, Frizoles, Targets of Gold Diadems, Borders, Beades of Gold, Beades of Gemmes, Tigres-skins, Amber, Axi or West-Indian Pepper, &c.

Mexican Tributes from Tlatilulco, and from other places.

ned with a Lake, and the Lake also with Mountaines about thirty leagues in compasse; the raines falling from these Hils, cause the Lake.

In this City resideth the Viceroy, and heere the highest Indian Courts are kept. There are weekly three Faires or Markets, abounding with plenty of Commodities at a cheape price. Many Riuers fall into the Lake, but none goe out. The Indians know how to drowne the City, and would haue practised it, had not the Conspirators beene taken and hanged. The Indians here are good Artificers, Gold-smiths, Copper-smiths, Black-smiths, Carpenters, Shoomakers, Taylors, Sadlers, Embroderers, and of all other Sciences, and worke exceeding cheape, liuing of a little. They will goe two or three leagues to a Faire, carrying not aboue a penny-worth of Commodities, and yet maintaine themselues thereby.

Miles [c] Philips saith, that when Sir Francis Drake was on the South Sea, the Viceroy caused a generall muster to be made of all the Spaniards in Mexico, and found aboue seuen thousand households, and three thousand singlemen, and of Mestizoes twentie thousand. [c] Miles Philips.

Master Chilton [u] testifieth, that euery Indian payeth tribute to the King twelue Reals of Plate, and a Hanneg of Maiz (fiue Hanegs make a quarter English) and euery Widow halfe so much. And all their children, aboue fifteene yeeres old, pay after the same rate. He hath great gaine by his fifths, and by the Popes Buls: this leaden ware was worth to the King at first aboue three Millions of Gold yeerely. The greatnesse of exactions caused two Rebellions whiles he was there, and the King will not suffer them to haue Oyle or Wine there growing, although the Earth would prodigally repay them, that they may still haue need of Spaine. Tlaxcalla, for their merits in the conquest of Mexico, as before is shewed, is free: only they pay a handfull of Wheate a man in signe of subiection: but some later encrochers haue forced them to till at their owne charge, as much ground as their tribute would amount to. There are in it two hundred thousand Indians [u] Iohn Chilton.

Some of the wild people in New Spaine are deadly enemies to the Spaniards, and eate as many as they get of them. Iohn Chilton fell into their hands, but being sicke and leane, they thought (as a Captiue Wench told him) that he had the Pox, and was but vnwholsome food, and so let him depart. It is an ill wind that blowes none to good: sickneſſe the Harbenger of death, was to him a preseruer of life.

Mexico is now an [x] Vniuersitie, and therein are taught those Sciences which are read in our Vniuersities of Europe. This Vniuersitie was [y] there founded by Antony Mendoza; and King Philip erected a Colledge of Iesuites, Anno 1577. Mexico is an Archbishopricke. There [z] bee many Spanish Colonies or Plantations, Compostella, Colima, Guadaleiara, Mechocan, Citie of Angele, and others: whereof diuers are Episcopall Sees. Antonio Herrera reckoneth in this and other parts of America, fiue Archbishoprickes, twentie seuen Bishoprickes, two Vniuersities, foure hundred Monasteries and Hospitals innumerable. CHAP XI.

Of the Idols and Idolatrous Sacrifices of New Spaine.

§. I.

Of their Gods.

THe Indians (as Acosta [a] obserueth) had no name proper vnto God, but vse the Spanish word Dios, fitting it to the accent of the Cuscan or Mexican Tongues. Yet did they acknowledge a supreme power called Vitzilputzli, terming him the most puissant, and Lord of all things, to whom they erected at Mexico, the most sumptuous Temple in the Indies. After the Supreme God they worshipped the Sun, and therefore called Cortes (as he writ to the Emperour) Sonne of the Sunne. That Vitzilputzli [b] was an Image of Wood, like to a Man, set vpon an Azure-coloured stoole in a Brankard or Litter; at euery corner was a piece of wood [a] Naturall and Morall hist. of the Indies. lib. 5. cap. 3. [b] Hernando Cortes. Acost. l. 5. c. 9. Vitzilipuztlis wood like a Serpents head. The ſtoole ſignified that he was ſet in Heauen. He had the forehead Azure, and a band of Azure vnder the noſe, from one eare to the other. Vpon his head hee had a rich plume of feathers couered on the top with Gold: hee had in his left hand a white Target, with the figures of fiue Pine Apples, made of white Feathers, ſet in a croſſe; and from aboue iſſued forth a Creſt of Gold: At his ſides he had foure Darts, which the Mexicans ſay, had beene ſent from Heauen. In his right hand hee had an Azured ſtaffe, cut in faſhion of a wauing Snake. All theſe ornaments had their myſticall ſenſe. The name of Vitziliputzli ſignifies the left hand of a ſhining feather. Hee was ſet vpon an high Altar in a ſmall boxe, well couered with linnen Clothes, Iewels, Feathers, and ornaments of Gold: and for the greater veneration he had alwayes a Curtain before him. Ioyning to the Chappel of this Idoll, there was a Pillar of leſſe work, and not ſo wel beautified, where there was another Idoll called Tlaloc. Theſe two were alwayes together, for that they held themas companions, & of equal power. There was another Idoll in Mexico much eſteemed, which was the God of Repentance, and of Iubilees and Pardons for their ſinnes. Hee was called Tezcalipuca, made of a blacke ſhining ſtone, attired after their manner, with ſome Ethnike deuices; it had Earings of Gold and Siluer, and through the nether lip a ſmall Canon of Chriſtall, halfe a foot long, in which they ſometimes put an Azure Feather, ſometimes a greene, ſo reſembling a Turqueis or Emerald: it had the haire bound vp with a haire-lace of Gold, at the end whereof did hang an Eare of Gold, with two Fire-brands of ſmoke painted therein, ſignifying that he heard the Prayers of the afflicted, and of ſinners. Betwixt the two eares hung a number of ſmall Herons. He had a Iewell hanging at his necke, ſo great, that it couered all his ſtomack: vpon his armes, Bracelets of Gold; at his nauill a rich greene ſtone, and in his left hand a Fan of precious Feathers of greene, azure, and yellow, which came forth of a Looking Glaſſe of Gold, ſignifying that he ſaw all things done in the World. In his right hand he held foure Darts as the Enſignes of his Iuſtice, for which cauſe they feared him moſt. At his feſtiuall they had pardon of their ſinnes. They accounted him the God of Famine, Drought, Barrennelſe, and Peſtilence. They painted him in another forme, ſitting in great Maieſtie on a ſtoole, compaſſed in with a red Curtaine, painted and wrought with the heads and bones of dead men. In the left hand was a Target with fiue Pines, like vnto Pine Apples of Cotton; and in the right hand a little Dart, with a threatning countenance, and the arme ſtretched out, as if he would caſt it: and from the Target came foure Darts. The countenance expreſſed anger, the body was all painted blacke, and the head full of Quailes Feathers Quecalcauatl was their God of the Aire.

Quetzaalcoalt.

In Cholula d they worſhipped the God of Merchandize, called Quetzaalcoalt, which had the forme of a Man, but the viſage of a little Bird with a red bill, and aboue, a combe full of Warts, hauing alſo rankes of teeth, and the tongue hanging out. It carried on the head a pointed Mitre of painted paper, a Sithe in the hand, and many toyes of Gold on the legs: it had about it Gold, Siluer, Iewels, Feathers, and habits of diuers colours: and was ſet aloft in a ſpacious place in the Temple. All this his furniture was ſignificant. The name importeth Colour of a rich Feather. No maruell if this God had many Suters, ſeeing Gaine is both God and godlineſſe to the moſt; the whole World admiring and adoring this Mammon or Quetzaalcoalt. Tlaloc was their God of Water: to whom they ſacrificed for Raine.

e Gomar. part. 1 Tozi.

They had alſo their Goddeſſes, e the chiefe of which was Tozi, which is to ſay, Our Grand Mother, of which is ſpoken before; ſhe was flayed by the command of Vitziliputzli, and from hence they learned to flay men in Sacrifice, and to clothe the liuing with the skins of the dead. One of the Goddeſſes, which they worſhipped, had a Sonne who was a great Hunter, whom they of Tlaſcalla afterwards tooke for a God; being themſelues addicted much to that exerciſe. They therefore made a great Feaſt vnto this Idoll, as ſhal after follow.

f Ian. Douſa. Præcid. ad Arbit. l. 3. c. 1.

They had another ſtrange kind of Idoll, which was not an Image but a true Man. For they tooke a Captiue, and before they ſacrificed him, they gaue him the name of the Idoll, to whom he ſhould be ſacrificed, apparelling him alſo with the ſame ornaments. And during the time that this repreſentation laſted (which was for a yeere in ſome feaſts, ſixe moneths in ſome, in others leſſe) they worſhipped him in the ſame manner, as they did their God; he in the meane time eating, drinking, and making merry. When hee went through the ſtreets, the people came forth to worſhip him, bringing their Almes with children and ſicke folkes, that hee might cure and bleſſe them, ſuffering him to doe all things at his pleaſure; onely he was accompanied with ten or twelue men, leſt he ſhould flee. And hee (to the end hee might bee reuerenced as hee paſſed) ſometimes ſounded on a ſmall Flute. The Feaſt being come, this fat Foole was killed, opened, and eaten. The Maſſilians are ſaid f to haue vſed the like order, nouriſhing One a whole yeere with the pureſt meats, and after with many Ceremonies to leade him through the City and ſacrifice him.

g Lop. de Gom. part. 1.

h They had their Venus and their Bacchus, & Mars, and other ſuch Deities in Mexican appellations, as the Heathen, Greekes, and Romans, as after ſhall appeare.

Lopes g de Gomara writeth, that the Mexicans had two thouſand Gods, h but the chiefe were were Vitzilipuztli and Tezcatlipuca. These two were accounted Brethren: There was another God, who had a great Image placed on the top of the Idols Chappell, made of all that Countrey seeds, grownd, and made in paste, tempered with childrens bloud, and Virgins sacrificed, whose hearts were plucked out of their opened brests, and offered as first fruits to that Idoll. It was consecrated by the Priests with great solemnitie, all the Citizens being present, many deuout persons sticking in the dowie Image Gold and Iewels: after which consecration no Secular person might touch that Image, nor come in his Chappell. They renue this Image with new dow many times, and O terque quaterque blessed man hee that can get any Relikes of him. The Souldiers thought themselues hereby safe in the Warres. At this consecration also a Vessell of water was hallowed with many Ceremonies, and kept at the foot of the Altar for the Kings Coronation, and to blesse the Captaines that went to the warres, with a draught of it.

§. II.

Of their sacrifices of Men.

NExt after their Gods it followeth to speake of their [i] godlesse Sacrifices: wherein they surmounted all the Nations of the World in beastly butcheries. The persons they sacrificed were [k] Captiues: to get which, they made their warres, rather seeking in their victories to take them to kill. Their manner of Sacrificing was this. They assembled such as should be sacrificed in the Pallisadoe of dead mens skuls, of which we shall after speake, where they vsed a certaine Ceremonie at the foot of the Pallisadoe; they placed a great guard about them. Presently there stept forth a Priest attired with a short Surplesse full of tassels beneath, who came from the top of the Temple, bearing an Idoll made of Wheate and Mays mingled with Honey, which had the eyes thereof made of greene Glasse, and the teeth of the graines of Mays. He descended the steps of the Temple with all speed, and ascended by a little Ladder vp a great stone, planted vpon a high Terrasse in the midst of the Court. This stone was called Quauxi-calli, that is, the stone of Eagle: as he went vp and came downe, still he embraced his Idoll. Then went hee vp to the place, where those were which should be sacrificed, shewing his Idoll to euery one in particular, saying vnto them, This is your God. This done; hee descended by the other side of the staires, and all such as should die, went in Procession to the place where they should bee sacrificed, where they found the Ministers ready for that office. Six of the Priests were appointed to this execution; foure to hold the hands and feet of him that should be sacrificed, the fift to hold his head, the sixt to open the stomacke, and pull out his heart. They called them Chachalmua, that is, the Ministers of holy things. It was a high dignitie wherein they succeeded their Progenitors.

[i] Acost. l. 5. & Relat. del. Temistitan.

[k] So (some say) from the like practice of the Ancients victima was so called, and hostia quasi à victo, & ab hoste.

The sixt, which killed the Sacrifice, was as high Priest, or Bishop, whose name was different according to the difference of times and solemnities. Their habits also differed according to the times. The name of their chiefe dignitie was Papa and Topilzin. Their habit and Robe was a red Curtain with tassels below, a Crowne of rich Feathers, Greene, White, and Yellow vpon his head, and at his eares like pendants of Gold, wherein were set greene stones, and vnder the lip vpon the midst of the beard, hee had a Peece like vnto a small Canon of an Azured stone.

Papa the name of the Mexican high Priest.

The Sacrificer came with his face and hands shining blacke: the other fiue had their haire much curled, and tyed vp with Laces of Leather, bound about the midst of the head: vpon their forehead they carried small Roundelets of Paper painted about with diuers colours, and they were attired in a Dalmatike Robe of white wrought with blacke, in this attire representing the Deuill. The Souereigne Priest carried a great Knife in his hand of a large and sharpe flint, another carried a coller of wood wrought in forme of a Snake, all put themselues in order before a Pyramidall stone which was directly against the doore of the Chappell of their Idoll. This stone was so pointed, that the man which was to bee sacrificed, being layed thereon vpon his backe, did bend in such sort, as letting the Knife but fall vpon his stomacke, it opened very easily in the middest. Then did the Guard cause them to mount vp certaine large staires in ranke to this place, and as euery one came in their order, the six Sacrificers tooke him, one by one foot, another by the other; and one by one hand, another by the other, all naked, and cast him on his backe vpon this pointed stone: where the fift of them put the coller of wood about his necke, and the high Priest opened his stomacke with the Knife with a strange dexteritie and nimblenesse, pulling out his heart with his hands, the which he shewed smoking vnto the Sun, to whom he did offer this heat:

and

and presently he turned towards the Idoll, and did cast the heart at his face, and then cast away the body, tumbling it downe the staires of the Temple, there being not two foot space betwixt the stone and the first step. In this sort they sacrificed them all one after another. Their Masters, or such as had taken them, tooke vp the bodies and carried them away, and diuiding them amongst them, did eate them. There were euer forty or fifty at the least, thus sacrificed. The Neighbour Nations did the like, imitating the Mexicans in this sacred Butchery.

There was another kind of Sacrifice, which they made in diuers Feasts, called Racaxipe Uelitzli, which is as much as the flaying of men, because they flayed the Sacrifice (as is said) and therewith apparelled a man appointed to that end. This man [1] went dancing and leaping through all the Houses and Market places of the Citie, euery one being forced to offer something vnto him: which, if any refused, he would strike him ouer the face with the corner of the skin, defiling him with the congealed bloud. This continued till the skinne did stinke, during which time much Almes was gathered, which they imployed in necessaries for their deuotions. In many of these Feasts they made a challenge betweene him that did Sacrifice, and him that should bee sacrificed, thus: They tied the slaue by one foote to a wheele of stone, giuing him a Sword and Target in his hands to defend himselfe: then stepped forth the other armed in like manner. And if he, that should be Sacrificed, defended himselfe valiantly against the other hee was freed, and was reputed a famous Captaine: but if he were vanquished, he was Sacrificed on that stone whereto he was tied.

[1] Gomara saith, that the ancient persons, & sometimes the King himselfe, would put on this skin, being of a principall Captiue.

They euery yeere gaue one slaue to the Priests, to represent their Idoll. At his first entry into the office after he had beene well washed, they adorned him with the Idols ornaments and name, as before is said: and if he escaped before his time of Sacrifice was expired, the chiefe of his Guard was substituted to that representation and Sacrifice. Hee had the most honourable lodging in all the Temple, where hee did eate and drinke, and whither all the chiefe Ministers came to serue and honour him: hee was accompanied with Noblemen though the streets. At night they put him into a strong Prison, and at the appointed Feast sacrificed him.

The Deuill (a [m] Murtherer from the beginning) suggested to the Priests, when there seemed defect of these Sacrifices, to goe to their Kings, telling them that their Gods died for hunger, and therefore should be remembred. Then assembled they their people to warres to furnish their bloudy Altars.

[m] Iohn 8.44.

There happened a strange accident in one of these Sacrifices, reported by men of worthy credit, That the Spaniards beholding these Sacrifices, a young man, whose heart was newly plucked out, and himselfe tumbled downe the staires, when he came to the bottome, he said to the Spaniards in his Language; Knights they haue slaine me. The Indians themselues grew weary of these cruell Rites, and therefore they easily embraced the Spaniards Christianitie: Yea, Cortes writ to the Emperour Charles, that those of Mechoacan sent to him for his Law, being weary of their owne, as not seeming good vnto them.

Some of the Spaniards [n] were thus sacrificed at Tescuco, and their Horse-skinnes tanned in the haire, and hung vp with the Horse-shooes in the great Temple, and next to them the Spaniards garments for a perpetuall memory. At the siege of Mexico, they sacrificed at one time, in sight of their Countrimen, forty Spaniards,

The [o] Mexicans, besides their cruelties, had other vnbeseeming Rites in their Religion: as to eate and drinke to the name of their Idols, to pisse in the honour of them, carrying them vpon their shoulders, to anoint and besmeare themselues filthily, and other things, both ridiculous and lamentable.

[o] Acost. l. 5. c. 27

They [p] were so deuout in their Superstitions, and superstitious in their deuotions, that before they would eate or drinke, they would take a little quantitie and offer it to the Sun, and to the Earth. And if they gather Corne, Fruit, or Roses, they would take a leafe before they would smell it, and offer the same: he which did not thus, was accounted neither louing nor loued of God.

[p] Gom. pa. 398.

The Mexicans in the siege of their Citie, being brought to all extremities, spake thus, as Lopez reporteth, vnto Cortes; Considering that thou art the childe of the Sunne, why doest thou not entreat the Sunne thy Father to make an end of vs? O Sun that canst goe round about the World, in a day and a night, make an end of vs, and take vs out of this miserable life, for we desire death, to goe and rest with our God Quetcanath, who tarrieth for vs.

Of the Religious places and persons in New-Spaine: wherein is also handled their Penance, Marriages, Burials, and other Rites performed by their Priests.

§. I.

Of their Temples.

WE haue already mentioned the Temple of Vitziliputzli in Mexico, which requireth our further description. It [a] was built of great stones, in fashion of Snakes tyed one to another: and had a great circuit, called Coatepantly, that is, a circuit of Snakes. Vpon the top of euery Chappell or Oratorie, where the Idols were, was a fine pillar wrought with small stones blacke as Iet; the ground raised vp with white and red, which below gaue a great light: Vpon the top of the Pillar were Battlements wrought like Snailes, supported by two Indians of stone, sitting, holding Candlesticks in their hands, were like Croysants, garnished and enriched at the ends, with yellow and greene feathers, and long fringes of the same. Within the circuit of this Court there were many chambers of Religious men, and others that were appointed for the Priests and Popes. This Court is so great and spacious, that eight or ten thousand persons did dance easily in a round, holding hands, which was an vsuall custome there, howsoeuer it seemeth incredible. Cortes [b] relateth, that within the compasse of the wall, a Citie of fiue hundred houses might haue beene builded: round about encompassed with goodly buildings, Hals, and Cloisters for the Religious Votaries to dwell in. In that circuit he numbereth forty high Towers well built, to which the ascent was by fifty steps or staires: the least of them as high as the steeple of the Cathedrall Church in Siuill. The stone-worke as curious as in any place, full of grauen and painted imagerie. All these Towers were sepulchres of great Lords, and had each of them a Chappell to some speciall Idol. There were there three large Hals with their Chappels annexed, into which none but certaine Religious men might enter, both full of Images: the chiefe of which Cortes cast downe, and in stead thereof placed the Image of the Euer-blessed, neuer worthy to bee dignified with indignitie, the glorious Virgin and Mother our Lord, with such other Saints.

a Acost. l. 5. c. 13.

b Narrat. 2. ad Car. 5.

There were foure gates or entries, at the East, West, North, and South, at euery [c] of which began a faire Causey of two or three leagues long. There were in the midst of the Lake wherein Mexico is built, foure large causies. Vpon euery entry was a God or Idol, hauing the visage turned to the cause right against the Temple gate of Vitzliputzli. There were thirty steps of thirty fadome long, diuided from the circuit of the court by a street that went betweene them. Vpon the top of these steps, there was a walke of thirty foot broad, all plastered with chalke: in the midst of which walke was a Pallisado artificially made of very high Trees planted in order a fadome asunder. These Trees were very bigge, and all pierced with small holes from the foot to the top, and there were rods did runne from one Tree to another, to which were tied many dead mens heads. Vpon euery rod were many skuls, and these rankes of skuls continued from the foot to the top of the Tree. This Pallisado was full of dead mens skuls from one end to the other, which were the heads of such as had bin sacrificed. For after the flesh was eaten, the head was deliuered to the Priests, who tied them in this sort, vntill they fell off by morsels. Vpon the top of the Temple were two stones or Chappels, and in them the two Images Vitzliputzli and Tlaloc. These Chappels were carued and grauen very artificially, and so high, that to ascend vp to them there were an hundred and twenty staires of stone. Before these Chappels there was a Court of forty foot square, in the midst whereof was a high stone of fiue hand breadth, pointed in fashion of a Pyramide, placed there for the sacrificing of men, as is before shewed.

c Gomara saith that the fourth was not a causey, but a street of the Citie.

Gomara [d] saith, that this and other their Temples were called Teocalli, which signifieth Gods house. This Temple, he saith, was square, containing euery way as much [e] as a Crossebow can shoot leuell: in the middest stood a mount of earth and stone fifty fadome long euery way, built Pyramide-fashion, saue that the top was flat; and ten fadome square. It had two such Pyramide Stones or Altars for Sacrifice, painted with monstrous figures. Euery Chappell had three lofts, one aboue another sustained vpon Pillars: From thence the eye with much pleasure might behold all about the Lake. Besides this Tower, there were forty other Towres belonging to other inferiour Temples; which were of the same fashion: onely their prospect was not Westward, to make difference. Some of those Temples were bigger then others, and euery one of a seuerall God.

Quelconatl. There was one round Temple dedicated to the God of the Aire, called Quecalconatl, the forme of the Temple representing the Aires circular course about the earth. The entrance of that Temple had a doore, made like the mouth of a Serpent, with foule and deuillish resemblances, striking dreadfull horrour to such as entered. All these Temples had peculiar houses, Priests, Gods, and Seruices. At euery doore of the great Temple was a large Hall and goodly buildings, which were common Armories for the Citie. They had other darke houses full of Idols of diuers metals, all embrued with bloud, the dayly sprinkling whereof made them shew blacke: yea, the walls were an inch thicke, and the ground a foot thicke with bloud, which yeelded a lothsome sent. The Priests entered dayly therein, which they allowed not to others except to Noble personages, who at their entry were bound to offer some Man to be sacrificed to those slaughter-houses of the Diuell. There did continually reside in the great Temple 5000. persons, which had there their meat, drinke, and lodging; the Temple enioying great reuenues, and diuers Townes for the maintenance thereof.

[f] Acost. l. 5. c. 13. Next [f] to the Temple of Vitziliputzli was that of Tescalipuca, the God of Penance, Punishments (and Prouidence) very high and well built. It had foure ascents; the top was flat, an hundred and twenty foot broad; and ioyning to it was a Hall hanged with Tapistry, and Curtains of diuers colours and workes. The doore being low and large was alwayes couered with a Vaile, and none but the Priests might enter. All this Temple was beautified with diuers Images and Pictures most curiously: for that these two Temples were as the Cathedrall Churches, the rest as Parishionall. They were so spacious, and had so many chambers, that there were in them places for the Priests, Colledges and Schooles.

[g] Lop. Gom. p. 1. Without [g] the great Temple, and ouer against the principall doore, a stones cast distant was the Charnell house, or that Golgotha, (before mentioned) where, vpon poles or sticks, and also in the wals (two Towres hauing no other stuffe but Lime and Skuls) [h] Acost. l. 5. c. 15 Andrew de Tapia certified [h] Gomara, that he and Gonsala de Vmbria did reckon in one day, an hundred thirty sixe thousand skuls. When any wastad, supply was made of others in their roome.

§. II.

Of their Nunnes, Friers and other Votaries.

Nunnes. WIthin this great Circuit of the principall Temple were two Houses, like Cloisters, the one opposite to the other, one of Men, the other of Women. In that of Women they were Virgins onely, of twelue or thirteene yeeres of age, which they called the Maids of Penance: they were as many as the men, and liued chastly, and regularly, as Virgins dedicated to the seruice of their God. Their charge was to sweepe and make cleane the Temple, and euery morning to prepare meat for the Idol and his Ministers, of the Almes the Religious gathered. The food they prepared for the Idoll were small Loaues, in the forme of hands and feet, as of Marchpane: and with this bread they prepared certaine sawces, which they cast dayly before the Idol, and his Priests did eate it.

These Virgins had their haire cut, and then let them grow for a certaine time: they rose at midnight to the Idols Mattins, which they dayly celebrated, performing the same exercises which the Religious did. They had their Abbesse, who employed them to make cloth of diuers fashions, for the ornaments of their Gods and Temples. Their ordinarie habite was all white, without any worke or colour. They did their penance at midnight, sacrificing and wounding themselues, and piercing the tops of their eares, laying the bloud which issued forth vpon their cheekes, and after bathed themselues in a poole which was within the Monasterie. If any were found dishoneſt, they were put to death without remission, saying, she had polluted the house of their God.

They held it for an ominous token, that some religious man or woman had committed a fault, when they saw a Rat or Mouse passe, or a Bat in the Idol-Chappell, or that they had gnawed any of the vailes, for that they say, a Cat or a Bat would not aduenture to commit such an indignitie, if some offence had not gone before: and then began to make inquisition, and discouering the offender, put him to death. None were receiued into this Monasterie, but the daughters of one of the sixe quarters, named for that purpose: and this profession continued a yeere, during which time, their fathers and themselues had made a vow to serue the Idoll in this manner, and from thence they went to be married.

The other Cloyster or Monasterie was of young-men of eighteene or twentie yeeres of age, which they called Religious. Their Crownes were shauen, as the Friers in these parts, their haire a little longer, which fell to the middest of their eare, except on the hinder part of the head, where they let it grow on their shoulders, and tyed it vp in trusses. These serued in the Temple, liued poorely and chastly, and (as the Leuites) ministred to the Priests, Incense, Lights and Garments, swept and made cleane the Holy place, bringing wood for a continuall fire, to the Harth of their God, which was like a Lampe that still burned before the Altar of their Idoll. Besides these, there were other little Boyes that serued for manuall vses, as to decke the Temple with Boughes, Roses, and Reeds, to giue the Priests water to wash, Rasors to sacrifice, and to goe with such as begged almes, to carrie it. All these had their superiours, who had the gouernment ouer them; and when they came in publike, where women were, they carried their eyes to the ground, not daring to behold them. They had linnen garments, and went into the Citie foure or sixe together, to aske almes in all quarters and if they got none, it was lawfull for them to goe into the Corne-fields, and gather that which they needed, none daring to contradict them. Friers.

Cortes writeth, that almost all the chife mens sonnes in the Citie, after they were sixe or seuen yeeres old, till the time of their marriage, especially the eldest, were thrust into a kind of Religious habit and seruice. Cortes narrat. ad Imp. & Relat. del Temistitan ap. Ram. v. 3.

There might not aboue fiftie liue in that strict penance; they rose at midnight, and sounded the Trumpets, to awake the people. Euery one watched by turne, lest the fire before the Altar should die: they gaue the censor, with which the Priest at midnight incensed the Idoll, and also in the morning, at noone, and at night. They [i] were very subiect and obedient to their superiours, and passed not any one point commanded. And at midnight after the Priest had ended his censing, they retyred themselues apart into a secret place, where they sacrificed and drew bloud from the Calues of their legs with sharp bodkins, therewith rubbing their Temples and vnder their Eares, presently washing themselues in a Poole appointed to that end. These yong men did not anoint their heads and bodies with [k] Petum, as the Priests did. This austeritie continued a yeere.

k Tobacco.

The Priests likewise rose at midnight, and retired themselues into a large place where were many lights, and there drew bloud, as the former, from their legs, then did they set these Bodkins vpon the battlements of the Court, sticke in straw, that the people might see. Neither might they vse one Bodkin in twise. The Priests also vsed great fasts of fiue or ten dayes together, before their great feasts. Some of them, to preserue their chastitie, slit their members in the midst, and did a hundred things to make themselues impotent, lest they should offend their gods. They drunke no Wine, and slept little, for that the greatest part of their exercises were by night.

They did vse also (that the selfe-tyrannizing Catholike should not out-vie Merits) to Discipline themselues with cords full of knots, wherein the people likewise came not behinde in cruell Processions, especially on the Feast of Tezcalipuca, lashing themselues with knotted Mangney-cords ouer the shoulders. The Priest fasted fiue dayes before that Feast, eating but once a day, and abstaining from their Wiues; the whips supplying those delicacies.

Gomara [l] speaketh of others, besides those yong ones before mentioned, which liued in those Cloysters, some being sicke, for their recouery; some in extreme pouerty, to finde reliefe; some for riches, for long life, for good husbands, for many children, and some for vertue: euery one abode there as long as they had vowed, and after vsed their libertie. Their offices were to spin Cotton, Wooll, and feathers, and to weaue cloth for their gods, and themselues, to sweepe all thy holy roomes: they might goe on Procession with the Priests, but not sing, nor goe vp the staires of the Temple: their food was boiled flesh and hot bread, receiued of almes, the smoke whereof was offered vnto their gods: They ate and lay all together, but lay in their cloathes. The multitude of Idols and Idol-Temples in New-Spaine was such, that a Bishop of Mexico, in his Letters 1532. saith, that the Friers had defaced twenty thousand of the one, and desolated fiue hundred of the other: and where in Mexico they had vsed yeerely to offer more then twenty thousand Harts of Boyes and Girles to their Idols, they now (saith he) offer them by good instruction to God. God grant it. l Lop. de Gom. part. 1. pag. 396. Lit. Episc. Mex.

§. III.

Of their Priests, and the many Rites belonging to their function.

m Ioſ. Acoſt. l. 5. cap. 14.

TOuching their Priests in Mexico, m there were some high Priests or Popes, euen vnder the same name, called by the Mexicans, Papas, as they should say, Soueraigne Bishops: others, as before you haue heard, were of inferiour ranke. The Priests of Vitzilipuztli succeeded by linages of certaine quarters of the Citie, deputed for that purpose: and those of other Idols came by election, or by being offered to the Temple in their Infancie. They daily exercise of the Priests was to cast Incense on the Idols, which was done foure times in the space of a naturall day: at breake of day, at noone, at Sun-set, at midnight. At midnight all the chiefe officers of the Temple did rise, and in stead of Bels they did sound a long time vpon Trumpets, Cornets, and Flutes, very heauily; which being ended, he that did the Office that weeke, stept forth attired in a white robe with a Censor in in his hand, full of Coles, which he tooke from the harth, burning continually before the Altar, in the other hand he had a purse full of incense, which he cast into the Censor, and entring the place where the Idol was, he incensed it with great reuerence; then tooke he a cloth, with the which he wiped the Altar and the Curtains. This done, they went all into a Chappell, and there did beat themselues and draw bloud with Bodkins, as is said: this was alwayes done at midnight. None other but the Priests might intermeddle with their Sacrifices, and euery one did employ himselfe according to his dignity and degree. They did likewise preach to the people at some Feasts. They had reuenues and great offerings. They a had conuenient houses for their habitation. They ware blacke garments, and cut not nor combed their haire in the time of their ministration.

o Acoſt. l. 5. c. 26. Their anoinings.

The Mexican Priests o were thus anointed; they anointed the body from the foot to the head, and all the haire likewise, which hung like tresses or a Horse-maine, for that they applyed this vnction wet and moist. Their haire grew so, that in time it hung downe to their hams, insomuch that the weight made it burthensome: for they neuer cut it vntill they dyed, or were dispensed with for their great age, or were employed in gouernments, or some honourable charge in the Common-wealth. They carried their haire in tresses of sixe fingers breadth, which they dyed blacke with the fume of Sapine, Firre, or Rosine. They were alwayes dyed with this tincture, from the foot vnto the head, so as they were like vnto shining Negros. This was their ordinary vnction; they had another when they went to sacrifice or incense on the tops of mountaines, or in darke Caues, where there Idols were, vsing also certaine Ceremonies, to take away feare, and adde courage. This vnction was made with diuers venemous beasts, as Spiders, Scorpions, Salamanders, and Vipers, which the Boyes in the Colledges tooke and gathered together: wherein they were so expert, as they were alway furnished when the Priests called for them. They tooke all these together, and burnt them vpon the harth of the Temple which was before the Altar, vntill they were consumed to ashes. Then did they put them in Morters with much Tobacco or Petum, which made them lose their force; mingling likewise with these ashes, Scorpions, Spiders, and Palmers aliue. After this, they put to it a certaine seed being ground, which they called Olololuchqui, whereof the Indians made drinkes to see Visions, for that the vertue of this herbe is to depriue men of sence: they did likewise grind with these ashes black and hairy wormes, whose haire onely is venemous; all which they mingled together with blacke, or the fume of Rosine, putting it in small pots, which they set before their God, saying it was his meat, and therefore called it a diuine meat. By meanes of this ointment they became Witches, and did see and speake with the Diuell. The Priests being slubbered with this ointment, lost all feare, putting on a Spirit of cruelty. By reason whereof they did very boldly kill men in their sacrifices, went all alone in the night time to the Mountaines, and into obscure Caues, contemned all wilde beasts, beleeuing that Lyons, Tygres, Serpents, and the rest fled from them by vertue hereof.

This Petum did also serue to cure the sick, and for children; all resorted to them as to their Sauiours, to apply vnto them this Diuine Physicke, as they called it. They vsed manifold other superstitions to delude the people, in tying small flowers about their necks, and strings with small bones of Snakes, commanding them to bathe at certaine times, to watch all night at the Diuine harth, to eate no other bread but that which had beene offered to their Gods, that they should (vpon all occasions) repaire to their Wisards, who with certaine graines told Fortunes, and diuined, looking into keelers, and pailes full of water. The Sorcerers and p ministers of the diuell vsed much to besmeare themselues. There were an infinite number of these Witches, Diuiners, Inchanters, and the like: and still there remaine of them (but secret) not daring publikely to exercise their superstitions.

The Mexicans q had amongst them a kinde of baptisme, which they did with cutting the eares and members of yong children, hauing some resemblance of the Iewish circumcision. This Ceremonie was done principally to the sonnes of Kings and Noblemen: presently vpon their birth the Priests did wash them, and did put a little Sword in the right hand, in the left a Target. And to the children of the vulgar sort, they put the markes of their callings, and to their daughters instruments to Spinne, Knit, and labour.

q Their Rites vnto Infants.

The Mexican history afore-mentioned, in the third part thereof, sheweth in pictures their policie and customes. When a child was borne (as is there described) it was laid in a Cradle: foure dayes after, the mid-wife brought it naked, with the instrument of the trade (as is said) in the hand, into the yard; where were prepared Bul-rushes and a little pan of water, in which she washed the same. Three boyes sate by eating tosted Mais, with sodden Frizoles in a little pan, and at the mid-wiues appointment named the child with a lowd voice. After twenty dayes they went with it into the Temple, and presented the same in presence of the Priest, with an offering: and being of fifteene yeares, committed him to the High Priest of that Temple, to be taught, if they would after haue him a Priest: or if they would haue him a Souldier, they committed him to the Master thereof, with an offering of meat also. In this booke is pictured how they instruct and feed them at three yeeres of age, giuing them halfe a Cake: how at foure with a whole Cake: at fiue burthening and exercising their bodies, and setting their daughters to spin: how at sixe they exercise them in gathering vp corne spilled on the ground, or the like: at seuen in fishing. There is likewise described their seuere discipline in punishing them with Manguez. The Priests did exercise their Pupils in bodily seruices of the Temple, in going to the Mountains to sacrifice, in Musicke, obseruing the time by the starres, and the like. Old men of threescore and ten, might be publikely drunken without controll, which to yong folkes of both sexes was death, as was theft also and adultery.

Drunkards theeues, adulterers, stoned.

The Priests r also had their office in marriages. The Bridegroome and the Bride stood together before the Priest, who tooke them by the hands, asking them if they would marry: vnderstanding their will, he took a corner of the vaile, wherewith the woman had her head couered, and a corner of the mans gowne, which he tyed together on a knot, and so led them thus tyed to the Bridegroomes house, where there was a harth kindled. Then he caused the wife to goe seuen times about the harth, and so the married couple sate downe together, and thus was the marriage contracted. That booke of pictures describes it thus: as Amanteca or Broker carried the Bride on her backe at the beginning of the night, foure women attending with Torches of Pine-tree Rosenned. At the Bridegroomes house his parents receiue her, and carry her to him in a Hall, where they are both caused to sit on a Mat, neere a fire, and tyed together with a corner of their apparell, and a perfume of Copale wood is made to their gods. Two old men, and as many old women were present. The married couple eate, and then these old folke, which after this separate them asunder, and giue them good instructions for Oeconomicall duties.

r Their marriages.

In other parts of New-Spaine s they vsed other marriage-rites; at Tlaxcallan the Bridegroome and Bride polled their heads, to signifie, that from thenceforth all childish courses should be laid aside. At michuacan the Bride must looke directly vpon the Bridegroome, or else the marriage was not perfect. In Mixteopan they vsed to carry the Bridegroome vpon their backs, as if he were forced: and then they both ioyne hands, and knit their mantles together with a great knot. The Macatecas did not come together in twenty dayes after marriage, but abode in fasting and prayer all that while, sacrificing their bodies, and anointing the mouths of their Idols with their bloud. In Panuco the Husbands buy the Wiues for a Bow, two Arrowes, and a Net; and afterwards the Father in-law speaketh not one word to his Sonne in-law for the space of a yeere. When he hath a child, he lyeth not with his wife in two yeeres after, lest she should be with child againe before the other bee out of danger; some sucke twelue yeeres: and for this cause they haue many wiues. No woman, while she hath her disease, may touch or dresse any thing.

s Gomara. part. 1. pag. 389.

Adulterie in Mexico was death: common women were permitted, but no ordinary Stewes. The diuell did many times talke with their Priest, and with some other Rulers and particular persons. Great gifts were offered vnto him whom the diuell had vouchsafed this conference. He appeared vnto them in many shapes, and was often familiar with them. He to whom he appeared, carried about him painted, the likenesse wherein he shewed himselfe the first time. And they painted his Image on their doores, benches, and euery corner of the house. Likewise, according to his Protean and diuersified apparitions they painted him in many shapes.

Acost. l. 5. c. 8. Burials.

It belonged also to the office of the Priests and religious in Mexico, to interre the dead, and doe their obsequies. The places where they buried them, were their gardens and courts of their owne houses: others carried them to the places of sacrifices, which were done in the mountaines: others burnt them, and after buried the ashes in the temples, burying with them whatsoeuer they had, of apparell, stones, and iewels. They did sing the funerall offices like Responds, often lifting vp the dead body, with many ceremonies. At these Mortuaries they did eate and drinke; and if it were a person of qualitie, they gaue apparell to such as came. When one was dead, his friends came with their presents, & saluted him as if he were liuing. And if he were a King or Lord of some Towne, they offered some slaues to bee put to death with him, to serue him in the other world. They likewise put to death his Priest or Chaplain, (for euery Noble-man had a Priest for his domestical holies) that he might execute his office with the dead. They likewise killed his Cooke, his Butler, Dwarffes, and deformed men, and whosoeuer had most serued him, though he were his Brother. And to preuent pouertie, they buried with them much wealth, as Gold, Siluer, Stones, Curtains, and other rich pieces. And if they burned the dead, they vsed the like with all his seruants and ornaments they gaue him for the other world, and lastly, buried the ashes with great solemnitie. The obsequies continued ten dayes with mournefull songs, and the Priests carried away the dead with innumerable ceremonies. To the Noble-men they gaue their honourable Ensignes, Armes, and particular Blazons, which they carried before the body to the place of burning, marching as in a Procession; where the Priests and Officers of the Temple went with diuers furniture, and ornaments, some casting incense, others singing, and some making the Drums and Flutes to sound the mournfullest accents of sorrow. The Priest who did the Office, was decked with the markes of the Idoll which the Noble-men had represented: for all Noble-men did represent Idols, and carrie the name of some One.

Acost. l. 6. c. 26.

The Mexicans honoured the best souldiers with a kinde of Knighthood, of which were three Orders: one ware a red ribband, which was the chiefe; the second was the Lyon or Tyger-knight: the Grey-Knight was the meaneſt: they had great priuiledges. Their Knighthood had these funerall solemnities. They brought the corps to the place appointed, and enuironing it, and all the baggage with Pine-trees, set fire thereon, maintaining the same with gummie wood, till all were consumed. Then came forth a Priest attired like a diuell, hauing mouthes vpon euery ioynt of him, and many eyes of Glasse, holding a great staffe, with which he mingled all the ashes with terrible and fearfull gestures.

When the King of [t] Mexico sickened, they vsed forthwith to put a Visor on the face of Texcatlipuca, or Vitzilivitzli, or some other Idoll, which was not taken away till hee mended or ended, If he died, word was presently sent into all his Dominions for publike lamentations, and Noble-men were summoned to the funerals. The body was laid on a Mat, and watched foure nights; then washed, and a locke of haire cut off for a relike; for therein (said they) remained the remembrance of his soule. After this an Emerald was put in his mouth, and his body shrowded in 17. rich mantles, costly and curiously wrought. Vpon the vpper mantle was set the Deuice or Arme s of some Idoll, whereunto he had been most deuout in in his life time, and in his Temple should the body be buried. Vpon his face they put a Visor painted with foule and deuillish gestures, beset with jewels: then they killed the slaue, whose office was to light the Lamps, and make fire to the gods of his Palace. This done, they carried the body to the Temple, some carrying Targets, Arrows, Maces, and Ensignes, to hurle into the funerall fire. The High Priest and his crue receiue him at the Temple gate with a sorrowfull Song, and after he hath said certaine words, the body is cast into the fire there prepared for that purpose, together with jewels: also a Dog newly strangled, to guide his way. In the meane-while two hundred persons were sacrificed by the Priests, or more, to serue him, as is said. The fourth day after, fifteene slaues were sacrificed for his soule, and vpon the twentieth day, fiue; on the sixtieth, three, &c. The ashes with the locke of haire was put in a Chest, painted on the in-side with deuillish shapes, together with another locke of haire, which had been reserued since the time of his birth. On this Chest was set the Image of the King: the kinred offered great gifts before the same. The King of Mechuacan obserued the like bloudy Rites: many Gentlewomen were by the new King appointed their Offices in their seruice to the deceased, and while his body was burning, were malled with clubs, and buried foure and foure in a graue. Many Women-slaues, and free Maidens were slaine to attend on these Gentlewomen. But I would not bury my Reader in these direfull graues of men cruell in life and death. Let vs seeke some Festiuall argument, if that may be more delightfull.

Their Kalender and Conceits of Time, and some of their Feasts.

THE Mexicans[a] diuided the yeere into eighteene moneths, ascribing to each twentie dayes, so that the fiue odde dayes were excluded. These fiue they reckoned apart, and called them the dayes of nothing: during the which, the people did nothing, neither went to their Temples, but spent the time in visiting each other: the Sacrificers likewise ceated their Sacrifices. These fiue dayes being past, the first moneth began about the twentie sixe of February. Gomara[b] sets downe their moneths names in order. The Indians described them by peculiar Pictures, commonly taken of the principall Feast therein. They accounted their weeks by thirteene dayes: they had also a weeke of yeeres which was likewise thirteene. They reckoned by a certaine Wheele, which contayned foure weekes, that is, two and fiftie yeeres. In the midst of this Wheele was painted the Sunne, from which went foure beames of lines, in a Crosse of distinct colours, Greene, Blue, Red, and Yellow; and so the lines betwixt these: on which they noted by some Picture, the accident that befell any yeere, as the Spaniards comming, marked by a man clad in Red. The last night when this Wheele was run about, they brake all their vessels and stuffe, put out their fire and all the lights, saying, that the World should end at the finishing of one of these Wheeles, and it might be at that time; and then what should such things need? Vpon this conceit they passed the night in great feare: but when they saw the day begin to breake, they presently beat many Drums, with much other mirth and Musicke, saying, that God did prolong the time with another Age of two and fifty yeeres. And then began another Wheele; the first day whereof they tooke new fire, for which they went to the Priest, who fetched it out of a Mountaine, and made a solemne Sacrifice and Thanksgiuing. The twenty dayes of each moneth were called by seuerall names, the first Cipactli which signifieth a Spade, and so the rest a House, a Dogge, a Snake, an Eagle, a Temple, and the like. By this Kalendar they keepe things in memory aboue nine hundred yeeres since. The Indians of Culhua did beleeue that the Gods had made the World, they knew not how: and that since the Creation, foure Sunnes were past, and that the fift and last is the Sunne, which now giueth light vnto the World.

b Gom. pag. 317. Mexican. hist. M. S. ap. Hak. hath this Kalender.

The first Sunne (forsooth) perished by water, and all liuing creatures therewith: the second fell from Heauen, and with the fall slue all liuing creatures, and then were many Giants in the Country: the third Sunne was consumed by fire; and the fourth by Tempest of ayre and wind, and then Mankind perished not, but was turned into Apes: yet when that fourth Sunne perished, all was turned into darknesse, and so continued fiue and twenty yeeres: and at the fifteenth yeere, God did forme one man and woman, who brought forth children, and at the end of other ten yeeres appeared this fift Sunne newly borne, which after their reckoning is now in this yeere 1612. nine hundred and eighteene yeeres since. Three dayes after this Sunne appeared, they held that all the Gods did die, and that these which since they worship, were borne in processe of time.

Opinion of fiue Sunnes.

At the end of euery twenty dayes, the Mexicans celebrated a Feast called Tonalli, which was the last day of euery moneth. The last day of the first moneth was called Tlacaxipenaliztli, on which were slaine an hundred Captiues in Sacrifice and eaten, others putting on the skins (as before is shewed.) Many of them would go to the slaughter with ioyfull countenance, dancing, and demanding Almes, which befell to the Priests. When the greene Corne was a foot aboue the ground, they vsed to goe to a certaine Hill, and there sacrificed two Children, a Girle and a Boy, three yeeres old, to the honour of Tlaloc, God of the Water, that they might haue raine: and because these children were free borne, their hearts were not plucked out, but their throats being cut, their bodies were wrapped in a new Mantle, and buried in a graue of stone.

Mexican Feasts.

When the fields of Maiz were two foot high, a collection was made, and therewith were brought bought foure little slaues, betwixt the age of fiue and seuen, and they were sacrificed also to Tlaloc, for the continuance of raine: and those dead bodies were shut vp in a Caue appointed to that purpose. The beginning of this butcherie was, by occasion of a drought, which continued foure yeeres, and forced them to leaue the Country. When the Maiz was ripe, in the moneth and Feast Hueitozoztli, euery man gathered his handfull of Maiz, and brought it to the Temple for an offering, with a certaine drinke called Atoli, made of the same graine. They brought also Copalli, a sweet Gumme, to incense the Gods which cause the Corne to grow. At the beginning of Summer they celebrated the Feast Tlaxuchimcaco, with Roses and all sweet flowres, making Garlands thereof, to set on their Idols heads, and spending all that day in dancing. To celebrate the Feast Tecuilhuitli, all the principall persons of each Prouince came to the Citie on the Euening of the Feast, and apparelled a woman with the attire of the God of Salt, who danced among a great company of her Neighbours, but the next day was sacrificed with much solemnitie, and all that day was spent in deuotion, burning of Incense in the Temple. The Merchants had a Temple by themselues, dedicate to the God of gaine: they made their Feast vpon the day called Micailhuitl, wherein were sacrificed and eaten many captiues, which they had bought, and all the day spent in dancing.

In the Feast of Ochpaniztli, they sacrificed a woman, whose skin was put vpon an Indian, which two dayes together danced with the Townsmen, celebrating the same Feast in their best attire.

In the day of Hatamutzli, the Mexicans entred into the Lake with a great number of Canoas, and there drowned a Boy and a Girle, in a little Boat, which they caused to be sunke, in such sort, that neuer after that Boat appeared againe, holding opinion, that those Children were in company with the Gods of the Lake. That day they spent in feasting and anointing their Idols cheekes with a kind of Gumme, called Vlli.

When Cortes was gone out of Mexico, to incounter Pamphilo de Naruaes, and had left Aluarado in the Citie, he in the great Temple murthered a great multitude of Gentlemen, which had there assembled, to their accustomed solemnitie, being six hundred, or (as some say) a thousand, richly attired and adorned, where they vsed to sing and dance, in honour of their God, to obtaine Health, Children, Victorie, &c.

§. II.

Their Feast of Transubstantiation, Lent, Bloudie Processions, and other holy times.

x Acost. l. 5. c. 24 Relat. del Themistitan.

IN the moneth of May, x the Mexicans made their principall Feast to Vitziliputzli: two dayes before which, the Religious Virgins or Nuns mingled a quantity of Beets with rosted Maiz, and moulded it with Hony, making an Image of that paste, in bignesse like to the Idoll of wood, putting in, in stead of eyes, graines of glasse, greene, blue, or white, and for teeth, graines of Maiz. Then did all the Nobles bring it a rich garment like vnto that of the Idoll, and being clad, did set it in an azured Chaire, and in a Litter. The morning of the Feast being come, an houre before day, all the Maidens came forth attired in white with new ornaments, which that day were called, the Sisters of Vitziliputzli: they were crowned with Garlands of Maiz rosted & parched, with chaines of the same about their neckes, passing vnder their left armes. Their cheekes were died with Vermilion, their armes from the elbow to the wrist were couered with red Parrots feathers. Thus attired, they tooke the Image on their shoulders, carrying it into the Court, where all the young men were, attired in red Garments, crowned like the women. When the Maydens came forth with this Idoll, the young men drew neere with much reuerence, taking the Litter wherein the Idoll was, vpon their shoulders, carrying it to the staires foot of the Temple: where all the people did humble themselues, laying earth vpon their heads.

After this, all the people went in Procession to a Mountaine called Chapultepec, a league from Mexico, and there made Sacrifices. From thence they went to their second Station, called Atlacuyanaya: and from thence againe to a Village, which was a league beyond Cuyoacan, and then returned to Mexico. They went in this sort aboue foure leagues, in so many houres, calling this Procession Vpania Vitziliputzli. Being come to the foote of the Temple staires, they set downe the Litter with the Idoll, and with great obseruance drew the same to the top of the Temple, some drawing aboue, and others helping below, the Flutes and Drummes, Cornets, Trumpets, meane-while increasing the Solemnitie. The people abode in the Court. Hauing mounted, and placed it in a little lodge of Roses, presently came the young men, which strowed flowres of sundry kinds, within and without the Temple. This done, all the Virgins came out of their Conuent, bringing pieces of the same paste whereof the Idoll was made, in the fashion of great bones, which they deliuered to the young men, who carried them vp, and laid them at the Idols feet, till the place could receiue no more.

They called these morsels of paste, The flesh and bones of Vitzilipuztli. Then came all the Priests of the Temple, euery one strictly obseruing his place, with veiles of diuers colours and workes, Garlands on their heads, and chaines of flowres about their neckes: after them came the Gods and Goddesses, whom they worshipped of diuers figures, attired in the same liuery. Then putting themselues in order about those pieces of paste, they vsed certaine Ceremonies, with singing and dancing. By these meanes they were blessed and consecrated for the flesh and bones of the Idoll: which were then honoured in the same sort as their God. Then came forth the Sacrificers, who began the Sacrifice of Men, whereof they now sacrificed more then at other times: for this was their solemnest Festiuall. The Sacrifices being ended, all the young men and Maydes came out of the Temple attired as before, and being placed in order and ranke, one directly against another, they danced by Drummes, which sounded in praise of the Feast, and of their God. To which Song, all the ancientest and greatest men did answere, dancing about them, making a great Circle, as the manner is, the young men and Maids remayning alwayes in the middest.

All the Citie came to this spectacle, and throughout the whole Land; on this day of Vitzilipuztli his Feast, no man might eat any other meate, but this paste with Honey, whereof the Idoll was made, and this should be eaten at the point of day not drinking till the afternoone: the contrary was sacrilegious. After the Ceremonies ended, it was lawfull for them to eat any thing. During the time of this Ceremony, they hid the water from their little Children, admonishing such, as had the vse of reason, to abstaine.

The Ceremonies, Dances, and Sacrifices ended, they went to vnclothe themselues, and the Priests and Ancients of the Temple tooke the Image of paste, and spoyled it of all the Ornaments making many pieces of it, and of the consecrated Rolls, which they ministred in a kind of Communion, beginning with the greater, and continuing vnto the rest, both men, women, and children: who receiued it with teares, feare, reuerence, and other both affects, and effects of deuotion, saying, That they did eate the flesh and bones of their God. Such as had sicke folkes, demanded thereof for them, and carried it with great reuerence and veneration. All such as did communicate, were bound to giue the tenth part of this Seed, whereof the Idoll was made. The solemnity of the Idoll being ended, an old man of great authority stept vp into an high place, and with a loude voice preached their Law and Ceremonies. This History deserueth the longer Relation, because it so much resembleth the Popish Chimara, and monstrous Conception of Transubstantiation, and of their Corpus Christi Feast, with other their Rites, to which Acosta also the Relater compareth it, blaming the Deuill for vsurping the seruice, and imitating the Rites of their Church, whereas their Church deserueth blame for imitating the Deuill, and these his Idolatrous Disciples, in their stupendious monsters of opinion, and ridiculous offices of Superstition. But you shall yet see a further resemblance.

a The new Catholikes of old Spaine, & old Cacolikes of New Spaine alike in Superstition.

Next to this principall Feast of Vitzilipuztli, [b] was that of Tezcalipuca, of chiefe estimation. This fell on the nineteenth day of May, and was called Tozcolt. It fell euery foure yeeres with the Feast of Penance, where there was giuen [c] full indulgence and remission of sinnes. In this day they did Sacrifice a Captiue, which resembled the Idoll Tezcalipuca. Vpon the Euen of this Solemnitie, the Noblemen came to the Temple, bringing a new garment like to that of the Idoll, which the Priest put vpon him, hauing first taken off his other Garments, which they kept with great reuerence. There were in the Coffers of the Idoll [d] many Ornaments, Iewels, Eare-rings, and other Riches, as Bracelets, and precious Feathers, which serued to no vse, and were worshipped as the God himselfe. Besides that Garment, they put vpon him certaine Ensignes of Feathers, with Fannes, shadowes, and other things. Being thus attired, they drew the Curtayne from before the doore, that all men might see. Then came forth one of the chiefe of the Temple, attired like to the Idoll, carrying Flowre in his hand, and a Flute of Earth, hauing a very sharpe sound, and turning toward the East, hee sounded it, and after that to the West, North, and South, hee did the like.

This done, he put his finger into the Aire, and then gathered vp the Earth, [e] which hee put in his mouth, eating it in signe of adoration. The like did all that were present, weeping, and falling flat to the ground, inuocating the darkenesse of the night, and the winds, not to forsake them, or else to take away their liues, and free them from the labours they endured therein. uineſſe whiles the Flute ſounded, ſo as ſome could not hide nor diſſemble their offences. By this meanes they all demanded no other thing of their God, but to haue their offences concealed; powring forth many teares, with great repentance and ſorrow, offering great ſtore of Incenſe to appeaſe their Gods. All the Martialiſts, and reſolute ſpirits, addicted to the Warres, deſired with great deuotion of God the Creator, of the Lord, for whom we liue, of the Sun, and of other their Gods, that they would giue them victory againſt their enemies, and ſtrength to take many Captiues for Sacrifice. This ceremonious ſounding of the Flute by the Prieſt, continued ten dayes, from the ninth of May to the nineteenth, with eating of earth, praying euery day with eyes lifted vp to Heauen, ſighes and grones, as of men grieued for their ſinnes. Yet did not they beleeue that there were f any puniſhments in the other life, but did theſe things to auert temporall puniſhments: they accounted death an aſſured reſt, and therefore voluntarily offered themſelues thereto. The laſt day of the Feaſt, the Prieſts drew forth a Litter well furniſhed with Curtaynes, and Pendants of diuers faſhions: this Litter had ſo many armes to hold by, as there were Miniſters to carry it: all which came forth beſmeared with blacke, and long haire, halfe in treſſes with white ſtrings, and attired in the Idols liuery. Vpon this Litter they ſet the Image of Tezcatlipuca, and taking it on their ſhoulders, brought it to the foot of the ſtaires. Then came forth the young men and Maydens of the Temple, carrying a great cord wreathed of chaines of roſted Maiz, with which they enuironed the Litter, and put a chaine of the ſame about the Idols necke, and a Garland thereof on his head.

f Gomara writeth otherwiſe as followeth in the end of this Chapter.

The young men and Mayds weare chaines of roſted Maiz, and the men Garlands, the Maydes Mytres made of Rods couered with the Maiz, their feet couered with Feathers, and their armes and cheekes painted. The Image being placed in the Litter they ſtrewed round about ſtore of the boughes of Manguey, the leaues whereof are pricking. They carried g it on Proceſſion (two Prieſts going before with Incenſe) in the circuit of the Court: and euery time the Prieſt gaue Incenſe, they lifted vp their armes as high as they could to the Idoll and the Sun. All the people in the Court turned round to the place whither the Idoll went, euery one carrying in his hand new cords of the threeds of Manguey, a fadome long, with a knot at the end, wherewith they whipped themſelues on the ſhoulders, euen as they doe heere (ſaith Acoſta) on Holy Thurſday. The people brought boughes and flowres to beautifie the Court and Temple.

g Their bloudy Proceſſions

This done, euery one brought their Offerings, Iewels, Incenſe, ſweet Wood, Grapes, Maiz, Quailes, and the reſt. Quailes were the poore mans Offering which hee deliuered to the Prieſts, who pulled off their heads, and caſt them at the foote of the Altar, where they loſt their bloud: and ſo they did of all other things which were offered. Euery one offered meate and fruit, according to his power, which was laid at the foote of the Altar, and was carried to the Miniſters Chamber. The offering done, the people went to dinner: the young men and Maydes of the Temple being buſied meanewhile to ſerue the Idoll with all that was appointed for him to eat, which was prepared by other women who had made a vow that day to ſerue the Idoll. Theſe prepared meats in admirable variety, which being ready, the Virgins went out of the Temple in Proceſſion, euery one carrying a little basket of bread in her hand, and in the other a diſh of theſe meates. Before them marched an old man, like to a Steward, attired in a white Surples downe to the calues of his legges, vpon a red Iacket, which had wings inſtead of ſleeues, from which hung broad Ribands, and at the ſame a ſmall Pumpion, ſtucke full of flowres, and hauing many Superſtitious things within it. This old man comming neere to the foot of the ſtaires, made lowly reuerence. Then the Virgins with like reuerence preſented their meats in order: this done, the old man returnes, leading the Virgins into the Conuent. And then the young men and Miniſters of the Temple came forth and gathered vp their meat, which they carried to their Prieſts Chambers, who had faſted fiue dayes, eating but once a day, not ſtirring all that time out of the Temple, where they whipped themſelues, as before is ſhewed. They did eate of theſe Diuine meates (ſo they called it) neither might any other eate thereof. After dinner they aſſembled againe, and then was ſacrificed. One who had all that yeere borne the habit and reſemblance of their Idoll. They went after this, into a holy place appointed for that purpoſe, whither the young men and Virgins of the Temple brought them their ornaments, and then they danced and ſung, the chiefe Prieſts drumming and ſounding other Inſtruments. The Noblemen in ornaments like to the young men, danced round about them.

They did not vſually kill any man that day, but him that was ſacrificed, yet euery fourth yeere they had others with him, which was the yeere of Iubilee and full pardons. After Sunſet, the Virgins went all to their Conuent, and taking great diſhes of earth full of bread, mixed with Hony, couered with ſmall Panniars, wrought and faſhioned with dead mens heads and bones, carried the ſame to the Idoll, & ſetting them downe, retired, their Steward

vshering them as before. Presently came forth all the young men in order, with Canes or Reedes in their hands, who began to runne as fast as they could to the top of the Temple staires; euery one striuing to come first to the Collation. The chiefe Priests obserued who came first, second, third and fourth, neglecting the rest; these they praysed, and gaue them ornaments, and from thence forward they were respected as men of marke. The said Collation was all carried away by the young men as great Relikes. This ended, The young men and Maydes were dismissed: and so I thinke would our Reader, who cannot but be glutted with, and almost surfet of our so long and tedious feasting. Yet let me intreat one seruice more, it is for the God of gaine, who I am sure will finde Followers and Disciples too attentiue.

For the Festiuall of this Gaine-god, Quetzaalcoalt; the Merchants, his deuoted and faithfull Obseruants, forty dayes before, bought a slaue well proportioned to represent that Idoll for that space. First, they washt him twice in a Lake, called the Lake of the Gods, and being purified, they attired him like the Idoll. Two of the Ancients of the Temple came to him nine dayes before the Feast, and humbling themselues before him, said with a loud voice, Sir, nine dayes hence your dancing must end, and you must dye: and hee must answere, (whatsoeuer hee thinketh) In a good hower. They diligently obserued if this aduertisement made him sad, or if he continued his dancing according to his wont. If they perceiued him sad, they tooke the sacrificing Rasors, which they washed and clensed from the bloud, which thereon had remayned, and hereof with another liquor made of Cacao, mixed a drinke, which they said would make him forget what had beene said to him, and returne to his former iollitie. For they tooke this heauinesse in these men to be ominous.

On the Feast Day, after much honouring him, and incensing him, about midnight they sacrificed him, offering his heart to the Moone, and after cast it to the Idoll, letting the body fall downe the staires to the Merchants, who were the chiefe Worshippers. These hearts of their Sacrifices (some [h] say) were burned after the Oblation to this Planet and Idoll. The body they sauced and dressed for a Banquet about breake of day, after they had bid the Idoll good morrow with a small dance.

This Temple of Quetzaalcoalt had Chappels as the rest, and Chambers, where were Conuents of Priests, young men, Maydes, and Children. One Priest alone was resident which was changed weekly. His charge that weeke, after hee had instructed the Children, was to strike vp a Drumme at the Sunne setting, at the sound whereof (which was heard throughout the Citie) euery one ended his Merchandize and retired to his house, all the Citie being as silent, as if no bodie had beene there: at day breaking hee did againe giue notice by his Drumme: for till that time it was not lawfull to stirre out of the Citie. In this Temple was a Court, wherein they danced, and on this Idols Holy-day, had erected a Theater, thirty foot square, finely decked and trimmed, in which were represented Comedies, Masks, and many other representations, to expresse or cause mirth and ioy.

§. III.

Of their Schooles, Letters, and other their Opinions.

THe Mexicans [i] had their Schooles, and as it were Colledges or Seminaries, where the Ancients taught the Children to say by heart, the Orations, Discourses, Dialogues, and Poems, of their great Orators and chiefe Men, which thus were preserued by Tradition, as perfectly as if they had beene written. And in their Temples, the sonnes of the chiefe Men (as Peter [k] Martyr reporteth) were shut vp at seuen yeeres old, and neuer came forth thence till they were marriageable, and were brought forth to be contracted All which time, they neuer cut their haire, they were clothed in blacke, abstained at certaine times of the yeere from meats engendring much bloud, and chastened their bodies with often fasting.

[i] Acosta l. 6. c. 7.

[k] Pet. Martyr. Dec. 5. lib. 4.

And although they had not Letters, [l] yet they had their Wheele for computation of time, (as it is said before) in which their writings were not as ours, from the left hand to the right, or as of the Easterne Nations, from the right hand to the left, or as the Chinois, from the top to the bottome: but beginning below did mount vpwards: as in that mentioned Wheele, from the Sunne, which was made in the Center, vpwards to the Circumference. Another manner of writing or signing, they had, in Circle-wise. In the Prouince of Yucatan or Honduras, there were Bookes of the leaues of Trees, folded and squared, which contained the knowledge of the Planets, of Beasts, and other Naturall things, and of their Antiquities, which some blindly-zealous Spaniards, taking for Inchantments, caused to be burned.

e Cap.7. The [e] Indians of Tescuco, Talla, and Mexico, shewed vnto a Iesuite their Bookes, Histories, and Kalendars, which in Figures and Hieroglyphicks represented things after their manner. Such as had forme or figure, were represented by their proper Images, other things were represented by Characters; and I haue seene, saith Acosta, the Pater Noster, Aue Maria, and Confession thus written. As, for these things, I a Sinner doe confesse my

n Gomara, part. 1. p. 3. 69. selfe, they painted an Indian, kneeling on his knees, at a Religious mans feet; To God most mightie, they painted three faces with their Crownes, according to that painting blasphemy of the Popish Image-mongers, and so they went on in that manner of picturing the words of their Popish Confession; where Images failed, setting Characters; Their [n] Bookes for this cause were great, which (besides their engrauings in Stone, Walles, or Wood) they made of Cotton-wooll wrought into a kind of Paper, and of leaues of Metll, folded vp like

b Pet. Mart. Dec. 4. l. 8. our Broad-clothes, and written on both sides. Likewise they [o] made them of the thinne inner rinde of a Tree, growing vnder the vpper barke (as did also the Ancient Latines, from whence the names of Codex and Liber for a Booke, are deriued by our Grammarians.) They did bind them also into some forme of Bookes, compacting them with Bitumen: their Characters were of Fish-hookes, Starres, Snares, Files, &c. Thus did they keepe their priuate and publike Records.

p Gomara vbi supra. There [p] were some in Mexico, that vnderstood each other by whistling, which was ordinarily vsed by Louers and Theeues; a Language admirable euen to our wits, so highly applauded by our selues, and as deeply deiecting these Nations in termes of sillinesse and simplicitie. Yea, in Our Virginia (so I hope and desire) Captaine Smith told mee that there are some, which the spacious diuorce of the wide streame notwithstanding, will by hallowes and hoopes vnderstand each other, and entertaine conference. The numbers of the Mexicans are simple, till you come to six, then they count sixe and one, sixe and two, sixe and three; ten is a number by it selfe, which in the insuing numbers, is repeated as in other Languages till fifteene, which they reckon in one terme, ten, fiue, and one, and so the rest to twentie. Some write [q] that the men in Mexico sate downe, and the women stood, when they made water.

q Relat. del Tewistitan ap. Ram. v. 3. r Gom. p. 312. The Mexicans [r] did beleeue concerning the soule, that it was immortall, and that men receiued either ioy or paine, according to their deserts and liuing in this World. They held for an assured faith, that there were nine places appointed for soules, and the chiefest place of glory to bee neere vnto the Sunne, where the soules of good men slaine in the Warres, and those which were sacrificed, are placed: that the soules of wicked men abide in the earth, and were diuided after this sort: children which were dead-borne, went to one place: those which dyed of age or other disease, went to another: those which died of wounds or contagion, to a third: those which were executed by order of Iustice, to a fourth; but Parricides

f Acosta l. 7. c. 10 which slew their Parents, or which slew their wiues or children, to a fift. Another place was for such as slew their Masters, or Religious persons. [f] Acosta seemeth to deny that the Indians beleeued any punishments after death, and yet setteth downe an Oration made at Mutezumas Election, wherein he is said to haue pierced the nine Vaults of heauen, which seemeth to allude to this of Gomara.

Their burials also were diuers, as is shewed before: and heere may bee added, that hee which died for Adultery, was shrowded like vnto their god of Leachery, called Tlazoulterel, he that was drowned, like to Tlaloc: he that died of drunkennesse, like to the god of wine: Ometochtli; the Souldier, like to Vitzilipuzli. But lest you wish me buried in like manner, which trouble as much my English Reader, with New-Spaines tedious Relations, as Old-Spaines fastidious insulting spirits haue sometime done our English Nation, I will aduenture further into the adioyning Prouinces.

Of Iucatan, Acuſamil, Guatimala, and Hondura.

IVCATAN [t] is a point of Land extending it ſelfe into the Sea, ouer againſt the Iſle Cuba, and was firſt diſcouered by Francis Hermando de Cordoua, in the yeere 1517. at which time, one asking an Indian how this Countrey was called, he anſwered, Tectoten, Tectetan, that is, I vnderſtand you not, which words the Spaniards corrupting, both in the ſound and interpretation, called it Iucatan. Iames Velaſques, Gouernour of Cuba, ſent his Couſin, Iohn de Grijalua the yeere after, who there fought with the Indians at Campotan, and was hurt. The Spaniards [u] went to a Citie on the ſhore, which for the greatneſſe they called Cayro, of that great Citie in Ægypt. Here they found Turreted Houſes, Stately Temples, Wayes paued, and faire Market-places. The houſes were of ſtone or brick, and lyme, very artificially compoſed. To the ſquare Courts or firſt habitations of their houſes they aſcended by ten or twelue ſteps. The roofe was of Reeds, or ſtalkes of Herbs. The Indians gaue the Spaniards Iewels of Gold, very faire and cunningly wrought, and were requited with Veſtures of Silke and Wooll, Glaſſe, Beads and little Bels. Their apparell was of Cotton in manifold faſhions and colours. They frequented their Temples much, to the which the better ſort paued wayes with ſtone from their houſes. They were great Idolaters, and were circumciſed, but not all. They liued vnder Lawes, and traffiked together with great fidelitie, by exchanging commodities without money. The Spaniards ſaw Croſſes amongſt them, and demanding whence they had them, they ſaid that a certaine man of excellent beauty paſſing by that coaſt, left them that notable token to remember him: others ſaid, a certaine man brighter then the Sunne dyed in the working thereof. The Spaniards ſayled thence to [x] Campechium, a towne or three thouſand houſes. Here they ſaw a ſquare Stage or Pulpit foure Cubits high, partly of clammie Bitumen, and partly of ſmall ſtones, whereto the image of a man cut in Marble, was ioyned, two foure-footed vnknowne beaſts faſtning vpon vpon him, as if they would teare him in pieces. And by the Image ſtood a Serpent all beſmeared with bloud, deuouring a Lyon, it was ſeuen and forty foot long, and as bigge as an Oxe. Theſe things I mention as teſtimonies of their Art in theſe barbarous places; and perhaps of their deuotion alſo. Grijalua or Griſalua ſeeing a Tower farre off at Sea, by direction therof, came to an Iland called Coſumel, agreeing in priuate and publike manner of life with them of Iucatan: Their Houſes, Temples, apparell, and trade of Marchandize all one: their houſes ſomewhere couered with Reeds, and where Quarries were, with Slate: many houſes had Marble pillars.

They found Ancient Towres there, and the ruines of ſuch as had been broken downe and deſtroyed: there was one whereto they aſcended by eighteene ſteps or ſtaires. The Gouernour whom they ſuppoſed to be a Prieſt, conducted them to the Towre: in the top whereof they erected a Spaniſh Banner, and called alſo the Iſland Santa Cruce. In the Towre they found chambers, wherein were marble Images, and ſome of Earth in the ſimilitude of Beares. Theſe they inuoked with loude ſinging all in one tune, and ſacrificed vnto them with fumes and ſweet Odours, worſhipping them as their Houſhold Gods. There they performed their diuine ceremonies and adoration: they were alſo circumciſed.

Gomara [y] ſaith, That heere, and at Xicalanco, the Diuell vſed to appeare viſibly, and that theſe two were great in eſtimation for holineſſe; euery Citie had their Temple, or Altar, where they worſhipped their Idols, amongſt which were many Croſſes of Wood and Braſſe, whereby ſome conceiue that ſome Spaniards had recourſe hither when Roderigo was defeated, and Spaine ouer-runne by the Saracens. In [z] both theſe places they ſacrificed men: which Cortes perſwaded them to ceaſe. The Temple in Coſumil or Acuſamil was built like a ſquare Towre, broad at the foot, with ſteps round about, and from the middeſt vpward were ſtrait: the top was hollow and couered with ſtraw: it had foure windowes and Porches. In the hollow place was their Chappell, where ſtood their Idols. In a Temple by the Sea-ſide was an vncouth Idoll, great and hollow, faſtened in the wall with lime: it was made of Earth. Behinde this Idols back was the Veſtry, where the ornaments of the Temple were kept. The Priests had a litle secret doore hard adioyning to the Image, by which they crept into his hollow panch, and thence answered the people that came thither with Prayers and Petitions, making the simple people beleeue it was the voyce of the god, which therefore they honoured more then any other, with many perfumes and sweet smels. They offered Bread, Fruit, Quailes bloud, and of other Birds, Dogs, and sometimes Men. The fame of this Idoll and Oracle brought many Pilgrimes to Acusamil from many places. At the foot of this Temple was a plot like a Church-yard, well walled, and garnished with Pinnacles, in the middest whereof stood a Crosse of tenne foot long, which they adored for the god of raine. At all times when they wanted raine, they would goe thither on Procession deuoutly, and offered to the Crosse Quailes sacrificed, no Sacrifice being so acceptable. They burnt sweet Gumme to perfume him with, besprinkling the same with water, and by this meanes they thought to obtaine raine. They could neuer know, saith Gomara, how that the God of the Crosse came amongst them, for in all those parts of India, there is no memory of any preaching of the Gospell that had beene at any time. What others thinke, and what some Indians answered, concerning it, is said before.

b H. Benzo l. 2. cap. 15.

Benzo [b] writeth, That they did not eat the flesh of those men which they sacrificed: and that they were first subdued by Francis Montegius, whose cruelties were such, that Alquinotep, a Cacique or Indian Lord aboue an hundred and ten yeeres old, and a Christian, told him That when he was a yong man, there was a sickneſse of wormes, that they thought all would haue dyed: (they were not onely ejected by vomite, but did eate out themselues a passage thorow mens bodies) and not long before the Spaniards arriuall, they had two battels with the Mexicans, in which an hundred and fiftie thousand men perished. But all this was light in respect of that Spanish burthen.

c Bot. l. 5. part. 1. Guatimala, or Saint Iames.

Guatimala [c] commeth next to our consideration, a Prouince of pleasant Ayre, and fertile soyle, where groweth abundance of their Cacao, which is a fruit that serueth the Indians for meat, drinke, and money. The Citie (which beareth the same name) was first at the foot of a Vulcano or Hill which casteth fire, but because in the yeere 1542. [d] on the sixe and twentieth day of December, a Lake hidden in the bowels of that Hill, brake forth in many places, and with a terrible violence ruined the most part of the Citie: it was remoued two miles thence, together with the Episcopall Sea, and the Kings Councell. But in the yeere 1581. there issued from another Vulcan two miles off, or somewhat more, such an eruption of fire as threatned to consume euery thing. The day following, followed such a showre of Ashes, that it filled the Valley, and almost buried the Citie. And yet were not all the throwes passed of this Hils monstrous trauels, but the yeere after, for the space of foure & twenty houres thence issued a streame of fire, that dranke vp fiue streames of water, burned the stones and Rockes, rent the Ayre with thunders, and made it a wauing and mouing Sea of fire. Before that first eruption of waters, some Indians came and told the Bishop, that they had heard an vncredible noyse and murmuring at the foot of the Hill: but he reproued them, saying, they should not trouble themselues with vaine and superstitious feares; about two of the clocke in the night following, happened that deluge, which carried away many houses, and whatsoeuer stood in the way, in which 520. Spaniards perished, and scarce any mention of the houses remained.

f H. Benzo l. 2. cap 16. Gomar. Histor. Gen. cap. 209.

It is worthy recitall which Benzo [f] and Gomara haue recorded, that Peter Aluarado the Gouernour (who by licence of the Pope had married two sisters, the Ladie Frances, and the Ladie Beatrice della Culua) hauing perished by a mischance, his wife not onely painted her house with Sorrowes blacke Liuerie, and abstained from meat and sleepe, but in a mad impietie said, God could now doe her no greater euill. Yet for all this her sorrow, shee caused the Citizens to be sworne vnto her Gouernment (a new thing in the Indies.) Soone after, this inundation hapned, which first of all assailed the Gouernours house, and caused this impotent and impatient Ladie, now to bethinke her of a deuotion, and betake her to her Chappell, with eleuen of her Maids, where leaping on the Altar, and clasping about an Image, the force of the water ruined the Chappell; wheras, if she had stayed in her bed-chamber, she had escaped death. They tell of vncouth noyses, and hideous apparitions which then were seene. Benzo obserued by his owne experience, that this Country is much subiect to Earth-quakes. The Guatimalans in manner of life resemble the Mexicans and Nicaraguans.

g Benzo lib. 2. cap. 15.

Fondura, [g] or Hondura is next to Guatimala, wherein were (saith Benzo) at the Spaniards first comming thither foure hundred thousand Indians, but when I was there, scarcely eight thousand were left: the rest being slaine, or sold, or consumed by the Mines: and those which are left, both heere, and in other places, place their habitation as farre as they can, where the Spaniard shall be no eye-sore vnto them. The Spaniards in this Prouince planted fiue Spanish Colonies, which all scarcely could number an hundred and twentie houses.

§. II.

Of Nicaragua, their Plentie, and exceeding Superstition.

NIcaragua * extendeth it selfe from the Chiulatecan Mines of Fondura, toward the South Sea. This Region is not great, but fertile, and therefore called of the Spaniards Mahumets Paradise, for the plentie of all things; yet in the Summer time it is so scorched with heate, that men cannot trauell but in the night. Sixe moneths, from May to October, are pestered with continuall showres, which the other six wholly want. The Parrots are here as troublesome as Crowes and Rookes with vs, and they are forced to keep their corne in like manner from their spoyling. The people are of like condition to the Mexicans they feed on mans flesh. To their dances they flocke two or three hundred in a companie, which are performed with great varietie of gestures, vestures, and passions: Euery man in, and, euery man out of his humour. Thirtie and fiue miles from Legeon or Lyon, an Episcopall Citie in this Region, is a Vulcano or flaming Hill, the fire whereof may be seene (in the night) aboue one hundred miles. Some had a conceit, that molten gold was the matter of this fire. And therefore a certaine Dominican caused a Kettle and long chaine of Yron to bee let downe into this fierie concauitie, where by the violence of the heat, the Kettle and part of the chaine was molten. He makes a bigger and stronger, but returnes with like successe, and this added, that himselfe and his two companions by eruption of fire, had almost beene consumed. Gomara a calls this fire Blasio de Tnnesta, and the hill, Masaya. It goes downe two hundred and fiftie braces or yards. In this Country they vsed Sodomie and sacrifices of Men. Of this name Nicaragua, Gilgonsales, (that first of the Spaniards discouered these parts) found a King, with whom he had much conference, whom he perswaded to become a Christian, although his prohibition of warres and dancing did much trouble him. This Nicaragua b demanded them if the Christians had any knowledge of the Floud, which drowned all the Earth with men and beasts (as he had heard his Progenitors say) and whether another were to come; whether the Earth should be ouerturned, or the Heauen fall: when, and how the Moone and Starres should lose their light and motion: who moued those heauenly bodies; where the soules should remaine; and what they should doe, being freed from the bodie, whether the Pope dyed, whether the Spaniards came from Heauen, and many other strange questions admirable in an Indian. They worshipped the Sun and other Idols, which Nicaragua suffered Gilgonsales to take out of the great Temple.

In Nicaragua c there were fiue linages, and different languages: the Coribici, Ciocotoga, Ciondale, Oretigua, and the Mexican; though this place was a thousand miles from Mexico, yet were they like them in speech, apparell, and religion: they had also the same figures in stead of Letters, which those of Culhua had, and bookes a span broad, and twelue spans long, doubled of many colours. They differ as in Languages, so in Religions. Of their religious rites thus writeth Gomara: their Priests were all married, except their Confessors, which heard Confessions, and appointed Penances, according to the qualitie of the fault: they reuealed not the Confession: they appointed the Holy-dayes, which were eighteene. When they sacrificed, they had a Knife of flint, wherewith they opened him that was sacrificed. The Priests appointed the Sacrifices; how many men, whether they were to be women, or slaues taken in battell; that all the people might know how to celebrate the Feasts, what Prayers and what offerings to make. The Priest went three times about the Captiue, singing in a dolefull tune, and suddenly opens his breast, anoints his face with the bloud, takes out his heart, diuideth his body. The heart is giuen to the Prelate, the feet and hands to the King, the buttocks to the taker, the rest to the people. The heads of the Sacrifices are set on Trees, planted there for that purpose, euery tree hath figured in it the name of the Prouince wherewith they haue wars. Vnder these trees they many times sacrifice men and children of the Country; and of their owne people, being first bought: for it was lawfull for the Father to sell his children. Those which the d Kings bring vp of their owne people, with better fare then ordinary for sacrifice, are made beleeue, they shall be some canonized Wights, or Heauenly Deities, and therefore take it gladly. They did not eate the flesh of these, as they did of the captiues. When they ate their sacrificed captiues, they made great Feasts, and the Priests and Religious men dranke much wine and smoke; their wine is of Prunes: whiles the Priest anoints the cheekes and mouth of the Idoll with the bloud, the others sing, and the people make their Prayers with great deuotion and teares, and after goe on Procession (which is not done in all Feasts.) The Religious haue white Cotten-coats, and other ornaments which hang downe from the shoulders to the legs, therby to put a difference between them & others. The Laymen haue their Banners, with that Idol which they most esteem, and bags with dust & bodkins; the yong men haue their Bowes, Darts, Arrows, & the guide of all is the Image of the Deuill set vpon a Lance, carried by the most ancient and Honourable Priest. They goe in order, the Religious singing till they come to the place of their Idolatry, where being arriued, they spread couerings on the ground, or strew it with Roses and Flowres, because their Idols should not touch the ground, and the Banner being stucke fast, the singing ceaseth, and the Prelate beginning, all the rest follow, and draw bloud, some from their tongues, some from their eares, some from their members, and euery man as his deuotion liketh best, and with that bloud anoint the Image. In the meane-while, the youths skirmish and dance for the honour of their Feasts: they cure the wounds, with the powder of hearbs and coles. In some of these Processions they hallow Mayz, besprinkling the same with the bloud of their Priuities, and eate it.

They may haue many women, but one is their lawfull wife, which they marrie thus; the Priest takes the Bridegroome and the Bride by the little fingers, sets them in a chamber at a fire, and giues them certain instructions, and when the fire is out, they are maried. If he takes her for a Virgin, and finds her otherwise, he may diuorce her. Many bring their wiues to the Caciques, or Lords to corrupt them, esteeming it an honour. Their [c] Temples were low, darke roomes, which they vsed for their Treasurie also and Armourie. Before the Temple was an high Altar for the Sacrifices, whereon the Priest played the Preacher first, and then the Butcher.

Adulterers are beaten, but not slaine; the adulterous wife is diuorced, and may not marry againe, and her Parents are dishonoured. Their Husbands suffer them to lye with others in some Feasts of the yeare. He that forceth a Virgin, is a slaue, or payeth her dowrie: if a Slaue doe it with his Masters Daughter, they are both buried quicke. They haue common Brothels. A Thiefe hath his haire cut off, and is made the Slaue from whom he hath stolne, vntill he hath made satisfaction; which if he deferre long, he is sacrificed. They had no punishment for him which should kill a Caciqne, for (they said) such a thing could not happen.

§. III.

Of the strange creatures in these parts; of NOMBRE DE DIOS; and the Spanish mysteries at their first Plantation.

[f] Botero.

THe riches of Nicaragua [f] consisteth much in a great Lake three hundred miles long, and being within twelue miles of the South Sea, doth disemboque it selfe in the North-Sea, a great way off. In this Lake of Nicaragua are many and great fishes. [g] One strange kinde is that, which the Inhabitants of Hispaniola call Manati (as for the Inhabitants of the place, the Spanish iniuries haue chased them thence.)

[g] Benzo lib. 2. cap. 14. Gomara part. 2. cap. 32.

This Fish somewhat resembleth the Otter, it is fiue and twenty foot long, twelue thicke, the head and tayle like a Cow, with small eyes, his backe hard and hairy, he hath onely two feet at the shoulders, and those like an Elephants. The females bring forth yong, and nourish them with the Vdder, like a Cow. I haue seene and eaten of them (saith Benzo) the taste is like Swines flesh; they eate Grasse. There was a King in Hispaniola, which put one of them (being presented him by his Fishermen) into a Lake of standing-waters, where it liued fiue and twenty yeares: when any of the seruants came to the Lake and called Matto, Matto, she would come and receiue meat at their hands: and if any would bee ferried ouer the Lake, she willingly yeelded her backe, and performed this Office faithfully, yea, she hath carrien ten men at once, singing or playing. A Spaniard had once wronged her, by casting a dart at her; and therefore after that, when she was called, she would plunge downe againe, otherwise to the Indians shee remained officious. Shee would be as full of play as a Monkey, and would wrastle with them: especially shee was addicted to one yong man, which vsed to her. This proceded, partly from her docible nature, partly, because being taken yong, she was kept vp a while at home, in the Kings house, with bread. This Fish liueth both on Land and Water. The Riuer swelling ouer his Banks, into the Lake, this Fish followed the streame, and was seene no more. There was another strange creature in Nicaragua (they call it Casciuj) like a blacke Hogge, with small eyes, wide eares, clouen feet, a short trunke or snowt like an Elephant, of so lowd a braying, that he would make men deafe. Another there is, with a naturall purse vnder her belly, wherein she putteth her yong: it hath the bodie of a Fox, handed and footed like a Monkey. The Bats in these parts are terrible for biting. The Inhabitants neere the Riuer Suerus are not differing from the rest, but that they eate not mans flesh. Next, is that necke or narrow extent of Land stretching betweene the North and South-Seas, and (as it were) knitting the two great Peninsul's of the North and South America together.

Nombre

Digitized by Google

Nombre de Dios signifieth the name of God, occasioned by the words of Didacus Niquesa, who after disastrous aduentures elsewhere, came hither, and here bade his men goe on shore in the name of God; whereupon the Colony and Plantation there, was so called: It hath a bad situation and small habitation. Baptista Antonio the King of Spaines Surueyour counselled to bring Nombre de Dios to Puerto Bello. It was remoued from the former seat, in the yeare of our Lord 1584. Sir Thomas Baskeruile burnt it, and went from thence with his Armie towards Panama, in the yeare 1595. Darien was called Antiqua Dariensis, because Anciſus vowed to our Lady at Siuill called Maria Antiqua, if she would helpe him in those Indian Conquests, hee would turne the Caciques house into a Temple: there he planted a Colony.

It would be tedious to tell of the sturres, and ciuill vnciuill brawles betwixt the Spaniards in these parts. Vasques Valboa imprisoned Anciſus, and after recouered his credit by discouerie of the South-Sea. For whiles the Spaniards contended about the weight and sharing of their Gold, which a Cacique had giuen them, this Cacique being present, hurled downe the Gold, not a little maruelling (as he said) that they would so much contend for that, as if they could eate or drinke it: But if they liked it so well, hee would carry them where their Golden-thirst should be satisfied. He was deceiued in the nature of that dropsie-thirst, which as a fire quenched with oyle, receiues thence greater strength: but hee deceiued not them in his promise, bringing them to the South-Sea: where Valboa named one Prouince, Golden Castile. And for that which he spake of their strife, [a] as if they could eate or drinke those Metals, the cruelties of the Spaniards were such, as the Indians, when they got any of them, would bind their hands and feet, and laying them on their backs, would powre Gold into their mouthes, saying, in insultation, Eat Gold Christian. This Valboa was put to death, by Arias his Father-in-law.

But now we haue mentioned the first Spaniards which planted these parts, it shall not be amisse, to mention some hardships the Spaniards sustained before they could here settle themselues, which may be an answere to those nice and delicate conceits, that in our Virginian Expedition cast off all hope, because of some disasters. How the Spaniards dealt one with another, and how the Indians dealt with them, you haue heard: worse hath not followed from any turbulent emulous spirit of our owne; or hostile, of the Virginian, in this Plantation. And as for famine, Nicuesa's men were so pinched, that (not to speake of those which perished, one sold [b] an old leane mangie Dogge to his fellowes for many Castellans of Gold: these flayed the Dogge, and cast his mangie skin, with the bones of the head among the bushes. The day following, one of them finds it full of Maggots, and stinking: but famine had neither eyes nor scent: he brought it home, sod, and ate it, and found many Customers which gaue a [c] Castellan a dish for that mangie Broth. Another found two Toads, and sod them, which a sicke man bought for two fine shirts curiously wrought with Gold. Others found a dead man, rotten, and stinking, which putrified carkasse they roasted, and ate. And thus, from seuen hundred and seuenty men, they were brought so low, that scarce forty (shadowes of men) remained to inhabite Dariena Much like to this was their successe at the Riuer of Plate, in Florida and other places of the West-Indies.

Of the Southerne America, and of the Countries on the Sea-coast betwixt Dariene and Cumana.

§. I.

Of the great Riuers in these parts, and of Dariene.

THis Peninsula of the New World extending it selfe into the South, is in forme somewhat like to Africa, and both [a] to some huge Pyramis. In this, the Basis or ground is the Northerly part, called Terra Firma, from whence it lesseneth it selfe by degrees, as it draweth neerer the Magellan Straits, where the top of this Spire may fitly bee placed. On the East side it is washed with the North Ocean, as it is termed: On the West with that of the South, called also the Peaceable. It is [b] supposed to haue sixteene thousand miles in compasse, foure thousand in length; the breadth is vnequall. The Easterne part thereof, betweene the Riuers Maragnon and Plata, is challenged by the Portugals; the rest by the Spaniard. From the North to the South are ledges of Mountaines, the tops whereof are said to be higher then that Birds will visit; the bottomes yeeld the greatest Riuers in the World, and which most enrich the Oceans store-house. Orenoque, Maragnon, and Plata seeme to be the Indian Triumuiri, Generals of those Riuer-Armies, and Neptunes great Collectors of his watery tributes. Orenoque for ships is nauigable a thousand miles; for lesse Vessels, two thousand in some places twentie miles broad; in some, thirtie.

a Gas. Exs. lib. 3 cap. 24.

Ber-

Berreo affirmed to Sir Walter Raleigh, That a hundred Riuers fell into it, marching vnder his name and colours, the least as bigge as Rio Grande [a] one of the greateſt Riuers of America. It extendeth two thouſand miles Eaſt and Weſt, and commandeth eight hundred miles, North and South. Plata, taking vp all the ſtreames, in his way, is ſo full ſwolne with his increaſed ſtore, that he ſeemeth rather with bigge lookes to bid defiance to the Ocean, then to acknowledge homage, opening his mouth fortie leagues wide, as if he would deuoure the ſame; and with his vomited abundance maketh the ſalt waters to recoyle, following freſh in this purſuit, till in ſalt ſweates at laſt he melteth himſelfe in the Combate. Maragnon is farre greater, whoſe water hauing furrowed a Channell of ſixe thouſand miles, in the length of his winding paſſage, couereth threeſcore and ten leagues in breadth, and hideth his Bankes [b] on both ſides from him which ſayleth in the middeſt of his proud Current, making ſimple eyes beleeue, that the Heauens alway deſcend to kiſſe and embrace his waues. And ſure, our more-ſtraitned world would ſo far be acceſſary to his aſpiring, as to ſtyle him with the royall title of Sea, and not debaſe his greatneſſe with the meaner name of a Riuer. Giraua ſomewhat otherwiſe writeth of theſe Riuers, that Plata called by the Indians Paranaguaeu, as one ſhould ſay, a Riuer like a Sea, is twenty fiue leagues in the mouth, (placed by him in thirty three degrees of Southerly latitude) encreaſing in the ſame time and manner as Nilus: Maragnon (hee ſaith) is in the entrance fiue leagues, and is not the ſame with Orellana (ſo called of Francis Orella, the the firſt Spaniard that ſayled in it, and Amazones, of the fabulous reports, as Giraua termeth them, of ſuch women there ſeene) which hee ſayth hath aboue fifty leagues of breadth in the mouth, and is the greateſt Riuer of the World, called by ſome the freſh Sea, running aboue fifteene hundred leagues vnder the Æquinoctiall. Thus much Hee, though leſſe then others, yet more then can bee paraleld in any other ſtreames. This Southerne halfe of America hath alſo, at the Magellane Straits, contracted, and (as it were) ſhrunke in it ſelfe, refuſing to be extended further in ſo cold a Climate. The manifold riches of Metals, Beaſts, and other things, in the beginning of the former Booke haue beene declared; and in this, as occaſion moueth ſhall bee further manifeſted. The Men are the worſt part, as being in the greateſt parts thereof inhumane and brutiſh. The Spaniſh Townes in this great tract and their Founders, are ſet downe by Pedro de [c] Cieza, Herera, and others. I rather intend Indian Superſtitions, then Spaniſh plantations in this part of my Pilgrimage.

Of the Townes of [d] Nombre de Dios, ſeuenteene leagues from Panama, the one on the North Sea, the other on the South, and of Dariene, wee laſt tooke our leaues, as vncertaine whether to make them Mexican or Peruvian, being borderers, and ſet in the Confines, betwixt both. The mooriſh ſoyle, muddie water, and groſſe Ayre, conſpire with the heauenly Bodies to make Dariene vnwholeſome: the myrie ſtreame runneth (or creepeth rather) very ſlowly; the water [e] but ſprinkled on the houſe-floore, engendreth Toades and Wormes.

They [f] haue in this Prouince of Dariene ſtore of Crocodiles, one of which kinde, Cieza ſaith, was found fine and twentie foot long; Swine without tailes; Cats with great tailes; Beaſts clouen-footed like Kine, otherwiſe reſembling Mules, ſauing their ſpacious eares, and a trunke or ſnowt like an Elephant: there are Leopards, Lyons, Tygres. On the right and left hand of Dariene are found twenty Riuers, which yeeld Gold. The Men are of good ſtature, thinne haired; the Women weare Rings on their eares and noſes, with quaint ornaments on their lips. The Lords marry as many Wiues as them liſteth, other men, one or two. They forſake, change, and ſell their Wiues at pleaſure. They haue publike Stewes of women, and of men alſo in many places without any diſcredit; yea, this priuiledgeth them from following the warres. The yong Girles hauing conceiued, eate certain herbs, to cauſe abortion. Their Lords and Prieſts conſult of warres, after they haue drunke the ſmoke of a [h] certaine herbe. The Women follow their husbands to the warres, and know how to vſe a Bow. They all paint themſelues in the warres. They neede no Head-pieces, for their heads are ſo hard, that they will breake a Sword, being ſmitten thereon. Wounds receiued in warre, are the badges of honour, whereof they glory much, and thereby enioy ſome Franchiſes.

chiefes. They brand their prisoners and pull out one of their teeth before. They will sell their children; are excellent Swimmers, both Men and Women; accustoming themselues twice or thrice a day thereunto. Their Priests are their Physicians, and Masters of Ceremonies; for which cause, and because they haue conference with the Deuill, they are much esteemed. They haue no Temples, nor Houses of deuotion. The Deuill they honour much, which in terrible shapes doth sometimes appeare vnto them; as I (saith Cieza) haue heard some of them say. They beleeue, that there is one God in heauen, to wit, the Sunne, and that the Moone is his wife; and therefore worship these two Planets. They worship the Deuill also, and paint him in such forme as he appeareth to them, which is of diuers sorts. They offer Bread, Smoke, Fruits, and Flowres with great deuotion. Any one may cut off his arme which stealeth Maiz. Enciso, with his Armie of Spaniards seeking to subdue these parts, vsed a Spanish tricke, telling the Indians, That hee sought their conuersion to the Faith, and therefore discoursed of One God, Creator of all things, and of Baptisme; and after other things of this nature, lesse to his purpose, he told them, That the Pope is the Vicar of Christ in all the world, with absolute power ouer mens Soules and Religions; and that hee had giuen those Countries to the most mightie King of Spaine, his Master, and hee was now come to take possession, and to demand gold for tribute. The Indians answered, That they liked well what he had spoken of one God, but for their Religion, they would not dispute of it, or leaue it: And for the Pope, he should be liberall of his owne; neither seemed it, that their King was mightie, but poore, that sent thus a begging. But what words could not, their Swords effected, with the destruction of the Indians.

§. II.

Of Vraba, Carthagena, and the Superstitions of Dabaiba.

THe soyle of Vraba is so fatned with a streame therein, that in eight and twentie dayes the seeds of Cucumbers, Melons, and Gourds, will ripen their Fruits. There is [l] a Tree in those Countries, whose leaues, with the bare touch, cause great blisters: the sauour of the wood is poyson; and cannot be carried without danger of life, except by the helpe of another herbe, which is an Antidote to this venomous Tree. [m] King Abibeiba had Palace in a Tree, by reason of the mooriish situation and often inundation of his Land. Vasques could not get him downe, till he began to cut the Tree, and then the poore King came downe, and bought his freedome at the Spaniards price.

Carthagena was so called, for some resemblance in the situation to a Citie in Spaine of that name. Sir Francis Drake tooke it. The Indians thereabouts vsed poisoned Arrowes: the women warre as well as themen. Enciso took one, who with her owne hands had killed eight and twenty Christians. They did eate the Enemies which they killed. They vsed to put in their Sepulchres gold, feathers, and other riches. Betweene Carthagena and Martha runneth a swift Riuer, which maketh the Sea-water to giue place; and they which passe by, may in the Sea take in of this water fresh.

It is called of the Inhabitants Dabaiba (the Spaniards haue named it Rio Grande and the Riuer of Saint Iohn) it passeth with a Northerne discouerie, into the Gulfe of Vraba before mentioned. They which dwell on this Riuer, obserue an Idoll of great note, called by the name of the Riuer, Dabaiba: whereto the King at certaine times of the yeere sends slaues to be sacrificed, from remote Countries, from whence also is great resort of Pilgrims. They kill the slaues before their God, and after burne them, supposing that odour acceptable to their Idoll, as Taper-lights, and Frankincense (saith Martyr) is to our Saints. Through the displeasure of that angry God, they said that all the Riuers and Fountaines had once failed, and the greatest part of men perished with famine. Their Kings in remembrance hereof, haue their Priests at home, and Chappels which are swept euery day, and kept with a religious neatnesse. When the King thinketh to obtaine of the Idoll, Sunne-shine, or Raine, or the like; he with his Priests gets vp into a Pulpit, standing in the Chappell, purposing not to depart thence till his suit be granted. They vrge their God therefore with vehement prayers, and cruell fasting: the people meane-while macerating themselues also with fasting, in foure dayes space not eating nor drinking, except on the fourth day, onely a little broth. The Spaniards asking what God they worshipped thus, they answered, The Creator of the Heauens, Sunne, Moone, and all inuisible things, from whom all good things proceed. And they say Dabaiba [n] was the Mother of that Creator. They call them to their Deuotions with certaine Trumpets and Bels of gold. The Bels had clappers like in forme to ours, made of the bones of Fishes, and yeelding a pleasing sound, as they reported: which no doubt, n They say Dabaiba was a woman of great wisdom, honoured in her life, Deified after death; to whom they ascribe thunder and lightning, when she is angry.

doubt, was a pleasing sound and musicke to the Spaniards couetous hearts, howsoeuer it agreeth with the nature of that metall to ring in the eares. One of them, say they, weighed six hundred • Pensa. Their Priests were enioyned chastitie, which vow, if they violated, they were either stoned or burned. Other men also in the time of that fast, likewise contained themselues from those earnall pleasures. They haue an imagination of the soule (but know not what substance or name to ascribe vnto it) to which yet they beleeued, was assigned future ioyes or woes, according to their demerits, pointing vp to Heauen, and downe to the Center, when they spake thereof. Many of their Wiues (for they might haue many) followed the Sepulchres of their husbands. They allow not marriage with the Sister, of which they haue a ridiculous conceit of the Spot, which they account a Man, in the Moone, that for this Incest was thither confined, to the torments of cold and moysture, in that Moone-prison. They leaue trenches on their Sepulchres, in which they yeerely powre Mays, and some of their Wine (to the profit) as they thinke of the Ghosts. If a Mother die while she giueth sucke, the poore sucking must not bee Orphan, but bee interred with her, being put there to her brest, and buried aliue. They imagined that the Soules of their great men and their familiars were immortall, but not others: and therefore such of their seruants and friends as would not be buried with them, they thought should lose that priuiledge of Immortalitie, and the delights of those pleasant places, where was eating, drinking, dancing, and the former delicacies of their former liues. They renue the funerall pompe of these great men yeerely, assembling thither with plentie of Wine and meats, and there watch all night (especially the women) singing drerie lamentations, with Inuectiues against his Enemies, if he dyed in the warres, yea, cutting the Image of his Enemy in pieces in reuenge of their slaine Lord. This done, they fall to drinking of Mays Wine till they be weary, if not drunken. Yet after this, they resume their Songs to his commendation, with many dances and adorations. When day appeareth, they put the Image of the deceased into a great Canoa (a Boat of one Tree, capeable of threescore Oares) filled with drinkes, herbes, and such things as in his life he had loued: which some carrie vpon their shoulders in Procession about the Court, and set it downe there againe, and burne it with all the contents. After which, the women, filled with Wine, and emptied of all modestie, with loose haire, secrets not secret, and varietie of Bacchanal gestures, sometimes goe, somtimes fall, somtimes shake the weapons of the men, and conclude with beastly sleeping on the ground. The young men exercise their dances and songs, piercing the middle of their priuie member with the sharpe bone of the Ray-fish, bedewing the pauement with the bloud. And their Bauti, who are their Physicians, and Priests, heale the same againe in 4. dayes. They haue in those parts Magicians, without whose aduice they attempt nothing: and neyther hunt, fish, nor gather gold, except the Tequenigua, or Wizard thinke it fit.

• Pensa exceeds the Ducat a fourth part. A Pens.

To end this Dabaiban Story, Martyr layth (for I will not further engage my credit for the truth) that in Camara, which is at the head of this Riuer, there happened most terrible tempests from the East, which threw downe Trees and Houses; and in the last Act of that Tragedie, were brought (not by representation) two foule Monsters of monstrous Fowles, such as the Poets describe the Harpies, with womens faces; one of them so great, that her legs were thicker then a mans thigh; so heauy, that the boughes of the Trees could not beare her; so strong that she would seize on a man, and flye away with him, as a Kite with a Chicken: the other was lesse, and supposed to bee the young one of the former. Corales, Osorius, and Spinosa, told Martyr, that they spake with many who saw the greater killed, which was done by a stratageme; for they made the Image of a man, and set it on the ground, attending in the Woods with their Arrowes, till shee the next morning seized on this prey, and lost her selfe; the young was neuer seene after; and happily you thinke, not before neither. But they added, that the killers of her were honoured as Gods, and rewarded with presents.

Of Tunia, Saint Martha, Venezuela, and Curiana.

IN the Valley of Tunia, p or Tomana, are Mines of Emeralds. The people worship the Sunne for their chiefe God, with such awfull deuotion, that they dare not looke stedfastly vpon it; the Moone also they worship, but in an inferiour degree. In their Warres, in stead of Ensignes, they tye the bones of certaine men (who in their liues had beene valiant) vpon long staues, to prouoke others to the like fortitude. They bury bury their Kings with golden neck-laces, set with Emeralds, and with Bread and Wine. The people about Rio Grande are Canibals, also about Saint Martha. The Tunians vse poysoned Arrowes: and when they go to the Warres they carry their Idoll Chiappen with them; vnto whom, before they enter into the field, they offer many Sacrifices of liuing men, being the children of Slaues, or of their Enemies, painting all the Image with bloud; which done, they eate the flesh. Returning Conquerers, they hold great Feasts, with dancing, leaping, singing drinking themselues drunke, and againe besmeare their Image with bloud. If they were ouercome, they sought by new Sacrifices to appease Chiappen. They demanded counsell of their Gods for their Marriages, and other affaires. For these consultations they obserued a kind of Lent two moneths, in which they lay not with women, nor ate Salt. They had Monasteries of Boyes and Girles, where they liued certaine yeeres. They corrected publike faults, as stealing, and killing, by cutting off the eares, and nose; hanging; and if hee were a Nobleman, by cutting off his haire. In gathering Emeralds they first vsed certaine Charmes. They vsed to sacrifice Birds, and many other things.

Saint Martha standeth about fifty leagues from Carthagena, at the foot of certaine Hils, alway crowned with Snow. The Indians [q] here are very valourous, and vse poysoned Arrowes. They make Bread of Iucca, a root as bigge as a mans arme, or legge, the iuyce whereof is poyson in the Ilands, and therefore they presse it betweene two stones: but in the firme Land they drinke it rawe; and both heere and there sodden, they vse it for Vineger; and being sodden till it be very thicke, for Honey. This Bread is their Cusaui, not so good as that of Mais. I haue seene a Plant of this herbe growing in Master Gerards [r] Garden, the Picture whereof he hath expressed in his Herball. The people are abominable Sodomites, a badge whereof they ware about their neckes; a Chaine, with the resemblance of two men committing this villany. In Gayra the Sodomites were attired like women, others were shauen like Friers. They had women which preserued their Virginitie: these addicted themselues to hunting, with Bow and Arrowes, alone: they might lawfully kill any that sought to corrupt them. These people were Canibals, and eate mans flesh, fresh and powdered: the young Boyes which they tooke they gelded, to make them fatter for their Tables, as we doe Capons. They set vp the heads of those they killed, at their Gates for a memoriall, and wore their teeth about their neckes for a brauery. They worship the [s] Sun and Moone, and burne thereto Perfumes of Herbs, and Gold, and Emeralds. They sacrifice slaues.

Venezuela is so called, because it is built vpon a plaine Rocke, in the waters of a Lake. The women of this Country paint their brests and armes: all the rest of their bodie is naked, except their priuie parts. The Maids are known by their colour, and greatnesse of their girdle. The Men carrie their members in a shell. There are many filthy Sodomites. They pray to Idols, and to the Deuill, whom they paint in such forme as he appeareth to them. They paint their bodies in this sort: Hee that hath killed one Enemy in the Warres, paints one of his armes; the second time, his brest; and when he hath killed a third, hee painteth a line from his eyes to his eares: and this is his Knighthood. Their Priests are their Physicians, who being sent for by a sicke man, aske the Patient, if he beleeue that they can helpe him; and then lay their hands vpon the place where they say their paines are: if he recouer not, they put the fault in him or in their Gods. They lament their dead Lords in Songs in the night time, made of their prayses: that done, they roast them at a fire, and beating them to powder, drinke them in Wine, making their bowels their Lords Sepulchres. In Zonpaciay they bury their Lords with much Gold, Iewels, and Pearles, and set vpon the Graue foure sticks in a square, within which they hang his weapons, and many Viands to eate.

From the Cape Vela, the space of 2000. miles alongst the Coast, is the fishing for Pearles, discouered by Christopher Columbus, in the yeere 1498. which sayled all along this Coast. In [t] Curiania they receiued the Spaniards with great ioy; and for Pinnes, Needles, Bels, Glasses, and such trifles, gaue them many strings of Pearles: for foure Pinnes they would giue a Peacocke; for two, a Pheasant; for one, a Turtle Doue; And when they asked, What they should doe with this new Merchandize of Pins and Needles, seeing they were naked? they shewed them the vse to picke their teeth, and to picke out thornes in their feete. These Indians had Rings of Gold, and Iewels made with Pearles, after the formes of Birds, Fishes, and Beasts: They had also the Touch-stone for their Metall, and weights to weigh the same, things not else-where found in India. They make their teeth white with an herbe, which all the day they chew in their mouthes.

Of Cumana and Paria.

§. I.

Of the People and ſtrange Creatures in Cumana.

CVmana is a Prouince named of a Riuer, called Cumana; b where certayne Franciſcans, Anno 1516. built them a Monaſterie, and the Spaniards were very diligent in the fiſhing for Pearles. About c that time three Dominicans went foureſcore miles Weſt from thence to preach the Goſpell, and were eaten of the Indians, which hindered not, but others of the ſame order founded them a Monaſterie in Ciribici, neere Maracapana. Both theſe Orders tooke paines with the Indians to conuert them, and taught their children to write and read and to anſwer at Maſſe, and the Spaniards were ſo reſpected, that they might ſafely walke alone through all the Country: but after two yeeres and a halfe, the Indians, whether for their too much imployment in the Pearle-fiſhing, or for other cauſe, rebelled, and killed a hundred Spaniards, ſlue the Friers, one of which was then ſaying Maſſe, and as many Indians as they found with them; which the Spaniards of Domingo ſoone after reuenged.

b Gom. cap. 76.

c P. M. Dec. 7. lib. 4.

The loſſe of d Cumana hindered their Trade for Pearles at Cubagua, and therefore the King ſent Iames Caſtilion to ſubdue them by force: which hee did, and began the Plantation of New Caliz, for the Spaniards to inhabit there. Cubagua was called by Columbus, the Finder, the Iland of Pearles, ſituate in twelue degrees and a halfe of Northerly Latitude, and containes twelue miles in circuit. This little Iland is exceeding great in commoditie, that accreweth by thoſe Pearles, which hath amounted to diuers millions of gold. They fetch their Wood from Margarita, an Iland foure miles to the North; and their Water from Cumana, which is two and twentie miles thence: they haue a Spring of medicinall Water there in the Iland. The Sea there, at certaine times of the yeere, is very red, which thoſe Pearle-oyſters by ſome naturall purgation are ſaid to cauſe. There are Fiſhes, or Sea-monſters, which from the middle vpwards reſemble men, with Beards, Haire, and Armes. The e people of Cumana goe naked, couering only their ſhame. At Feaſts and Dances they paint themſelues, or elſe anoint themſelues with a certaine Gumme, in which they ſtick Feathers of many colours. They cut their haire aboue the Eares, and will not ſuffer it to grow on any places of their bodies, eſteeming a bearded man a Beaſt: They take great paines to make their teeth blacke, and account them women, which haue them white. They blacke them with the powder of the leaues of a certaine Tree called Gay; theſe leaues they chew, after they are fifteene yeeres old; they mixe that powder with another of a kinde of Wood, and with Chalke of white ſhels burned, in manner as the Eaſterne Indians vſe their Betele and Arecca, with Chalke of Oyſters: and this mixture they beare continually in their mouthes ſtill chewing it, that their teeth are as blacke as coales, and ſo continue to their death. They keepe it in Baskets and Boxes, and ſell it in the markets to ſome, which come farre for it, for Gold, Slaues, Cotton, and other Merchandize. This keepeth them from paine and, rotting of the teeth. The Maides goe naked, only they bind certain bands hard about their knees to make their hips and thighes ſeeme thicke, which they eſteeme no ſmall beautie. The married Women liue honeſtly, or elſe their husbands will diuorce them. The chiefe men haue as many Wiues as they will; and if any ſtranger come to lodge in one of their houſes, they make the faireſt his Bed-fellow: Theſe alſo ſhut vp their Daughters two yeeres before they marrie them, all which time they goe not forth, nor cut their haire: After which, there is made a great feaſt, and very many bidden, which bring their varietie of cheere, & alſo wood to make the new Spouſe a houſe: A man cuts off the Bridegroomes haire before, and a woman the Brides, and then they eate and drinke, with much exceſſe, till night. This is the lawfull wife, and the other which they marry afterwards obey This. They giue their Spouſes to be defloured to their Piaces, (ſo they call their Prieſts) which theſe reuerend Fathers account their Preeminence and Prerogatiue; the Husbands, their honour; the Wiues their warrant.

Their Marriages.

The men and women weare Collars, Bracelets, Pendants, and ſome Crownes of Gold and Pearls: the Men weare Rings in their Noſes, & the Women Brooches on their breſt, whereby at firſt ſight the ſexe is diſcerned. The Women Shoot, Runne, Leape, Swim, as well as the Men: their paines of trauell are ſmall: they till the Land, and looke to the houſe, whiles the the men Hunt and Fish. They are high-minded, treacherous, and thirstie of reuenge: Their chiefe weapons are poisoned Arrowes, which they prepare with the bloud of Snakes, and other mixtures. All of both sexes, from their infancy, learne to shoot. Their meat is whatsoeuer hath life, as Horse-leeches, Bats, Grashoppers, Spiders, Bees, Lice, Wormes, raw, sodden, fried: and yet their Countrey is replenished with good Fruits, Fish, and Flesh. This Diet (or, as some say, their Water) causeth spots in their eyes, which dimme their sight. They haue as strange a Fence or hedge for their Gardens and possessions, namely, a threed of Cotton, or Bexuco, as they call it, as high as a mans Girdle; and it is accounted a great sinne to goe ouer or vnder the same, and he which breakes it (they certainly beleeue) shall presently die. So much safer is their threed wouen with this imagination, then all our stone-wals.

The Cumanois are much addicted to Hunting, wherein they are very expert, and kill Lyons, Tygres, Hogs, and all other foure-footed Beasts, with Bowes, Nets, Snares. They take one Beast, which they call Capa, that hath the soles of his feet like a French shoo, narrow behinde, broad and round before. Another, called Aranata, which for the Physnomie and subtiltie seemes to be a kinde of Ape: it hath mouth, hands, and feet, like a man; a goodly countenance, bearded like a Goat. They goe in Heards, they bellow loud, runne vp Trees like Cats, auoid the Huntsmans Arrow, and cast it with cleanly deliuerie againe at himselfe. Another Beast hath a long snout, and feedeth on Ants[f], putting his tongue into a hollow Tree, or rather place where the Ants are and as many of them as come thereon, hee licks in. The Friers brought vp one, till the stinke thereof caused them to kill it, snouted like a Foxe, rough-haired, which voided in the excrements long and slender Serpents, which presently dyed. This Beast stinking while he liued, and worse now dead, yet was good food to the Indians. They haue one which will counterfeit the voice of a crying child, and so cause some to come forth, and then deuoure them. The like is written of the Hyena, That shee will call the Shepheards by their names, and then destroy them when they come forth.

Their strange Creatures. e P. M. Dec. 8. lib. 7.

f Ouied calleth it a Beare.

They haue Parrots as bigge as Rauens, with bils like Hawkes, liuing on the prey, and smelling like Muske: Great Bats, one of which was a Physician, by strange accident, to a seruant of the Friers: which being sicke of a Pleurisie, was giuen ouer for dead, because they could not raise a veine wherein to let him bloud; in the night a Bat (after the custome of that Creature) bit and sucked him, whereby so much bloud issued, that the sicke man recouered; which the friers counted for a miracle. They haue three sorts of Bees; one whereof is little and blacke, and makes honey in the Trees, without Waxe. Their Spiders are greater then ours, of diuers colours, and weaue such strong Cobwebs, that they aske good strength to breake them. There are Salamanders[g] as bigge as a mans head: they cackle much like a Pullet: their biting is deadly. I might here hold you too long in viewing these strange Creatures: we will now returne to their stranger customes.

g Pliny, Aelian, Philostratus, and others describe this worme; but I could neuer learne any thing to satisfie my selfe therein.

§. II.

Of their vices and superstitions.

Their dancing and drunkennesse.

THey take great pleasure in two things, Dancing and Drinking, in which they will spend eight dayes together, especially at the Marriages, or Coronation of their Kings. Many Gallants will then meet together, diuersly drest; some with crownes and Feathers, some with shels about their legges in stead of bels, to make a noise: some otherwise, all painted with twenty colours & figures: he that goes worst, seemes best: taking one another by the hand, they dance in a ring, some backwards, some forwards, with a world of varietie; grinning, singing, crying, counterfetting the Deafe, Lame, Blind, Fishing, Weauing, telling of Stories; and this continueth sixe houres, and then they eate and drinke: before, he which danced most, now he which drinketh most, is the most complete and accomplished Gallant: and now beyond counterfetting, Drunkennesse sets them together in brauing, swaggering, quarrelling: others play the Swine, spue vp the former, to make way for other liquor: and they adde hereunto the fume of an Hearbe, which hath the like drunken effect; it seemeth to be Tobacco.

This perhaps will not seeme strange to some, seeing these Sauage customes of drinking, dancing, smoking, swaggering, so common with vs in these dayes: It might indeed seeme strange to our forefathers, if their more ciuill, more sacred ghosts, might returne and take view of their degenerating posteritie: but now hee must be a stranger in many companies, that will not estrange himselfe from ciuilitie, from humanitie, from Christianity, from God, to become of a Man, a Beast; of an Englishman, a Sauage Indian; of a Christian, a Fiend, saue that he hath a body, in the diuersified pollutions whereof, he hath aduantage, and takes it to out-swagger the Diuell. These are the Gull-gallants of our dayes, to whom I could wish, that either their Progenitors had beene some Cumanian Indians, or that they would leaue this vsurped Gallantry to those true owners, and resume spirits truely English.

Their gods. The Gods of the Cumanians are the Sun and Moone, which are taken for man and wife, and for the greatest Gods. They haue great feare of the Sunne, when it Thunders or Lightens, saying that he is angry with them. They fast when there is any Eclipse, especially the women: for the married women plucke their haires, and scratch their faces with their nailes; the Maids thrust sharpe fish-bones into their armes, and draw bloud. When the Moone is at full, they thinke it is wounded by the Sunne, for some indignation he hath conceiued against her. When any Comet appeareth, they make a great noise with Drums & hallowing, thinking so to scarre it away, or to consume it, beleeuing that those Comets portend some euils.

Among their many Idols and figures, which they honour as Gods, they haue one like S. Andrews Crosse, which they thought preserued them from night-spirits; and they hanged it on their new-borne children.

Their Priests. They call their Priests Piaces; whose Maiden-head-rite we before mentioned. They are their Physicians and Magicians. They cure with roots and hearbs, raw, sod, and pounded with the fat of Birds, Fishes, and Beasts; with wood and other things vnknowne to the people, with abstruse and darke words which themselues vnderstand not. They sucke and licke the place where the paine is, to draw out the euill humours. And if the paine encreaseth, they say that the Patients are possessed with euill Spirits: and then rub their bodies all ouer with their hands, vsing certaine words of Coniuration or Charmes, sucking after that very hard; giuing them to vnderstand, that by that meanes, they call out the euill spirits. Presently they take a piece of wood, the vertue whereof none else knoweth but the Piace, and therewith rub their mouthes and throats, so long till they cast all that is in their bellies, vomiting sometimes bloud with the force thereof; the Piace in the meane time stamping, knocking, calling, and gesturing: after two houres there comes from him a thicke flegme, and in the middest thereof a blacke hard bullet, which those of the house carry and cast into the fields, saying, Let the Diuell goe thither. If the sicke man recouer, his goods die and become the Priests; if he die, they say his time was come. The Piace is their Oracle, with whom they consult, whether they shall haue warre, what shall be the issue thereof, whether the yeere will be plentifull. They forewarne them of Eclipses, and aduertise of Comets. The Spaniards demanded in their necessitie, whether any ships would come shortly? And they answered, that on such a day a Caruell would come with so many men, and such prouision and Merchandize; which accordingly came to passe.

Their Diuinations. They call vpon the Diuell in this manner: the Piace entereth into a Caue, or secret place, in a darke night, and carries with him certaine couragious youths, that may moue questions without feare. He sits on a bench, and they stand on their feet, he cryeth, calleth, singeth Verses, soundeth shels: and they with a heauy accent say many times Prororure, Prororure: if the Diuell comes not, all this Black-Santtus is renued with grieuous sighs and much perplexity. When he commeth (which is knowne by the noise) hee sounds lowder, and suddenly fals downe, by visages and varied gesture, shewing that the diuell is entred. Then one of those his Associates demandeth what him pleaseth. The Friers went one day with their coniuring and coniured holies, the Crosse, Stole, Holy-water: and when the Piace was in that distraction, cast a part of the stole on him, crossing and coniuring in Latine, and he answered them in his natiue language much to the purpose: at last they demanded whither the soules of the Indians went? He answered to Hell.

These Piaces by their Physick and diuining grow rich: they goe to Feasts, and sit by themselues apart, and drinke themselues drunke, and say, The more they drinke, the better they can Diuine. They learne these Arts when they are children, and are inclosed in the woods two yeares, all that time eating nothing that had bloud, see no women, nor their owne parents, come not out of their Caues or Cels: and the Piaces, their Masters, goe to them by night, to teach them. When this time of their solitary discipline is past, they obtaine a testimoniall thereof, and begin to professe in practice of Physick and Diuination. Let vs bury the Cumanois, and then we haue done.

Their Burials. Being dead, they sing their praises, and bury them in their houses, or dry them at the fire and hang them vp. At the yeeres end (if he were a great man) they renue the lamentation, and after many other ceremonies, burne the bones, and giue to his best beloued wife his skull to keepe for a Relique. They beleeue that the Soule is immortall, but that it eateth and drinketh about in the fields where it goeth, and that it is the Eccho which answereth when one calleth.

Of Trinidado and Paria.

IN the yeere 1497. (some adde a yeere more) Christopher Columbus seeking new Discoueries, after the suffering of vnsufferable heats and calmes at Sea (whereby the hoopes of his vessels brake, and the fresh-water not able further to endure the hot indignation of that now-beleeued Burning-Zone, fled out of those close prisons, into the lap of that Father of waters, the Ocean, for refuge) he came at last to Trinidado. The first Land he incountred, he called by that name; either for deuotion, now that his other hopes were dried vp with the heat, or washed into the Sea by the violent showres aboue-boord, and the Isle (but not lesse dangerous) which flowed from his Caske within: or else for the three Mountaines which he there descried. Once, this discouery of Land so ranished his spirit, by the inexpected deliuery from danger, as easily carried his impotent thoughts into a double errour, the one in placing earthly Paradise in this Iland, (to which opinion, for the excellency of the Tobacco there found, hee should happily haue the smokie subscriptions of many Humorists, to whom that fume becomes a fooles Paradise, which with their braines, and all, passeth away in smoke) the other was, that the Earth was not round like a Ball, but like a Peare, the vpper swelling whereof, he esteemed these parts. Hence Colombus sailed to Paria, and found out the Pearle-fishing, of which Petrus Alphonsus a little after made great commoditie by trade with the Sauages. He was assailed with eighteene Canoas of Canibals, in one of which he tooke with one Caniball, and a bound Captiue; who with teares shewed them that they had eaten sixe of his fellowes, and the next day he must haue gone to pot too: to him they gaue power ouer his Taylor, who with his owne club killed him, still laying on when his braines and guts came forth and testified that hee needed not further feare him.

h P. Martyr. Dec. 1. lib. 8. Of the Canibals, see Chapter 13.

In Haraia or Paria, they found plenty of salt, which the Fore-man in Natures shop, and her chiefe worke-man, the Sunne, purged and kerned from water into salt: his worke-house for this businesse, was a large plaine by the waters-side. Here the Sepulchres of their Kings and great men seemed not lesse remarkable: they laid the body on a kinde of hurdle or gredi-iron of wood, vnder which they kindled a gentle fire, whereby keeping the skinne whole, they by little and little consumed the flesh. These dried carkasses they held in great reuerence, and honoured for their houshold Gods. In the yeere 1499. Vincent Pinzon discouered Cape Saint Augustine, and sailed along the coast from thence to Paria.

i Gom. cap. 85.

But why stand we here pedling on the coast for Pearles, Salt, and Tobacco? Let vs rouze vp higher spirits, and follow our English guides for Guiana. Onely let me first haue leaue to mention concerning the Superstitions of these parts Northward from Guiana, what it pleased Sir Walter Ralegh to impart vnto mee from the Relation of a very vnderstanding man of that Countrey, whom he vsed for an interpreter. These people worship the Sunne, whom they imagine (as the fabulous Grecians tell of his Charet and horses, wherewith yong Phaeton sometime set the World on fire) to be drawne into a Chariot by Tigres, which are the most fierie, and fiercest beasts, amongst them. In honour therefore of the Sunne, and for sustenance of his Chariot-beasts, they carefully wash the carkasses of their dead, and lay them forth in the night, for repast vnto the Tigres, wearied with their long and late iourney in the day. For so they beleeue, that after Sun-set these beasts are to this end dismissed from their labour; and that vicissitude, wherein Dauid obserueth the wisedome of diuine prouidence (that when it is night, the wild beasts goe forth to seeke their prey, which when the Sunne ariseth and calleth men forth of their houses to labour, returne to their Dens.) is blindly by them applyed to this their superstition. They likewise haue a Tradition amongst them, that their Ancestors in times past neglecting thus to prepare the corpses of such as died, for the Tigres diet, or not washing them so neatly as behoued, the Tigres made hereof a complaint to the Sunne, as not able to doe his worke, if not allowed their wonted cates: whereupon the Sun sent one amongst them, brandishing a terrible fierie sword, and so dreadfully assaulting the places of their habitations, and the soyle couered with long grasse, that all fell on fire, and an hundred thousand of the Inhabitants were destroyed: a terrible warning hereafter to bee more diligent in these Tigre-deuotions, which accordingly they performe to this day.

Of Guiana, and the Neighbouring Nations on the Coast and within the Land.

§. I.

Discouerie of Guiana by Sir WALTER RALEIGH.

a Sir Walter Raleighs treatise of Guiana.

IN the yeere 1595. [a] Sir Walter Raleigh hauing before receiued Intelligence of this rich and mighty Empire, set forth for the Discouery, and on the two and twentieth of March anchored at Point Curiapan in Trinidado, and searched that Iland, which he found plentifull. Hee tooke the Citie of Saint Ioseph, and therein Antonie Berreo the Spanish Gouernour: Leauing his ships, hee went with an hundred men in Boats, and a little Galley, and with some Indian Pylots passed along that admirable confluence of Riuers (as by the Corps du Guard) vnto Orenoque, as great a Commander of Riuers, as the Emperour of Guiana of Souldiers. And although wee haue before mentioned somewhat thereof, yet this, his peculiar place, requireth some further consideration. This Riuer Orenoque or Baraquan (since, of this Discouerie, called Raleana) runneth from Quito in Peru on the West, it hath nine branches which fall out on the North side of his owne maine mouth, on the South side seuen. Thus many Armes hath this Giant-like streame to be his Pursueyers, which are alway filling his neuer-filled mouth (seeming by this their naturall officiousnesse incorporate thereunto, and to bee but wider gapings of the same spacious iawes) with many Ilands and broken grounds, as it were so many morsels and crummes in his greedy Chaps, still opening for more, though he cannot, euen in Winter, when his throat is glibbest, altogether swallow these: yea these force him, for feare of choking, to yawne his widest, and to vomit out, betweene these cleauing morsels, into the Oceans lap, so many streames, and (so farre is it from the Northerne and Southerne extremes) three hundred miles distant. The Inhabitants on the Northerne branches are the Tiuitiuas, a goodly and valiant people, which haue the most manly speech, and most deliberate (saith Sir Walter) that euer I heard, of what Nation so euer. In the Summer they haue houses on the ground, as in other places: In the Winter they dwell vpon the trees, [b] where they build very artificiall Townes and Villages: for betweene May and September the Riuer of Orenoque riseth thirtie foot vpright, and then are those Ilands ouerflowne twenty foot high, except in some few raised grounds in the middle. This waterie store (when the clouds are so prodigall of more then the Riuers store-house can hold, whereby they become violent intruders and incrochers vpon the Land) and not the violence of cold, giueth this time the Title of Winter. These Tiuitiuas neuer eate of any thing that is set or sowne; Natures nurslings, that neither at home nor abroad, will be beholden to the Arte or Labour of Husbandry. They vse the tops of Palmitos for bread, and kill Deere, Fish, and Porke, for the rest of their sustenance. They which dwell vpon the branches of Orenoque, called Capuri and Macureo, are for the most part Carpenters of Canoas, which they sell into Guiana for gold, and into Trinidado for Tobacco, in the excessiue taking whereof, they exceed all Nations. When a Commander dieth, they vse great lamentation, and when they thinke the flesh of their bodies is putrified and fallen from the bones, they take vp the carkasse againe, and hang it vp in the house, where he had dwelt, decking his skull with feathers of all colours, and hanging his gold-plates about the bones of his arms, thighs, and legs. The Arwacas which dwell on the South of Orenoque, beat the bones of their Lords into powder, which their wiues and friends drinke.

b King Abibeiba dwelt on a Tree in the Countrey of Dariena. Pet. Martyr. Dec. 3. lib. 6.

As they passed along these streames, their eyes were entertained with a Pageant of Shewes, wherein Nature was the onely Actor; here the Deere came downe feeding by the waters side, as if they had desired acquaintance with these new-come guests: there, the Birds in vnspeakeable varietie of kinds and colours, rendering their seruice to the eye and eare: the Lands either in large plaines of many miles, bearing their beautifull bosomes, adorned with Floras embroidery of vnknown Flowres and Plants, and prostrating themselues to the eye, that they might be seene; or else lifting vp themselues in Hils, knitting their furrowed brows, and strouting out their goggle eyes to watch their treasure, which they keepe imprisoned in their stony walls; and now, to see these strangers: the Waters (as the Graces) dancing with mutuall and manifold embracings of diuers streames, attended with plenty of Fowle and Fish; both Land and Water feasting varietie of senses with varietie of obiects: onely the Crocodile (a creature which seemeth Vassall, now to the land, now to the Water, but to make prey on both) wel-nigh marred the Play, and turned this Comedie into a Tragedie, euen in their sight, feasting himselfe with a Negro of their company.

One leuell passed hence to Cumana, an hundred and twenty leagues to the North wherein dwell the Sayma, the Assawai, the Wikiri and the Aroras, a people as blacke as Negros, [a] but with smooth haire. Their poisoned Arrowes, like cruell Executioners, doe not onely kill, but with vncouth torments make death to be, as the last, so the least of their fury; especially if men drinke after they are wounded.

At the Port of Morequito they anchored, and the King being an hundred and ten yeeres old, came afoot fourteene miles to see them, and returned the same day. They brought them store of fruits, and a sort of Paraquitos, no bigger then Wrens, and an [b] Armadilla, which seemeth to be all barred ouer with small plates, somewhat like to a Rhinoceros, with a white horne growing in his hinder-parts, as big as a great hunting horne, which they vse to winde in stead of a Trumpet. They after eate this beast. Monardus [c] saith, it is in bignesse and snout like a Pigge, liues vnder the earth as a Moule, and is thought to liue on earth.

They passed further, till they came in sight of those strange ouer-fals of Caroli, of which there appeared ten or twelue in sight, euery one as high ouer the other as a Church-Tower. They had sight at Winicapora of a Mountaine of Cristall, which appeared a farre off like a white Church-Tower, of an exceeding height. There falleth ouer it a mighty Riuer, which toucheth no part of the side of the Mountain, but rushing ouer the top, falleth to the ground with so terrible noise, as if a thousand great bels were knocked one against another. No maruell of these roaring out-cries, if we consider that double penalty of Sense and Losse, which this Riuer seemeth to sustaine, the one in that dreadfull downfall, bruising and breaking his vnited streames into drops, and making it foming and senseless with this falling-sickenesse; the other in leauing behinde his Cristall purchase, further enriched with Diamonds and other Iewels, which euen now hee embraced in his waterie armes, but himselfe (such is the course and curse of couetousnesse) will not suffer himselfe to enioy.

Now for the Monsters of Men: there are said to be (not seene by our men, but reported by the Sauages and other) an Amazonian Nation further South: which Gomara thinkes to bee but the wiues of some Indians (a thing common, as you haue euen now read) shooting and following the warres, no lesse then their husbands: Once, about Iucatan, about Plata, about the Riuer, called of this supposition, Amazones: about Monomotapa in Africa; our Age hath told, but no man hath seene this Vnimammian Nation. Yet here they speake not of searing of the breast: and what need they, if there bee such, seeing the women are so good Archers in other places, their brests notwithstanding? Againe, [c] they tell of men with mouthes in their brests, and eyes in their shoulders, called Chiparemoi, and of the Guianians Ewiaponemos, very strong; and of others headed like Dogges, which liue all the day time in the Sea. These things are strange, yet I dare not esteeme them fabulous: onely (as not too prodigall of faith) I suspend, till some eye-intelligence of some of our parts haue testified the truth.

[c] Monard. c. 37. [d] I. Keymis. These may rather be said to want necks then heads, and that causeth them thus to seeme.

§. II.

Relations and discoueries thereof by other Englishmen.

FRANCIS SPARREY left in Guiana by Sir W. Raleigh 1595. hath also written of these parts; He relateth of a place called Comalaha, Southwards from Orenoque, where at certain times they sell women as at a faire. He saith, he bought eight, the eldest of which, was not eighteene, for a Red-hafted Knife, which in England cost a halfe-peny: he gaue them to the Sauages. Hee was afterwards sent Prisoner into Spaine.

Anno 1604. Captaine Charles Leigh set saile from Woolwich on the one and twentieth of March for Guiana: May 10. he came in water thicke and white, the next day in fresh, and the day after, saw two Islands in the mouth of Amazones, accounting themselues fortie Leagues vp the Riuer. May 22. they were in the Riuer of Wiapogo, (which they called Caroleigh) in three degrees and halfe Northward from the Line. The people were ready to giue them entertainment. The Iayos and Capayos offered them their owne houses, and gardens already planted, two of which he accepted with some gardens, vndertaking to defend them against the Charibes and their other enemies. They desired him to send into England for some to teach them to pray, and gaue fiue pledges to be sent thither. He after (intending for England) dyed aboord his ship of the Flux. They intoxicate the fish with a strong sented-wood called Ayaw, whereby they easily take them on the top of the water. Their bread is Cassaui, of which chewed they also make drinke. They are much troubled with a Worme like a Flea (the Spaniards call it Niguas) which creepes into the flesh of their toes vnder the nailes, and multiply there with much multiplication of torment, except they vse speedie preuention. One was so pestred with them, that for remedie, they were faine to hold his feet vpwards, and powre thereon melted Wax hot, which being cold they plucked off, and therewith seuen or eight hundred Niguas. The people are of modest countenance, naked, but would weare clothes if they had them. Huntly returned for England, and left there fiue and thirtie, which should haue bin succoured if Discord had suffered.

Anno 1605. a ship was sent for supply: but the Mariners and Land-men quarelling, these were left on Land at Saint Lucia, an Island in twelue degrees of Northerly Latitude, to the number of threescore and seuen, and most of them slaine [a] by the Ilanders. These Indians go naked, haue long blacke haire, their bodies painted red, with three strokes also of red, from the eare to the eye. Eleuen of our men, after much miserie and famishment (which killed some of them in the way) got to Coro: and after good and bad entercourse of fortunes with the Spaniards, some returned home. The Spaniards there (as Iohn Nichol one of this companie testifieth) told them of a Vision of Christ on the Crosse appearing to our King, and reuoking him from his error: at the sight whereof, three of our Bishops fell into a trance, and so continued three dayes, after which they became Catholikes and preached: and the King had sent to the Pope for learned men to perfect this Conuersion. These were the Spanish tricks with faithlesse tales to peruert these men to their faith. The Mariners gaue names to the places which they left according to their conceits of these men, Rogues Bay, Cape Knaue, Riuer of Rascals. They came as farre as Comana or Cumana, where they obserued the weather hot till noone, and then a coole breeze and thunder without raine. by windes and current they were detained from Wiapogo, which they sought. A Fleming there told them fabulous rumours of Warres with Spaine.

[a] Iohn Nichol. [b] Legates company 1606. in a Voyage to America, in a mutinie slue their Captaine, and the rest were taken at Cuba, and fourteene hanged, foure kept Prisoners. W. Adams. W. Turner.

Another ship of Amsterdam (to disgrace our men) told the Indians of Wiapoco, that they came to inhabit there and to oppresse them, as the Spaniards did. See what gaine can doe without godlinesse. A ship of Middleburgh came thither with Negros to sell: thither came also a ship of Saint Malos. The Indians of these parts (as Wilson reporteth) choose their Captaines at their drunken Feasts in this sort: They set the nominated person in the midst with his hands lifted ouer his head, making Orations to him to bee valiant: after which, they whip him with a whip that fetcheth bloud at euery stroke, for tryall of his courage, he neuer mouing thereat. They haue commerce with the Deuill. For they told vs of three ships in the Riuer of Amazons, and that One two moneths after would visit vs. They call this Deuill [b] Peye, with whom the men haue often conference, the women neuer that they could perceiue: they suffer not meane-while a childe in the house. When any bee sicke they thus consult of their recouerie, and if their Oracle answer death, they will giue no Physicke; if life, they vse their best helpes. For an Axe they would trauell with them two or three moneths, or finde them so long victuals at home. The Iayos are proud, ingenious, giuen to flouting. The Arwakos of better carriage. The Saspayes craftie. The two former hate the Spaniards as much as the Caribes. Their houses haue doores at each end: the men keepe at one end, the women at the other: they are like Barnes, but longer; some hundred and fiftie paces long, and twentie broad, an hundred of them keepe together in one. No raine commeth in, notwithstanding that store which falleth in Aprill, May, Iune, and most of July. They paint them when they goe to feasts. Against the time of trauell, the women haue a roome apart, whereto they goe alone, and are deliuered without helpe: which done, shee cals her husband and deliuers it to him, who presently washeth it in a pot of water, and paints it with sundry colours. I could not heare (saith Wilson) the woman so much as grone all the time of her trauell. When one dyes, they make great moane ten or twelue dayes together, and sometimes longer. Here are store of Deere, Hares, Conies, Hogs, Monkeyes, Leopards, Lyons, Porke-pines, Parrots as big as Hennes, blue and red, very beautifull, &c. He returned with the rest in a ship of Amsterdam, the Indians being loth to part with them. They often inquired of Sir Walter Raleigh, and one came from Orenoque to aske of him, alledging his promise of returne.

May, 1606.

Rob. Harcourts Voyage to Guiana.

The like remembrances of him are mentioned by Master Harcourt in his late published Voyage to Guiana. This worthy Gentleman, An. 1608. with Gentlemen and others, to the number of 97. set forth for Wiapoco. The ninth of May they fell into the Current of that great and famous Riuer of Amazones, of which they drunke fresh and good, being 30. leagues from Land: the tenth day, the water became muddy, whitish and thicke: the eleuenth day they made Land, and their Pinnace being left dry vpon the Ebbe, by the next floud coming on was almost spoyled: Thence they stood along the Coast to Wiapoco, whither they came, May the seuenteenth, and setled themselues at Caripo. Hee tooke possession in his Maiesties name (as Captaine Leigh had also done) of this spacious c Countrey of Guiana, bounded on the North with Orenoque and the Sea, on the East and South, with the Riuer of Amazones, on the West, with the Mountaines of Peru. The Charibes are the Ancient Inhabitants, the Other later Incrochers. There is no setled gouernment amongst them, only they acknowledge a superioritie which they will obey as long as they please. They commonly punish Murther & Adulterie by death, which are the only offences punished amongst them: and certaine persons are appointed to execute those punishments. The better sort haue two or three wiues or more, the rest but one: they are very iealous, and if they take them in Adulterie, cause their braines to be beaten out. Their wiues, especially the elder, are as their seruants, and he which hath most, is the greatest man.

Their account of time is by Moones, or dayes: their numbring is to ten, and then say, ten and one, &c. They also keepe accounts, by bundles of sticks, contayning so many, as dayes are agreed on, of which they take away, euery day one. They haue a certaine obseruance of the Sunne and Moone, supposing them to be alue: but as farre as he could perceiue, vsed neither Sacrifice nor adoration to any thing. At the death of any great man, they make a solemne Feast, their chiefest prouision being their strongest drinke, called m Parranow, and as long as this drinke lasteth, they continue their Feast, with dancing, singing, and excessiue drinking, accounting the greatest Drunkard the brauest man: during which drunken solemnitie, some woman (being neerest of kinne to the dead partie) stands by and cries extremely. Their Priests or South-sayers (he cals them Pecaios) haue confetence with the Deuill, whom they terme Wattipa, but feare him much, and say hee is naught: hee will often beate them blacke and blue. They beleeue that the good Indians when they die, goe to Canpo or Heauen, the bad to Soy, downwards. When a chiefe man dies, if hee haue a Captiue they slay him; if not, then one of his seruants, to attend him the other World.

m It is like March Beere.

The qualitie of the Land is diues: by the Sea-side low, and would be violently hot, if a fresh Easterly breeze did not cooleit with a vehement breath in the heate of the day: the Mountaines are colder, the midale sort most temperate. Profit may here take pleasure, neither need pleasure abandon profit. The particulars are by this and other our Authors related; I hunt after Rarities to present you. Such is the fish Cassiorwa, which hath in each eye two sights, and as it swimmeth, it beares the lower sights within the water, and the other aboue: the ribs and backe resemble those parts in a man, saue that it is little bigger, but much daintier then a Smelt. Besides the Pockiero, or small Swine with the Nauill in the backe, is another called Paingo, as large as ours in England. The Sea-cow or Manatin eates like Beefe, and will take Salt, and serue to victuall ships, it yeelds also an excellent Oyle, and the hide will make Buffe. There are infinite store of them. The Pina for delicacie exceedeth, a fruit tasting like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar. What commoditie Tobacco n and Sugars in those parts may yeeld is incredible, especially in this smokie humour of the one sexe, and that daintier of the other. Their Dies, Gummes, and other commodities I omit. Of Gold and other Metals they haue good testimonie.

n Anno 1610. The Tobacco that came into England amounted to (at least) 60000. pound and not much lesse in other yeeres.

The Marashawaccas are a Nation of Charibes, vp high within Land, hauing great eares beyond credit: they haue an Idoll of stone which they worship as their God, in a house erected purposely to it, which they keepe verie cleane. It is fashioned like a man sitting vpon his heeles, holding open his knees, and resting his elbowes vpon them, holding vp his hands with the palmes forwards, and gaping with his mouth wide open.

Captaine Michael Harcourt was left Commander of the Countrie for his Brother, who continued the possession three yeeres, in all which space, of thirtie persons died but sixe, and some of them by casualtie. Amongst the East Indian Plants is mentioned one called Sentida: the like they found here, much like vnto Rose trees, about halfe a yard high; which if they were touched, or a leafe cut from them, would presently shrinke and close vp themselues, and hang as they were dead and withered: within halfe a quarter of an houre by degrees againe opening. Areminta the Cacique of Moreshegoro had a rough skin like to Buffe-leather, of which kind there be many in those parts. They returned by Cape Brea, which is so called of the Pitch there gotten in the Earth, whereof there is such abundance that all places of this our World may be stored thence: it is excellent for trimming of shippes for those hote Countries, not melting in the Sunne.

Relations of these and the adioyning Countries by the Spaniards.

IT were a hard taske to muster all that World of Riuers, and names of Nations in the parts neere Guiana, which they that will, may finde in Sir Walter and Master Keymis, and Master Harcourt their owne Relations. As for Guiana, this Sir Walter hath written. It is directly East from Peru towards the Sea, and lyeth vnder the Æquinoctiall: it hath more abundance of Gold then any part of Peru, and as many or moe great Cities. It hath the same Lawes, Gouernment and Religion; and Manoa, the Imperiall Citie of Guiana (which some Spaniards haue seene, and they call it • El Dorado) for the greatnesse, riches, and situation, farre exceedeth any of the World, at least so much of it as the Spaniards know. It is founded vpon a Lake of Salt-water, two hundred leagues long, like vnto the Caspian Sea. The Emperour of Guiana is descended from the Ingas, the magnificent Princes of Peru. For when Francis Pizarro had conquered Peru, and slaine Atabalipa the King; one of his younger brethren fled from thence, and took with him many thousands of those Souldiers of the Empire, called Oreiones, with whom and other his followers, he vanquished all that tract which is between the great Riuers of Orenoque, and Amazones.

• The gilded Citie.

Diego Ordas, who was one of the Captaines of Cortes, in the conquest of Mexico, in the yeere 1531. (thus saith Gomara, and that he perished at Sea; others with more probability, say it was a few yeeres after the conquest of Peru) made search for Guiana, but lost himselfe, being slaine in a mutinie. Before this, his prouision of Powder was fired, and one Iuan Martinez, which had the charge thereof, was therefore condemned to bee executed. But at the Souldiers request, his punishment was altered, and hee set in a Canoa alone without victuall, and so turned loose into the Riuer. Certaine Guianians met him, and hauing neuer seene man of that colour, they carried him into the Land to be wondred at; and so from Towne to Towne, till hee came to the great Citie of Manoa, the seat and residence of Inga the Emperour. He no sooner saw him, but he knew him to be a Christian (for the Spaniards not long before had conquered his brother) and caused him to be well entertained in his Palace. Hee liued seuen moneths in Manoa, but was not suffered to wander any whither into the Countrie; he was also brought thither, all the way blind-fold, led by the Indians, vntill he came at Manoa. He entred the Citie at noone, and trauelled all that day till night, and the next, from the rising till the setting of the Sunne; thorow the Citie, ere hee came to the Palace of Inga. After seuen moneths the Emperour put him to his choise, whether to stay or goe, and he with the Emperours licence departed. He sent with him many Guianians, all laden with as much Gold as they could carrie; but before he entred Orenoque, the Orenoqueponi robbed him of all, but of two Bottels of Gold beads, which they had thought, had beene his drinke or meate. Thus escaped he to Trinidado, and died after at Saint Iuan de Puerto-rico, where, in his extremes, he vttered these things to his Confessor. He called the Citie Manoa El Dorado, the gilded or golden, because that at their drunken Solemnities (in which vice no Nation vnder Heauen excels them) when the Emperour carowseth with any of his Commanders, they that pledge him, are stripped naked, and their bodies anointed with a kinde of white Balsamum, and then certaine seruants of the Emperour, hauing prepared Gold made into fine powder, blow it thorow hollow Canes, vpon their naked bodies, vntill they bee all shining: from the foot to the head; and in this sort they sit drinking, by twenties and hundreds, and continue in drunkennesse, sometimes sixe or seuen dayes together. Vpon this sight, and for the abundance of Gold he saw in the Citie, the Images, in the Temples, the Plates, Armours, and Shields of Gold vsed in their Warres, he gaue the Citie that name.

Orenoque or Raleana, and Marannon or Amazones which ſince haue beene better diſcouered, as [t] Maſter Keymis, Maſter Maſham and others employed in this action, haue found by experience. It [u] riſeth in Quito. Orellana ſayled in it ſixe thouſand miles. In all theſe parts, their greateſt treaſure is multitude of women and children. Topiawari made a heauie complaint, that whereas they were wont to haue ten or twelue wiues, now they had not aboue three or foure, by reaſon of the wars with the Epuremei their Enemies: whereas the Lords of the Epuremei had fifty or a hundred, and their war is more for women, then either for Gold or Dominion. After Orellana Pedro de Orſua was employed with fiue hundred Souldiers for the conqueſt of the Amazons (as they called it) but for a beautifull woman which he had with him was ſlaine by conſpiracie of Lope de Aguirre which loued her, and Fernando de Guzman, whom they ſaluted King, &c. Veg. pag. 2. lib. 8. c. 14.

Berreo, in the ſearch for Guiana, tooke his Iourney from Nueuo Reyno de Granado, where he dwelt, with ſeuen hundred Horſe, but trauelling, he loſt many of his company and Horſe: at Amapaia the ſoyle is a low Mariſh, and the water iſſuing thorow the Bogs, is red and venemous, which poyſoned the Horſes, and infected the men: at noone the Sunne had made it more wholeſome for their vſe.

This [x] new Kingdome of Granada is two hundred leagues within Land, Southward from Cartagena. It had that name, becauſe the Captaine that diſcouered it, was of Granada in Spaine. The plenty of Emeralds in theſe parts, hath made that Gemme of leſſe worth. The next Prouince to this is called Popayan: in both which the Spaniards haue many Townes. And by the Riuer of Orenoque, both may be inuaded.

All [y] the parts, from the Golden Caſtle, and the Gulfe of Vraba to Paria, yeeld Caribes, or Canibals, which eate mans fleſh, and geld children, to make them more fat and tender for their diet. And in all Inland parts neere Peru, and in the Hils called Andes, which ſome call Golden Caſtile, they little differ. Cieza [z] ſaith, That in the Valley of Anzerma, they keepe certaine Tablets amongſt the Reeds, wherein they carue the Image of the Deuill in a terrible ſhape, alſo the figures of Cats, and other Idols which they worſhip. To them they pray for raine, or faire weather: they haue commerce with the Deuill, and obſerue ſuch Superſtitions as he enioyneth them. They are great man-eaters. At the doores of their houſes, they haue ſmall Courts, wherein are their graues in deepe Vaults, opening to the Eaſt: in which they bury their great men with all their wealth. The Curies are not far from them; they haue no Temple, nor Idoll. They haue conference with the Deuill. They marry with their Neeces and Siſters, and are man-eaters. They call the Deuill Xaxarama. They eſteeme Virginitie little worth. In the Prouince of [a] Arma, the Deuill doth often appeare to the Indians: in honour of whom, they ſacrifice their Captiues taken in Warre, hanging them vp by the ſhoulders, and pulling out the hearts of ſome of them. In Paucora, they haue like Deuilliſh Deuotions, and their Prieſts are their Oracles.

Before the houſe of the chiefe Lord was an Idoll as bigge as a man, with his face to the Eaſt, and his armes open. They ſacrificed two Indians euery Tueſday, in this Prouince to the Deuill. In the Prouince of Pozo, in the houſes of their Lords, they had many Idols in ſuch reſemblance, as the Deuill had aſſumed in his Apparitions. And in thoſe Idols, he would alſo ſpeake, and giue anſweres. In Carrapa [b] they are extreame Drunkards: when any is ſicke, they offer Sacrifices to the Deuill for his recouery. In Quinbaya is a Hill which caſteth forth ſmoke: but a more Helliſh ſmoke is their conference and commerce with the Deuill, like the former. In the Prouince of Cali they likewiſe conferre with the Deuill: they haue no Temples or Houſes of Religion. They make deepe pits for Sepulchres of their great men, where their Armour, Wealth, and food is ſet about them. Their luſt ſubiecteth the Neece and Siſter to their Marriages. In Popayan [c] they are man-eaters, as alſo in the forenamed Prouinces. They obſerue the ſame Caninall and Deuilliſh Rites with the former, framing their Superſtitions to the Deuils direction, in their mutuall Colloquies. They bury with their Lords ſome of his Wiues and Prouiſion. Some of them are great Wizards and Sorcerers. In Paſto they talke alſo with the Deuill: a thing common to al theſe parts of the Indies. But let vs leaue theſe ſteepe and cold Hils, theſe men of the Deuill (whom they worſhip) and Deuils to men (whom they deuoure) and ſee if in the lower Countries wee can find higher and nobler ſpirits.

Of Brasil.

§. I.
The Discouerie and Relations thereof by MASSAEVS. &c.

AS Guiana is bounded with those mighty Riuers of Orenoque and Maragnon, so Brasil extendeth it selfe North and South, betweene Maragnon and the Riuer of Plata, or Siluer, which there we haue already shewed to be the greatest Riuers in the World. The Westerne borders are not so well discouered. The Easterne are washed by the Sea. Maffeius [a] hath largely described the same, whose words Bertius, Maginus, and Gasper Ens haue transcribed: the summe whereof Iarric and Boterus haue inserted into their French and Italian Relations.

Petrus Aluarius Capralis, being sent by Emanuel, King of Portugall, in the yeere 1500. vnto the East-Indies, to auoid the calmes on the Guinnee shore, fetched a further compasse West, and so discouered the Continent, which now, of that Red Wood there plentifully growing, is called Brasil, but by him was named, the Land of the Holy Crosse, because hee had there erected a Crosse with much ceremony; since vsually named Brasil, of the store of Brasil-Wood there growing. This Brasil was soone after, by Americus Vesputius, at the charges of the said King, further discouered. The Region is pleasant and wholesome, the Hils and Valleyes equally agreeing, in their vnequalnesse, the soyle fat and fertile; there are plentie of Sugar-Canes; a kind of Balme expressed out of the Herbe Copaibas, the Zabucals which yeild a kind of Nuts, growing in great hard cups, of taste like a Chesnut; the Ananas excellent in scent and taste; the Pacouere, a tree so tender, that it may bee cut with a knife a fadome high, the leaues two foot broad, seuen foot long, the fruit a foot long, like a Cucumber, called Pacoua, thirtie or fortie together in clusters, neuer bearing fruit but once: the like is in the East-Indies, as Thenet our Authour affirmeth; and many other fruits which the Countrey naturally produceth; besides those, which our Europe hath communicated. Many sorts there are of Beasts, as a Kind of Swine [b] which liue in both Elements; their fore-feet being short in proportion to the hinder, make them slow in running, and therefore being hunted, commit themselues quickly to the water. Anta, resembling a Mule, but somwhat lesse; slender-snowted, the nether chap very long, like a Trumpet, with round eares and short tailes, hiding themselues in the day-time, [c] and feeding in the night, the flesh tasteth like Beefe: there is also the Armadillo; the Tygre, which being hungry, is very hurtfull; being full, will flee from a Dogge: There is a deformed beast, of such slow pace, that in fifteene dayes it will scarce goe a stones cast. It liueth on the leaues of trees, on which it is two dayes in climing, and as many in descending, neither shouts nor blowes forcing her to amend her pace. The Tamendoas are as big as a Ramme, with long and sharpe snowts, a tayle like a Squirrell, (twice as long as the body and hairy) where-under they hide themselues, will put out their tongue two foote (out of the mouth, as round as an Oyle-cruze) to gather plentie of Ants into their mouthes, hauing scraped vp the places where they keep with their pawes. The Portugals haue there raised plentie of Horses and Sheepe.

[c] The Spaniards call it (of the contrary) the light Dogge. The Portugals Sloth. The Indians, Hay. Some haue written that it liues of ayre: and seldome or neuer hath it beene seene eating.

The men worship no God at all, but are giuen to South-sayings. The men and women goe altogether naked, are flat-nosed, make themselues blacke with the fruit Genipapi, weare their haire hanging from the hinder part of the head, not suffering it else-where to grow; in their nether lips weare long stones for a gallantry (which being remoued, they seeme in deformed manner to haue a double mouth) they goe together by companies, with great silence the Wife going before her Husband; which (some say) is done for iealousie. They entertain and welcome Strangers at first with weeping and deepe sighes, pitying their tedious iourney, and presently drie their eyes, hauing teares at command.

Women in trauell are deliuered without great difficultie, and presently goe about their houshold businesse, the Husband in her stead keepeth his bed, is visited of the neighbours, ~~hath his broths~~ made him, and iunkets sent to comfort him. They are ignorant of [d] numbring and Letters: some Tradition they are said to haue touching Noe and the Floud. Vnder the same Roose (which is like a Boat with the Keele vpwards (liue many Families, they lye in Nets, or beds hanging aboue the ground (which is vsuall in a great part of the Indies) to auoid hurtfull creatures: they minde the day, and are not carefull for the morrow; easily communicate what they haue; are very patient of labour and hunger, feasting if they haue wherewich, from morning till night, and fasting other-whiles, when they want, three dayes together. In swimming they are miraculously skilfull, and will diue whole houres to search any thing vnder the water. They beleeue not any reward or punishment after this life ended, but thinke that as men die, so they goe to the other World, maimed, wounded, sicke or whole: and therefore bury the bodies with a Net to lye in, and food for some dayes, thinking that they both sleepe and eate. They are excellent Archers, and what enemies they take in their warres, they feed well many dayes, and then kill and eate them for great Dainties. They dwell in Houses scattered and separated from each other; their Language is almost generally the same; they haue no Lawes nor Magistrates; the women call certaine things by one name, and the Men by another. They haue no vse of three Letters e in the Alphabet, L, F, R; a reason whereof some haue wittily giuen, because they haue no Law, Faith, nor Ruler. They are vnmindfull of good turnes, and too mindfull of iniuries: impotent of Lust and Rage; and in summe, more like beasts then men. Thus farre Maffeus.

e It seemes otherwise by Lerius his Dialogue of that Language c. 20

In the yeere 1503. f Giouanni da Empoli, a Florentine, sayled thither with the Portugals, who reporteth the like of their nakednesse, irreligion, and of their man-eating, saying that they dry it in the smoke as we doe Bacon. The same doth Albericus Vespucius report that he had seene amongst them, and that he had heard one of them boast that hee had in his time eaten three hundred men. He weighed the long stones, (which they vsed to weare in their faces, seuen in number) about sixteene ounces. He saith they liue an hundred and fiftie yeeres; and that their Women are out of measure luxurious; that they alway haue an Easterly wind, which tempereth their Aire.

f G. da Empoli ap. Ramus. A. Vesput.

Let vs in the next place heare such as haue liued in the Countries; of which Lerius and Theuet, two Frenchmen, and Ioannes Stadius a Germane, haue written seuerall Treatises. But none hath more fully described them, then a Portugall Frier, g and Anthonie Knivet our Countriman.

More full Relations by STADIVS, LERIVS, and PETER CARDER.

IOannes Stadius h in the yeere 1554. was Prisoner to the Tuppin Imbas, and because he serued the Portugals, should haue beene slaine and deuoured. But by Gods mercy he escaped. He was the Gunner in the Fort of Saint Vincent, and going into the Wood to prouide somewhat wherewith to entertaine some friends then come to him, became himselfe a prey to those Men-hunters. When they had taken him, they contended which of them had beene the first taker, and that controuersie ended, hee was stripped naked, and led away. Hee was giuen to one of their Kings, and this victory by them was ascribed to their Tamaraka, or Idols, which, they said, had by Oracle propheſied thereof, but their Kings were no other then the chiefe in euery Cottage, which consisted of one Kindred, and these Tamaraka weare certaine Rattles, as shall after appeare. The manner is, that it gets them a great name, to exhibit this Feast of a slaine Captiue, and therefore some that haue taken, will credit some other friend with the gift of a Captiue, to this solemne butcherie, on condition to repay him the next Captiue hee taketh. This was Stadius his case, who was thus tossed by exchange, from one to another, till at last hee escaped altogether.

h Io. Stad. Hessum picturis. ap. T. de Bry in 3 parte Americæ

But when hee had beene newly taken, the Women came about him, and one while buffeted him, one saying, This is for such a friend of mine, that the Peros or Portugals had slaine; another fixing on his flesh the memoriall of another friend of hers, and then led him with a Rope about his necke, almost strangling him, making him also to dance in the middest of them, with Rattles tied to his legges: but hee after grew in some credit and respect amongst them, and saw diuers others eaten, while himselfe could not bee free from feare of the like destinie.

The Sauages, that they take, put on a great shew of resolution, and little regard (in seeming) that their Tragedie, supported with this comfort, that their friends will reuenge it. In time of sicknesse or sudden dangers they would resort to him to pray to his God for deliuerance; and this conceit of his God, which they obserued in his Deuotions, was the principall meanes of deferring his execution. Such as are mortally wounded in their fights, they would spend presently, or at least kill and dresse them, for a Feast neere at hand: and one man that had liued long amongst them, and was desperately sicke, lest Death should dedepriue them of their cheere, they slue, and (because of his sickneſſe) hurling away the head and inwardes, ate vp the reſt. They take great pride in theſe their cruelties, and when Konyan Bebe their King, hauing a basket full of pieces of Mans fleſh, on which hee was feeding, offered Stadius a piece, who told him that it was more then beastly: hee answered, I am a Tygre, and I delight in theſe delicacies. This Stadius after escaped in a French Shippe.

i Lerius hiſt. Nauig. in Amer. & And. Thenet.

Nicolas Durantius, i a Knight of Malta, sirnamed Villagagnon, in the yeere 1555. (male-content with his estate at home) sayled into Francia Antarctica, or the Southerne parts of Braſill, vnder the Tropike of Capricorne, and pretended there to worship God according to the puritie of the Goſpell; and to fortifie, both for the habitation of his owne, and for a Sanctuarie vntó ſuch as at home were perſecuted for the Truth. He fortified, and ſent thence to Geneua, for aſſiſtance in this his holy intent: whereupon Richerius and Charterius, two Miniſters (with diuers others, among whom was Iohn Lerius) were ſent, and landed there in the yeere 1557. Lerius hath written his Obſeruations of theſe parts, as Thenet alſo, another of Villagagnons Company, but (as Lerius teſtifieth) in many things falſly. The firſt Sauages that Lerius and his fellowes ſaw, were the Margaiates, which hold friendſhip with the Portugals, and are enemies to the French, and to the Touon Pinambaulſy or Tuppin Imbas, Confederates of the French, and as deadly enemies to the former. In the meane way they paſſed by the Tapemiry, Paraiba, Ouetacates, all which, howſoeuer they exerciſe hoſtilities, and mutuall diſagreements, yet agree in like barbarous and rightleſſe Rites. With the Touon Pinambaulſy he conuerſed familiarly about a yeere. They are in habit of bodie like the Europeans, but ſtronger, and leſſe ſubiect to ſickneſſe, not ſubiect to our bodily diſtempers, by like intemperance, or vexation of mind, by turbulent and diſtracting paſſions of Couetouſneſſe, Enuie, ambition.

They are all naked, except ſometimes: the Old men rather to hide their diſeaſe in thoſe parts, then their ſhame, couer their priuities. They weare in their nether lip a k Pyramidall ſtone, which brauerie weigheth downe their lip, and ſubiecteth the face to great deformitie. Some alſo not content with this, adde two others in their cheekes to like purpoſe. They preſſe downe the noſes of their Infants to make them flat. They anoynt themſelues with a kind of Gumme, which they couer with the downe of Feathers ſticking thereto. They weare alſo Frontlets of Feathers: in their eares they weare bones. They which will excell the reſt in gallantry, and would ſeeme to haue ſlaine and eaten the moſt enemies, ſlaſh and cut their fleſh, and put therein a blacke powder, which neuer will bee done away. They vſe Rattles of the ſhell of a certaine fruit, in which they put ſtones or graines, and call them Maraca, of which they haue ſome ſuperſtitious conceit. The Women differ from the Men in nouriſhing their haire, which the Men ſhaue off before, and make not thoſe holes in their lips; but in their eares weare Eare-rings of the forme and bigneſſe of a meane Candle. They paint alſo their faces with diuers colours, and weare Bracelets of little bones, of which the men weare Chaines or Collars. They would not weare clothes, pretending their cuſtome of nakedneſſe, and often waſhing (ſometimes ten times in a day) whereto clothes would bee a hinderance: and our captiue women, further then the Whip forced them, would not accuſtome themſelues to the apparell we gaue them. The women make two kinds of Meale of certaine Roots, which they vſe in ſtead of Bread, which they doe not put, but hurle into their mouthes without loſſe. Their office is alſo to make their drinke of Rootes ſliced, and chewed in their mouthes, and thus prepared, boyled, and ſtirred in a great pot ouer the fire: the like drinke they make of chewed Maiz, which they call Anats: the men would account it a diſgrace to do theſe things, and that they would not taſte ſo well. They call this drinke Caouin; it is thick, and taſtes like Milke: I haue ſeene them continue (ſaith Lerius) drinking this liquor three dayes and nights together: they hold it a diſparagement not to bee able to hold out at this Bacchanall exerciſe, which they celebrate with dancing and ſinging, eſpecially at their beaſtly Man-feaſts: The women dance apart from the men. One of them reported to our Author, that they had taken a ſhip of the Peros, or Portugals, and eaten the men: they found therein great veſſels, which they could not tell what it was, but drank ſo much thereof, that they ſlept three dayes after: it was likely that it was Spaniſh Wine. They eate Serpents and Toads (which with them are not venemous) and Lizards. Our Authour ſaw one Lizard as big as a man, with ſcales on her backe like Oyſters. They haue a kind of Monkey called Sagouin, of the bigneſſe of a Squirrell, the fore-halfe in ſhape reſembling a Lion: they haue another ſtrange beaſt, called Coaty, as high as a Hare, with a little head, ſharpe eares, and a ſnout or beake aboue a foot long, the mouth ſo little, that one can ſcarſely put in his little finger; it feedeth on Ants. They take l Petum (it is not Tobacco) not in Pipes, but put foure or fiue leaues in another greater, and firing it, ſucke in the ſmoke, and therewith in time of warre, will ſuſtaine themſelues three dayes together, without other ſuſtinance. They weare this herbe about their neckes.

k Great at one end, and little at the other: in their infancie it is a bone: and after a greene ſtone, in ſome as long as ones finger: they will thruſt out their tongues at the hole, when the ſtone is remoued.

l The Braſilian Petum is neither in forme nor vertue, the ſame with Tobacco, as Lerius ſaith. The women take it not

When

When Sir Francis Drake made his famous and fortunate Voyage about the World, in the South-Sea he[b] loſt the reſt of his company, the Elizabeth wherein M. Winter was (which returned into England) and a Pinneſſe, wherein were ſeuen men, beſides Peter Carder, the relater of this Hiſtory. This Pinneſſe being alone returned backe the Straits, and on the North ſide of the Riuer of Plate, ſixe went on ſhore into the wood to ſeeke food, where threeſcore and ten Tapines ſhot at them, and wounded all, whereof two dyed ſoone after: foure were taken, their Pinneſſe alſo being broken, onely Peter Carder and William Pitcher remained, which liued in an Iland two moneths, on a fruit ſomewhat like Orenges & Crabs, without any freſh-water: the want whereof forced them to drinke their owne Vrine, ſaued in ſherds for that purpoſe till the next morning. Weary of this life (which began to grow weary of them) they with a planke, and certaine boords, made ſhift in three dayes to ſet themſelues ouer into the maine, three leagues diſtant, where meeting with freſh-water, this Pitcher was broken, and dyed within halfe an houre of ouer eager drinking; Carder encountred certaine Sauages called Tappanbaſſe, which led him away dancing, rattling, tabering. They ſlept on beds of white Cotton netting, tyed two foot from the ground, and a fire on each ſide, to preuent cold and wild beaſts: the next day they marched twenty miles to their Towne, which was foure-ſquare, with foure houſes, euery houſe being two bow-ſhoot in length, made with ſmall trees like Arbours, thatched to the ground with Palme-tree leaues, hauing no windowes, but thirty or forty doores on each ſide the ſquare. Their chiefe Lord was named Caion, about forty yeeres old; he had nine wiues, the reſt but one, except the moſt valiant, which were permitted two, one for the houſe, another to goe with him to the warres. In this Towne were neere foure thouſand perſons. Hee found among them good entertainment for certaine moneths.

They vſed to goe to the Warres three or foure hundred in a company, with bowes and arrowes, and hauing ouercome, would bring home their captiues tyed by the arme to ſo many of their mens armes, and ſoone after would tye them to a poſte, and with a club (after dancing and drinking) ſlit their heads. Their drinke is made of a roor, chewed by women, and ſpit into a trough, where it ſtands two or three dayes, and hath a yeſt on it like Ale; and then is tunned into earthen jarres, wherewith they drinke themſelues drunke. After halfe a yeere, hauing learned the Language, he was requeſted to their Warres againſt the Tapwees, and much bettered their martiall skill, teaching them to make an hundred Targets of tree-barke, and two hundred clubs, marking their owne company with red Balſam (of this they haue red, white, blacke, very odoriferous) and ſo marched ſeuen hundred together three dayes, to another foure-ſquare Towne like (but leſſe then) their owne. They knocked downe two hundred; tooke twenty; they broyled their carkaſſes, and after alſo the priſoners. How many men they kill, ſo many holes they make in their viſage, beginning at the nether lippe, and ſo proceeding to the cheeke, eye-browes, and eares. Some Portugals came to ſearch for him, two of which, and ſome Negros, were taken and eaten. Hee obtained leaue to goe to the Coaſt, hauing foure to prouide him victuals for nine or ten weekes, and ſo came to Bahia de todos los Santos, where he yeelded himſelfe to Michael Ionas, a Portugall, and arriued in England in Nouember 1586. nine yeeres after his ſetting forth.

Moſt ample Relations of the Braſilian Nations, and Cuſtomes by Maſter ANTHONY KNIVET.

MAſter Anthony Kniuet hath written a Treatiſe of what he had ſeene and ſuffered in Braſil: He was one of Maſter Candiſhes company in his vnfortunate voyage, 1591. who after much miſery ſuſtained in the Magellan Straits, in their returne was ſet on ſhore at S[t] Sebaſtians, where many of his company died with eating a kinde of blacke venemous Peaſe. Hee ſaw there a great beaſt come out of the Riuer, hauing on the backe great ſcales, vgly clawes, and a long tayle, which thruſt out a tongue, like a harping iron, but returned without harme. Hee found a dead Whale, which with long lying was couered with Moſſe, on which hee yet liued a fortnight. His company were knocked on the head with firebrands, and he like to be eaten of the Sauages, but eſcaped this and many other miſeries; and was ſaued by the Ieſuites from being hanged by the Portugals. Where his calamities compelled him, with another Indian in like predicament of ſlauerie, to eſcape by flying, ſwimming two miles ouer the Sea: and ſo they trauelled ſeuen and thirty dayes thorow a deſart, meeting by the way (as he ſaith) Lyons, Leopards, huge Serpents.

Ant. Kniuet, kinſman to the Lord Kniuet.

Some Indians they saw with feathers of diuers colours, fixed on their bodies and heads with oyle of Balsam, seeming as if they had bin so borne, not leauing a spot bare, but on their legs. The Sauages sell their children to the Portugals for toyes. Some of them were so haunted with a Spirit which they called Coropio (like that which Lerius his Sauages called Aignan) that some of them dyed therewith in much amazement. Many complained that they were possessed with spirits, which they called Anasaly, and commanded themselues to bee bound hand and foot with bow-strings, desiring their friends to beat them with cords, wherewith they hang their beds; but most died notwithstanding. They haue wormes which creepe into their fundaments which consume their guts: for remedie whereof they take slices of Limons and greene pepper, and put therein with salt water.

Aignan.

He in diuers expeditions for war and Merchandize with the Portugals, and escapes from them, trauelled thorow more of those Sauage nations, then perhaps any other before or since Out of whose obseruations bought at so deare a rate, I haue heere mustered these many wild people before thee, with such rarities as hee found amongst them.

Petiuares. The Petiuares are not so barbarous as many other: they inhabite from Baya to Rio Grande, their bodies are carued with fine workes: in their lips is a hole made with a Roe-Bucks horne, which at mans estate they cut bigger with a Cane, and weare therein a greene stone; otherwise they esteeme a man no Gallant, but a Pesant. They haue no Religion: vse Polygamie: but the women are tied to one husband, except hee giue her publike leaue. When they goe to warre, the wiues carrie all the prouision. That wife whom hee giueth his hunted prey, is his bed-fellow that night: and she goeth to the water, and washeth her selfe: after which she lyeth downe in the net, and commandeth all the rest to attend on her for that day. When they are in trauell, they goe to the doore, and being deliuered, the father lyeth downe and is visited, as before is said. No Indian will kill any female creature whiles his wife is with childe, thinking that would be the death of his childe. They trauell with great store of Tobacco, and haue continually a leafe thereof along the mouth betweene the lip and teeth, the rheume running out at the lip-hole. They war against the Portugals, and all others, eating all, and take so many new names, as prisoners. They thinke mans flesh makes them valiant, Their houses are two hundred yards long without partition: they hang their nets on beames: wash euery morning both men, women, and children: they part their grounds. They haue Serpents amongst them with bodies like trees, which strike two fins out of their fore-quarters, that kill whatsoeuer: they call them [d] Iaboya. They haue foure legs and a taile (like an Aligator or Crocodile) which they hide when they lye in the woods for their prey. They haue Monkies as big as a water-dog, faced like a man, with long broad beards, which goe twentie together on a tree, and one of them will alway walke vp and downe with his hand on his beard, making a great noyse, the rest harkening still, an houres space.

[d] See infra.

Maraquites. The Maraquites are betweene Fernambuc and Baya: other Indians call them Tapoyes, that is, wilde men, which name, all but these, and the Vaanasses, which are like them, account a disgrace. The men are of good stature, the women very proper, and fight with their bowes as well as the men. They haue no dwelling, Religion, nor friendship with any Nation: yet he left them in peace with the Portugals. They haue holes in their lips, but carue not their bodies: vse Polygamie; are swift; neuer come into the field to fight, but keepe in the Mountaines: they eate mans flesh without ceremonies.

Topimambazes. The Topimambazes inhabite from R. de S. Franc. to Baya de todos Sanctos, they are, and speake like the Petiwares, but the women are of better complexion. The men let their beards grow long.

Waymoores. From Baya to Eleoos are the Waymoores, men of great stature, and swift as a Horse: fiue or sixe of them will set on a Sugar-house with an hundred therein. I haue seene one (saith our Author) take a man aliue, and defend himselfe with this his prisoner, as it were with a Target. They haue long haire; are without Townes or Houses, and care not where they come, presuming of their swiftnesse. They are greedie Man-eaters, and are alwaies foule with durt and dust, by lying on the ground and ashes. Iarric writes that they are without Gouernours euery one doing what seemes good in his owne eyes; only he is accounted most Noble, that hath slaine most enemies, with whom for any of them to speake, is punished with death. They roue vp and downe in vncertaine dwellings, and therefore cannot by warre be conquered. This wandring is common to many of these Brasilian Saluages.

Tomomymenos. The Tomomymenos dwell at Spirito Sancto: haue settled Townes, with great stones set about like pales, of a good height, and within walls of clay and stone: they make the sides of their houses with loope-holes to shoot out at. They deck their bodies with feathers, and paint themselues blacke and red. One of these tooke the Portugall Captaine, Martin de Sa, and in spite of all his company, carried him a stones cast, and threw him into a Riuer, but hee was rescued by Potummoyo * another Sauage. The Portugals tooke sixteene thouland, slew the tenth part, and parted the rest, destroying the Country downe the Riuer Paraeyua.

* This name signifieth long Tobacco, as he interprets. Lerius otherwise.

The Waytaquazes dwell on the North and South sides of Cape Frio. They are of greater stature then the Waymoores: we took thirteene of them, and whiles we searched for more, they burnt their cords from their hands and fled. Their women warre with bowes and arrowes. They lye on the ground like Hogs, with a fire in the midst: hold no peace with any, but eate all they can get. Heere the mountaines were full of Crablice, which sticked so fast on their skins, that they were faine to take dry straw to singe themselues. Waytaquazes.

Abausanga-retam was Captaine of a kinde of Tamoyes, an hundred and twenty yeeres old, which being taken, ranne amongst the enemies, where being shot in one and twenty places, he fell; then desired Baptisme, after which, within foure houres he died: his haughtie courage could not brooke captiuitie. Abausanga-retam.

The Wayanasses keepe at La Granda; they are low, great bellied, cowards, not carued, glory not to eate mans flesh: the Women vgly, with bigge bodies, and are well faced, painted red with Urucu, which growes in a cod like a Beane; the crownes of both Sexes are shauen like Friers, the rest of their haire long. Wayanasses.

The Topinaques haue their dwelling at Saint Vincents: are of good stature and complexion: the women painted with diuers colours; eate mans flesh; adore nothing; onely when they kill a man, paint themselues with a fruit called Ianipano, and with feathers on their heads, great stones in their lips, Rattles in their hands, dance three dayes together, drinking a filthy liquor, whereto they said Tobacco made them fresh. Among them is great store of Gold in many hils by the Sea. Topinaquen.

The Paries dwell an hundred miles within Land, are low like the Wayanasses, liue on Pine-nuts, and small Cocos as big as Apples, with shels like Wall-nuts, but harder; they call them Eyrires: they warre with none, eate not mans flesh if they haue other meat: lye in nets of barke, haue no houses, but two or three boughs tyed together, couered with Palme-leaues: for a knife or combe, they will giue fiue or sixe gallons of Balsame-oyle. Paries.

The Molopaques inhabite heere the Riuer Paradiua, are like Dutchmen in bignesse, faire of complexion, bearded, ciuill, couer their priuities: their Towns circled with wals of earth and great logges: haue a King called Morimishanu, which had thirteene wiues. They haue store of Gold, which they esteeme not, nor vse it but to tye on their fishing lines: this is in the Riuer Para, fourescore leagues beyond Paraeyua. They take none but what the rayne washeth from the Mountaines, which are of blacke earth without Trees. The Women are goodly and faire like English women, modest, neuer seene to laugh, and of good capacitie. They tye their haire about their middle with barke, and couer therewith their nakednesse: their haire also is of diuers colours: and they which want long haire, vse a furre to couer themselues. They eate mans flesh; obserue meales at noone and night (a thing rare in those parts) vse no Religion, so farre as our Author could see in nine or ten dayes of his abode with them: they are very cleanly. Molopaques.

The Motayas met them with dancing and singing, the women sate about them and wept, and then set forth their victuals: they laughed at them for refusing mans flesh: they are small people and browne, weare their haire in fashion as we in England, frizling it round about, and in other parts of the body, plucke it away with a shell. Motayas.

The Lopos, or Biheros, as the Portugals call them, liue in the Mountaines of Pine-apples: they saw no houses, but boughs tyed together with the pils of Trees: they would rob them of their goods, but not hurt their persons: heere they found many mines of Gold, and many rich stones: no part of America is richer, but it is farre within Land, and the Countrey populous, that neither Spaniard nor Portugall can inhabite there: they are browne & small, the women as shameless as beasts. Lopos.

The Wayanawasons dwell in small Townes by the side of a Riuer, are the simplest of all other; would stand and gaze on vs like heards of Deere, without speaking word. They are bigge, tall, cleane made, lazie: heere sixteene of their company dyed with eating a certaine yellow plumme, as bigge as a Horse-plumme. The Rootes of Mandioca had almost killed them all, but by a piece of Vnicornes Horne they were preserued. From hence hee with twelue Portugals determined to trauell to the South-Sea by Land: they came to many mountaines whyte they found store of gold, and many precious stones, and had thought themselues in Peru: those stones they tooke vp one day, they cast away the next to take vp better. In this Countrey they trauelled two moneths, till they came to the great Mountaine of Crystall, for height seeming to tower vp it selfe in the clouds, and was impassable for steepenesse: they saw it ten dayes before they came at it, and were not able when the Sun was aloft, to trauell against it for the glistering reflection. They passed alongst it twentie dayes before they could finde passage, and at last came to a Riuer which ranne vnder it. Wayanawasons.

Then did they make them prouision of great Canes, three yards and a halfe broad, and sixe long, and killing good store of Tamandroes, rosted them: and thus prouided went into the vault, which made such a noise with the water, that it seemed to them an enchantment. They went in on a Munday morning, & came out againe on a morning, they knew not whether one or two dayes after.

Tamoyes. The next Sauages they encountred were a kinde of Tamoyes, which are as proper men as any in Europe, most of them faire, their heads set with feathers; the women tall, proper, slender in the waste, faire, fine-handed, comely faced, and brests carued. They esteeme of gold and gems, as we of stones in the streets. Here he liued eighteene moneths: but his twelue companions they slue and deuoured. Him they spared, because hee professed himselfe a French-man, with whom they sometimes had commerce.

Tocomans. The Tocomans dwell betweene the Riuer of Plate and Saint Vincent. They are sandie, small, but not so little as they say of the Pigmees, and dwell in Caues.

Cariyoghs. The Cariyoghs for two or three Glasses and a Combe, with some Kniues, would giue the worth of foure or fiue thousand crownes in gold or stones. Their women are comely & faire, the men die their bodies blacke. These Carigij[d] (so Rodericus cals them) dwell in handsome thatched houses, sixty foot long: euery house they call a Village. They haue no superiour; dwell in a barren soyle; are very fond of euery trifle and toy, and will trauell laden with their wares for such trade thirty leagues to the Portugals, and sometimes sell themselues slaues. If they take an enemy aliue, they commit him to the Boyes of ten yeeres old to bee slaine; fiue or sixe of which smite out his braines with clubs. And this is a kind of Knighthood or Gentility vnto them; in signe whereof they cut the skinne from the Ankle to the Necke, and fast many dayes, and obserue a set Diet. They obserue charmes and sooth-sayings. If any dye without children, all his substance is buried with him.

[d] Hieron. Rodericus.

The Tamoyes his last hosts, by his instructions (who was desirous to try if the Sea might yeeld him any succour) left their [e] habitations, and 30000. of them aduentured themselues to seeke new. They came into the countrey of the Amazones, which the Indians call Mandiocussyams, but durst not warre against them: they tooke a towne of the Carijos, and ate three hundred of them: the rest fled to the Riuer of Plate, and obtained Portugall succour, who tooke these Tamoyes captiues, slue ten thousand, and shared 20000. amongst them for slaues. And thus came he againe into his Portugall slauery, from which hee had made an escape once before, and trauelled nine moneths in the wildernesse: fiue or sixe yeeres he serued the Portugals, and liued a yeere and eleuen moneths with the Canibals.

[e] They had so done before, or else could not haue knowne the French.

He made another escape into Angola, and serued as a drudge in Mafangana, the sicklyest Countrey vnder the Sunne, where the Portugals die like Chickens, gape for aire like the Camelions, liue close, take Physicke, euery weeke let bloud, obserue certaine diet and houres when to goe abroad. But his houre to goe abroad at liberty was not yet come. Backe he was sent to Brasile: and long it was before his longing could be satisfied to reuiew his Country and friends: some compassion of his passions, I think this tedious following him in this epitomised discourse of his disasters hath bred in you: wherein (as in the following also) are many things strange, some seeming doubtfull, which if any reiect, let them not blame me, who had rather beleeue more then this, then to aduenture the search amongst those cruell Barbarians.

§. IIII.

Of the strange Creatures in Brasile.

Friers Treatise of Brasil. NO man hath written so absolute a discourse of Brasile, as was that taken from a Portugall Frier, and by Francis Cooke sold to Master Haklnyt. Out of him I could recite the names of other Brasilian Nations, Ararape, Apigapigtanga, Vintan, which he saith were by a Magician Priest of Portugall conueyed to Fernambuc) Tapuya is a generall name, of which he reckoneth threescore and sixteene seuerall Nations, most of them of sundry languages.

Guaymares or Waymores, as K. and as Stad. Wayganna. The Guaymares haue hard skins, and beat their children with thistles to harden them. They are swift and cruell, cut off the captiues flesh with Reeds, leauing nothing but the bones and guts, and disbowell women with childe, to eate the child roasted. The Camucuira haue paps reaching almost to the knees, which when they runne, they binde to their waste. The Curupetie eate not men, but carry the heads for shew.

Beasts of Brasil. The Winter begins in Brasile in March, and ends in August. The beasts of Brasil he reckoneth Deere; Elkes like vnto Kine or Mules, which diue and goe (but swimme not (vnder the the water; Bores of two ſorts, Conies, Pigs, Ounces, Foxes with bags to carry their yong vnder the belly. The Tatu or Armadilla, which digs as much as many men with Mattocks: the Conduacu or Porcupine of three ſorts: the Hirara like Ciuet Cats, which eate honey: the Aquiqui, bearded Apes blacke, and ſometimes one yellow, which they ſay is their King, hauing an Inſtrument from his gullet as bigge as a Duck-egge, wherewith he maketh a loud ſound; ſo actiue, that they ſometimes are ſaid to catch an arrow with the hand, and redart it at the ſhooter; and ſo cunning, that they ſeeke a leafe, chew it, and put the ſame into their wounds. There are of them many kindes. The Cuati are like Badgers, they climbe trees; no ſnake, egge, or bird eſcapes him. There are others greater, as great Dogs, with Tuſks, which deuoure men and beaſts. There are wilde Cats, which yeeld good Furre, and are very fierce: the Iagoarucu; are Dogs of Braſile; the Tapati alſo barke like Dogs. The Iaguacinia is a kind of Foxe which feedeth on Sea-crabs and Sugar-canes. The Biratáca, a kinde of Ferret of ſuch ſtinking ſauour, that ſome Indians haue died thereof: yea Dogges, which come neere, eſcape not: the ſent endureth fifteene or twenty dayes in thoſe things which he hath come neere to: and cauſeth ſome towne ſometimes to bee diſinhabited. This commeth of a ventoſitie, which it voideth and couereth in the earth, or caſteth it out, being in danger to be taken: it feedeth on birds Eggs, and Amber. Ten or twelue kinds of Rats, all good meat. Other beaſts are before mentioned.

Of Snakes without venome, hee numbreth the Giboya, ſome of which are twenty foot long, and wil ſwallow a Deere whole, cruſhing it with the winding of his taile, and bruiſing it with licking to that purpoſe. The Guiaranpiaquana eateth eggs, goeth faſter on the trees, then any man can runne on the ground, with a motion like ſwimming. The Camoiama is all greene, and liueth on like food. The Boytiapua eate Frogs; the Indians ſtrike this Serpent on womens hips as remedy to barrenneſſe. The Gaitiæpia ſmelleth ſo, that none can abide it: ſuch is alſo the Boyuma: the Bam (ſo termed of his crie) is great and harmeleſſe; the Baicupeganga hath venemous prickles on his backe. Snakes.

There are other venemous Snakes, as the Iararaca, of which are foure kinds, of musky ſent, one ten ſpannes long, with great tuskes, which they hide and ſtretch out at pleaſure. The Curucucu fifteene ſpannes long, which lyeth on a tree to hunt his prey. The Boycimiaga which hath a bell in his tayle, ſo ſwift, that they call it the flying Snake; there are two kinds thereof. The Ibiracua cauſeth by his biting, the bloud to iſſue thorow all parts of the body, eyes, mouth, noſe, eares, &c. The Ibiboca is the taireſt, but of fouleſt venome amongſt them all. The fields, woods, houſes, beds, bootes, are ſubiect to the plenty of Snakes, which without helpe kill in foure and twenty houres. There are alſo many Scorpions, which ordinarily kill not, but cauſe extreme paine for foure and twenty houres ſpace. Lizards couer the wals of houſes, and holes are full of them. Their fundament-worms are very dangerous, which Sir Richard Hawkins ſaith he ſaw like a long Magot, greene, with a red head, creeping in, and glewing himſelfe to the gut, where it groweth ſo great, that it ſtoppeth the paſſage, and killeth, with cruell Colicke torments. Maſter Knuet.

Maſter Knuet ſpeakes of one Serpent which he killed, thirteene ſpans long, with foure and twenty teeth, great ſhels about the necke, blacke and ruſſet, like a collar, leſſe on her bodie, and darke greene vnder her belly, all ſpeckled with blacke and white, with foure ſharpe feet, no longer then a mans finger, and a tongue like a harping iron. Her tayle like a ſtrait bull-horne, blacke and white liſted. If they finde fire, they beat themſelues in it, till either the fire or themſelues be extinguiſhed. They vſe from a tree to fall on their prey paſſing by, thruſting their tayle into the fundament. The Indians will not goe (vnder fiue or ſixe) to ſet vpon one of them; this yet he killed with the helue of an axe. Friers Treatiſe of Birds.

Of Birds, there are Parrots innumerable, more then Starlings or Sparrows in Spaine: the Guaminbig like Bees, which ſleepe ſixe moneths; the Tangara which haue the falling-ſickneſſe, the reſt dancing about that which is fallen, with a noiſe, from which they will not bee skarred till they haue done, &c. Fruits, Trees, and Herbs.

Of Fruits, hee reckons the Iacapucaya, like a pot, as bigge as a great bowle, two fingers thicke, with a couer in it, within full of Cheſnuts: being much eaten greene, it cauſeth all haire to fall off: Balſam trees pricked, excellent for cure and ſent: Oyle-trees many; one as a Well or Riuer, growing in dry places where no water is: it hath holes in the branches as long as ones arme, full of water Winter and Summer, neuer running ouer, but alwayes at like ſtay: fiue hundred perſons may come to the foot of it and drinke and waſh their fill without want: the water is ſauoury and cleere. There are hearbs which ſeeme to ſleepe all night, and others which make ſhew of ſence, as wee haue before obſerued from Maſter Harcourt in Guiana.

Of ſtrange fiſhes in Braſil, he nameth the Oxe-fiſh, with eyes and eye-lids, two armes a cubit long, with two hands, fiue fingers and nayles, as in a man; and vnder the armes the female Oxe-fiſh.

male had two paps inwards like an Oxe: it cannot bee long vnder water: it hath no fins but the tayle, which is round and close, two stones neere the braine of great esteeme; the inwards of an Oxe, and taste like Porke.

Master T. Turner (who liued in Brasil, and was acquainted with Mr Knivet) saith the Iesuites told him the like.

The Cucurijuba is a fresh-water Snake, fiue and twenty or thirty foot long (the Mamma is a greater kinde) toothed like a dogge, with a chaine stained along the backe very faire: It catcheth a Man, Cow, Stag, or any other prey, winding it with his tayle, and so swalloweth it whole: after which she lyes and rots, the Rauens and Crowes eating her all but the bones, to which after groweth new flesh, by life deriued from the head; which is hidden all this while in the mire (which therefore they that finde, seeke and kill.) They will sleepe so being full, that they may cut off pieces (he tels an instance) from the tayle, and they not awaken. They found one which was fifty spans or twelue yards and a halfe long, hauing two wilde Bores in the belly. Thus much of the creatures in Brasile. Let vs now take better view of their Warres, Religion, and other their Rites.

CHAP. V.

Of the Customes and Rites of the Brasilians.

§. I.

Of their warres and man-eating, and of the Diuel, torturing them.

Leri in Nauig.

THe Brasilians, for the most part as you haue seene, exercise irreconciliable hostilitie, not to enlarge their dominions, but onely to be reuenged for the death of their friends and Ancestors, slaine by their enemies. The Elder men, as they sit or lye in their hanging beds, will make an Oration of the vertue of their Predecessors, and of their sustained wrongs, and so excite the yonger to take armes: These Orations last sometimes sixe houres. Their armes are clubs; or woodden swords, fiue or sixe foot long, and a foot broad, a finger thicke, and very sharpe. One of these men being throughly moued, would trouble two of our Fencers. Their bowes are as long as ours, the string made of the herbe Tocon, little, yet able to endure the strength of an horse: their arrowes an ell long, which they will shoot twice as fast, as our men; they haue leather shields; their elder men lead the rankes (if they may be so called, which haue none to marshall or order them) and with great shouts, and shewing the enemies the bones of their slaine friends, they enter into a fierce battell. Their captiues they conuey in the middest of their armie home to their Territories, vnto whom the men will not sticke to giue their Sisters or Daughters, to performe all the duties of a Wife, and feed them with the best, till they redemand the same out of their flesh: the men are employed (if it be long before the slaughter) in hunting, fowling, fishing; the women in gardening, or gathering Oysters. When that dismall day approacheth, knowledge is giuen, and the men, women, and children assemble to the place appointed, and there passe the morning in drinking; and the captiue (although he knoweth the dreadfull issue) danceth, drinketh, and frolicks it with the best. After sixe or seuen houres thus spent, two or three of the strongest fasten a rope about his middle, leauing his armes at liberty, and so lead him vp and down the Village in triumph. Neither doth he for all this hang down his head, as men heere going to be hanged, but with incredible courage emblazoneth his own worthinesse. Thus, thus, saith he, haue I sometimes bound your kindred, and thy father, saith he to one, haue I deuoured, and thy brethren (to another) haue I boucaned and eaten: and what innumerable numbers of you Touau Pinambausu haue these hands taken, this throat swallowed? Neither will the Margaiates suffer this my death vnreuenged. Then they bring him stones, and bid him reuenge his death. He hurleth them at those which stand about him, whereof there are some foure thousand, and hurteth diuers: I saw one (saith our Author) whose legge I had thought had beene broken by the violence of one of those blowes. After this comes one, which all this while had bin hidden, with the [a] fatall club; and, Art thou not one of the Margaiates? saith he: and hast thou not deuoured our kindred? the other answereth, O how lustily I haue done it, how prompt haue I been in taking them, how greedy in eating? And therefore, replyeth the other, shalt thou be killed and rosted on the Boucan. What then? saith he, my death shall not bee [b] vnreuenged. The club ends their Dialogue, with one blow striking him dead.

[a] This club they call Iwara Pemem, which is consecrated to this mischiefe by certaine ceremonies of singing and painting.

[b] This confidence is as well in the women as in the men.

His

His wife (if he had any, as they ſometimes vſe to beſtow on their Captiues) comes to the carkaſſe, and ſpends a little time and paſſion in mourning, but her Crocodiles teares are ſoone dried, and the humour fals into her teeth, which water for the firſt morſell. The other women, eſpecially the elder (which are moſt cruell and greedie) bring hot water and waſh the body, and rub it till it looke like the skin of a Pigge: then comes the Maſter of the Feaſt, which owed the Captiue, and cuts it out as readily, as any Butcher with vs can doe a Weather. They daube the children p with the bloud: foure women carrie about the armes and legs for a ſhew, with ſhouts and cries: The trunke is diuided into two parts, the vpper part being cut and ſeparated from the lower: the inwards are left to the women, which ſeethe and make the broth of them called Mingau, which they ſup vp, with their children: they eate alſo the fleſh about the head. The braine, tongue, and that which within the head may ſerue for meate, is the childrens ſhare. The Author of the Feaſt hath a new name added to the former (for they haue ſo many names as they haue ſlaine Captiues, the chiefe of the Cottage branding him on the arme, with an honourable marke for the memory thereof) and all that day he muſt ſpend in quiet. The Wayganæ q are a kind of Braſilians, which hold confederacie with no other Nation, but kill all which come to their hands, and that ſo cruelly, that they will cut off their armes and legges while they are aliue. Theſe liue in the Mountaines. They cut them with ſtones, and thoſe which haue trade with the Chriſtians, vſe Knines.

p Io. Stad. lib. 2. cap. 29.

q Stad. l. 2. c. 33.

Their Boucan is a Grediron of foure cratches, ſet in the ground, a yard high, and as much aſunder, with billets laid thereon, and other ſtickes on them grate-wiſe. On this they roſt the fleſh, putting fire vnder, all the people ſtanding about the ſame, and euery one gets a little piece of him. But me thinkes I ſee horror expreſſed in the countenance of him that reades this, and euery one wearie of viewing this Tragedie, loathing this inhumane feaſting with humane fleſh.

I will therefore leaue their ſhambles, and (which better beſeemes a Pilgrime) will viſit their holies and holy places. But alas, where or what are they? Maffæus hath alreadie told vs, that they obſerue no Gods; and Lerius confirmes the ſame, yet ſheweth that they acknowledge a Deuill, whom they call Aygnan: not that they worſhip him, but are tormented by him. Euen in ſpeaking of him, r they tremble, and the remembrance breedes a compaſſionate amazement in the hearer, an amazed paſſion in the ſpeaker, while he applaudes our happineſſe free from ſuch tyrannie, and deplores his owne miſerie. Hee ſometimes in the forme of a beaſt, ſometimes in forme of a Bird, and otherwhiles deformed in ſome monſtrous ſhape, doth grieuouſly torment them. Euen whiles the Chriſtians were in conference with them, they would pitieouſly cry out, Hei, Hei, helpe, Aygnan vexeth me. Nor could this bee counterfeit in the iudgement of any that conuerſed with them. They beleeue the immortalitie of the ſoule, and that the ſoules of the vertuous, that is (in their ſenſe) of ſuch as haue killed and eaten many enemies, ſhall flie beyond the higheſt Mountaines, and be gathered to the ſoules of their Progenitors, and there liue in pleaſant Gardens, and perpetuall dancings and delicacies. The cowardly Ghoſts ſhall be carried vnto torment, by Aygnan, without end. They haue no name, whereby to ſignifie God vnto them, but wondered to heare what the Frenchmen told of the Creator of Heauen and Earth. And becauſe they are afraid of Thunder, which they call Toupan, they told them that God was Author thereof: the fooliſh Indians reply, that he was then naught which would make them afraid. But the feare of Aygnan made them ſometimes flexible to embrace the Chriſtian Religion, hearing that this Deuill was inferiour to the Chriſtians God. So that euen in theſe (the moſt degenerate of all, which I haue obſerued in this long and tedious Pilgrimage) there is ſome ſparke left of Religion, euen in the acknowledgement of a Deuill, and of eternall rewards and puniſhments.

§. II.

Of their Prieſts or Magicians.

THis is further confirmed by that which is written of certaine Magicians or Prieſts amongſt them: which perſwade the people that they haue dealings with Spirits, that by their meanes they haue their Roots and ſuſtinance, and may by them haue fortitude. I (ſaith Lerius) was preſent at one of their Aſſemblies, where ſixe hundred were gathered together, which diuided themſelues into three parts: the men went into one houſe, the women into a ſecond, the children into a third. The Cariabes forbade the women and children to depart their houſes, but to attend diligently to ſinging; and we (ſaith he) were commanded to abide with the women. Anon the men in one houſe fell to ſinging, He, He, He,

Digitized by Google

He, answered by the women in the other with the same. They howled it out for a quarter of an houre, shaking their brests, and foming at the mouth, and (as if they had had the falling sickneſſe) some falling downe in a swoune, the Deuill in seeming entring into them. The children also followed in the same harsh deuotions. After this, the men sung pleasantly, which caused me to goe thither, where I found them singing and dancing in three seuerall Rings, in the middest of each, three or foure Caraibes, adorned with Hats and Garments of Feathers euery one hauing a Maraca, or Rattle, in both his hands. These Rattles are made of a fruit bigger then an Ostriches Egge, out of which they said, that the Spirit would speake, and they continually shooke them, for the due consecration. These Caraibes danced to and fro, and blowed the smoke of Petum on the standers by, saying, Receiue yee all the Spirit of Fortitude, whereby yee may ouercome your Enemies. This they did often: the solemnitie continued two houres, the men ignorant of Musicke, and yet rauishing my spirit with the delight I conceiued in their Song. Their words sounded this, that they were grieued for the losse of their Progenitors, but were comforted in the hope, that they should one day visit them beyond the Hils; and then threatned the Ouetacates [f] (which dwell not far from them, and are at enmitie with all their Neighbours, as swift as Harts, wearing their haire to the buttockes, eating raw flesh, and differing from all others in Rites and Language) and now propheſied their destruction at hand. Somewhat also they added in their Song of the floud, that once had drowned all the World, but their Ancestors, which escaped by climbing high trees. That day they feasted with great cheere.

[f] Ler. c. 5.

This solemnitie is celebrated euery third yeere; and then the Caraibes appoint in euery Family three or foure Maraca, to bee adorned with the best Feathers, and sticked in the ground, with meate and drinke set before them; and the people beleeue they eate it. They minister vnto their Maraca fifteene dayes; after which, in a superstitious conceit, they think that a Spirit speakes to them while they rattle their Maraca. They were exceedingly offended, if any tooke away any of this Prouision, as the French sometimes did; for which, and denying other the Caraibes lyes, those Priests hated them exceedingly. Yet doe they not adore their Maraca, or any thing else. Peter Carder [t] saith, he could obserue no Religion amongst them, but the worship of the Moone; specially the New Moone, whereat they reioyced, leaping, singing, and clapping of hands.

[t] Pet. Carder.

Stadius [u] tels (as you heard) that they ascribed his taking to the prediction of Maraca. Hee tels of their consecration, that the [x] Paygi (so hee cals them) enioyne that euery one should carry their Tamaraka to the house, where they should receiue the faculty of speech. Euery ones Rattle is pitched in the ground by the steele or stalke, and all of them offer to the Wizard which hath the chiefe place, Arrowes, Feathers, and Eare-rings; he that breathes Petum on euery Rattle, puts it to his mouth, shakes it, and saith, Nee Kora, that is, Speake if thou be within: anon followeth a squeaking voyce, which I, saith Stadius, thought the Wizard did, but the people ascribed it to the Tamaraka. Then those Wizards perswade them to make warres, saying, that those spirits long to feed on the flesh of Captiues. This done, euery one takes his Rattle, and builds vp a Roome for it, to keepe it in, where he sets victuals, requireth and asketh all necessaries thereof, as we doe of God: and these, as Stadius affirmeth, are their Gods. These Paygi doe initiate Women vnto Witchcraft by such Ceremonies of smoke, dancing, &c. till shee fall as in the Falling sickneſſe, and then hee sayth, hee will reuiue her, and make her able to foretell things to come: and therefore when they goe to the Warre, they will consult with these Women, which pretend conference with Spirits.

[u] Stad. l. 2. c. 23.
[x] Lerius saith, That the Caraibes & the Paygi are two kinds: Theuet but one, and Stadius mentions no more but the Paygi.

Andrew Theuet [y] (which was in this Antarctike France with Villagagnon) agreeth in many of the former Reports: he addeth, that for feare of Aignan they will not goe out, but they will carry fire with them, which they thinke forceable against him.

[y] A. Theuet. Antarct.

He writes that they acknowledge a Prophet called Toupan, which they say makes it thunder and raine, but they assigne no time nor place to his worship. They tell of a Prophet, which taught them to plant their Hetich or Root which they cut in pieces and plant in the Earth, and is their chiefe food; of which they haue two kinds. The first Discouerers they much honoured as Caraibes or Prophets, and as much haue distasted the Christians since, calling them Mabira, the name of an ancient Prophet, detested by them. But Toupan (they say) goeth about, and reuealeth secrets to their Caraibes. Theuet addes, that they obserue Dreames; and their Payges, or Caraibes professe the interpretation of them; which are also esteemed as Witches, which conferre with Spirits, and vse to hurt others with the poyson called Ahouay, a kind of Nut. They doe a kind of worship to these Payages, and will pray them that they may not bee sicke; and will kill them, if they promise falsly. In their consultations, they will prouide a new lodging for the Wizard, with a cleane white bed, and store of Cahouin (which is their ordinary drinke, made by a Virgin of ten or twelue yeeres old) old) and of their Root-food: into the which they conuey him, being before waſhed, & hauing abſtained nine dayes from his Wife. Then doth he lye on that Bed, and inuocate, none being with him in the Houſe, and rayſeth his Spirit, called Hauioulſira; which ſometimes, as ſome Chriſtians affirmed to our Authour, appeareth ſo, as all the people may heare, though they ſee him not. And then they queſtion him of their ſucceſſe in their enterpriſes. They beleeue the ſoules Immortality, which they call Cherepiconare, with rewards to the valiant Man-eaters, in goodly Paradiſes, and Agnans puniſhments to others. But his boldneſſe makes me the leſſe bold in following him in theſe and other things; which I know not with what authoritie hee auerreth againſt the former witneſſes, whereas Thenot, ſometimes taken in lying, deſerueth leſſe credit in the reſt. When there is any tempeſt in the water, hee ſaith they attribute it to the ſoules of their Progenitors, and caſt ſomething into the water to appeaſe it.

They haue a Tradition, That one, in habite like to the Chriſtians, had long ſince told their Progenitors of Diuine matters, but with ſo little effect, as he forſooke them; and euer ſince had thoſe bloudy Warres continued amongſt them. How little the Ieſuites can preuayle, in bringing the Braſilians to Chriſtianitie, Maffæus [z] hath written ſomewhat, and Pierre du Iarric, a Ieſuite, very largely; which is not ſo pertinent to our preſent purpoſe.

Maſter Kniuet (to whoſe Relations our former Chapter is ſo much indebted) telleth of a Rocke in Braſill called Etooca, with an entrance like a doore, where the Indians ſay (it is like they borrowed it of ſome fabulous Frier) that Saint Thomas preached. It is within like a great Hall: hard by it is a ſtone as bigge as foure Canoes, ſupported by foure ſtones like ſtickes, little bigger then a mans finger. The Indians ſay it had beene wood, and by Miracle was thus altered. They ſhew vpon great Rockes many foot-prints of one bigneſſe; and tell that the Saint called the fiſhes of the Sea, and they heard him preach. This ſmels of a Franciſcan Cowle.

The Portugall Friers Treatiſe mentioned in the former Chapter deliuereth many things worthy our obſeruation: They haue ſome Tradition of the floud, in which they ſay all were drowned, one only eſcaping on a Ianipata with a Siſter of his, which was with childe, from whom they had their beginning. They haue no knowledge of the Creator, nor of paine and glory after this life, and therefore vſe no Ceremonies of worſhip. Yet doe they acknowledge that they haue ſoules which die not, but are conuerted into Deuils, and goe into certaine fields where grow many Figge-trees alongſt the bankes of a goodly Riuer, and there dance. They are greatly afraid of the Deuill (whom they call Curupira, * Tagnain, Pigtanga, Matichera, Auchanga) inſomuch that often they haue dyed with the imagination of him. Yet doe not they worſhip it, nor any other creature or Idoll; onely ſome old men ſay, that in ſome wayes they haue certaine poſts, where they offer him ſome things for feare, and becauſe they would not dye. Sometimes (but ſeldome) the Deuill appeares to them, and ſome few among them are poſſeſſed. There are Witches which vſe Witchcrafts, rather for health then deuotion. Some Witches are called Carayba, or holineſſe, but (like his holineſſe of Rome) are of bad life: theſe would ſeeme to do ſtrange things, rayſing ſome to life which had fained themſelues dead: they are their Oracles for their husbandry and other affaires: ſometimes cauſing them to dye for hunger, whiles they promiſe to make the Mattockes worke alone.

Mſ Kniuet told me that one of them being tormented by the Spirit, hee heard one of theſe Payes which ſpake to him, and told him this was contrary to his couenant thus to torment them (which death vſually followed) & if he ſo cõtinued, they would all goe the White men and become Chriſtians. Whereupon the Deuill left that body preſently, and he recouered.

Of other their Rites, and a new Mungrell Sect amongſt them.

THey haue no proper name for God, but ſay Tupan is the Thunder and Lightning, which gaue them Mattockes and food. Their Mariages are diuorced vpon any quarrell. In times paſt (they tell) no young man married before he ſlue an Enemie, nor the woman before ſhe had her termes, which time was therefore feſtiuall. At Marriages alſo they vſed great Drinkings, and the Feaſt ended, they were laid in a cleane Net, after which the Father tooke a wedge of ſtone, and did cut vpon a ſtake or poſt, which (they ſay) was to cut the tailes from the grand children, who were for this cauſe borne without them. After they were married they began to drinke; (for till then their Fathers brought them vp in ſobrietie of dyet and modeſty of ſpeech) and then with a veſſell the old men gaue him the firſt * Wine, holding his head with their hands for feare of vomiting, which, if it happened, was a ſigne a ſigne he would not be valiant. They eate at all times in the night and day, and keepe no meate long, being no niggards of their ſtore (this name were the greateſt diſgrace you could offer them) and count it an honour to be liberall. They are patient of hunger and thirſt: will Feaſts. eate Snakes, Toads, Rats, and all fruits which are not poyſon: drinke not ordinarily whiles they eate, but after meate will drinke drunke. They haue ſome particular Feſtiuals, in which two or three dayes together they eate not, but drinke, and goe about ſinging, calling all to the like fellowſhip: ſleepe not, haue their Muſickes, and ſometimes fall to quarrels. They Orations. waſh not before meate; they eate ſitting, or lying in their beds, or on the ground. They goe to bed betimes, and riſe not early. In the morning one chiefe man makes an Oration to them lying in his Net, which continueth the ſpace of an houre, about labouring as their fore-

10 fathers did, with the ſubſtance and circumſtances thereof. When he is vp, hee continueth his preaching, running through the Towne. This cuſtome they borrowed of a bird, which ſingeth euery morning, by them called the King and Lord of birds. When a man ſpeakes with a woman, he turnes his backe to her. They ſhaue their haire with a halfe Moone before, which they ſay they learned of Saint Thomas. Being angry, they let their haire grow: women, when they mourne, or when their Husbands goe a farre iourney, cut their haire. They go naked: and when any weare apparell, it is for faſhion rather then honeſty, as on the head, or no further then the nauell. Some houſes haue fiftie, threeſcore, or threeſcore and tenne Roomes, and ſome are without partition: ordinarily in one Houſe they are of a Kindred, and one is principall.

Child-births. 20 In Child-birth, the Father or ſome other (whom they take for their Goſſip) takes it vp, and cuts the Nauell-ſtring with teeth, or two ſtones, and faſts till it fals off, and then makes drinkings. The women preſently after trauell waſh themſelues in their Riuers: giue ſucke a yeere and halfe, without any other thing to eate; carrying the child on her backe in a Net to the place of her labour: they rocke them on the palmes of their hands. They neuer ſtrike their wiues except in times of drinking, and ſometimes will be willing to take this opportunitie. Their children play without ſcurrilitie or quarrels imitating the voyces of Birds and the like. They will ſpare a Captiue that is a good Singer.

Funerals. When one dyeth, they of that Kindred caſt themſelues vpon him in the Net, ſometimes choking him before he be dead: and thoſe which cannot caſt themſelues on the bed, fall on the ground, with ſuch knockes, that it ſeemeth ſtrange, they dye not alſo for company: and 30 ſometimes they proue ſo feeble that they dye likewiſe. If the party dye in the Euening, they weepe all night with a high voyce, calling their Neighbours and Kindred to ſocietie of their griefe. If it be one of the principall, all the Towne meets to mourne together, and they curſe with plagues thoſe which lament not, prophecying that they ſhall not bee mourned for. They waſh and paint the dead curiouſly, and then couer him ouer with Cotton yarne, and put him in a great veſſell vnder the Earth, that no Earth may come to him, and couering this veſſell with the Earth, make him a Houſe, where euery day they carry him meate. For when he is wearied with dancing, ſay they, hee comes thither to eate. Thus for a certaine time they goe to bewaile him euery day. With him they bury all his Iewels; if any had giuen him a Sword or other thing, now he challengeth his gift againe. The Mourners eat 40 not but by night. This mourning laſteth a Moone, after which they make Drinkings: but many after this will forbeare them.

They rule themſelues by the Sunne, and goe two or three hundred leagues thorow the Woods: no Horſe will hold out with them: they feare no Sea, being able to continue a night and a day ſwimming. When they returne from victory, their women receiue them with ſhouts, and buffeting themſelues on the mouth. The Keeper appointed to the Captiue, is one giuen him to be as his Wife for bed and bord. Some of theſe are ſo reſolute, that they will not be ranſomed, ſaying, it is a wretched thing to dye and to ſtinke & be eaten of Wormes. Sometimes their Keeper will runaway with them.

When they kill a Captiue at their Feaſts, if hee fall on his backe, it is an ominous ſigne 50 that the killer ſhall dye, which preſages they obſerue in other circumſtances. The taker hath Gentilities. a new name, as a title of dignitie added to him, and muſt be content to fill his fancie with this new Gentility, for nothing is left him to fill his belly, euery one taking from him that which he hath. He ſtands all that day on certaine logges of the Tree Pilan, with ſtrange ſilence: he is preſented with the head of the dead, the eyes pulled out, his pulſes annointed with the ſtrings and ſinewes, and cutting off the mouth whole, they put it in manner of a Bracelet about his arme. Thus lyeth he downe in his Net, fearing if all Rites be not accompliſhed, that the ſoule of the dead will kill him. Within few dayes after they giue him the habit, razing his skin with the tooth of a Cutia, in forme of ſome worke, putting thereon Cole and iuyce of Broome-rape, he lying ſtill certaine dayes in ſilence, hauing water, meale, 60 and fruits ſet neere him. After this, they make a great Feaſt, and then may hee lay aſide his mourning, and cut his haire; and thence forwards may kill any without any painfull ceremonie. Abaetes, Marnbixaba, Moczacara, are names of Gentilitie amongst them.

The Fryers haue obtained some good liking with the Brasilians, for teaching their children to write, reade, and cipher: the Iesuits will be of esteeme euery where: yet two and fifty of them saying from Lisbon to Brasil, Anno 1570. by Frenchmen at [b] Sea were taken and slaine.

In [c] Marriages they abstaine (sayth Lerius) onely from Mother, Sister, and Daughter: they obserue no Marriage-ceremonies, but vpon consent of her friends and her owne, take her home. It is a credit to haue many wiues, amongst whom is no Leah to enuie Rachels greater portion of loue: the Husband may kill the Adulteresse; but for their vnmarried Maydens they are not scrupulous. Our Author hearing a woman cry in the night, thought shee had beene in some danger of deuouring by a wild beast, but found her Husband playing the homely Midwife to her in her trauell, byting the nauel-string, and pressing downe the nose. The Father washeth and painteth him. They vse to put to their male-infants little Bowes and Arrowes into one end of the bed, and herbs at the other, which are the Enemies his Son must be supposed to kill, and eate; chatting out their hope of the childes valour, in being auenged when he shall be a man, vpon his Enemies. They name their children at aduenture, by the name of a Beast, Bird, or otherwise, as this Child was called Orapacou, that is, Bow and Arrowes. The men are modest, in accompanying with their Wiues secretly. The women haue not the ordinary feminine sickenesse. Lerius thinkes, that humour was diuerted in their youth, seeing the Mothers cut their Daughters side downe to the thigh, at twelue yeeres of age. But twice while he was there, did he see any in priuate brawling, or contention: if such happens, as they began, so they are suffered to end it: if any hurt or kill other, he sustayneth the like in his owne person, inflicted by the Kindred of the party wronged. They haue their proper pieces of ground, which they husband with their Rootes and Mais. When they entertayne a Stranger, the Moussacat, or Good-man seemes to neglect him a while, and the guest sits him downe silent on the bed, the women sit by on the ground, and hold their hands before their eyes, weeping, with many prayses, that hee is a good man, a valiant man, that (if he be a Christian) he hath brought them fine Wares. The Stranger must endeuour, in some measure, to imitate the like weeping gesture. The Moussacat is all this while whitling his Arrow, not seeming to see his new Guest, till anon he comes. And are you come, sayth hee? How doe you? with many termes of his best Rhetoricke: and then askes, if he be hungry; and if he be, sets his cheere before him on the ground: which kindnesse is repayed with Glasses, Combes, or the like. They are very kind, both to their owne, and to such Strangers as they are enleagued with. They would carry burthen, or man, for the space of some miles, when they needed: their loue and hatred are in like extremes; the one to their owne, the other to their Enemies. They haue Physicians called Pages. They vse much mourning at the death of any, and making a round pit, bury him vpright therein, fixe houres after his death, with that wealth they had. In their Villages liue some six hundred persons: they remoue their Villages often, which yet carry the same name. Stadius [d] sayth, there are few Villages of aboue seuen Houses, but those Houses are a hundred and fifty foot long, and two fathoms high, without diuision into plurality of Roomes; and therein liue many Families, all of one Kindred.

What our Countrimen haue done on this Coast, I referre the Reader to Master Hakluyts Discoueries. The Iesuits [e] first came into these parts, Anno 1549. which whiles they sought to reduce the Brasilians from their Man-eating Feasts, had like to haue kindled a dangerous contention betwixt them and the Portugals: whereupon the Iesuits sought to bee permitted to speake with them whom they kept for the Boucan, instructing & baptizing them; but then also they complained, the flesh was distastfull (they laid) vnto them; so that the Iesuits being forbidden that, by stealth with a wet cloth, following them to execution, would performe a kind of Baptisme: and that also being espyed was prohibited. Since which, by schooling their children, teaching them to reade and write, they haue most (though not much) preuayled with these Barbarians.

Somewhat (as themselues write) they haue beene hindred in their Brasilian Conuersions, by the peruersenesse of some couetous Portugals, who sometimes vnder colour of peace, would betray these silly soules, and seize on them to cruell slauery; sometimes would counterfeit Iesuiticall habits, and vnder pretence of Religion, perswading them to goe with them, haue betrayed Religion and Them together; sometimes would vnder-hand, and closely threatten seruitude to all such as beleeued the Iesuits, with all promises of kindnesse to such as would follow them, which in effect proued, to the Mynes, or other offices of slauish drudgery; and sometimes by hostile violence haue seized on such as the Iesuits haue conuerted, and made slaues of them. Most strange is that which they write of certaine Brasilians within in the Land, which eyther hauing seene the Religious Rites of the Portugals, or instructed therein by some Fugitiues or Apostata's, had set vp a new Sect of Christian Ethnicisme, or Mungrell-Christianity. This was about Anno 1583. They chuse one Supreme in their vnholy Holies, whom also they call Pope; other inferiour Prelates they call Bishops: These ordayne their Priests, which obserue in an Apish imitation their Confession, Absolution; Beads to number their Prayers, great Gourds or Rattles in stead of Bels, to assemble them together; Free-schooles for instruction of youth; Bookes of Barke, bound in wood, and strange Characters therein written; a kinde of Baptisme also, but wanting the essentiall words and forme; all the Men they name Iesus, the Women, Marie: the Crosse they haue, but without veneration; their Priests vow Continence. They conceiue a state of perfection in drinking the iuyce of the herbe Petine, till they fall downe distracted, as in the Falling-sickneſſe, quaking, and stretching out their limbes with terrible gestures, the Deuill speaking from within them, their mouthes not open, nor their lips moued: after they haue thus continued a while, they returne to themselues, and are washed all ouer their bodies; he is iudged the most sanctified Wight, that hath expressed most extaticall gestures. The most transcendent degree of perfection they ascribe to the muttering of certayne words ouer them by an Inchanter. They say, that their Ancestors, long since dead, will returne by shipping, and deliuer them from the Portugals, which all shall be slaine by them; and if any shall escape, they shall be turned into fishes or beasts. Those of this faith shall inherit Heauen, and all the vnbeleeuers shall be deuoured of Birds or Beasts. In the yeere 1602. a Iesuite was sent amongst these Sectaries; where their Great Father, or Pope, came to meete him, attended with many weaponed men, and Archers. He began a Song which the other Brasilians vnderstood not; and when he had sung one Verse, the rest (as with vs in the Quire) answered. Then did this Holy Father Catechize, or instruct them, with many idle words, often mixing and repeating Sancta Maria Tupama Remireco; that is, Saint Mary the Wife of God, &c. Kneeling, he lifted vp his eyes and hands to Heauen, after the fashion of the Priests at Masse. Hee and the Iesuite imbraced each other; and then hee told the Iesuite that hee liued in the Woods, as one that would not bee seene of Men. The next night hee caused a youth to bee hanged that had beene familiar with the Iesuite. A conference was appointed betwixt him and the Iesuite, where after much boasting of his sanctitie, the Iesuite interrupted him, and told him, he came to teach him the way to Heauen; but the other soone after conueyed himselfe away, and came no more.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Countries from the Riuer of Plate to the Magellane Straits.

§. I.

The Nations inhabiting neere the Riuer.

a Solero.

THis Riuer we haue already mentioned; the Indians a call it Parana: and Iohn Dias di Solis discouering the same in the yeere 1512. for some shew it seemed to haue of that Metall, called it the Riuer of Plata, or Siluer. It is forty leagues wide in the entrance, and preuayleth so farre against the Oceans saltnesse, that the taste of the fresh water sooner discernes his waters, then the eye can see his bankes. It ouerfloweth the Countrey; as Nilus in Egypt, and Orenoque, Marannon, with the other great Riuers in America. It ebbeth and floweth a hundred miles vp the streame. b Dias, whom some call the first Discouerer, was, with fifty of his companions, there slaine and eaten. But hee which hath most fully discouered the Nations that dwell neere this Riuer, is Huldericus c Schmidel, who sayled thither in the yeere 1534. and continued in those parts almost twenty yeeres. He sayled thither with Peter d Mendoza, who carried with him fiue and twenty hundred men, to discouer, conquer, and inhabit those Regions.

b Sebastian Cabot may rather be called the first discouerer
c Admiranda Nauig. H. S. d Herera tels of one of that name taken out of his bed by a Tygre, and deuoured in a Caue.

They built the Citie Buenas Aeres, so called of the wholsome Aire, neere to an Indian Towne, named Carendies of three thousand Inhabitants; if that may bee called a Towne, whose Inhabitants stay not long in one place. They will drinke the bloud of the beasts they they kill, for thirſt. The Spaniards deſtroyed them, whoſe parts famine ſeemed to take againſt that cruell people, which with inuiſible Darts ſo pierced their entrailes, that vile and venemous creatures were applyed to the curing of their wounded ſtomackes: and when ſuch Medicines failed, three of them ſtole a horſe, f minding to flee from famine on that dead beaſt but were therefore horſed on a Gibbet; where three others, that by this example were terrified from Horſe-fleſh, aduentured vpon theſe carkaſſes, cutting thence large gobbets, to pay that cruelleſt Tyrant, and greedieſt Exactor, Hunger, his Tribute. Another, whoſe Brother dyed, buried him in his owne body: halfe their company were conſumed with this plague.

f These horſes ſo multiplyed in theſe parts, that now they are diſperſed in wild troops, and they will hunt and kill them for the Hides, & which is a great commoditie in Angola) for the tayles.

The Indians of Carendies, Bartennis, Zeechuruas, and Tiembus, taking this aduantage, aſſayled their Towne of Good Aires, turning it into good fires, by ſhooting Arrowes, fired at the end, thereinto. They after paſſed vp the Riuer, and came to Tiembus, where the men are tall and great, their women alway deformed, with ſcratched and bloudy faces. The Tiembus could make fiue thouſand men. Of the Spaniards were not left fiue hundred in a ſmall time; and Mendoza dyeth, returning homewards. The Curenda, the next people, are like the Tiembus. The Macuerendas liue onely on fiſh, and a little fleſh. There they killed a Serpent fiue and twenty foot long, and as bigge as a man. The Saluaiſco goe ſtarke naked, and liue onely on fiſh, fleſh, and honey. The Curemagbas are of huge ſtature: the men bore a hole in their noſe, in which they weare a Parrots feather. The women paint their faces with indeleble lines. The Carios Countrie is large, neere to the Braſilians in Rites and Site. They goe naked: they will ſell; the father, his daughter; the husband, his wife; the brother his ſiſter. The price of a woman is a Hatchet, Knife, or ſuch like. They fat ſuch as they take in their warres, and then deuoure them with great ſolemnitie. The Lampere made neere vnto their Towne, Pits, with ſharpe ſtakes ſet vp in them, couered with ſticks and earth: theſe they made for the Spaniards, but in a confuſed flight fell therein themſelues. Here the Spaniards built the Towne of Aſſumption, which Herera ſaith, hath foure hundred Spaniſh houſholds, and three thouſand Meſtizas. The King of the Scherues, attended with twelue thouſand men, met the Spaniards, and gaue them friendly entertainment, with dancing, muſick, and feaſting. The women goe naked, and paint themſelues as artificially as any of our Painters could doe: they weare Carpets of Cotton, with the figures of Indian beaſts.

The King asked the Spaniards, What they ſought? who anſwered, Siluer and Gold. He then gaue them a ſiluer Crowne, which hee ſaid he had taken in the warres, which hee had waged with the Amazones, that dwelt two moneths iourney thence. Of theſe Amazones the Indians told the ſame things that Orellana told of, neere that Riuer, which hath receiued name of this ſuppoſition.

The Spaniards with ſome of the Scherues for their Guides, ſet forth for this Amazonian Diſcouery, but were encountred by the way with hote waters, in which they waded vp to the waſte, and ſo continued diuers dayes, till they came to a Nation called Orthueſon, who were then infected with a Peſtilence, cauſed by famine; which famine the Graſhoppers had effected, two yeeres together, eating vp all the fruits which nature or husbandry had prouided for their ſuſtinance.

Thus theſe Martiall and Venerean warres of the Spaniards, wanted food to hold out further toward the Amazons, if there were any ſuch people, and that they were not, as before I ſaid, the warre-like Wiues, or haply ſome gallant Viragoes, that by themſelues would let the World ſee what women could doe: but yet I cannot ſubſcribe to the reſt of their ſtorie.

But I am wearie of leading you any further in this Diſcouerie of this great Riuer and the neere Inhabitants, ſeeing little is obſerued in our Authour of their Religions. Some of theſe barbarous Nations, he ſayth, hanged vp the hairie skin of their ſlaine Enemies in their Temples or Houſes of deuotion: this people is called Ieperi. To giue you a Catalogue of the names of the Indian Nations that inhabited theſe parts, would be but tedious. Theſe Iournies of the Spaniards were to ſee what Gold, and not what Gods, the Indians had. They paſſed vp through the Land into Peru.

Betweene Peru s and theſe more Eaſterly parts, are the Hils Andi or Andes, which lift vp their ſnowie tops vnto the cloudes, and reach vnto the Magellane Straits. In them inhabit many fierce Nations, bordering vpon the Nations of Braſill and Plata. The Ciraguans, the Viracans, the Toui, the Varai. Theſe laſt exerciſe their children vnto Armes betimes, vnto them they commit their Captiues, for triall of their bloudy forwardneſſe; and he which at one blow can kill a Captiue, is of the greateſt hopes, and rewarded for his encouragement. To this end they name their children Tygre, Lion, that their names might teach them the like beaſtly furie. At the new & full Moone they wound themſelues with ſharpe bones, to inure themſelues to things of war. They weepe in the entertainment of a friend, as the Braſilians doe. In ſeuenteene degrees ſtands the Spaniſh Citie of Holy Croſſe of the Mountaine.

The Riuer Vapai in those Vallyes riseth and falleth as Nilus doth. There is a Brooke at Holy Crosse of a wonderfull nature: it is but little aboue two yards broad, and shallow withall, not running aboue a league, but is drunke vp of the thirstie sands. Yet doth this Brooke prouide the Citie water, and three sorts of good fish, and that in great plenty from the end of February to the end of May. At other times there are few. They vse diuers meanes of shauing their heads, which, they say, they learned of one Paicume. In the womens lying in, the man keeps his bed, as is said of the Brasilians.

Generall Language.

More towards the East dwell the Itatini people, which call themselues Garay, that is, Warriours; and others, Tapuis or Slaues. The language of the Varrai is common to all these Nations with the Brasilians, that as in the other World, Latine, Sclauon, and Arabike, so in that New World the Varay, Cuscan, and Mexican Language, will generally serue a mans turne.

The Kingdome of Tucuma stretcheth two hundred leagues betweene Chili, Brasill, Holy Crosse, and Paraguay. The Spaniards haue therein fiue Colonies. It is a plaine Country. The Paraguay inhabit along the Riuer so called, whereof they take name. From Plata Southwards is the great Region of Chica, washed on the South, East, and West by the Sea. The Inhabitants are called Patagones.

THe Spaniards h which with Magellane first discouered the Straits, saw Giants on this Coast, of which he carried away one with him to Sea, where after, for want of sufficient food, he died. Edward i Cliffe, that wrote Master Winters Voyage, (who first of all others, returned out of the Straits by the same way homewards) because he saw on this Coast men of common stature, excepteth against that report of Giants, as a Giant-like report, exceeding the stature and measure of Truth. But (besides that some of our owne k at another time measured the print of mens feete eighteene inches in the Sands) Oliuer l Noort in his World compassing Voyage, had three of his men slaine by men of admirable stature, with long haire, not farre from Port Desire, about seuen and forty degrees of Southerly latitude, and after, in the Magellane Straits discomfited a band of Sauages, which neither would yeeld, nor flee from their wiues and children, which were in a Caue iust by, till euery man was slaine. Foure Boyes the Hollanders carried away: one of which, learning their Language, told them of three Families, or Tribes, in those parts of ordinary stature, and of a fourth, which were Giants, ten or eleuen foote high, which warred vpon the former.

Sebalt de Weert being detayned fiue moneths in the Straits by foule weather, sent his men to fish for their prouision (which exceedingly failed them) who there were suddenly assayled by seuen Canoas of Giants, which they guessed to be so high, as is mentioned: who being put to flight by their Peeces, fled to land, and plucked vp Trees, in their rude manner barricadoing and fortifying themselues against the further pursuite of the Hollanders, who were no lesse glad that they were rid of such company.

These men, both Giants and others, went either wholly naked, or so clothed, as they seemed not to dread the cold, which is yet there so violent, that besides the Mountaintops, alway couered with Snow; their very Summer, in the middest thereof, freeth them not from Ice. Yea, at that time of the yeere those Hollanders encountred an Iland of Ice in the Sea, which the cold Aire had there mounted and maintained in despight of Neptunes rage, or the Sunnes volley of shot, in his neerest approach. The Trees in these parts, and the men (it seemeth) are naturally fortified against those Colds; the one (as is said) alwayes in manner naked: the other alwayes clothed, out-braving the Winters violence in their Summer-like Greene Liuery, seeming to stoope vnder the burthen of continuall Frosts and Snowes, and in a naturall wisdome clothe themselues, and hold their leaues the surer.

m Th. Candiſh. M. A. Kniuet.

Those Giantly men m about Port Desire, when they die, are brought to the Cliffes, and there buried, with their Bowes, Arrowes, Darts, and all their (almost no) substance. Master Kniuet writeth, that he saw footings at Port Desire as bigge as foure of ours: and two men newly buried, one of which was fourteene spans long. He also saw one in Brasil, taken by Alonso Dias, a Spaniard, being by foule weather driuen out of Saint Iulians, which was a yong man, and yet aboue thirteene spans high. They goe naked, and are faire and well proportioned. At Port Famine in the Straits, He saith, they saw some dwarfish Sauages, not aboue fiue or six spans high, which were thicke and strong, with wide mouthes (almost to the eares) eares) they eate their meat a little scorched, besmearing their faces and brests with the bloud running out of their mouthes: they lay young feathers to this bloud, which glues them to their bodies. Foure or fiue thousand traded with them at the Poles end. The cold is so extreme, that Henry Barwell became bald therewith, so continuing a yeere or two. One Harris a Goldsmith, blowing his frozen nose, cast it with his fingers into the fire: and our Author himselfe going on shore, and returning wet on his feet, the next morning pulled off his toes, together with his stockins, from his benummed feete, which were as blacke as soote, without feeling, and were after cured with words or charmes. Euery day some died of cold. They saw there a kind of beast bigger then a Horse, with eares aboue a span long, and a taile like a Cow, called Tapetyweson: he saw the like in Manicongo. The Sauages about the Straits feed (as both the same Author, and the Hollanders report) on raw flesh, and other filthy food, and are Man-eaters.

§. III.

Of the Magellan Straits.

IT is no small credit to our Nation and Nauigation, that these Straits haue more enlarged themselues, and giuen ottner and freer passage to vs, then to any other. Drake [n] swamme thorow; Winter both passed and returned; and so did Carder in the Pinnasse, as before is said; Candish passed, but returned (as Drake had done) about the World in his circuit. The Delight of Bristoll entred them, and with small delight spent sixe weekes in them: and Captaine Dauies, companion of Master Candish in his last Voyage, three times entred the South Sea, which three times forced him backe into the embracing armes of the vntrustie Straits. Some others haue attempted, but not attained them, as Fenton and Ward, and the Voyage set forth in the yeere of our Lord 1586. by the Earle of Cumberland. The Land on Larbord side (saith Sir Richard Hawkins) is without doubt Ilands, low, sandy, broken: on Starbord is very mountaynous, the lower Mountaynes whereof, although they be for their height wonderfull, yet (as we haue said of the differing statures of the men) they haue more Giantly ouer-lookers, with Snowie lockes, and Cloudy lookes; betweene them may be numbred three Regions of Clouds. These Straits are foure score and ten [o] leagues thorow, of vnequall breadth, in the narrowest place a league ouer. The mouth is in two and fifty degrees and an halfe, or as Sir Richard Hawkins obserued [p] in 52. degrees, 50. minutes. His company killed a thousand Penguins a day: this is a Fowle like a Goose hauing no feathers on their bodies but downe: it cannot flye, but will runne as fast as most men, feeds on fish and grasse, and harbours in Berries. Seales are many in these parts, which will fall dead with a blow on the snout (some affirme the same of the Crocodile) otherwise not easily pierced with a Sword, or fearing a Musket-shot. He saith they are like Lions, that they sleepe on Land, and haue euer one to watch: which is also reported of the Morse. Hee addeth of the Canoes of the Sauages there, that they are made artificially of the rindes of Trees, sowed together with the finnes of Whales, sharpe at both ends, and turning vp.

When these Straits were first discouered, they named them the Strait of Victorie, because the ship called the Victorie first descried them; a name fitly ascribed both to the Straits and Ship; the one first obtayning the Marine victory, & encompassing the compasse of the earth; the other still remayning the onely knowne passage, whereby that Sea-victory can bee atchieued. But the name soone passed from the Ship to the Generall, of whom still it is called the Strait of Magaglianes, or Magellan.

The Voyage of Sir Francis Drake so vexed the Spaniard, that hee sent Pedro Sarmiento to inhabit there, that he might prohibit other Nations to passe that way: but Tempest and Famine hating the Spanish insolence (whose ambitious designes alway aimed at a Plus vltra) brought them to a Plus vltra indeed, further then euer they had designed; diuers of the ships (which at first were three and twentie, with three thousand and fiue hundred men) perishing in the deuouring iawes of the Ocean, and others in their selfe deuouring mawes of Hunger, which eate them vp with not eating. The Name of Iesus, and Philips Citie, were their two newly erected Colonies, peopled with foure hundred men and thirty women, which by famine were brought to three and twenty persons, when Master Candish tooke Hernando one of that company, in his prosperous Voyage; another, [r] who had maintained himselfe by his Peece, and liued in a house alone a long time, was taken by the Delight of Bristoll, two yeeres after. The English gaue a name fitting to this distressed Citie, calling it Port Famine.

The last Voyage of Master Candish proued vnfortunate, both in the losse of himselfe, and many men: the blacke Pinnasse was lost in the South Sea: the Desire returned, but lost diuers of her men, surprised (as was [f] thought) and deuoured by the Sauages, neere to Port Desire. The Sauages heere presented themselues, throwing dust in the Aire, leaping, &c. and either had Vizards on their faces, like Dogges faces, or else their faces were Dogges faces indeed.

[f] Iohn Lane.

I haue seene a Copie [t] of a Discourse written by Master Candish himselfe to Sir Tristram Gorges, whom he made sole Executor of his last Will: where he thus affirmeth; The running away of the Villaine Dauis, was the death of me, and decay of the whole action, and his onely treacherie in running from me, the vtter ruine of all. Hee complaines also of mutinies; and that by South-west, and West South-west winds, he was driuen from shore foure hundred leagues, and from fifty to forty degrees; that he was taken with Winter and stormes in the Straits, and such Frosts and Snowes in May, as he neuer saw the like, so that in seuen or eight dayes forty dyed, and seuenty sickened. Dauies in the Desire, and his Pinnasse, left him in forty seuen. The Ro-bucke kept with him to thirtie sixe. Captaine Barker transgressing his directions, was slaine, with fiue and twenty men, on Land, and the Boat lost; and soone after 25. others followed the like fortunes: ten others, by the cowardise of the Master of the Ro-bucke, forsaken at Spirito Sancto, which stole away with sixe monethes victuals for an hundred and twenty persons, they being but forty sixe. At Sebastians happened another mutinie by treacherie of an Irish man (here Master Kniuet and other sicke persons were set on shore.) Intending againe for the Straits, he beate, and was beaten vp and downe the frowning Seas, and came within two leagues of Saint Helena, but could not attaine it; and professeth he had rather haue put himselfe on an Iland, if hee could not attaine it; and professeth hee had rather haue put himselfe on an Iland, if he could haue found one which the Charts place in eight degrees, then returne: and now was scarce able to hold a Pen when he wrote this. Hee dyed homewards. Since that, Sir Richard Hawkins passed the Straits into the South Sea, of which his Voyage I haue read a long Discourse written by himselfe. Hee fell into the hands of the Spaniards, which tooke him in the South Sea.

[t] Ap. Hak. M. S.

Let me adde this touching these Straits, that possession thereof was formally taken by turfe and twigge after the English manner, in the first Voyage, Captaine Drake deliuering the said seisin to Captaine Winter, in the name of Queene Elizabeth and her Successors. This did Captaine Winter himselfe relate to me at Bathe in the presence of many (desiring to haue it published) this last September 1618. forty yeeres after the performance, with many other particulars of that his Voyage.

CHAP. VII.

Of Terra Australis and Chili.

AS for the Land on the Southerne side of the Straits, it is called [a] the Land of Fire, either becauſe the Discouerers saw fire thereabouts, or becauſe that cold Climate so much needeth fire. More Easterly against the Cape of Good Hope, is the Land Terra di Vista. This Land about the Straits is not perfectly discouered, whether it be Continent, or Ilands. Some take it for Continent, and extend it more in their imagination then any mans experience, towards those Ilands of Salomon, and New Guinnee, esteeming (of which there is great probabilitie) that Terra Australis, or the Southerne Continent, may, for the largenesse thereof, take vp a fift place in order, and the first in greatnesse, in the diuision and parting of the whole World.

Enquiries of Lang. and Relig. 4. 14.

Master Brerewood our Learned Countriman (as is before obserued) perswadeth himselfe that it is as large as the Easterne Continent, which containeth Europe, Africa, and Asia altogether. His reasons are, that touching latitude, it is knowne to approch neere (if not on this side) the Æquator; and touching Longitude, to runne along in a continuall circuit about the Earth, fronting both the other Continents. Another reason, which he deemeth of more certaine importance, is this; that the Land to the North side of the Line in the other Continents of the Old and New World, is at least foure times as large as that part of them which lyeth to the South. Now for as much as the face of the Sea is leuell (so hee argueth) being therefore called Æquor & Aqua, and secondly, the Earth beeing equally poysed on both sides of her owne Centre; and thirdly, this Centre being but one to the Water, and the Earth, euen no other then the Centre of the World: it followeth thereupon, that the Earth should, in answerable measure and proportion, lift it selfe, and appeare aboue the face of the Sea, on the

the South side of the Line, as it doth on the North. And consequently, that what is wanting in the South parts of the other Continents towards the counteruailing of the North parts (which is about three fiue parts of both the other Continents layed together) must of necessitie be supplyed in this Continent of the South.

Lopez Vaz writeth, That the Gouernours which the King of Spaine sendeth for Peru and New Spaine, haue a custome to discouer new Countries. The Licentiate Castro being Gouernour of Peru, sent forth a Fleet from Lima, which saying 800. leagues Westward, found certaine Ilands in 11. degrees to the South of the Equinoctiall, with a kind of people of yellowish complexion, and all naked. Heere they found Hogs, Dogges, Hens, Cloues, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Gold. The first Iland they named Isabella, the greatest Guadalcanal, on the Coast whereof they sayled 150. leagues, where they tooke a Towne, and some graines of Gold hanged vp in the Houses. They burnt their Towne, because they had in a sudden surprize killed fourteene of their men. They spent fourteene moneths in this Discouery, and named them the Ilands of Salomon, that by that name men might bee further induced to discouer and inhabit them, imagining that Salomon had his Gold from thence.

Noua [b] Guinea was discouered by Villalobos, sent from New Spaine in the yeere 1543. going to discouer the Moluccas. Herera saith, it was discouered by Aluaro of Saauedra, Anno 1527. and the Ilands of Salomon in the yeere 1567. by Lope Garcia of Castro, which are many and great, but eighteene principall; some of them 300. leagues in compasse, two of 200. others of 100. and of fifty, and lesse: the Inhabitants, some blacke, some white, some browne: the greatest, named Saint Isabel, 150. leagues in length, and eighteene in breadth: Saint Nicholas 150. leagues in compasse. The Inhabitants are blacke of hue and wittie. The Spaniards haue coasted it 700. leagues, and yet cannot tell whether it bee an Ile or Continent.

Hessselius Gerardus hath largely set forth the Petition or Memoriall of [c] Peter Ferdinandez de Quir, vnto the King of Spaine, about his discouery of those Southerne vnknowne Ilands, for the Plantation of the same. I haue since seen this his Supplication to the King in Spanish, with other memorials [d] thereof, wherein he saith that hee was sent with two ships to discouer the Ilands of Salomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Straits, discouered a mayne Land, and sayled eight hundred Leagues on the Coast, till hee came in fifteene degrees Southward from the Line, where he found a fruitfull Countrey. He discouered a Bay, into which fall two great Riuers, where they purpose to settle a Plantation. Order was taken that he should presently be sent from Peru, with commission to take vp 1200. men, with shipping and other necessaries, and as many the yeere after out of New Spaine. He found out three and twenty Ilands, 230. leagues from Mexico; Taumaco, Chicayma (where are great Oysters with Pearles) Guaytopo (the people whereof are as white as the Spaniards) Tucopio, Fonofono, &c. They pray to the Deuill, which hath conference with an Indian vnseene, from a piece of wood; and to him and all the rest many times by night, he toucheth the face and brest with cold touches, but they could neuer learne what he was. He foretold of the Spaniards comming.

This Pedro Fernandez de Quiros, fourteene yeeres busied himselfe to no small endamagement of his state and person about this Discouerie. The length thereof he equalleth vnto all Europe, and as much of Asia, as thence extendeth to the Caspian Sea: and for the wealth and riches, he cals it a Terrestriall Paradise. The Inhabitants, hee affirmeth, are innumerable, some white, some like the Mulatos, and some other wise, in colour and habit of body diuersified. They neither haue King nor Lawes, nor Arts. They are diuided, and warre one vpon another, with Bowes, Arrowes, and other weapons, all of wood. They haue their Oratories and places of Buriall. Their Bread is made of three sorts of Roots. They haue varietie of Fruits, Cocos, Almonds of foure sorts, Pome-citrons, Apples, Dates: there are also Swine, Goats, Hens Partriches, and other Fowles; and as the Indians report, Kine and Buffals. Hee saw amongst them Siluer and Pearles, others added Gold: and the Coast Countries seemed to promise great wealth within Land: Many Riuers: Sugar Canes, Bayes, Hauens, and other commodities of Lands and Seas, making shew of another China, the ayre very wholesome and temperate.

He tooke possession thereof, in the name of the King, and set vp a Crosse and a Chappell, in the name of the Lady of Loretto. These Regions trend euen as high as the Æquinoctiall. When this Discouery was made he mentioneth not; onely hee sueth to the King for employment therein. It is rightly called Terra Australis Incognita, and therefore I will not take vpon me to be your Guide: in another sense [e] one of our Countrimen hath wittily and learnedly (according to his wont) described this Countrey, and paralelled therewith the Countries of Europe, and hath set vs see that wee are acquainted in those Coasts too much, and need a Pilot or Guide to conduct vs out of them.

But let vs come backe to our Straits of Magellan, that we may coast from thence, and visit the Countries of Chili and Peru: for of the Westerne borders of Chica, girt in betweene the salt waues, and cold Hils, little can be said fitting our purpose.

Of Chili. Hauing sailed out of the Straits, we haue a wide Sea before vs, and on our right hand the Countrey is so barren and cold, that I would not hold the Reader in any cold or tedious Narration thereof. Iohn Ellis, which was with Sir Richard Hawkins in his South-sea Voyage, reporteth, That being past the Straits, they sayled North-west, and by North, forty leagues into the Sea, and then due North, till they came at Mocha in 38. degrees 30. minutes, and thence held their course Northerly to Saint Maries in thirtie sixe, and so to Val Paresa in thirtie three: Where they made good purchase and prize, if they could haue kept it. From hence they came as farre as Areeca in two and twentie, and so passed the Line to Tacame, where they were taken. But our trauell must bee by Land (as was theirs after, against their will) where wee first encounter with Chili. This name [f] some extend euen to the Straits, where we haue placed Chica, and the Patagones [g] others straiten it in shorter bounds; betweene Chica on the South; Charchas and Collao on the North; Plata on the East; and the Sea on the West: it is called Chili of the chilling cold, for so the word is said to signifie. The Hils with their high lookes, cold blasts, and couetous encrochings, driue it almost into the Sea: only a narrow Valley vpon lowly submission to her swelling Aduersaries, obtayneth roome [h] for fiue and twentie leagues of breadth, where it is most, to extend her spacious length of two hundred leagues on that shore: and to withstand the Oceans furie, shee payes a large tribute of many streames, which yet in the [i] Night-time shee can [k] hardly performe; the miserable Hils in their Frozen charitie, not imparting that naturall bountie and dutie, till that great Arbiter the Sunne ariseth, and sendeth Day with his Light-horse-troupe of Sunbeames, to breake vp those Icie Dungeons, and Snowie Turrets, wherein Night, the Mountaynes Gaoler, had locked the innocent Waters. Once, the poore Valley is so hampered betwixt the tyrannicall Meteors and Elements, as that she often [l] quaketh with feare, and in these chill Feuers shaketh off, and loseth her best Ornaments.

Arequipa, [*] one of her faireſt Townes, by such disaster in the yeere 1582. fell to the ground. And sometimes the Neighbour Hils are infected with this Pestilent Feuer, and tumble downe as dead in the Plaine, thereby so amazing the fearefull Riuers, that they runne quite out of their Channels to seeke new; or else stand still with wonder, and the motiue heate failing, fall into an vncouth Tympanie, their bellies swelling into spacious and standing Lakes: the tydes seeing this, hold backe their course, and dare not approch their sometime beloued streames, by diuers miles distance; so that betwixt these two stooles the ships come to ground indeed. The sicke Earth thus hauing her mouth stopped, and her stomacke ouerlayed, forceth new mouthes, whence she vomiteth streames of oppressing waters.

I speake not of the Beasts and Men, which in these Ciuill warres of Nature must needs be subiect to deuouring miserie. These are the strange effects of colld and Earthquakes, not strange in Chili, where we are now arriued. The people are fierce and cruell, and some (as is reported) Giants. Almagro, one of the first Conquerours of Peru, in hope of Gold, passed from thence hither: but was deceiued by the Indians which led him the wrong way. In passing the Deserts of Chili, the Aire is so piercing (as before is obserued) [m] that men fall downe dead, or else lose their members suddenly, in manner without feeling. Ierome Costilla the General, one of Acostaes Acquaintance, had lost three or foure toes which fell off without any paine; many of his Armie dyed, whose bodies at his returne he found lying there without stinke or corruption; and one Boy remayned aliue, which had maynteined himselfe by eating Horse-flesh. The Horses also were found whole, as Apollonius [n] writeth, and the men sitting on them, as if they had beene aliue, with the Bridles in their hand.

In six and thirty degrees is that famous Valley of Arauco, which defend their persons and freedome, maugre all the force and furie of the Spaniards. [o] These killed two of Sir Francis Drakes men, and wounded himselfe: they destroyed also three and twenty Hollanders, of the company of Cordes: both which they did in detestation of the [p] Spaniards, of whom they esteemed the English and Dutch, because of their Apparell. They haue destroyed many of the Spaniards: they tooke the City Baldiuia in the yeere 1599. and slue the Spaniards. Twice before, if not oftner, they had burnt and spoyled it. Yea, Baldiuia himselfe, the first Conquerour of Chili (for Almagro stayed not) and of whom that Citie receiued name, was taken by these Indians, his Horse being slaine vnder him. They bid him feare nothing, hee should haue Gold enough: and making a great Banquet for him, brought in the last seruice, which was a Cup full of molten Gold, which they forced him to drinke, saying; Now glut thy selfe with Gold. This Baldiuia had entred Chili with foure hundred Horse, and easily conquered that part which had beene subiect to the Kings of Peru; but the other, which was the richer part, held out. The Spaniards sent them word, they were the Sonnes of God, and came came to teach them the Word of God: and if they would not yeeld to them, they would shoote fire among them. The Indians would try this argument in the field, and there the great Ordnance so well pleaded the cause, that they beleeued and subiected themselues. The Spaniards imployed them in the Mynes, whence they gathered such plenty of Gold, that others had twenty thousand, but Baldiuia himselfe had three hundred thousand Pezos by the yeere.

The Indians after, perceiuing the Spaniards to be but mortall men, rebelled: and whereas they had vsed to carry grasse into the Fort for the Spaniards Horses, they conueyed in the same, Weapons, by which meanes being assisted by their fellowes without, they wonne the Fort; and when Baldiuia would haue recouered it, he lost himselfe, as you haue heard.

Euer since, q this hostility hath continued, and the Araucans are the Lists and Barres to the Spanish Conquests. Their Countrey (to consider Arauco by it selfe) is but small, about twenty leagues in length: neither could the Inguas or Kings of Peru conquer it: their manner of Warre is much like the Christians, in pitched Battels placing their Bowmen among their rankes of Pikemen. To speake of other Townes which the Spaniards haue built in this Coast, is not our purpose. When they sacked Baldiuia, Anno 1599. they feasted the Spaniards with the like golden Cups powred hot downe their throats: they r cut off the Images heads, triumphing ouer the Spaniards Gods as they termed them. They were then at the siege of Imperiall, another Spanish Citie, hauing before taken Baldiuia. They plucke out the hearts of the Spaniards which they kill, and drinke in their skuls.

Lately the Hollanders haue not only taken the Bay and Towne of All Saints, on the Easterne shore of Brasil, but are also reported to haue done much harme to the Spaniards in Peru, the particulars whereof partly I haue expressed in the second part of my Pilgrimes after the Relation of the Amboyna Tragedy, partly haue left to more full discouery by Time the Mother of Truth.

Likewise since the last Edition of this Worke, that Expedition of Mayre and Schouten round about the Globe hath beene published (and in the second Booke of my Pilgrimes is extant) in which the Coasts of Terra Australis are best notified. But let (mee giue the Reader warning that Sir Francis Drake had discouered those Straits in 57. being forced by tempest out of the South Sea thorow them: and named that Elizabeths Iland in Anno 1578. which these Hollanders called Barneuelts, as in an old Map in his Maiesties priuy Gallery, dedicated to Queene Elizabeth is yet to be seene.

Of the Conqueste of Peru by the Spaniards, and of their Ingua's or Emperours.

§. I.

Of PIZARRO, his Discouery, and taking the King of Peru.

Francis Pizarro s was the Bastard sonne of Gonzallo, a Captaine in the Kingdome of Nauarre: he was borne at Trusiglio, and exposed at the Church doore; and none being found that would giue him the brest, he was nourished by sucking a Sow for certaine dayes: at last his Father acknowledged him, and when hee was growne, set him to keepe his Swine; which being one day strayed and lost, hee durst not returne home for feare, and therefore went to Siuill, and thence passed to the Indies. In this Swinish education hee had not so much as learned to reade. Hee went to Vraua with Alonso de Hoieda; with Valuoa, to the Discouery of the South Sea; and with Pedrarius de Auila, Gouernour of Golden Castile, to Panama. In this Citie were diuers which affected Golden Discoueries. Pedrarius intended Nicaragua; but Diego di Almagro, Hernando Luche, or Luques, a rich Priest, and this Pizarro now growne rich, agreed to ioyne their Purses and best industry to search Southwards, where they had heard was store of wealth. They prouided a Naue, and two hundred and twenty Souldiers, and Almagro with Pizarro, in the yeere 1525. or (as Benzo hath it) 1526. set forward.

Almagro and he parting company, Pizarro, offering to land his men, was wounded and forced to retire to Panama: Almagro in another place had better ſucceſſe, the Indians vſing him kindly, and giuing him three thouſand Ducats of Gold. But ſeeking to land in that place of Pizarro's misfortune, hee was ſet vpon by the Indians, and loſt in fight one of his eyes. They meet at Panama, and hauing cured their wounds, repaire their forces, and with two hundred men, and many ſlaues, ſet ſayle, and land in another place, but are repelled to their ſhips by the Inhabitants, and goe to Gorgon, a little Iland, ſixe miles from the Continent, where Pizarro ſtayed, whiles Almagro went backe for better ſupply. At his returne Pizarro and his company were almoſt ſtarued, but being refreſhed, and all of them now together attempting the Indian ſhore, were repelled with loſſe to the Ile, which they called Galli. Almagro is againe ſent backe for new aide; the Souldiers would haue paſſed with him, and curſed this Land and their Couetouſneſſe. Pizarro and his Company agree to ſearch further, and hauing ſayled fiue hundred miles, came to Chira, a Prouince of Peru, and taking ſome of the Inhabitants to learne them the Spaniſh Tongue, returned to Tumbez.

Hauing learned of the Indians the great wealth of thoſe parts, he ſet one Peter a Candian, on ſhore, who was kindly entertayned of the Gouernour, that ſhewed him a Temple dedicated to the Sunne, wherein were vnſpeakable riches; which when he related to Pizarro at his returne, the Spaniards goe backe with theſe newes to Panama. His two fellowes, Almagro, and the Prieſt (called after the Foole, becauſe he had ſpent his eſtate on this buſineſſe, and at laſt was excluded by his companions) agreed with Pizarro to goe to Spaine to get licenſe for this Conqueſt; and borrowed one thouſand and fiue hundred Ducats, to ſet him forth. Pizarro ſeekes and obtaynes this Faculty onely for himſelfe, neuer mentioning his Partners, and with Letters Patents returneth to Panama with his foure Brethren, Hernando, Gonzalo, Iohn, and Martin di Alcantara his Brother by the Mothers ſide. His two Partners were not a little grieued, when they heard how things paſſed; but after much ſtirre, Almagro and Pizarro became friends, and agreed to communicate Purſes and Titles. Pizarro goes before with a hundred and fiftie Souldiers (taking order that Almagro ſhould follow with all the ſtrength he could make) and Lands in Peru, a Riuer ſo called, which gaue name to thoſe mighty and rich Prouinces, becauſe the Spaniards by this way diſcouered them. They went by land, enduring much miſery by the way to Coach, where they were well refreſhed. But a diſeaſe worſe then the French Poxe there warred vpon them, called Pori. Yet did Pizarro hold on his reſolution; he paſſed ouer to Puna, where the Gouernour intreated the Spaniards well, till the abuſing of their Wiues cauſed the Indians to take Armes, and ſo made their riches become a prey to the preuayling Spaniards.

Peru why ſo called.

There had Pizarro the firſt intelligence of Atabaliba. The Gouernour of this Iland, to ſatisfie his iealouſie, cut off the Noſes, the Members, and the Armes of his Eunuches, or Keepers of his women. Pizarro ſent to Tumbez ſixe hundred Priſoners, which the Gouernour of this Land had taken of the party of Atabaliba, who at that time mayntained Warre againſt his Brother Guaſcar about the Souereigntie, and this Gouernour had taken Guaſcars part. This ciuill diſcord was much to the Spaniards aduantage.

Pizarro [x] ſent three Meſſengers to Tumbez to demand peace and ſafe entrance, but they (notwithſtanding the freedome of their Captiues) deliuered them to the Prieſts to bee ſacrificed to their Idoll of the Sunne. Hee taketh Tumbez and ſacketh the Temple and Citie.

From thence he proceeded in his way to Caximalca: and Guaſcar ſent ſome vnto him with great promiſes to demand his aide againſt his Brother Atabaliba: ſoone after Atabaliba ſent one to him, to charge him to returne to his ſhips. Pizarro anſwereth, That hee came not to hurt any, but for their good, as his Emperour had giuen him in charge; nor could he now, (being the Embaſſadour of the Pope and Emperour, Lords of the World) returne without great diſhonour, before he had ſeene his Royall perſon, and communicated to him ſuch inſtructions as might be good for his body and ſoule.

As he paſſed the Prouince of Chira, the Lords thereof prouoked him againſt Atabaliba, who had lately conquered their Countries. And on the Riuer of Chira hee founded the Colonie of Saint Michael, for the ſafe keeping of his ſpoyles, and for his ſhips. Hee marcheth on to Caximalca, and ſendeth Meſſengers on horſe-back, to giue him notice of his comming. This ſtrange Beaſt made the Indians afraid, but Atabaliba was nothing mooued therewith more mooued to ſee thoſe bearded men giue him ſo little reuerence.

Atabaliba ſent Pizarro a paire of ſhooes, cut and gilded, that (as hee pretended) he might know him: others thought, that hee might bee knowne and deſigned to impriſonment or ſlaughter.

The next day the King was carried, as in ſolemne triumph, vpon mens ſhoulders, garded with fiue and twentie thouſand Indians in rich pompe and magnificence. Vincentius de de Valle Viridi, a Dominican * Frier, holding in one hand a Crosse, in the other his Breuiarie, or (as some say) a Bible, came before him with great reuerence, and blessing him with the Crosse, said: Excellent Lord, it behoueth you to know, that God in Trinity and Vnity made the World of nothing, and formed a man of the Earth, whom hee called Adam; of whom wee all haue beginning. Adam sinned against his Creator by disobedience, and in him all his Posteritie, except Iesus Christ: who being God, came downe from Heauen, and tooke flesh of the Virgin Mary; and to redeeme Mankind, dyed on a Crosse like to this (for which cause wee worship it;) rose againe the third day, & after forty dayes ascended into Heauen, leauing for his Vicar in Earth Saint Peter, and his Successours, which wee call [a] Popes; who haue [b] giuen to the most puissant King of Spaine, Emperour of the Romans the Monarchy of the World. Obey the Pope, and receiue the faith of Christ; and if yee shall beleeue it most holy, and that most false which yee haue, yee shall doe well; and know, that doing the contrary, we will make warre on you, and will take away and breake your Idols; therefore leaue the deceiueable Religion of your false Gods. This preaching of the Frier might well seeme strange to Atabaliba, which it seemes hee learned of the Mahumetans, and not of the Apostles. He answered, that hee was Free, and would not become tributary to any, nor did acknowledge any greater Lord then himselfe: and for the Emperour, he could be pleased to be the friend of so great a Prince, and to know him: but for the Pope, he would not obey him, which gaue away that which was not his owne, and tooke a Kingdome from him, whom hee had neuer seene. As for Religion, hee liked well his owne, and neyther would nor ought to call it in question, being so ancient and approued; especially seeing Christ dyed, which neuer befell the Sunne or Moone; And how (saith hee) doe you know that the God of the Christians created the World? Frier Vincent answered, That his Booke told it him, and gaue him his Breuiarie. Atabaliba looked on it, and in it, and saying it said no such thing to him, hurled it on the ground. The Frier tooke it vp, and went to Pizarro, crying, Hee hath cast the Gospels to the ground: Reuenge it, O Christians, seeing they will not our friendship, nor our Law: or (to vse the words of a Spanish Captain therepresent in his relation [c] thereof) Come forth, Christians, come forth, and come to these Enemies, Dogs that wil not accept the things of God, and the Cacique hath cast our holy Law to the ground. Francisco di Xeres, who was Pizarroes Secretary, writeth, that the Frier would haue opened the book, because Atabaliba could not, and he in disdain smote him on the arme, and obiected to the Spaniards their abuses, and robbing of his Caciques, saying, hee would not depart thence till all were restored.

Pizarro commanded to bring forth the Standard and the Ordinance: the Horsemen in three Bands assailed Atabaliba's people, and slue many: hee himselfe arriued with his Footmen, which layed about with their Swords: all charged vpon Atabaliba, slaying them which carried him, whose Roome was presently supplyed by other, till at last Pizarro pulled him downe from his Litter by the clothes. All this while not one Indian fought, because they had no commandement; or, as Xeres saith, for feare and amazement to see their Cacique so vsed; [d] and therefore no Spaniard was slaine, and many Indians perished vpon the thrust; for so the Frier had bidden them fight for feare of breaking their Swords: neither were any wounded, but onely Pizarro by one of his owne, thrusting at Atabaliba in his taking, and wounding Pizarro therewith in the arme. Thus are the Indians chased, their King with other great spoyles remayning with the Spaniards: of which Xeres reckoneth 80000. Castilians in hold, and 7000. Markes (euery Marke being eight ounces) in Siluer of the houshold Plate of Atabaliba. And in Caxamalca they rifled houses full vp to the roofe of Garments, besides Armour and Weapons, of which some were Axes and Pole-axes, of Gold and Siluer.

* The Friers preaching. This Oration is expressed more at large by Vega, p.2.l.1.c.22. diuided into two parts. And Philipillus the Interpreter wanting fit words (which the Cusean Language hath not) to expresse his Oration, falsified the sense as by their Quippos hath appeared. So for Trinitie and Vnitie, hee interpreted Foure: for our sinne in Adam, that on a time all men being assembled layed their sinnes on Adam. Nothing of the Diuinitie of Christ but that hee was a great Lord, &c. and that their forces which they threatned were superiour to those of Heauen: as if they had Gods not men to fight against. Whereupon Atabuallpa (so he cals him) fetched a deepe sigh: and after made an answere far differing from this which Authors haue related. But this was written by the Spaniards to the Emperour to cleere themselues which had offered abuse to the Inga: neither would they suffer the truth to be written. His answere hee relateth at large, and is worth reading. The Spaniards weary of his prolixitie, made a rout and tooke him, no man resisting, Miguel Astete laying first hold (but Pizarro carrying the credit, such as it was) his Fringe or Diademe remayned with Astete till 1556. When he restored it to the Inga Sayritupac. The Frier was after a Bishop and lastly slaine by the Indians.

b This hee spake according to the Bul of Alexander the Sixt, which had giuen the Southerne and Western world to the Spanish Kings. The hornes of the Bull, and not of the Lambe, are the Popish weapons.

c Rel. della conq. del Perù ap. Ram. tom. 3. Xeres ibid.

d Vega saith, Atabuallpa forbad them whose command was a Religion to them, & death to transgresse: and there perished 5000. of which 3500. Souldiers, others of all ages and both Sexes which had come in great multitudes to heare and solemnize this Embassage of them which they tooke for Gods.

§. II.

The huge Treasures taken by the Spaniards.

THE next day the Spaniards scowred about for spoyle, and found fiue thousand Women of the Kings with much treasure. Atabaliba was much grieued with his imprisonment, especially in regard of the chaine which they put vpon him.[a] And when they had spent much reasoning about his ransome, a Souldier named Soto (of whom you haue heard in our History of Florida) said vnto him, Wilt thou giue vs this house full of Gold and Siluer thus high[b]? lifting vp his Sword, and making a stroke vpon the wall. Atabaliba answered, that if they would giue him liberty to send into his Kingdome, he would fulfill their demand. Whereat the Spaniards much maruelling, gaue him three monethes time; but he had filled the house in two moneths and a halfe: a matter scarce credible, yet most true: For I (saith Lopez Vaz) know aboue twenty men that were there at that time, who all affirme, that it was aboue[c] ten Millions of Gold and Siluer. That Spanish Captaine in Ramusius relateth, that he promised to giue them so much Gold as should reach vp to that marke, a span higher then a tall man could reach, the Roome being fiue and twenty foote long, and fifteene wide: and the Gouernour asking how much Siluer he would giue; he answered, he would fill vp an inclosure which should be made there, with Vessels of Plate, for his ransome, which was promised him. This Captaine was appointed Guardian of that Golden roome, and saw it melted, and reckoneth vp the parcels and particulars that were brought in Vessels and Plates of Gold and Siluer. And the Gouernour sent to the Emperor his fift part, & parted the rest; to euery[d] Footman 4800. pieces of Gold (which make 7208. Duckets) to euery Horseman twice as much, besides the aduantages that belonged to any: To Almagros company (which were 150. that came after the victory) hee gaue 25000. Pezos, and gaue 2000. to the Inhabitants of Saint Michel. Many other gifts hee gaue to Merchants and others: and yet after the Gouernour was gone, there was brought more Gold then that which had beene shared. This also is affirmed by Xeres, that ten or twelue dayes after Pizarro was gone, the Spaniards which had beene sent to Cusco, brought as much Gold (which was taken from the wals of a House, and Roofe of a Temple in Cusco, being Plates of ten or twelue pound weight a piece, and other like) as amounted to two Millions and a halfe, and being molten, proued on Million 326539. Pezos of fine Gold; and 51610. Markes of Siluer. He addeth that Atabaliba was by sound of Trumpet freed from his promise; but was kept still vnder guard for the Spaniards securitie.

Howbeit they killed him notwithstanding,[e] and in a night strangled him. But God the righteous Iudge, seeing this villanous act, suffered none of those Spaniards to die by the course of Nature, but brought them to euill and shamefull ends.

During the time of Atabalibas[f] imprisonment, his Captaines had taken his Brother Guascar, who spake with Captaine Soto, and promised, that if they would restore him to his liberty, and to his Kingdome, he would fill vp the roome at Caximalca to the Roofe, which was thrice as much as Atabaliba had promised: and added that his Father Guaynacapa on his death-bed had commanded him to be friend to the white and bearded men, which should come and rule in those parts. Atabaliba hearing of these things, fained himselfe sorrowfull for the death of Guascar, whom he had heard that Quisquiz his Captaine had slaine: this hee did, to try how the Spaniards would take his death; which when hee saw they little respected, hee sent and caused him to bee slaine indeed. This was done in the yeere of our Lord God 1533. He had before slaine another of his Brethren and drunke in his Skull, as hee had sworne to deale with Atabaliba.

The Indians hereupon hid the Treasures of Gold, Siluer, and Gemmes, that were in Cusco and other places, and had belonged to Guaynacapa, which were far more then euer came to the Spaniards hands. Chilicuchima, one of Atabalibas chiefe Captaines, which visited him in his imprisonment with great reuerence (for hee and the chiefe of his company laid burdens on their shoulders, and so entred into his presence, lifting vp both his hands to the Sunne, with thankes to him for this sight of his Lord, and then with much crouching, kissed his hands and feet) told the Spaniards, that Quisquiz[h] another chiefe Captaine had conueyed away those Treasures of Guaynacapa, or Cusco, the elder, as hee cals him: and being forced by torments of fire put to him,[i] confessed where Atabaliba had a Tent full of Plate and Treasure. The Spanish Captaine which reports this, saith, that he saw a great house full of Vessels of Gold, and other pieces (as a Shepherd and his Sheepe all of Gold as great as the liuing) which were not shared amongst them: and he saw 10080. Pezos of the Emperours fifth part, ouer and aboue that which Pizarro sent by his Brother; so that both Cesar and Souldier were deceiued. He heard Atabaliba say, that in an Iland in a Riuer of Collas was a very, very great Houſe all couered with Gold, and the beames with all whatſoeuer in the houſe, was couered with plates of Gold, yea, and the pauement alſo. But in ſuch a diuided State, where were ſo many Indian Captaines of the Two Brethren Inguas, the Spaniards being but a handfull, and iealous of each other, the Countrey being ſo wide and rich, that they could not ſo much as ſee and take view of the ſame in ſhort ſpace: there was eaſie opportunitie offered to conuey away the greateſt part of their Treaſures: eſpecially Religion adding a helping hand both to conuey and to conceale from them which thus ſpoyled their Temples, Idols, and Altars. Caſtilians or Pezos for a Horſe 60. for a ſmall Rundlet of Wine; forty for a paire of ſhooes; likewiſe a Sword, and other things after the ſame rate: and Debters ſought out their Creditors, with Indians laden with Gold, from houſe to houſe to pay them: They carried into Spaine one Veſſell of Gold, another of Siluer, each ſufficient wherein to boyle a Kow, beſides a huge Eagle, and other like Images, as an Idoll of Gold as bigge as a Childe of foure yeeres old: Drums of Gold: and at the conqueſt of Cuſco, Xeres tels of many Images of women of Gold, and as great, which they worſhipped, and diuers like of Siluer; Sheepe alſo in like pourtrature, of fine Gold; all well wrought.

The Kings of Peru, their originall proceedings and treaſures.

THe quarrell betweene the two Brethren, grew about their Inheritance: Guaſcar ſucceeding his Father in the reſt; and Quito being aſſigned to Atabaliba, who ſeizing on Tumebamba, a rich Prouince, prouoked his Brothers forces againſt him, which tooke him priſoner. But he eſcaping to Quito, made the people beleeue that the Sun had turned him into a Serpent, and ſo he eſcaped thorow a hole in the Priſon: and on conceit of this miracle drew them into armes againſt Guaſcar, with which hee made ſuch ſlaughter of his Enemies, that to this day there are great heapes of bones of the ſlaine: he ſlue 60000. of the Canari, deſtroyed Tumebamba, and conquered as farre as Tumbez and Caximalca: hee ſent a great Army with Quiſquiz and Calicucima, two valiant Captaines, with ſuch ſucceſſe as you haue heard, againſt Guaſcar, whom they tooke, and by his direction ſlue.

Gomara attributeth the death of Atabaliba to Philippillus the Spaniſh Interpreter, who to enioy one of his Wiues, accuſed him of conſpiracie againſt the Spaniards; but Benzo [l] with more likelihood affirmeth, that Pizarro from his firſt taking had intended it. For hee might haue ſent him into Spaine as Atabaliba requeſted, if he had feared ſuch ſecret practices: but his requeſt and purgation were reiected, and foure Negro's which hee vſed for that purpoſe, ſtrangled him at his command. He had many Wiues, whereof the chiefe was his Siſter, named Pagba. He ſeeing the glaſſes of Europe, maruelled much (as before is ſaid) that they hauing ſo faire a thing, would go ſo farre for Gold. His Murtherers dyed the like bloudie ends; Almagro was executed by Pizarro; and he ſlaine by young Almagro; and him, Vacca de Caſtra did likewiſe put to death. Iohn Pizarro was ſlaine of the Indians. Martin another of the Brethren was ſlaine with Francis. Ferdinandus was impriſoned in Spaine, and his end vnknowne; Gonzales was done to death by Gaſca. Soto dyed of thought in Florida; and Ciuill Warres ate vp the reſt in Peru.

Before the times of the Ingua's, their Gouernment [m] in theſe parts was (as ſtill it is in Arauco, and the Prouinces of Chili) by Cominalties, or the aduice of many. The Gouernment of the Ingua's continued betweene three and foure hundred yeeres, although for a long time their Signorie was not aboue fiue or ſixe leagues compaſſe about the Citie of Cuſco, where the originall of their conqueſts began, and extended from Paſto to Chili, almoſt 1000 leagues in length, betweene the Andes and the South Sea.

[m] Acoſt. l. 6. c. 19. 20. 21. 22.

The Canaries were their mortall Enemies, and fauoured the Spaniards, and at this day if they fall to compariſons, whether the Ingua's or Canari were the more valiant, they will kill one another by thouſands, as hath hapned in Cuſco. The practice which they vſed to make themſelues Lords, was a fiction, that ſince the generall Deluge (whereof all the Indians haue knowledge) the World had beene preſerued, peopled and reſtored by them: and that ſeuen of them came out of the Caue of Pacaricambo, and that they alſo were the Authors of the true Religion. The firſt of theſe Ingua's was Mangocapa, which came out of the Caue of Tambo, ſix leagues from Cuſco. Of him came two Families, the Hanancuſco, of whom came theſe Lords; and the Vrincuſco: Ingaroca the firſt Lord was no great Lord, but was ſerued in Veſſels of Gold and Siluer. And dying, he appointed that all his treaſure ſhould be employed for the ſeruice of his bodie, and for the feeding of his Family. His Succeſſor did the like:

and this grew to a generall custome, that no Ingua might inherit his Fathers goods; He builc a new Palace.

Their Kings.

In the time of Ingaroca, the Indians had Images of Gold. Yaguaraguaque succeeded Virococha, the next successor was very rich. Gonzale Pizarro with cruell torments forced the Indians to confesse where his body was, for the report of the treasures buried with him: the body he burnt, and the Indians reserued and worshipped the ashes. They tooke it ill that this Ingua called himselfe Viracocha, which is the name of their God; but hee to satisfie them, said, that Viracocha appeared to him in a Dreame, and commanded him to take his name.

n Gom. c. 120. Mariana lib. 26. Guaynacapa propheſied by reuelation of his Oracles of the comming of bearded men, commanding at his death that they should yeeld subiection to them, hauing a better law, customes, &c. then they: as Atahuallpa in his answer to Valle viridi his oration *ap. Pachacuti Ingua Tupangui succeeded him, who was a great Conquerour, Politician, and Author of their Ceremonies; he raigned 70. yeeres, and fained himselfe sent of Viracocha, to establish his Religion and Empire.

After him followed Guaynacapa the Father of Guascar and Atabaliba, which brought this Empire to the greatest height. The Indians opened him after his decease, leauing his heart and entrailes in Quito, the body was carried to Cusco, and placed in the Temple of the Sunne. He was worshipped of his Subiects for a God, being yet aliue, which was not done to any of his Predecessors. When he dyed, they slue a thousand persons of his household, to serue him in the other life, all which dyed willingly for his seruice, insomuch that many offered themselues to death, besides such as were appointed. His treasure was admirable. Hee vsed alwayes to haue with him many Oregiuni, which were his men of Warre, and ware shooes and feathers, and other signes of Nobilitie: he was serued of the eldest Sonnes and Heires of all his chiefe Subiects, euery one clothed after his owne Countrey Rite; he had many Counsellours and Courtiers in differing degrees of honour. Euery one at his entrance into the Palace put off his shooes, and might not looke him in the face when they spake to him.

p His Son Sayri Tupac was baptised by the name of Diego Amaru was his Brother.

All the Vessels of his House, Table, and Kitchin, were of Gold and Siluer, and the meanest of Siluer and Copper for strength and hardnesse of Metall. He had in his Wardrobe hollow Statues, which seemed Gyants, and were of Gold: and the figures in proportion and bignesse of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, and Herbs, in his Kingdome, and of the Fishes likewise. He had Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, and Chests, of Gold and Siluer: heapes of Billets of Gold, that seemed Wood cut out for the fire. There was nothing in his Kingdome, but he had the counterfeit in Gold. Yea they say, That the Ingua's had a Garden of pleasure in an Iland neer Puna, which had all kind of Garden herbs, flowres, and trees of Gold and Siluer. He had also an infinite quantitie of Siluer and Gold wrought in Cusco, which was lost by the death of Guascar, which the Indians concealed (as is said) from the Spaniards. Xeres saith, hee had three houses full of pieces of Gold, and fiue full of Siluer: and a 100000. Plates or Tiles of Gold, euery of which weighed fifty Castlins. What honors were done to him after his death, appeares by that his golden Temple or Chappell where he was buried, where hee had continuall attendance of Dancers and Musicians, and such as stood with Fans to scarre away the Flyes. When any came to see the Cacique, they came first to performe their Ceremonies to this Image. He had 200. children by diuers women. Acosta o sayth, That he had (descended from his owne loynes) aboue 300. children and grand children.

q One of which hath written a generall History of the Indies in two parts: in the former of the Peruuian Antiquities & Acts: in the later of the Spanish: viz. Garcilasso de la Vega Naturall of Cusco: his Mother was Palla Isabel daughter of Huallpa Topac Inga, one of the Sons of Topac Inga Yupangui and of Palla Mama Ocllo his lawfull wife, His Father was Garcilasso de la Vega one of the Conquerors of Peru, a Captaine, who went thither with Pedro de Aluarado 1531. and there continued till his death 1559. Francisco de Toledo being Viceroy entred Processe against the Ingas and all the Mestizos of that bloud: but would not execute them. Instead whereof he sent and dispersed them (lest by their Fathers conquests or mothers bloud they should challenge that Empire) into Chili, Pinama, New Granada, Nicaragua, and into Spaine. 36. Indians of that bloud they sent to Ley Reyes there to remayne, of which 35. dyed in little more then two yeares with griefe, &c. Others also elsewhere dyed. Don Carlos had a Son in Spaine which there dyed 1610. of griefe: and soone after a little Infant which he left, and so all Guaynacapas propheſie touching his Posterity was accomplished. In Mexico they tooke not that course, because the Kingdome passed by Election, not Succession. The present Inga they presently sentenced to lose his head: who desired to be sent into Spaine, protesting his innocency; & that if his Father could do nothing against 200. Spaniards in Cusco with 200000. Indians, what could they feare of him so poore? He appealed to the King and to Pachacamac: was baptised also by the name of Philip his Inga as he called him: moued pitie in the Spaniards, who would haue besought for him to be sent into Spaine, there to remayne exiled, but might not be suffered on paine of death to speake to the Viceroy. Thus was Amaru or Philip brought forth on a Mule, his hands fastned (the Cryer proclayming him a Tyrant and Traytor) with a halter about his necke. 300000. were gathered together in the streets and wayes to this sad spectacle with much teares and cryes, the Priests desired him to enioyne them silence, whereupon hee lifted vp his hand, and laying it on his eare, and thence by degrees to his thigh, there followed such silence as if there had not beene a man in the Citie. And thus with protestation of his innocencie hee sustayned their crueltie with great magnanimitie: the last of that race, which had continued as Blas Valera reckons almost 600. yeeres in that Soueraignte. After his death followed that dispersion before related of his children and kindred. The Viceroy returned with 500000. Pezos gotten in his gouernment, which was arrested, and himselfe discountenanced by the King, who told him that he was sent into Peru to serue Kings, not to kill Kings: wherewith agrieued hee dyed in few dayes. Garcia Loyola which tooke Amaru, married his Neece the Daughter of Sayn Tupac, and was made Gouernour of Chili: who one night was slaine with all his Company by the Araucos. He left only one Daughter which was married to Don Iuan Enriquez de Boria in Spaine, whom the King entituled Marquesse of Oropesa a Towne founded by Toledo in Peru.

Family of the Ingua's, which descended of the first Mangocapa called Yincusco, had their successions also and Gouernment; which here to discourse of, were to my proposed scope impertinent. Leauing therefore the Conquerours and Conquest of Peru, let vs consider the Countrey it selfe, with such obseruations as we shall there find touching their Religions.

CHAP. IX.
Of the Countrey of Peru, Naturall, Oeconomicall, and Politicall Obseruations.

§. I.
Of the Scite, Windes, Hils, Plaines, Lakes, Raines, Seasons.

THe Kingdom of Peru extendeth [b] seuen hundred leagues in length, in breadth a hundred in some places, in some threescore, in others fortie: more or lesse, according vnto the difference of places. Quito and Plata are the vtmost Cities thereof, the one bordering on Popayan, the other vpon Chili. It is not heere meant of that spacious Kingdome of the Ingua's, for that reached twelue hundred leagues, whereof this of Peru was but a part. Acosta [c] numbreth diuers strange specialties, excepted from the generall Rules of Natures wonted course.

The first, that it blowes continually on all that Coast with one only winde (and that also differing from that which vsually bloweth betweene the Tropikes) namely, the South and Southwest. The second, that this winde (in other places vnhealthfull) is here so agreeable, that otherwise it could not be habitable. The third, that it neuer Raines, Thunders, Snowes, nor Hailes in all this Coast: And yet (which is a fourth wonder) a little distance from the Coast, it Snowes and Raines terribly. Fifthly, there are two Ridges and Mountaynes, which both runne in one altitude; and the one in view of the other, almost equally, aboue a 1000. leagues: & yet on the one part are great Forrests, and it Raines the greatest part of the yeere, being very hot; the other is all naked, & bare, and very cold. So that Peru is diuided into three parts, which they call Llanos Sierras, and Andes: the first runne alongst the Sea Coast; the Sierras be Hils with some Valleyes; and the Andes bee steepe and craggie Mountaynes. The Llanos or Plaines on the Sea Coast haue ten leagues in breadth, in some parts lesse, and in some a little more. The Sierra contayneth with equall inequalitie twentie leagues: and the Andes as much, sometimes more, and sometimes lesse. They run in length from North to South, and in breadth from East to West: and in this so small a distance it raines almost continually in one place, and neuer in the other: In the Plaines neuer; on the Andes in a maner continually, though somtimes it be more cleere there then other. The Sierra in the midst are more moderate, in which it Raines from September to April, as in Spain, but in the other halfe yeere, when the Sunne is further off, it is more cleere. The Sierras yeeld infinite number of Vicagues, which are like wild Goats; and Pacos, a kinde of sheepe-asses, profitable for fleece and burthen: the Andes yeeld Parrots, Apes, and Monkeyes. Some [d] report that monstrous births doe sometimes proceed (as by Natures vnwilling hand) from the copulation of these Barbarians and these Monkeyes. The Sierre opening themselues, cause Valleyes, where are the best dwellings in Peru, and most plentifull of Maiz and Fruits. It is [e] strange that in the Valley of Pachacama, neyther the higher Element yeeldeth Raine, nor the lower any streame, and yet there is plenty of Roots, Maiz, and Fruits. They haue large and deepe Ditches, in which they sow or set, and that which groweth is nourished with the deaw: and becaufe the Maiz will not grow, except it first die, they set one or two Pilchards heads (which fish they take with their nets very plentifully in the Sea) therewith, and thus it groweth abundantly. The water which they drinke, they draw out of deep pits. [f] Comming from the Mountaines to the Vallyes, they do vsually see (as it were) two Heauens, one cleere and bright, the other obscure, and (as it were) a gray veile spread vnderneath, which couers all the Coast: and although it raines not, yet this mist is wonderfull profitable to bring forth grasse; and to rayse vp and nourish the Seed: and where they haue plenty of water, which they draw from the Pooles and Lakes, yet if this moysture faileth, there followeth great defect of grain. And (which is more worthy of admiration) the dry and barren sands in some places, as in the sandy Mountaine neere the City de los Reyes, are by this dew beautified with grasse & flowres. In some places they water their fields out of the riuers.

Lakes.

Beyond the Citie of Cuſco the two ridges of Mountaynes ſeparate themſelues, and in the middeſt leaue a plaine and large Champaine, which they call the Prouince of Callao, where there are many Riuers and great ſtore of fertile paſtures. There g is alſo the great Lake of Titicaca, which containeth foureſcore leagues in compaſſe, and robbeth ten or twelue great Riuers of their waters, which they were carrying to the Sea, but here are drunke vp (by the way) of this Lake. They ſayle in it with Shippes and Barques. The water is not altogether ſowre nor ſalt, as that of the Sea, but is ſo thicke, that it cannot be drunke. Vpon the Bankes of this Lake are habitations as good as any in Peru. The great Lake paſſeth by a Riuer into a leſſe Lake, called Aulagas, from whence it hath no manner of paſſage, except there be any vnder the Earth. There are many other Lakes in the Mountaines, which ſeeme to ariſe rather from Springs then from Raines or Snowes, and ſome of them yeeld Riuers. At the end of the Valley of Tarapaya neere to Potozi, there is a round Lake, whoſe water is very hot, and yet the Countrey is very cold: they bathe themſelues neere the bankes, for further in it is intolerable. In the middeſt is a boyling aboue twentie foote ſquare: it neuer encreaſeth nor decreaſeth, although they haue drawne from it a great ſtreame for Metall Mils.

g Acoſt. lib. c. 16. Cieza p. 1. c. 103.

No raine: the cauſe.

But to returne from this plenty of water in Lakes, to that want thereof in the Plaines of Peru. The naturall reaſon which ſome yeeld of this want of Raine, is, partly their ſandie and dry qualitie, which of themſelues can yeeld no further exhalations, then to produce thoſe miſts or deawes: partly the height of the Hils, which ſhadow the Plaines, and ſuffer no wind to blow from the Land vpon them, but intercept them wholly with their vapours and Cloudes; ſo that their winde is onely from the Sea, which finding no oppoſite, doth not preſſe nor ſtraine forth the vapours which riſe to engender Raine. This ſeemeth the rather to be probable, for that it raines vpon ſome ſmall Hils along the Coaſt which are leaſt ſhadowed. In the ſame Coaſt alſo, where the Eaſterly or Northerly winds be ordinary, it raineth as in Guayaquill. The South winde in other places is h accounted a cauſer of Raine, which here reigneth without rayning.

h Tellus Nubibus aſſiduis pluuiaque madeſcit ab Auſtro. Ouid.

As ſtrange is the difference of ſeaſons, after the Indians account. For in the i Sierras their Summer beginneth in Aprill, and endeth with September: October beginneth their Winter, which not the abſence, but the preſence of the Sunne doth cauſe. Contrariwiſe in the Plaines, iuſt by in ſite, they haue their Summer from October to Aprill, the reſt their Winter. (The like is noted in the Eaſt Indies at the Hils of Balegate, where that Ridge parteth Winter and Summer in the ſame neerneſſe to the Sunne, at the ſame time, and a few miles diſtant.)

i Cieza c. 59.

The Raines in the Hils are cauſe why they call it Winter, and the deawes or myſts in the Plaines, ſo that when the Raines fall moſt in the Hils, it is cleere weather in the Plaines, and when the deaw falleth in the Plaines, it is cleere on the Hils: and thus it commeth to paſſe, that a man may trauell from Winter to Summer in one day, hauing Winter to waſh him in the morning, and ere night a cleere and dry Summer to ſcorch him. Yea in ſome places (ſayth Alexandro Urſino) within ſixe miles ſpace both heate and cold are intolerable, and enough to kill any man. From Saint Helen to Copiapo it neuer raineth, which Coaſt extends forty miles, in ſome places fiftie, in breadth, and twelue hundred leagues in length.

§. II.

Of the firſt Inhabitants, their Quippos, Arts, Marriages.

k Cieza c. 25.

ABout the point of Saint Helena in Peru, they k tell that ſometimes there liued Giants of huge ſtature, which came thither in Boates, the compaſſe of their knee was as much as of another mans middle: they were hated of the people, becauſe that vſing their women they killed them, and did the ſame to the men for other l cauſes. Theſe Giants were addicted to Sodomie, and therefore as the Indians report, were deſtroyed with fire from Heauen. Whether this be true or no, in thoſe parts are found huge and Giantlike bones. Cieza writes that Iohn di Holmos at Porto Vieio digged and found teeth three fingers broad, and foure long. Contrariwiſe, in the Valley of Chincha m they haue a Tradition that the Progenitors of the preſent Inhabitants deſtroyed the native people, which were not aboue two Cubits high, and poſſeſſed their roomes: in teſtimonie whereof they alledge alſo that bone-argument.

l The like doth Apolodorus, and the Poets tell of Typhon, and other Giants. Ap. de Ded. Origi. l. 1. & Hyginus fab. 152.

m Cieza c. 74.

Concerning the Indians conceit of their own originall: we haue mentioned their opinion of of a floud, and the repeopling of the World by them, which came out of a Caue. They haue another Legend, that all men being drowned, there came out of the great Lake Titicaca, one Virococha, which stayed in Tiaguanaco, where at this day is to bee seene the ruines of very ancient and strange buildings, and from thence came to Cusco, and so beganne Mankinde to multiply. They shew in the same Lake a small Iland, where they faine that the Sunne hid himselfe, and so was preserued: [o] and for this reason they made great Sacrifices vnto him in this place, both of Sheepe and Men. They held this place sacred, and the Inguas built there a Temple to the Sunne, and placed there Women and Priests with great treasures.

[o] Cieça.p.2. c.103.

Some [p] learned men are of opinion, that all which the Indians make mention of is not aboue foure hundred yeeres; which may bee imputed to their want of writing. In stead of writing they vsed their Quippos. These Quippos are Memorials or Registers made of cords, in which there are diuers knots and colours, signifying diuers things: these were their Bookes of Histories, of Lawes, Ceremonies, and accounts of their affaires. There were officers appointed to keepe them, called Quipocamayos, which were bound to giue account of things as Notaries and Registers. They had according to the diuersitie of businesse, sundry cords and branches, in euery of which were so many knots little and great, and strings tyed to them, some red, some greene, and in such varietie, that euen as wee deriue an infinite number of words from the Letters of the Alphabet, so doe they from these kinds and colours. And at this day they will keepe account exactly with them. I did see (sayth Acosta) a handfull of these strings, wherein an Indian woman did carrie (as it were) written a generall confession of all her life, and thereby confessed herselfe, as well as I could haue done in written paper, with strings for the circumstances of the sinnes. They haue also certaine wheeles of small stones, by meanes whereof they learne all they desire by heart. Thus you shall see them learne the Pater-noster, Creed, and the rest: and for this purpose they haue many of these wheeles in their Church-yards. They haue another kinde of Quippos, with grains of Mays, with which they wil cast hard accounts, which might trouble a good Arithmetician with his Pen in the Diuisions. They were no lesse wittie, [q] if not more, in things whereto they apply themselues, then the men of these parts. They taught their young children all Arts necessary to the life of men, euery one learning what was needfull for his person and family, and not appropriating himselfe to one profession; as with vs, one is a Tayler, another a Weauer, or of other Trade. Euery man was his owne Weauer, Carpenter, Husbandman, and the like. But in other Arts, more for ornament then necessitie, they had Gold-smiths, Painters, Potters, and Weauers of curious workes for Noblemen, and so of the rest. No man might change the fashion vsed in his owne Countrey, when hee went into another, that all might be knowne of what Countrey they were.

[p] Acost. ibid.

Quippos.

[q] Id. ibid. c.16.

For their Marriages, they had many Wiues, but one was principall, which was wedded with Solemnitie, and that in this sort: The Bridegroome went to the Brides House, and put Ottoya, which was an open Shooe, on her foot: this, if shee were a Mayd, was of wooll, otherwise, of Reeds, and this done, he led her thence with him. If she committed Adulterie, shee was punished with death: when the Husband dyed, shee carried a mourning Weed of blacke a yeere after, and might not marry in that time, which befell not the other Wiues. The Ingua himselfe with his own hand gaue this woman to his Gouernours and Captaines, and the Gouernours assembled all the young men and Mayds in one place of the Citie, where they gaue to euery one his Wife, with the aforesaid Ceremonie in putting on the Ottoya: the other Wiues did serue and honour this. None might marry with his Mother, Daughter, Grandmother or Grand-childe: and Yupanqui, the Father of Guaynacapa was the first Ingua that married his Sister, and confirmed his fact by a Decree, that the Inguas might doe it, commanding his owne children to doe it, permitting the Noblemen also to marrie their Sisters by the Father side. Other Incest, and Murther, Theft, and Adulterie were punished with death. Such as had done good seruice in warre, were rewarded with Lands, Armes, Titles of honour, and Marriage in the Inguas Linage.

They had Chasquis or Posts in Peru, which were to carrie tidings or Letters: for which purpose they had houses a league and a halfe asunder, and running each man to the next, they would runne fifty leagues in a day and night. Posts.

§. III.

The Regall Rites, Rights, Workes, and of RVMINAGVI and ALVARADO.

When the Ingua was dead, his lawfull heire borne of his chiefe Wife succeeded. And if the King had a legitimate Brother, he first inherited, and then the Sonne of the first. Hee inherited not the goods (as is sayd already) but they were wholly dedicated to his Oratorie or Guaca, and for the mayntenance of the Family he left: which, with his Off-spring, was alway busied at the Sacrifices, Ceremonies, and Seruice of the deceased King: for being dead, they presently held him for a God, making Images and Sacrifices to him. The Ensigne of Royaltie was a Red Rowle of Wooll finer then Silke, which hung on his forehead, which was a Diadem that none else might weare in the middest of their forehead; at the eare the Noblemen men might. When they tooke this Roll, they made their Coronation Feast, and many Sacrifices with a great quantitie of vessels of Gold, and Siluer, and many Images in the forme of Sheepe of Gold and Siluer, and a thousand others of diuers colours. Then the chiefe Priest tooke a young Child in his hand of the age of sixe or eight yeeres, pronouncing these words with the other Ministers to the Image of Viracocha: Lord, wee offer this vnto thee, that thou mayest mayntaine vs in quiet, and helpe vs in our Warres: mayntaine our Lord the Ingua in his Greatnesse and estate, that hee may alway increase: giuing him much knowledge to gouerne vs. There were present at this Ceremonie, men of all parts of the Realme, and of all Guacas and Sanctuaries. It is not found that any of the Inguas Subiects euer committed Treason against him. Hee placed the Gouernours in euery Prouince, some greater, and some smaller. The Inguas thought it a good rule of State to keepe their Subiects alway in action, and therefore there are seene to this day long Causeys of great labour, diuiding this large Empire into foure parts.

Hauing conquered a Prouince, they presently reduced them into Townes and Communalties, which were diuided into Bands: one was appointed ouer tenne, another ouer a hundred, and another ouer a thousand, and ouer tenne thousand another. Aboue all, there was in euery Prouince a Gouernour of the House of the Inguas, to whom the rest gaue accounts of, what had passed, and who were either borne or dead. At the Feast called Raymer, the Gouernours brought the Tribute of the whole Realme to the Court at Cusco. All the Kingdome [r] was diuided into foure parts, Chinchasuyo, Collosuyo, Andesuyo, and Condesuyo, according to the foure wayes which went from Cusco, East, West, North and South.

[r] Cieza pag. 1. cap. 29.

When [f] the Ingua conquered a Citie, the Land was diuided into three Parts, the first for Religion, euery Idoll and Guaca hauing his peculiar Lands appropriated to their Priests and Sacrifices; and the greatest part thereof was spent in Cusco, where was the Generall and Metropolitan Sanctuary, the rest in that Citie where it was gathered, which all had Guacas, after the fashion of Cusco, some being thence distant two hundred leagues. That which they reapt on the Land, was put into Store-houses built for that purpose.

[f] Acost. l. 6. c. 15

The second part of that diuision was for the Ingua for the mayntenance of his Court, Kinsmen, Noblemen, and Souldiers: which they brought to Cusco, or other places where it was needfull.

The third part was for the Communaltie for the nourishment of the people, no particular man possessing any part hereof in proper. As the Family encreased or decreased, so did the portion. Their Tribute was to till and husband the Lands of the Ingua, and the Guacas, and lay it vp in Store-houses, being for that time of their labour nourished out of the same lands. The like distribution was made of the Cattel to the same purposes, as that of the lands, and of the wooll, and other profits that thence arose. The old men, women and sicke folkes were reserued from this Tribute. They payed other Tributes also, euen whatsoeuer the Ingua would choose out of euery Prouince. The Chicas sent sweete Woods; the Lucanas, Brancars to carrie his Litter; the Chumtilbicas, Dancers: others were appointed to labour in the Mines: and all were slaues to the Ingua. Some hee employed in building of Temples, Fortresses, Houses, or other Workes, as appeareth by the remnants of them, where are found stones of such greatnesse, that men cannot conceiue how they were cut, brought and layed in their places, they hauing no Iron or Steele to cut, Engines to carrie, nor Morter to lay them: and yet they were so cunningly layed, that one could not see the ioynts. Some of eight and thirtie foot long, sayth Acosta, eight broad, and sixe thicke. I measured; and in the walles of Cusco are bigger; none so little (sayth Sancho) in some buildings there, as three Carts might carrie, and some thirty spannes square. Iohn Ellis which lately was there, sayth some of them are twentie tunne weight, strangely ioyned without morter.

They built a Bridge at Chiquitto, the Riuer being so deepe, that it will not admit Arches: they fastened bundles of Reedes and Weedes, which being light, will not sinke, which they fasten to eyther side of the Riuer, they make it passable for man and beast: it is three hundred foot long. Cusco [t] their chiefe Citie standeth in seuenteene degrees: it is subiect to cold and Snow, the Houses are of great and square stone. It was besieged by Soto, and by Pizarro, and by him entred, where they found more treasure then they had by the imprisonment of Atabaliba. Quito [u] is said to haue beene as rich as Cusco. Hither Ruminagui fled with fiue thousand Souldiers, when Atabaliba his Master was taken by the Spaniards, and slue Illescas his Brother, that withstood his Tyrannicall proceedings, flayed him, and made a Drumme of his skinne; slue two thousand Souldiers that brought the bodie of Atabaliba, to Quito to be interred, hauing in shew of Funerall pompe and honour, before, made them drunke; and with his Forces scoured the Prouince of Tumebamba: hee killed many of his Wiues for smiling, when hee told them they should haue pleasure with the bearded men, and burnt the Wardrobe of Atabaliba: that when the Spaniards came and entred Quito, which had almost dispeopled Panama, Nicaragua, Cartagena, and other their Habitations in hope of Peruuian spoyles, they found themselues disappointed of their expected prey, and in anger set fire on the Towne. Aluarado with like newes came from Guatimala into those parts, with foure hundred Spaniards, but was forced to kill his Horse, to feede his famished Company (although at that time Horses were worth in Peru aboue a thousand Ducats apiece) was almost killed with thirst, was assaulted [x] with showres of Ashes, which the hote Vulcane of Quito dispersed two hundred and fortie myles about (with terrible Thunders and Lightnings, which Pluto had seemed to steale from Iupiter, and here to vent them) and after with Snowes on the colde Hils, which exacted seuenty Spaniards for Tribute in the passage, found many men sacrificed by the Inhabitants, but could finde no Gold, till Pizarro bought his departure with an hundred thousand Duckets. Hee gaue, Thankes, (hee sayd) to God for his deliuerance, by that Tract, by which hee had passed, to the Deuill. This was hee that afterward being bruised with the fall of his Horse, (whereof hee dyed) and asked where hee was most pained, sayd, in his Soule, as guilty to himselfe of his former cruelties and couetousnesse. This is the profit of vnsanctified and ill-sanctified Gold: the one whereof we see in these Peruuian Temples thus spoyled by the Spaniards, who (in the other respect) were more spoyled by this spoyle and purchase. What golden dayes these were to the Spaniards, this History in diuers places sheweth. From one Palace of Cusco (sayth Xeres) they tooke seuen hundred plates of Gold, each whereof weighed fiue hundred Castlins: from another House the weight of two hundred thousand. Two Houses of Gold hee speakes of, the very thatch being counterfeit in Gold, the strawes with the eares artificially wrought. But euery where are these Relations wrought and embrodered with Cusco Gold. Aluarados Armie, which he brought into Peru, had perished, as Cieza relateth, with drought, but for certaine Canes as bigge as a mans legge, which betweene the knots contayned a pottle of water, exstracted from the dewes: for there fell no raine in those parts.

Girava sayth that the Inhabitants of Anzerma were in their Warres armed with complete Harnesse of Gold: and that about Quito there were Mynes, whence more Gold was taken then Earth. I tye no mans credit to these reports, but sure it is, that they had these Metals in abundance, which the Spanish warres haue made our European World to feele, more managed and mayntayned by Indian wedges, then Spanish Blades.

But let vs come from their Mynes, to their Minds, which for heauenly things were as full of drosse, as the other were of purer Metals.

CHAP. X.

Of the many Gods of Peru, their opinions of the Creation, Floud, and end of the World.

§. I.

Of their Gods.

THe Peruuians acknowledged a Supreme Lord and Authour of all things, a which they called Viracocha, and gaue him names of great excellencie, as Pachacamac, or Pachayachachic, which is, the Creator of Heauen and Earth, and Vſapu, that is, admirable, and other the like. Him they did worſhip as the chiefeſt of all, and honoured him in beholding the Heauens. Yet had b they no proper name for God, no more then the Mexicans, but ſuch as in this ſort might ſignifie him by his attributes or workes, and therefore are forced to vſe the Spaniſh name Dios. c In the name of Pachacamac, or Creator, they had a rich Temple erected to him, wherein they worſhipped notwithſtanding the Deuill and certaine figures. The name of Viracocha was of the greateſt ſound in their deuotions, and ſo they called the Spaniards, eſteeming them the Sonnes of Heauen. Benzo d alledgeth another cauſe of that name giuen to the Spaniards. It ſignifieth (ſaith he) the froth of the Sea (e Vira is froth, Cochie the Sea) becauſe they thought them ingendred of Sea froth, and nouriſhed therewith, in regard of their couetouſneſſe and crueltie deuouring all things: applying that name to them in reſpect of their wicked practices, and not for Diuine Originall. Yea, they curſe the Sea, which ſent ſuch a curſed brood into the Land. (The Spaniards came thither by Sea, as you haue heard.) If I, ſayth Benzo, asked any of them for any Chriſtian by that Title, they would neyther looke on me, nor anſwere: but if I enquired for them by the name of Viracochie, they would preſently make anſwere. And there (would the Father point to the child) goes a Viracochi. In this they agreed with the ancient Grecian Ethnikes, which termed the moſt inhumane Monſters of humanitie, and the cruelleſt Tyrants, the Sonnes of Neptune, as procreated of the Sea. Such were f Procruſtes Polyphemus, and others.

To reconcile theſe two wholly, is impoſſible; not ſo, to ſhew ſome reaſon why the ſame name might bee giuen both to their Idoll, and the Spaniards. Theſe might bee ſo termed, as comming thither at firſt by Sea: and haply, becauſe at the firſt they thought ſomewhat more then humane to be in them; and that which at firſt they gaue for honour, may now bee continued in an Ironie, or Antiphraſis, whiles they thought them better then Men, and found them little inferiour to Deuils.

Viracocha their great Authour of Nature, may bee called by this Sea name g for ſome eſpeciall Sea Rites obſerued in his honour, or for the ſame cauſe that the Mythologians aſcribe to Venus h her Sea-generation. For they pictured Venus ſwimming on the Sea (as Albricus i affirmeth) and the Poet ſinge th Venus Orta Mari: which the Mythologians apply to the motion and moyſture required to generation, and to that frothy nature of the Sperme. So ſayth Phornutus: k Venus è Mari nata perhibetur, quòd ad omnium generationis cauſam motu & humiditate opus ſit; Et fortè quòd ſpumoſa ſint animantium ſemina: therefore (ſayth l Fulgentius) ſhe is called Aphrodite: for Aphros is Froth; and ſo is Luſt, in regard of the vanitie, and ſo is Seed in regard of naturall qualitie. Perhaps alſo the firſt Maſter of Viracochas Myſteries, which taught them firſt in Peru, came thither by Sea.

But to returne to Acoſta, m he telleth that the Ingua Yupangui (to make himſelfe more reſpected) deuiſed, that being one day alone, Viracocha the Creator ſpake to him, complayning, that though hee were vniuerſall Lord and Creator of all things, and had made the Heauen, the Sunne, the World, and Men, and ruled all, yet they did not yeeld him due obedience, but did equally honour the Sunne, Thunder, Earth, and other things: giuing him to vnderſtand, that in Heauen where hee was, they called him Viracocha Pachayachachia, which ſignifieth vniuerſall Creator: promiſing alſo that hee would ſend men inuiſibly to aſſiſt him againſt the Changuas, who had lately defeated his Brother.

And were further confirmed in this errour by their Harquebuzes and Ordnance which they called Yllapa, thūder, and Hatun Yllapa great thunder the proper weapōs of the Sunne. They called them alſo Inca or Ingua. But after experience of their wickedneſſe they forbeare to call them ſo any longer: & called them Cupay i. Deuils. The people were ſo loyall and ſubiect, as they held the Spaniards their conquerours as Gods, and obſerued them as they vſed their Idols.

Vnder this colour he assembled a mightie Armie, and ouerthrew the Changas: and from that time commanded that Viracocha should be held for vniuersall Lord, and that the Images of the Sunne and Thunder, should doe him reuerence. And thenceforth they set his Image highest: yet did he not dedicate any thing to him, [n] saying, that hee being Lord of all had no need. As for those inuisible Souldiers (a conceit like that which wee haue mentioned of the Turkes) he said that no man might see them but himselfe: and since they were conuerted into stones: and in that regard gathered a multitude of stones in the Mountaynes, and placed them for Idols, sacrificing them. He called them Pururaucas, and carried them to the warres with great deuotion, making his Souldiers beleeue that they had gotten the victory through their helpe. And by this meanes he obtayned goodly victories.

n So haue some reasoned, In Templis quid facit aurum? Per.

Next to Viracocha they worshipped the Sunne: and after him the Thunder, which they called by three names, Chuquilla, Catuilla, and Intiyllapa, supposing it to be a man in Heauen with a Sling and a Mace, in whose power it is to cause Raine, Haile, Thunder, and other effects of the ayrie Region.

This Guaca (so they called both their Idols and Temples) was Generall to all the Indians of Peru: and in Cusco they sacrificed to him children, as they did to the Sunn. These three, Viracocha, the Sunne, and Thunder, had a more especiall worship then the rest: they put as it were a Gantlet or Gloue vpon their hands, when they lifted them vp to worship them. They worshipped the Earth in the name of Pachamama, and esteemed her the Mother of all things: the Sea also, and called it Mamacocha: and the Rain-bow, which with two Snakes stretched out on each side, were the Armes of the Inguas. They attributed diuers offices, to diuers Starres, and those which needed their fauour, worshipped them: so the Shepheard sacrificed to a Starre, by them called Vrcuchillay, which they hold to be a sheepe of diuers colours, and two other Starres called Catuchillay and Vrcuchillay, which they fayned to bee an Ewe and a Lambe: others worshipped a Starre which they name Machaenay, to which they attributed the power ouer Snakes and Serpents, to keepe them from hurting them. To another Starre called Chuginchincbey (which is as much as Tigre) they ascribed power ouer Beares, Tigres, and Lions. They haue generally beleeued of all the Beasts in the earth, there is one like vnto them in heauen, which hath care of their procreation and encrease. Many other Starres they worshipped, too tedious to rehearse. They worshipped also Riuers, Fountaines, the mouthes of Riuers, entries of Mountaynes, Rockes or great stones, Hils and the tops of Mountaynes, which they call Apachitas. They worshipped all things in Nature, which seemed to them remarkeable and different from the rest.

They shewed me (it is [o] Acostas speech) in Cazamalca, a Hill or Mount of Sand, which was a chiefe Idoll or Guaca, of the Ancients. I demanded what Diuinitie they found in it; they alledged the wonder, it beeing a high Mount of Sand in the middest of the thicke Mountaynes of stone. In the Citie de los Reyes, for the melting of a Bell, wee cut downe a great deformed Tree, which for the greatnesse and Antiquitie thereof had beene their Guaca. They attributed the like Diuinitie to any thing that was strange in their kind, as Stones, or the Roots Papas and Lallatrecas (which they kissed and worshipped:) Beares also, Lions, Tigres and Snakes, that they should not hurt them. And such as their Gods be, such are the things which they offer vnto them in their worship. They haue vsed, as they goe by the way, to cast in the crosse wayes on the Hils and tops of Mountaynes, olde shooes, feathers, and Coca chewed. And when they had nothing else, they cast a stone as an offering, that they might passe freely and lustily; hence it is, that they find in the high wayes great heaps of stones offered, and such other things. They vsed the like ridiculous offering in pulling off their haires of the eye-browes to offer to the Sunne, Hils, Winds, or any other thing which they feare. They report of one of the Inguas, that said he did not take the Sunne to be a God, because he laboureth so much in his daily iourny. In fine, [p] euery one worshipped what liked him best. The Fishers worshipped a Sharke or some other Fish: the Hunter, a Lion, Fox, or other Beast; with many Birds; the Countriman, the Water, and Earth. They beleeued that the Moone was Wife to the Sunne. When they sweare, they touch the Earth, and looke vp to the Sunne. Many of their Idols had Pastorall Staues, and Mitres like Bishops, but the Indians could tell no reason thereof: and when they saw the Spanish Bishops in their Pontificalibus, they asked if they were Guacas of the Christians.

They worshipped also (as before is said) the dead bodies of the Inguas, preseruing them with certaine Rosin, so that they seemed aliue. The body of Tupangui, the Grandfather of Atabaliba, was thus found, hauing eyes made of a fine cloth of Gold so artificially set, as they seemed naturall, hauing lost no more haire then if he had died the same day, and yet he had beene dead seuenty eight yeeres. There also the Spaniards found his Seruants and Mamacomas, which did seruice to his memory.

In some Prouince [q] they worshipped the Image of a Bull, in another of a Cocke, and in other, other, others. In the Principall Temple of Pachicama, they kept a shee Fox and worshipped it. The Lord of Manta kept a great and rich Emerald, as his Ancestors also before him had holden it, in great veneration: on some dayes it was brought forth in publike to be worshipped. They which were sicke, came in Pilgrimage to visit it, and there offered their gifts, which the Cacique and Ministers turned to their owne profit. The Deuill in many places did appeare vnto them, and he indeed was Author of all these Superstitions.

But being offended with some, he countermanded all that former good, and turned the fruitfull Lands into barren Sands, as they are now in the Plaines, and tooke away the water that it should not raine (hence it came that it raines not) only leauing them the Riuers, of pure

They againe, to gratifie him turned him in their imaginations and superstitions vnto a God, and named the Prouince foure leagues from Lima of his name. He t con-

And when they perceiued that it had done raining, they sent forth two Dogges, but they returning all myrie and foule, they knew that the waters had not yet ceased: after that, they sent forth more Dogges, which came backe againe dry, then did they goe forth to people the Earth: but were mightily afflicted with multitudes of great

They beleeue also that the World shall haue an end, but before the same, shall goe a great drought, and the Sunne and Moone, which they worship, shall be consumed: and therefore they make grieuous lamentations when there is any Eclipse, especially of the Sun, fearing the destruction of it and the World. They beleeue the immortalitie of the Soule, as as we shall more fitly see when we come to their Buriall Rites.

Of the Religious Persons, and Places, Confessions, and Sacrifices in Peru.

§. I.

Of their Priests, Oracles and Temples.

a Apollon. l. 1. NO man might come to the a Guacas, or Idols, but Priests. These were clothed in white, and when they came to worship, they prostrated themselues on the ground, and holding in their hands a white cloth, did speake to their God in a strange Language, that the people should not vnderstand. These haue the authoritie in their holies, and consecrate both the things liuing, and the offerings of other things. In the Sacrifices they diuined by inspection of the inward parts, especially by view of the heart, if it were of a man. And if they find not signes answerable to their expectation, they neuer cease off from sacrificing till they doe find them; beleeuing, and making the people beleeue, that God is not till then pleased with their Sacrifices. They bare incredible shew, and were had in great reputation, of holinesse. When they were to sacrifice, they abstained from women, and if they had committed any trespasse, they did expiate and purge the same with fasting: in sacrificing they did binde, and blinde their eyes, and were sometimes so transported with Zeale, that with their nayles they scratched ſcratched or pulled out their eyes, as hath beene ſeene. Neyther did the people alone admire their holineſſe, but the Princes alſo, who would doe nothing of moment without their aduice. They alſo without feare or flattery, declared vnto them what they had receiued from their Oracles. The manner of their Deuils conſultation was this: In [b] the night time commonly they entred backward to their Idoll, and ſo went bending their bodies and heads after an vgly manner, and thus conſulted with him. The anſwere he made, was for the moſt part like vnto a fearefull hiſſing, or to a gnaſhing, which did terrifie them. Theſe Oracles are now ceaſed. b Acoſt. l.5.c.12

Apollonius [c] ſpeakes of two mighty Princes, not farre from Chili, one of them named Lychengorme; they are able to bring into the field two hundred thouſand men, and are very rich: but the cauſe why I heere mention them, is that number of Prieſts, which hee ſayth are reported to belong to one of their Temples, to the number of two thouſand. Cieza writeth, that the doores of their Temples were Eaſtward; that in euery Temple were two Images of the bigneſſe and likeneſſe of Goats, before which they burnt ſweet wood: there were alſo Images of Serpents. Euery profeſſion had their ſeuerall God. In ſome Temples were hanged the dead carkaſſes of men ſacrificed. c Leo Apoll. l.1

In euery Prouince of Peru, there was one principall houſe of adoration. The ruines [d] of the Temple of Pachacama are ſtill to be ſeene. That, and the Temples of Collao, and Cuſco, were lined within with Plates of Gold and Siluer; and all their ſeruice was of the ſame, which proued great riches to the conquerours. In Pachacama the Sun was worſhipped with great deuotion. There were kept in the ſame many Virgins. Francis Pizarro [e] ſent his Brother Hernando (when he had taken Atabaliba) to ſpoyle this Temple, but the Prieſts and chiefe men had carried away aboue foure hundred burthens of Gold before he came, and none doth know what became of it. Yet did he find there ſome quantitie of Gold and Siluer remayning. They ſacked the Sepulchres alſo, and thence drew abundance of the ſaid Metals. From that time hitherto, the Temple went to ruine. d Gom. c.221. e Cieza.cap.72.

The Temple of Cuſco [f] was very ſumptuous, the pauement and ſtones yet remayne witneſſes of the ancient ſplendour and magnificence. This Temple was like to the Pantheon of the Romans: for that it was the houſe and dwelling of all the Gods. For the Inguas did there behold the Gods of all the Nations and Prouinces they had conquered, euery Idol hauing his proper place, whither they of that Prouince came to worſhip it, with exceſſiue charge for the ſame. And thereby they ſuppoſed to keepe ſafely in obedience thoſe Prouinces which they had conquered, holding their Gods as it were in hoſtage. In this Houſe was the Pinchao, which was an Idoll of the Sunne, of moſt fine Gold, wrought with great riches of Stones, the which was placed to the Eaſt with ſo great Art, as the Sunne at his riſing did caſt his beames thereon, which reflected with ſuch brightneſſe, that it ſeemed another Sunne. They ſay, that at the ſpoyle of this Temple, a Souldier had for his part this goodly Pinchao, and loſt the ſame in a night at play, whence grew a Prouerbe of Gameſters in Peru, They play the Sunne before Sun-riſing. This Temple towards the Eaſt (if our Spaniſh Captaine in Ramuſio deceiues not) was couered with Gold, which the Spaniards (Religion forbidding Indian helpe) tooke away. There were many boyling pots and other Veſſels of Gold. In the houſes of the Citie was great ſtore of Gold. In one houſe or Temple where they ſacrificed, was a ſeat of Gold which weighed nineteene thouſand Pezos, in which two men might ſit. The houſe wherein old Cuſco [g] lay buried, the pauement and wals were couered with Gold and Siluer, many Pots and Iarres were couered with like metal. Xeres alſo reporteth the ſame, who was Pizarros Secretary, and his Relation ſubſcribed by Pizarro, and other Chieftaines: that this Temple was on the pauement, wals, and roofe, couered with plates of Gold and Siluer, wrought one into another: and that there were twenty other houſes in that Citie, the wals whereof within and without were couered with plates of Gold. f Acoſt. l.5.c.12. g Guaynacapa.

Both theſe Authors, eye-witneſſes, report, that at Caximalca was a Temple of the Sunne, (into which they entred vnſhod) walled and planted with trees round about: the like is alſo in euery great Towne: here were many other Temples beſides. In the middeſt was the ſtately Place of Atabaliba, with pleaſant Gardens and Lodgings, in one of which was a Golden Ciſterne, whereto were by two Pipes from contrary paſſages brought both cold water and hot, to vſe them mingled, or aſunder at pleaſure. The Towne had about two thouſand houſes, feuered by ſtreets as ſtraight as a line, about two hundred paſes long, with wals of ſtone. Ten dayes iourney from hence, Atabaliba told the Spaniards, that in the way toward Cuſco, was a Temple generall to all the Countrey, which was very rich with Offerings of Gold and Siluer, much honoured by his Father and himſelfe: other Temples had their particular Idols; this Idoll was generall, and that the cuſtodie thereof was committed to a wiſeman, which they thought could foretell things future, by reuelation of the ſaid Idoll.

The

The Citie of Pachacama was famous for Peruuian deuotions. Their Idoll was placed in a darkesome painted Roome, stinking and close shut, made of filthy wood, hauing at his feete many Offerings of Gold: none but the Ministers of his Holies durst enter, nor touch the wals of the House. Three hundred leagues they came thither on Pilgrimage with rich Offerings: first speaking to the Doore-keeper, who went in and consulted with the Idoll concerning them, and returned his answere. His Priests were of his owne appointment, and might not approch to him without preparations of fasting, and abstinence from their wiues. Thorow all the streets of the Citie, and on the principall Gates, and round about the Temple, were many Idols of Wood which they worshipped. All the Countrey about payed a yeerely tribute hereunto. The Spaniards told them this their God was a Deuill, and taught them to defend themselues from him with the signe of the Crosse. Neere to this Temple was an House or Oratorie of the Sunne, on an high place, engirt about with fiue wals. At Tichicasa was a Temple and Oracle of the Sunne, which had aboue sixe hundred men and a thousand women that did seruice therein, and made Chica there. Much Gold and wealth was here offered.

h Cieza. c.64. Sodomites.

In some part of Peru, [h] as at Old Port and Puna, they vsed the detestable sinne against Nature: yea, the Deuill so farre preuayled in their beastly Deuotions, that there were Boyes consecrated to serue in the Temple: and at the times of their Sacrifices and Solemne Feasts, the Lords and principall men abused them to that detestable filthinesse. And generally in the Hill-countries, the Deuill vnder shew of holinesse, had brought in that vice. Euery Temple or principall house of adoration kept one man or two or more, which went attired like women, euen from the time of their child-hood, and spake like them imitating them in euery thing. Vnder [i] pretext of holinesse and Religion, their principall men, on principall dayes, had that hellish commerce. A Frier dealt with two of these Ganimedes, about the filthinesse of this Vice: and they answered that they held it no fault; for from their child-hood they had beene placed there by their Caciques, both for that employment, as also to bee Priests and to keepe the Temple. Thus farre had they banished Nature, to entertaine Religion, and thus farre had they exiled the soule of Religion, retayning onely a stinking Carkasse.

k Cieza. c.77. & 80.

At Ganada in [k] Caximalca the Ingas built a Temple in honour of the Sunne. There were Virgins kept, which intended nothing but to weaue, and spinne, and dye clothes, for their Idolatrous seruices. The like was in other places. In Guanuco was a stately Palace of great stones, and a Temple of the Sunne adioyning, with a number of Virgins and Ministers, which had thirtie thousand Indians for the seruice thereof. The seruice which most of them did, is like to be the tilling of the ground, feeding of Cattell, and such like before mentioned, which they were bound to doe for the Ingas, and also for the Guacas, that is, Idols, and Idol-houses. But it were a wearisome Pilgrimage to goe and leade my Reader with mee, to euery of their Temples, which for the most part had the same Rites, according to that proportion of mayntenance which belonged to them.

§. II.

Of their Nunnes, Sorcerers, Confessions and and Penances.

l Gom. c.121.

Gomara [l] reporteth, that their houses of women were as Cloysters or Monasteries, encloſed, that they might neuer goe forth. They gelded Men, which should attend on them, cutting off also their Noses and Lips, that they should haue no such appetite. It was death for any to be found false and incontinent. The men that entred into them, were hanged vp by the feet. These made Robes for the Idols, and burned the ouerplus with the bones of white sheepe, and hurled the Ashes into the Ayre towards the Sun. If they proued with childe, and sware that Pachacama did it, the issue was preserued.

m Acost. lib. 5. cap. 15.

Of these Monasteries or Nunneries, thus writeth Acosta. There were in Peru, many Monasteries of Virgins, [m] (but not any for men, except for the Priests and Sorcerers) at the least one in euery Prouince. In these were two sorts of women; one ancient, which they called Mamacomas, for the instruction of the young; the other of young Maydens, placed there for a certaine time, after which they were drawne forth, eyther for the Gods, or for the Ingas. They called this House or Monastery Aclaguagi, that is, the House of the Chosen. Euery Monastery had his Vicar, or Gouernour, called Appopanaca, who had libertie to chuse whom he pleased, of what qualitie soeuer, being vnder eight yeeres of age, if they seemed to be of a good ſtature and conſtitution. The Mamacomas inſtructed theſe Virgins in diuers things needfull for the life of man, and in the Cuſtomes and Ceremonies of their Gods. Afterwards they tooke them from thence, being aboue fourteene, ſending them to the Court with ſure Guards, whereof ſome were appointed to ſerue the Idols, and Idol-Temples, keeping their Virginitie for euer: ſome other were for ordinary Sacrifices that were made of Maydens, and other extraordinary Sacrifices they made for the health, death, or warres of the Inguas: and the reſt ſerued for Wiues and Concubines to the Ingua, or ſuch as hee gaue them to. This diſtribution was renued euery yeere. Theſe Monaſteries poſſeſſed rents, for the maintenance of theſe Virgins. No Father might refuſe his Daughter, if the Appopanaca required her: yea, many Fathers did willingly offer their Daughters, ſuppoſing it was a great merit to be ſacrificed for the Ingua. If any of theſe Mamacomas or [n] Aellas were found to haue treſpaſſed againſt their honour, it was an ineuitable chaſtiſement to bury them aliue, or to put them to death, by ſome other cruell torment.

to

n The young Virgin Nuns.

The Inguas allowed a kind [o] of Sorcerers or Sooth-ſayers, which (they ſay) tooke vpon them what forme and figure they pleaſed, flying farre thorow the Ayre in a ſhort time. They talke with the Deuill, who anſwered them in certaine ſtones, or other things, which they reuerence much. They tell what hath paſſed in the furtheſt parts, before newes can come. In the diſtance of two or three hundred leagues, they would tell what the Spaniards did or ſuffered in their ciuill warres. To worke this diuination, they ſhut vp themſelues vp into a houſe and became drunke, till they loſt their ſenſes: a day after; they anſwered to that which was demanded. Some affirme they vſe certaine vnctions. The Indians ſay, that the old women doe commonly vſe this office of Witchcraft, eſpecially in ſome places. They tell of things ſtolne or loſt. The Anaconas (which are the ſeruants of the Spaniards) conſult with them, and they make anſwere, hauing firſt ſpoken with the Deuill in an obſcure place: ſo as the Anaconas heare the ſound of the voyce, but vnderſtand it not, nor ſee any body. They vſe the Herbe Villca with their Chica, (drinke made of Mayz) and therewith make themſelues drunke, that they may bee fit for the Deuils conference. The conference with theſe Witches is one of the greateſt lets to the proceeding of the Goſpel amongſt them.

o Acoſt. l. 5. c. 26 Sorcerers.

Among their Religious perſons, I may reckon their Confeſſors. They [p] held opinion that all Aduerſities were the effects of ſinne: for remedie whereof they vſed Sacrifices. Moreouer, they confeſſed themſelues verbally almoſt in all Prouinces, and had Confeſſors appointed by their Superiours to that end, with ſome reſeruation of Caſes for the Superieurs. They receiued Penance, and that ſometimes very ſharply, when they had nothing to giue the Confeſſor. This office of Confeſſor was likewiſe exercited by women. The manner of the Ychuyri was moſt generall in the Prouinces of Collaſuio. They diſcouered by lots, or by the view of ſome beaſts, if any thing were concealed, and puniſhed them with many blowes of a ſtone vpon the ſhoulders, vntill they had reuealed all: after that, they enioyned them Penance, and did ſacrifice. They likwiſe vſed Confeſſion, when their Children, Wiues, Husbands or Caciques were ſicke, or in any great exploit. When the Ingua was ſicke, all the Prouinces confeſſed themſelues, chiefly thoſe of Collao. The Confeſſors were bound to hold their Confeſſions ſecret, but in certaine caſes limited. The ſinnes which they chiefly confeſſed, were, killing one another out of warre, ſtealing to take another mans Wife, to giue poyſon, or Sorcery to doe any harme, to be forgetfull in the reuerence of their Guacas, not to obſerue Feaſts, to ſpeake ill of, or to diſobey the Ingua. They accuſed not themſelues of ſecret ſinnes. The Ingua confeſſed himſelfe to no man, but to the Sunne, that hee might tell them to Viracocha, of him to obtayne forgiueneſſe: which done, hee made a certaine Bath to cleanſe himſelfe in a running Riuer, ſaying, I haue told my ſinnes to the Sunne, receiue them then, Riuer, and carrie them to the Sea, where they may neuer appeare more. Other that confeſſed, vſed likewiſe thoſe Baths. When any mans children dyed, hee was holden for a grieuous Sinner, ſaying, that it was for their ſinnes, that the Sonne dyed before the Father. Such therefore, after they were confeſſed, were bathed in the ſaid Bath, and then came a deformed perſon, to whip them with certaine Nettles. If the Sorcerers or Inchanters, by their lots or diuinations affirmed that any ſick bodie ſhould dye, the ſicke man makes no difficultie to kill his owne Sonne, though he had no other, hoping by that meanes to eſcape death, ſaying that in his place he offered his Sonne in Sacrifice. The Penances enioyned them in Confeſſions, were, to faſt, to giue apparell, Gold, or Siluer, to remayne in the Mountaynes, and to receiue many ſtripes vpon the ſhoulders.

Of their Sacrifices.

q Gom. c. 121. Acoſt. l. 5. c. 18.

THe Sacrifices of the Indians may be reduced q into three kinds; of Inſenſible things; of Beaſts; of Men. Of the firſt ſort were their Sacrifices of Coca (an Herbe of much eſteeme) of Mayz, Feathers, Gold and Siluer, in figures of little Beaſts, or in the forme of that which hee ſought for: alſo of ſweet Wood, and diuers other things, whereby their Temples became ſo rich. They made theſe Offrings to obtayne a good winde, health, faire weather, and the like.

Sacrifices and Offerings.

Of the ſecond ſort of Sacrifices, were their Cuyes, which are like Rabbets, and for rich men in matters of importance, Pacos (the great Camel-faſhioned ſheepe) with curious obſeruation of the numbers, colours, and times. The manner of killing their Sacrifices is the ſame which the Moores now vſe, hanging the beaſt by the right fore-legge, turning his eyes toward the Sunne, ſpeaking certayne words, according to the qualitie of the Sacrifice. For if it were coloured, they directed their words to the Thunder, that they might want no water; if white, to the Sunne, that he might ſhine on them; if gray, to Viracocha. In Cuſco they did euery yeere kill and ſacrifice with this ſolemnitie a ſhorne ſheepe to the Sunne, and did burne it, clad in a red Waſtecoate, caſting ſmall baskets of Coca into the fire. They ſacrificed alſo ſmall Birds on this manner: they kindled a fire of Thornes, and caſt the ſmall Birds in, certaine Officers going about with round ſtones, wherein were carued or painted, Snakes, Lions, Toads, Tigres, and ſaying, Vſachum, that is, Let the victory bee giuen vs, with other words. They drew forth certaine blacke ſheepe, called Vrca, which had beene kept certaine dayes without meate, and therefore vſed theſe words: So let the hearts of our Enemies bee weakened, as theſe Beaſts. And if they found, that a certaine piece of fleſh behind the heart were not conſumed by faſting, they tooke it for a bad ſigne. They ſacrificed alſo blacke Dogges, which they ſlue and caſt into a Plaine, with certayne Ceremonies, cauſing ſome kind of men to eate the fleſh, which they did, leſt the Ingua ſhould bee hurt with Poyſon.

r Faſting.

And for this cauſe they r faſted from morning till the Starres were vp, and then glutted themſelues. This was fitting to withſtand their Enemies Gods. They offered ſhels of the Sea to the Fountaines, ſaying, that the ſhels were the Daughters of the Sea, the Mother of all waters. Theſe ſhels they vſed (in manner) in all Sacrifices. They offered Sacrifice of whatſoeuer they did ſowe, or rayſe vp. There were Indians appointed to doe theſe Sacrifices to the Fountaynes, Springs, and Riuers, which paſſed through their Townes or by their Farmes, that they might not ceaſe running, but alwayes water their grounds. Gomara f ſaith, that their Prieſts married not, went little abroad, faſted much, although no faſt laſted aboue eight dayes; and that was in their Seed-time, and in Harueſt, and in gathering of Gold, and making Warre, and talking with the Deuill: yea, ſome of them (I thinke) for feare, becauſe they are blind-folded when they ſpeake with him, put out their eyes; they enter into the Temples weeping and lamenting, which the word s Guaca ſignifieth. They touch not their Idols with their hands, without cleane and white Linnen, they bury in the Temples the Offerings of Gold and Siluer, in their Sacrifices they cry aloud, and were neuer quiet all that day nor night: they anointed with bloud the faces of their Idols, and doores of their Temples; they ſprinkle alſo their Sepulchres. The u Sorcerers did coniure, to know what time the Sacrifices ſhould be made: which being ended, they did gather of the contribution of the people what ſhould be ſacrificed, and deliuered them to ſuch as had charge of the Sacrifices.

f Gom. quo ſup.

s Guaca ſignifieth mourning

u Acoſt. quo ſup.

In the beginning of Winter, at ſuch time as the waters increaſed by the moyſture of the weather, they were diligent in ſacrificing to the Fountaynes, and Riuers which ranne by their Cities and Farmes. They did not ſacrifice to the Fountaines and Springs of the Deſarts. And euen to this day continueth this their reſpect to theſe Springs and Riuers. They haue a ſpeciall care to the meeting of two Riuers, and there they waſh themſelues for their health, firſt anointing themſelues with the flowre of Mayz, or ſome other things, adding thereto diuers Ceremonies, which they doe likewiſe in their Baths.

Their third kind of Sacrifices was the moſt vnkind and vnnaturall, namely, of Men. Wee haue ſhewed before of their Butcheries, at the Burials of their great Lord. Beſides this, they vſed in Peru to ſacrifice yong Children, from foure or ſixe yeeres olde to ten: the greateſt part of Sacrifices were for the affaires that did import the Ingua, as in ſickneſſe for his health, for victory in warre, at the Coronation or giuing him the Royall Roll. In this ſolemnitie they ſacrificed two hundred Children. The manner of Sacrifice, was to drowne and bury them with certayne Ceremonies: ſometimes they cut off their heads, anointing themſelues with the bloud from one eare to another. They did likewiſe ſacrifice Virgins, of ſuch as were brought brought from their Monasteries. The common sort (as you haue heard) being like to dye, would sacrifice their owne Sonne to the Sun, or Viracocha, desiring him to be so content, and spare the Fathers life.

Xeres relateth that they sacrificed their Children, and with their bloud anointed their Idols faces, and their Temple-doores, and sprinkled the same also on the Sepulchres of the dead; and that those which are sacrificed, goe thereunto voluntarily with Dances, Songs, and Mirth. Xeres.

When they sacrificed, they [y] obserued the heart, and other the inward parts for diuination, and if they saw a good signe (after their bad construction) [z] they danced and sung with great merriment; if a bad, they were very heauy, but, good or bad, they would bee sure to drinke deepe. They eate not their humane Sacrifices, but sometimes dryed them, and preserued them in Coffins of Siluer. [y] Gomara. [z] Sanſouin. & Selua, p. 5.

It were an endlesse toyle, to reckon vp all the Superstitions of Peru, in which were so many Nations agreeing in disagreeing from truth, yet disagreeing in their diuersified errours. To let passe Paucura, which fat, Sacrifice, and eate their Captiues, and euery Tuesday offer two Indians to the Deuill: and the drunken Prouince of Carapa, where they eate little, and drinke much, at once drinking in, and pissing out; the Mitimaes which are eatly at their meate, and make but one drinking in the day (which lasts from morning till night) by Bacchus Priuiledge, enioying without controll any woman they like: The Canari put their Wiues to the drudgery abroad, whiles themselues spin, weaue, tricke vp themselues, and performe other womanish functions at home: The Galani make their Captiues drunke, and then the chiefe Priest cutteth off their heads, and sacrificeth them. Generally, in the Mountaines they were more cruell, but all obserued bloudy, beastly, Diabolicall Ceremonies, the recounting whereof must needs weary the patientest Reader.

CHAP XII.

Of their Feasts, Sepulchres, and other Peruuian Superstitions.

§. I.

Of their Kalender and Holy-dayes.

BEfore we speake of the Peruuian Festiuall times, it is not amisse to take some more generall view of their Kalender. They [a] diuided their yeere into so many dayes iust as we doe, and into so many Moneths or Moones. To make the computation of their yeere certaine, they vsed this industrie: Vpon the Mountaynes about Cusco there were twelue Pillars set in order, and in such distance, as euery moneth one of these Pillars did note the rising and setting of the Sunne. They called them Saccanga; by meanes whereof, they taught and shewed the Feasts, and the Seasons fit to sowe, and reape, and for other things. They did certaine Sacrifices to these Pillars of the Sunne. Euery Moneth had his peculiar name and Feasts. They sometimes began the yeere in Ianuary: but since, an Ingua called Pachacuto, which signifieth a Reformer of the Temple, began their yeere in December, by reason, as it seemeth, of the Sunnes returne from Capricorne, their neerest Tropicke. I reade not of any weekes they obserued: for which they had not so certaine a rule, as the Sunnes course was for the yeere, and the Moones for the Moneth. [a] Acoſt. l. 6. c. 3.

They obserued in Peru two kinds of Feasts: some ordinary, which fel out in certain moneths of the yeere, and others extraordinary, which were for certaine causes of importance. Euery Moneth of the yeere they made Feasts and Sacrifices: and had this alike, the offering of a 100. Sheepe, but of vnlike colour and forme, according to the Moneth. In the first Moneth they made their first and principall Feast, therefore called Capacrayme, that is to say, a rich and principall Feast. In it they offered a great number of Sheepe and Lambes in Sacrifice, and burnt them with sweet wood: then they caused Gold and Siluer to bee brought vpon certaine Sheepe, setting vpon them three Images of the Sunne, and three of the Thunder, the Father, the Sonne, and the Brother. In these Feasts they dedicated the [b] Inguas Children, putting the Guaras or Ensignes vpon them, and they pierced their eares: then some old man [b] Knights of Peru.

did whip them with Slings, and anoint their faces with bloud, in ſigne that they ſhould be true Knights to the Ingua. No ſtranger might remayne in Cuſco during this moneth, and this Feaſt, but at the end thereof they entred, and were made partakers of the Feaſts and Sacrifices after this manner. The Mamacomas or Nunnes of the Sunne made little loaues of the flower of Mays, dyed and mingled with the bloud of white Sheepe, which they did ſacrifice that day: Then they commanded that all ſtrangers ſhould enter; who ſet themſelues in a certaine order: and the Prieſts which were of a certaine Linage, deſcending from Linqui Ypangui, gaue to euery one a morſell of theſe ſmall loaues, ſaying that they gaue it them to the end they ſhould bee vnited and confederate with the Ingua: and that they aduiſed them not to ſpeake or thinke any euill againſt the Ingua, but alwayes to beare him good affection: for that this piece ſhould be a witneſſe of their intentions, and if they did not as they ought, would diſcouer them. They carried theſe ſmall loaues in great Platters of Gold and Siluer, appointed for that purpoſe; and all did receiue and eate thoſe pieces thanking the Sunne and the Ingua. This manner of Communicating they vſed likewiſe in the tenth moneth called Coyarayme, which was September, in the Feaſt called Cytua. They likewiſe ſent of theſe loaues to all the Guacas of the Realme, whither the people aſſembled to receiue them: to whom they ſaid, that the Sunne had ſent them that, in ſigne that hee would haue them honour Him, and the Caciques. This continued from the time of Ingua Ypangui, whom we may call the Peruuian Numa, till the Spaniards ſubſtituted in place thereof their Maſſe, a maſſe of c more monſtrous abſurdities (in their Tranſubſtantion, Bread-worſhipping, God-eating, which they can alſo vſe to combine Subiects, not to their Ingnas or lawfull Princes, but againſt them, as our Powder-traytors did) then the former, notwithſtanding the faireſt pretexts of Chriſtian and Catholike Titles.

Vega pag. 2. lib. 8. c. 1. tels of the Corpus Chriſti Solemnities in Cuzco obſerued by the Spaniards carrying in Proceſſion ſumptuous Herſes with Images in them of Chriſt, our Lady, &c. attended by the Indians, their Caciques and Nobles honouring the Feaſt after their wonted Pagan Rites: viz. Some clothed with Lions skins, their heads encloſed in thoſe of the beaſts, becauſe (they ſay) the Lion was beginner of their ſtocke; others with the wings of the great Bird Condore or Cuntur (as Angels are painted) from which they ſuppoſe themſelues deſcended; Others with other deuiſes, painted with Riuers, Fountaynes, Lakes, Hils, Mountaynes, Caues, becauſe their firſt Progenitors came forth of ſuch. Others with ſtrange deuiſes of apparell plated with Gold and Siluer, others with Garlands thereof, others in monſtrous ſhapes with vizors with skinnes of diuers beaſts with ſtrange geſtures, and fayning themſelues Fooles, &c. One counterfeiting Riches another Pouertie: and euery Prouince with that which ſeemed to them the beſt inuention with greateſt varietie they could imagine to giue content. Thus had they vſed to ſolemnize the Feaſts of their Kings, and thus in my time, ſayth Vega, they ſolemnized the Feaſt of the moſt holy Sacrament, the true God our Redeemer and Lord, euery diuiſion of the Indians ſinging in their owne Languages and not the generall of the Court with Flutes and Muſical Inſtruments, ſome hauing their wiues alſo to helpe them ſing prayſes, to God and the Spaniſh Prieſts and Seculars for their Conuerſion: after they aſcend ſeuen or eight ſteps to worſhip the Sacrament, each ſquadron diuiſion or company ſeuered from the reſt ten or twelue paſes, deſcending another way, each Nation according to their antiquitie, as they had beene conquered by the Ingas, the laſt firſt, and the Ingas themſelues laſt of all. Theſe went before the Prieſts in the leaſt and pooreſt company, as hauing loſt their Empire and Inheritance. Theſe ſquadrons being gone, the Canaries ſucceeded in a ſquadron with their Herſes, &c. The Ingas and they being ready to quarrell, and the Spaniſh Officers forced to quiet them, by reaſon the Canarie carried a head of an Indian which he had ſlaine in a Duell, in a battle betwixt the Spaniards and the Indians, which the Inga ſaid was not by his owne force but by the power of our Lord Pachacamac here preſent, and the Spaniards bleſſing, &c. The Iuſtice was faine to take away the head from the Canaries, the other crying Auca, Auca, againſt them. The Couent of Saint Domingo in Cuzco, was ſometimes the Temple of the Sunne: of a Proceſſion from thence on Saint Markes day with a tame Bull. See cap. 2. ſeq. which tooke vp an excommunicate perſon, and caſt him forth of the Church, &c. 1556. The Indians called the Sacrament Pachacamac.

But to returne to our Capacrayme, it is ſtrange, that the Deuill had not only brought in an Apiſh imitation of Chriſtian Sacrments, but of the Trinitie alſo in their Pagan Rites. For the Father, Sonne, and Brother, called Apompti Churunti, and Intiquacqui, that is, Father Sunne, Sonne Sunne, Brother Sunne, had ſome ſhew of that great Myſtery. In like manner they named the three Images of the Chuquilla, or God of the Aire, whence are thunders, raines and Snowes. They had one Guaca, where they worſhipped an Idol called Tangatanga, which they ſaid, was One in Three, and Three in One. Thus doth the Deuill deſpite the truth, which he would ſeeme to imitate. In the ſecond moneth, called Camey, beſides the Sacrifices which they made, they caſt the aſhes into the Riuer, following fiue or ſix leagues after, praying it carrie them into the Sea, for that the Viracocha ſhould there receiue this preſent.

In the third, fourth, and fifth moneth, they offered a hundred Sheepe, black, ſpeckled, and gray, with many other things. In the ſixt moneth they offered a hundred Sheepe more, of all colours: and then made a Feaſt; bringing Mayz from the fields into the houſe, which they yet vſe. This Feaſt is made, comming from the Farme to the Houſe, ſaying certaine Songs; and praying that the Mayz may long continue. They put a quantitie of the Mayz (the beſt that groweth in their Farmes) in a thing which they call Pirua, with certaine Ceremonies, watching three nights. Then doe they put it in the richeſt garment they haue, and being thus wrapped and dreſſed, they worſhip this Pirua, holding it in great veneration, and ſaying, It is the Mother of the Mayz of their Inheritances, and that by this meanes the Mayz augments, and is preſerued. In this moneth they make a particular Sacrifice, and the Witches demand of this Pirua, if it hath ſtrength enough to continue vntill the next yeere. And if it anſweres no, then they carrie this Maiz to the Farme whence it was taken, to burne, and make anothe Pirua as before: and this fooliſh vanitie ſtill continueth. In the ſeuenth moneth they made the Feaſt Intiraymi, and ſacrificed an hundred Guanacos in honour of the Sunne: they made many Images of Quinua-wood carued, all attired with rich garments; they danced, and caſt flowres in the high-wayes, and thither came the Indians painted and ſinging.

In the eighth moneth they burned an hundred Sheepe, all gray of the colour of Viſcacha, with the former Solemnities. In Yapaguis their ninth month, they burnt a hundred Sheepe of Cheſnut colour; and likewiſe a thouſand Cuyes (a kind of Rabbet) to the end the Froſt, Ayre, Water, and Sunne, ſhould not hurt their Farmes. In the tenth moneth called Coyarami, they burnt a hundred white Sheepe that had fleeces; and then they made the Feaſt Situa in this manner: They aſſembled together the firſt day of the Moone before the riſing thereof, carrying Torches in their hands: and when they ſaw it, they cryed aloud, ſaying, [d] Let all harme goe away, ſtriking one another with their Torches: which being done, they went to the common Bath, to the Riuers and Fountaynes, and euery one to his owne Bath, ſetting themſelues to drinke foure dayes together. In this moneth alſo the Mamacomas made their Loaues (as is ſaid) of communicating with the Sunne, and the Ingua. The Bathes, Drunkenneſſe and ſome reliques of this Feaſt Situa remayne ſtill, with the Ceremonies a little different, but very ſecretly. In the eleuenth moneth they offered alſo three hundred Sheepe. And if they wanted water, to procure raine, they ſet a black Sheepe tyed in the midſt of a Plaine, powring much Chica about it, and giuing it nothing to eat till it rayned. This [e] Chica is a drinke or wine made of Mayz, ſteeped and boyled, and will ſooner make one drunke then Wine of Grapes: they haue another way to make it, by champing the Maiz, which they hold then beſt, when it is done (after the beaſtlieſt manner) by olde withered women. This drunken people will ſpend whole dayes and nights in drinking it, and it is therefore forbidden by the Law. But what Law can preuaile againſt the Deuill and the Drunkard? We need not goe to Peru to proue this.

d They which did this, were called Paucomcos.

e Acoſt. l. 4. c. 16. Chica, what it is.

The twelfth and laſt moneth they ſacrificed a hundred Sheepe, and ſolemnized the Feaſt called Raymacantar Rayquis. In this moneth they prepared what was neceſſary for the children that ſhould be made Nouices: the moneth following the old men made a certaine ſhew, together with the children, in rounds and turnings, which they commonly doe, when it raineth too much, or too little, and in the time of Plague.

Among the extraordinary Feaſts (which were many) the moſt famous was that which they call Ytu. This had no time prefixed, but by Neceſſitie or Diſtreſſe. And then the people prepared themſelues thereto, by faſting two dayes; during which, they did neyther company with their wiues, nor eat any meate with Salt or Garlicke, nor drinke any Chica. All did aſſemble together in one place, where no Stranger, nor any beaſt might be admitted; they had Garments and Ornaments which ſerued onely for this Feaſt. They marched very quietly [f] in Proceſſion, their heads couered with their veiles, ſounding of Drummes, without ſpeaking one to another. This continued a day and a night: The day following, they danced and made good cheere for two dayes and two nights together, ſaying, that their Prayer was accepted. Euen ſtill they vſed one which is ſomewhat like this, called Ayma, with Garments onely ſeruing to that end, and make Proceſſion with their Dummes, hauing faſted before, concluding with good cheere. And although the Indians forbear Sacrifices becauſe of the Spaniards, yet they vſe many Ceremonies ſtill, which had their beginning from their ancient Superſtitions.

§. II.

Of the Funerals in Peru, and the places adioyning; and somewhat of the present estate of those parts.

g Acost. li.5.c.7. h Funerals.

THE Indians g of Peru beleeued commonly, that the Soule liued after this life, and that the good were in glory, and the bad in paine. They vsed a wonderfull care h to preserue the bodies, which they honoured after death: their Successors gaue them garments, and made Sacrifices to them, especially of the Inguas, of whom wee haue spoken before. In their bloudie Funerals the Women he loued best were slaine, and multitudes of other Attendants of all sorts for his new Family in the other World, and that, after many Songs and drunkennesse. They sacrificed to them many things, especially young children, and with the bloud they made a stroke on the dead mans face, from one eare to another. This crueltie is common through a great part of the East and West Indies, as in their places this History doth shew you: wittily auoyded once by a i Portugall, who was a Captiue, and to be slaine at the Funerals of his Lord, and hauing but one eye, saw better to saue his life then if hee had both. For he told them, that such a deformed and maymed fellow would be a disgrace to his Master in the other life, and so perswaded the Executors, or Executioners (if you will) to seeke a new choice. The Indians haue another Ceremony more generall, which is, to set meate and drinke vpon the graue of the dead, imagining they did feed thereon. At this day, many Indian Infidels doe secretly draw their dead out of the Church-yard, and bury them on Hils, or vpon passages of Mountaynes, or else in their owne houses. They haue also vsed to put Gold and Siluer in their mouth, hands, and bosome, and to apparell them with new garments, durable, and well lined. They beleeue, that the soules of the dead wander vp and downe, enduring cold, thirst, hunger, and trauell: and for this cause they vse their Anniuersaries, carrying them clothes, meate, and drinke.

i Wittie escape

Pedro de Cieza k reporteth, that in Cenu in the Prouince of Cartagena (which we here mention for proximitie of Rites, rather then of place) neere to a Temple built in honour of the Deuill, there was taken forth an innumerable quantitie of Sepulchres, more then a Million of them, old and new. Himselfe was there present. Much treasure was found in the Graues. Iuan de la Torre tooke forth of one Sepulchre l more then fiue hundred thousand Pezoes. The Great Men adorned their Sepulchres with Vaults and Towres, and had with them interred their Women, Seruants, Meate, Chicha, Armes and Ornaments. He addeth, that the Deuill (in the shape of some principall person deceased) would sometimes appeare, and shew them newes out of that other World, how he liued and fared there. And hence (it seemes) came that spoyle of so much wealth, and so many persons for their Funerals. But take heed (Reader) that you doe not beleeue it was the Deuill that was wont to appeare in some habit of afflicted soules, and demanded Dirges and Masses for their manumission out of Purgatory! Alas, the Deuill was confined to the Indies, and would neuer haue beene so good a Purueyor for the Popes Kitchin. And certes, if our Christian Ancestors had not their wiues and goods buried in their graues, with Food, Rayment, and Ornaments: yet these things were also buried with them, whiles the feares of Purgatory made them willing to endow the Priests and Monasteries, and bestow on Lights and other Rites, that which should haue maintayned their Houses, their Wiues, and Children. But how come we from Peru to Rome? Nay, how comes Rome, if not from Peru, as more lately discouered, yet with Peru, and with, and from, other Heathen Nations in the World, in her manifold Ceremonies and Superstitious Rites? as this Relation of Peru, for their Confessions, Processions, and many other Rites will shew: And one day I hope more fully to acquaint the World, when wee come in our Pilgrimage to visit Christian-Antichristian Rome. Worse Sepulchres then the former (to returne to our American Historie) were those which Herera mentions within fifty leagues of Popayan, where the Husband hath bin seene to eate the Wife; Father and Son, Brother and Sister haue renewed aneerer proximitie and butcherly incorporation: where Captiues are fatted and brought forth with Songs; his members by piece-meale cut off and eaten, whiles himselfe liueth and seeth it. Since the inhabiting of Saint Iames of Arma, they haue eaten more then eight thousand Indians and some Spaniards.

This our Author testifieth (let vs a little view the present state of Peru) that Los Reyes in twelue degrees consisteth of three thousand households: it is one of the best Climates in the World, not subiect to plagues, hunger, raine, thunder, but alwayes cleere. It is the Seat of the Viceroy and Royall Councell and Inquisition. Iohn Ellis, which was partaker of Sir Richard Hawkins his Aduentres, saith, that Lima is neere as big as London within the Wals: the Houses are of Lome there are nigh an hundred thousand Negros: it raineth not there, but Obſeruations of American Rites out of IERONYMO ROMAN.

Ieronymo Roman a Spaniſh Fryer, hath written ſomewhat largely of the Indian Ceremonies, in his ſecond Tome of the Common-wealths of the World; eſpecially of New Spaine and Peru: but therein and in other his Relations differs from other, perhaps more vnderſtanding Writers. From Florida to Panama, hee affirmes, there was little Religion or Politie; that they acknowledged One True God Immortall and inuiſible, reigning in Heauen, whom they called Tocahunaguamaorocoti: which, they ſaid, had a Mother named Atabex, and a Brother called Guaca. He tels of their Images, that an Indian, going through a Wood, ſaw the tree ſhake, which ſtriking him in feare, hee approched to that which made moſt noyſe, and asked what hee would haue, and who hee was. The tree (the Deuill, or the Lyer) made anſwere, That hee ſhould firſt goe call a Bohique or Prieſt; which comming to the tree demanded, Why hee was ſent for; and was by the tree inſtructed how to make thereof an Image and Temple, and ordayned Sacrifices and Ceremonies; which by cutting of that tree was preſently effected, and the Dedication yeerely ſolemnized. The truth of the Hiſtory I know not; of the Myſtery is plaine, that they which make them, are like vnto them; and ſuch Blocks may beſt be taught of Blocks their blockiſh Deuotions.

De la Repub. de las Indias Occident. l. 1. c. 2. He hath written 3. whole Bookes of American Rites and cuſtomes.

In New Spaine the Sunne (he ſayth) was their chiefe God, and they erected to him the moſt ſumptuous Temples in the World; beſides other artificial Deities innumerable, in matter and forme infinitely diuerſified like Birds, Beaſts, Serpents (one kind like the Picture of Eue with the Serpent) like the Grecian Bacchus, like their mitred Biſhops, like Frogs, or other naturall or imaginary formes. Any thing which could eyther hurt or benefit them, they obſerued as Gods. In Mexico they had (hee ſayth) diuers degrees of their Prieſts: the firſt of the High Biſhop or Pope, in the Mexican Language called Ilchuatecotl, in the Totona tongue Papa (as alſo we haue before obſerued) the ſecond was as a Biſhop, and had other inferiour Prieſts ſubordinate. When the Spaniards erected their Deuotions in Mexico; they did not pray for the Papa (leſt they might be interpreted of this Ethnike Pope) but called him the High Biſhop. Their Biſhop they called Hupixe, which ſignifies the Great Miniſter of God; Their Prieſts Tetuy Pixque that is, Gods Officers. Other Functions bare name of their particular Offices, Treaſurer, Veſtry-keeper and the reſt. Some Prouinces in New Spaine had ſixe Prieſts, which were as it were Patriarkes or Archbiſhops, all vnder the Pope aforeſaid: all addicted to Abſtinence and Chaſtitie, not drinking ſtrong drinke, and caſting their eyes to the ground if they ſaw a woman; profeſſing much grauitie and mortification; eſteemed as Saints, and of great authoritie and ſway in the State.

Degrees of Prieſts. In Cholola was a Metropolis which had as many Temples as were dayes in the yeere: One the moſt famous (he ſaith) in the World, the foot or foundation of the Spire containing a Croſſe-bow ſhoote in breadth and much more in height, the Spire it ſelfe being a league or a Lie, in height, &c.

The eldeſt Sonnes of Lords ſucceeded in their temporall eſtates, the ſecond was made a Prieſt; and the Pope was Sonne to the King or ſome chiefe Lord in the Countrey: after whoſe death the moſt Ancient ſucceeded, being ſolemnely anoynted by the Prieſts, with an Oyntment mixed with the bloud of circumciſed Infants.

The Temples were all called Tehutlamacax, a word compounded of Tehu, which ſignifies God and Tlamacax, a Houſe or Manſion. Many inferiour Offices in the Temple were executed by Citizens or honourable persons, and others which liued neere the Temple, vnder a speciall Master of Ceremonies called Telpuchtlato. Many other things he writes of the Religion of New Spaine, partly agreeing with our former Relations, partly diuers, or contrarie. The like also of Peru: where the chiefe Priest (he sayth) was stiled Vilaoma: the Temples were most magnificent, which they erected on high grounds or Hil tops, making foure round Mounts of earth, higher each and lesser then the former; in the middest building the Temple in foure squares like Cloysters of Monasteries, within which were Altars, and in the most eminent place the rich and pompous Image of the Sunne. Their Temples had two doores, to which they ascended by thirty steps. They were rich on the inner side, being for the most part Gold, Siluer, or other rich Metals. On the Easterne part was an Oratorie or Chancell against the Sun-rising, ascended by six steps with a thicke wall, and a hollow part therein, which contayned the Image of the Sunne with rayes of Gold (as we paint it) by reflexion of the Sun-beames yeelding a Sun-like lustre. Of all their Temples those of Pachicama and Cusco were most famous: to which were Pilgrimages from the Prouinces (as to Saint Iames, our Lady, and other famous Holies in Christendome) three hundred leagues distant. If I should follow this Fryer in his large Obseruations of the American Rites, I might soone out-goe your patience, and somewhere perhaps the Truth: contenting my selfe therefore with that before obserued out of the most indicious Authors (if your Author bee iudicious) I remit those that would further know his Relations to himselfe; hauing chosen a little, and that here by it selfe inserted.

And thus we take our leaue of this Continent, and must into the adioyning Sea, to obserue matters of principall note we shall there find.

CHAP XIII.

Of the Seas and Ilands adioyning to America.

§. I.

Of the Ladrones; Margarita, and Cubagua, and the Seas betwixt them.

AND now I must obey the Spaniards Law, which will admit no strangers trafficke in Peru, and are iealous of any Corriuall, which shall hold longer and more familiar Discourse with America, although they haue rather forced her to their lusts, then wooed her to their loues. I also beginne to grow wearie of this trauell in another World, willing to looke homewards; and therefore am now embarqued on the Peruuian Coast, where the Peaceable Sea may free me of those former dangers whereto my Pilgrimage was subiect in passing along snowie and fierie Hils; deceitfull, vnwholsome Bogs; scorching sandy Plaines; Wildernesses inhabited with wild beasts; Habitations peopled with wilder and more beastly Men; and now by this commoditie of my Paper-barke, I may both direct my course homewards, and yet walke, as intending another contrary, or diuers Voyage. And euen as those Heauenly Planets c in their Wandering and yet most constant course, are guided by the generall motion of that Vniuersall Wheele, and yet forget not their owne peculiar: so I, in my wandering Discoueries propound all and euery place of the World, to be the place of my Exercise, and subiect of my labour, but yet the smoke of Ithaca d is sweetest, and my knowing all, would bee but a melancholy Maze, if I should not come home to fill English eares with the newes. The Reader also, by this time wearied, will be glad to heare of an end.

b To Leigh & London too. Silues. in Du Bartas.

c Planeta signifies a Wanderer.

d Ithaca was the place wher Vlysses dwelt: which (after many yeeres trauell) he so much desired to see.

In this Sea we may see many Ilands which Nature hath seemed to set, as Centinels along the Coast, to hold their watch, as Skowts to espie, and as Garrisons to defend their Soueraigne, Earth, lest the Ocean (by secret vndermining, or by violent and tempestuous force) should be too busie an encrocher.

e The Tides are stronger on the South Sea, then on the North and higher by many degrees. Pet. Mart. Dec. 3 lib. 2.

The Earth also on this e side, finding her selfe more strongly assayled then on the other, hath summoned them all home to her borders, and placed them for her better defence in stations neere her, not suffering them to stay abroad, as in other Seas is vsuall: so that there are almost no Ilands in this widest of Seas, the Peaceable, but neere the mayne. If there bee any, they are obscure, small, and not worthy our Relation: as for those of Salomon and New Guinea,

Guinea, with their Neighbours, they are reckoned to [f] another Continent, if they bee not continent themselues; and for the Arcipelago of Saint Lazaro, these Ilands may be reckoned vnruly Borderers, which, while it is vncertaine whether they should acknowledge the Soueraignetie of Asia, Terra Australis, or America, are to all to none; and therefore, where they are best knowne, are knowne by the name of [g] Theeues; a name fitting their nature and disposition. Thus did Magellane [h] find them, from whom (besides other things) they stole his Boat, which by force he was forced to recouer. Such did our Countrimen [i] in Master Candishes renowmed Voyage find them, who saw also their Images of Wood in the head of their Boats, like the Images of the Deuill, Temple, and Saint, best fitting their deuotions: and such did [k] Oliuer Noort find them, who came crying about him, Iron, Iron, offering him Fruits in exchange for pieces of Iron; and if any opportunitie offered it selfe, stealing closely, or openly, any thing they could lay hold on. They shot at them in vaine, so actiue were they in diuing vnder the water, and continuing there, as if they had beene fitted alike to both Elements. The women also, no lesse then the men. They are a beastly people, polluting themselues in promiscuous lusts, and branded (many of them) with the markes of their intemperance; the Pockes hauing eaten their noses and lips. They are browne, fat, long of stature: the men goe naked; the women weare a leafe before them, so that they beare some resemblance to the Pictures of Adam and Eue. Their Boats are twentie foot long, and but a foot and halfe broad, cunningly wrought. They are extremely greedie of Iron, of which metall the Hollanders cast fiue pieces into the Sea, to try them, and one of them fetcht them all out. But lest these Theeues rob vs of our intended Deuotions, and our Reader of patience in longer stay heere, wee will looke backe towards the Straits, and so compasse the other side of America. Many Ilands wee may see heere neere the shore, all along as wee passe. But what should wee trouble the Reader with names? I haue small deuotion to them, vnlesse I had some intelligence of some Deuotion in them, further then that wherein they agree with the Peruuian Rites, wherewith you were last tired.

In the Straits are some Ilands of small quantitie, of smaller dignitie: and who would stay there, where the Pengwins [l] are your best Hosts? the rest are Giants or Man-eating Sauages: and in the next out of the Straits, but Seales, who all can yeeld but an inhospitall hospitalitie. Neyther hath prouident Nature in all those Coasts of Chica, or Brasil, beene prodigall of her Iland store, fore-seeing that they would, eyther bee vsurped by Seales and Sea Monsters, or other more vnnaturall and monstrous inhumane shape, of Deuillish inhumanitie, from the Land. It seemes she hath beene the more sparing in the numbers, nobleneſſe, or quantitie of Ilands, in all those Seas, which wee haue most swiftly furrowed, that shee might in the great Bay more bountifully impart her plentie, and shew her excellence in that kind. This is a great field, as it were, sowne with Ilands of all sorts; the Earth seemes a louing Mother, which holds open her spacious lap, and holds out her stretched armes betweene Paria and Florida: the Ocean also, as iealous of the Earths more natural Inheritance and claime vnto them, seemes to neglect his course to the Southward, and heere sets in with a violent current, alway forcing his watery forces to walke (or rather to runne and flie) these rounds, to see that the Continent keepe her hand off, and not once touch his conquered possessions; that though (like Tantalus) she seemeth alwayes to bee closing her open hands and mouth vpon them; yet are they kept by this officious watchfulnesse of the Sea, that shee can neuer incorporate and vnite them to her selfe. Easily can they vnfold this Mystery, that are acquainted with the scite of the Earth, [m] and the swiftnesse of the current in this vast space of Earth and Sea, setting in at Paria, and after out againe at Florida, with admirable and incredible violence.

To begin then at Paria: (for of Orenoque and his mouth full of Ilands, and of Trinidad, that hath escaped the Riuer, and betaken her selfe wholly to Neptunes Loues, we haue already spoken.) Heere two rowes and rankes of Ilands make shew and muster of themselues: the one extending East and West, the other North and South. Of the former is Margarita, which (like many a Gallant, whose backe robbeth his belly, whose bowels emptie of necessaries, alway are croking and complayning of superfluitie in ornament and fashion) so hath shee a [n] World of Pearles to adorne her, but wanteth water to satisfie her thirst: store of Pearles shee can communicate of her plentie; water shee is faine to borrow of her Neighbours.

The like we may say of Cubagua, her next Neighbour, that by her store of Pearles, hath wonne Suiters from our, and the American World, whom she can neyther bid eate or drinke of her Land-hospitalitie, where Grasse and Water are wanting. But as it vsually comes to passe with these Fashion-mongers, which neglecting necessaries, must at last be neglected of their ornaments too: So this Iland, which sometimes was so rich, notwithstanding all her Pearles she pawned for her dyet (in so much that the Kings o fift amounted ordinarily to fifteene thousand Duckets a yeere) yet now seemes almost beggered, her Pearle-fishes, and Pearle-fishers, most of them gone; and now it is time for vs to be gone from her too.

p Description of the Indies.

Yet let vs heare this Relation of Herera p before we goe, of an Earth-quake which happened there the first of September 1530. which raysed the Sea foure fathome, ouerthrew the Fortresse, opened the Earth in many places, whence issued much Salt-water, as blacke as Inke, stinking of Brimstone. The Mountayne of Cariaco remayned open. Many died of feare, and some were drowned. Captaine William Parker Anno 1601. hauing taken Puerto Bello, and Melendes the Gouernour, landed in Margarita, and receiued fiue hundred pound in Pearle, for ransome of Prisoners: tooke a ship which came from Angola with three hundred and seuentie Negros. Oviedo hath written in his nineteenth Booke of the Iland of Cubagua. It hath no trees, and but little grasse. There is a Fountaine on the East part thereof, neere the Sea, which casteth forth a bituminous substance like Oyle, which is said to be profitable for medicine, and may be found two or three leagues floting in the Sea.

§. II.

Of the Caniball Ilands; the Whale, Thresher, Sword-fish, Sharke, and other fishes, and Obseruations of those Seas.

LIttle businesse can we find any further, in following that Westerne ranke, Orchilla, Oruba, and the rest, and therefore will looke Northwards, to that other ranke we spake of: where leauing Tobago on the right hand, wee see before vs Granata, Saint Vincent, Saint Lucia, Dominica; and then circling to the Northwest Desiderata, Saint Christopher, Holy Crosse, and others, whose names, without other matter of Historie, would be but tedious to the Reader. These, and a multitude of others vnmentioned, are called the Ilands of the Caribes, or Canibals. The Inhabitants q eate mans flesh, and passe to other Ilands with their Boats to the hunting of Men, as other Hunters doe for Beasts. Carib signifieth Stranger, for so the more innocent Indians esteeme them.

q Pet. Mart. Dec. 8. l. 6.

At home they onely couer their priuities, but in time of Warre they vse many ornaments. They are nimble, beardlesse (vsing little Pincers to pull out the haires) shoote poysoned Arrowes, bore holes in their eares and nostrils for elegancie, which the richer sort decke with Gold, the poorer with Shels. From the tenth or twelfth yeere of their age they carrie leaues, to the quantitie of Nuts, all the day in eyther cheeke, which they take not out, but when they receiue meate or drinke. With that Medicine they make their teeth blacke: they call other men, Women, for their white teeth, and Beasts for their haire. Their teeth continue to the end of their liues without ache or rottennesse.

When the men went on man-hunting (which they did sometimes in long and farre Expedions) the women manfully defended the Coast against their Enemies: and hence it is in Martyrs r iudgement, that the Spaniards tell of Ilands inhabited only with women: which may be f the true interpretation, happily, of I know not how many places in America, besides those of Asia and Africa, reported Amazonian. Pontius t would warre vpon the Canibals, but on the Iland of Guadalupea, his women were taken, his men slaine, himselfe forced to depart from that, both place and enterprise. Columbus in his second Voyage landed on this Iland, where he saw their round houses, hanging beds of Cotton, and certaine Images which he had thought had beene their Gods: but by Interpreters after learned, that they were but for ornament, and that they worshipped nothing but the Sunne and Moone, although they make certaine Images of Cotton, to the similitudes of such phantasies as (they sayd) appeared to them in the night. They found Earthen Vessels, like ours, also in their Kitchins, Mans flesh, Duckes flesh, and Goose flesh, all in one pot, and other on the Spits, readie to be laid to the fire. Entring into their inner Lodgings, they found Faggots of the bones of mens armes and legges, which they reserue to make heads for their Arrowes. They found in their Villages one Hall, or Palace, to which they assemble, as to their Theatre, or Playing place.

f Palephatus fab. l. 1. saith the Amazones were Thracian men, close shauen, in long garments, and therefore called women: but denieth, that there was euer any such Amazonian Expedition, as Histories speake of.

t Pet. Mart. Dec. 1. l. 2. Oviedo ge. hist. l. 3

The Inhabitants at the sight of the Spaniards were fled. In their houses they found about thirtie children Captiues, which were reserued to bee eaten, but they tooke them for their Interpreters. Here they had Parrots bigger then Phesants, with backes, brests, and bellies of Purple colour. They vsed to prey on Hispaniola, and Saint Iohns Ilands, or Buriquen: and if these, in their warres with the Canibals, tooke any of them, they were sure to goe to pot (euen in the first sense) and to be eaten. Master Perey saith in Guadalupa they found a Bath so hot, that it boyled them piece of Porke in halfe an houre. In Menis also they found a Bath like ours in England. In Mona they killed two wilde Boares, and saw a wilde Bull, which was an ell betweene the hornes. Three leagues from thence is Monetta, where the Fowles flew ouer them as thicke as haile, and made them deafe with their noyse: they cannot set foot on the ground, but shall tread on Fowles or Egges, wherewith they laded two Boates in three houres. Master Chalenge saith, that in the seuen Antiles of Saint Vincent, Granado, Lucia, Matalina, Dominica, Guadalupa, and Ayfey, are not aboue one thousand Indians. They brought away a Frier, named Blasius, which had beene sixteene monethes Slaue in Dominica, whom they saued, his fellowes beeing slaine, because hee taught them to make Sayles. M. Chalenge.

like

10 A little before Master Hawkins was there, in the yeere 1564. [u] a Spanish Carauell comming to water at Dominica, one of the Caniball Ilands, the Sauages cut her cable in the night, and so she draue on shore, and all her company was surprised and eaten by them.

u Nau. M. Iohn Hawkins ap. Hak tom. 3.

Master George Peercie relateth of the Dominicans (which they visited in their Virginia Voyage) that they paint themselues to keepe off the Muskitas: that they weare the haire of their heads a yard long, platted in three plaits, suffer none on their faces, cut their skinnes in diuers Workes or Embroderies: they eate their Enemies; lap spittle spit in to their mouthes like Dogges; worship the Deuill; poyson their Arrowes. When they were heere, they had sight of the chiefe game which Nature yeeldeth, the fight of the Whale with the Sword-fish and Thresher, which killed him in two houres fight. The Sword-fish is not [x] great, but 20 strong-made: his Sword groweth vpright out of his neck, like a bone, foure or fiue inches broad, and aboue a yard long (sometimes they are greater) with prickles on both sides. The Thresher hath a broad and thicke tayle. Both these hold a naturall conspiracie against this Giant of Nature, the one on the top [y] of the water threshing him vpon the head with violent blowes, that sound as a peece of Ordnance, and may be heard two leagues; forcing him to hide his head in his Mothers lap, which yet betrayeth him there to the Sword-fish, who is readie to receiue him on his Naturall Blade, and stayneth the Sea with his bloud. The Whale hath no remedie, but with bellowing grones, heard further then the Threshers blowes, to seeke to the shore, and there embayed to make his part good without danger of an Vnderminer: otherwise becomming prey to these his Aduersaries. Thus we see Greatnesse not 30 alway exempt from dangers, yea perishing by fine force of weaker Enemies. This our Author (for we cannot passe from Iland to Iland but by Sea, and may not be wholly idle by the way) telleth, that betwixt the Tropikes, they were attended continually with three kinds of Fishes, Dolphins, Bonitos, and Sharkes; the first like to the Rain-bow, his head differing from other fishes, being halfe a span straight vp erected from his mouth, the greatest foure foot long: a scole of these followed them neere one thousand leagues, knowne to bee the same, by some hurts wherewith they had marked them.

y The like Sea-hawking is betweene the flying fish (which hath as it were Bats wings) & the Bird Alcatraz, and the Bonito, the one in the Aire, the other in the Sea, pursuing him.

The Bonitos are like Mackrils, but greater, some as bigge as a man could lift. The Sharkes haue their mouthes vnder their bellies, that they cannot bite their prey without a halfe turne, and the helpe of his tayle. These are the most rauenous, and some hold, ominous: they 40 haue found in their bellies, Hats, Caps, Shooes, Ropes ends, and whatsoeuer hanged by the Ships sides: they haue thirteene rowes of teeth: They spawne not, but whelpe, like the Dogge, or Wolfe, and at night or towards stormes, receiue their young into their mouthes for safetie. I haue seene them (sayth Sir Richard) go in and out, being aboue a foot and halfe long. Little fishes alway accompany them, and feed on the scraps: they are lesse then a Pilchard, streaked blacke and white (as in coloured Liueries) keeping on the head, fins, and backe of the other.

Another obseruation of this our Author, is the Scuruie or Scorbute, [a] whereunto they are much subiect in Nauigations neere the Line; the cause he ascribeth, the weakenesse of the stomacke in immoderate heate; salt meates, specially fish, Calmes and the Sea-water, which 50 could not but infect the World, if it were not otherwise affected and moued with Windes, Tides, and Currents: an instance whereof he sheweth in the Queenes Nauie, in the yeere of our Lord 1590. at the Asores many moneths becalmed, the Sea thereby being repleniished with seuerall sorts of Gellies and formes of Serpents, Adders, and Snakes, Greene Yellow, Blacke, White, and some partie-coloured, whereof many had life, being a yard and halfe, or two yards long. And they could hardly draw a Bucket of water, cleere of some corruption withall. In twentie yeeres, wherein he vsed the Sea, hee could giue account of two thousand consumed with this disease.

a Oranges, Limons, and the like are excellent remedies to this disease.

In this Voyage, they were forced for want of fresh Water, to distill Sea-water, which they found wholsome and nourishing. I might follow our Author in his Obseruations of 62 these Seas (which he sayth, vnder the Line, is best to crosse in Ianuary, February, and March) and of the Ilands of Cape Verde [b] (elsewhere by vs obserued) being in the height of these Ilands, where now we are discouering: which he sayth, are the most vnwholsome in the World, b The flames of Fuego, hee saith, are seene twenty leagues in the Night.

World, and had halfe his people on this Coast ſicke of ſhaking, burning, frenzie-feuers: a man can ſcarcely goe on the Earth, though well ſhod, when the Sun ſhineth: and the Breeze, which in the afternoone cooles them from the North-eaſt, pierceth them alſo with ſudden cold; ſo that the Inhabitants goe thicke clothed with Caps and Kerchers, beſides their Hats, their Suites of thicke cloth, and Gownes well lined or furred to preuent danger. Sleeping in the open Ayre, or in the Moone-ſhine, is there very vnwholſome: The Moone ſhining on his ſhoulder on the Coaſt of Guinee, left him with ſuch paine, that for twentie houres ſpace he was like to run mad. But what Moone-ſhine hath made mee lunatike, to run from theſe American Ilands, to thoſe, and the Coaſt of Africa? Patience, Reader, and I will bring thee backe in a freſher purſuit.

In Dominica (where we were laſt on ſhore) it is related by one which wrote the Earle of Cumberland his Voyage to Port Rico, that they haue their ſeuerall Houſes to other vſes priuate, but haue a common Hall or Dyet for to eate in together, as Lycurgus inſtituted to preuent Riot, amongſt his Spartans. The Maydes in this Iland are ſaid to weare no Garters, and the firſt night of their Marriage they tye them ſo hard, that the fleſh hangs ouer. In Tortuga they tolled certaine Spaniards aſhoare, vnder pretence of Traffique, and then ate them.

Of Boriquen, Iamaica, Cuba, and the Lucayæ.

BOriquen c or Saint Iohn is three hundred miles long, and ſeuenty broad, trauerſed with a rough Mountayne, which yeelds many Riuers. The Spaniards haue there ſome Townes. The Earle of Cumberland in the yeere 1597. hauing by his Sea forces ſtayed the going of fiue Carikes to the Indies, whereby the King of Spaine loſt three Millions, and the Merchants foure times as much; ſayled to Saint Iohn Port Rico in this Iland, and tooke it with diuers Forts; here was a Biſhops See d and Cathedrall Church with a Fryery, foure hundred Souldiers in pay, beſides three hundred others: it was accounted the Mayden Towne and inuincible, and is the Spaniſh Key and their firſt Towne in the Indies. He brought from thence neere foureſcore caſt Peeces, and much other wealth. This Iland was firſt conquered by Iohn Ponce and by him inhabited: the Naturals were altogether like in Religion and manners to the Inhabitants of Hiſpaniola; and ſo were the Plants and Fruits alſo. Oniedo hath written hereof largely in his ſixteenth Booke. There growes the Tree called Legno Santo, more excellent then Guaiacan for the Neapolitan and many other diſeaſes: there is alſo white Gumme good for Ships in ſtead of Pitch, and there are Bats, which the Inhabitants did eate. Theſe Ilands are not ſo well peopled as in former times: and many of them are retyring places of Rebels and Fugitiues, which take this ſhelter againſt the Spaniſh cruelties. Hiſpaniola is the next Iland of name, but ſhall haue a place by it ſelfe, as a Map and Summarie of all the other.

d Ouied. l. 6. c. 1. mentions this Biſhopricke & Monaſterie.

e Of it reade Ouied. l. 18.

Iamaica is almoſt as large as Boriquen. e It is extremely ſubiect to the Vracani, which are ſuch terrible guſts of Winde, that nothing can reſiſt them. They turne vp Trees, ouer-turne Houſes, tranſport the Ships from Sea to Land, and bring with them a moſt dreadfull and horrible confuſion. They raigne, or tyrannize rather, in Auguſt, September, and October. f The Inhabitants are of quicker wits then the other Ilands.

Cuba is more Northerly, and g extendeth it ſelfe three hundred leagues in length, and twentie in bredth, full of Mountaynes, Woods, Fennes, Riuers, Lakes, both ſalt and freſh. This h Iland hath had many names giuen by the Spaniards: Fernandina, Ioanna, Alpha and Omega. The Woods are repleniſhed with Swine and Kine; the Riuers yeeld Golden Sands. It hath ſixe Spaniſh Colonies. Saint Iago, a Biſhops See, is the chiefe Towne in the Iland; and Hauana is the chiefe Port of the Indies. Oniedo reckons two things moſt admirable therein: one a Valley, trenling betweene two Hils three leagues, which produceth abundance of ſtones, enough to lade many Ships, of a perfect round forme, like Bullets: The other a Fountaine, whence Bitumen, or a certaine Pitchie ſubſtance floweth and floteth ieuen to the Sea, excellent for pitching of Ships. In this Iland the common people were prohibited the eating of Serpents, as being reſerued for Royall Dainties, and the Prerogatiues of the Kings Table.

ing behind her head, graſpeth it ſo faſt, that by no meanes it can be taken from her, till they draw her vp aboue the water, and then not able to abide the Aire, ſhe reſigneth her prey to the fiſhers, which leape out into the water, and take it; in recompence whereof they giue her part of her purchaſe. He found alſo in this Coaſt Waters, for the ſpace of fortie miles, white and thicke like Milke, and as though Meale had beene ſtrewed through that Sea: other waters he found [k] ſpotted with white and blacke, and others all blacke. An old man of foureſcore yeeres being a Gouernour in Iland, came to Columbus, and with great grauitie ſaluted him, and counſelled him to vſe his victories well, remembring, that the ſoules of men haue two Iournies, after they are departed from their bodies: The one foule and darke, prepared for iniurious and cruell perſons: the other pleaſant and delectable, for the peaceable, and louers of quiet.

[k] Botero.

Many other Ilands might be heere mentioned, and but mentioned: little to our purpoſe I finde in them. Of Acuſamil, neere Iucatan, is alreadie ſpoken. Of the Lucata or Iucata, the greateſt thing is their great number, which ſome [l] eſteeme aboue foure hundred. Lucaio is a generall or collectiue name, as Zeland, Lequio, Malacco. The Spaniards haue carried the Inhabitants, as Martyr ſignifieth, into ſeruitude, to ſatisfie their inſatiable deſire of Gold. The women of theſe Ilands were ſo faire, that many of the bordering Countries, forſooke their owne Countrie, and choſe this for their loue. Theſe women ware nothing till the time of their menſtruous purgation, at which time the Parents made a Feaſt, as if ſhee were to be married; and after that, ſhe weareth before thoſe parts Nets of Cotton, filled with leaues of Hearbs. They obey their King ſo ſtrictly, that if he command them to leape downe from an high Rocke, alledging no other reaſon then his will, they performe the ſame. But they are now, and were long ſince deſolate, [m] being waſted in the Mines of Hiſpaniola and Cuba, or by Diſeaſes and Famine, to the number of twelue hundred thouſand.

[m] Dec.7.8.

But I am loth to wilder my ſelfe further in this Wilderneſſe of Ilands (for ſo haue the Spaniards made them:) [n] Columbus in one Voyage gaue names to ſeuen hundred Ilands; of which I can report little fitting this our Pilgrimage. Hiſpaniola is the Lady and Queene of them all, and (as it were) the common Store-houſe of all their excellencies: and therefore we will there make ſome longer ſtay.

CHAP XIIII.

Of Hiſpaniola: and a touch homewards at Bermuda.

§. I.

The Names, naturall Rarities, and Creatures thereof.

HIſpaniola or Spagniola [o] is Eaſtward from Cuba, it was of the firſt Inhabitants called Quiſqueia, afterwards Haiti, and by Columbus [p] Cipanga and Ophir. The Spaniards call it as we firſt mentioned, and alſo Saint Dominike or Domingo of the chiefe Citie an Archiepiſcopall See. It contayneth in compaſſe fiue hundred and fiftie leagues. They called the Iland Quiſqueia, which ſignifieth Great and All, thinking that the Sunne gaue light to no other World then this, and the other Ilands adioyning. Haiti ſignifieth Craggie, and ſuch is the Iland in many places, with high Craggie Hils, ouerlooking the deepe and darke Valleyes. But in many places it is moſt beautifull and flouriſhing. It ſeemeth to enioy a perpetuall Spring, the trees alway flouriſhing, and the Medowes clothed in greene. The Ayre and the Waters are wholeſome. It is in manner equally diuided with foure great Riuers deſcending from high Mountaynes, whereof Iuana runneth Eaſt; Attibunicus, Weſt; Nabiba, to the South; and Iache, Northward. Some diuide it into fiue Prouinces, Caizcimu, Hubaba, Caibabo, Bainoa, Guaccaiarima. In the firſt of theſe there is a great Caue, in a hollow Rocke, vnder the root of a high Mountayne about two furlongs from the Sea; the entrie is like the doores of a great Temple. Many Riuers ſtole their waters from the ſight of the Sun, the vſe of men, and the ordinary Officers of Neptunes Cuſtome-houſe, and by ſecret paſſages came and hid themſelues in this Caue. So the Ilanders imagined, ſeeing diuers riuers ſwallowed vp of the earth, after they had runne foureſcore and ten miles, and ſuch a ſinke or channell of waters in the Caue.

The Ilanders beleeued, that the Iland had a vitall ſpirit, and that there it doth breathe: and a hole therein is the female nature thereof (for of that ſexe they deeme it) euen as Antiquitie conceited the ebbing and flowing of the Sea to be the breath of Demogorgon.

Dec.7.8. Andreas Moralis entred in with his ſhip, which was almoſt ſwallowed with the Whirlepooles, and boyling of the water. Clouds engendred of thoſe watery conflicts, and darkneſſe, layed hold on his eyes; terrible noyſe, as of the fals of Nilus, made deafe his eares, that when with labour he had gotten out, he ſeemed to haue eſcaped the barkings of Cerberus, & the obſcure Vaults of Hel. Vpon the tops of high Mountaynes, the ſame Moralis ſaw a Lake, three miles in compaſſe, into which many little Riuers ran, without any other apparant iſſue.

In Bainoa is a Lake of Salt water, notwithſtanding it receiueth foure great freſh Riuers from the Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, and twenty ſmaller: and within a furlong of the Lake, on the Northſide, are two hundred freſh-ſprings. It is thought to haue a large entercourſe with the Ocean, becauſe they are Sharkes (great Sea-fiſhes, which deuoure men) in the ſame. Here are ſtormes and tempeſts, which ſeeme to bee the Caters and Purueyors for thoſe fiſhes, in drowning many. Diuers other Lakes are mentioned in this Iland; one whereof partly Salt, partly freſh, is fiue and twenty miles long, and eight broad. They are all in a large Plaine 120. miles in length & bredth, betweene 18. and 25. There is another Vale 200. miles long, and broader then the former: another as broad as that, which is 180. miles long.

Bart. de las Caſas telleth of a Kingdome in Hiſpaniola, called Magna, which ſignifieth a Plaine, compaſſed about with Hils, which watered the ſame with 30000. Riuers and Brookes; twelue of them were very great: and all which come from the Weſt (twenty thouſand in number) are enriched with Gold.

Cotebi is a Plaine on the tops of Hils, ſo high, that it is ſubiect to the foure ſeaſons of the yeere. There is alſo another Region of the ſame name, moſt barren, and yet moſt rich; full of Mynes, otherwiſe vnfruitfull; a thing common in Nature, that great Mynes vndermine fertilitie; and not ſtrange amongſt men, that the greateſt hoorders of Treaſures are the moſt vnfruitfull, and barren in good workes. The Gold (they ſay) is as a liuing tree, which rooting in the centre of the Earth, ſendeth forth branches vnto the vppermoſt face of the earth, and there ſheweth forth certaine beautifull colours in ſtead of flowres, round ſtones of Golq Dec.1.4. den Earth in ſtead of Fruits, and thinne Plates in ſtead of Leaues. From this Iland q was yeerely brought foure or fiue hundred thouſand Duckets of Gold. They imagine ſome Diuine Nature to bee in Gold, and therefore neuer gather it, but they vſe certaine Religious expiations, abſtayning from women, delicate meates and drinkes, and all other pleaſures.

There is an Iland a little from Hiſpaniola, which hath a Fountaine in it, comming by ſecret paſſages vnder the Earth and Sea, and riſeth in this Iland: which they beleeue, becauſe it bringeth with it the leaues of many trees, which grow in Hiſpaniola, and not in this Iland;

L.6.C.12. the Spaniards call the Ile Arethuſa. Onedo mentions a little Iland betweene this and Iamaica, called Nauazza, halfe a league from which are many Rockes in the Sea about fiue foot couered with water: out of which iſſueth and ſpouteth, aboue the water of the Sea, a ſpout of freſh water as great as a mans arme, that it may bee receiued and taken ſweet and good. This was ſeene by Stephano della Rocca a man of good credit.

r R. Tomſon. ap. Hak. tom.3. The Ile r of Hiſpaniola is much infeſted with Flyes, or Gnats, whoſe pricking cauſeth wonderfull ſwelling: alſo there is a Worme called Nigua, which creepeth into the ſoles of mens feet, and makes them grow as bigge as a mans head, with extremitie of paine; for which they haue no remedy, but to open the fleſh ſometimes three or foure inches, and ſo

s Mart.dec.7.9. Ouied.l.15.c.8. digge them out. The Gnats s are ſo troubleſome, that the Inhabitants doe therefore build low Houſes, and make little doores, which they keepe cloſe, and forbeare to light Candles. Nature hath to this diſeaſe ordained a remedy, namely, certaine Creatures, called Cucuy, which is a kind of Beetles. Theſe haue foure lights, which ſhine in the night; two in the ſeate of his eyes, and two which he ſheweth when hee openeth his wings. The people get theſe and bring them to their houſes, which there doe them a double ſeruice: they kill the Gnats, and giue ſo much light, that men may ſee to reade and write Letters by the light of one; and many of them ſeeme as ſo many Candles. They had but three ſorts of foure-footed Beaſts, and thoſe very little. Now men are exhauſt, and Beaſts multiplyed, in ſo ſtrange manner, that one which was Deane of the Conception, carrying a Cow thither, ſhee was aliue ſix and twentie yeeres after, and her fruitfull generation was multiplyed in the Iland to eight hundred. They are now growne wild, as their Dogges alſo. They kill their Kine for the Hides: fiue and thirtie thouſand were tranſported to Spaine when Acoſta returned, in the yeere of our Lord 1587. Ants haue beene as noyſome to Hiſpaniola, as Graſſhoppers in many parts of the World: in the yeere 1519. and two yeeres after they ruined their Farme-houſes,

houſes, and ſpoyled their Oranges, Cannafiſtula, and their fruit-trees. They could keepe nothing in their houſes which was fit to be eaten, from them: and if they had continued in like quantitie, they would haue dishabited the Iland and left it deſolate. But they choſe by lot a Saint, to whoſe tuition they might commit themſelues in that extremitie, which fell vpon Saturninus, who was faine to become their Patron againſt the Piſmires. Theſe Ants were little and blacke: another ſort were enemies to theſe, and wrought againſt them and chaſed them out of their holds, and were not hurtfull, but as good Benefactors (if Oniedo ſay true of them) as I can beleeue of Saturninus. Other ſorts there are many, of which ſome become winged and fill the Aire with ſwarmes: which ſometimes happens in England. On Bartholomew day 1613. I was in the Iland of Foulneſſe on our Eſſex ſhore, where were ſuch cloudes of theſe flying Piſmires, that we could no were flie from them, but they filled our clothes; yea the floores of ſome houſes where they fell, were in a manner couered with a blakee Carpet of creeping Ants; which they ſay drowne themſelues about that time of the yeere in the Sea. Oniedo tels of other Ants with white heads, which eate through wals and timbers of houſes and cauſe them to fall. There are ſome Caterpillers a ſpan long, and others leſſe, but more venemous. There are Wormes which doe ſo much harme in Timber, that a houſe of thirty yeeres in this Iland would be ruinous, and ſeeme as old as one of a hundred in Spaine; and thoſe which could not be old when hee wrote this, ſeemed as if they had ſtood 150. yeeres. Many other ſmall creatures this our Author mentions, but my Relations would be too great if I ſhould follow him.

§. II.

Of their Idols, Songs and Dances, Prieſts, Oracles, Superſtitious Opinions and Cuſtomes.

BEfore the Diſcouerie of this Iland by Columbus and the Spaniards, theſe Ilanders of Hiſpaniola were forewarned thereof by Oracle. Their [t] Cacikes and Bubiti (that is, their Kings and Prieſts) reported to Columbus, that the Father of Garionexius, the preſent King, and another Cacike, would needs be importunate demanders of their Zemes, or Gods of future euents, and therefore abſtayned fiue dayes together from all meate and drinke, ſpending the time in continuall mourning. The Zemes made anſwere, That there would come, not many yeeres after, vnto that Iland, a ſtrange Nation, clothed, bearded, armed with ſhining Swords, that would cut a man aſunder in the middle; which ſhould deſtroy the ancient Images of their Gods, aboliſh their Rites, and ſlay their children. To remember this Oracle, they compoſed a mournfull Dittie, which they call Areito, which on ſome ſolemne dayes they vſed to ſing. Their Prieſts were Phiſicians and Magicians, or Diuinours.

Oniedo ſayth, that they danced at ſinging of their Areiti or Ballads, which word I vſe becauſe it hath that deriuation which argueth dancing aſwell as ſinging. Theſe dances are generall thorow America. In this Iland they danced, ſometimes men alone, and ſometimes women alone, but in great Solemnities they were mixed, and danced in a circle, one leading the dance; the meaſures whereof were compoſed to the Areito, of which one ſang a Verſe, and all the reſt followed ſinging and dancing, and ſo thorow euery Verſe of the ſame till it was ended, which ſometimes continued till the next day. Anacaona the widow of the Cacique Caonabo, entertained the Spaniards with a dance of three hundred Maids. Thus theſe Areitos were their Chronicles and Memorials of things paſſed, as we read of the Bards in theſe parts. They vſed ſometimes Drummes or Tabers to theſe dances, made onely of wood, hollow, and open right againſt that place where they did ſtrike. In ſome places they couered them with Deere skins, but here were no beaſts in this Iland that could yeeld any for ſuch purpoſe. They had Tobacco in Religious eſtimation, not onely for ſanitie, but for ſanctitie alſo, [u] as Oniedo writeth, the ſmoke whereof they tooke in at the Noſe with a forked Pipe fitted to both noſthrils, holding the ſingle end in the ſmoke of the hearbe burning in the fire, till they became ſenſeleſſe. Their Prieſts moſt vſed this, which comming to themſelues after this ſleepie fume, deliuered the Oracles of their Zemes or Deuils, which ſometimes ſpake by them.

[y] They worſhipped the Sunne, and prayed to it at Sun-riſing.

Now concerning the Zemes (which could foretell that which they could not auert) and the Superſtitions of Hiſpaniola, [x] the Spaniards had beene long in the Iland before they knew, that the people worſhipped any thing but [y] the Lights of Heauen; but after, by further conuerſing and liuing amongſt them, they came to know more of their Religion, of which, one Ramonus, a Spaniſh Heremite, writ a Booke, and Martyr hath borrowed of him to lend vs. It is apparant by the Images which they worſhipped, that there appeared vnto them certaine illuſions of euill Spirits. Theſe Images they made of Goſſampine Cotten hard ſtopped, ſitting, like the Pictures of the Deuill, which they called Zemes; whom they take to be the Mediators and Meſſengers of the great God, which they acknowledge, One, Eternall, Infinite, Omnipotent, Inuiſible. Of theſe they thinke they obtayne raine, or faire weather; and when they goe to the warres, they haue certaine little ones which they bind to their fore-heads. Euery King hath his particular Zemes, which he honoureth. They call the eternall God by theſe two names, Iocauna, and Guamanomocon, as their Predeceſſors taught them affirming, That he hath a Father called by theſe fiue names, Attabeira, Mamona Guacarapita, Liella, Guimazoa.

They make the Zemes of diuers matter and forme: ſome of Wood, as they were admoniſhed by certaine Viſions appearing to them in the Woods: others, which had receiued anſwere of them among the Rocks, make them of Stone: ſome of Roots, to the ſimilitude of ſuch as appeare to them when they gather the Roots whereof they make their bread, thinking that the Zemes ſent them plenty of theſe Roots. They attribute a Zemes to the particular tuition of euery thing; as ſometimes the Pagan, and now the Popiſh Romanes: ſome aſſigned to the Sea, others to Fountaynes, Woods, or other their peculiar charges. When the Beity conſult with the Zemes, they goe into the Houſe dedicated to him, and with the powder of the herbe Cohobba, ſnuffed into their noſthrils, are diſtracted; after which, returning as out of a trance, he telleth, That the Zemes had ſpoken to him, and vttereth his Reuelations. They ſay, That a certaine King, called Guamaretus, had a Zemes, whoſe name was Corochotum, which often vſed to deſcend from the top of the houſe, where Guamaretus kept him cloſe bound: the cauſe of his breaking looſe was either to hide himſelfe, or to goe ſeeke for meate, or elſe for the act of generation: and that ſometimes being offended, that the King Guamaretus had not honoured him diligently, hee was wont to lie hid for certaine dayes. In this Kings Village were ſome children borne with two Crownes, which they ſuppoſed to be the iſſue of this Zemes. And when this Village was burned by the Enemie, this Zemes brake his band, and was found a furlong off, without any harme. He had another Zemes called Epileguanita, made of wood, being in ſhape like a foure-footed Beaſt, which went often from the place where he was honoured, into the woods. When they perceiued that he was gone, a great multitude gathered together to ſeeke him, with deuout Prayers: and when they had found him, brought him home religiouſly on their ſhoulders, to the Chappell dedicated vnto him. But after the Spaniards comming into the Iland, hee fled for altogether; and could neuer be found; whereby they diuined the deſtruction of their country.

They honoured another Zemes, in the likeneſſe of a woman, on whom waited two other, like men. One of theſe executed the office of a Meſſenger to the Zemes, that had authoritie of Clouds, Winds, and Raine, & are at command of this woman: the other performed the like to the Zemes of the waters that fall from the Hils, that being looſed, they might breake into flouds, and ouerflow the Countrey, if the people doe not giue due honour to her Image.

a Mart. Dec. 2. lib. 6. Let vs adde to this Relation of the Zemes of Hiſpaniola a an accident in Cuba. A Mariner being ſicke, was there left on ſhore, who recouering, grew into fauour with the King, and was employed in his warres with great ſucceſſe againſt the Enemie. He attributed his victories to the Virgin Mary, whoſe Picture hee had in his boſome. The King by his perſwaſion reiected his Zemes, and dedicated a Chappell and Altar to this Picture, whither hee and all his Family reſorted a little before the Sun-ſet, bowing their heads, and ſaying, Aue Maria, Aue Maria; further they could not ſay. They beſet the ſame with Iewels, and many Earthen pots, ſome with ſundry meates, ſome with water, round about the Tabernacle, which they offered in ſtead of ſacrifice, as before they had done to their Zemes. Being demanded, why they did thus, they anſwered, Leſt it ſhould lacke meate. For they beleeue, that Images may hunger, and doe eate and drinke.

They told of this Picture, That being carried with them into the warres (as they vſe to bring their Zemes with them into the battle.) This made the Zemes of the enemy turne his backe; yea, a woman (a lye, or a Deuill) deſcended in the ſight of them all to play the Bellona for her followers; and in a contention betwixt them, whether the Zemes or this Ladie were more excellent, two young men of each ſide were bound, and whether Deitie ſhould looſen her party, that ſhould be their God. Both inuoke: the Deuill appeared in vgly ſhape, and by and by a faire Virgin, whereat the Deuill vaniſhed (doe you beleeue it?) and the Virgin with touch of a Rod looſed her mans hands, which were found on the other aduerſe party, being now double bound. Thus can the Deuill transforme himſelfe into an Angell of Light, at Loretto, in Hiſpaniola, and where elſe ſoeuer hee can bee entertained; the name of Saints, and promiſe of Heauen, ſhall further his Helliſh deſignes.

They

They had festiuall Solemnities in Hispaniola [b] to their Zemes, whereunto the Kings summoned their Subiects by publike Cryers: and they, neatly dressed after their manner, painted with diuers colours of hearbs, resorted thither, with their armes, thighes, legs, adorned with shels, to make Musicke in their dancing. Thus they presented themselues before the King, who sate drumming at the entrance of the Gate. When they were to sacrifice, they purged themselues first, thrusting downe a sacred hooke into their throat, and by vomit emptied their bodies. After, they went into the Kings Court, and all sate in a Ring about the Idoll, crosse-legged like Taylors, and wry-necked for reuerence, praying, that their Sacrifice might be accepted. The women in another place, when the Priests gaue warning, fell to dancing and singing (in manner as is before expressed) the prayse of their Zemes, and offered Cakes in baskets, concluding with Songs in prayse of their ancient Kings, and Prayers for future prosperitie. After this, both Sexes kneeled downe, and offered their Cakes; which the Priests receiuing, cut in pieces, giuing to euery man a portion, which hee kept vntouched the whole yeere, for a holy Relique, esteeming that house in danger of Fire and Whirle-winds, that is not preserued with this reserued piece of Cake. They seemed sometimes to heare a voyce from their Zemes, (whether by the illusion of the Priests, or the Deuill) which the Priests interpreted by their behauiour: for if they danced and sung, all was well: but if they went sorrowfully, the people went forth sighing, and gaue themselues to fasting, euen to extreme faintnesse with weeping, vntill they thought their Zemes reconciled. In this Iland they had [c] as many wiues as they were able to sustaine: the Cacique Behechius had thirtie, two of which were buried with him perforce. Some of them were addicted to lusts of Sodomie, and others more (if more may be) vnnaturall. Generally they were very luxurious, both men and women: yet they abstained from Mother, Sister, and Daughter (other degrees they spared not) thinking that such Incest would bring them to an euill death. In their buying and selling they weighed not the worth of things, but onely their owne fancie, as we see in Children. Theeues they cruelly punished, empaling them on sharpe stakes aliue.

Sacrifices.

Touching the originall of man, thus they fable. There is in the Iland a Region called Caunana, where they faine that Mankind came first out of two Caues of a Mountayne called Cauta: and that the biggest sort of men came forth of the mouth of the biggest Caue, and the least sort out of the least Caue: this Caue they name Amaiauna, the greater, Cazibaxagua. Before men might come out of the Caue, the mouth thereof was kept and watched nightly, by a man whose name was Machocbael, who departing further to looke abroad, was by the Sunne (the sight of whom he was forbidden) turned into a stone. They faine the like of others turned into trees; for going so farre a fishing in the night, that they could not returne before the rising of the Sunne. A certaine Ruler also, called Vagoniona, sent one forth of the Caue a fishing, who by the Sunnes surprisall, was turned into a Nightingale, which therefore in the night bewayleth his misfortune. Vagoniona sore troubled with this losse, leauing the men in the Caue, brought forth the women and sucking children, and leauing the women in an Iland of that Tract, called Matinino, carried the children away with him, which being oppressed with famine, fainted; and remayned on the bankes of a certaine Riuer, where they were turned to Frogs, and cryed toa, toa, as children with them vse to cry for the dugge. And hence also come those pittifull cryings of the Frogs in the Spring-time. As for Vagoniona, he by speciall priuiledge was not transformed: wandering in diuers places, he descended to a certaine faire woman, whom he saw in the bottome of the Sea, and receiued of her bright plates of Laten, and a kind of stones which their Kings greatly esteemed. Another Caue they had (for the former tale is endlesse, as Superstition commonly is) called Iouanaboina, adorned with Pictures of a thousand fashions. In the entrance were two grauen Zemes, whereof one was called Binthaitel, and the other Marohu. Out of this Caue they say the Sunne and Moone first came to giue light to the World. They made as Religious concourse to these Caues, as they which goe on Pilgrimage to Rome, Compostella, or Ierusalem.

They had a superstitious conceit of their dead: who (they thought) walked in the night, and eate the fruit Guannaba (which is like to a Quince) and that they would deceiue women, in taking the shape of men; making, as though they would haue to doe with them, and suddenly vanish away. If any feeling a strange thing in his bed, made doubt whether it were a dead bodie, he might be resolued by feeling on his belly, because these Ghosts could take all other members of mans bodie, but not the nauell (as some with vs imagine that the Deuill can take the whole shape of a man, onely his clawes excepted:) these dead men, they say, often met them by the way, and if a man were not afraid, they vanished; but if hee were afraid, they would assault him, and many hereby haue beene taken with the losse of their limbes. These Superstitions were left them by tradition in Rithmes and Songs from their fore-fathers, which it was lawfull for none to learne, but onely the Kings Sonnes. They ſung them before the people on ſolemne Feaſts, playing on an inſtrument like a Timbrel. Their Boiti or Prieſts inſtruct them in theſe Superſtitions: theſe are alſo Phyſicians, making the people beleeue that they obtaine health for them of the Zemes. They tye themſelues to much faſting, and outward cleanlineſſe and purging; eſpecially where they take vpon them the cure of great men: for then they drunk the powder of a certayne herbe, which brought them into a furie, wherein they ſaid they learned many things of their Zemes.

Much adoe they make about the ſicke partie, deforming themſelues with many geſtures, breathing, blowing, ſucking the forehead, temples, and necke of the patient; ſometimes alſo ſaying that the Zemes is angry for not erecting a Chappell, or dedicating to him a Groue or Garden, or the neglect of other holies. And if the ſicke partie dye, his Kinſfolkes by Witchcraft enforce the dead to ſpeake, and tell them whether he dyed by naturall deſtinie, or by the negligence of the Boiti, in not faſting the full due, or miniſtring conuenient medicine: ſo that if theſe Phyſicians be found faulty, they take reuenge of them. They vſed in miniſtring their Phyſicke, to put certayne ſtones or bones in their mouthes, which if the women can get, they keepe religiouſly, beleeuing them to be profitable for them in trauell, and honour them, as they doe their Zemes.

When their Kings dyed, they buried the beſt beloued of their Concubines with them, who alſo had other women buried for their attendants, together with their Iewels and Ornaments. They had in the Sepulchre beſide them a cup full of water, and ſome of their Caſſani-bread. Hiſpaniola is (ſayth Herera) in 19. degrees and an halfe, hath ten Spaniſh Townes, and hath ſometime had in it fourteene thouſand Caſtilians. Ouiedo reporteth of a Huricano or Tempeſt, which, 1508. threw downe all the houſes, except ſome which were built of ſtone in Domingo: and the whole Towne of Buona Ventura changed his name into Mala Ventura, being hereby quite ouerthrowne. Twentie Sayle and more were loſt in the Harbour of Domingo. Many men were lifted vp and carried in the Ayre many Bowſhots, ſome being thereby miſerably bruiſed. In Iuly the next yeere happened another more terrible then the former. But now, ſayth hee, theſe Huracanes are nothing ſo fierce ſince the Sacrament is placed in the Churches.

§. III.

Of the Bermudas, or Sommers Ilands.

HAuing thus wearied you with this long ſtay in Hiſpaniola (by which yee may gueſſe of the neighbouring Ilands) we will haſte homeward, and not touching in any Iland by the way (for we could but touch and away) we may aduenture, notwithſtanding the wonted danger, vpon Bermuda. Danger hath made it now not ſo dangerous: necuments haue beene documents. For while ſome haue beene wracked there, they haue made vertue of Neceſſitie, and ſo well obſerued the Coaſt, that skill hath almoſt ſecured that, which Nature had ſeemed to ſet there in defiance both of Habitation and Nauigation, to both which it is now ſubiected by our Nation. It was called Bermuda, as [d] Ouiedo ſayth, of Iohn Bermudez which firſt diſcouered it, and Garza, of the ſhips name wherein hee then ſayled: Ouiedo writeth that hee was iuſt by it, and had thought to haue ſent ſome Hogs on ſhore there to haue multiplyed, but by force of tempeſt was driuen thence: and others eyther of like purpoſe, or by force of ſhipwracke haue ſince done it. It [e] is alſo called the Iland of Deuils, which they ſuppoſe inhabit there; and the Inchanted Iland: but theſe are inchanted conceits. Iob [f] Hortop relateth, That in the height of Bermuda they had ſight of a Sea-monſter, which three times ſhewed himſelfe from the middle vpwards, in ſhape like a man of the complexion of a Mulato or tawny Indian. But this name was giuen it not of ſuch Monſters, but of the monſtrous tempeſts which here they haue often ſuſtayned. Sir G. Sommers hath deſerued that it ſhould beare his name, by his indeuours thereabouts teſtified in life and death. Hee with Sir Thomas Gates, as before is ſaid, were wrackt on the Iland, which loſſe turned to ſome gaine, as if God would giue them this into the Virginia-bargaine. Before, Anno 1593. Henry [g] May, an Engliſhman, in a French ſhip was wracked thereon, and hath giuen vs ſome Diſcourſe thereof: more fully hath Syluester [h] Iourdan, one of that Virginian Company, one of the company of thoſe worthy Knights, in a Treatiſe of that ſhipwracke, and the Diſcouerie of Bermuda. The Commodities whereof, he reckoneth, varietie of fiſhes, plentie of Hogges (which it ſeemeth haue eſcaped out of ſome wrackes) diuers Fruits, Mulberries, Silke-wormes, Palmitos, Cedars, Pearles, Ambergriſe: But the moſt ſtrange thing ſeemes the varietie of Fowle, of which they they tooke a thousand of one sort in two or three houres, being as bigge as a Pidgeon, and laying speckled Egges, as bigge as Hens Egges, on the sand, where they come and lay them daily, although men sit downe amongst them. When Sir Thomas Gates his men haue taken a thousand of them, Sir George Sommers men haue stayed a while by them, and brought away as many more. Another Fowle there is, that liueth in holes, like Cony-holes; their Egges like in quantity and qualitie to Hen-egges. Other Birds were so gentle, that whistling to them, they would come and gaze on you, while with your sticke you might kill them. Other Egges they had of Tortoyses, a bushell in the belly of one very sweet: they tooke forty of them in a day: and one would serue fiftie men at a meale. Two were there borne, and other two married, to make the most naturall possession thereof for our Nation; which now in hope of good successe hath there planted an habitation. That wracked Company built there a Ship and a Pinnasse, and set saile for Virginia.

William Strachie in a large Discourse, with his fluent and copious pen hath described that tempest which brought them to this Iland, affirming that there was not an houre in foure dayes, in which they freed not out of their almost captiued Ship, twelue hundred Barricoes of water, each containing sixe gallons, and some eight: besides three Pumps continually going: euery foure houres they bestowed an hundred tuns of water on the cruell Sea, which seemed the more hungry after their bodies, or thirstie for their bloud from Tuesday noone till Friday noone, they bayled and pumped two thousand tunnes, and were ten foot deepe; nor could haue holden out one day longer, when they first had sight of the Bermudas. These (he sayth) are an Archipelagus of broken Ilands, not fewer then fiue hundred, if all may be so called which lye by themselues: the greatest (which lyeth like an halfe moone) is in 32. degrees 20. minutes. At their first landing they killed with Bats seuen hundred Fowles, like to Guls, at one time. The Ilands seeme rent with tempests of Thunder, Lightning, and Raine, which threaten in time to deuoure them all: the stormes in the full and change keepe their vnchangeable round Winter and Summer, rather thundring then blowing from euery corner, sometimes 48. houres [i] together; especially when the Halo (or circle about the Moone) appeareth, which is often, and there foure times as large as with vs. The North and Nort hwest winds cause Winter in December, Ianuary, and February: yet not such, but then young Birds to be seene. Without knowledge a Boat of ten tuns cannot be brought in, and yet within is safe harbour for the greatest Ships. They found there for their sustenance wild Palmitos, the tops of which trees rosted did eate like fried Melons, sodden, like Cabbages: with the leaues they couered their Cabins: Berries blacke and round, as bigge as a Damson, ripe in December, and very luscious: in the Winter they shed their leaues. No Iland in the World had more or better Fish. Of Fowles was great varietie. They killed a wild Swan. Some there are which breed in high Ilands in holes, to secure them from the Swine. They haue their seasons, one kind succeeding another. Besides this reliefe of Fowles, they had plenty of Tortoise Egges, which they lay as bigge as Goose Egges, and commit to the Sun and Sands hatching nurserie. They had sometimes fiue hundred in one of them. Euen heere (lest the Iland should lose that former name of Deuils) some entred into Deuillish conspiracie three seuerall time. Some were banished, and after reconciled. Henry Paine was shot to death. Some fled to the Woods, but all reduced, except Christopher Carter [k] and Robert Waters. But these Ilands haue now beene possessed diuers yeeres by an English Colonie; and my friend Master Barkley (which hath beene there, and is now [l] onwards on a second Voyage thither) seemeth rauished with the naturall endowments, both for health and wealth, of these Ilands: which now are to be shared amongst the Aduenturers, and fortified against all inuasions; Nature it selfe being herein readie to further their securitie against the greatest forren force, mustering winds (which some say are violent further off, but calmer neere the Ilands) and Rockes many leagues into the Sea, for their defence: which now yet they are gone to strengthen, both with men and munition. The Colonie that is there, haue not onely sent verball, but reall commendations of the place: as may appeare by a Treatise [m] thereof lately set forth by one, which in the Shippe called the Plough, sayled thither Anno 1612. wherein is declared the Commodities there found, as Mullets, Breames, Lobstars, and Angel-fish, Hog-fish, Rock-fish, &c. as before is said. The Ayre is very healthfull, as their experience (the best argument) hath found, and agreeing well with English bodies: the ground as fertile as any (they say) in the World: Ambergreece, Pearle, Cedars and other vnknowne Timbers: store of Whales and other Commodities, which would bee tedious to rehearse: which I hope and pray, may further prosper, to the profit of this and the Virginia Plantations. From hence and thence, I am now passing in an English Ship for England, where to passe away tediousnesse of the Voyage, I will entertayne my Reader with a Discourse of the more then tedious and fastidious Spanish cruelties.

W. Strachie.

i My friend Master Barkley a Merchant, reports better of the Bermudas seasonablenesse, &c. and the Plantation it selfe testifieth the health and wealth thereof.

k He continued there til the Colonie was planted.

l Anno 1614.

m Newes from Bermudas, or Sommer Ilands. There is report of some English this Winter come home, which came from Bermuda to Ireland in a little Boat, &c. which I write not, for want of certaine intelligence neither (for that cause) of the present state of the Colonie, which (some say) are neere 700. English, &c.

CHAP. XV.

Of the Spaniſh cruelties in the Weſt Indies: and of their peruerſe Conuerſion of the Indians vnto Chriſtianitie.

FOr as much as the Papiſts doe vſually glory in the purchaſe of a New World vnto their Religion, and would haue men beleeue, that ſince this Scripture-Hereſie hath made new Rome to tremble now, no leſſe then Hannibal did her Pagan-mother, they haue a new [a] ſupply with much aduantage in this Weſterne World of America; and they make this their Indian Conuerſion, one of the Markes of [b] the trueneſſe and Catholiciſme of their Church, which hath gained (if Poſſeuine lye not) an hundred times as much in the New World towards the Weſt, South, and Eaſt, by new Conuerts, as it hath loſt in the North parts by Heretickes: where through both the Hemiſpheres (ſaith Hill) theſe thouſand yeeres, nay as farre as the Sunne ſhineth, there is no tongue, nor people, nor climate, which hath not in ſome meaſure (ſuch a meaſure perhaps as he meaſured his truth and wit withall in this aſſertion) the Catholike Roman Religion: I would we could borrow the height of this Hill, whereon to ſtand and ouer-view ſo many parts of the World yet vnknowne, and learne of this Giant Atlas (how eaſily may this Mute become a Liquid?) which beareth thus the Hemiſphere of his Roman Heauen on his mounting ſhoulders, a new Geographie. But his impudencie is already ſufficiently whipped and expoſed to the Worlds deriſion, by Him, the neereneſſe of whoſe preſence doth now ſo much glad me after ſo long and farre a Pilgrimage. His learned Pen hath ſhewed the like bold brags of Briſtow and Stapleton his Maſters, and prooued them Fables. For further confutation whereof, it ſhall not be amiſſe to obſerue the proceedings of the Spaniards in theſe parts. And herein we will vſe the witneſſe of men of their owne Romiſh Religion. Ioſephus [c] Acoſta, a Ieſuite, writeth, that the Indians conceiue an implacable hatred againſt the Faith, by the ſcandall of the Spaniards cruelties: and that they haue baptized ſome by force. Vega [d] accuſeth them of baptizing without making them know the faith, or taking knowledge of their life. And how could it otherwiſe be, when [*] we find it recorded of ſundry of their Preachers, that baptized each one of them aboue an hundred thouſand, and that in few yeeres? In ſo much that (as is ſtoried by Surius) it is to be found among the Records of Charles the fift, that ſome old Prieſt hath baptized ſeuen hundred thouſand, another three hundred thouſand. Some of theſe were ſo good Chriſtians, that they ſtill continued (as Nunno de Guzman writeth to the Emperour) the Sacrifices of humane fleſh. Oniedo writeth, that they haue but the name of Chriſtians, and are baptized rather becauſe they are of age, then for deuotion to the faith; and none, or very few of them are Chriſtians willingly.

He that will read what they lately haue done in Spaine with the remnants of the Moores, may perhaps ſatisfie himſelfe with the reaſons of [e] Frier Fonſeca, in defence thereof. But for the poore Indians, Bartholomæus de las Caſas, a [f] Dominike Frier, of the ſame Order with Fonſeca, and after a Biſhop in America, hath written a large and vnanſwerable Treatiſe of the enormous cruelties, and vnchriſtian Antichriſtian proceedings in the New World, the ſumme whereof is this, That the Indians were a ſimple harmeleſſe people, loyall to their Lords, and ſuch as gaue no cauſe to the Spaniards of diſlike, till they by extreame iniuries were prouoked: they are alſo docible and pliant, both to good doctrine and liuing. To theſe Lambes, ſayth he, the Spaniards came as cruell and hungry Tygres, Beares, and Lions, intending nothing thoſe forty yeeres (hee wrote this Anno 1542.) but bloud and ſlaughter, to ſatisfie their Auarice and Ambition: inſomuch that of three Millions of people, which were contayned in Hiſpaniola of the Naturall Inhabitants, there ſcarce remayned at that time three hundred, and now as Alexandro Vrſino reporteth, none at all: onely two and twenty thouſand Negros, and ſome Spaniards reſide there.

Cuba, and the other Ilands had indured the like miſerie, and in the firme Land ten Kingdomes, greater then all Spaine, were diſpeopled and deſolate, and in that ſpace there had not periſhed leſſe then twelue Millions by their tyrannie: and he might truly ſay that fifty Millions had payed Natures debt.

In the Iland Hiſpaniola the Spaniard had their firſt Indian habitations, where their cruelties draue the Indians to their ſhifts, and to their weake defence, which cauſed thoſe enraged Lions, to ſpare neyther man, woman, nor childe: they ripped vp the great bellied women, and would lay wagers, who could with moſt dexteritie ſtrike off an Indians head, or ſmite him aſunder in the middle: they would plucke the Infants by the heeles from their Mothers breſts, and daſh out their braines againſt the ſtones, or with a ſcoffe hurle them into the Riuer. They ſet vp Gibbets, and in honour of Chriſt and his twelue Apoſtles (as they ſaid, and could the Deuill ſay worſe?) they would both hang and burne them. Others they tooke, and cutting their hands almoſt off, bid them carry thoſe Letters (their hands dropping bloud, and almoſt dropping off themſelues) to their Countrimen, which (for feare of the like) lay hidden in the Mountaines. The Nobles and Commanders, they broyled on Gridirons: I once (ſayth our Author) ſaw foure or fiue of the chiefe of them thus roaſted, which making a lamentable noyſe, the nicer Captaine bade they ſhould be ſtrangled, but the cruell Tormentor choſe rather to ſtop their mouthes, ſo to preuent their out-cryes, and to continue their broyling till they were dead. They had Dogs to hunt them out of their couerts, which deuoured the poore ſoules: and becauſe ſometimes the Indians, thus prouoked, would kill a Spaniard, if they found opportunitie, they made a Law, that a hundred of them ſhould for one Spaniard be ſlaine. The King of Magua offered to till the ground for them fifty miles ſpace, if they would ſpare him and his people from the Mynes. The Captaine in recompence deflowred his Wife, and hee hiding himſelfe, was taken, and ſent into Spaine; but the ſhip periſhed in the way, and therein that admirable [g] graine of Gold, which weighed in the firſt finding (being pure) ſo many thouſand Crownes as in the firſt Chapter of the eight Booke is mentioned.

In the Kingdome of Xaraqua in Hiſpaniola, the Gouernour called before him three hundred Indian Lords, which he partly burned in a Houſe, and put the reſt to the Sword, and hanged vp the Queene, as they did alſo to Higuanama the Queene of Higuey. Of all which cruelties our Author an eye-witneſſe affirmeth, that the Indians gaue no cauſe by any crime, that had ſo deſerued by any Law. And for the reſt that remayned after theſe Warres, they ſhared them as ſlaues. They which ſhould haue inſtructed them in the Catholike Faith, were ignorant, cruell, and couetous. The men were ſpent in the Mines, the women conſumed in tillage, and both by heauie burthens which they made them carry, by famine, by ſcourging, and other miſeries.

And thus they did in all other parts whereſoeuer they came. In the Iles of Saint Iohn, and Iamayca, were fixe hundred thouſand Inhabitants, whereof then when the Authour wrote this, there were ſcarcely left two hundred in eyther Iland. Cuba extendeth furtheſt in length of any of theſe Ilands. Here was a Cacique named Hathuey, which called his Subiects about him, and ſhewing them a Boxe of Gold, ſaid, That was the Spaniards God, and made them dance about it very ſolemnely: and leſt the Spaniards ſhould haue it, hee hurled it into the Riuer. Being taken and condemned to the fire, when he was bound to the ſtake, a Frier came and preached Heauen to him, and the terrors of Hell: Hathuey asked if any Spaniards were in Heauen? The Frier anſwered, Yea, ſuch as were good. Hathuey replyed, hee would rather goe to Hell, then goe where any of that cruell Nation were.

I was once preſent, ſayth Caſas, when the Inhabitants of one Towne brought vs forth victuall, and met vs with great kindneſſe, and the Spaniards without any cauſe ſlue three thouſand of them, of euery Age and Sexe. I, by their counſell, ſent to other Townes to meet vs with promiſe of good dealing, and two and twenty Caciques met vs, which the Captaine againſt all faith cauſed to be burned. This made the deſperate Indians hang themſelues (which two hundred did, by the occaſion of one mans cruelty:) and one other Spaniard ſeeing them take this courſe, made as though he would hang himſelfe too, and perſecute them in the Regions of death; which feare detayned ſome from that ſelfe-execution. Sixe thouſand children dyed, ſayth our former Author, in three or foure moneths ſpace, while I was there, for the want of their Parents which were ſent to the Mynes: they hunted out the reſt in the Mountaynes, and deſolated the Iland. Neyther did the other Ilands ſpeed better. The Lucaiæ they brought to an vtter deſolation: and ſhipping multitudes of men for the Mynes in Hiſpaniola (wanting food for them) the third part commonly periſhed in the way; ſo that an vnskilfull Pilot might haue learned this way by Sea, by thoſe floting markes of Indian carkaſſes. This Spaniſh peſtilence ſpred further to the Continent, where they ſpoyled the ſhoares, and the Inland Countries of people. From Dariena to Nicaragua, they ſlue foure hundred thouſand people with Dogs, Swords, Fire and diuers tortures.

Their courſe [h] of Preaching was, to ſend, vnder paine of confiſcation of lands, libertie, wife, life, and all, to acknowledge God and the Spaniſh King, of whom they had neuer heard. Yea, they would ſteale to ſome place halfe a mile off the Citie, by night, and there publiſh the Kings Decree in this ſort, being alone by themſelues: Yee Caciques and Indians of this place, or that place (which they named) Bee it knowne to you, that there is one God, one Pope, and one King of Caſtile, who is Lord of theſe lands: Come quickly and doe your homage. And then in the night, while they were aſleepe, fired their houſes, and ſlue and tooke Captiues at their pleaſure, g P. Mart. mentioneth this graine of Gold: and likewiſe the Spaniſh cruelties, though not ſo largely as Caſas

pleaſure, and after fell to ſearch for Gold. The firſt Biſhop that came into theſe parts, ſent his men to be partakers of the ſpoyle. A Cacique gaue the Spaniſh Gouernour the weight in Gold of nine thouſand Crownes; he (in thankfulnes) to extort more, bound him to a poſt, and put fire to his feet, and forced him to ſend home for a further addition of 3000. They not ſatisfied, perſiſted in their tormenting him, till the marrow came forth at the ſoles of his feet, whereof he dyed. When any of the Indians, employed by the Spaniards, fayled vnder their heauy burthens, or fainted for want of neceſſaries, leſt they ſhould loſe time in opening the Chaine wherein he was tyed, they would cut off his head, and ſo let the bodie fall out. The Spaniard robbed the Nicaraguans of their Corne, ſo that thirty thouſand dyed of Famine, and a Mother ate her owne childe: fiue hundred thouſand were carried away into bondage, beſides fiftie or ſixtie thouſand ſlaine in their Warres: and now, ſayth Caſas, remayne foure or fiue thouſand, of one of the moſt populous Regions of the World. Heere did Vaſchus [i] giue at one time foure Kings to be deuoured of Dogs.

i P. Mart. dec. 3 l. 2. Cortes accuſtomed himſelfe to haue 4. Kings attend on him. Dec. 8. lib. 3.

In New Spaine, from the yeere 1518. to 1530. in foure hundred and eighty miles about Mexico, they deſtroyed aboue foure Millions of people in their Conqueſts by fire and ſword, not reckoning thoſe which dyed in ſeruitude and oppreſſion. In the Prouince of Naco and Honduras, from the yeere 1524. to 1535. two Millions of men periſhed, and ſcarcely two thouſand remayne. In Guatimala, from the yeere 1524. to 1540. they deſtroyed aboue foure or fiue Millions vnder that Alnarado, who dying, by the fall off his Horſe, as is before ſaid, complained (when hee was asked where his paine was moſt) of his Soule-torment: and his Citie Guatimala was with a three-fold deluge of Earth, of Water, of Stones, oppreſſed and ouer-whelmed. He forced the Indians to follow him in his Expeditions, in Armies of tenne or twentie thouſand, not allowing them other ſuſtenance, then the fleſh of their ſlaine Enemies, mayntayning in his Army Shambles of mans fleſh. In Panuco and Xaliſco their ſtate was much like; one made eight thouſand Indians wall about his Garden, and let them all periſh with Famine. In Machuacan they tortured the King that came forth to meet them, that they might extort Gold from him. They put his feet in the Stockes, and put fire thereto, binding his hands to a Poſt behinde him; and a Boy ſtood by, baſting his roaſted feete with Oyle, another with a Croſſe-bow bent to his breaſt, and on the other hand another with Dogges; of theſe tortures he dyed. They forced the Indians to deliuer their Idols, hoping they had beene of Gold, but their Golden hope failing, they forced them againe to redeeme them. Yea, where the Fryers had in one place made the Indians to caſt away their Images, the Spaniards brought them ſome from other places to ſell them. In the Prouince of Saint Martha, they had deſolated foure hundred and fiftie miles of Land. The Biſhop wrote to the King, that the people called the Spaniards Deuils, or Tares, for their Diabolicall practices; and thought the Law, God, and King of the Chriſtians had beene authors of this crueltie.

He burned 60. Kings, their heires looking on.

The like they did in the Kingdome of Venezuela, deſtroying foure or fiue Millions, and out of that firme Land, carried to the Ilands for ſlaues at times, in ſeuenteene yeers, a Million of people.

But why doe I longer trace them in their bloudy ſteps; ſeeing our Authour that relates much more then I, yet proteſteth that it was a thouſand times worſe. Or what ſhould I tell their ſparing no perſons? plucking the child from the breſt, to quarter it to his Dogs? Torturing Kings with new deuices, borrowed eyther from the Inquiſition, or from Hell? Cutting off the noſes and hands of men and women, that liued in peace with them? Selling the Father, Mother, Child, to diuers places and perſons? Lying with the women (as one of them bragged) that being with childe, they might yeeld more money in the ſale? How was Nature become degenerate in theſe prodigious monſters? Euen the nature of things might bee abaſhed with the ſenſe of this vnnaturall ſenſeleſneſſe. The Tygre would but deuoure his prey, and not curiouſly torment it; the Lion ſometimes ſpares it; nay, their Dogges haue ſometime beene leſſe dogged, then their doggiſh Deuilliſh Maſters. How may wee admire that long ſuffering of God, that rained not a floud of waters, as in Noahs time; or of fire, as in Lots, or of ſtones, as in Ioſuas; or ſome vengeance from Heauen vpon theſe models of Hell? And how could Hell forbeare ſwallowing ſuch prepared morſels, exceeding the beaſtlineſſe of beaſts, inhmanitie of wonted Tyrants, and Deuilliſhneſſe, if it were poſſible, of the Deuils? But theſe you will ſay were [k] Souldiers: let vs leaue the Campe, and looke to their Temples.

k Nulla fides pietaſq; viris qui caſtra ſequuntur. Lucan.

There perhaps you ſhall ſee their Prieſts reading, praying, and (this they moſt glory of) preaching, to conuert the Indians by their word and workes. Aske Colmenero, a Prieſt of Saint Martha, who being asked what hee taught the Indians, ſaid that hee deuoted them with curſes to the Deuill, and this ſufficed, if he ſaid to them, Per ſignum Santin Cruces. You haue heard what good Diuinitie the Dominican preached to Atabaliba King of Peru (which wan-wanted not her wants of Millions by their cruelties, as well as the former.) They teach them (saith [l] Acosta) a few Prayers in the Spanish Tongue, which they vnderstand not; and they which are more painfull, a Catechisme without explanation. [l] Acost. de Procu. Ind. sal. l. 4. c. 46

Their teaching is but a iest and shadow to get mony: they follow dicing, hunting, whooring; in so much that Baptisme is scorned, and the Indians are forced to it against their wils: and a sincere and [m] vpright Iudge was wont to say, that if hee came into Spaine, hee would perswade the King to send no more Priests into America; such is their dissoluteness. They had then indeed three Archbishopricks; that of Dominico, which had sixe Suffragane Bishops; the second of Mexico, which had 7. the third of Los Reyes, to which were subiect three Bishops: yet these teach the people vices, by their practise and ill example; insomuch that the Indians (sayth Casas) are of opinion, that the King of Spaine (which hath such subiects, as the Spaniards shew themselues) is himselfe most cruell, and liues on mans flesh; and that of all Gods, the God of the Christians is the worst, which hath so bad seruants; longing for their owne Gods, of whom they neuer receiued such ill, as now by this of the Christians. The Spaniards cannot endure the Indians to heare a Sermon, thinking it makes them idle (as Pharaoh said [n] of the Israelites) and captious: they learne them Vsury, lying, swearing, blasphemie, and things repugnant to their nature. Thus did a Cacique [o] describe a Christian to Benzo, by the vnchristian course of the Spaniards. Christians! (sayth he, looking Benzo on the face) what are Christians? They imperiously demand Maiz, Hony, Silke, Rayment, an Indian woman to lye with them; they call for Gold and Siluer, they will not worke; are Gamesters, Dicers, Wicked, Blasphemers, Backbiters, Quarrellers: and concluded that Christians could not be good. Benzo said, that euill Christians did such things, not the good ones: hee replyed, Where are those good, for I neuer saw any but bad? Hee was seuenty yeeres old, and spake Spanish perfectly. Benzo sayth, that they would not looke on the Christians, but curse them and as before is said, called them [p] Sea-froth. Hee being very inquisitiue to see what they thought of our Faith, reporteth, that some of them taking a piece of Gold, will say, Loe, heere the Christians God: for this they kill vs and one another; for this they play, blaspheme, curse, steale, and doe all manner of villanies. [q] A Franciscan publikely said, that there was neyther Priest, Monke, nor Bishop, good in all India: and the Priests themselues will say, they came thither for gaine. A Caciques Sonne which was towardly in his youth, and proued after dissolute, being asked the reason thereof, said, Since I was a Christian, I haue learned to sweare in varietie, to dice, to lye, to swagger; and now I want nothing but a Concubine (which I meane to haue shortly) to make me a compleate Christian. These indeed are the Miracles that the Spaniards worke in the Indies, sayth our Author. I asked an Indian once if he were a Christian; he againe asked me, if hee should be the Bishops Groome a doozen yeeres to keepe his Mule. Others of the Indians, saue a little washing and some cold Ceremonies, know nothing of our Religion.

You haue heard what Commerce and conference many of them were wont to haue with the Deuill: and [r] how the Spaniards haue taught them, now to scarre him away with the signe of the Crosse. And this is the report of a certaine Spanish Treatise of Prelates, that the Deuill is now frayed away with the presence of the holy Sacrament of the Eucharist, and of the holy Crosse: weapons spirituall in pretence, carnall in the intention, but neither preuayling like the spirituall which [s] Paul mentions, nor effecting so much as some say [t] of those which are indeed carnall and wholly materiall: Yea these thus vsed (with deniall of the power of the Crosse and godlinesse) are the Scepters of his Empire amongst them. And for those carnall weapons which Paul disclaymed, the Spaniards doe not onely acknowledge, but glory off. Nunno [u] di Gusman auerreth in a writing to the Emperor, that howsoeuer some find fault with their wars vpon the Indians so to bring them to the faith, yet he accounts it a most worthy & holy work, & of so great merit, that in the seruice of God none can be greter.

The Indians haue liued at more quiet with the Spaniards, since the King proclamed them free; yet still hate them: and for their Christianitie, Franciscus [x] à Victoria protesteth, that it doth not appeare to him, that Christian Religion had beene propounded in meete sort to the Indians; Miracles he heard not of, but on the contrarie, scandals, villanies, and many impieties. This is the Preaching and Conuersion the Romists boast of, and gull our European World with musters of their Miracles, and thousands of their Proselytes which we rather pitie then enuie.

[x] F. à Vic. Rel. 5 De Indis.

How the case is altered, since that new generation of the Ignatian brood hath taught (especially the Spaniards, whose they are, and whom they serue) a better Catholicisme; let Arnauldus [y] tell you: he sayth, that they haue indeed wrought Miracles amongst Indians: among which he reckoneth conuerting the Pagans, by butcherly subuerting and rooting them out. In Hispaniola, by keeping the husbands and wiues in diuers workes asunder, the old generation being thus worne out, and a new preuented. In Peru they had publike places of tor-torture within the Marches, wherein they might put a thouſand at once, by tortures to draw forth confeſſions of their hidden treaſures: ſuch as eſcaped, hanged themſelues in the Mountaynes, and their wiues by them, with their children at their feete. By their Dogs at land they worried them: and in their Pearle-fiſhing expoſed them to the rauening Sharkes, themſelues more dogged and ſharking then the brute creatures; by fire and Sword conſuming 20. Millions of the people, I would giue the Deuill his due, and therefore would not aſcribe all this to thoſe later Locuſts, the Ieſuits (who are yet accounted the moſt cunning and zealous Architects, in ſetting vp the roofe of that aſpiring Spaniſh Monarchie) theſe and the like bloudie foundations notwithſtanding; and therefore may be called Acceſſories after. As for the Spaniards, we ſee them by teſtimonie of their owne, accuſed of the ſame things. And how the Ignatians waſh their hands not from, (but in) bloud, our Europe can teſtifie.

What Deuill brought into America the Inquiſition (his faire Daughter much reſembling his accurſed preſence) I know not: our Countrimen [z] Philips, Hortop, and others, knew it to their coſt. But what ſhould we ſpeake of the Spaniſh crueltie to others? Locke on their dealing with each other in ciuill broyles: thus dealt they with Columbus, rewarding him with Chaines, and ſending him Priſoner to Spaine by that way which he firſt of all, and for Spaine had diſcouered. What Roldanus and his rebellious faction did in Hiſpaniola, and Vaſthni in the Continent, Martyr relateth. But the bloudieſt butcheries paſſed in Peru: where Couetouſneſſe, which before had ioyned, now diuorced the hearts of Pizarro and Almagro; and after that, that neerer coniunction of the head and body of Almagro, [a] reuenged in the perſons of all the Pizarri, which againe retorted the like vengeance vpon the Almagriſts; their Ghoſts ſeeming, or ſome helliſh furies rather, to be looſed on that Peruuian ſtage, and to haue brought like miſchiefes to the beholders and actors in this Tragedie. Vengeance ſeemed to haue broken forth of Atabalibas Tombe, armed with Sword, fire, halters, chaines; yea the Spaniards themſelues offered themſelues her officious Vaſſals, to become cruell Executors of her bloudy Will, in mutuall executions vpon themſelues. The awfull names of Vice-royes, Gouernours, and Captaines, were no leſſe ſubiected to impriſonment and death, then the pooreſt Souldier. But for theſe ciuill vnciuill cruelties amongſt themſelues, they require a good Orator to deſcribe them: and thoſe former tyrannies vpon the Indians, are beyond all Oratory and deſcription. Thunders from Heauen had need be the voice to vtter ſuch Helliſh and vnheard-of Maſſacres; Deuils from Hell were fitteſt Scribes, with the fierie Characters of their infernall work-houſes to regiſter them; the reading whereof might aſtoniſh the ſenſe of the Reader, amaze his reaſon, exceed his faith, and fill his heart with horrour and vncouth paſſions. For mee; I want fit words to paint them in their blacke colours: my Hand with reluctation trembleth at the writing: my Tongue faltereth in the ſpeaking, and wholly I ſeeme to my ſelfe ſurprized with diſtraction, and not to bee my ſelfe, whiles the view of this Spaniſh Meduſa transformeth mee into a ſtone: the rather, when I thinke ſuch ſhould our Engliſh Conuerſion haue beene, if in that diſmall yeere 1588. England had as well ſucceeded to them as the Indies: or if ſince, our Catholike Preachers had preuayled in their Powder-proiects, in the yeere 1605. Who for a Temple choſe a Vault, that their workes of darkneſſe might be done in the darke, and their Work-houſe might be neerer to Hell, thence to borrow at hand ſupplies of Deuilliſh deuices, and in neerer familiaritie to conſult with the Deuill. For words, they had prepared a Sulphurous breath, the ſmoke whereof might darken the Heauens; the fire might rent the trembling and aſhoniſhed Earth; the noyſe might make the hearers paſt hearing, and being together. Once, thoſe Helliſh Cerberi by ſuch preaching had intended there to haue opened the mouth of Hell vpon vs, which ſhould haue ſwallowed our Lawes, our Religion, our Sun, Moone, and Morning Star (the King, Queene, and Prince) Our faireſt Skie of fixed and well ordered lights, then ſhining in their greateſt ſplendour of Parliament-brightneſſe. The Giants of old were ſaid to bee the ſonnes of the Earth; but theſe, as they were engendred of Earth, ſo had they inceſtuouſly violated that their Mother (whether you vnderſtand it in a literall or myſticall ſenſe) and begotten in her wombe this Hel-monſter of their bloudie Catholiciſme; they had deſigned the time of her Trauell, and themſelues would haue beene the Mid-wiues; the Deuils had bidden themſelues as Goſſips, and at that opening of the Earths wombe in her fierie trauell, would haue ſent that way into the World (to attend the Babe) all the black-guard of Hell, Treaſon, Superſtition, Atheiſme, Ignorance, Fire, Sword, and all confuſion, in a reuolution of a worſe Chaos then that [b] Tohu and Bohu of old could haue effected. Then ſhould it haue beene no maruell, if Rome, France, Spaine, or any other had exerciſed tyrannie or crueltie, ſeeing all muſt haue come ſhort of the firſt crueltie, which our Engliſh Catholikes had executed, to open the floudgates of bloud vnto them. And all this was the Catholike cauſe, and theſe the Preachers, or the Vſhers rather to the Preachers (for the Ieſuits will bee angry if wee take from them their bloudie priuiledge of this new Catholicisme) which the Deuill (till now he is an older and cunninger Serpent) had neuer learned himselfe, nor could learne others, before he had gotten Ignatian Vshers in his Hellish Schoole.

But whither is your Pilgrime transported? Friend, I draw neere my Port, and leauing America behind mee, still red with this bloud; now also hauing England in sight, which (as from a greater height) was neere to a more dangerous fall: and in this subiect, which is of the Spanish cruelties (not written in hatred of their Nation, because they are Spaniards) but of their Pseudo-catholike Religion, vnder shew whereof, they there did, and heere would haue executed those butcheries: and for thankfulnesse to God for our later deliuerance, of which the time when I relate these things (being the returne of that very Day, [c] wherein those things should haue beene effected) iustly demandeth my testimony: I haue thus told out my Storie.

And now, me thinkes, I see the shoares of England, from which my lingring Pilgrimage hath long detayned me: I heare the Bels, and see the Bon-fires, with publike acclamations of thankfulnesse for that Deliuerance, all singing their Hallelu-iahs, and saying, [d] This is the Day which the Lord hath made, wee will reioyce and bee glad in it. And now I see a better sight then all my Pilgrimage could yeeld; Christian Churches, without Heathenish, Iewish, or Antichristian pollutions: a Royall King, truely entituled Defender of the Faith: a Learned Clergie; wise and Honourable Counsellers; peaceable and loyall Commons: in a word; England presents it selfe to mine eyes, representing to my mind a Map of Heauen and Earth, in the freedome of Bodie and Soule, yea where our subiection and seruice is Freedome (which I haue not else-where found in all my Perambulation of the World) I feele my selfe herewith rauished, and in a ioyfull extasie cannot but crie out: [e] It is good for vs to bee heere, in the true Church and Suburbs of the true Heauen:) Heere then,

Reader, let me rest me, till I see whether thy kind acceptation of this, will make mee willing to accept another and neerer (but harder European) Pilgrimage.

To the Reader.

READER, I here present vnto thee in a later seruice, that which deserued a fitter place in another Worke; and which I had sought with much industrie before, without successe. I am ashamed againe to tell thee with what little effect my Russian labours for Intelligence were seconded: but since my PILGRIMES published, Sir Ierome Horseys kindnesse offered me (without seeking) better Intelligence then any others could haue giuen; for the times of Iuan and Feodore, with the politike preparations of Boris vnto the Muscouian Empire: a Story whereof I was so much more desirous, to publish, because our Age (if euer so short a time in any Age or any State) can hardly parallel the like practises of humane Policies, to couetous, cruell, ambitious ends, ended in the Authours and Actors owne Tragedies; God taking the wise in their craftinesse, and iustly spoyling the vniust spoylers, of their spoyles, liues, states, yea, rooting out their whole Families, the greatnesse and glory whereof they had sought to aduance by such wicked courses; and withall punishing the wickednes of the people by so frequent forreigne Inuasions and intestine Combustions: that wee may out of others euils learne this good, Discite iustitiam moniti, the true vse of all Historie. I had out of Alexander Gwagninus, Paulus Oderbornius and others collected some Relations of Iuan Vasiliwich and his Sonnes, but those could see but the out-sides of things, and giue vs but huskes, shels, and rumours, (which often are vncertaine, sometimes false) but here wee present an Eye-witnesse, which tooke not vp Newes on trust by wonted Bils and Tales of Exchange, but was admitted vnto the Mysteries of that State, in the Historie of the Imperiall Acts written in their Records; and in his owne personall and honourable Employments betwixt Queene Elizabeth of glorious Memory, and the Russian Emperours. And indeed want of the Languages of remote Regions hath hatched many imperfect Histories, the blind leading the blind into errour; wherein as I haue euer loued truth, so was I glad to rectifie our Russian Relations by opportunitie of so worthy a Guide; whose Papers had before furnished Doctor Fletcher with the best peeces of his Intelligence. Euen here also I was straitned in time, the Presse pursuing me so fast, that I had not leisure to transcribe at large the Authours Danish, Polish and Germane

Relations; nor to adde forme or beauty from Arte: and perhaps this native nakednesse in a Iournall or Trauelling Method will be to some most acceptable. The Author and matter addes better lustre to the Worke then my words can; the one so full of varietie and weight, the other an experienced and Religious Knight, employed in many and honourable Seruices of State, and honouring the Name and Family of the Horseys, with his Acts, Arts, and good Parts. Who had long since also dedicated this Worke to that Honourable Patriote Sir Francis Walsingham.

Now for Master Methold, I had spared some of Frederikes, Balbies, and Fitches Relations, if these had comne in time, which so many times I had both by messages and in person sought, and by reason of the Authours absence or businesses was frustrate. But the Reader will finde his labour and cost recompensed in the Rarities of matter, and stile also trauelling beyond the wonted pace of a Merchant-Traueller. The Relation is correspondent to the Subiect, it entreates of a Mine of Diamants, and is a Mine of Diamants it selfe. Gemmes may bee put on after the whole bodie (so I call my former large Worke) is attired and after that full repast, as Indian Drugs vsed in second Seruices, it will second thee with a new, and refresh thee with a fresh Indian appetite, and present vnto thee (like Spectacles after great Feasts) such a muster of Indian Elements, affaires, men, arts, Religions, customes, and other varieties, as before we were not able to bring on our Stage.

EXTRACTS OVT OF SIR IEROME HORSEYS OBSERVATIONS IN SEVENTEENE YEERES TRAVELS AND EXPERIENCE IN RVSSIA, AND OTHER COVNTRIES ADIOYNING.

Having before seene FRANCE and the Low Countries by Sir EDWARD HORSEYS meanes, and in the company and charge of Master William Mericke Agent for the Company.

Arriued in Muscouia, Anno 1573. and hauing some smack in the Greeke, by affinity thereof in short space attained the ready knowledge of their vulgar speech, the Sclauonian Tongue, the most copious & elegant Language of the World; with some small difference of (Dialect) comming neere the Polish Lestois and Transyluanian, and all those Countries adiacent, being vsed by Merchants in Turkie also, Persia, & in India. I read their Chronicles written and kept in secret by a great Prince of that Country, Knez Misthislofskie; who out of his loue and fauour imparted vnto mee many secrets obserued in the memory of his fourescore yeeres time, of the nature and gouernment of that State. To omit things of former ages, Vasily Andreowich hauing enlarged his Dominions vpon the Pole and Swethen, and specially on the Crimme Tartars, left his people strong and rich; his Countries diuided into foure parts, and two Sonnes, the eldest of fiue yeeres called Velica Knez Iuan Vasiliwich which reigned after him, the other of two yeeres Duke of Vaga.

Large extent of the Sclauonian tongue.

Russian Chronicles.

Vasily or Basilius great Duke of Russia.

Iuan grew vp comely in person, indued with excellent gifts. At twelue yeeres age he married Nastacia Romanowa, which became so wise and vertuous, that she was much loued and feared a long time carrying the whole sway. Her Husband being young and riotous, she ruled with admirable wisdome, so that he cast off the yoke of homage to the Crym, conquered diuers Tartarian Princes, the Empires of Casan and Astracan 2700. miles downe the Volga from Mosco, and by a generall Councell of his Princes, Prelates, and Nobles was crowned and stiled the Emperour, and Great Duke of Volladamiria, Muscouia, Cazan and Astracan &c. His Conquests grew with his yeeres. He tooke from the King of Poland the famous Citie of Polloza, the great Citie of Smolensco, Doragabus, Vasma, and many other Townes with much riches, and infinite numbers of captiues, seuen hundred miles within their confines, Lituania and Bela Russia, goodly Townes of Traffieke, and Countries yeelding Waxe, Flaxe, Hempe, Tallow, Hides, Corne and Cattell in abundance. He grew puissant issant and proud, ouermightie for his next Neighbours, and bloudie in all his Conquests. When his good Queene Nastacia dyed, she was canonized a Saint, and to this day worshipped in their Churches. By her he had two Sonnes Iuan and Theodore.

Nastacia the Empresse made a Saint.

The Emperour after this married one of the Circas by whom hee had no issue that hee would be knowne of. The manner of this Marriage was strange and heathenish, which I forbeare out of their owne History to relate. By this Marriage hee was much strengthened by the Tartars better Souldiers then the Natiues, of whom he made vse to curbe his Princes and Nobles which were discontent with his cruell robbing, and incessant murthering of his Nobilitie. He set forward with 100000. Horse and 50000. Foot with prouisions of Cannon and Munition towards Liuonia and Swethia, kils men, women and children in his way to Nouogrod and Plesco the two greatest Townes of Trafficke in all the East, with the Narue, which three stand triangle wise at the end of the Baltike Sea within the Sound. In this last hee built a Castle called Iuan Gorod, and caused the eyes of the Architect to bee bored out. Thence he enters the Confines of Liuonia, sends Knez Iuan Grinscoy, to besiege Newhous, which was taken with all the Townes in the way to Dorp. This also yeelded, and the Tartars carried away eight thousand Captiues, the Merchandize and Treasure was sent to Nogrod for the Emperours vse. He proceedeth, deuideth his Army into foure parts, ten thousand are appointed to draw the Ordnance ouer the frozen Lakes, takes all in his way, thirty walled Townes and Castles neere the Easterne Sea within two hundred miles compasse, drowning, burning, rauishing Maydes and Wiues, stripping them naked notwithstanding the cold, tying them by two and three at their Horse tayles, and dragging them some aliue, some dead, the wayes and streets lying full of carkasses of euery age and sexe. These Liuonians are accounted the faireſt people in the World. Infinite numbers were sent into Russia with infinite treasure. Sixe hundred Churches were robbed and destroyed. He and his Tartars at last came to Reuell, besiegeth and battersit with twentie Cannons. The Inhabitants by night make vp the breaches by carrying and casting hote and cold water which froze so thicke, that after sixe weekes siege, and 20000. Cannon shot spent with losse of 7000. he hasted away, the sudden thaw also making him to leaue much of his Artillery behind, with former booties, baggage, and 30000. men, in his retiring.

Narue Castle. Architect blinded that hee might not doe the like to others.

Crueltie.

Ice-fortification.

Enraged with fury for this repulse and losse hee comes backe to the Narue, spoyles the Towne of all the Riches and Merchandise, kils men, women, and children, and giues the spoyle to his Tartars, which bred no small emulation in his Russe Captaines. Thence hee marcheth to Plescoue (alias Vobsco) where he intended to doe the like, easily beleeuing those which reported that these two Townes and Nouogrod had practised against him, that by their meanes hee had sustayned his losse at Reuel. But there met him a Magician Mikula Sweat which that Towne held their Oracle, who with bold Imprecations and Exorcismes calling him Bloud-sucker and Deuourer of Christian flesh, swore by his Angell that hee should not escape death by a present Thunderbolt, if he or any of his did touch the least childs haire in that Citie, which God by his Angel did preserue for better purpose then his rapine: that therefore he should get him thence before the fierie Cloud of Gods wrath were rayſed which he might behold hanging ouer his head, it being a very great and darke storme at that instant. The Emperour trembling at these words, desired Prayers for his deliuerance, and forgiuenesse of his cruell thoughts. I saw this Impostor, a foule creature: hee went naked Winter and Summer, induring extreame frost and heat. His Holinesse could not endure me. He did many strange things by Magicall Illusions, and was much followed and feared there of Prince and people.

Plesco by a Magician deliuered.

The Emperour returning to Nouogrod, where all his Captiues and Prisoners remayned, in exceeding discontent he chargeth it with 30000. Tartars, and 10000. Gunners of his Guard, who without respect rauished the women and maides, robbed and spoyled all that were within it: murthered young and old, burned the household stuffe and Merchandises with Ware-houses of Waxe, Flaxe, Cordage, Tallow, Hides, Salt, Wines, Cloth of Gold, Silkes, Furres, all set on fire. The Waxe and Tallow melted ran downe the Kennels of the streets together with the bloud of 700000. men, women, and children, as some affirmed, besides beasts: insomuch that with bloud and carkasses the Riuer Volca was as it were stopped. He vanted that this Massacre should exceed those of Ninive and Ierusalem. The Citie being thus destroyed and desolate he returned towards Musco, and in the way employes his Captaynes to take the people in the Townes and Villages within a hundred miles compasse, Gentlemen, Peasants, Merchants, and Monkes, old and young, with their Families, Goods, and Cattle to goe and inhabit this ruined Nouogrod, exposing them to a new slaughter. For many of them dyed with Pestilence and poyson of that infected place, which could not bee repleniſhed to any purpose.

Nouogrod spoiled with horrible cruelties.

700000. slaine.

Another cruelty added.

Not long after God empties the Emperours Kingdome and chiefe Cities of his people by Pesti-

Pestilence, Famine, Fire and Sword: and this his cruel tie bred such discontent, that many practised to destroy him, which were still discouered. Hee countenanced the Rascalitie and the most desperate Souldiers against the chiefe Nobility. Hee setled his Treasures in Mosco and the principall Monasteries. Many of the Nobilitie he put to shamefull deaths and tortures: and now suspecting his Chercas Tartars also, he placed them in his new Conquests of Leefland and Sweathland. The Crim Tartar his ancient Enemy inuaded him, incited by his Nobilitie as he found out: against whom he leuies out of remote Prouinces a huge Army of strangers; with his owne hundred thousand horse, and fifty thousand foot. He discards his Chercas wife, and puts her in a Monastery, and among many of his owne Subiects, chuseth Natalia Daughter to Kneas Pheodor Bulgalone a great Commander in his warres, who soone after lost his head, and his Daughter within a yeere was shorne a Nunne. Newes came of his Enemies approch (God suffered this wicked people who liued and wallowed in the height of their wickednesse and lust of crying Sodomiticall sinnes, to be thus punished both by so bloudy a King, and this Scythian Enemy) who came with two hundred thousand Horsemen within fifty miles compasse on the Riuer Occa neere Circapoe, and vpon secret intelligence, as was thought, he passed the Riuer without repulse of the Emperours Army, who durst not on paine of death stirre beyond their bounds vpon whatsoeuer aduantage. The Enemy approching the great City of Musco, the Russe Emperour flies with his two Sonnes, Treasure, Seruants and his Guard of twenty thousand Gunners towards a strong Monastery Troiets, or the Trinity sixty miles off.

The Crimme inuadeth Russia.

Iuans third Wife.

Vpon Ascention day, the Enemy fires the high steeple of Saint Iohns Church, at which instant happened a tempestuous wind, whereby all the Churches Houses, Monasteries, and Palaces within the City and Suburbs thirty miles compasse, built most of Firre and Oke were set on fire and consumed in sixe houres space with infinite thousands of * Men, Women, and Children burnt and smothered to death by the fierie aire; few escaping, without and within the three walled Castles. The Riuer and Ditches about Musco were stopped and filled with multitudes of people laden with Gold, Siluer, Iewels, Eatings, Chaines, Bracelets, Rings and other Treasure, which went for succour to saue their heads aboue water. All which notwithstanding, so many thousands were there burnt and drowned, that the Riuer could not with all meanes and industry that could bee vsed, bee in two yeeres after cleansed; those which were left aliue, and many from other places being daily occupied within great circuits to search and dragge for Iewels, Plate, bags of Gold and Siluer. I my selfe was somewhat the better for that fishing. The streets of the City, Churches, Sellers and Vaults lay so thicke and full of dead carkasses as no man could passe for the noysome smels long after. The Crim and his Army beheld this fire, solacing himselfe in a faire Monastery foure miles off, and tooke the spoyle of such as fled from the fire, besetting all the wayes about the Citie, and returned with much Treasure, and store of Captiues passing ouer the Riuer the same way they came.

* D. Fletcher expresseth this number to bee 800000. which may seeme credible not only by the multitudes of Inhabitants at that time, but also the Neigbour Villages and Countries fleeing thither for refuge. Musco neuer recouered that losse. Simon Monastr

The Russe Emperour fled further to Vologda, fiue hundred miles from Mosco, accompanied with his Clergy, in whom he had most confidence. He summons a Councell Royall, dissolues his Army which fought not a stroke for him, examined, racked and tortured many of his chiefe Captaines; executes, confiscates, destroyes their Race and Families: takes order for clensing, repayring and replenishing Musco. In the midst of this Parliament Chigaly Mursoy sends an Embassadour attended with many Mursoys, (in their account Noblemen) all well horsed, clothed in sheepes skinne Coats girt to them with blacke Caps of the same, hauing Bowes and Arrowes with curious Cymitars by their sides. They had a Guard to keepe them in darke Roomes; stinking Horse flesh, and water was their best dyet, without Bread, Beere, Bed, or Candle. At the time of their audience bad vsage was offered them which they puffed at and scorned. The Emperour sate with his three Crownes before him in great Royalty, his Princes and Nobles attending, richly adorned with Iewels and Pearle. He commanded the Embassadors sheepe skinne Coate and Cap to be taken off, and a Golden Robe and rich Cap to be put on, who laughed aloud thereat, enters the Emperours presence, his followers being kept backe in a space grated with Iron. The Embassadour chates with a hollow, hellish voyce looking fierce and grimly on the Emperour, beeing otherwise a most vgly Creature. Foure Captaines of the Guard bring him neere His seate, and then without reuerence he thunders out that his Master and Lord Chigaley great Emperour of all the Kingdomes and Chams that the Sunne doth spread his beames ouer, hath sent to him Iuan Vassilliwich his Vassall and great Duke ouer all Russia by his permission, to know how he liked the scourge of his displeasure by sword, fire, and famine; and withall had sent him for remedie, a present of his indignation (pulling out a foule rustie Knife) to cut his throat withall. This done, hee hasted out of the Roome without answere. They would haue taken off his golden Gowne and Cap, but he and his company stroue with them, and would not permit it. The Emperour fell into an agony, tore his haire and beard, sent for his Ghostly Father. The chiefe Captaine desired leaue to cut them all in pieces, but he gaue no answere. After he had detayned him some time, his fury being alayed, he sent him away with better vsage and this Message: Tell the Merchant and vnbeleeuer thy Master, it is not he, it is my sinnes and the sinnes of my people against my God and Christ: he it is that hath giuen him a limme of the Deuill this power and oportunitie to be the instrument of my rebuke, by whose pleasure and helpe I doubt not of reuenge, and to make him my Vassall, though he be now but a Runnegate, and hath no place of abode to be found out in. Hee answered, he would not doe him so much seruice to speake so arrogant a message from him. Where-vpon, not long after, hee did addresse a Noble Gentleman Alfonasy Phedorowicz Nagoy in that Embassie, who was there detayned and indured much misery for seuen yeeres space.

The Tartars haue no Cities, &c.

The Emperour was loth to come to Musco, but sent for the chiefe Merchants, Handicrafts and Tradesmen from all other Cities and Townes within his Kingdome to build and inhabit there: and further to draw Trafficke thither, tooke away all Impositions, and granted freedome of Customes; set seuen thousand Masons and Workmen to build a faire stone Wall round about the Musco, which was finished in fiue yeeres space, strong and beautifull, and furnished with faire brasse Ordenance: he also setled his Offices and Officers of Iustice therein as before.

He also sent for skilfull Architects, Carpenters, Ioyners, Masons, Goldsmiths, Physicians, Apothecaries and such like out of England. He builds a Treasure-house of stone, great Barkes and Barges to conuey and transport Treasure vpon any sudden occasion to Sollauetzcoy Monastery standing on the North Sea, the direct way to England. Hee fleeced his Merchants by taking their Commodities to exchange with Merchant Strangers for Gold, Dollers, Iewels and Pearles which he tooke into his Treasury, paying little or nothing, hee borrowed great summes of Cities, Townes, and Monasteries, exhausting all their wealth by great Impositions and Customes, to augment his owne Treasure, which he neuer would diminish vpon any occasion whatsoeuer; whereby hee became so odious that in a desperate resolution he deuised to preuent and alter his estate, to annull and frustrate all these ingagements of his Crowne. He made a diuision of his Subiects, calling the one Oprosny, and the other Somscoy, and established a new King or Emperour named Cbar Spinon, Sonne to the Emperour of Casan, transferring on him his stile and Crowne with the authority incident, but crowning him without any solemnitie or consent of Peeres. Hee causeth his Subiects to addresse their persons, sutes, and affaires to him & in his name, all Priuiledges, Charters, and Writings to be called in, and new to be granted in this Emperours Name and vnder his Seale: in his name are all Court pleadings, Coynes, Customes, Fines, Reuenues for the maintenance of his House, Officers and Seruants. Hee sits in Maiesty and is lyable to all debts and matters concerning his Treasury. The old Emperour and his Sonnes prostrate themselues and his Bishops, Nobility, and Officers are caused to do the like: Embassadors also to resort to him (which some refused) and he further married him to the Daughter of a Prime Prince of the bloud Royall, named Kneaz Mestbisloskoie.

Rapacitie.

Strange policy to frustrate debts by resigning his Empire.

Now would the old Emperour take no notice of debts owing in his time, Letters Patents and Priuiledges of Townes and Monasteries are made voyd, States of Inheritance for want of confirmation and other things are at a stand. His Clergy, Nobility and Commons for remedy hereof, after a yeeres discontinuance must petition Iuan Vassilwich, that hee will bee pleased to resume the Crowne and Gouernment vpon many conditions and authenticall instruments confirmed by Act of Parliament in a very solemne new Inauguration. Hee being content, infinite Gifts and Presents of worth were sought to bestow on him, his old debts and former incumbrances discharged. Now he is againe inuested in statu quo prius, regrants Priuiledges to Townes, Monasteries, Noblemen and Merchants, vpon new compositions, whence a portion is made for his Neece, daughter to Knez Andrew his late Brother, who in iealousie (as was thought) of the peoples loue to him was made away, in pledging the Emperour in a Cup of Mead which he had drunke to him. This his daughter was married to Hartique Magnus Brother to Frederike King of Denmarke, borne before his Father Christianus Duke of Holst was elected King of that Countrey. To pacifie dissention betwixt them, King Frederike was content to exchange for the Dukedome of Holst all his Townes, Castles and Lands during his life which hee had in Liefland. This Emperour makes vp the Match, and marries them in Mosco, giues him in dowre with his Neece Elena, all the interest he had in the Townes and Castles conquered by him in Liuonia, establishing him therein, and stiling him Corall, that is, King Magnus; giues him a hundred good Horse well furnished, 200000. Nobles in Gold, Siluer, Plate, Iewels, and rich apparell, with liberall gifts to all his Followers, sends 2000. horse to see this King and Queene setled in their estates at the City of Dorp.

A Noble is about a Marke English, three Dollers.

But

But in steed of expected amity, wars follow from Denmarke and Swethia; those two Kings ioyning with Stephanus that valiant King of Poland, who not long after got from him the Narue, and besieged Plescoue. The Dane and Swethen are also competitors with him in certaine Territorites on the North Coast, Wardhouse, Cola, Sollauetsca, Varsague, &c. Put him from his Customes and Trafficke there, offering also to debarre the English Merchants in their passage for fishing on those Coasts, and trading with them at Saint Nicholas and Colmogro. The Emperour notwithstanding these incursions, sends for all his Nobles and Gentlemens faireſt daughters (Virgins) thorow his Kingdome, out of whom hee chuseth a wife for himselfe, and another for his eldest Sonne Charewich Ivane. Her name was Nastacia, daughter to Ivan Sherimitten a Viouod of a good Family. The Emperour liueth in feare, * daily discouers Treasons, and spends much time in torouring and execution.

His fourth Wife.

* Necesse est multos timeat, quem multi timent.

One Knez Pheodor Curakin Gouernour of Wendon in Livonia, when King Stephanus came to besiege it, and found drunke (as was pretended) was stripped naked, layd in a Cart, whipped thorow the Musco with sixe whips of Wire (which cut his backe, belly, and bowels) to death. Ivan Chiglicone was hanged naked by the heeles on a Gibbet, the skin and flesh of his body from top to toe cut off and minced with Knives by small gobbets. Foure Pallarinkes were Executioners, one of which thrusting his Knife too farre (it seemes, purposing to dispatch him) was presently had to a blocke, and that hand cut off, whereof (not well seared) he dyed the next day. Many other were knocked on the head, and cast into the Pooles and Lakes at Slobida, their flesh fed on by ouer-growne Carpes, Pikes & other fish, whose fat was such that hardly any thing else could be seene on them. Knez Boris Telupa, a great Fauourite, was set on a long sharpe stake entring at his fundament, and comming out at his necke; on which he languished fifteene houres, and spake vnto his Mother the Dutchesse which was brought to behold that wofull spectacle: after which sight she was giuen to a hundred Gunners of his Guard, which one after another defiled her to death. Her body swolne and lying naked in the field, open to the view of all which passed by, hee commanded his Huntsmen to bring their hungry Hounds to deuoure her flesh, and bones dragged vp and downe. The Emperour at this sight said, such as I fauour I haue honoured, and to such as bee Traytors I will doe thus. I could enumerate many more like Obiects, but I forbeare; his chiefe exercise being to deuise and execute new torture, especially on his Nobility best beloued of his Subiects.

Fish fed fat on mans flesh.

Abhominable execution.

But his estate still growing daily more dangerous, he enquired of Elizius Bomelius Doctor of Physicke, a rare Mathematician or Magician, and of others of Queene Elizabeths yeeres, and what hopes there might be if he should be a Suter vnto her for himselfe: notwithstanding that he had three wiues then liuing, and many Kings could not preuaile in that Suite. Presently he puts his last wife into a Nunnery, and thinking to make England in case of extremitie his safest refuge, built and prepared many goodly Barkes, large Boats, or Barges at Vologda, and brought his richest Treasure thither to be embarked in the same to passe downe the Riuer Dwina, and so into England by the English ships vpon a sudden, leauing his eldest Sonne Charrewich Ivan to gouerne and pacifie his so troubled estate. To this purpose hee experimented a rare proiect, which increased his treasure and hatred together. He cals for the principall Priors, Abbats, Archimandrites and Egomens of the richest Monasteries of his Kingdome, which were very many, and told them that what he had to say was best knowne vnto themselues. He had spent the most part of his time, wits, vigor and youth in warfaring for their wealth and safetie, who had receiued increase by that which had exhausted his treasure and safetie (by his danger) from forreine Enemies and disloyall practisers: nor could hee or they longer subsist without assistance. Their Prayers preuailed not whether for his, their or his peoples sinnes; supply out of their infinite abundance must bee the triall of their fidelities, which vrgent necessitie of the time exacted, the soules of their Patrons and Donors (Saints and Wonderworkers) for redemption of their sinnes and soules command, and they must prepare their best thoughts without sophisticall refusals. Vpon these Rhetoricall threats at the Prouinciall Conuocation called in the great Consistory of the Holy Ghost, the Oath of Soueraignetie was ministred in the Citie of Mosco. Some feare there was that he did ayme at all.

His purposes for England.

New Policy.

After many disputes and allegations (which appeare in the Originall) prepared for the Kings audience, hee hauing intelligence by priuy Spyes from their Register, framed delayes of audience, meane whiles thundering threats to be carried by his Instigators to their eares. He cals forty of the most pragmaticall, tels them, hee vnderstands of their consultations and that they were the principall, whom his mild Relation of his disaduentures, and the peoples miseries had not mollified. What shall we render you for reward? the Nobilitie and people cry out that You haue got all the treasure in the Land, by trading in all kind of Merchandises, taking the benefit of all other mens trades, being priuiledged to pay no Custome to our Crowne, nor charge of warres: and by terrifying the best sort of our Subiects. You haue gotten by due computation the third part of

the

the Townes, Royalties, and Villages of this Kingdome into your Possessions, by your Witchery, Inchantments and Sorcery. You buy and sell the soules of our people, you line a most idle life in all pleasure and delicacie, commit most horrible sinnes, Extortion, Briberie and excessiue Vsurie. You abound in all the blondie and crying sinnes, Oppression, Gluttony, Idlenesse, Sodomitry, and worse (if worse may be) with beasts. We haue much to answere before God to suffer you to liue, and so many more worthy to die for you. God forgiue my taking part with you. Did not the Pope of late by his Nuncio earnestly perswade to haue the Supremacie ouer you, and to dispose of all your Places and Reuennes? Hath not the Greeke Church often sollicited vs for the change of your Metropolitan Sea, by mediation of the Patriarke of Alexandria? Yea and often I haue beene moued for your dissolution to the reparation of thousands of my ancienteſt and poore ſt Nobility, from whose Ancestors most of your Reuennes came, and to whom it most iustly belongs; that haue spent their liuings and liues for your safeties and enrichings, and my rich Subiects are impouerished thorow your rapine and deuillish Illusions. A faire Example wee haue of that valorous King of* England, Henry the Eighth; your Reuennes being much more, besides your standing treasure, then your prodigall and luxurious maintenance can expend. By which meanes our Nobilitie and seruiceable Subiects are decayed and our treasure so exhausted, that we are inforced by the secret inspiration, by the Soules and holy Saints, the holy workers of Wonders, from whom you professe to hold that infinite treasure, not yours, that lies as a dead talent in your custodies, put to no Religious vse. In their names and all the Donors and Benefactors we coniure and command that by such a day, least you be all then through the plague of Gods iust wrath deuoured by wild beasts of the Forrest (who attend the execution of your iudgement with a more sudden and fearefull death then befell the falshood of Ananias and Saphyras deniall) you bring vs a faithfull and true Inuentorie what treasure and yeerely Reuenues euery of your Houses haue in possession. Necessitie will not permit delay nor excuse for the contrary. By that time we intend to call a Parliament Royall to be Iudges of our vrgent necessitie for defence of our Realme against the Kings and Princes of Poland, Swethia, Lituania, and Denmarke, all combined, and our Rebels confederated with the Crimme, and to bee witnesses also of the discharge of our dutie to God and his Angels (to incite you in their name) and his poore distressed people, for whose necessities and preseruation of you all we are thus earnest, their so miserable estates lying yet in your hands and power, in time to remedie and sustaine.

* Ant. Possenius.

The chiefe of the Clergy often assembled and dissembled, deuising with the discontented Nobility to make warre and resist. But they wanted sufficient Commanders, and were otherwise vnprouided of Armes. Hereof the Emperour tooke aduantage, and proclaymed the heads of those Houses to be Traytors, endites twenty of the principall, and chargeth them with Treasons and other odious crimes, hauing fitted pregnant proofes to manifest the same to be true. He commands his great wild Beares to be brought out of their darke Caues, kept of purpose for such pastimes at Slobida Velica. Vpon Saint Isaies day, in a spacious place walled about, seuen of the principall fat bellied Fryers were brought forth one after another, each with his Crosse and Beads in one hand, and (through the Emperours great fauour) a Bore-speare of fiue foot in length in the other hand for his defence. A wilde Beare was let loose, which ranging against the wall, sented the Fryer and made more mad with the peoples shouting and cry, runnes at him fiercely, and crusheth his head, body, bowels, legs, and armes as a Cat doth a Mouse, and hauing thus deuoured or torne the Fryer, was shot and killed by the Gunners. Then was another Fryer and a fresh Beare in like sort committed and likewise serued, and so the rest, of which only the last had so much skill and agility that setting the end of his Speare in the ground, and guiding it to the breast of the Beare, he ranne himselfe thorow on it, and both dyed in the place. This Fryer was canonized for a valiant Saint by the rest of his liuing Brethren, of Michalla Swesti in Susdal. Seuen other Fryers were condemned to be buryed aliue. Hereupon the Metropolites Bishops, Monkes, and Fryers of all Houses resorted with Petitions and Prostrations to pacifie the Emperour, not only suffering his Ghostly Father to absolue him, but acknowledging the others to haue suffered iustly, hoping that it would be example to all which professed holy Orders. They all, their Treasurers, and Heads of all the chiefe Monasteries and Nunneries did in the name of themselues and the soules of their holy founders present a true and perfect Inuentory of all their Treasure, Moneyes, Townes, Lands, and Reuenewes particularly belonging to any Saint which commended the same to their trust and custodies successiuely for the euerlasting maynteniance of those holy Seminaries and Sanctuaries, hoping and assuredly beleeuing that his sacred Soule in commemoration of all others, will not suffer any violation in his age, which must passe away with accounts before the Trinity of things in all Ages done: if otherwise, that it would please him to giue them some authenticall discharge to remayne to Posteritie. I haue with my best skill translated thus much verbatim out of the Originall.

Execution by Beares.

The Frier killeth the Beare with his Spear, and is killed by her.

These Inchantments preuented their dissolution, but preuayled not against the Emperours resolute demand of 300000. Markes sterling brought speedily in Coyne vnto his Treasury, sury, besides the resignation of many Precincts, Townes, Lands, Villages and Royalties, at leſt as much more worth, to diſpoſe of (though with great grudge) to the diſcontented Nobles, whoſe Houſes were thereby made to ſerue his turne in all his deſignes. Here hath hee rayſed a new treaſure without diminiſhing any part of his old, being moſt prepared for England. But neyther his Embaſſadour Andrew Sauen, nor Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon did ſo thorowly expreſſe his minde, being darkely and cauteloufly made knowne to them, or elſe Queene Elizabeth would not apprehend the meſſage. But this ſecrecy notwithſtanding, his eldeſt Sonne and Fauourites tooke knowledge of it, which bred ſuch iealouſie in the Emperour, that he was faine to diſſemble his affection, and couer his purpoſe therein with a new Marriage at home, one Feodor Nagois daughter a Subiect of his owne, by whom afterwards he had a third Sonne called Demetrius.

Iuans fifth wife, mother of Demetrius.

He ſpends now his time in pacifying his diſcontented Nobility and people, kept two Armies on foot with ſmall charge (his Princes and Nobles going moſt on their owne charge, the Gentlemen and Sinebarskeys hauing portions of Money, Corne and Land, certayne Reuenewes being put a part for that purpoſe, beſides Eſcheats, Robberies, and Cuſtomes payed them whether they goe to warre or no) without diminution of his Crowne Reuenew, or great ſtanding Treaſure. The one Army conſiſted moſt of Tartars employed againſt the Pole and Sweden which ſought to recouer Liuonia. The other Army conſiſted commonly of 100000. Horſe, moſt his owne Subiects, ſome few Poles, Swedens, Dutch and Scots, employed againſt the Crimme, which commonly doth not laſt aboue three moneths, May, Iune, and July euery yeere. His Tartars notwithſtanding King Stephens preuayling, bring away many Captiues out of Liefland, the fruitfulleſt Land in all the Eaſt, flowing with Milke and Honey, the faireſt women and beſt conditioned people in the World to conuerſe and commerce with, but giuen much to Luxury, Idleneſſe and Pleaſure: for which ſinnes they themſelues ſay that God hath thus plagued and rooted them out, and planted Strangers in their Countrey. It was my fortune, by ſpeciall fauour, to buy and redeeme diuers men, women, and children of theſe Captiues, for ſmall ſummes of money, ſome being Merchants of good quality; and got leaue to conuay ſome to Liefland againe, ſome to England, ſome to Hamborow and Lubeck.

Liuonia commended.

Amongſt them were taken ſome Dutch, French, Scots, and Engliſh, which had ſerued vnder Pontus a French Captain, who were placed about the Suburbs of the Muſco, & by my mediation had leaue to build a Church. I contributed well thereto, and got them a Learned Miniſter; their Aſſembly were at leaſt two thouſand euery Sunday; their Rites after the Lutherane faſhion. Of theſe eighty fiue were Scots Souldiers left of ſeuen hundred ſent from Stockholme, and three Engliſh in their company. I got them well houſed at Boluan neere the Moſco. I appeaſed the Emperours fury againſt them, cauſing to be told him the difference of theſe remote Aduenturers (ready to ſerue any Chriſtian Prince for pay) and the Natiue Swedens; and that they would be of good vſe againſt the Crimme Tartar. Some vſe was after made of my aduice, and 1200. of them did better ſeruice againſt the Tartar, then 12000. Ruſſes, with their ſhort Bowes and Arrowes. The Tartars (not knowing before the vſe of Piſtols) were ſtrucke dead off their Horſes with ſhot they ſaw not, and cryed, away with thoſe new Deuils that come with their thundring puffs of fire: whereat the Emperor laughed and wiſhed for more of them: and they had Penſions and Lands allowed, and married with the Liuonian women increaſed into Families. I was glad hee tooke no notice of the Engliſh, which might haue yeelded him an opportune quarrell to my ſelfe, and to the Merchants goods in his Countrey worth 100000. Markes. A little before hee had ſold Maſter Thomas Glouer a chiefe Agent for the Engliſh Company, a Wife borne of a Noble Houſe in Poland, Baſmanana, taken Captiue with her Siſter at Polletzca, for 10000. Hungarian Duckets in Gold; and yet ſhortly after on diſpleaſure, tooke from him 16000. pounds more in Cloth, Silkes, and other merchandiſe, and ſent him with his Wife empty out of his Land.

The Emperour expecting ſome returne and anſwer of his Letters out of England, the Queene addreſſed one Daniel Sylueſter therewith, who arriued at Saint Nicholas, paſt vp to Colmogro, and there making Clothes for his paſſing vp to the Emperour, whiles the Taylor was putting on him his new Sute in the Engliſh houſe, a Thunderbolt ſtrooke him dead, piercing downe his necke and coller in the inſide of his new Coat, not outwardly ſeene. A flaſh of Lightning killed alſo his Boy and Dogge by him, burnt his Deske, Letters and the Houſe at that inſtant: at which newes, the Emperour much perplexed, ſaid Gods will bee done. But raging and in deſperate caſe, his Enemies beſetting three parts of his Countrey (the Pole and Sweden Eaſtward, and Crimme Southward) King Stephen threatning alſo ſhortly to viſit the Moſco: He made preparation, but pretending that he could no way be furniſhed of Powder, Salt-peeter, Lead and Brimſtone, the Narue being ſhut, but out of England, hee ſent for me and told me he had a meſſage of honour, weight, and ſecreſie to employ me in, to the Queenes Maiesty; Perceiuing that I had attayned the familiar knowledge of his Language the Polish and Dutch Tongues, he questioned me of diuers things, liked my answere, asked if I had seene his great Vessels at Vologda. I told him I had. What Traytor hath shewed them you? I ventured in company of thousands more (I said) to behold their beauty, &c. He said, You shall see double the number ere long, but much more to bee admired, if you knew what inestimable treasure they are inwardly to be-beautified with. It is reported that your Queene my Sister hath the best Nauy of Ships in the World. It is true said I, and entred into a large discourse and description of them.

Sir Ierom Horsey sent from the Emperour to Q. Elizabeth.

He gaue me charge to prepare my selfe and to be silent and secret, and to attend euery day till he were prepared for my dispatch, he commanded his Secretary to take in writing of me a description of the Queenes Nauy Royall, to which I added the Picture of a Ship with all her glorious and Martiall accoultrements. About this time, the Emperour was much busied in searching out a Treason against him plotted by Bomelius and the Archbishop of Nouogrod with some others, discouered by their Seruants on the Racke, Letters sent in Cyphers three sundry wayes to Swethen and Poland. The Bishop confessed all, and Bomelius denyed all: But being racked, his backe and body cut with wyre whips, he confessed more then the Examiners were willing the Emperour should know. He sent word they should roast him, being taken from the Pudkie and bound to a wooden Spit, which being done till they thought no life left, they brought him in a Sled thorow the Castle, where I with others saw him, and he espying me, called vpon Christ. They threw him into a Dungeon, where hee miserably ended his life. He had liued in pompe, and beene Authour of much mischiefe, had conuayed much treasure out of the Countrey, by way of England to Wesell in Westphalia where hee was borne, though brought vp in Cambridge; an Enemy alway to our Nation. Hee had deluded the Emperour with tales of Queene Elizabeths youth and hopes (by his Calculations) of obtayning her. (But the Emperour, out of hope hereof, heard that there was a young Lady of the bloud Royall, the Lady Mary Hastings, daughter to the Earle of Huntington, whom he now affected.) The Bishop of Nouogrod was condemned of coyning and sending money to Swethen and Poland, of keeping Witches, buggering Boyes and Beasts, confederating with Bomelius, &c. All his goods were confiscated, and himselfe throwne into a Dungeon with Irons on his head and legges, where he made painted Images, Combes and Beads, liued with bread and water. Eleuen of his confederate Seruants were hanged in his Palace gate at Mosco, and his women Witches shamefully dismembred and burnt.

Bomelius rosted

I beheld all this.

The Emperour passed ouer those which had beene accused, and now consulted about marrying his second Sonne Chariwich Theodor, being of great simplicitie, the eldest hauing no issue. But hauing his Prelates and Nobles together, could not but euaporate some of his conceits from the former confessions of their Treasons, being Ascension day, on which before Musco had beene burned. He spent some houres in Rhetoricall enlarging the dismalnesse of that day with great eloquence, darting still with his eye at many Confederates in the late Conspiracie, protesting to leaue them a naked disloyall and distressed people, and a reproch to all Nations of the World. The Enemies are at hand, God and his prodigious creatures in the Heauens fight against vs, Scarcity and Famine witnesse it, and yet no Iudgements moue remorse in you. The Originall is too long to recite. Little was done, but all prostrating themselues to his Maiesty, and mercy desired God to blesse his holy purpose for the marriage of his Sonne, for whom he chose Irenia, daughter of Theodor Iuanowich Godonoue, and after the solemnization of the marriage with great Feast dismissed the Nobles and Prelates with better words and countenance, which was taken for a reconciliation. But the Nuptials could not be performed by vsuall cohabitation, which much distempered the King; it is not decent to write the courses taken therein.

Theodore marrieth Irenia sister to Boris, whose Storie followeth. Bewitched.

The Emperous Letters & Instructions were ready, himselfe & his chiefe Secretarie Sauely Frowlow (whiles I was present) closed them vp in one of the false sides of a woodden Bottle filled with Aquauitæ to hang vnder my Horse-mayne not worth one penny: appointed me foure hundred Hungarian Duckets in Gold to be sowed in my Boots, and quilted in some of my worst garments. He said, he forbare to tell me of some secrets of his pleasure, fearing left I passing thorow his Enemies Country might bee inforced to discouer what hee would not haue knowne. The Bottle you carry with you shall declare what you shall say to Queene Elizabeth my louing Sister, of which you must haue careas of your life, vntill you come in safe place to open it. In meane while, and alway, beethou my sweet Sunshine, Eremiska, trusty and faithfull, and thy reward shall be my goodnesse and grace from me hereafter. I fell prostrate, layd my head on his foot with a heauy heart to bee thus exposed to vnauoydable danger. Docasie Vlunow a Gentleman of good ranke, and daily Wayter on the King attended me; my Sled and Horse and twenty Seruants were ready at the posterne-gate. I posted that night to Otuer ninety miles, where victuals and fresh Horses were prepared, and so to Nouogrod and Pleſco, 600. miles, in three dayes, where entring into Liuonia, my Gentleman and Seruants tooke their leaues, and deſired ſome token to the Emperour of my ſafe comming thither. They left me with a poore guide only. By miles vnderſtand Ruſſian miles, which are about three quarters of ours.

Within three houres after, the Centinell tooke me vpon the borders, and brought me to Newhouſe into the Caſtle before the State-holder or Lieutenant, who ſtraitly examined and ſearched me, ſuſpecting me as one comming from their enemies Country. I ſaid I was glad to come into their hands out of the vaſte of miſery the Moſcouites Country, not without loſſe. On the third day vpon ſome mediation, they appointed mee a Guide, and ſuffered mee to paſſe. The Guard expected gratuitie, but I excuſed, as pinched by the Ruſſe. I paſſed three dayes by Land and frozen Meares to Oſſel in Liefland, an Iland large and ſpacious vnder the King of Denmarke; Raggamuffin Souldiers tooke me and vſed me roughly, and carried me to Seuen Burgh, and ſo to Orent Burgh, the chiefe Townes and Caſtles in thoſe parts, and there deliuered me to the State-holders Lieutenant. I attended his pleaſure kept hardly as a Spie, the Snakes creeping in my Lodging, on Bed and board, and Milke pans: the ſoyle was ſuch they did no harme. I was called before the chiefe Gouernour (a graue Gentleman in good fauour with the King, many Halberds attending) who examined me with many queſtions. I anſwered I was a Subiect of the Queene of England, who had peace with all Chriſtian Kings, ſpecially with the King of Denmarke; but was committed againe to cuſtody, whence (hauing diſmiſſed his company) he ſent for me againe by his Sonne and being priuate, holding a Letter in his hand, ſaid, I haue receiued ſundry Letters from my friends, and one of late from my daughter, captiue in Moſco, which ſheweth of much friendſhip ſhee hath found at an Engliſh Gentlemans hand, which negociates in that Court for the Queen of England. My Lord, ſaid I, is your daughter called Magdalen Vrkil: yea Sir, ſaid he. I anſwered I was the man, & that within theſe ten dayes ſhe was well. He ſayd he could not procure her ranſome, and claſps me about the neck, crying as did his Sonne likewiſe: Gods Angell hath brought your goodneſſe thus to me, how euer diſguiſed in this turbulent time, that I might render you thankes and furtherance. I deſired free paſſe and ſafe conduct. He feaſted me ioyfully, and made ready his Letters and Paſports to Captaines of Townes and Caſtles, gaue mee a faire German ſtriking Clocke, offered his Sonne and Seruants armed to guard me out of danger, which I could not accept of, and commended his daughter to me.

Oſell an Iland in the Baltike Sea in 59. deg.

I paſſed on to Pilton a ſtrong Caſtle where King Magnus lay, who vſed mee roughly, becauſe I could not drinke with him exceſſiuely. Hee had riotouſly ſpent and giuen moſt of his Townes and Caſtles, Iewels, Plate, &c. to his followers and adopted daughters; which hee receiued in Dowre with the Emperours Neece, and not long after dyed miſerably, leauing his Queene and only daughter in very poore eſtate. I roade thorow the Duke of Curlands Country, and Pruſſia to Konninſburgh, Melsin and Danzike in Poland, Pomerania and Mickelburgh to Lubeck, where I was knowne and honourably entertayned. I had now gotten foure or fiue Seruants Dutch and Engliſh. The Burgomaſters ſent mee a Preſent of Fiſh, Fleſh, and Wines, taking notice of the fauours I had done to them and theirs: diuers came with thankfull acknowledgement of their Redemption by my meanes and Purſe, from Muſcouite and Tartarian Captiuity, and preſented me with a Boll couer guilt, in it Ricks Dollers, and Hungarian Duckets, which Coyne I returned againe. They brought mee their Towne Booke, and prayed mee to write my Name and place of Birth and abode, that they and their Poſteritie might honour my Name in Record for euer. At Hamburgh likewiſe, they for like cauſe preſented me their thankes, and Preſent, and the Burgomaſters feaſted me. Pilton. Gratitude.

I landed at Harwich, opened my Aquauitæ Bottle (which had beene girt cloſe vnder my Caſſocke by day, and my beſt Pillow by night) and tooke thence the Emperours Letters, which I ſweetned aſwell as I could. But yet the Queene ſmelt the Aquauitæ-ſauour. I had acceſſe three or foure ſeuerall times, and ſome diſcourſe by meanes of my Lord Treaſurer, Sir Francis Walſingham, and ſome honourable countenance of my Lord of Leiſter, by Sir Edward Horſey my Kinſman his meanes. I was well entertayned by the Muſcouie Company, to whom the Queene had giuen command to prepare thoſe things for which the Emperour had giuen directions. With which, and her Maieſties Letters & gracious fauour (ſworne her Seruant, Eſquire of the Body, giuing me her Picture & Hand to kiſſe) I departed in company of twelue tall Ships. Wee met with the King of Denmarke his Fleet of Shippes and Gallies neere the North Cape, fought with them and put them to the worſt, and after arriued at S. Nicolas. I poſted ouer Vaga, and came to Slobida Alexandriſca, where I deliuered the Queenes Letters to the Emperour, with her pleaſure, by word of mouth ſhort of his expectation. He commanded my ſilence, commended my ſpeed and buſineſſe done for him, gaue me allowances and promiſed his goodneſſe for recompence of my ſeruice. He commanded alſo that thoſe Commodities ſhould be brought vp to the Muſco, and receiued into his Treaſury, viz. Sir Iet. Horſey returne into Ruſſia.

Copper, Lead, Powder, Salt-peeter, Brimstone, &c. to the value of 9000. pounds, and ready mony payd for them.

He came to the Citie of Musco, and cast his displeasure vpon some Grandes: hee sent a Parasite of his with 200. Gunners to rob his Brother in Law Mekita Romanowich our next Neighbour, which tooke from him all his Armour, Horses, Plate, Mony, Lands and Goods to the value of 100000. Marks sterling. He sent the next day to the English House for as much course Cotton as would make himselfe and his children Gownes to couer them. The Emperour sent likewise Simon Nagoy another of his Instruments, to squeeze or spunge Andria Shalkan a great bribing Officer, who brought his faire young Wife Solomaneda out of her Chamber, defiled her, cut and gashed her naked backe with his Cemitar; killed his trusty Seruant Iuan Lettish, tooke all his Horses, Goods and Lands, and beat out of his shinnes 10000. Robles or Markes sterling in mony. At that time did the Emperour also conceiue displeasure against the Dutchmen and Liuonians before mentioned (to whom a Church and libertie of Religion had beene giuen by my meanes) and appointed certaine Captaines with 2000. Gunners in the night to take the spoile of all they had, who stripped them naked, rauished and defloured the women and virgins, carrying away diuers of the youngest and faireſt to serue their lusts. Some escaping came to the English house, where they were cloathed and relieued not without danger of displeasure, amongst whom was that daughter of the Gouernour of Osell in Liefland commended to my fauour, whose freedome I also afterwards procured and conueyed her to her father.

The Emperors excesses. This Mekita was Brother to Nastacia the first Emperors first Wife, and Grandfather to the present Emperour.

His crueltie grew now ripe for vengeance; and hee not long after falling out with his eldest Sonne for his commiseration to those distressed Christians, and for greeuing at his Vnkles wronge, iealous also of the peoples affection to him, gaue him a boxe on the eare (as it was tearmed) which he tooke so tenderly that hee fell into a burning Feuer, and in three dayes departed this life. Whereat the Emperour tore his haire and beard, like a mad man, lamenting too late for that irrecouerable losse, not to himselfe so much as to the Empire, whose hopes were buried with him; being a wise, milde and worthy Prince of three and twenty yeeres. Hee was buried in Michala Archangell Church in the Musco with Iewels and Riches put in his Tombe valued at 50000. pounds; watched after by twelue Citizens in course, euery night deuoted to his Saint Iohn and Michael, to keepe both body and Treasure till his Resurrection.

Death and buriall of yong Iuan.

Now was the Emperour more earnest to send into England about his long conceited match, his second Sonne being weake of wit and body, without hope of ability for gouernment, and the third not only young but disallowed in Sanctitie, and according to the fundamentall Lawes illegitimate, borne out of Wedlocke of the fift vnlawfull Wife, not solemnised with the Rites of their Church, but in the Church-yard by a depriued and excommunicated Prelate, in which respect neyther she nor her Issue were capeable of the Crowne.

So sayth the Originall.

The Emperour peruseth the Queenes last Letters, and addresseth one of his trustiest Seruants in Embassage Theodore Pissempskoie a wise Nobleman about the Lady Mary Hastings aforesaid, and that her Maiesty would bee pleased to send some Noble Embassadour to treate with him therein. This Embassadour tooke shipping at Saint Nicolas, and arriuing in England, was magnificently entertayned and admitted audience. Her Maiesty caused that Lady to bee attended with diuers Ladies and young Noblemen, that so the Embassadour might haue a sight of her, which was accomplished in Yorke House Garden. There was he (attended also with diuers men of quality) brought before her, and casting downe his countenance fell prostrate before her, and rising ranne backe with his face still towards her. The Lady with the rest admiring at this strange salutation, hee sayd by an Interpreter; it sufficed him to behold the Angelicall presence of her, which hee hoped should bee his Masters Spouse and Empresse, seeming rauished with her Angelicall countenance, state and beauty. Shee was after that by her familiar friends in Court called Empresse of Moscouia. Sir William Russell, third Sonne to the Earle of Bedford, a wise and comely Gentleman was appointed her Maesties Ambassadour to the Moscouite: but hee and his Friends considering of the businesse, and not so forward thereto, the Company of Merchants intreated for Sir Ierome Bowes, mooued theretowith his presence and tall person.

Embassadour to the Queene for Lady Mary daughter to the Earle of Huntingdon.

He was well set forth, most at their charge, and with the Russian Embassadour arriued at S. Nicolas. The Emperours Ambassadour posted ouer land, and deliuered his Letters with the accounts of his Embassage which was ioyfully accepted. Sir I.B. passed slowly vp the Dwina 1000. miles to Vologda. The Emperour sends a Pensioner Michael Preterpopone well attended to meet him and make his prouisions. At Teraslaue another, Querry of the Stable, met him. At Musco hee was honourably entertayned. Knez Iuan Suetzcoie attended with 300. Horse brought him to his lodging. Saualle Frollone the Secretary was sent to congratulate his welcome with many dishes of dressed meate, and promise of best accommodating.

Sir Ier. Bowes Embassadour into Russia. You haue his Voyage, &c. in M. Hakluyt.

The

The next day, the Emperour sent a Noble man Ignatie Tatishoue, to visit him with faire words and promise of speediest audience, which was on Satturday following. About nine of the clocke the streets were filled with people, and a thousand Gunners attired in yellow and blue Garments set in rankes by the Captaines on Horsebacke with bright Harquebuses in their hands from the Ambassadours doore to the Emperours Palace, Knez Iuan Sitzcoie attended him mounted on a faire Gennet richly bedecked, with a faire Gelding well furnished for the Embassadour, attended with three hundred Gentlemen gallantly adorned. The Embassadour being displeased that the Dukes Horse was better then his, mounted on his owne Horse, and with his thirty men liveried in Stamell Clokes well set forth, each hauing a part of his Present (being most Plate) marched onward to the Kings Palace, where another Duke met him, and told him that the Emperour stayed for him. He answered, that hee came as fast as he could. By the way the people ghessing at the vnpleasingnesse of his message, cryed Carenke, (that is, Cranes-legs) in mockage of him, whereat hee stormed much. The passage, stayres and Roomes thorow which hee was conducted, were all beset with Merchants and Gentlemen in Golden Coats. His men entred before him with their Presents into the Roome where the Emperour sate in his Robes and Maiesty, with his three Crownes before him, foure young Noble men called Ryndes, shining in their Cloth of beaten Siluer, with foure Scepters, or bright Siluer Hatchets in their hands, on each side of him, the Prince and other his great Dukes and Nobles in rankes sitting round about him. The Emperour stood vp, and the Embassidour making his courtesies, deliuers the Queenes Letters, which hee receiued and put off his Imperiall Cap, asking how his louing Sister Queene Elizabeth did. His answere made, he sate downe on a side forme couered with a Carpet, and after some little pause and mutuall view, was dismissed in manner as hee came, and his Dinner of two hundred dishes of dressed meats sent after him, by a Gentleman of qualitie.

I was forewarned by my secret and best friends not to intermeddle in those businesses. Some secret and publike conferences passed, but good note was taken that none of the great Family of the Godonoues were consulted with therein. The King feasts the Embassadour, grants great allowance of daily prouision, and nothing would please him: yea he made great complaints about friuolous matters. The Merchants and the Emperours Officers were reconciled in their accounts, grieuances remedied, Priuiledges granted, and an Embassadour to the Queene resolued on; if Sir I. B. could haue conformed himselfe to the time, any thing might haue beene yeelded: yea, he promised, that if his Marriage with the Queenes Kinswoman tooke effect, her issue should inherit the Crowne; for assurance whereof he had a masse of ready treasure presently to be transported with his Embassadour vnto Queene Elizabeths trust. The Clergy and Noblity (especially the neerest allied to the old Empresse, the Princes wife and her Family of the Godonoues found meanes to crosse all these Designes.

But England was not so happie.

The King much distracted in fury caused many Witches, Magicians, or Wors presently to be sent for out of the North, where there are many betweene Colmogro and Lappia. Threescore of them were brought post to Musco, where they were guarded, dyeted and daily visited by the Emperours great Fauourite Bodan Belscoy to receiue from them their Diuinations or Oracles on the Subiects giuen them in charge by the Emperour. (Note that a great blasing Star and other prodigious sights, were seene a moneth together, euery night ouer Musco that yeere.) This Fauorite now sought to serue the turne of the rising Sunne, wearied with the wicked disposition of the Emperour. The Sooth-sayers tell him that the heauenly Planets and Constellations would produce the Emperours death by such a day. But he not daring to tell the Emperour so much, said to them that on that day they should be all burned. The Emperour began grieuously to swell in his Cods (wherewith he had offended so long, boasting that he had deflowred thoulands of Virgins, and a thousand children of his begetting destroyed) was carried euery day in his Chaire into his Treasury. One day (two dayes before the Emperour his death) the Prince beckoned to me to follow, and I aduenturously stood among the rest, and heard him call for his Precious Stones and Iewels. He then held discourse to the Nobles about him, directing his eye and speech most to Boris Godonona, of the nature and properties of his Gemmes: of the World compassing Load-stone (causing the Wayters to make a Chaine of Needles therewith touched) of the Corall also and Turkesse, whose beautifull colours (sayd he) layd on my arme poysoned with inflammation, you see are turned pale, and declare my death. Reach out my Staffe Royall (an Vnicornes Horne garnished with very faire Diamonds, Rubies, Saphires, Emeralds and other Precious Stones, it cost 70000. Markes sterling, bought of Danid Gowell of the Fulkers of Ausburge) seeke out some Spiders; caused his Physician Iohannes Eiloff to scrape a Circle thereof vpon the Table, and put within it one Spider, and after another, which burst presently, others without the Circle running away from it aliue. It is too late, it will not preserue me. Behold these Precious Stones, the Diamond most precious of all other, I neuer affected it; it restraines Fury and Luxury, the powder is poyson. Then he points to the Rubie; this comforts the Braine and Memory, clarifieth congealed bloud. That Emerald of the nature of the Rainbow, is enemy to all vncleanenesse, and though a man cohabit in Lust with his owne Wife, this Stone being about them will burst at the spending of Nature. The Saphyre I greatly delight in, it preserueth and increaseth Nature and Courage, reioyceth the heart, is pleasing to all the vitall Senses, soueraigne to the Eyes, strengthens the Muscles. Hee takes the Onyx in hand, &c. All these are Gods wonderfull gifts, secrets in Nature, reuealed to mans vse and contemplation as friends to grace and vertue, and Enemies to vice. I faint, carry me away, till another time. In the afternoone he peruseth ouer his Will, and yet thinkes not to dye. His Ghostly Father dares not put him in minde of annointing in holy forme. Hee hath beene witched in that place, and often vnwitched againe.

He commands the Master of the Apotheke, and the Physicians to prepare a Bath for his solace, enquires the goodnesse of the Signe, sends his Fauourite to his Witches to know their Calculations. Hee tels them, the Emperour will bury or burne them all quicke for their Illusions and Lyes, the day is comne, he is as heart-whole as euer he was. Sir (they answered) bee not so wrathfull, you know the day is comne, and you know it ends with the Sun-setting. He hasts him to the Emperour, made preparation for his Bath about the third houre of the day. The Emperour therein solaced himselfe, and made merry with pleasant Songs after his vse, came out about the seuenth houre well refreshed, sate downe vpon his Bed, cals Rodouone Birken a Fauourite of his to bring the Chesse-board, sets his men, his chiefe Fauourite and others with Boris Federowich Godonoue, being then about him. He in his loose Gowne, Shirt and Linnen Hose, faints and fals backward. Great was the stirre and out-cry; one sends for Aquauitæ, another to the Apotheke, for Vineger and Rose-water, with other things and to call the Physicians. Meane time he was strangled * and starke dead. Some shew of hope was made of his recouery to still the out-cry.

Ivan Vasiliwich his death.

*Supposed the act of Belskoy and Boris.

Bodan Belscoy and Boris (to whom the dead Emperour had bequeathed, as the first of foure Princes, to take charge of his Sonne and Kingdome, being Brother to the Successors Wife) goe out on the Terras accompanied with so many of the Nobility his familiar friends as was strange so suddenly to behold. They called out to the Captaines and Gunners to keepe their Guards strong, and the Gates sure with their Peeces and Matches light: whereupon the Gates of the great Castle were presently shut with watch and ward. I offered my Selfe, my Men, Powder and Pistols, to attend the Prince Protector. Hee accepted mee among his Familiars and Seruants, passing by with a cheereful countenance towards me, speaking aloud, Be faithfull and faint not Eremiesca. The Metropolitans, Bishops, and Nobility flocked into the inner Castle, holding it a day of Iubilee for their redemption, pressing who could first, to the Booke and Crosse to sweare to the new Emperour Feodor Iuanowich. It was admirable what dispatch there was in sixe or seuen houres; The Treasury sealed vp, and new Officers added to the old, twelue thousand Gunners with their Captaines set for a Garrison about the Wals of the great Citie of Musco. A Guard was giuen mee to keepe the English House. The Embassadour S. I. B. trembled, and expected hourely nothing but death from the rage of the Nobilitie and people. His gates, windowes and Seruants were shut vp, his former plentifull allowance taken away. Boris and three others of the greatest Peeres ioyned assistance with him in the Emperours Will for the Gouernment of the Kingdome (viz. Knez Misthisloskie, Knez Iuan Suskoy, and Mekita Romanowich) began to mannage and dispose of all affaires: they proclayme the Emperour Feodore in his late Fathers stile thorow all the Kingdome, take Inuentories of all the Treasure euery where, Gold, Siluer, Iewels, which was infinite; make a suruay of all the Officers and Bookes of the Crowne Reuenues. New Treasurers, Counsellors, and Officers in all Courts of Iustice are made, new Lieutenants also, Captaines and Garisons in all places of charge and importance; most out of the Family of the Godonoues, best to be trusted for attendance and seruice about the King and Queene, by which meanes the Protector became strong. He was with great obseruation magnified of all, and so behaued himselfe to the Princes, Nobility and people as he increased their loue. After some pause I was sent for, and asked what they should doe with S. I. B. his businesse being at an end, he was not now (said they) to be reputed an Ambassadour. I answered, it stood with the honour of the King and Kingdome to dismisse him with honour, and safely according to the Law of Nations; otherwise the Queene whose Seruant hee was would take it ill, &c. They shooke their heads, reuiled him, saying he had deserued death by the Law of Nations, practising so much mischiefe in a State. They would haue sent a message to him by me to prepare his present dispatch with some other terrible words of displeasure. I besought that I might not be the messenger, which somewhat offended them.

Theodore or Feodore Emperour.
Boris Protector

The Protector and Chiefes Commissioners course of gouernment.

The Lord Protector sent for mee at Euening, whom I found playing at the Chesse with Knez Iuan Gemskoy a Prince of the bloud, and taking mee aside said, I wish you to speake little little in defence of B. the Lords take it ill. Goe shew your selfe from me, and pacifie such and such. Your answer was well considered of, but many perswade reuenge vpon him for his ill behauiour. I hope, said I, your greatnesse and wisdome will pacifie their furies. I'le do my best (he sayd) to make all well, and so tell him from me. I went to those Noblemen accordingly, which complayning of their sufferings for his arrogance, willed me to be quiet in the businesse. Yet did not I leaue to deale effectually vnderhand for him, intreating he might be sent for and dispatched, beeing cooped vp and kept close as a prisoner, and allowances taken from him.

At last he was sent for, attended but with a meane messenger, lead into a with-drawing Roome, where the Lords vsed him with no respect, charged him with heynous matter practised against the Crowne and State; would not spend time to heare his answere, rayled on him (especially the two Shalkans, great Officers, and some others who had suffered displeasures & beatings from the Emperour through his complaints) saying it were requisite to make him an example, cutting off his Crane-legges, and casting his withered carkasse into the Riuer (pointing out of the window) vnder him: but God hath now giuen vs a more mercifull Emperour, whose eyes he should see for Queene Elizabeths sake. But put off your Sword (which hee refused to doe, saying it was against his Order and Oath) they would inforce him else, comming into the presence of so peaceable a Prince, whose soule being clothed with mourning, was not prepared for the sight of Armes. And so hee put on patience, and was brought single to the presence of the Emperour, who by the mouth of his Chancelour commended him to Queene Elizabeth. Wherewith Sir I. B. was conuayed to his Lodgings, three dayes giuen for his departure out of Muscouia; perhaps hee should haue a Letter sent after him. He had now little meanes, lesse money, and none to supply him but my selfe, who made meanes to get him thirty Carts to conuay his and his Seruants Stuffe, and as many Post-horse; for he could be allowed none of the Emperours charge. I asked leaue of the Lord Protector to speake with him, and to bring him out of the City. Watch and ward was appointed in the streets that the people should not stirre at him. A meane Sinoboarscoie was appointed to conduct him, who vsed him with small humanity, and much against the height of his mind to endure. I with my Seruants and good friends accompanied him wel mounted out of Muscouia, cauled my Pauillion to be pitched by a Riuers side ten miles off, and with my prouisions of Wines and Mead, tooke leaue of him and his company. He sadly prayed me to haue an eye an eare to his safety, doubting of some trechery, & much perplexed with feare, as were the Gentlemen with him. I procured the Lord Protector to send his Letters after him to the Queene, & a Timber of Sables a gift from himselfe. When he came to Saint Nicolas aboard the Ship, he vsed intemperate words to the Gentleman that conducted him, for him to tell the Emperour and his Counsell, cut his Letters and Sables in pieces, &c. The Nobility hearing hereof after he was gone laid much blame on me, especially the Shalkans.

Now was the Gouernment much altered hauing put on a new face, Iustice administred and euery man liuing in peace. Mans capacitie cannot comprehend how the infinite treasure which the former Emperour left behind him could be gotten together, and much lesse how it should be so soone consumed, and this Kingdome, Princes and people so ruined. His standing Reuenewes and my Collections out of their owne Records in my Description of the Russe Common-wealth may bee worth reading. The traffique attracting many Nations, Persians, Armenians, Turkes, Italians, Germanes, French, Dutch, English, Polonians, which bring store of Gold and Siluer Coyne, Precious Stones, Iewels, and Pearles, which are taken into his Treasury for the Commodities of that Countrey, by him taken from his Subiects to serue his turne at easie rates, leauing them their traffique besides for Cloth, Silkes, Veluets, Ounce-gold, Tissue, Cloth of Gold and Siluer, Wines, Fruits, Spices, Sugar, Copper, Lead, Tinne, Paper, Indico, Brasill, Calicoes, &c. which that Countrey most needs: This course of traffique and treasure with the surplusage of his Reuenues, amounting yeerely vnto 1300000. Markes sterling, besides all charges for his house and ordinary Salaries of his Souldiers. This hath he continued to lay vp neere sixty yeeres, besides the great treasures left him by his Predecessors, neuer exhausted nor diminished. My selfe haue seene many thousand bags rotten, of old Siluer and Gold Coyne, and Plate in great barred Chests, piled vp in many Vaults, Sellers, and Stone Houses, and many trustie Merchants continually weighing, numbring, and new bagging vp the same: so that I am confident (hauing conuersed much and many yeeres with those Nations) that all the Kings in Christendome haue not like Riches and quantity of treasure.

His Acts Eccleſiaſticall for Religion.

He reduced the Ambiguities and vncertayne Rules of their Lawes and pleadings into a more perſpicuous and plaine forme of a written Law for euery man to vnderſtand and plead his owne cauſe without any Aduocate, and to challenge (vnder great penalty and mulct to the Crowne) iudgement without delay. He eſtabliſhed and publiſhed one vniforme confeſſion of Faith, Doctrine and Diſcipline conſonant to the three Symbols or Creeds; profeſſing the Religion of the Greeke Church, deriuing their antiquitie from their Apoſtle Saint Andrew, and their Patron Saint Nicolas: and in regard of later diſſentions in doctrine and Ceremony in that Church, he hath acquitted the See of Muſco from that Society, and the Synodals and Oblations * heretofore contributed to that Church, the Patriarch Ieremy reſigning the Patriarchſhip of Conſtantinople to the Metropolitan of Muſco. Hee vtterly diſclaymes the doctrine of the Pope, holding it the moſt erronious, maruelling that any Chriſtian Prince would yeeld him any Secular authoritie; which hee cauſed his Clergie to declare to Fryer Anthonie Poſſeuinus the Popes Nuncio at the Church doore at Prechiſta. Hee hath built in his time fortie faire ſtone Churches richly adorned within, and the Turrets all gilded with fine pure Gold without. He hath built and dedicated aboue ſixty Monaſteries and Nunneries, and endowed them with Bels, Ornaments and mayntenance to pray for his Soule. He built a goodly ſteeple of hewne ſtone in the inner Caſtle of Muſco, called Blanaſena, Collacalitza, with twenty great ſweet ſounding Bels in it, which ſerue to all the Cathedrall Churches ſtanding about it, ringing all together euery Feſtiuall day (which are many) and euery midnight Prayers.

One deed of his Charity I may not omit. A great Famine followed the Peſtilence of the better ſort of people. The Townes, ſtreets, & wayes were peſtered with Rogues, idle Beggers, and counterfeit Cripples: nor could any riddance be made of them, Proclamation was made that they ſhould reſort to Slobida Alexandriſca, to receiue the Emperours great almes on ſuch a day. Out of ſome thouſands that came, ſeuen hundred of the vileſt and moſt counterfeit Rogues were all knocked on the head, and caſt into the great Lake for the fiſh to receiue the dole of their carkaſſes, the reſt were diſperſed to Monaſteries and Hoſpitals to be relieued.

His Caſtles & Colonies.

He built aboue 100. Caſtles in his time, in diuers parts of his Kingdome, and planted them with Ordenance and Gariſons. He built 200. Townes in waſt and diſhabited places thorow his Kingdome to repleniſh thoſe parts, being a mile or two miles in length called Yams, giuing euery Inhabitant a portion of Land and Money, to keepe ſo many ſpeedy Horſes for his vſe and for Poſts. He built a goodly ſtrong ſtone Wal about the Citie of Muſco, and planted it with Ordenance and Gariſons.

His perſon deſcribed.

His buriall.

He was a goodly man of preſence, well fauoured, of a high fore-head, and ſhrill voyce, a right Scythian, full of readie wit and wiſdome, cruell and mercileſſe: his owne experience ruled State cauſes and affaires publike. Hee was ſumptuouſly entombed in Michael Archangell Church, where his memory is ſtill dreadfull, though guarded day and night, they which paſſe by or heare his name croſſing and bleſſing themſelues from his Reſurrection againe.

The Coronation was firſt ſolemnized, whereof I was an eye and eare witneſſe (as Maſter Hakluyts and Doctor Fletchers Diſcourſes, in this and other Relations of that State and Common-wealth procured at my hands, declare) My ſelfe was nominated to bee ſent to Queene Elizabeth. The ſubſtance of our Embaſſies was much alike to make knowne, that by the Prouidence of God Feodore Iuanowitch was crowned and ſetled in the Imperiall Throne of his late Father Iuan Vaſilowich of famous memory: who thought good out of his tender care of peace to make knowne to their Princely wiſdomes, how deſirous he was of their aliance and brotherly amity, promiſing all correſpondence, trade and commerce with them and theirs. ded and accommodated in the reputation of an Embassadour whereſoeuer I came. My iourney was ouer-land from Muſco, the twentieth of Auguſt, ſixe hundred miles to Vobſco. 1584.
and thence to Derp in Liefland, Perno, Lebo, Wendon in Curland, and ſo to Riga chiefe Citie of that Prouince: where my Commiſſion was to treat with Queene Magnus (the next heire to the Ruſsian Crowne) ſhe being now in great diſtreſſe and hauing ſmall allowance iſſuing from the Crowne treaſure of Poland. She was kept in the Caſtle of Riga, where by leaue of the Cardinall Raganile very hardly obtayned, I ſpake with her, found her dreſſing her daughters head, both of them in old Garments of cloth of Siluer. I told her, her Brother (ſo Couſin Germans call) the Emperour Feodor had taken notice of the diſtreſſe wherein ſhe and her daughter liued, and deſired her returne into her natiue Countrey, there to hold her eſtate according to her birth. And the Lord Protector Boris Fedorowich with due remembrance of his ſeruice doth vow the performance of the ſame. I was interrupted and haſted away by the Lieutenant, and got leaue a ſecond time. Shee complained of her ſmall allowance not a thouſand Dollers a yeere, which I ſaid ſhe might remedy if ſhe pleaſed. Shee ſaid ſhe had no meanes to eſcape, the King and State minding to make vſe of her birth and bloud, & knowing their faſhions in Ruſſia, ſhe had ſmall hope there to be otherwiſe dealt with, then they vſe to doe with their Queene Widowes, which is to ſhut them vp in a Helliſh Cloyſter, to which I preferre death. I anſwered, her caſe was different, and times had altered that courſe, none that hath a child being thereunto enforced. After other words and promiſe of meanes to effect her eſcape, within two moneths I left with her a hundred Hungarian Duckets; and your Grace (ſaid I) ſhall receiue foure hundred more this day ſeuen weekes or thereabout. Her Highneſſe receiued them very thankfully, and her daughter (then ten yeeres old) twenty more, and I tooke my leaue. The next day as I paſſed out of the Towne Gates, a Gentlewomanlike Mayden in her pleyted haire, preſented me a curious white wrought Handkerchiefe, in the corner whereof was a little Hoop-ring ſet with Rubies, but told mee not from whom. I hied out of the Cardinals iuriſdiction thorow Curland, Pruſſia, Meluin, Danzike, whence I ſent one of my Seruants to the Narue with my Letters, Handkerchiefe and Relation to the Emperour and Protector, all ſewed vp in his quilt doublet. He paſt ſo ſpeedily and ſafely, that this Queene and her daughter were ſent for, ſtolne away very ſecretly, and poſted with thorow Liuonia before ſhe was miſſing. The Lieutenant ſent diuers Horſemen after her but too late, and was therefore diſplaced. At her firſt comming (as I learned after my returne) ſhe was much eſteemed by the Empreſſe and Ladies, had her Officers, Lands and allowances appointed according to her ſtate: but not long after, ſhee and her daughter were diſpoſed into Maydes Monaſtery within two miles of Muſco, among the reſt of the Queenes, whereupon ſhe exclaymed that ſhe was betrayed, and that ſhee had giuen faith to me. But neyther could I be permitted to ſee her, or ſhee mee. This piece of Seruice was very acceptable, whereof I much repent me.

King Magnus his Widow ſeduced by Boris his policie.

From Danzike I paſſed Caſſubia, Pomorenia, Statine, Meckelburgh, Roſtok, Wiſmar (where I eſcaped death miraculouſly) Lubek, where I had honourable entertaynment againe, and from Hamborough arriued in England, had gracious acceſſe to the Queene at Richmond, her Maieſty profeſſing much ioy that a Subiect of hers had attained to knowledge, truſt and abilitie for ſo waighty employment from ſo great a Prince. I after tranſlated the Letters, and Maſter Secretary read them to the Queene. I was well houſed, attended, prouided, and feaſted by the Muſcouie Company: was called againe to Greenwich, and deliuered to her Maieſty what I was to ſay, and what it pleaſed her to enquire of me. In fine ſhee ſayd, well Ierome, we haue loſt a faire time and a great deale of treaſure that our Realme might very opportunely haue beene poſſeſſed of, harſhly cenſuring Bowes his want of temperance, &c. Such was the Lord Treaſurers good husbandry anſwerable to Her Maieſties frugality, that though this buſineſſe had beene kept ten yeeres afoot, and the Emperour ſtill vpheld in hope, yet all the charge of Ambaſſadors and Meſſengers were layd on the Merchants both for entertainments, and gifts giuen and ſent, of which the Queene bare the name and countenance, receiuing thence many and rich Preſents, for that which at times coſt the Company 20000. pounds. The imputations and aſperſions caſt on me by falſe ſuggeſtions and ſubornations of Finch a hang-by of Sir Ierome Bowes, who firſt ſaltered, and after the other being remooued out of preſence, confeſſed that he was ſet on by him; I omit, ſo repaying the courteſie in releaſing him when he had beene taken as a Spie, &c.

One was committed to the Marſhall, the other forbidden her Maieſties preſence.

With much helpe of friends Sir Francis Walſingham and Sir George Barnes, prouiſion was made of Lions, Buls, Dogs, gilt Halberds, Piſtols, Peeces, curious Armour, Wynes, Drugs of all ſorts, Organs, Virginals, Muſicians, Scarlets, Pearles, curious Plate and other things of good value according to my Commiſſions. I tooke my leaue of the Queene, receiued her Highneſſe Letters to the Emperour, and Protector with Letters Patents of grace and title for my paſſage with many good words and gracious promiſes. Inſtructions alſo from the

Lords

Lords and the Company, with some recompence for fauour already done for them in the Emperours Court.

I departed well accommodated in company of tenne good ships, arriued at Saint Nicolas, posted twelue hundred miles to the Musco, came to the Lord Protector, now stiled Prince of the Prouince of Vaga, who receiued me gladly; sends for me againe the next day, tels me of many strange alterations since I had gone from thence, practises of the Mother of Demetrius and that Family, discontents twixt him and his ioynt Commissioners for the Gouernment by the Emperours will. (Hee was now loth to haue any Competitor) you shall heare much said he, beleeue little more then I tell you. On the other side I heard much discontent of the Nobility, dissembling, working on the aduantage, &c. I was brought before the Emperour, the Counsell sitting in State, and deliuered the accounts of my employment (as did other his Embassadours) with the Queenes Letters. Commandement was giuen to a Gentleman with fifty Huntsmen to attend the speedy bringing vp of the Presents. I had commendation for the seruice done about Queene Magnus.

Boris his bloudy staires to the Throne.

Bodan Belscoie the chiefe Fauourite to the old Emperor, was now sent to a remote Town and Castle called Casan in displeasure, as a man feared to sow discontent in the Nobility. Peter Gollanine chiefe Treasurer to the old Emperour and peremptory against Boris, was likewise sent away vnder the conduct of Iuan Voiacone a Fauourite of the Protectors, and on the way to Musco was dispatched of his life. Kneaz Iuan Suscoy a prime Prince of the bloud, one in commission for the Gouernment, was commanded to depart the Coure and City of Musco to his owne repose, surprised with a Coronels Guard, and not farre off the City was smothered in a Cottage with wet hay and stubble set on fire. Thus were the chiefe blockes remoued out of the Godonones way: many more were quarrelled, and by degrees had the like measure.

I was sorry to see in what hatred the Protector grew with the people. He tooke me out with him at the Posterne with small attendance besides his Falconers to see his Gerfalcons flye at the Crane, Herne, and Swanne (Princely pastimes for their lardy Hawkes, not caring for their killing, hauing such choyse) but a beggerly Fryer wished him to hast home speedily, all were not his friends. Some fiue hundred horse, young Nobles and Courtiers, were comming to meet the Protector for honour, to attend him as was said to the Citie. His meaning was that none should know of his going out. He followed the Fryers aduice, ventured the Ford a neerer way, and was at the Castle gate before that company could come about. I saw him perplexed and glad that he had recouered the Palace: where Bishops, Dukes, Gentlemen and other Suters attended him, and could not at other times come in his sight in three or foure dayes together, he passing by a priuy way. I prayed him to looke backe (the rather because they should not enuy my passing with him) to shew himselfe on the Terras. He cast a displeasing countenance on mee, yet stayed and went towards them, saluted many and tooke their Petitions, great acclamations were made, God saue Boris Fedorowich his health. He told them, he would present their Petitions to the Emperour. They answere; Thou most Noble Lord art King, say thou the word and it is done. I recite this because I perceiued his liking and ayme at the Crowne.

Publike audience to Sir I. Horsey.

My Presents were now come: the day appointed that I must againe appeare before the Emperour from her Maiesty, with a Gentleman of good esteeme, and was as well mounted as he, attended with twenty men in faire Liueries; my selfe attyred after their fashion, stayed in a withdrawing Roome till the Emperour and Empresse had viewed out of the Palace windowes the Bull, Doggs and Lions: a goodly white Bull all spotted with naturall black dapples, his gorge hanging downe to his knees, washed with Sope and sleeked ouer, with a greene veluet Collar studded, and a red Rope, made to kneele before the Emperour and Empresse, and standing vp looked fiercely on euery side appearing some other strange beast, which they call Buenall: twelue goodly masty Doggs with Roses and Collars in like fashion led by twelue men, two faire Lions brought forth of their Cages drawene on Sleds, &c. The Emperour being set in his Chaire of State, I was sent for in, my men carrying their Presents in their hands, most pieces of curious Plate. I deliuered my Speech; the Emperour said little, shewed good countenance, and the Chancellor whispering in his eare, stood vp, put off his Cap, and said he was glad to heare that his louing Sister Queen Elizabeth was in good health, and therewith I was dismissed in manner as I came. The perticulars of the Presents were deliuered in a Schedule to the Lord Treasurer. There followed me Iuan Shamadanoe a Kinsman of the Lord Protectors with a hundred and fifty dishes of all sorts of meates for my Dinner from the Emperour, Drinkes, Bread and Spice, sent by one hundred and fifty Gentlemen thorow the streets to my Lodging. I presented the chiefest cloth of Scarlet garment, and rewarded each of the others. The next day my friends, their Priests, Officers, &c. came (as the manner is) to make merry with that cheere.

The

The Protector ſpent a whole day in viewing the Prouiſions ſent him, hee and the Empreſſe his Siſter liking all, admiring nothing more then the Organs and Virginals; neuer hauing ſeene or heard the like before. Ready mony was ſent 4500. pounds, and my choyce of one of three Horſes ſent by the Maſter of his Horſe, eſteemed worth 300. Markes. Hee ſent me by another three thouſand pounds in fine Siluer Coyne of his free gift, and earneſt of his fauour. I was continually remembred with other gifts in bountiful meaſure, ſo that Townes, Monaſteries, Officers, Merchants, Natiue and Forreigne made vſe of my fauour to procure Freedomes and Exemptions. The Emperour (I might ſay the Lord Protector) being poſſeſſed of ſo great a Treaſure, knew not how to make vſe thereof to illuſtrate his fame. The Perſian and Georgian both inuaded by the Turke, were Sutors for ayde. Hee lent the Perſian 200000. pounds for fiue yeeres gratis, and halfe ſo much to the Georgian King. Hereupon grew a quarrell betwixt the Turke and the Moſcouite. The Protector ambitious of greater Rule, or Title rather, ſent Knez Pheodor Forreſten in Embaſſage to the King of Denmarke, about a Match with his Daughter, and Hartique Hans the Kings third Sonne; little was reſolued till foure yeeres after. Alphonaze Maſolane Secretary of State was ſent to Maximilian the Emperour, with great and rich Preſents, and offer of ayde againſt the Turke in Hungary, if he would procure paſſage for an Army thorow Poland of King Stephen, which the Emperour could not effect, and in liew thereof, deſiring by his Embaſſadours ſent into Ruſſia the lone of 300000. Rials, ſuch hoſtage was deſired for aſſurance that the effect was fruſtrate and proued ridiculous and vnfortunate, the Turke ſetting the Crimme on the Ruſſe with a huge Army, which coſt the Moſcouite infinite charge and loſſe of men. The Pole and Swethen combined alſo & recouered their ancient Territories, the Ruſſe at that time being employed in new Conqueſts in Siberia, whence Chiglicaloth the Emperour with his Mother and beſt Murſeys were brought to the Muſco, where they liued with better maintenance then in their owne Country. I ſaw the King there doe many feats of actiuity on Horſeback and Foot. He told me of men of like complection to me in his Country, taken with a Ship two yeeres before, intending to paſſe vp the Ob to ſeeke Cathay.

The diſcontented Nobility now practiſed againſt the Protectors greatneſſe, which hee durſt not then take notice of. Soone after a practice was diſcouered to poyſon the young Prince Demetrius, his Mother and all that Family guarded in Ouglets. Alſo Mekita Romanowich the Emperours only Vnkle, truſted in the third place for the gouernment in the old Emperours Will with Boris, who could indure no Competitor, (two prime Princes made away) was bewitched, his ſpeech taken ſuddenly from him. I came to viſit him, hee ſet pen to paper and writ that hee was bewitched, and by whom, and ſhould not liue. The Protector told me alſo that Mekita Romanowich was not like to diſturbe him long. He dyed ſoone after, and the ſilly Emperour his Nephew fearing his turne next, deſired he might be ſhorne a Fryer.

That Nobleman left three Sonnes of great hope, Feodor the eldeſt (for whom I had made aſwell as I could a kind of Latine Grammer in the Sclauonian Tongue and Letters. He was now enforced to marry, and had a Sonne. The Protector being iealous of him, hee alſo not long after his Fathers death was made dead to the World and ſhorne a Fryer, made Archbiſhop of Roſtoua. His next Brother of no leſſe generous ſpirit, not able to diſſemble his diſcontents longer, tooke opportunitie to ſtab the Protector, though not ſo dangerouſly as hee intended, and eſcaped into Poland where hee and Bodan Belſcoy, and others at home practiſed the vtter ruine of Boris and all his Family. Meane while I procured many Priuiledges for the Engliſh Merchants with Releaſes, Payments, Ratifications, &c. The Protector iealous and fearefull, ſends Treaſure, Siluer and Gold Coyne to Sollauetzca Monaſtery on the Sea ſide neere the Daniſh and Swethen Confines, that it might be ready (as himſelfe told me) to tranſport into England, holding that his ſureſt refuge in caſe of neceſſity. It was of infinite value, and not pertayning to the Crowne. I was now ſuſpected by the diſcontented Nobility who ſhewed me not wonted countenance, which cauſed mee to haſte away hauing ſpeeded my buſineſſe and Inſtructions from the Counſell and Merchants.

Hee is now their Patriarch

Rich Preſents were ſent from the Emperour for the Queene, and Boris ſent with ſecret meſſages a curious Robe for me of Cloth of Siluer wrought without ſeame made in Perſia, with a faire imbroydered Tent, wrought Handkerchiefes, Shirts, Towels, &c. brought by his neere Kinſman. I intreated two fauours for a farwell, the freedome of the Liuonian men, women and children, ſent before to Nouogrod in diſpleaſure: a Catalogue of their names were taken, and they freed by the Letter of Irenia the Empreſſe: the other was the liberty of a Noblemans Sonne of Gilderland. Here Sacarius Gilſenberg, which neyther the King of Denmarke, nor States Letters could before procure; which his Mother well recompenſed.

Sir I. Horſey is ſent againe for England.

After rich allowance by the way, honourably attended, and ample prouiſions added at Saint Nicolas, I was ſhipped in the Centurion, and after fiue weekes arriued in England, at Richmond had audience of the Queene, deliuered the Emperours Letters and Merchants Priuiledges with Golden Spread-eagle Seales at them, and account of my whole employment to her good ſatisfaction and approbation of me. Shee obſerued the Characters by the affinitie they had with the Greeke, and asked if they had not ſuch and ſuch ſignifications, ſaid ſhee could quickly learne it, and bade my Lord of Eſſ. learne it. When the Ships with the Preſents were comne, I had a ſecond audience, her Maieſtie much liking to handle the Preſents.

After this, I weary of Court Holy-water; was willing to retire my ſelfe to a priuate life, but by reaſon of my skill in thoſe Languages, a more dangerous employment was committed to me. Frederike King of Denmarke had embarqued the Engliſh Merchants Ships in the Sound about Cuſtomes, and they ſued to the Queene for redreſſe: likewiſe diuers in Poland which there had obtayned Priuiledges and Protection, had refuſed to pay Debts to the Engliſh Merchants, &c. I was appointed to take Collen in the way, where the Imperiall Dyet was appointed thither to accompany Sir Horatio Palauicino the Queenes Embaſſadour, and Monſieur de Freze, the French Kings Embaſſadour: and thence I to the Dane and the Pole. I came to Copenhagen, had acceſſe to the King of Denmarke, deliuered the Queenes Letters: and after had audience, and propounded what was giuen me in Commiſſion.

He is againe employed to the Kings of Denmarke and Poland; and to Ruſſia, &c.

An. 1589. The King of Denmarke anſwered with a ſad countenance, Our Siſter the Queenes Maieſtie of England requires at our hands too great a loſſe: wee are poſſeſſed of forty thouſand pounds, and twenty tall Ships forfeited to our Crowne by the treachery and falſhood of her Subiects, &c. But in fine, he made his minde knowne to the Queene by his Letters, requiring an exchange of certayne Ships of the Eaſterlings * embarked in England, for the freedome of the Engliſh Ships and goods. This was beyond my Commiſſion to conclude. And I haſted away hauing dined with the King, who beſtowed on mee a Gold Chaine. I returned to Lubek and thence to Danzik, where Maſter Barker Deputy and other ſubſtantiall Merchants, * inuited my way by Meluin, where they reſided. But I tooke my way by Torne, and came to Warſouia, where Sigiſmundus King of Poland then held his Court, and after ſome diſguſts, at laſt obtained the Merchants Suite againſt diuers Debters which had their ſought protection. The great Chancelor Zamoitſcoy, the principall Stateſman of that Kingdome ſent vnto me a friendly meſſage, offering alſo for my ſolace his Hounds, Hawkes, or any other paſtimes for recreation. I was inuited and dined with the King, receiued his Letters Patents, and Diſmiſſion, and after feaſted by the Lord High Chamberlaine Pan Lucas Obroſemoue. I alſo had ſight of Queene Anne daughter to Sigiſmund the Third, and Wife to King Stephen Batore: but priuately, hauing to that end put on one of my Seruants Liueries, which notwithſtanding, I was diſcouered, and had conference with the Queene, who ſeemed much to magnifie Queene Marie, and no leſſe diſaffected to Queene Elizabeth for the death of Storie, Campion, &c. which I ſayd had beene vnnaturall Subiects, and practiſers of Rebellion. Shee then obiected, But how could ſhe ſpill the bloud of the Lords Anoynted, a better Queene, &c. which I anſwered was done by the Parliament, without her Royall conſent. She ſhooke her head with diſlike, and would haue replyed, had not Poſſeuine the Popes Legate, as they termed him (whoſe skirts I had before preſſed in Muſco, being there the Popes Nuncio) comne in: wherevpon I with a Glaſſe of Hungarian Wine (which I refuſed till ſhe had taken the ſame into her owne hand) was diſmiſſed.

On that Euening in which I departed from Warſouia, I paſſed ouer a Riuer, by the ſide whereof there lay a dead Serpent (like a Crocodile with foure feet, hard skales, and in length about ſix or ſeuen foot) which my men brake with Boare-ſpeares, the ſtench whereof ſo poyſoned me, that I lay ſicke many dayes in the next Village. When I came to Vilna the chiefe Citie in Lituania, I preſented my ſelfe and my Letters Patents from the Queene, which declared my employment, vnto the Great Duke Raganil, a powerfull Prince and Religious Proteſtant. Hee gaue me great reſpect and ſayd, Though I had nothing to ſay to him from that Renowmed Queene of England, the Myrrour of all the Queenes that euer reigned, yet he did ſo much honour and admire her excellent vertues and graces, that he would alſo hold me in the reputation of her Maieſties Ambaſſadour: and that it was in his Supreame power and pleaſure to allow or not allow of the King his Letters Patents for my paſſage thorow that great Principalitie, his Inheritance, and differing from the Crowne of Poland. That his Subiects might thinke I negotiated with him, he tooke me with him to his Church, heard Diuine Seruice, Pſalmes ſung, and a Sermon, the Sacrament alſo was adminiſtred as in the Reformed Churches; whereat his Brother Cardinall Raganill did murmure.

The great Dukes Feaſt.

His Highneſſe inuited me to Dinner, honoured with fifty Halbardiers thorow the Citie, Gunners placed, and fiue hundred Gentlemen (his Guard) to bring me to his Palace; where himſelfe accompanied with many young Noblemen receiued me vpon the Terras, and then brought me into a very large Roome, where were Organs with ſinging. A long Table was ſet with Lords and Ladies, Himſelfe vnder a Cloth of State, and I was placed before him in the middeſt of the Table. With ſound of Trumpets and Kettle Drummes the firſt Seruice was brought in, and after Prayer sayd by his Almoner, Iesters and Poets discoursed merrily, Instruments of lowd, and other of lower Musicke were added: twenty Dwarfes, men and women attired curiously made sweet harmony with mournfull Pipes and Songs, using also Dauids Tymbrels and Aarons Bels, as they called them, and danced, dealing themselues, man and woman, hand in hand. His Highnesse dranke for the Maiestie of the Angelicall Queene of England her health, illustrating her greatnesse and graces with many good words. The Princes & Ladies euery one with their glasses of sweet Wine pledged: & I did the like for his Highnesse health. Then were serued in strange portraytures of Lions, Vnicornes, Spread Eagles, Swannes, &c. made artificially of Sugar past gilded, with Spickets in their bellies filled some with Sacke, others with Rhenish or Hungarian Wines (euery one thence to fill his Glasse) others also had Suckets to be taken out of their bellies with their Siluer Forkes. It were tedious to relate all the particulars. After sixe houres spent in this Feast, I was conducted to my lodging in manner as I had beene brought; and afterwards had my Letters Patens and a Gentleman to conduct mee thorow his Countrey. I passed by Smolensko to Muscouia 1200. miles from Vilna. My entertaynment at Vilna, and negotiating with the King of Poland, now made me suspected to the Russian Nobility. The Bishop of Susdales House was appointed for my lodging, where I was guarded and attended by meane Gentlemen; the pretence was, lest I should haue conference with the Polish Embassadour. The Protector was not present when I had audience of the Emperour, and after priuately sent for me, professed himselfe sorry he could not bee so fauourable as in former times to me, but promised that a haire of my head should not fall to the ground, &c.

I perceiued many of my good Friends were gone and made away: had warning of many Articles framed against me, which against their wils being diuulged, I answered so as I gained reputation thereby. Yet the water which was daily brought mee from the Riuer was poysoned, as also my drinke, Herbs and Muske Melons sent to my House: my Landresse was hired likewise to poyson me, which she confessed with the circumstances. I had a Seruant, a Lords Sonne of Dantzike, which brake out with Blaynes and escaped narrowly: my Cooke and Butler both dyed of poyson. I writ to the Lord Protector hereof, but receiued no answere. I must remoue to Yeraslaue till the Polish Embassadour was gone, and the third night after I came to this Towne, I commended my Soule to God, expecting death. One rapped at my gate at midnight, and I with my Seruants well appointed came to enquire the cause. Alphonasie Nagoy Brother to the Emperour (Mother of Demetrius) which were placed at Onglets fiue and twenty miles off, cryed out and sayd, O sweet Yeremie the Charowich Demetrius is dead, his throate was cut about the sixt houre by the Deaks Sonne one of his Pages: confessed vpon the Racke, by Boris his setting on: and the Empresse poysoned, and vpon point of death, her haire, nayles and skinne fall off; helpe, helpe with some good thing for the passion of God. This outcry did not a little astonish me, till I saw his face ouer the wall. I durst not open my gates, sayd I had nothing worth the sending, yet giue a little Viall of Balsam (which Queene Elizabeth had giuen me as an Antidote against Poysons (giuen her by Sir F. Dr.) with a boxe of Venice Treacle. Some three dayes before the Suburbs of Muscouia, were set on fire, and 12000. houses burned, Boris his guard had the spoyle. It was giuen out that Demetrius his Mother, her Brother and that Family of the Nagoies had practised to kill the Emperour and Protector, and to burne the whole Citie of Muscouia. Fiue desperate Souldiers were suborned to indure the Racke, and confessed there that they were the men which should doe this exploit. This was published to make the name of Demetrius hatefull to the people with that whole Family. The Bishop of Ornatesca, was sent accompanied with fiue hundred Gunnes, and diuers Nobles and Gentlemen to see Demetrius buried vnder the high Altar of Saint Iohns in Onglets in Onglets Castle. Little did Boris thinke that his Ghost should after root out him and his Family. The sicke poysoned Empresse was presently shorne a Nunne: all her Allies, her Brother, Vncles, Friends and Officers dispersed in displeasure to diuers secret Dens, not to haue communitie with men, or see the light.

I was hasted away also. I had Letters from Boris, he could not doe as he would, but time would worke me more grace, as amply as euer. If I wanted money or prouision hee would impart of his owne. Some secrets he had committed to mee, which now made a dangerous impression in his memory. I arriued in England, deliuered my Letters to the Queene, which I found much more fauourable then I expected: the Company of Merchants payd me 1845. pounds in ready money for my goods in their hands; a generall releale past on both sides, &c. I furnished Master Hakluyt and Doctor Fletcher with Intelligences &c.

Thus the Race of Iuan Vasilwich which had continued aboue 300. yeeres was raced out and extinguished in bloud, the Emperour soone following: as I receiued by Letters from thence from my worthy friends, and haue since had conference with two Embassadours, and a Fryer of good intelligence. Boris had made away most of the chiefe and ancient Nobility, and and now remooued the Emperour Theodor, placed his Sister the Empresse in a Monastery, causeth the Patriarches, Metropolites, Bishops, and new sprung Nobility, his Officers, Merchants, and other his owne creatures to petition him to take the Crowne vpon him. He was solemnely inaugurated accordingly. Hee was of comely person, well fauoured, affable, easie and apt to ill counsell, but dangerous in the end to the giuer, of good capacity and ready wit, about forty six yeeres of age; much affected to Necromancie, made shew of great Deuotion and Religion, not Learned, of a sudden apprehension, very precipitate, subtle, a naturall good Orator, reuengefull, not much giuen to luxury, temperate in dyet, Heroicall in outward shew, one which gaue great entertaynment to forreigne Embassadours, sent rich Presents to forreigne Kings to illustrate his owne greatnesse. Hee now desired league by his Embassadours sent with Letters and Presents to the Emperour, Pole, Dane & Swethen, which the three last refused but vpon conditions to his losse: To them adhered those which loued him not, and procured his ruine. Hee continued the same course of gouernment, but made shew of more security and liberty to the Subiect. Still fearing his owne safety and continuance, he desired to match his Daughter with Hartique Hans the King of Denmarks third Sonne. Conditions were agreed on: time appointed for the Marriage, but this valorous hopefull Prince on that day whereon he should haue beene married dyed in the Musco. Not long after he was put to extreame exigents by the Crimme, the Pole and Swethen, all inuading the neerest Confines.

Boris is made Emperour. Description of his person, and qualities.

Bodan Belskoy the old Emperours Minion (vpon whom hee serued Boris his trusty turne, making him away, and so opening a way to that which Boris aymed at, none being also better able to bring in subiection the aduerse Nobilitie and others) was rewarded with such recompence as vsually followeth such treacherous Instruments. Boris and the Empresse fearing his subtle wit, found occasions and placed him remote with his Confederates, sure as they thought. But he in the time of his greatnesse hauing conuayed infinite Treasure, now vseth it to reuenge, and ioyning with many discontented Nobles, stirres vp the King and Palatines of Poland with the power of Lithuania, and with a meane Army hoping of assistance in Russia, gaue out that they brought the true Dmetrius Sonne to Iuan Vasilowich. Boris wants courage to fight, notwithstanding sufficient preparations: hee, his Wife, Sonne and Daughter tooke poyson whereof three presently dyed, the Sonne liued to bee proclaymed but quickly dyed.

Boris his ruine.

He poysoneth himselfe.

And now the Counterfeit Demetrius was admitted and crowned, Sonne to a Priest, sometimes carried Aquanita to sell about the Country: Married the Palatines Daughter, and permitting the Poles to domineere ouer the Russe Nobility, and to set their courses of Religion and Iustice out of ioynt, hauing rooted out Boris his faction and Family, &c. The Russes conspire and kill Demetrius, take him out of his bed, dragge him on the Terras: the Gunners and Souldiers thrust their Knives in his body, hacke, hew and mangle his head, body, and legs, carry it to the Market place, shew it for three dayes about the City, the people cursing him, and the Traytors that brought him. The Palatine & his Daughter were conuayed away.

The Counterfeit Demetrius raigneth.

He is slaine.

Suskoy is crowned and captiued by the Poles.

A new Election was made, two propounded Knez Iuan Mistheloskoy and Knez Vasily Petrowich Suskoy: this was chosen and crowned: but summoned as a Vassall by a Herald of Armes to yeeld obedience to the Crowne of Poland. The Pole strikes the Iron while it is hote hauing gotten good footing amongst them, inuades Russia, repossesses the Musco, takes Suscoy and diuers Nobles which are carried Captiues to Vilna, chiefe Citie of Lituania. Now the Poles tyrannise ouer the Russe more then before, seize on their goods, money, and best things which they conuay into Poland and Lituania. But those hidden by Iuan Vasilowich and Boris in secret places, doubtlesse remayne vndiscouered, by reason the parties which had beene therein employed were still made away. The Russe submits to the Pole, desires Stanislaus his Sonne to liue and Reigne ouer and amongst them: but that King and State would not herein trust them with their hope of Succession, nor doe them so much honour, but rule by their Presidents, &c. The Luganoie, Nagoie and Chercas Tartars long setled in obedience to the Russe, and best vsed by them, now straitned of their wonted Salaries and vsage, hate the Pole, take armes in great numbers, robbed, spoyled, killed & carried away many of them with their rich booties before gotten: the Russe Nobilitie tooke heart againe and bethinke them of another Emperour. The Sonne of the Archbishop of Rostoua, (now Patriarch of Mosco, Sonne to Mekita Romanowich before mentioned) borne before he was made a Bishop. Michael Fedorowich is elected and crowned by generall consent of all Estates. God send him long to Reigne with better successe then his Predecessors.

The Poles expelled by the Tartars.

RELATIONS OF THE KINGDOME OF GOLCHONDA, AND OTHER NEIGHBOVRING NATIONS within the Gulfe of BENGALA, Arreccan, Pegu, Tannassery, &c.

And the ENGLISH Trade in those Parts, by Master WILLIAM METHOLD.

THE Gulfe of Bengala (famous for its dimensions) extendeth it selfe from the Cape called Comorijne, lying in 8. degrees of North latitude: vnto Chatigan the bottome thereof, which being in 22. degrees, is not lesse as the Coast lyeth then a 1000. English miles, and in breadth 900. limited on the other side, by Cape Singapura, which lyeth in 1. degree of South latitude; washeth the Coast of these great and fertile Kingdomes, viz. Ziloan, Bisnagar, Golchonda, Bengala, Arreccan, Pegu and Tanassery, and receiueth into its * bosome, many Nauigable Riuers, which lose their note and names, in the eminent Neighbourhood of the famous Ganges: whose vnknowne head, pleasant streames, and long extent, haue amongst those Heathen Inhabitants, (by the Tradition of their Forefathers) gained a beliefe of clensing all such sinnes, as the bodies of those that wash therein brought with them: for which cause many are the Pilgrimes that resort from farre to this lasting Iubilee, with some of whom, I haue had conference, and from their owne reports I insert this their beliefe.

The Island of Zeloan, our Nation hath onely lookt vpon (en passant) the Portugals that clayme all East India by donation, hold a great part of this in subiection, and with such assurance, that they beleeue they can make it good against all their Enemies, yet are not they the onely Lords thereof, for the naturall Inhabitants haue also their King, commonly called the King of Candy; with whom the Danes had not long since a fruitlesse treaty for commerce, which falling short of their expectation, they fortified vpon the Mayne, not far from Negapatnam, at a place called Trangabay, with what successe or hopes of benefit, I cannot relate.

The first Kingdome vpon the Mayne, is that ancient one of Bisnagar, rent at this time into seuerall Prouinces, or Gouernments; held by the P Naickes of that Countrey in their owne right: for since the last King (who deceased about fiftene yeeres since) there haue arisen seuerall Competitors for the Crowne, vnto whom the Naickes haue adhered according to their factions, or affections, from whence hath followed, a continuall Ciuill Warre in some parts of the Countrey, and such extreame want and famine in most of it, that Parents haue brought thousands of their young children to the Sea side, selling there a child for

S. Thome. See before in Babic &c.

In this Kingdome lyeth the Towne of Saint Thome, inhabited and gouerned by Portugals, who notwithſtanding muſt acknowledge ſome dependency from the Naicke that holds that part of the Countrey, of whom (after ſome ſiege endured by them) they were enforced, about three yeeres ſince to buy their peace with a ſumme of money: for their Towne is onely fortified towards the Sea, but to Landwards, no otherwiſe then with their houſes, which are built ſtrong, cloſe, and defenſible.

Palecat poſſeſſed by the Dutch.

Not farre from Saint Thome lyeth Pallecat, a badde Neighbour to the Portugall, ſince the Dutch poſſeſſed their Caſtle in that place, for with ſhipping great and ſmal, which they conſtantly kept vpon that Coaſt, they ſo ſcowre it, that a Portugall Frigat ſtirre not, but in the confidence of her better ſayling, nor dares anchor before the Towne, for feare of being fetcht from thence, but if they eſcape at Sea, either vnſeene, or by their ſpeed, they preſently vnlade, haling their Ships on ſhoare cloſe vnder the wall; from whence it followeth, the trade of that place is ſo much decayed, that the Portugall Inhabitants are become much impouerifhed, wherein, it is worth the obſeruation, to conſider their malice puniſhed in the effect of it: for the Hollanders (after ſome experience of the trade in India, finding Commodities of Saint Thome, and that Coaſt, to be very vendible and to good profit, in the Moluccoes, Banda, Amboyna, Iaua, Sumatra, and other thoſe Eaſterne parts) procured from the laſt King of Biſnagar, free Commerce in his Countrey, and to that purpoſe, ſetled at firſt a Factory in Pallecut, where they left ſixe or ſeuen Hollanders to negotiate their Affaires: but the Portugals of Saint Thome, not brooking any Chriſtian Corriuall ſo neere them, in the ſame courſe of trade, came downe with their whole power of Frigats, and landing at Pallecut, they aſſaulted the Dutch Houſe, which was for a time reſolutely defended, vntill ſome being ſlaine, the reſt yeelded after promiſe of life and good quarter, but were carried Priſoners to Saint Thome, from whence with much difficulty ſome eſcaped, and amongſt them the chiefe Factor from whoſe Relation I inſert this Diſcourſe.

Sir Adolfe Thomaſon.

The King (vpon knowledge of this aſſault, and the Hollanders inſtant Suite to bee better ſecured) permitted them to build a Fort, conditionally that the one halfe of the Souldiers ſhould be of his Subiects, which tooke place, and the Fort being finiſhed, It was deuided, and halued betwixt the Gentiles and Hollanders: vntill many differences ariſing, amongſt ſo different Cohabitants, the King called away his people, leauing the Fort wholy in the Dutches power, which ſince they haue enlarged and ſtrengthened, and now call it Gueldrea: wherein ſince the Treaty of 1619, our Nation for the moyetie of an oppreſſed trade, haue borne the vttermoſt charge of halfe the Garriſon, without participation of ſuch benefits as in equity ought to enſue, but my affection to that Nation, and the condition of the times, forbids me to aggrauate, or adde, to our iuſt quarrell, for their vniuſt and cruell proceedings in Amboyna.

So that now the Portugals in place of Neighbouring Merchants whom they diſturbed, are galled with a Garriſon of profeſt Enemies whom they cannot remooue, for their owne power is not ſufficient, and aſſiſtance from the Vice-roy they ſhall not haue, if their preſent ruines were in queſtion, becauſe they neither aſſiſt in perſon or contribution, the generall Affaires of India, but are with their conſorts the Portugals inhabiting Bengala, accounted [Leuantadoes del Rey] exempted from their Princes protection.

Portugals weaknes within the Gulfe.

Onely they haue to their power, incenſed ſome of the Naickes againſt the Hollanders, who about foure yeares ſince with ſixe thouſand men beſieged Pallecut, but at ſuch diſtance, and with ſo little aduantage, that an eaſie compoſition rayſed the ſiege, and little of that giuen by the Hollanders, but from the Natiues ſubſiſting vnder their protection ouer whom they pretend no Souereignetie, exact no Duties, nor preſcribe no Lawes: contenting themſelues in confronting the Portugall, and negotiating their Affaires of Merchandizing.

Muſulipatnam or Muſulipatan. P. W. Floris. See P. 1. L. 3.

In ſixteene degrees and a halfe lyeth Muſulipatnam, the chiefe Port of the Kingdome of Golchonda, where the Right Worſhipfull Eaſt Indian Company haue their Agent, and ſeuerall Factories in that place and Petapoley: firſt protected and ſetled by Peter Willemſon Floris, and Lucas Anthoniſon, who in the employment of Engliſh Aduenturers, arriued there about thirteene yeares ſince in the Globe of London: ſince which time, Commerce hath beene continued in thoſe parts, and amongſt other their Seruants, my ſelfe receiued their employment, and from almoſt fiue yeares reſidence in that place, (at the requeſt of the Authour of this laborious Volume) am emboldened to publiſh ſuch remarkable things as haue falne within the compaſſe of my obſeruation.

bout. It was first a poore Fisher Towne, from whence it tooke the name it yet retaynes, afterwards the conueniencie of the Road, made it a fit Residence for Merchants, and so continueth (with increase of Trade) since our, and the Dutch Nation frequented this Coast.

The Climate is very healthfull, and the yeere deuided in their account into three different seasons, whereof March Aprill, May, and Iune they call the hote season; and not without good cause; for the Sunne being returned into their Hemisphere, doth not alone scortch the Earth with his piercing beames, but euen the winde which should allwage his fury, addes greater fire, and yeerely about mid May with a strong Westerly gale, brings off the Land a sensible heat; as when a house is on fire, such as are neere to Leeward can hardly endure; and this so penetrateth, that the doores and windowes being shut, the houses are notwithstanding so warmed, that the chaires and stooles admit hardly the vses they were made for, without cooling them, and the place where we abide, by often sprinkling of water; but the extremity hereof neyther lasteth long, nor commeth often, onely fiue or seuen dayes in a yeere, and then but from nine or ten a clocke in the forenoone, vntill foure or fiue in the afternoone, at which time a coole breeze from off the Sea, qualifies againe this intollerable heat: wherein many of the natiues are in their trauell suffocated and perish. And of Christians a Dutchman as hee was carried in his Palamkeene, and an Englishman walking but from the Towne to the Barre little aboue an English mile, dyed both in the way. The rest of these foure moneths are very hote, farre exceeding the hottest day in our Climate, and would so continue, but that in Iuly, Auguſt, September, and October, the raines are predominant, which with their frequent, violent, and long cnntinuing showres, cooles the Earth, and reuiues the partcht Roots of the Sun burnt Plants of the Earth, sometimes rayning so long together, and with such fiercenesse, that Houses loose their foundations in their currants, and fall to the ground: from whence also followes great Land-flouds, to this Countrey no lesse commodious, then the inundation of Nilus to the Egyptians, by receiuing the Floods into their Rice grounds, and there retayning it vntill the Earth drinking it in, becomes the better enabled to endure an eighth moneths abstinence; for in eight moneths it neuer rayneth. Nouember, December, Ianuary, and February, they account their cooler times, and are so indeed compared to the former, yet as hote as it is here in England in May.

From which constant heate, all Trees are heere continually greene, and their Fruites ripe in their seuerall Seasons. The Earth in some places affoords two Croppes of Rice in a yeere, rarely three Croppes, and in most places but one, yet there with very great increase: they sowe other sorts of Pulse, different from ours, and farre vp into the Country they haue good Wheate, but not much, for it is little eaten of the Gentiles: Rootes they haue of most sorts which we haue heere, and good store of Potatoes, yet but few Hearbs of Flowres, which defect they supply in their Betele, whose frequent vse amongst them, many haue already discoursed. In briefe, it is a very fruitfull Countrey, and occasioned by many of the Inhabitants abstinence from any thing that hath life: all kind of victuall are very cheape and plentifull, as eight Hens for twelue pence, a Goate or Sheepe for ten pence; and for eighteene pence or two shillings a very good Hogge, the like of fish, and all other prouisions in the Towne, but in the Countrey much better cheape.

All trees continually greene. Fertilitie.

This Kingdome (as most others in India) receiueth its denomination from the chiefe City or Residence of the King, called by the Natiues Golchonda, by the Moores and Persians Hidraband, distant from Musulipatnam, eight and twentie Gentiue leagues, euery such league contayning nine English miles: and in the common course of trauel ten dayes iourney. A Citie that for sweetnesse of ayre, conueniencie of water, and fertility of soyle, is accounted the best situated in India, not to speake of the Kings Palace, which for bignesse and sumptuousnesse, in the iudgement of such as haue trauelled India, exceedeth all belonging to the Mogull or any other Prince: it being twelue miles in circumference, built all of stone, and within the most eminent places, garnished with massie Gold, in such things as we commonly vse Iron, as in barres of Windowes, bolts, and such like, and in all other points fitted to the Maiesty of so great a King, whoin Elephants and Iewels is accounted one of the richest Princes of India.

He is by Religion a Mahumetan, discended from Persian Ancestors, and retayneth their opinions, which differing in many points from the Turkes, are distinguished in their Sects by tearmes of Seaw, and Sunnee, and hath beene at large, (and truly to my knowledge) particularized in your Pilgrimage, whereunto I onely adde in confirmation of their mutuall hatred, what in conference I receiued from a Meene, one of Mahomets owne Tribe, if wee may beleeue his owne Heraldry, who openly professed hee could not finde in his heart to pray for a Sunnee, for in his Opinion a Christian might as easily bee saued; a Charitie well befitting his Religion, that would not pray for those, hee might not pray with.

Kings title, Wiues, Concubines.

This King (as all other his Predeceſſors) retaines the title of Cotubſha, the original whereof I remember to haue read in Linſchoten. He maried (during my being in his Country) the daughter of Adelſha, King of Viziapore, and hath beſides her three other Wiues, and at leaſt 1000. Concubines: a ſingular honour and ſtate amongſt them to haue many women, and one of the ſtrangeſt things to them I could relate, and in their opinions lamentable, that his excellent Maieſty our Gracious Souereigne, ſhould haue three Kingdomes and but one Wife.

Three Decan Kings enemy to the Mogoll.

The Cotubſha. Adelſha: and Negaim Sha oppoſe the Mogull in a perpetuall league of mutuall defence, yet ſo as their yeerely Preſents proue their beſt weapons, chuſing rather to buy peace then to hazard the euent of war againſt ſo mighty an Enemy.

Kings Reuenue.

His Reuenewes are reported to bee fiue and twenty Lackes of Pagodes, a Lacke beeing an 100000. and a Pagode equall in weight and alloy to a French Crowne, and worth there ſeuen ſhillings ſix pence ſterling: which huge Treaſure ariſeth from the large extent of his Dominions, his Subiects being all his Tenants, and at a rackt Rent: for this King as all others in Indian Monarchie.

India, is the onely Free-holder of the whole Countrey, which being deuided into great gouernments, as our Shires; thoſe againe into leſſer ones as our Hundreds; and thoſe into Villages: the Gouernment is farmed immediately from the King by ſome eminent man, who to other inferiours farmeth out the leſſer ones, and they againe to the Countrey people, at ſuch exceſſiue rates, that it is moſt lamentable to conſider, what toyle and miſerie the wretched ſoules endure: For if they fall ſhort of any part of their Rent, what their Eſtates cannot ſatisfie, their bodies muſt, ſo it ſomtimes happens, they are beaten to death, or abſenting themſelues, their Wiues, Children, Fathers, Brothers, and all their Kindred are engaged in the debt, and muſt ſatisfie or ſuffer. And ſometimes it happeneth, that the Principall fayling with the King, receiues from him the like puniſhment, as it befell to one Baſbell Raw (Gouernour at Muſulipatnam, ſince the Engliſh Traded thither) who (for defect of full payment) was beaten with Canes vpon the backe, feet, and belly, vntill hee dyed. Yet hold they not theſe their Gouernments by Leaſe; for yeerely in Iuly all are expoſed in ſale vnto him that bids moſt: from whence it happeneth, that euery Gouernour (during his time) exacts by Tolles taken in the way, and other Oppreſſions, whatſoeuer they can poſſibly extort from the poorer Inhabitants, vſing what violence within their gouernments they ſhall thinke fit: for in them (during their time) they raigne as petty Kings, not much vnlike the Baſhawes vnder the Turkiſh Monarchy.

Caſtles 66. * Captaines or Gouernors.

There are (in the Confines and heart of this Kingdome) ſixtie ſix ſeuerall Forts or Caſtles, all of them commanded by * Naicks, and guarded by Gentiles Souldiers of the Countrey, vnto which Souldiery there is allowed but foure ſhillings the moneth, and that alſo ill payd: they are for the moſt part ſituated vpon very high Rockes, or Hils, vnacceſſible but by one onely way, three of which I haue ſeene, viz. Cundapoly, Cundauera, and Bellum Cunda (Cunda in that Language ſignifying a Hill) and in the Towne of Cundapoley, (hauing occaſion to viſit the Gouernour) I was ſo curious as to require the ſight of the Caſtle, who replyed, that euen himſelfe although the Gouernour of that part of the Countrey, could not be permitted

Souldiers; thus much his Relation. What I could ſee (which was enough to hide a great part of the Heauens) was a huge Mountaine, which being apart by nature, had inuited Art to make it a retreate for the King of this Countrey, if a battels loſſe or other aduerſe fortune, forced them to that extremity. For beſides the Mountayne it ſelfe (ſteepe in moſt places) it is walled with a handſome ſeeming ſtone wall, with Bulwarkes and Battlements, according to the ancient Order of fortification: whereunto hauing but one way that admits aſcent, it is thought impregnable, not to bee vndermined but by treacherie, ſkaled without wings, or battered but by Famine. And betwixt this Caſtle and Cundauera, (which is at leaſt fiue and twentie Engliſh miles) there is a nightly correſpondence held by ſhewing

Religion is heere free, and no mans conſcience oppreſſed with Ceremony or Obſeruance, onely the Kings Religion is predominant, in the authority and quality of the Profeſſors, not in number of Soules; for the Ancient Naturals of the Countrey, commonly called Gentiles, or Heathens, exceed them in a very great proportion.

* Mahumetan Churches.

The Moores are of two ſorts, as I formerly mentioned, but they onely which are tearmed Seaw, haue their * Meſgits and publike exerciſe of their Religion; the reſt (giuing no offence) are not interrupted in their Opinions, or Practizes: but of theſe their Ceremonies or Differences, I forbeare to diſcourſe, well knowing, that beſides our neerer Neighbourhood, with Turkey and Barbarie, your Pilgrimage hath amply delineated both their beginnings and continuance.

The like conſideration, might ſilence my purpoſed Relation of the Gentiles, who differing little in Habit, Complexion, Manners, or Religion, from moſt of the Inhabitants of the mayne of India, haue alreadie (from abler Pennes) paſt your approbation, and the Preſſe: ſo that, Nil dictum eſt quod non ſit dictum prius. Yet encouraged by your requeſt, I adde to that Treaſury this Myte of my Obſeruation, ſubmitting all that diſlikes, or appeares ſuperfluous, to your ſuppreſſion.

The Gentiles in the Fundamentall points of their little Religion, doe hold the ſame principles which their Learned Clergie the Bramenes, haue from great Antiquitie, and doe yet maintayne, but with an Implicite faith, not able to giue an account of it, or any their cuſtomes, onely that it was the cuſtome of their Anceſtors. Relgion of the Gentiles in thoſe parts.

Concerning God, they doe beleeue him firſt to haue beene onely one, but ſince to haue taken to his aſſiſtance, diuers that haue ſometimes liued vpon Earth, vnto whoſe memorie they build their Temples, tearmed Pagodes, and ſtiling them Demi-gods or Saints, direct moſt of their Worſhip to ſuch of them as they ſtand moſt particularly affected vnto, ſupporting their Deities, with moſt ridiculous Legendary Fables of Miracles done by them in the likeneſſe of Apes, Oxen, Kites, or the like, many yeeres ſince, paſt all memory, or beliefe.

They hold the Immortalitie of the Soule, and the tranſmigration of it from one body to another, according to the good or bad quarter it kept in the laſt Manſion, from whence followeth much abſtinence from killing or eating any thing that had life.

Their difference in Waſhings, Meates, Drinkes, and ſuch like; ariſe rather from the Tradition of the Fathers, enioyned to their Poſteritie, then in point of Religion: as we reade of the Rechabites, who from their Fathers Iniunction, were commended for their conſtant continuance in their cuſtomes. Ier. 35.

Their moralitie appeares beſt in their conuerſation; murder, and violent theft, are ſtrangers amongſt them, & ſeldome happen, but for coozenage in bargaining, caueat emptor. Poligamy is permitted, but not generally practiſed, vnleſſe in caſe of the firſt Wiues barrenneſſe: Adultery is not common, but puniſhable in women, Fornication veniall, and no Law but that of modeſty reſtraines the publike action. Their moralitie

They are diuided into diuers Tribes or Linages (they ſay fortie foure) all which according to their degrees, are knowne each to other, and take place accordingly, wealth in this point being no prerogatiue, for the pooreſt Bramene will precede the richeſt Committy, and ſo the reſt in their ſeuerall Orders. Their Tribes forty foure.

The Bramene is Prieſt vnto them all, and weareth alwayes three or foure twiſted threeds ouer one ſhoulder, and vnder the other arme, and in his forehead a round ſpot whereon there ſticketh cornes of Rice dyed yellow in Turmericke: they are very good and ready Accountants, and in that Office, much employed by Moores of greateſt Affaires, writing and keeping their accounts in Palmito leaues, with a Pen of Iron; and if in that Generall Deluge of Pagan Ignorance, there remayneth any knowledge of Arts or Learning, theſe preſerue it, and entirely to themſelues, without participation to other Tribes, inuolued in verball Traditions, or concealed Manuſcripts, and are indeed indifferent Aſtronomers, obſeruing exactly the courſe of the ſeuen Planets through the twelue Houſes, and conſequently the certaine houre of Ecclipſes, and other Aſtrologicall Predictions, wherein they haue gained ſo good credit, that none eyther Gentile or Moore, will vndertake any great Iourney, or commence any important buſineſſe, without firſt conſulting with his Bramene, for a good houre to ſet forward in; from whence, I haue knowne it happen, that a Moore which came Gouernour to Muſulipatnam, hath attended without the Towne ten dayes, before he could find a fortunate houre, to make his triumphant entry into his new gouernment; and of this Tribe they forget not to tell you, there are two Kings, the Samoriyne King of Callecut, and the King of Cochiyne, both vpon the Coaſt of Malabar. The Bra... Their writing Learning. Superſtition.

The next Caſt in account is the Fangam, who is of the Bramenes dyet in all particulars, eating nor killing any thing that hath life, abhorring Wine, but drinking Butter by the pint, contenting themſelues with Milke from the Reuerend Cow, and ſuch Pulſe, Herbs, Roots, and Fruits as the Earth produceth (the Onion only excepted) which for certaine red veines in it, reſembling bloud finds fauour in their mercifull mouthes; and theſe alſo in an inferiour degree, haue ſome Prieſtly power ouer ſuch, as by wearing ſanctified Stones tyed vp in their haire, are buried when they dye, all others are burnt. If theſe be of any Trade they muſt be Taylers, and ſuch many of them are, but more profeſt Beggers, and no wonder, for the conſtanoy of that Countries faſhion, and the little or no Needle-worke belonging to the making vp of a Garment, cannot finde all of them worke if they ſtood affected to vndertake it, but other worke, then Taylours worke, they may not meddle withall. The Fangam, d Caſta ſignifying a Tribe.

The next Tribe is there tearmed a Committy, and theſe are generally the Merchants of this place, who by themſelues or their Seruants, trauell into the Countrey, gathering vp Callicoes from the Weauers, and other Commodities which they ſell againe in greater par- The Committy.

Others are Money Changers, wherein they haue exquiſite iudgement, and will from a ſuperficiall view of a piece of Gold, diſtinguiſh a penny worth of difference, without whoſe view no man dares receiue Gold, it hath beene ſo falſified. The pooreſt ſort are plaine Chandlers, and ſell only Rice, Butter, Oyle, Sugar, Honey, and ſuch like belly ſtuffe: and theſe men for their generall iudgement in all ſorts of Commodities, ſubtiltie in their dealings, and auſterity of dyet, I conceiue to be naturally Banians tranſplanted & growne vp in this Country by another name, they alſo not eating any thing that hath life, nor at all, vntill they haue freſh waſhed their bodies, and this Ceremony is alſo common to the former Tribe.

The Campo Ware The next they call Campo Ware, and theſe in the Countrey manure the earth as husbandmen, in the City attend vpon the richer ſort as Seruingmen, in the Forts are Souldiers: and are for number the greateſt Tribe, theſe ſpare no fleſh but Beefe, and that with ſuch reuerence, that torture cannot enforce them to kill and eate, and their reaſon for this (beſides the cuſtome of their Anceſtors) is that from the Cow, their Countrey receiues its greateſt ſuſtenance, as Milke and Butter immediately, then al the fruits of the earth, by their aſſiſtance in tilling it, ſo that it were the greateſt inhumanity to feed vpon that which giueth them ſo plentifully wheron to feed, and vnto vs that would take liberty in this caſe, they will not ſell an Oxe or Cow for any conſideration, but from one to another, for ſix or 8. ſhillings the beſt.

The Whoores Tribe. Boga Ware is next, in Engliſh the Whoores Tribe, and of this there are two ſorts, one that will proſtitute themſelues to any better Tribe then themſelues, but to none worſe, the other meeteth none bad enough to refuſe, and theſe with their Predeceſſors and Of-ſpring, haue and do ſtill continue this courſe of iniquity: for the daughters (if handſome) are brought vp to the trade, if otherwiſe they are maried to the men of this Tribe, and their children if handſomer then their mothers, ſupply their Parents defects, from whence, there neuer wants, a ſinfull ſucceſſion of impudent Harlots, whom the Lawes of the Country doe both allow, and protect: but this is not alwayes Heatheniſh, for in moſt Chriſtian Common-wealths, ſuch creatures either by permiſſion, conniuencie, or neglect, find meanes to ſet vp, and cuſtomers to deale with all. Being children they are taught to dance, and their bodies then tender and flexible, skrewed into ſuch ſtrange poſtures, that it is admirable to behold, impoſſible to expreſſe in words, as for a child of eight yeeres of age, to ſtand vpon one legge, raiſing the other vpright as I can my arme, then bringing it down, and laying her heele vpon her head, yet all this while ſtanding, looſes the wonder in my imperfect Relation, but to behold is truly ſtrange: the like for their dancing and tumbling, which doth as farre in actiuity exceed our mercenary Skip-iacks, as the Rope-dancing woman doth a Capring Curtezan, or an Vſher of a Dancing Schoole, a Country Plough-Iogger. The homage they owe the King is once a yeere to repaire to Golchonda to the Court, and there being met together to make proofe of their actiuities, where the beſt deſeruing is guerdoned with ſome particuler fauour, all of them gratified with Bettelee, and ſo returne home againe to their ſeuerall Manſions. The Gouernour of the place where they dwel, exacts nothing of them but their attendance, as often as he ſitteth in the publike place, at which times they dance gratis, but at all other meetings, as × Circumciſion, wedding, ſhips arriuals, or priuate Feaſts, they aſſiſt and are paid for their company. They are many of them rich, and in their habit cleane and coſtly, vpon their bodies they weare a fine Callico or Silken cloth, ſo bound about them, as that one part beeing made faſt about the waſte, couereth downwards, another part comes ouer the head couering all that way, wearing alſo a thinne Waſtcoat that couereth their breaſts and armes vnto the elbowes, all the reſt of their armes couered almoſt with Bracelets of Gold, wherein are ſet ſmall Diamonds, Rubies, and Emeralds. In their eares they weare many Rings and Iewels, and ſome of them one through the right noſthrill, wherein a Pearle or Ruby is commonly ſet, as alſo about their fingers and toes, about their middles one or two broad plates of Gold for Girdles, and about their neckes many chaines of ſmall Pearle and Corall, or worſer beads according to their eſtate, without other ornament on their head then their own haire, which being ſmoothly combde, is tied on a knot behind them. And theſe alſo in their beſtuall liberty, forbeare to eate Cowes fleſh, all other meats and drinks are common to them, and they themſelues common to all.

Mechanikes. The Carpenters, Maſons, Turners, Founders, Gold-ſmiths, & Black-ſmiths, are all one Tribe, and match into each others Family, all other Mechanike Trades are Tribes by themſelues, as Painters, Weauers, Sadlers, Barbers, Fiſhermen, Heardſmen, Porters, Waſhers, Sweepers, &

Their Piriawes. diuers others: the worſt whereof are the abhorred Piriawes, who are not permitted to dwell in any Towne, by any Neighbours, but in a place without by themſelues, liue together, auoyded of al but their own Fraternity, whom if any man ſhould caſually touch; he would preſently waſh his bodie. Theſe flea all dead cattle for their skins, and feed vpon the fleſh, the skins they dreſſe, making thereof Sandals for the Gentiles, and ſhooes for the Moores, otherſome they vſe to embale Merchandiſe to defend it againſt wet; to conclude, they are in publike

Iuſtice, the hateful executioners, and are the baſeſt, moſt ſtinking, ill fauoured people that I haue ſeene, the Inhabitants of Cape bona Eſperanza excepted, who are in theſe particulars vnparalleld, and ſo I leaue them, adding onely one word of the Porters who carry the Palamkeenes, a Litter ſo contriued euery way, as to carry a man, his bed and pillowes, which eight of theſe Porters will carry foure of thoſe leagues in a day, which are 36. of our miles, ſupporting it on their bare ſhoulders, and running vnder it by turnes, foure at a time, from which continuall toyle, aggrauated by the extreme heate, their ſhoulders are become as hard as their hoofes; yet this their education makes eaſie to them, for when their children can but goe alone, they lay a ſmall ſticke on their ſhoulders, afterwards a logge, which they make them carry, with proportionable increaſe, vntill Roman Milo like they are able to run vnder a Palamkeene, and in that ſometimes perchance an Oxe.

But all theſe thus diſtinguiſhed, are in Religion one body, and haue their Pagodes or Idoll Temples common to all, but not all equally affected: ſome inclining in their deuotions to one Saint, ſome to another, of which Pagodes I haue ſeene many, ſome of them for the materials and ſtructure, worth the gazing vpon, and may well bee (as they report) the ancient workes of great Kings: within they are very darke, as hauing no other lights but the doores, and they ſtand alwayes open, and proue in ſome places the beſt Receptacles for Trauellers; one ſmall Roome onely reſerued, which the Bramene that keeps it, will with ſmall intreaty vnlocke, and ſhew a Synod of Brazen Saints gilded, the tutelar Saint of the place, being ſeated in moſt eminence, vnto which the Heathens themſelues performe very little adoration, well knowing their ſubiectes, and wanting thoſe * diſtinctions, which ſome Chriſtians find out to coozen themſelues withall, onely once a yeere on their Anniuerſary day, they keep their Feſtiuals, and ad ſome of them repaire many thouſands of people (as I my ſelfe haue ſeene) ſome for deuotion, and they faſt 24. houres, waſh their bodies, and burne Lamps within or as neere the Pagodes as they can get, ſome to ſee their friends, children, or kindred, which will not faile to meet them in ſuch a generall liberty: others for profit (as Pedlers to a great Faire) the Whoores to dance, Puppet-players and Tumblers with their exquiſite tricks, one whereof I will mention, with the admiration of ſuch as ſaw it, or vnderſtanding ſhall reade it. A Tumbler fetching his run, did the double Sommerſet without touching the ground with any part of his body, vntil he fel againe on his feet, keeping his body in the aire, vntil hee turned twice round, a ſtrange actiuity, and with me and others which ſaw it, ſhall not looſe the wonder it carried with it. Others bring charmed Snakes and Vipers in baskets, which they let looſe, and with their hands put in againe, piping vnto them, and receiuing their attention: very many Beggers there be, and they practiſe ſeuerall wayes to moue compaſſion, for ſuch as haue not naturall defects, as blindneſſe, lameneſſe, &c. Some lie vpon Thornes with their naked bodies, others lie buried in the ground all but their heads, ſome all but their hands, & diuers other ſuch trickes they put vpon the poore peoples charity, whoſe reward is for the moſt part a handfull of Rice, or a ſmal piece of mony that may be the halfe part of a farthing. About midnight the Saint is drawne forth in Proceſſion, handſomely carted and well clothed with much clamour of Drummes Trumpets, Hoboyes and ſuch like, that Country Muſicke, and very artificiall fire-workes, wherein they haue a ſingular dexterity, followed without order or diſtinctiõ, of place, ſex, or perſon, & hauing circled their limits, they draw him back againe, and there leaue him without guard or regard, vntil that time twelue moneth come againe. One Saint they haue, (and none of the leaſt neither in their account) whom they expreſſe by a plaine round ſtone, not much vnlike the block of a high crowned Hat, and their reaſon is, becauſe the incomprehenſible ſubſiſtence of this Deity, admits no certaine ſhape or deſcription; they liken it to him which hath the likeneſſe of nothing, building thus a Temple (as thoſe of Athens an Image) to the vnknowne God. Foure Feaſts in the yeere they celebrate to the Sea, and in the Sea, many people at thoſe ſeaſons reſorting to the appointed places, waſhing their bodies in the ſalt waues, and receiuing the Bramenes benediction, who being with them in the Sea, poure water on their heads with his hands, mumbling certain Oriſons ouer them (they know not what) then takes their reward, & apply themſelues to the next cõmers.

Where the great Pagodes are, there are commonly many little ones, which they report to be the worke of one day, or no long time, the Founder after ſome dreame, or Satanicall ſuggeſtion, vowing not to eat vntil it ſhould be begun and finiſhed, and to ſome of theſe the Bramanes perſwade the people, there belongs ſome miraculous power. I haue ſeene the Image of a man in black ſtone, ſtanding vpright, not aboue a yard high, vpon which if a whole buſhel of Rice ſhould be caſt, it would all ſtick vpon the Image, and not one corne fal to the ground, and this the country people had rather beleeue then part with ſo much Rice to practiſe it. Another before whom if a man ſhould eat out his tongue, it would preſently grow again, yet had they rather venter for a bliſter in the relation, then the whole tongue in the experiment.

Theſe two I haue bin with, a third I haue ſeene at diſtance as I trauelled that way, whereof they report, that whatſoeuer Milke, * Sharbol, or faire water, is brought thither by the de-deuout Viſitant, and poured into a little hole by the Saint, he will take iuſt halfe, & would doe ſo if it were a Hecatombe of Hogſheads, but takes no more though it be but a pint, yet is fully ſatisfied, and will receiue no more but it runs ouer the hole, an excellent ſociable quality, and well becomming an Ale-houſe Kanne.

Deuil-Saint. Another Saint they haue (or rather Deuill) for in their opinion it is a maligne Spirit, and brings vpon them ſuch diſeaſes as befall them, eſpecially the ſmall Poxe, which fury the better to expreſſe, they forme it a great angry woman, hauing two heads, and (no doubt) as many tongues, with foure armes, yet is ſhe hoſpitable to ſtrangers, for in her houſe two other Engliſhmen and my ſelfe repoſed part of one night, for want of other harbour, where whilſt we ſtaid, the Founder told vs, that to appeaſe her angry Deity, he built this houſe to her ſeruice, and ſo the ſmall Poxe ceaſſed in his Family: others leſſe able, promiſe in their ſickneſſe if they may eſcape, they will be hanged in her honour: which with the two Engliſhmen formerly mentioned, I went purpoſely to behold. It hapned vpon a day (it ſeemes) marked in their Calender for her ſeruice and this exploit, to which purpoſe, they haue a long beame of timber, placed on an axletree betwixt two wheeles like to the Brewers beames by which they draw water, and can ſo let it downe & rayſe it vp, vpon the vpper end whereof are tied two hooks, vnto which the Vow obliged patient is faſtened, hauing firſt with a ſharp Knife two holes cut thorow the skin and fleſh of each ſhoulder, thorow which the hooks are thruſt, and a Sword and Dagger put into his hands: he is lift vp, and drawne forward by the wheeles at leaſt a quarter of a mile, thus hanging in the aire, and fencing with his weapons, during which time the weight of his body, ſo teareth the fleſh and ſtretcheth the skin, that it is ſtrange it yeelds ſo much, yet it is tough enough to hold them: and after this manner were fourteene drawne one after another, not once complayning during the time of their flight, but being let downe, their wounds were bound vp, & they returned home with ſowre faces and ſoare bodies, a ſufferance ſurely not inferior to a ſelf-whipping, no leſſe meritorious, no better grounded. They haue al of them their Penates, or houſhold Gods, which the chiefe of the Family (as the eldeſt Brother) keepes alwayes at his houſe, for which they once a yeere make a Feaſt, but the kindred being aſſembled eat it vp. In Mariage it is the childrens dutie to attend vpon the Parents, care who finding in their owne Tribe, and as neere as they can in their own Kindred (no degree of Conſanguinity hindring but brother and ſiſter) a fitting wife for their ſonne, he (though of full age) ſubmits his conſent without ſeeing her, accounting it vnreaſonable to recompence his Parents care and trouble in his education, with diſtruſt of their proceedings in this point, or to imagine his owne iudgement more, or their circumſpection leſſe: They giue no portions with their daughters, but rather take, for the Bridegroome or his Parents, muſt giue Earings, Bracelets and other Iewels (according to her quality) vnto the Bride, two or three wearing clothes vnto the mother, with ſome preſent to the father, and then beare the whole charge of the wedding, from which large expence it ſometimes happens, that want keeps many a long time vnmarried, vntill their endeuours in the world hath ſupplyed them with meanes to defray the charge, but this not hindring the richer ſort, they commonly marrie their children very young, the husband fiue yeeres of age, the wife not aboue three yeeres, and many ſuch couples haue I ſeene put together, wherein, the Parents conceiue they haue done an act of wonderfull prouidence, in diſpoſing of their children in their life time, ſo endearing them to others care, if they themſelues ſhould leaue them; yet this young couple are preſently ſeparated, vntill the man being 12. or 13. yeeres of age, and the woman 10. or 11. they meet againe, and become ſo well acquainted, that many are mothers at 12. yeeres of age, and ſome I haue heard no Virgins at nine: to proceed, of what yeeres ſoeuer they be, whether thus young or full growne, they are both in one Palamkeene (with moſt of their friends about them) carried about the moſt publike places of the Towne, with Muſick, Fire-works, and the dancing company of the Whoores, who before euery great mans houſe, make a ſtand, participating their ſports, and from thoſe houſes receiuing gifts, if from them they haue any dependencie or acquaintance, then proceed, vntill their progreſſe being ended, they returne home; where the Bramene attends them, and ſeparating them a cloth hung betwixt them, he mutters (none heares) what Oriſons, whileſt the marrying couple are taught to tread vpon one another bare feet, ſo mingling legges, and making theſe firſt ſhort ſteps, an introduction to their future better acquaintance: the feaſt being finiſhed which laſteth three dayes at the leaſt, the Kindred departing, the Bride carried backe againe, and if ſhee bee young reſerued to more maturity, howſoeuer ſhe muſt backe againe for ſome time, for when ſhe once departeth from her friends, ſhe reſideth alwayes with her Husband, at his Fathers houſe if he be liuing, if not at his eldeſt brothers, if hee himſelfe be not eldeſt: for ſeldome doe brethren deuide themſelues, but all of them (though many) liue together in owne Family, bringing their gaines whatſoeuer it is vnto the common ſtocke, cheriſhing with an admired duty their old indigent Parents, and liuing together in moſt commendable vnitie. If the husband dieth, the wife may not marry againe, and which is moſt vnreaſonable not the young ones though neuer knowne of man, who happening to be widdowes in their infancy, muſt not onely continue ſo, but be made the drudge to the whole Family, not permitted to weare their Iewels, good or cleane clothes, or vpon occaſion to goe abroad (at leaſt vpon pleaſure) & this with moſt of them, together with a reuerend reſpect they beare to the reputation of their houſe, mortifies thē after a ſtrange manner, yet ſome it cānot containe; but they flie out, & forſaking their fathers houſe, brand it with a laſting obloquy by their looſer liues, keeping themſelues at diſtance, for if conueniently their kindred would poyſon them.

Infants.

Their young children they neither chriſten, circumciſe, nor vſe other ceremony vnto, but giuing them different appellations in their infancy, which are commonly the names of their Idols, they are knowne by them with the addition of their Trade, Tribe, or ſome defect or quality, moſt eminent about them: They come into the World without much trouble to their mothers, for they are vp againe about their buſineſſe in three or foure dayes, ſome the ſame day: they are brought vp with as little charge, for many vntill they be ſeuen or eight yeeres of age foule not a clowt (as cheape as they be) but being young tumble in the duſt, and growne ſtronger walke ſtill ſtarke naked, and if they bee foule, two or three pales of cold water (poured vpon their heads) runnes downe their bodies, and makes all cleane againe, and thus are moſt children brought vp, vntill they bee in ſome meaſure capeable to begin to practiſe in their fathers profeſſion. The beſt mens children may bee better lookt vnto, but ſtarke naked (vnleſſe vpon ſome Feſtiuall) is the beſt and generall habit. Full growne men and women are deuoutly and ciuilly clothed, the women all ouer as you haue heard of the Whoores; the men moſt of them from the middle downwards, and on their ſhoulders a looſe white Callico cloth in vſe like our Sommer clokes, ſometimes a coate cloſe to their bodies vnto the middle, from thence downwards to their ankles full of cloth like to a paire of baſes, their haire (long as womens) bound vp, and ouer it a Turbant, in their eares Rings of Gold, with ſmall Pearles, and about their neckes a chaine of Ginetra, or Siluer, for few can attaine vnto Gold. They are not black but tawny, or rather a Wainſcot colour, ſome much whiter then other, as ſome wainſcot is newer or browner then other, but many of them very wel fauoured & ſtreight limbde, and in their acquaintance and conuerſation kind and affable, amongſt whom our Nation hath (during the time of their Reſidence with them) found much good reſpect, and little affront or iniury. All Mechanicke perſons (whereof the multitude conſiſteth) worke in their ſeuerall Trades, for the ſame ſalary, or little difference. The Blackſmith, and Gold-ſmith, makes Iron nailes, and chaines of Gold, for three pence a day, finding themſelues, and is great wages to a maſter workman, their ſeruants are paid with one penny, and ſome leſſe, the like of all other Trades and perſons, for wee are ſerued faithfully and officiouſly in our houſes for a Riall of eight a moneth, without allowance of diet, and the Porters which carry the Palamkeene haue no more, yet out of this all pay ſomewhat to the Gouernour where they liue, or doe his worke gratis, from whence it is little wonder they liue ſo poorely, yet the plenty of this Country, and their contented courſer diet, affords them a liuing vntill they die, then ſome are burned, and their aſhes caſt into the next Riuer, others buried ſitting croſſe-legged; in either of which kind, I next relate my owne ſight of two womens voluntary ſufferance, yet vnreſolued whether their loue to their dead husbands be more to be admired or pitied. It is amongſt theſe Indians a receiued hiſtory, that there was a time, when wiues were generally ſo luxurious, that to make way for their friends, they would poyſon their husbands; which to preuent, a Law was made, that the husbands dead the wiues ſhould accompany them in the ſame fire, and this Law ſtands yet in force in the Iland of Baly not far from Iaua: but from this neceſſity of dying, there enſued ſo great a reformation, that the ſucceeding age aboliſhed the rigour of this Law, and the dead mans wife was onely adiudged to a perpetuall widowhood as it is at this day. Yet are there ſome few left, that in pure loue to their deceaſed husbands, die voluntarily in ſolemnizing their Funerals: beleeuing their ſoules ſhall keepe company in their tranſmigrations. Of the two which I haue ſeene, the firſt was wife to a Weauer, who being dead, and by his profeſſion to be buried, ſhe a young woman (about 20. yeeres of age) would needs goe with him, and in this order. She was clothed in her beſt garments, and accompanied with her neereſt Kindred and friends, ſeated on a greene banke by a great ponds ſide, there enterayning ſuch as came to looke, and take leaue on her, with Bettele (a herbe which they much eat) meerely accommodating her words, actions, and countenance to the Muſicke, which ſtood by, and plaid no dumps, but in the ſame meaſure and ſtraine they were occaſioned at wedding, newes hereof being brought to our houſe, three of vs took horſe, and poſted a mile out of Towne to be partakers of this ſpectacle, but comming into her ſight, before we came at them, they fearing by our ſpeed we had bin ſent from the Gouernour to hinder their proceedings, haſtened to her death, and was then couering with earth when wee came in, firſt ſitting downe by her husband, embracing his dead body, and taking leaue of all her friends, they ſtanding round about the graue, with each of them a basket of earth, buried her at once. Yet after we came in, one of them ſtroke vpon the Graue, laying his head cloſe vnto it, and calling her by her name,

The other was a Campowaroes wife, and ſhe after the ſame ſolemne preparation, fetching her run and crying all the way, [i] Bama Narina, Bama Narina; leapt into the pit where her husband lay burning, vpon whom her by-ſtanding friends, threw ſo many logs, that ſhe felt not ſo much fire for the fewell. Vnto whom I adde a third, a Gold-ſmiths wife, whoſe husband being dead and ſhe willing to accompany him, came attended with her friends and kindred vnto the [k] Cotwall, who was then with me at the Engliſh houſe, with much importunity deſiring his conſent, alledging her husbands death and the few friends ſhe had left behind; whereunto the Cotwall replyed, that hee himſelfe would prouide for her at his owne houſe, diſwading her by what other arguments he could vſe from ſo deſperate a courſe: but ſhe neglecting them and his offer, he alſo denied her requeſt, and ſhe departed diſcontent, vttering theſe words, that he could not hinder her to dye by ſome other meanes, and within a ſhort time after I heard ſhe had hanged her ſelf; & this hapned in Muſulipatnam, where the Officers being all Mahumetans, reſtraine the Gentiles eſpecially in theſe cruel & heathenish cuſtomes.

A fourth I haue wholy by Relation, yet from an Engliſh Factor of good account in that place, who trauelling in the Country about ſuch affaires as were impoſed vpon his performance, and being well attended according to the cuſtome of that Country, eſpied not far out of his way a concourſe of people vnto whom he made, and being come neere hee was enformed by his Seruants that it was a woman about to burne with her dead husband: he preſently drawing his Sword rode in amongſt them, whereupon they all fled but the woman herſelfe, whom he perſwaded to liue, promiſing to ſecure her againſt her friends, if their importunities had wrought her to this courſe: but ſhe beſought him not to interrupt her, it was her owne moſt earneſt deſire, wherein we did conſtantly perſiſt: whereupon he put vp, and her friends came in, and preſently in his ſight with the like ceremony & duty formerly recited; ſhe became the ſame aſhes with him, to whom ſhe had bin one fleſh. And here abruptly in the ordering and imperfectly in the Relation, I leaue them & their cuſtomes, intending onely to touch at their marine trade, & the commodities of that country tranſported to other parts.

Diamonds how found.

Firſt of Diamonds lately diſcouered in this Kingdome, moſt men ſay by this accident: A ſilly Goat-herd keeping his flock amongſt thoſe mountaines, ſtumbled (by chance) vpon a ſtone that ſhined ſomewhat bright, which he careleſly tooke vp (not much valuing) ſold it to a Committy for meales Rice, the Committy againe for no great profit, and ſo forward vntill it came to thoſe owners which knew the worth, who queſtioning the laſt ſeller, traced out from one to another the true originall, and making further triall thereabouts, found in the bowels of the earth a plentifull myne; whereof the King being aduertized, he tooke order for the ſafe keeping, and rumour thereof being blazed, Iewellers of all the neighbouring Nations reſorted to the place, and ſome ſtore of Diamonds began to be diſperſed and expoſed to ſale: Inſomuch that Sir Andreas Socory Gouernour of the Fort, Guide in Pallecat, Sir Adolfe Thomaſon a free Merchant, and my ſelfe reſolued to make a Voyage thither, to ſee at leaſt the place, and order of it: ſo that after foure dayes trauell (thorough a deſolate mountaynous Country) we came at laſt to the place, and found it diſtant from Muſulipatnam about twelue Gentine leagues, which is 108. Engliſh miles: where we harboured our ſelues in a handſome Hogſtie, and according to cuſtome addreſſed our ſelues to viſit the Gouernour, who was a Bramene, named Ray Raw, and lay there for the King, as well to receiue his profits, as to adminiſter Iuſtice to the Rabblement of different Nations that frequented this place, from whom we receiued indifferent good reſpect, with the ſight of certaine faire Diamonds appertayning to the King, and amongſt them one of 30. Carracts, pointed, but not perfect: and after knowledge of our ſeuerall qualities, and our purpoſe only to ſee the Mine, he diſmiſſed vs, and we next day went thither (diſtant from the Towne about two Engliſh miles) where by their owne reports, there worke not daily fewer then 30000. ſoules, ſome digging, ſome filling baskets, ſome lauing out water with buckets, others carrying the earth vnto a certaine ſquare leuell place, whereupon they ſpread it foure or fiue inches in thickneſſe, which beeing dried by that dayes Sunne, ſome of them the next day with great ſtones in their hands, bruiſe the clods of earth, and gathering from thence the peble ſtones, throw them, by and ſifting the reſt, they find the Diamonds amongſt the duſt, ſometimes none, as it hapned whileſt I lookt on, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſſe, according to the earth they worke in, which they well know (ſome ſay by the ſmell) others more probably by ſight of the mould, howſoeuer that they know it is moſt apparant, ſeeing that in many places wee found the ground onely broken and not further ſought into, in other places digged 10. or 11. fathome deepe: the earth is reddiſh, with veines of white or yelloviſh chalke, intermixt with Peble-ſtones, which being deepe digged, comes vp in ſmall clods, and thoſe laid in the Sunne become hard, but are eaſily pounded with ſtones (as formerly) of which earth I tooke a ſmall piece, and yet reſerue it for ſatisfaction of the more curious.

Theſe Mynes are not (as with vs in Europe) carried vnder ground and ſupported with Timber, but digged right downe in ſquare large pits, whether it be that all the Earth affords more or leſſe profit, whereas ours onely run in veines, or whether they want props or iudgement to take this courſe, I cannot determine, but am ſure that in freeing of the water, and bringing vp the Earth, they goe the furtheſt way to worke, for in place or pullies, and ſuch like deuices, they with many people ſetting one aboue another, hand vp from one to another vntill it comes to the place it muſt reſt in, and from hence proceederh the vſe of ſo many people, ſeeing that beſides the Earth, the place where ouer-night they wrought dry, is next morning a fathome deepe vnder water.

Such as it is thus imperfectly deſcribed, the King then rented it vnto one Marcandoo, of the [d] Caſt of the Goldſmiths for three hundred thouſand Pagodes a yeere, reſeruing all Diamonds of aboue ten Carracts to himſelfe: Hee againe rents it out to others by ſquare meaſure according as they agree, in which courſe ſome gaine, others loſe as in all other Aduentures. The King to aſſure himſelfe of the great Stones, keeps his Gouernour there, publiſhing extreame penalties againſt ſuch as ſhall conceale them, but neyther the terrour of them, nor his many Spies, can ſo watch ſuch as there attend ſuch hazards, but that I haue heard Diamonds of forty Carracts haue eſcaped their Guard, I haue ſeene two of neere twenty Carracts apiece, and diuers of ten, eleuen, and twelue, but very deere prized.

It is ſituated at the foot of a great Mountayne, not farre from a Riuer called Chriſtena, a place naturally ſo barren, that before this Diſcouery it was hardly inhabited, now peopled with a hundred thouſand Soules conſiſting of Myners, Merchants, and ſuch others as liue by following ſuch concourſes, ſufficiently furniſhed with all prouiſions brought thither from the Countrey round about, but at exceſſiue rates, occaſioned by the many exactions rayſed vpon them in their paſſages thorough ſeuerall Gouernments and Villages. The Houſes are very poore, as not intended for continuance, but onely the preſent occaſion, for in Anno 1622. the Myne was ſhut vp, and all perſons reſtrained from frequenting the place; the reaſons ſome imagined to be their care to keepe the Commoditie in requeſt, not to digge more vntill thoſe already found were diſperſed, others affirmed, the comming of the Mogulls Embaſſadour to this Kings Court, with his peremptory demand of a [e] Vyſe of the faireſt Diamonds, cauſed this ceſſation, vntill that pretence, and ſome competent Preſent ſhould content the Mogull: for ſince I came from thence, I heare it was opened againe, but almoſt exhauſted, and very few found.

[e] A Vyſe is three pound Engliſh weight

In this Country is alſo much Chriſtall, and many other ſorts of tranſparant ſoft Stones of little value, as Garnets, Amatiſts, Topaſſes, Aggats, and ſuch like.

Likewiſe great ſtore of Iron and Steele; tranſported into many places of India, bought in the place it is made for two ſhillings the hundred of Iron, and three ſhillings Steele, but being brought vpon the backes of Oxen fifteene dayes iourney, before it commeth to the Port it becomes much dearer, yet is ſold for fiue ſhillings, and eight ſhillings, but eyther Gold, Siluer, Tinne, Copper, or other Metals this Countrey produceth not.

Iron & Steele.

Bezar Stones in ſome plenty, are taken from the Goates in one onely part of this Country, for which and their ſkins they kill ſo many, that the fleſh is moſt throwne away, and their mawes onely ſearcht into, where they finde two, three, and ſometimes foure ſmall Bezars ſome long, ſome round, all of them growing vpon a ſtalke or kernell, as is eaſly perceiued by ſuch as are broken, ſuch as are greater come from other Countries, the beſt out of Perſia, and are ſaid to be found in Apes, all of all ſorts ſo well knowne, and much vſed in India, that they cannot bee bought there, to yeeld profit in England, proportionable to the time and Aduenture. Of theſe Goats this concluſion hath beene experimented, foure of them haue beene taken from the place of their breeding, and tranſported fifty or a hundred miles, of which two haue beene immediately killed, and in thoſe haue beene found perfect Bezars, a third reprieued for tenne dayes, and then ſlaine: ſome ſhew of Bezars remayned, but apparantly waſted, the fourth liuing but a moneth after, there will be neyther Bezar, nor ſigne of any that euer was, from whence they conclude with great probability, that it is ſome Herbe, Plant or Tree, peculiar to that place, whereof the Goat feeding the Bezars are formed.

Bezars how taken out of Goats.

Callicoes of all ſorts, are in this Kingdome as cheape and plentifull as in any other part of India, but different in their making, and eaſily diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of other Countries. The Painting of this Coaſt of Choromandel famous throughout India, and are indeed the moſt exquiſite that are ſeene, the beſt, wrought all with the Penſill, and with ſuch durable colours, that notwithſtanding they bee often waſhed, the colours fade not whilſt the Cloth laſteth, & this hapneth principally, by a Plant which groweth only in this Country, called by them Chay, which dyeth or ſtayneth a perfect red, with them in as great account as Scarlet with vs, and is the Kings particular commoditie.

Indico is alſo made in this Countrey in ſome plenty, in forme like to that ſort which is called Lahore Indico, whereof the Dutch haue bought ſtore, and tranſported it for Holland, and and continue ſo to doe, but our Nation vpon good experience of the condition and value of it, content themſelues with ſuch as is made in the Moguls Dominions, and laden from Surat.

Tobacco. They haue within few yeeres planted ſtore of Tobacco, and much of it is exported to Mocha and Arrecan, and not a little drunke amongſt themſelues: It is but weake, yet ſure more care in curing and making it vp would helpe that fault, they onely dry the leaues in the Sun, and vſe it ſo, without further ſophiſtication.

Theſe are the generall Commodities of this Countrey, which are diſperſed in ſome meaſure through the World, but are beſt knowne in Indian Traffique, and produce conſtantly certaine profit in their exportation to other parts, to which purpoſe they build great Ships, and good ones too, conſidered in their burthen and materials, but not comparable to ours for beautie, conueniencie, or defence, ſome of them not leſſe then 600. tunnes, ſubſtantially built of very good timber and Iron, whereof we haue had vpon ſome occaſion good experience, in careening the Globe, Salomon, and Clawe, in the Riuer of Narſoporpeta. With theſe their Ships they traffique ordinarily to Mocha in the Red Sea, to Achiyne vpon Sumatra, to Arrecan, Pegu, and Tannaſſery, on the other ſide the Gulfe, and to many Ports alongſt their owne Coaſts, as farre as Zeloan, and the Cape Comoriyne.

Their trafficke

Voyage to Mocha and Mecca. To Mocha they ſet ſayle in Iannary, and returne in September or October following, and thither the King ſends yeerely a proportion of Rice, as an Almes to be diſtributed amongſt the Pilgrimes which reſort to Mecha and Medina, where their Prophet Mahomets Shrine is viſited with much deuotion. He ſendeth alſo an Aduenture, the proceed whereof is inueſted in Arabian Horſes, which are returned not aboue ſixe or eight in a Shippe, whereof they make great account: For in this Countrey there is no Race of good Horſes.

Tobaſco they ſend in great quantities, many ſmall Rotans to make Launces, certaine ſorts of Calicoes proper for Turbants, Iron, Steele, Indico, Beniamin, and Gumme, Lacke. For which they returne ſome few watered Chamblets, but the moſt part ready money in Sultannees or Rials of eight.

In September the Ships for Achiyne, Arrecan, Pegu, and Tannaſſery ſet all ſayle, for it is to be vnderſtood that alongſt this and all other Coaſts of India, the windes blow conſtantly trade ſixe moneths one way, and ſixe moneths another; which they call the Monſons alternately ſucceeding each other, not miſſing to alter in Aprill and October, onely variable towards their end, ſo that taking the laſt of a Monſon, they ſet ſayles, and with a forewinde arriue at their deſired Hauen, and there negotiating their Affaires, they ſet ſayle from thence in February or March following, and with the like fauourable gale returne in Aprill vnto their owne Ports.

To Acheene they export much Steele, and ſome Iron, diuers ſorts of Calicoes, both white and painted, and of late times, when the Myne was firſt diſcouered, ſtore of Diamonds, which were ſold to great benefit, from whence they returne Beniamin, and Camphora of Barouſe: Pepper of Priaman and Tecoo, Brimſtone, and all ſorts of Porcellane, and China Commodities, if to be had, to ſell againe to profit.

To Arrecan they ſend ſtore of Tobacco, ſome Iron, and few ſorts of painted clothes, and returne from thence ſome Gold, and Gumme Lacke, but moſt part Rice which they ſell about Pallecat, and that Coaſt of Narſinga.

To Pegu they export much Siluer in Rials of eight, Cotton yarne, and Beethyles dyed red, with ſeueral ſorts of paintings, & bring from thence the perfect Rubies & Saphires which are diſperſed through the World, much Gold, the beſt Gum Lack, with ſome Tin & Quickſiluer.

To Tannaſſery they carry red Cotton yarne, red and white Beethyles, paintings of ſeuerall ſorts befitting that Countries weare, and landing them at Tannaſſery carry them from thence to Syam fourteene dayes iourney ouer Land, from whence by the like conueyance, they bring all ſorts of China Commodities, as Porcellane, Sattins, Damaskes, Lankeene, Silke, Lignum Aloes, Beniamin of Camboia, and great ſtore of Tinne, and a wood to die withall called Sapan wood, the ſame we heere call Brauill.

Alongſt their owne Coaſt they trade with ſmaller ſhipping, lading Rice and other graine where it is cheapeſt, ſelling it againe on the Coaſt of Biſnagar to great benefit, taking children in exchange, which coſt not them aboue three or foure ſhillings a childe, and they ſell againe in Muſulipatnam, and other places for forty ſhillings. And thus much ſhal ſuffice to haue written of this Kingdom, wherein I haue been the more prolixe, becauſe my own knowledge fortified with almoſt fiue yeeres experience, aſſureth me of the truth of what I haue written.

Bengala. Where this Country endeth, the Kingdome of Bengala beginneth, ſubſiſting at this time vnder the Monarchy of the Great Mogull, which he ruleth by his Gouernours, diſpoſed into ſeuerall Prouinces, whoſe powerfull Neighbourhood, cauſeth the King of Golchonda to keepe conſtant Gariſons, which with the aduantage of Riuers and Deſerts, ſecureth him on that ſide of his Kingdome. In this Countrey we are meere ſtrangers, the Coaſt is too dangerous, and our ſhipping too great, to aduenture them amongſt ſo many ſhelfes and ſands, yet are we enformed by ſuch as comes from thence, and confirmed by the price and abundance of ſuch things as that Countrey produceth, that it is the moſt plentifull of all the Eaſt: For once a yeere there ariueth at Muſulipatnam, a Fleet of ſmall Veſſels from thence, of burden about twenty tunnes, the plankes onely ſowne together with Cairo (a kinde of Cord made of the rinds of Coconuts) and no Iron, in, or about them. In which Barkes they bring Rice, Butter, Sugar, Waxe, Honey, Gumme, Lacke, Long Pepper, Callico, Lawnes, and diuers ſorts of Cotton-cloth, Raw Silke, and Moga, which is made of the barke of a certaine tree, and very curious Quilts and Carpets ſtitched with this Moga; all which conſidering the plenty of the place whereunto they bring them, ſhould come hither, as we ſay of Coales carried to New-caſtle, yet here they ſell them to contented profit. Many Portugals decayed in their eſtates, or queſtioned for their liues, reſort hither & liue here plentifully, yet as baniſhed men or Out-lawes, without gouernment, practice, or almoſt profeſſion of Religion; to conclude, it may truly be ſpoken of this Countrey: as it is abuſiuely of another: Bengala bona terra, mala gens: It is the beſt Countrey peopled with the worſt Nation, of whom this repute runnes currant in India, the men are all Theeues, and the women Whoores. Here the famous Ganges diſimboqueth into the Sea, fructifying it ſeemes the Countrey, but little ſanctifying the Inhabitants, whereof I can ſpeake very little, as hauing alwayes liued at great diſtance from it, onely I haue heard it is full of Crocodiles, and ſo are moſt Riuers within the Gulfe, where I haue ſeene many of immenſe bigneſſe, which the Ferrimen that paſſe men and cattle ouer thoſe Riuers, know how to charme, and then with ſafety ferry ouer the Paſſengers, in the bodies of one or two Palmito trees ioyned, and ſwimme ouer the Cattle; the order of which charming hauing once ſeene, I thought good to inſert. Beeing at a Riuers ſide and ready to paſſe it, we eſpied a very great Crocodile, ſhewing himſelfe aboue water, and ſwimming downe the ſtreame in our way, whereupon the Ferriman entring the Riuer to the calues of his legs, he ſtands vpon one of them, muttering to himſelfe certaine words, and withall tying knots vpon a ſmall Coard he held in his hand, to the number of ſeuen, which Coard hee left hanging on a buſh thereby, and confidently puſht vs and our Horſes ouer, the Crocodile lying all this while ſtill in our ſight, not able (as he ſaid) to open his iawes; ſo hauing ferried vs ouer, he made haſte to returne and vntie the Coard, affirming, that if the Crocodile ſhould be ſtarued by the power of this Charme, his Charme would from thenceforth loſe its power and effect.

Arrecan borders vpon Bengala, and participates in its plenty, from whence there commeth yeerely ſhipping to the Coaſt of Choromandel. The King is by Religion a Gentile, but ſuch a one as holdeth all meates and drinkes indifferent, he marrieth conſtantly his owne ſiſter, and giueth for reaſon the firſt mens practice in the infancy of the World, affirming that no Religion can deny that Adams Sons married Adams daughters. He is very kind to Strangers, giuing good reſpect and entertainment, to Moores, Perſians, and Arabians, which liue in his Countrey profeſſing publikely the practice of their Mahumetan Superſtition. Hee hath alſo diuers times inuited the Dutch and Engliſh to reſort vnto his Countrey, but the Dutch by good experience, hauing had ſometimes a Factory there, the Engliſh (not by their example) but true knowledge of the little Trade and leſſe benefit, auoyd his importunity; yet continue good correſpondence with him and his people, as knowing it a plentifull Country, and not inconuenient to ſupply themſelues with many neceſſaries, if difference with other Nations ſhould enforce them to that extremity. Betwixt this King and the Mogull there is continuall Warre, both by Sea and Land, defenſiue on the King of Arrecans part, ſecuring his owne Countrey that bordereth vpon Bengala: From thence confronting in ſmall skirmiſhes the oppoſite party, but any ſet or great battle, I haue not heard of to haue beene fought betwixt them. In which warres he giueth ſo good entertainment to ſtrangers, that I haue knowne diuers Hollanders, that hauing expired their couenanted time of ſeruice with the East Indian Company, and ſo purchaſed their freedome, haue gone to ſerue this King, and receiued good countenance and content in his employment of them.

Arrecan.

Pegu * borders vpon Arrecan, and is a moſt plentifull and temperate Country, yet hardly recouered from the deſolation wherewith warre, plague, and famine, had within few former yeeres infeſted it, which is moſt viſible in the vaſt Country, the Cities being alwayes firſt and beſt repleniſhed, and that all other places may the better bee ſo, it is death to export a woman from thence, and certaine profit to bring them. The King is a Gentile by his Religion, agreeing in all points of opinion and practice with the Kings of Arrecan, Tannaſſery, & Syam, all of them in probability, receiuing their Rudiments from the Chineſes, who without queſtion ſometimes commanded thoſe Countries; their vicinity, reſemblance in Phiſiognomy, and conformity in many cuſtomes, being my beſt reaſons to goe along with theſe thus farre, that are of opinion, the Chineſes ſometimes Monarchiſed as farre as Madagaſcar.

which this hath ſuppreſt, and hath in his time recouered from the King of Syam, what hee had enforced from his Predeceſſor, amongſt others the town and Kingdom of Zangomay, and therein an Engliſhman named Thomas Samuel, who not long before, had beene ſent from Syam by Maſter Lucas Anthoniſon, to diſcouer the Trade of that Country, by the ſale of certaine goods ſent along with him to that purpoſe, which Thomas Samuell, together with all other ſtrangers was by the King taken from Zangomay, and carried to Pegu, where not long after Samuel dyed, the King ſeiſing vpon what he had by Inuentory, with purpoſe (as by the ſequell) to giue account thereof to the lawfull Proprietors. The Kingdome of Pegu beginng to bee better eſtabliſhed, Merchants of diuers Nations began to repaire thither againe about their negotiations, where ſome of Muſulipatnam by conference with Moores, that were Samuels aſſociates, vnderſtood his death, and the Kings taking his goods into his hands, with the probability of recouery if ſought after, which they making knowne to the Engliſh at their returne to Muſulipatnam, it happened that Maſter Lucas Anthoniſon who imployed Samuel from Syam to Zangomay, was then Agent at Muſulipatnam, who apprehending this encouragement, conſulted with his aſſiſtants, and reſolued to ſend two Engliſh with a Letter and Preſent to the King, and ſome ſmall aduenture, to beare the charge of the Voyage, and make tryall of the Trade, which tooke place, and they embarquing at Muſulipatnam the tenth of September, arriued at Siriam the Port of Pegu, the third of October following, whoſe entertaynment I giue you in their owne words, as I finde them written in their Letters to Muſulipatnam.

Other Engliſh ſent.

A Letter relating the King of Pegus entertainment to the Engliſh.

The King hearing of our comming ſent foure Gallies with Preſents to the Ambaſſador and vnto vs, ſending vs word that he did much reioyce at our comming into his country. Theſe Gallies hauing 50 oares of a ſide, with eight Noblemen in them, cauſed our Ship to come to an anchor before the town of Siriam, the 7. of October the King of Pegues Brother being chiefe Gouernour, ſending two Noblemen abord of our Ship, writing our names & our age of yeeres & the cauſe of our cōming, we aſſuring them that we were meſſengers ſent from Muſulipatnam by our chief Captain, hauing a Preſent & a Letter vnto the King, which when his Highneſſe ſhall be pleaſed to receiue, ſhall vnderſtand the effect of our buſineſſe, and the cauſe of our comming. The tenth day of October wee were ſent for on ſhoare by the Kings Brother who ſitting in a large houſe of Bamboſon, in great ſtate bedecke with Iewels in his eares with Gold Rings, with rich ſtones on his fingers, being a white man and of very good vnderſtanding, demanding of vs the queſtion the Noblemen before did, and we anſwering him as wee did before, becauſe that our ſpeeches ſhould be found alwayes as one: we gaue him at that time a fine for a Preſent, to the intent that he might ſpeake and write to the King his Brother in our behalfe, that we might haue acceſſe vnto the King the ſooner, that our buſineſſe might haue effect. The eight of Nouember the King ſent for vs, and the Kings Brother prouided for vs a Boate, with ſix men to rowe, and alſo a Nobleman with vs to Pegu, to be our Guard, hauing Narſarcan and Hodges Iſmael with vs, vnto which Nobleman we gaue a Preſent, for in this place heere is nothing to bee done or ſpoken, or any buſines performed without Bribes, Gifts, or Preſents. Arriuing in Pegu the eleuenth of Nouember, hauing our Preſent with vs, Bany Bram ſent his men vnto vs, writing our names as before time, they alſo bade vs chooſe any ground where we would for to build vs a houſe, but at our owne coſt and charge as all other mens cuſtome is. Our Houſe being finiſhed, ſtraight order was giuen that we muſt not walke any where out of our houſe to ſpeake with any man vntill the King had ſpoken with vs, and our Preſent deliuered. The King ſent vs a Preſent of victuals, with two Noblemen with it, which was ſome grace to vs, though it was not of much value, and our comfort is, that all men report that the King is very well pleaſed at our comming into his Country. The ſeuen and twentieth of December, the King ſent for our Preſent, and ſent two Horſes for vs. and being come to a gate of the Towne, to ſtay for his comming, when hee came out, hee ſent for vs. What ſpeech or conference he had with vs, Narſarca can certifie you, but it was to no purpoſe, concerning our buſineſſe, nor could we get none to moue the King in our buſineſſe, for none of his Subiects dare moue the King in our buſineſſe more then he demands. The next our Letter was ſent for, and interpreted by a Portugall a ſlaue to the King, but one that ſpeakes Pegu. We had much trouble with him about the true vnderſtanding of it, being not written in Portugeſe. The next day wee deliuered that Preſent you ſent to Bany Bram, who gaue vs many faire ſpeeches like to others, but we haue found them all to no purpoſe. The Country is far from your Worſhips expectation, for what men ſoeuer come into his Country, he holds them but as his ſlaues, neyther can any man goe out of his Country without his leaue, for hee hath watch both by Land and Water, and he of himſelfe is a Tyrant, and cannot eat before he hath drawne blond from ſome of his people with death or otherwiſe. For the buſineſſe of Thomas Samuel and the Mallayor, they had a falling out ſome 12. moneths before he dyed, and he tooke all the Companies goods into his hands, and the Mallayor had Narſarcans in his hands, and comming to Pegu he fell ſicke by the way, and dyed in ſhort time after he came to Pegu, but before his death the Mallayor was called for to giue account what men were indebted to Samuel, and the Pegues & Bermanes that were indebted payd it to the King, but the Moores that were indebted ſaid, when the Engliſh came they would pay them; we went with others to Nicheſa, and requeſted him to mone the King in our behalfe for our diſpatch, who returned anſwere; came we to demand our goods, and the Engliſh had neuer come to trade in his Country? when our Ships came hee would giue all the goods, and what the Engliſh could demand to giue them content. In another Letter the firſt of March, wee had word ſent vs, the King would not let vs go vntill ſome Engliſh Ships came to Pegu. For the mony wee brought with vs, it is all ſpent, and wee are here in a moſt miſerable eſtate, and know no way to helpe our ſelues. For the King hath neyther giuen vs any of our goods, nor leaue to recouer none of our debts, nor taken our Cloth, but we are like loſt ſheep, and ſtill in feare of being brought to ſlaughter. Therefore we beſeech you and the reſt of our Countrimen and Friends to pitie our poore diſtreſſed eſtate, and not to let vs be left in a Heathen Country, ſlaues to a tyrannous King. Though the King gaue vs nothing, yet had hee but giuen vs leaue to come away, wee could haue certified your Worſhip of meanes to helpe to haue recouered all the mony and goods we came for. Lead and Tinne heere is none to be ſold, but if we receiue any mony, we do meane one of vs to goe into the Country to buy ſome if any profit may be made of it. The Coaſt of Pegu is cleere and water enough on the Bar for any Ship: and for Pilots, there are many to be had in Muſulipatnam, that know the Coaſt very well. We intreat you for Gods ſake to be mindfull of vs, and to pitty the poore eſtate we are here in, and ſend ſome Ship to releaſe vs, and we ſhall be bound to pray for your Worſhips good health and proſperitie.

This was the ſubſtance of their aduice deliuered in their owne words, which might bee true at that time, for then indeed they were inforced to ſtay; but not long after the Ships departure, they found good ſale for their Cloth, and it ſhould ſeeme better vent for the mony; for before the Ships came againe in October following, they had conſumed their Capitall, and taken vp beſides what their credit could ſupply, for which they could giue no other account, but that moſt was loſt at play, and the reſt profuſely ſpent, whereof the Right Worſhipfull East Indian Company are moſt ſenſible, and my ſelfe at that time in that place had ſome reaſon to be acquainted withall, but leauing them nameleſſe according to the obſcurity of their qualities, and irregularity of their proceedings. The King reſtoring moſt of the ſame goods Samuel dyed poſſeſſed of, at the inſtant of the Ships departure, and not before, leſt their ryot ſhould haue conſumed all, he then enforced them to depart toward Muſulipatnam, that could haue been well contented to haue ſtayed behind, where they arriued in Aprill, An. 1619. bringing with them a Letter from the King, written vpon a Palmito Leafe, ſignifying his deſire to giue free Trade and entertainment to the Engliſh Nation, if they would with their ſhipping repaire vnto his Country, and with all he ſent as a Preſent a Ring ſet with a Ruby, two Mats, two Betele Boxes, and two narrow pieces of Damaske, all worth twenty Nobles or thereabouts, and ſo ended this negotiation. The Rubies and Saphires which are brought from hence, are found in the Kingdome of Ana, ſubiect alſo to this King, and much eſteemed in all parts of India.

King of Pegus Letter.

Tannaſſery lyeth next to Pegu, a ſmall Kingdome, and tributary to the King of Syam, for which place this is but the Port, and that only to the Inhabitants of this Gulfe. For we find a way with our ſhipping into the Riuer of Syam, where the Right Worſhipfull East Indian Company haue at this time their Seruants, to whoſe abler relation I leaue the deſcription of thoſe Parts, adding onely from the credible reports of our owne, the Dutch, & that Nation, the ſtrange increaſe of the Swine of that Country, amongſt which here are found no Boares, yet haue they Pigs according to the cuſtome of other Swine. And one Sir Drift a Dutchman of good account, & another that liued long in that place, affirmed vnto mee the truth hereof, both in that Countryes beliefe, and his owne experience, for at his comming from thence, he tooke certaine Pigs, which he kept aboard the Ship, & within ſix moneths they farrowed Pigs, yet not a Boare amongſt them. And heere I take leaue to repoſe, hauing made this light diſcouery of the Countryes coaſting this Bay of Bengala, which I could not more exactly performe, hauing taken my ſtation in Muſulipatnam, Such as it is, I ſubmit it equally to all mens ſurueigh or cenſure, and reſt: Pleaſed whoſoeuer be otherwiſe.

Worthy Sir:

AS I haue begun, and proceeded herein by your Inſtigation, I preſent it to your acceptation, if any thing be worth your account, I dare iuſtifie the truth of it: if nothing, I ſhall neuer grieue at the ſuppreſſion. In briefe, I wrote it for you, and dedicate it to you, and am only ſorry it comes vnſeaſonably. My Voyage into India, remarkable in a Carracks loſſe, and Captaine Iaſephs death, my Employment at Surat, Cambaia, and Amadera, from thence at Callecut vpon the Coaſt of Malabarre, at Priaman and Tecoo vpon Sumatra, and then to Bantam and Iacatra vpon Iaua, would afford more matter of diſcourſe: but I haue choſen Muſulipatnam, from which Centre I haue drawne theſe rude lines, yet ſtrait ones, and parallel to the truth: ſo that although, none ſhall pleaſe to ſayle by my Compaſſe, yet am I ſufficiently contented in hauing kept within compaſſe; and ſo I reſt, a true louer of you and your elaborate Volumes.

THat which the Angell had foretold of Ishmael, hee will bee a wild man, his hand will be against euery man, and euery mans hand against him, and that his seed should not be numbred for multitude; *is in this History manifested to haue beene fulfilled to the vtmost. carkasses only) Almes, frequent Prayers (if gestures and words be Prayers, and Prayes were not the scope of their Prayers) their externall iustice in many things; their Learning in Philosophie, Mathematicks and Poetry; the length of an Empire in such space of time and place; this, inclusiuely from the East Indies, to the Westerne Ocean without any interruption; (taking in also Spaine and part of France and Italy with Sicill, and the Easterne Empire tributary) that, from Muhammeds time to the end of this Story, yea still in the Mogoll, Persian and Turke, with the Tartars and many Princes of lesse note continuing in a larger extent; the beginning, growth, height, declining and fall of that Empire; the aduancement hereof with the Sword, which exposeth to slaughter, or imposeth Tribute, their diuisions into two Empires, the Abasian Family ruling ouer Asia and Africa, the Ommian in Europe; and after into a third which held Africa, and in time also possessed Egypt; the rising of Lay Princes, and degeneration of Chalifas to a kind of meere Ecclesiastickes, and their fall by diuision of this triformed Cerberus into a multiforme Dragon in manifold States and Kingdomes: These in a succinct narration, by one which descended of Christian Progenitors, was versed in Christian Stories aswell as his last professed Islamisme, with more likelihood of truth and fulnesse of satisfaction to the Inquisitiue Reader, then any, then all yet published (if I be able to iudge) by any, by all Latines or other Westerne Writers; Erpennius hath bee giuen, and I abridged out of him, conferred also and illustrated with Mirkond a Persian and Muhammedan his History set forth in Spanish by Pedro Teixera, and Abraham Zacut a Iew published by Ioseph Scaliger. The Author by birth an Egyptian hath beene exact in relating the Times and Acts of all Egyptian Gouernours, which with other things too long for an abridgement, and not so pertayning to the generall knowledge of that Historie of their Religion and Empire, I haue omitted: yet scrupulously rendring those things which I thought fitting for that my scope, or satisfaction of any (not exceedingly curious) Reader. I confesse, had the Booke comne to my hand in time, this (as the other Tractates of Sir Ierome Horsey and Master Methold) had beene published with my Pilgrimes; yea, that Muhammedan part of my Pilgrimage was passed the Presse before this came to my hand; although euen for Religions sake this is not vnfit here. And for Religions sake I haue beene Religious in keeping the foot-prints of their Religion in the Phrases vsed by the Authour, of Muhammed or any other of his Sword-saints; stiling his memory glorious, others happy (indeed odious and pestiferous) because the Authour so speaketh, in other things also obseruing his words, euen as Saint Luke mentioneth Heathenish Names and Deuotions of Mars, Castor, Pollux, Iupiter, Mercury, or other prodigies of Ethnike Superstition. Let their Shewes and Deuotions in a false Religion prouoke vs to emulate the Truth with greater Zeale; lest our lukewarmenesse also cause vs to be spewed out of Christs mouth, for withholding the truth in vnrighteousnesse; the true cause why one Age brought into the World those hypocriticall Chalifas, and these Vicars, the one by Muhammeds Midwifery gladio oris, and the other by that of Phocas, ore gladij, those with a forcing Temporall Sword, these with a forged Spirituall, made of the Keyes turned into Picklocks to set the World in so manifold combustions; whiles one seekes a thousand yeeres together to thrust the Church out of all the World, the other to bring all the World vnto their Pontificall, Pompificall, Cacolicke, not into the true Catholike Church, in the communion of Saints. And if the Saracenicall and Papall History were well knowne, the mysteries of S. Iohns Apocalypse might receiue greater light then that want hath yet permitted. So vsefull is this kind of knowledge to generall Learning, and to (the summe of all) Diuinity.

It was farre greater then the Roman Empire, and their Religion still couereth more ground than the Christian in all professions.

The Authors Preface.

HAuing read the Hiſtory of that learned and famous man Muhamed Abugiafar Son of Giar[r] the Tabarite of happy memory, and ſeeing the narrations and allegations very prolixe; hauing alſo read the abridgement thereof by the learned Kemaluddin, and many other Briefes: I gathered a Hiſtory out of them, contracting the words, but retayning the things and order, omitting no caſe or exploit of moment: beginning with the beginner of Iſlamiſme of glorious memory, rehearſing his birth, genealogy, and acts till he fled to Medina, and after that his warres, victories, and fortune till his death. I proceed in order with the orthodoxall Chaliph's obſerning the courſe of times and yeeres, adding the Kings of other Prouincei and the occurrents of their times, according to the computation of the Hegira, vnto the Reigne of Sultan Rucnuddin the Holy King of happy memory.

Mahomet firſt Auther of Iſlamiſme, that is, the Mahumetan Faith praiſed by this author a Mahumetan.

t We ſay odious, and iuſtly, yet here and in like caſes follow the author.

THe firſt Emperor of the Muſſemans was Muhammed Abulcaſim of [s] glorious memory. Muhammed Abulcaſim (ſaith Muhammed [u] Abugiafar) firſt manifeſted and obſerued the Religion of Iſlamiſme: hee was Sonne of Abdalla, which was the Sonne of Abdulmutalib, the Sonne of Haſiem, the Sonne of Abdumenaf. His Mothers name was Emina, the Daugter of Waheb, Sonne of Abdumenaf. Now Muhammed of glorious memory was borne in the ſtonie Valley of the Citie of Mecca, early on a Munday morning the eighth of the former moneth Rab, in the 882. yeere of Alexander the Great. His Father dyed two moneths before he was borne, his Mother when he was ſixe yeeres old. His Grandfather Abdulmutalib brought him vp till he was eight yeeres old; and then dyed aged 110. yeeres, after which he was educated by his Vncle Abutalib. When hee was fortie yeeres old he was called (to the Propheticall office) on Munday the ſecond of the former Rab, in the 922. of Alexander the Great; which was the twentieth of the Raigne of Coſroas Sonne of Hormiſda, Sonne of u This M. Abugiafar was a Prince and learned Hiſtorian, which died A H. 310. A.D. 922. Out of him principally is this hiſtory to that time gathered.

His education.

r Muſſeman or Muſlim ſignifies a beleeuer: ſc. of that doctrine of Mahammed. The name which all of that religion giue themſelues. Saraceni, and Moore, &c. which we giue them, they know not.

Nuſherwan. The firſt that beleeued in his Propheſie was Chadigia his Vncles Daughter; the next was his ſeruant Zeid Sonne of Harith, and after him Ali the Sonne of Abutalib, all of happy memory. After them were added Abubecr with fiue others, (all which were called by him to Iſlammiſme) viz. Otſman Sonne of Affan, Zubeir Sonne of Awam, Abdurrahman Sonne of Auſi, Saad Sonne of Abuwaccas and Obeidalla Sonne of Algiarab. Theſe nine were the firſt which entred Iſlamiſme.

His doctrine.

In the foure and fortieth yeere of his age he manifeſted his vocation: for before hee only inuited men priuily to Iſlamiſme. And publiſhing his vocation, he commanded to beleeue in God alone and him to worſhip and adore; he deſtroyed Idolatry, commanded Circumciſion, eſtabliſhed the Faſt of the moneth Ramadan, the fiue Prayings, Cleanneſſe, Pilgrimage to the Temple of Mecca; that Bloud ſhould not be eaten, nor that which dyeth alone, nor Swines fleſh. And thoſe which obſerued not theſe things, he vexed with warre and fought againſt them. The Chriſtians alſo came to him both Arabs and others, and hee receiued them into his fidelity, giuing them a writing of Securitie. So alſo the Iewes, Magi, * and Pagans and others which performed to him oath of fidelity, obtained of him free libertie, but on condition to pay tribute and poll-monie. He commanded alſo to beleeue the truth of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and of the Bookes ſent to them. Alſo that Chriſt the Sonne of Mary is the Spirit of God, and his Word and Apoſtle, and he approued the Goſpell and the Law of Moſes. The Coraiſites would not conſent touching theſe things, but reſiſted him valiantly and defied him. But his Vncle Abutalib aſſiſted him, and forbade that any man ſhould approch to him with a Sword.

* Magi were thoſe which profeſſed the Ethnike Religion vſed in Perſia.

Chriſt blaſphemed with hypocriticall honours.

His enemies.

In the fifth yeere Omar the Sonne of Alchittabi of happy memory beleeued and confirmed the other Muſlims with his faith: they were then 39. and himſelfe was the 40. In the eighth yeere the Coraiſites writ a Decree that the children of Haſiem ſhould not make league or be mixed with the children of Almutalib, and hanged it in the Temple of Mecca. In the tenth yeere Abutalib dyed, addicted to the Religion of his (people) aged ſomewhat aboue eightie, and the Coraiſites were confirmed, and their power and hope increaſed. The ſame yeere the Prophet of glorious memory made an expedition to Taijfa, and inuited the Inhabitants to Iſlamiſme, but they yeelded not to him, and when hee had ſtayed there a moneth, he returned to Mecca. This yeere alſo he married the Daughter of Abubecr the Iuſt, and Sowda the Daughter of Zamaa.

His two wiues. Aijſia & Sowda.

The conuerſion of Medina.

In the thirteenth yeere certaine of Awas and Chazraz, viz. ſeuenty three men and two women came to him, which were ſworne to him concerning Iſlamiſme, and of theſe hee appointed twelue Doctors, after whoſe returne to Medina, Iſlamiſme was ſpread amongſt the Inhabitants thereof, and they became his helpers. The ſame yeere he commanded his to remoue to Medina, and they all went thither except Abubecr and Ali which remayned with him.

The Hiſtory of the departure to Medina.

IN the 14. yeere Muhammed of glorious memory remoued to Medina, hauing with him Abubecr the Iuſt, and Amar the Son of Kamra the Seruant of Abubecr. And Abdalla the Son of Artacat guided them. But Ali remained behind with his leaue three dayes to diſpoſe his buſineſſes, and then came to him. He entred Medina on Munday noone (others ſay on Thurſday) the twelfth of the former Rab. and abode with Chalid Abiobi Sonne of Zeid till hee built the Temple and Houſe into which he then entred. And from this yeere is reckoned the computation * of the Hegira, which was the 54. yeere of the age of Muhammed of glorious memory.

* The Hegira or flight of M. fell out on the 16. of July, A.D. 622.

Fatima D. of Mah. married to Ali his Vncles Sonne.

An. H. 2. which began Iuly 5. 623.

His ſlight skirmiſhes which after grew to great battels.

A.H. 3. which began Iune 24. A.D. 624.

The firſt yeere of the Hegira, Ali the Son of Abutalib married Fatima. The ſame yeere Muhammed of glorious memory gaue a white Banner to his Vncle Hamza (this was the firſt Banner which he gaue to any) and ſent with him thirty Muſlims; but hee performed little. In the ſecond yeere was fought the ſecond Battel of Badra, and the greateſt, in which diuers valiant Leaders of the Coraiſites were ſlaine; on Friday the ſeuenteenth of the moneth Ramadan. For he had heard that Abuſofian the Sonne of Harith was going into Syria with many packes, in which were monies of the Coraiſites, for the ſpoile whereof he went. But Abuſofian with his got to Mecca. The Muſlims were three hundred and nineteene in number, the Infidels betwixt nine hundred and a thouſand, and the Muſlims ouercame, and ſlue ſeuenty of the vnbeleeuers, and tooke as many. But of the Muſlims only fourteen were ſlaine. There were other Battels alſo this yeere.

In the third yeere of the Hegira he beſieged the Iewes in their Forts fifteene dayes, and they yeelded: hee captiued them and ſpoiled their goods. The ſame yeere hee ſent a band of men to ſlay Caab Sonne of Abraſaf a Iew. And that yeere was fought a Battell on Saturday about the midſt of the moneth Siewal, and the Hill neere Medina was taken. The number of the Infidels was three thouſand footmen, and two hundred horſemen, three thouthousand Camels and fifteene women. Their Captaine was Abusofian Sonne of Haruh. The Muslims were a thousand, these first had the better, but after the Infidels, which slue 70. Muslims, amongst which was Hamza Sonne of Abdulmutalib. This was an vnluckie day, in which M. of glorious memory was also present in the Battell, and was wounded by Ochas the Sonne of Abunnagid, and lost one of his right foreteeth, and was hurt on the lower lip. Abdalla, also the Sonne of Siehab wounded his forehead: his vpper iaw also was wounded, and two of his foreteeth fell out. Of the Infidels were slaine two and twentie. M. wounded.

In the fourth yeere happened the Battell of the Iewes, Sonnes of Nadir, which leauing their fortifications went out of their limits and came to Chaibar, and some of them went into Syria. Mundir Sonne of Omar the Saadite pursued them to the Well of Muauia with 70. Medinans, and slue them all, but Caab Son of Zeidi: which escaped. The last Battel of Badra was fought this yeere. In the fift yeere was the Battell of Fossa or the Dike. Many Nations were gathered together, the Coraisites, and the children of Coraid, of Nadir, of Gatfan, and of Selim: their Leaders were Habib Sonne of Abiab, Salam Sonne of Abulhakik, and other Iewes. And Ioseph Sonne of Harith came to lead the Coraisites and their followers with ten thousand men. Ouer the men of Gatfan was Asibas Sonne of Hasan the Karanite and others. Seliman the Persian was author of digging the Ditch. The Infidels besieged them aboue twenty dayes: after which Naim Sonne of Masud the Gatfanite embracing Islamisme procured the disioyning of those Nations, and the breach of league twixt them and the Iewes. They fled thence, sixe Muslims and three Infidels being slaine. In this yeere happened the Battell of the children of Coraid, against whom Mahammed went forth and besieged them fiue and twenty dayes. They were forced to yeeld to Saad Sonne of Maad, who counselled to slay all the men, and to make captiue the women and children: so that sixe or seuen hundred were beheaded, and buried in the Market place of Medina, the Muslims sharing their wiues, children and goods. Saad dyed of a wound before gotten at the Dike-battell. A.H. 4. which began Iune 13. 625. A.H. 5. Iune 2. 626.

In the sixt yeere was ordayned the Prayer for obtayning health, in Haditia, and many Battels were fought, amongst others that of the children of Mustalak, whom he met in Safan. With them was Giuueira daughter of Harith, whom M. of glorious memory married, in steed of dowry freeing diuers of her captiued Kindred. This yeere also was fought the Battell of Haditia, a place neere Mecca, in the way to Giudda. After that peace was made betwixt him and the Coraisites that for ten yeeres they might plow, and it was free for euery man to take part with them, or with M. on condition that if any Coraisite without leaue of his Captaine fled to M. he should bee sent backe; but if any of M. his followers fled without leaue to the Coraisites he should not be sent backe to him. If M. with his Souldiers should passe that way, he might stay three dayes; hee should vse no other Armes but those which Trauellers vse, and that also in the Scabberds. This truce was made by Sabium Sonne of Omar the Amirite, and written by Ali Sonne of Abutalib of happy memory. In that yeere he was inaugurated vnder a tree which after perished, carried away by ouerflowing of waters, as was reported. A.H. 6. which began May 23. A.D. 627. Mahomets third wife. M. his Coronation or installation.

In the seuenth yeere M. of glorious memory, tooke to him a Pulpit. And it is reported, that his Wife said to him, I haue a workman to my Sonne, shall I bid him make thee a Pulpit? He answered yea. And he made him a Pulpit of wild Tamariske, or as others say, of white Tamariske; it consisted of two steps and a seat. Before this Pulpit was made, when he prayed in the Temple he leaned on a prop of wood. This Pulpit remayned to the Reigne of Muauias Sonne of Abusofian, which added sixe steps to it, and it was not altered after. Otsman Sonne of Affan first couered it with a Carpet. This yeere also was fought the Battell of Chaibar and M. tooke many Forts and possessed their Riches. Hee straitly besieged two Castles, Watitia and Selalima, that they were forced to sue to him to spare their liues, and to let them remayne in their Countrey, which he granted, on condition to pay yeerely halfe their Dates, and to be at his pleasure cast forth. The Inhabitants of Badra hearing this concluded on like conditions, to which he yeelded. The Iewes also remayned vnder the same league vntill the Raigne of Omar Sonne of Alchittabi: who after that he vnderstood that M. of glorious memory, had said in his sickneſſe, that two Religions might not concurre in Arabia, he cast them thence. The same yeere Zeinaba Daughter of Alharit a Iewesse brought him a poysoned Sheepe, of which eating he said, this ioynt tels me that it is poysoned. A.H. 7. May 11. 628. M. his Pulpit.

In the eight yeere he tooke Mecca. For the Coraisites had broken their league, and M. went against them with ten thousand Muslims til he came to Marwuttahran, and his Vncle Abbas Sonne of Abdulmutalib came to him with Abusofian, Sonne of Harith, and beleeued. And he said, He which shall enter the house of Abusofian shall be secure, and he which shall shut his doore shall be safe. And he entred Mecca without Battell, and all the people thereof beleeued, except a few which he slue. It was taken the one and twentieth of Ramadan. A.H. 8. April 30 629. Mecca taken.

The Battell of Honania a famous Valley was fought this yeere. For when the Hawazines had had vnderstood that Mecca was taken, they assembled to Melic Sonne of Auf, the Tekifians adioyning themselues with their wiues and goods. M. went out against them with twelue thousand men, and the victorie at first was with the Infidels, but after the Muslims preualled, which put them to flight and spoyled their goods, which were sixe thousand Kine, foure and twenty thousand Goats, forty thousand Sheepe, and foure thousand ounces of Siluer: 90. of the Tiekifians were slaine and but foure Muslims. The captiues and spoiles were gathered together at Giaran, whither hauing besieged Taijfa and left it, he came and was sought to by the Embassadors of the Hawazines for the restitution of their wiues, saying they were his Ants; whereupon he gaue them the choise of their wiues and children, and of their wealth. They chose their wiues and children which hee deliuered. The same yeere Melic Sonne of Auf, came to him to Giaran and beleeued, whereupon hee restored him his goods. He set ouer Mecca Gaiat Sonne of Ased.

*A.H.*9. April 20 630.

In the ninth yeere was fought the battell of Tebuc, and M. made peace with the Prince of Dauma and the Prince of Eila on condition to pay him tribute. Hauing staid ten dayes at Tebuc, he departed to Medina, in the moneth Regieb. And that was his last warre in which Otsman Sonne of Affan bestowed a thousand pieces of Gold on his Army. This yeere the Taijfians embraced Islamisme, ouer whom he set Otsman Sonne of Abulasi, and he sent Abusofian to destroy their warlike prouisions.

*A.H.*10. which began April 9. *A.D.*631.

In the tenth yeere the Arabs came to him very frequent, and men embraced Islamisme, and his word was confirmed. The same yeere Musuleima the false Prophet rebelled, which said he was his fellow Prophet, and was followed by his friends the children of Hanifa, of Iamama. The same yeere M. of glorious memory went on Pilgrimage to Mecca, into which he entred the tenth day of Dulhiggia, and when he had taught men and instructed them in Religion, he returned to Medina.

His pilgrimage *A.H.*11. Mar. 28 A. christi. 632.

In the eleuenth yeere appeared the false Prophet Aswad, the Abssite in Arabia Fœlix, and said he was a Prophet, and tooke Sanaa, Nazran and the Countrey of Taijf: and when he grew famous, Fir Dailam slue him in his house. The same yeere Muhammed of glorious memory dyed. For hauing returned from his Pilgrimage to Mecca, and staied at Medina till the eight and twentieth day of the moneth Safar, he began to be sicke; and he commanded Abubecr to pray with the people, and they prayed seuenteene Prayers. He dyed on Munday the twelfth of the former Rab, aged sixty three yeeres, or after others, sixty fiue. Hee was of very good wit, of a pleasant voice, visiting and intertaining his which visited and entertained him, liberall to the poore, lauding the Great men, conuersing with the meane, and not repelling any Sutor without his request or a kind answere. His Scribes were Otsman Sonne of Affan and Ali, Sonne of Abutalib. Sometimes also Vbabarat Sonne of Caab and Zeid, Sonne of Thebith writ for him, Muauias also, Chalid, Alau and Chantal. Abdalla Sonne of Abusierh writ likewise for him, which Apostated from Islamisme to the Infidels, but Otsman in time of victory sued for his pardon, which M. granted, hauing before determined to shed his bloud. Zubeir Sonne of Awan and Giehem Sonne of Safwan writ downe his Almes; Hadikas Son of Semal his store of Dates; Mugiras Son of Seicab and Husein Son of Iaman his Iudicials and Imperials; Abdalla Sonne of Arkam answered to the Letters of Princes. Iudges in his time were ouer the oath, Ali Son of Abutalib, Maab Son of Habal of Medina and Abumousa the Asiarite, ouer the Pardon Anis Son of Melic, ouer his Guard Cais Son of Said of Medina. His Banner was white, his lesse Standard black; it was ingrauen with his Seale FOR DOVBLE TESTIMONIE. His Porter was Bilal; Gouernours when he dyed, Gaiat at Mecca, Alau at Babrain, Otsman at Taijf, Omar at Sanaa and Giened: Chalid Sonne of Said, ouer the Villages of Arabia Fœlix, Abusofian at Giuresia, and Ali Sonne of Mina, in a tract of Arabia Fœlix.

Muhammed dyed according to the Arabian computation in the yeere of the Sunne from Adam 6123. nine moneths and fourteene dayes; ten yeeres of the Hegira (reckoned according to the course of the Moone) and seuenty dayes being past; that is nine yeeres of the Sunnes course, eleuen moneths, one day lesse; 3614. dayes in all, the first of which was Thursday, the last Munday.

The Histories of the Christians write that he was gentle toward Christians, and when some of them had comne to him and desired security, hee imposed tribute on them, blessed them, receiued them into his tuition, and commanded Omar to say to them, we haue their soules in the same account that we haue our owne soules, and their riches as our riches, and their chances as ours. The Author of the Booke Almuhaddeb writeth this, and from him the famous man Abuhanifa citeth it, treating of a Muslim killing a Christian. And when a certaine great man, a Christian, came to him, he arose and did him reuerence, and answered to one questioning it, When any principall man of any people come to you, honour him. Hee said also, *Doe good to the Cophtis of Egypt, for they are of kinne to you. In the firſt yeere * of the Hegira, Siahir the Perſian tooke Ancyra from the Romans and the Ile of Rhodes, captiuing the Inhabitants. In the ſecond Coſroes Sonne of Hormiſda perſecuted all which contradicted his Religion thorow his Kingdom, impoſing grieuous tributes, and deſtroying all the Temples of Syria and Meſopotamia, carrying away all their Gold, Siluer and goods, euen to the Marble, into his Countrey. In the third yeere Siahriar beſieged Conſtantinople, but departed fruſtrate. The ſame yeere, Coſroes oppreſſed the Ruhans, and cauſed them to forſake the Orthodoxe Sect, and to become Iacobites. For his Phyſician named Ionas, a Iacobite, perſwaded him that ſo long as they were Orthodoxe * they would incline to the Romans. He therefore decreed that they ſhould either bee ſlaine or elſe become Iacobites, which they all did. In the fift yeere of the Hegira, Coſroes was depriued by his Subiects for his tyrannies after he had reigned thirty eight yeere, and his Sonne Kobad ſet in his place, called alſo Syroes, the Sonne of Mary Daughter of Mauritius the Roman Emperour which carried himſelfe well, and was renowmed for Iuſtice: but after eight moneths Raigne he and moſt of his people periſhed by Peſtilence. His Sonne Ardſyr ſucceeded, and after fiue moneths was ſlaine. In the ſixt yeere Siahriar, not of the Royall race, obtained the Perſian Souereigntie: whereupon a woman of Royall bloud laid wait and ſlue him when he had raigned two and twentie dayes. Coſroes Nephew of Hormiſda ſucceeded, who after three monethes was ſlaine at Choroſan. After him Turana Daughter of Coſroes raigned a yeere and halfe. In the fourth yeere of the Hegira Siahriar had ſubiected himſelfe to Heraclius, becauſe Coſroes on ſome complaints, had written to Marzuban, to entrap and kill both him and his Sonne the Commander of the Armie, which Letter and Carrier being intercepted by Heraclius, and by him preſented to Siahriar, he and the other Captaines ſubiected themſelues to Heraclius, who thereupon inuaded Perſia, and writ to Chacan King of Harari to helpe him with forty thouſand Horſemen, promiſing him his Daughter in marriage. Thus Heraclius preuayled in Syria, Egypt and Armenia, againſt the Cities and forces of the Perſians there. Coſroes made Marzuban (called alſo Zurabbar) his Generall, who marched into the Prouince of Mauſil. Heraclius had at Ruha three hundred thouſand Horſemen, and from the tract of the Harari forty thouſand were comming to him, which ſtayed in the Prouince of Aderbigiana by his command till hee came thither. Hauing ſubdued Armenia, he went to Niniue. Zurabbar and hee fought a great battell, and the Perſians had the worſe, aboue fiue hundred thouſand of them being ſlaine, with Zurabbar himſelfe. Hereupon Coſroes forſooke Machura and Medaijn, Cities preſently poſſeſſed by Heraclius and burned, enioying the Kings treaſures. After this Syroes Sonne of Coſroes got out of Priſon and ſlaying his Father ſucceeded him (as before is related) Heraclius came to the Village Themanin, which Noah of holy memory builded after he paſſed out of the Arke, and that he might ſee the place of the Arke, he aſcended the mountaine Giudi, which is high ouer all thoſe lands. Thence he paſſed into Amida, where Syroes made peace with him, conditioning to reſtore to the Romans all which his Father had taken from them. Heraclius returned to Ruha, and commanded the Chriſtians to returne from the Iacobite Sect to the Orthodoxe, which they did. Ardſyr hauing ſucceeded. Coſroes was ſlaine by Siahriar, againſt whom Marzuban gathered forces, and the Perſians were diuided in two parts: Siahriar was ſlaine and Coſroes ſucceeded, and when he was ſlaine, Turana, to whom Giaſianſed Sonne of Coſroes his Vncle ſucceeded, who being depoſed, Azarmis daughter of Coſroes obtayned, which after a yeere and foure moneths was poyſoned. Perchozad Sonne of Coſroes ſucceeded and was ſhortly ſlaine. In the ſeuenth of the Hegira, the Sunne was ſo ecclipſed that the Stars were ſeene by day.

Abubecr the Iuſt or Abdalla Sonne of Otſman Abucahaf, Sonne of Amir, Sonne of Omar, Sonne of Caab. His mothers name was Aſma daughter of Sachar, Sonne of Amir, Sonne of Omar, Sonne of Caab. He was created Chalifa the ſame day on which the Prophet dyed. The men of Medina aſſembled to inaugurate Saad Sonne of Obad, one of themſelues, and ſome of them ſaid, let vs haue an Emperour of vs, and make you an Emperour of you O Fugitiues. * But when Abubecr of happy memory had prayſd God and celebrated, he ſaid to them, O men of Medina, take whether of theſe you will, and laid hold on Omar and Abuobeid. But with multiplied cries and words Omar ſaid to Abubecr, ſtretch forth thy hand that we may ſweare fealty to thee, which hee did, and both the Medina men and fugitiues ſware to him, Ali only and the Haſiemites excepted, which would not by ſtriking of the hand approue his Empire; which yet at laſt, ſeeing themſelues forſaken, they did. The ſame yeere (Heg. 11.) the Arabians rebelled and ſome refuſed to pay tribute, and Muſeilema the falſe Prophet proſpered. Taliha alſo the Sonne of Chowailet ſaid he was a Prophet, and was followed by the Aſedites. Newes came alſo of the death of Aſwad Ibſua a falſe Prophet, which Hee ſent to warre againſt the Rebels, and deliuered eleuen Banners for eleuen Tracts. Chalid Sonne of Walid was ſent againſt Taliha, and his Complices the Gatfanites, Taijtes, and Aſedites, and ouercame them. Thegiagis alſo daughter of Harith profeſſed herſelfe this yeere a Propheteſſe amongſt the Taalabites, and went to Muſeilema, and was married to him, but when ſhe had ſtaid with him three dayes ſhe returned home. Abubecr ſent Ikirma Sonne of Abugiahl againſt Muſeilema, with others. They met in Iaman. The Muſlims were forty thouſand, which had the worſe at firſt, but after preuayled and ſlue Muſeilema with ten thouſand of his followers: the reſt returned to Iſlamiſme. He ſent Alau againſt the Rebells of Bahrain, who chaſed them, forced ſome to returne, and ſlue thoſe which continued in their Apoſtaſie. Alau paſſed alſo the Sea, and ſlue all the Inhabitants of Darina.

In the twelfth yeere Abubecr writ to Chalid to goe to Irac P who made a peace with them, and the Inhabitants of Sawad on condition of tribute, which was the firſt tribute brought to Medina. He fought many battels and ſlue a great multitude of Infidels, and got innumerable ſpoyles.

In the the thirteenth yeere Abubecr ſent forces into Syria, and ſent Amir into Palæſtina, Ieſid and others into Balcaa, and the higher Syria, and Chalid Sonne of Said to Teimaa. Chalid fought a battell in Syria, with Mahan a Roman Commander, and chaſed him to Damaſcus; where the Romans in the Sapphire Valley ſlue his Sonne with many others. Abubecr ſent Muaui with freſh ſupplies, and made Chalid Sonne of Walid ouer the Souldiers in Syria, and commanded him to goe from Irac thither which hee did with nine thouſand. This yeere Boſra was taken the firſt of the Cities in Syria. The ſame yeere died Abubecr of happy memory. On Friday the three and twentieth of the later Giumad, hauing enioyed the Chalifate two yeeres, foure monethes and nine dayes, aged ſixty three, and Omar the Sonne of Alchittab prayed for him. He was buried in the houſe of Aijſia. He was abſtinent, deuout, and regarded not the goods of the World. He is reported to haue taken three Staters out of the treaſury for wages, and to haue ſaid to Aijſia of happy memory, See O Propheteſſe what hath accrewed to the wealth of Abubecr, ſince I haue beene ouer this Empire, and repay it to the Muſlims. And ſhe ſawit. And when they had prayſed all his ſubſtance, the value of all was but fiue Staters. Which when it was told Omar, he ſaid, God haue mercy on Abubecr, for he hath compelled his Succeſſors to vndergoe labour. This Abubecr firſt gathered the Alcoran out of Tables. For when the Muſlims in Iaman were croſſed, hee feared leſt ſome of the Alcoran might be loſt, being only in mens memories, and in ſheets betwixt Tables: and he called it Muſhaf. Euery Friday hee diſtributed that which was collected in the Treaſury to his Captaines according to their places: firſt to the Souldiers, and after to the learned men, and to ſuch as had by their labour merited any thing. The Perſians in the eleuenth yeere of the Heg. came to him about the ſlaughters of their Kings and ſeditions, and deſired Iazdegird Sonne of Coſroes which had fled from Siroes, and made him King ouer them being fifteene yeeres old. But their affections and aſſemblies were differing, and the Prouinces, Townes and Villages warred on their Neighbours, and were deuided amongſt themſelues. In the thirteenth yeere happened a great Earth-quake thirty dayes, and a great Peſtilence followed, The Muſlims that yeere beſieged Gaza and chaſed the Romans, which they ſignified by Letters to Abubecr who was then dead. God haue mercy on him.

Omar Sonne of Alchittab, Sonne of Nokail, Sonne of Abdullaziz, Sonne of Riah, Sonne of Cart, Sonne of Rawah, Sonne of Adi, Sonne of Caab, Sonne of Lua, Sonne of Galib, was deſigned Chalifa on the day of Abubecr his death, and by his command. In this thirteenth yeere Omar of happy memory ſent Abuobeid Sonne of Maſud againſt the Perſians, whom he ouercame in Hira, ſlaying many Infidels: but in a ſecond battell he was ſlaine with many Muſlims. After that was the battell of Buwaibic, in which the Infidels were ouerthrowne.

In the fourteenth yeere Damaſcus was taken by Chalid Sonne of Walid, forceably entring (after ſeuenty dayes ſiege) at the Thomas-gate, and Abuobeid with conditions of peace at the Cuſtome-gate. Omar ſent Saad againſt Irac which had many battels with the Perſians in Cadis: the Perſians were a hundred and twenty thouſand, the Muſlims thirty thouſand. They walled about by Omars command Boſra and Cufa.

In the fifteenth yeere, the Romans aſſembled to the number of two hundred and forty thouſand Infidels, and the Muſlims were thirty ſixe thouſand which preuayled, as in many other battels this yeere. Emiſſa became tributary, Kinnaſrin was taken.

In the sixteenth yeere Omar went into Syria, hauing made Ali Gouernour of Medina. He made agreement with Artenon Prince of Ramla, and sent Amrus and Sergyl to besiege Ierusalem, to whom Omar granted security and imposed tribute. Hauing subdued Palestina he sent Amrus into Egypt. This yeere Saad wanne Medaijna-Cosroe, and with his Muslims possessed the treasures [n] of Cosroes: and are said to haue found 3000. Millions of gold. And they found a house full of Camphora which the Muslims tooke for Salt, and vsed it in leuin, which made their bread bitter. They found the Crowne of Cosroes, and garments wrought with gold and gemmes, and diuers armes, and the hanging of a gallery which Said rent and made thereof a thousand thousand drammes, each dramme being ten Staters. They found also a silken Carpet sixty Cubits long and as many broad, wrought with figures and gemmes like flowers: on the border was the resemblance of the earth set with herbs and flowers, as in the Spring, made of gold, siluer and gemmes. Omar rent it and diuided it to the Muslims. Ali sold his share of it (none of the greatest) for twenty thousand. This yeere was fought the battell of Gialul with the Persians, whose last King Iazdegyrd fled to Faryan. This yeere Omar of happy memory returned to Medina.

[n] This seemeth the later Cosroes: or that before of Herac. is not fully true, which he saith, he tooke out of Christian stories.

The last Persian King ouercome.

In the seuenteenth yeere of the Hegira, the King of Romans besiged Emissa, and Omar sent Abuobeid forty thousand men for succour, which chased away the Romans. Omar the same yeere went into Syria, and subiected it. In the eighteenth yeere Amrus the sonne of Alab besieged Misra and tooke it. It was gouerned by Macuac, which conditioned with Amrus that euery Egyptian should pay an Egyptian peece of Gold, and to entertaine three dayes euery Muslim which passed that way. And the tribute imposed on them yeerely amounted to twelue millions of gold. After that Omar went to Marbut where were many Romans, and expelled them, as also at Cumsieric, and then besieged Alexandria. That yeere was a yeere of destruction through haile which spoyled the ground and killed cattell. There was a Pestilence which killed fiue and twenty thousand Muslims there, and diuers of the chiefest.

In the nineteenth yeere Heraclius died, whiles Amrus besieged Alexandria, which was taken in the twentieth yeere after fourteene moneths siege. The same yeere Amrus compassed Misra with a wall, called Fustata, that is, the Tent, because his Tent was there pitched before he went to the siege of Alexandria: and a Doue hauing hatched her young therein, hee said, it is vnlawfull for vs to kill in the moneth Muharram, and gaue his Captaines charge thereof.

In the three and twentieth yeere Omar of happy memory was slain by Abubulua seruant to Mugir a Persian by Nation, and by Religion a Magus, because he iudged against him, complaining of too much tribute exacted. Whiles Omar was at his morning Prayer, on Wednesday the three and twentieth of Dulhiggia, he stabbed him in three places, one of them vnder his Nauill whereof he died. And Abdurrahman Sonne of Auf prayed * with the people. Omar was carried to his house, and he commanded Sabib to pray three dayes with the people, and secretly assigned the Empire to sixe persons, to Ali Sonne of Abutalib, Otsman, Said, Abdurrahman, Talha and Zubeir, of happy memory. Hee made his Sonne Abdalla a Counsellour only, without any place of command. He dyed the sixe and twentieth of Dulhiggia and Sahib prayed for him (or in his steed.) He was buried in the house of Aijsia. Hee was browne, bald, tall, iust, pious, abstinent: hee first reckoned the computation of yeeres after the Hegira, and subscribed Letters: hee first was called Emperour of the faithfull. Hee first vsed the similitude of the Ant and her burthen. Hee first assembled men together vnder one Prince in the moneth Ramadan. His Scribes were Abdalla, Zeid and Almal, and Ali: his Iudges, at Medina, Iezid, at Cufa Abumias: his Portor Iezid: his Seale, that of the Prophet. He raigned ten yeeres of the Moone, and 178. dayes, 6136. yeere of the Sunne being compleat. He distributed euery Friday the treasure to his Captaines according to their necessitie; not, as Abubacr, according to their dignity; saying, that the Worlds goods were giuen to repell the Worlds euills.

When Alexandria was taken Amrus writ to Omar, I haue taken a Citie containing foure thousand Baths, twelue thousand Herb-sellers, foure thousand tributary Iewes, and foure hundred * Iesters. Omar writ to him to make a Riuer from thence to Colzuma for carriage of Corne, thence to be transported by Sea to Medina; which he did, and it was called the Emperours Riuer. Amrus tooke Barca and Tripolis: he writ to the Patriarke of the Iacobites, Beniamin, a letter of Security, whereupon he returned with great ioy, hauing beene absent from his See thirteene yeeres. When Heraclius was dead, Constantine his Sonne raigned sixe monethes, and was killed by his stepmother: Heracleones succeeded and was soone deposed. Constans followed.

Otsman Sonne of Affan, Sonne of Abulas, Sonne of Ommia, Sonne of Abdusiams, Sonne of Abdumenaf, Sonne of Cusa, was the fourth Emperour of the Muslims. His mothers name was Arwis Daughter of Kerir, whose mother was Bisa Daughter of Abdulmutalib. Abdurrahman renounced the right which hee had with the rest which were designed, on condition, that he might chuse the Emperour, wherewith all were pleased but Ali, which after yeelded. He named Otsman.

In the foure and twentieth yeere Mugiras tooke Bir and Hamadan, and Muauias tooke many Cities of the Romans.

In the seuen and twentieth yeere, Abdalla Sonne of Said Gouernour of Egypt inuaded Africa, slue the King and possessed his State. Muauias also tooke Cyprus. Otsman sent Abdalla and Said into Chorasan, promising the gouernment to him which first came thither. They tooke many Townes, and Abdalla returned not till he had drunke of the riuer Balcha.

In the one and thirtieth yeere. Iazdegird the last of the Persian Kings lost his life, and their glory vanished, and their Kingdomes were possessed by the Muslims. That yeere also Abdalla Sonne of Said inuaded Nubia, and the King made peace, promising many captiues.

In the two and thirtieth yeere, Abbas Sonne of Abdulmutalib dyed, one of the chiefe of the Coraisites; and if he passed by Omar or Otsman, they would alight off their horses to doe him honour. Abdurrahman Sonne of Auf dyed that yeere, who gaue to euery man of Badra fiue hundred pieces of Gold (which were a hundred) and his goods were diuided into sixteene portions, euery of which contayned eighty thousand peeces of Gold.

In the three and thirtieth yeere, Soliman the Persian dyed aged, two hundred fifty sixe yeeres, others say, three hundred and fifty. Anno 35. many accusations were laid against Otsman, for bringing backe to Medina Hakem, whom the Prophet of glorious memory had expelled, for deposing Said, and substituting Ocha which was a drinker of wine, and an adulterer, for giuing to Merwan his Kinsman fiue African talents, that is, 504000. pieces of Gold, &c. he had borrowed ten thousand Staters, which he repayed vpon sute of Law, and after would haue borrowed againe, but the Treasurer refused and declared it to the Muslims, Otsman on Friday prayed in the Temple before the people, and said, O God, I take thee to witnesse, that I am truly penitent. Yet the stirres encreased, and many assembled to depose Otsman, who sent to them to Medina to appeale to the Law of God (so they call the Alcoran) and the doctrine of his Prophet. At last, Muhammed sonne of Abubeer killed him; in his bosome was the Alcoran, on which fell one drop of bloud; hee raigned twelue yeeres lacking eight dayes. He was faire, long-bearded, much in fasting, prayer and meditation of the Alcoran: he left fiue hundred millions of Staters, one hundred and fifty thousand pieces of gold. His promotion of his Kindred caused his depriuation. His Seale was inscribed, I beleeue in God the Creator and Administrator

Ali the fifth Emperour, was sonne of Abutalib, the Sonne of Abdulmutalib, sonne of Hasiem, sonne of Abdumenaf, sonne of Cusa. His mother was Fatima Daughter of Asad, Son of Hasiem. He was created Chalif the same day that Otsman was slaine. An. 36. Zubeir and Talha went to Mecca, to frustrate the choise of Ali, and said they required the bloud of Otsman. And Aiysia was at Mecca when Otsman was slaine, and hearing of Alis succession, encited men against him, saying, Otsman was slaine wrongfully: By God I will require his bloud. Ali answered, Where is the mother of the Dogs? alleaging that she gaue charge to slay him, and called him Infidell. She replyed, They conuerted him and then killed him. Aiysia, Talha and Zubeir went from Mecca with a great Armie, and tooke Basra. Ali from Medina with twenty thousand, fought with them being thirty thousand, and slue Talha and Zubeir, and put to flight Aiysias Souldiers. Seuenty hands are related to be cut off from the bridle of the Camell on which Aiysia rode one after another, and the Camell stucke with Arrowes like a Hedgehogge, his legs cut off, and Aiysia taken. Ali sent her to Medina with seuenty women in mens habit. The ſame ſixty fifth yeere he enlarged the Temple at Ieruſalem, and men began to goe thither in Pilgrimage: and hee forbade Pilgrimage to Mecca, becauſe of Abdalla Sonne of Zubeir. Anno 69. Abdulmelic Sonne of Merwan went from Damaſcus to make warre vpon Abdalla, Sonne of Zubeir, and ſubſtituted Omar Sonne of Saad at Damaſcus in his place, which pre-presently rebelled, and fortified himselfe: whereupon Abdulmelic returned and besieged Damascus. Omar sent to him and obtayned security, but, when he came to him, he slue him, and quieted his partakers with distribution of mony. Anno 71. Masab was slaine by Abdulmelic in battell, and he entred Cusa, and his Empire was established in Irac, Syria and Egypt: only Higiaz remayned in the hand of Abdalla, Sonne of Zubeir, whom Hagiagi Son of Ioseph soone after besieged and slue at Mecca, which hee also tooke after seuen moneths siege, and battered Caab the fortification of Abdalla with Engines, and threw into it balls of Pitch and fire to destroy the houses. When Abdalla feared the house (or Temple) lest it should fall, he entred his owne house; his mother encouraged him to goe forth, if hee died, he should die a Martyr: he answered, O mother, I feare not death but dismembring. A sheepe, said she, when shee is killed, feeleth not the flaying. Hee is said to haue drunke a pound of Muske, and then going forth to be slaine, and his head fastned on the gate: and his crucified body smelled of Muske many dayes. The same yeere Abdulmelic made his brother Muhammed, Sonne of Merwan, Gouernour of Aderbigiana, Mesopotamia and Armenia, who sent a hundred thousand against the Harari, which were all slaine. Muhammed much mooued, went with forty thousand, and ouerthrew the Harari, and burned them in their Temples. He sent also Muslima to the Gate of Gates [a] where he besieged eighty thousand Harari, of whom he slue many, and the rest beleeued. The Azrakeans did and suffered much harme and change. Anno 74. Hagiagi was made Gouernour of Medina, who went to Mecca, and destroyed all the fortification of Caab: and Anno 75. was set ouer Irac. Anno 76. Salih, Sonne of Margi and Siabib Charisæans conspired. Salih was called Emperour of the faithfull by his followers. They spoyled Mesopotamia, and increased in power, and often ouerthrew the Armies of Hagiagi, hauing but small forces. With a thousand hee went to Cusa, and ouerthrew Hagiagi, which came against him with fiftie thousand, and had the spoyle of his Tents. But in a Sea fight Sahibs ship sunke, and he said, When God disposeth any thing, it commeth to passe, and rising againe out of the water, he said, This is the power of the strong and wise God. He was drawne out with Nets, and his head sent to Hagiagi: his heart they cut in sunder, and found it hard and compact like a stone. Mahleb went against the Azrakeans which withstood Catris (their Gouernour) and slue many of them. Catris fled to Tabristan whose King was Ashid a Magus (that is, of the old Persian Religion) and obtained leaue to enter his countrey, which hauing obtained and setled his affaires, hee sent to Ashid, demanding that either he would embrace Islamisme or pay tribute, which he refused. Whereupon he made warre on him, and chased Ashid to Raija, who got helpe of the Muslims, and Catris was slaine. The same yeere Coines of Gold and Staters were stamped with Arabike Letters (for before the Letters were Roman, and the Staters also Persian) the inscription was, God is the Lord. Anno 81. Muhammed, Son of Hansfa of happy memory died. But many of the vulgar beleeue that he still liueth in the Mount Radwa, and will one day appeare and fill the Earth with Iustice, as it is now filled with iniquity. Of this Sect was *D. Anno 82. Hagiagi had sent Abdurrahman, Sonne of Muhammed against Zentil King of Turkes with a small power, secretly animating the Turke against him, purposing to destroy him; which he reuealed to his followers, who thereupon deposed Hagiagi, and sware to him. He compounded with the Turke, and returned to warre on Hagiagi. Hee obtained aide of Abdulmelic, out of Syria. Basra and Cusa sware to Abdurrahman, and his Army was a 100000.: Hagi and he made 81. fights in 100. dayes. Abdurrahman fled and was taken at Sahan, which Zentil hearing besieged Sahan and freed him. Hee assembled sixty thousand men, against whom went Iezid, and ouercame them. Abdulmelic, Anno 86. made Walid partner of the league, and dyed after hee had raigned one and twentie yeeres and fifteene dayes. Walid his Sonne prayed for him. He was very couetous, and called Sweat-stone. Hee dreamed that he had pissed foure times in the chiefe Temple: consulting with Said, Sonne of Musabbib, he told him that foure of his children should reigne, which came to passe in Walid, Suleiman, Iezid and Hisiam. His Seale was inscribed, I beleeue in God our Sauiour. In his time Simon Syrus was the Iacobite Patriarke of Alexandria, to whom the Indians sent to ordaine them a Bishop and Priests, which he refused till the Gouernour of Egypt commanded him; and then the Legate went to another which did it, whence arose great stirres. After him was Alexander which endured hard times. Abdulaziz brother of Abdulmelic, the Gouernour of Egypt exacted tribute of the Monkes, of each a piece of Gold. This was the first tribute exacted of them. After his time Asama was more cruell, killing and spoyling the people, and branding the Monkes with an Iron Ring in their hands, which round marke they which wanted had their hand cut off, of whom was a number innumerable. But Aſama was taken and died by torment of his iron coller and woodden fetters in the way, at the command of Omar the Chalif. But the perſecution of Chriſtians continued till the Raigne of Hiſiam. He writ for their liberty in their Rites and Priuiledges (Iezid his Predeceſſor had razed their Croſſes and Temples) and commended them to Abdalla, whom he ſent Gouernour. But he when he came into Egypt exceeded his Predeceſſors, doubled the tribute, and cauſed their perſons and beaſts to bee numbred, and branded the Chriſtians with the figure of a Lion, cutting off euery mans hand which was found without it. Hiſiam therefore depoſed him, and ſent him into Africa, where he did likewiſe; whereupon the people rebelled and ſlue his Sonne, whoſe heart and inwards they threw at the fathers head.

Walid was the thirteenth Chalifa, ſixth of the houſe of Ommia, Sonne of Abdulmelic, Sonne of Merwan. Hee was ſurnamed Abulabbas. Hee was created Chalifa, on the day of his Fathers death. Their tribute impoſed was two thouſand pieces of Gold yeerely. After this hee went to Samarcand and tooke it. Muhammed Sonne of Caſim conquered India, and the Land of Sind (or Indus) and ſlue the King Dahar. The ſame yeere, Walid commanded the Temple of Damaſcus to bee builded, and the Church of the Chriſtians conſecrated to Saint Iohn, to be pulled downe. He offered for the ſame forty thouſand pieces of Gold which they refuſed, and therefore hee deſtroyed it, and gaue them nothing. Twelue thouſand Maſons were employed in that building: but Walid died before it was finiſhed. Foure hundred Chiſts, each contayning fourteene thouſand pieces of gold were beſtowed thereon. In it were ſixe hundred golden chaines of Lampes, the brightneſſe whereof hindred men from praying; which after were coloured with ſmoke, and remayned to the time of Omar, Sonne of Abdulaziz who put them in the Treaſury, and hanged iron chaines in their ſteed.

Corrah Sonne of Sieric, was made Gouernour of Egypt in the ninetieth yeere, a man manifeſtly impious, which entred the Cathedrall Temple of Mithra, with Ruffians and Gameſters, and with them ſate in the Chancell in time of Prayers.

Great glutton.

Omar Sonne of Abdulaziz, Sonne of Merwan obtained the Chalifate the same day. Hee tooke away the malediction of Ali of happy memory. For the Kings of the house of Ommia from Muaui hitherto, were wont to curse him in their Pulpits, in the end of all their Prayers. Muaui had foretold it should be so, swearing By God it shall not be omitted till a little one prone hoary; and when it shall be abolished, neglect of the Law shall be admitted. Omar abolished that Curse, reading the Verse which beginneth, God commands Iustice and Beneficence; and men went out of the Temple saying, the Law is neglected. He was Chalif two yeeres fiue moneths and foure dayes. Hee was Iust, Deuout, Religious, preferring his Religion before worldly things. He had a Roome locked, wherein they hoped to finde money, but found nothing but a garment which hee vsed to put on, and a line to beare him vp in his Prayers. Sute was made in his time for the Temple in Damascus by the Christians, but because their Citie was partly taken by the Sword, partly by composition, the Church of Saint Iohn was left to the Muslims, the rest to the Christians, whereof Omar gaue them a Charter, together with all the Monasteries and the Temples without the City in Gouta, on the Hill, and the rest, to enioy and vse them without molestation of the Muslims. Omar 15. Chalif, the 8. of the Ommians. Ali cursed daily. Chalifs deuotion.

But Cundabil forbade him to land, and Muslima sent an Armada by Sea vnder Halal, which ouerthrew them. Omar Sonne of Habir sent and inuaded the Turkes, tooke Multahar, and pursued their King from Towne to Towne to Ardebil, in the Countrey of Aderbigian, where was fought a great battell, and Gierrah the Commander with many Muslims were slaine. Iezid died, Anno 105. hauing raigned foure yeeres and one moneth. Hee spent much on Wiues, Playes and Spectacles. Hee had two women Habab and Selam, whom hee much affected. Habab died, and hee kept her till she stunke, and when she was buried tooke her vp againe, and not long after dyed. Iezid 16. He well ruled and obserued the things which passed his hands, but was couetous, enuious, and spoyled his Subiects, to needlesse expenses. He had Curtaines, Vests and Wardrobes which none had before him: his Vests are said to be six hundred Camels lode: hee left a thousand paire of Breeches, and ten thousand Shirts. He had seuen hundred Vestries. But when hee died, Walid Sonne of Iezid had not to wrap him in, for all his Wardrobes were sealed vp, and none permitted to enter; so that a seruant of his was faine to shroud him; an example worthy wise mens obseruation. Anno Mundi 6234. and 162. dayes. A.H. 121. began Dec. 18. 738. Anno 120. Abnachaijl in the yeere of Diocletian 460. was made Patriarch of Alexandria, and continued three and twentie yeeres. It went through all the East, and in one night ruined sixe hundred Cities, and killed innumerable men and beasts. When the King of Nubia named Ciriacus vnderstood what had happened to the Patriarch, hee went toward Egypt with Terrible earthquakes.

with a 100000. blacke horsemen on blacke horses: and before hee was entred, Abdulmelic the Gouernour sent to the Patriarch to write to the King of Nubia, which hee did, signifying that the Christians were now in good case; and so he returned without battell. Cosmas was Alexandrian Patriarch of the Orthodoxe Christians which prayed in the Church of Saint Saba, all other Churches being vnder the Iacobites, till vpon complaint and gifts to Hisiam, they got the Temple of the Gospell. Thus saith Said, Sonne of Bairic in his historie, and also, that the Orthodoxe had beene without a Patriarch ninetie seuen yeeres, from the time of Omar the Conquerour, till this Cosma, which was an vnlearned man, not able to write or reade, a Needle-man. The Iacobites meane while possessed all the Sees in Egypt and Nubia.

Walid 18.

Walid Sonne of Iezid, Sonne of Abdulmelic was created Chalife the same day his Vncle Hisiam dyed, and was slaine Anno 126. for his manifest infidelitie and impietie: his two Sonnes were imprisoned, and after slaine. He raigned one yeere two moneths and two and twenty dayes. He was an excellent Poet, but applying all his thoughts to wantonnesse. He made him an iron Tombe, which in his Pilgrimage hee determined to set vp in Caab. Hee tooke with him to Mecca hounds in cages, and wine. Hee defloured a woman of his in his drunkennesse, and promised that shee should pray in the presence of men, which she did with her face couered. He filled a pond with wine and water, and sent for Maabad the Singer, to sing whiles hee bathed and dranke therein. After Walids death the Regions were embroyled, the Chawasirians multiplyed, and the Kingdome of the children of Ommia weakned by reason thereof.

Women not permitted to pray with men.

Iezid 19.

Iezid Sonne of Walid, Sonne of Abdulmelic, Sonne of Merwan, was the twelfth Chalifa of that house. Emessa rebelled vpon the death of Walid, and put to flight Iezids Army. Suleiman Sonne of Hisiam spoyled Naama, and went to Damascus the people of Palæstina slue their Gouernour. Merwan Sonne of Muhammed rebelled, pretending the reuenge of Walid, and Iezid gaue him the gouernment of Mesopotamia, Armenia, Mausil and Aderbigiana, on condition to sweare to him, which hee did at Harran. Iezid dyed that yeere of the Plague, hauing raigned fiue moneths. His brother Ibrahim prayed for him. He diminished the Souldiers stipends, was prone to the Sect Cadritica: was after digged out of his graue, and crucified by Merwan.

Ibrahim 20.

Ibrahim Sonne of Walid his brother, was the same day made Chalifa, Anno 126. but Anno 127. Merwan sought to get the Empire, pretending the reuenge of Walids death, and ouerthrew Suleiman, which came against him with a hundred and twenty thousand, and caused men to sweare to Walids children, then remayning in Prison, whereupon Suleiman caused them at his returne to Damascus to be killed, their names were Hakem and Otsman. Vpon pretence that Hakem had said that Merwan should succeed if he and his brother were slaine, Merwan was made Chalif, and Ibrahim after sixty nine dayes Raigne deposed, which liued till, Anno 132. and then was slaine. He was called Himar-vlgidzira, the Asse of Mesopotamia, becausse he could not flee in the time of battell. Anno 127. the Emissens rebelled but were ouer-throwne, and their wals rased, and 600. of their citizens crucified. Damascus deposed his Gouernour also, and those of Basra created Suleiman Chalifa, but Merwan ouerthrew him in battell, and slue 30000. of his men. At Cufa, Abdalla sought the Chalifate, but was chased thence to the Mountaines. Merwan was slaine, as shall after appeare. He was a Glutton, and when a sheepe came to his hands, he could not forbeare, but would thrust his hand and sleeue into the sheeps belly, and take out the Kidneyes to eate them, & then to change his garment: of such garments greased with the fat of the Kidnies, he is said to haue left aboue 10000. Hee was politike, valiant, magnanimous and prudent. But fortune being crosse, great spirit and wisdome preuaile not: as it is said, Fortune approaching comes fastned with ten fetters, but going backe she goeth, no chaines can hold her.

Lib. 2.

THe first Prince of the children of Abbas was Muhammed Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Abbas in the 100. yeere hee dyed A. 125. and left twelue Sonnes. The calling happened to him in Chorasan, and succeeded to his Sonne Ibrahim. He sent Abumuslim surnamed Abdurrahman, into Corasan, and writ to those which followed his Sect to obey him. He deliuered the Letters to Suleiman, and presently published the vocation of the Hasiemides, and tyed a Banner on a staffe or Speare nine cubits long, sent from Ibrahim which they call Tallum. And he and all of that Sect put on blacke garments on the day of the greater Feast. And Abumuslim prayed the Prayer of the Feast before Prayer (time) without conuocation or raysing vp, contrary to the course of the children of Ommia. Thus Abumuslim encreased, and Nasr Gouernour of Chorasan vnder Merwan decreased. Hee seeing these beginnings, writ to Walid, Sonne of Iezid,

I see 'mongst embers sparkes of coles, wo to thee if they burne:

Wood makes fire flame, words doe the same; to warres they after turne:
Sleepes or wakes Ommias? Speake I? No, my mazed verse doth mourne.

But finding no helpe Nasr fled, and Abumuslim spoyled his Army: and set Cahtabas ouer the Army, who fought many battels with Nasr, and slue and tooke thirty thousand of his men. Nasr. died, Anno 131. Merwan tooke Ibrahim and slue him, who had before commanded his brother Saffah Abulabbas to goe to Cufa, and written to his followers that hee should be Chalifa after him.

Anno 132. Cahtabas ouerthrew Iezid, Gouernour of Irac vnder Merwan, and passing ouer Euphrates very early, the Riuer being encreased he was drowned, and Humid his Sonne commanded the Armie. The same yeere at Cufa, Muhammed Sonne of Ali the Carsiean called the Hasiemites to the Empire. The men of Cufa sware to Abumuslimas Son of Halab, which was also called Muhammed the Counsellour of Religion. The same yeere Saffah and Abugiafar Almansor came to Cufa, and had lodgings assigned them by Abumuslimas the Counsellor which concealed the same forty dayes, minding to transferre the Empire to the house of Abutalib.

Abdalla Saffah Abulabbas Sonne of Muhammed, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Abbas, Sonne of Abdulmutalib, Sonne of Hasiem, was the three and twentieth Chalifa, and first of the children of Abbas. One saluted him Chalifa, and the people sware to him: which Abumuslimas seeing saluted him also, which Hamid said was done against his will. Being inaugurated, he ascended the Pulpit in blacke garments, and made a speech to the people. He sent his Vncle Abdalla against Merwan, which put him to flight, innumerable numbers of his Souldiers being slain and drowned. Abdalla pursued him from place to place, and pitched his Tents in Iordan. He assembled many of the children of Ommia, pretending to take their Oath of Fealty, and when aboue eighty of them were together, he set a Souldier by each of them with a club in his hand, and at a token giuen they were all killed. Then did he cause them to be drawne and laid in order, and spreading a Carpet ouer them, sate thereon with his followers, and called for victuals and did eate, hearing their grones till they were quite dead. Abdalla said, For the day of Hulein and for nothing else. Damascus was forced, Walid the Gouernour killed, and the Citie put to the spoyle three dayes. Merwan fled into Egypt, and was there taken and killed by Salih, which sent to Saffah his head, who thereupon fell downe in adoration, and gaue ten thousand pieces of Gold to the poore, saying, Prayse to God which hath deliuered to vs the Asse of Mesopotamia. This was done after one hundred and thirty one yeeres, and threescore and thirteene dayes of the Hegira; 6241. of the yeere of the Sunne, and sixty three dayes.

O Cruelty!

Abumuslim the Authour of the vocation with others, laid wait for Abumuslimas, Son of Halal the Counsellor, and slue him by command of Saffah, because hee sought to rayse the the Abulatabites. Saffah promised securitie also to Iezid, Sonne of Omar, but after sent one to slay him, for seeking to preferre to the Empire Abdalla Sonne of Hasen, Sonne of Husein, Sonne of Ali, Sonne of Abutalib. Saffah now established, set Abugiafar Almansor ouer Aderbigiana, Armenia and Mesopotamia, Iahia his brother ouer Mausil, his Vncle Dauid ouer Higiaza and Aliaman; his Vncle Isa ouer Cufa, Sofian ouer Basra, Muhammed ouer Persia, Mansor ouer India and Sinde, Abumuslim ouer Chorasan, Abdalla his Vncle ouer Syria, and his Vncle Salib ouer Egypt, who ruled it by his Lieutenant Abaun. Abdalla returning from Ramla to Damascus digged vp the children of Ommia, and burned them: and to the corpse of Hasiam at Rusaf, he gaue a hundred and twenty blowes till his flesh was dispersed, which then was gathered together and burned. A. 136. Saffah died after he had reigned foure yeeres and nine moneths His brothers Sonne Isa prayed for him. Hee gaue to Abdalla Sonne of Hasen, Sonne of Husein two Millions of Staters, the first of the Chalifa's that had giuen so great a summe. He was the first also which tooke a Counsellor, for the children of Ommia had none but Scribes. When Merwan fled into Egypt, in the yeere of Diocletian * 467. the Christians suffered much aduersitie. He burned Misra with the Corne and prouisions therein, and went ouer with his into a Nunnery, where eying a beautifull Damsell, hee tooke her to his Tent to deflowre her. Shee to saue her Virginitie, told him of a precious Oyntment which she had, which would make the annointed part Sword-free. But how, sayd he, shall I know that? She offered the trial on her selfe, and so he cut off her head, rather embracing death then pollution.

* The Egyptians reckon from this yeere because of the multitude of Martyrs then slaine; & call it the yeere of the Martyrs.

Abugiafar Almansor Sonne of Muhammed, brother of Saffah succeeded, and was made Chalifa in the Pilgrimage to Mecca, ouer which his brother had set him; in a place called Safia, that is, famous, and Our Empire, saith he, by Gods grace shall be famous. He tooke the oath and finished his Pilgrimage, Anno 137. Abdalla sought the Empire in Syria, and Almansor sent against him. Abumuslim the author of the vocation, and after many battels. Abumuslim preuailed, and Abdalla fled into Irac, he to Basra, his brother to Cufa. The ſame yeere Muhammed Sonne of Abdalla, Sonne of Haſen went to Medina, and was there created Chalifa: he tooke to name Mahad, and had a hundred thouſand followers. But Almanſor ſent againſt him his partner of the league Iſa, which ſlue him and ſent his head to Almanſor. Ibrahim his Brother appeared at Baſra, and enioyed that Citie, and Perſia and Ahwaz, but ranne like courſe and was ſlaine by Iſa.

An.430. [m] began the Princes Salghucides. Muhammed Abutalib Togrulbec was the first inaugurated of them. His brethren were Dauid, Ghacarbec, Fir and Arselan; the Sons of Michael, Sonne of Salghuc, Sonne of Dacac a Turke, who first of that Race embraced Islamisme, and was much employed by the Turkish King in his warres. His Sonne Salghuc after his Fathers death was made chiefe Commander of the Turkish Armies: but the King suspecting him sought to slay him, whereupon he fled to Haron King of Ghabia, and of him obtayned an Army to inuade those Infidels, but was slaine in battell being a hundred and seuen yeeres old. His Sonne Michael with his children abode in Maurauahar. Many Turkes acknowledged none other Commander. When Mahmud Sonne of Sebuctakin King of India passed ouer the Riuer Ghaihon to helpe Warurchan King of Maurauahar, hee cast Michael into bonds, for refusing to goe with him, promising to set him in Chorasan to keepe it against the enemies: but tooke with him Michaels Souldiers, which stayed in his Countrey. Masud succeeding his Father Mahmud expelled them by an Army: the remaynder of these Turkes after Michaels death followed Togrulbec, who ouerthrew the Army of Masud, and pursued them to Tus, which Towne hee tooke, the first Towne which came into their hands, wherein they fortified themselues. Thence they went to Naisabur and tooke it. King Masud fled into India, and forsaking Chorasan stayed there a long time. The Salghucides subdued Chorasan meane while, and when Masud returned they ouerthrew him: whereupon Caiym Biamrilla exhorted them to keepe the Region of the Muslims. They ouerthrew Masud a second time, and their Empire was established. A.431. Masud ouerthrew Togrulbec, who returned, An.432. and chasing away Masud, enioyed all Chorasan, killing innumerable numbers of men.

An.433. Muazzuddaulas the Mardasite possessed Haleb, where Nasr Sonne of Salih, Sonne of Maidas had ruled eight yeeres, who was slaine by Buseckin, the Darirean in battell, who after came to Haleb and tooke it. This Darirean was a captiue Turke, which comming with Merchants into Syria, was bought by Darir the Dailamite, and giuen to the King of Egypt, where by degrees he was promoted to be Commander of the Army. Masud King of Chorasan, India and Mauranahar was slaine, and Muhammed his brother succeeded, but was slaine by Maudud his brothers Sonne.

An.447. the Salghucides began to rule at Bagdad by this meanes. A certaine Turke, Ruslan Abulharith Mutaffir called the Basasaraan grew great in Irac, and they prayed in Pulpits in his name, neither remayned any thing but title to the Boijte. Whereupon Caiym writ to Togrulbec for aide, exhorting him to come thither, which he did. The Basasaraan writ to Mustansir Billa Lord of Egypt, and prayed in his name at Rahab; he helped him with money. Togrulbec tooke the Boijte Melecrahim and his Prayer [n] ceassed, with that Empire which had continued one hundred and twenty seuen yeeres. Prayse be to him whose Empire passeth not away.

On Friday after the thirteenth of Dulkiada, Prayer was made in the Cathedrall Temple in name of Mustansir. They made a bridge ouer to the East part of the Citie, and did the like at Rusaf. He tooke Caiyms Counsellour, and clothed him with a woollen Cowle, and long narrow red Hood; set him on a Camell, with skins hanged about his necke, and so carried him thorow Bagdad; one following and beating him, after which they put him in a new flayed Buls hide, setting the hornes on his head, and hanged on hookes, there beaten till he died. Caiym fled and his Palace was rifled. Hee was a Prince fearing God, much in Prayer and Almes, and a defender of Religion. When he was wounded, he said, I neuer else contended but first begged ayde of God. Yesterday also the earth trembled vnder me, and I said, I am King of the World, neyther is any able to warre with me, and neuer thought of Gods power whereof I aske him forgiuenesse. His Sonne Ghelaluddaulas succeeded, called Melicsiah. Anno 467. Caym dyed hauing beene Chalifa foure and forty yeeres, seuen moneths and twentie daies. Roman discomfited. Azzud slaine.

* Perhaps the Bedwines a rouing sort and roguing Sect of Arabs, receiued name of him: See of them my *Pilgrims, tom 2 l. 7. cap. 6. Yahia 3. Iacob. Aben Iuſeph 4. Yahia dyed a child without iſſue, and the ſaid Iacob Bucar his Vncle remayned King, which afterward cauſed himſelfe to be called Muley Xeh, which ſignifieth old King. This King built new Fez, which is called the white Citie, hee ouercame Budebuz King of Marweccos, and ſometimes was Lord of Tremeſen, Tumbe, and Sojumenza, and in the yeere of our Lord 1264. he entred Spaine, being called by the King of Granado. Abubamo 8. The foreſaid child being dead, his brother Abubamo reigned in his ſteed, who afterward was called Abubertab, and his Vncle Aben Iacob beſieged him in Tremezen ſeuen yeeres, after whoſe death the ſiege was rayſed, and the ſaid Abubamo afterward with the ayde of D. Iayme of Aragon gained (Cenet) in the yeere of our Lord 1310.
